15. K B to his sq	Q to her Kt 3rd	32. K to Kt sq	B to K Kt's 6th (e)
16. R takes R	R takes R	33. Q to K B 4th (f)	Kt to K 8 6th (ch)
17. Q R P one	P takes P	34. K to R 2d (g)	Q to K 8 h
18. Q Kt takes P	Q B to K Kt 5th	35. R to K R's 8th (ch)	K to B 4th
		White surrendered. (h)

(a) The young player will observe that White dared not attempt to drive away the Bishop by playing K R P one, as Black would at once have taken it, and if White took the Bishop, have won his Queen.

(b) This move for the moment annoys White to a good deal of extent; but we examining the position, it will be seen that its confinement is but temporary. Black cannot move Kt to Q's 7th on account of it takes K R P (ch), followed by Q to her 3rd, &c.

(c) This, in connection with the advance of K to [illegible] and the subsequent move of K to his Kt 3rd, exercises a most important influence upon the game.

(d) Precipitate to win: we think at K B 4th.

(e) Gaining time, as White must prepare for the threatened check of King and Queen

(f) White has apparently a very formidable attack. To escape the dangerous move of R to Q 8th, and if B to Q 8 sq. Had Black attempted to act on the defensive, by retreating the Kt to B 3rd, &c., by exchanging Queens, he would have lost the game.

(g) The result would have been the same, play where he might.

(h) His only move, to protect the contest being the sacrifice of the Rook; for, if he take the Bishop, mate comes directly.

THE ECONOMIC CHESS-BOARD. This is an elegant and ingenious contrivance lately published by De la Rue, for facilitating the study of our famous game. It consists of a small pasteboard diagram of the exchequer, each square of which, having a niche at top, admits of the insertion of a little card-board representative of a chess-man. These men are of a corresponding size with the squares, and can of course be shifted from one to another as required, so that we have a chess-board with moveable type, enabling you to try combinations of [illegible] games through, of no compact size, portable as it is, that it may be carried in the waistcoat pocket. To the amateurs of Chess Problems we in particular commend the Economic Chess-board. On a journey by coach or railway, in the cabin of a steamer, or during a pedestrian ramble, it must prove an inexhaustible source of instruction and enjoyment.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Easter Term.—The late Action between Two Clergymen.—Easter Term commenced on Wednesday, when the Judges breakfasted with the Lord Chancellor, and afterwards opened their Courts with the usual formalities. In the Queen's Bench, in the case of Pemberton, Clerk, v. Colls, Clerk, Mr. Sergeant Shee moved for a rule to show cause why the judgment should not be arrested, or a venire de novo awarded. This was an action to recover damages for certain words alleged to have been uttered by the defendant of and concerning the plaintiff. The plaintiff was the vicar of Wandsworth, the defendant had been one of his curates. The words were not actionable in themselves, but special damage was alleged, and in that respect the action was maintainable. The case was tried at the last Kingston assizes before Lord Denman, when evidence was given to prove the speaking of the words, but there was no proof of special damages given except that which was stated in one of the counts, in which it was alleged that a Mr. Cockerell, a curate of the plaintiff, was, in consequence of the speaking of the words, prevented from cordially uniting with the plaintiff in doing the clerical duties of the parish. This was clearly not a matter which the plaintiff could allege as special damage, that the law would recognise as such. The damages, also, which had been assessed at £200, were excessive, and on that ground he submitted that he was also entitled to a rule for a new trial. Lord Denman said that, if the other objections were valid, there was no cause of action whatever, and this last objection became, therefore, needless. Rule for arresting judgment, or for a venire de novo, granted.

Earl v. Earl Ferrers.—Mr. Barstow moved in this case in the Bail Court, on Thursday, for judgment as a case of a nonsuit, the plaintiff not having proceeded to trial, in compliance with a peremptory undertaking. The learned counsel said this was an action brought by the plaintiff, who was grandfather of Miss Smith (a minor) in the celebrated action against the noble defendant, for breach of promise of marriage) to recover the sum of £10,000, having alleged to have been lent to his Lordship. The cause was set down for trial at the sittings in London after Trinity term last year, but in consequence of the action of Smith v. Lord Ferrers not having been then tried, the plaintiff, on application to the Court, obtained an order for its being postponed, on condition that he (plaintiff) entered into a peremptory undertaking to go to trial at the sittings after, but Michaelmas Term. This order was further enlarged until Hilary Term of the present year, but the plaintiff had not taken, up to the present time, any steps for proceeding to trial; consequently this application was made for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Rule granted; absolute in the first instance.

COUNTRY NEWS.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF FIVE LIVES.

On Wednesday morning an explosion, attended with fatal consequences, took place in a fire clay-pit belonging to Messrs. Pemberton, coal and iron masters, and situated on the high road between Bilston and Wednesbury, Staffordshire. It appears that, in consequence of the Easter holidays, the miners had not been at work since Saturday, but that on Wednesday morning they went to the pit for the purpose of resuming their labours; six men and boys were lowered into it, and proceeded variously to the "deegle" had cautioned them all to remain quiet until he also came down; instead of this, however, a man named Jones took up his candle, and went along a place called the "staple-heads" by himself, and on his return after so discouraging those incautious he continued his course, and had not proceeded more than six yards before the sulphur exploded—hurling the man at the bottom of the pit with much violence a considerable distance. The man Jones was killed on the spot, and out of six other men and boys who were suspended at the top of the pit, four were killed; they were blown in all directions. Several others are very seriously burnt, but hopes are entertained of their ultimate recovery.

The force of the explosion was such as to shake all the buildings for a considerable distance round.

The names of the deceased are: William Jones, aged 30, has left a wife and four children; Abraham Adkins, aged 32, has left a wife and five children; Thomas Vensome, aged 10; John Evans, aged 17; and Enoch Price Bevington, aged 16.

Stoppage of Messrs. Latham and Co.'s Bank at Dover.—The greatest consternation was occasioned at Dover, on Monday, by the announcement on the doors of the banking-house of Latham and Co., that the business of the bank was suspended. It is feared, from the great number of small depositors, that the loss will be severely felt by numerous individuals. The immediate cause of the above was the senior partner of the firm (Mr. Henshaw Latham) having died suddenly on Monday morning (last week); though it is said the affairs of the bank have long been in an embarrassed state, but which circumstance, up to the present moment, has been kept a profound secret. A meeting of about two hundred creditors of Latham and Co. took place on Tuesday, when it was almost unanimously agreed that a bankruptcy would be much better than an assignment for the benefit of the creditors, and it was stated that a flat was already issued. The bank from the late banking firm was sent for, who stated upon a rough calculation, that the debts amounted to £100,000, and the assets to about £65,000: that none of the estates were encumbered, and that there would be nearly £40,000 in the hands of Harman and Co., the London agents, and £1600 or £1700 in the bank.

Violent Thunder-Storm at the Country.—On Sunday evening, about half-past eight o'clock, a terrific thunder storm commenced, and continued at short intervals for more than an hour, rising first in the south-west, as if over Winchester, progressing on towards Whitchurch, Newbury, Reading, &c. The lightning was fearfully vivid. The rain descended in torrents, and continued so till after midnight. On Monday morning the low lands were much flooded, the waters rising rapidly.

Execution of Yarham, at Norwich.—Last Saturday, Yarham (convicted of the murder of Mrs. Chandler, at Yarmouth) was executed at Norwich. On the immense area in front of the castle, there were not less than 30,000 people, a very large proportion belonging to the lower orders, and there were, as usual, quite as many, if not more women than men present. A very few minutes after the clock had struck twelve, the usual procession proceeded to the scaffold, and after a short time, the cap and rope having been adjusted, the fatal bolt was drawn. From some cause or other, the muscular convulsions attendant upon violent deaths were unusually protracted. No confession of any kind has been made by the deceased. He steadily denied the truth of Mrs Dick's evidence nor affirmed it, but when pressed on the point, wished to maintain a determined silence. He did not open his lips on the scaffold, and required support to enable him to mount the drop. By this silence is confidently hoped by that unsatisfactorily confirms Mrs. Dick's (as the Judge called it) "extraordinary" tale, because it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find an instance of a murder, after the consciousness, and not frequently and emphatically declaring it. Royal and Mapes, two of the men committed with Yarham as joint principals in the murder, and acquitted on the capital charge at the assizes in April, 1845, were present at the execution; Royal was near the gallows as soon as it was erected (seven o'clock in the morning), and he was followed about by a considerable number of the populace. After the execution he was somewhat roughly handled by a portion of the crowd, and was obliged to resort to a neighbouring public-house for protection. The above execution stands in one respect almost unparalleled in English history—that of a man being hanged for a murder, after he had been allowed to give evidence against three supposed accomplices in the same offence. He was also executed upon statements which he himself made whilst under the impression that, in consequence of giving such evidence, he was free from any ulterior proceedings.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

If, as La Rochefoucaudt says, the moment when you escape from your sinful thoughts is the happiest of human existence, certainly our good countrymen are the most blessed of humankind, for their sufferings are imaginary; they shake them off at will; and then for such animal spirits as no nation ever possessed even those—all most resembling—who adored Alcibiades and Pericles, whilst they banished Aristides, and poisoned Socrates. With the private history of man I have no concern; but with the doings of politicians in general, and those of the Court in particular, I have an interest. The diplomatic body of the Parisian French in general have been looking at the arrival of Lord Palmerston in Paris with more astonishment and microscopic vision, than an astronomer at a new comet through Lord Rosse's telescope. The event certainly had that peculiar piquancy so dear to our volatile gobemouches. Let me rehearse the facts.

Lord Palmerston never pardoned, it was supposed, Louis Philippe's backing out of the execution of the Quadruple Alliance: he became personally opposed to the King of the French. In 1840, Lord Palmerston was, of course, diametrically opposed to M. Thiers's policy; and of war with Communism, and would have crushed, had not, in the last moment, a despatch telegraphic from the Rue des Capucines stopped the proceedings of the French fleet in the Mediterranean. M. Guizot, now M. Thiers's successor, was at that time Ambassador of France to the Court of St. James, and his chief adviser here, at a moment when all the foreign diplomatists in London had overtly or secretly abandoned him, was the Princess Lieven. She, at that time, assured the Tuileries that Lord Palmerston was far from her supporters during her long residence as Ambassadress at this Court, he not sign a treaty with the statesmen who had the first influence, and most unreservedly. Poor ordinary-minded mortals in Paris thought your clever Lord would find himself here like Regulus of yore, when thrust in the inn lined with [illegible] when Talleyrand left. Not the sat at the festive board of Louis; he passed from dinner to a petit souper d'amitié at Princess Lieven's, with M. Guizot; and, lastly, [illegible] treated as the prodigal son, at whose re-installation to me friends there is joy unbounded. Now Lord Palmerston—he whom every French journal daily attacks—who was spoken of at both courts as the enemy of France—circulates through Paris everywhere the object of the most cordial reception, and fed and dressed by Lord Broughm, who has taken the part of his devoted Cicerone.

The political conclusions drawn from this advent in Paris, I leave to those who are interested in politics, and in the continuance or fall of the Post Administration. But this is the topic of conversations in the more reflective part of the community—the triumphs and failures of Longchamps have occupied the majority of the gayer society. Certain of the elect and exclusive of the haut monde, have endeavoured, at Longchamps, to throw a broad and well-marked line of separation between their elegant selves and the rude millionnaires of the day: whilst the latter were making every effort to vie with, if not to eclipse their more aristocratic neighbours. The latter, by way of result, appeared on the course in glass and hackney coaches! This unforeseen piece of ruthless diplomacy did not prevent the crowd rushing to the scene of action. The sight was most extraordinary. Here you might see Salaman, the new Turkish Ambassador to the Tuileries, dress, and within an inch of his life surveying the scene from his "most Ottoman" vehicle, with looks of pleasure and bewilderment then followed vehicles of every description—the newest and the most elegant, and some of those, not a few, the most gaudy; whilst amidst them circulated the upholsterers' platform carts and vehicles of all kinds, the most extraordinarily devised, carrying about new investitures by way of [illegible]. Amongst others, most conspicuous was the rapid team which dragged about a new invented Patent Bedstead. To those who beheld this scene, remembering the time of the year at which it takes place, and the source of this unbearable pilgrimage, there is an inevitable feeling of internal discomfort and reprobation.

In Longchamps—l'Longus Campus"—was a Church and Monastery, founded, in 1260, by Isabel, sister of Louis IX: there she lived and died, in such odour of sanctity, that she was canonised by no less a Pontiff than Leo X., the gifted son of Lorenzo de Medici; and this was done with due time for reflection, for his Bull is dated the 3rd January, 1521. Here many a Princess of the Blood Royal of France took the vows of a Nun; such as Blanche, sister of King Philip the Long, Jeanne de Navarre, &c. Age rolled on; the habits of the Convent were relaxed, and never more so than under the rule of another most illustrious, beautiful, and witty Abbess—Mademoiselle de Charolais, who, of the Abbesses of yore, were but the outward garb; which gave rise to the well-known lines—

> "Frere Jaque de Charolais
> Dis nous par quelle aventure,
> Le Cordon de St. Francoise,
> A Venus ser de Ceinture?"

Still did the Longchamps-road continue the road where Princesses of France for three days in Holy Week gave the world what they thought a good example, by going in state to prayers at the shrine and Chapel of Mount Carmel close by, now Queen Marie Antoinette being the last pilgrim. Crowds followed the Royal poor Queen Marie Antoinette being the last pilgrim. Crowds followed the Royal pair, but they never entered that chapel, and were, of course, detained away from others; and, in course of time, nothing but the fashion was left. Fashion this year has tried to make of the remnants of habit, but "manners have given" to the unanimity in our councils, and a firm maintenance of all our just rights.

"James K. Polk."

Washington, March 24, 1846.

The above special Message was delivered on the 24th of March, and the papers contain reports of discussions upon the whole question. There is, however, nothing particularly worth notice in the speeches, with the exception of that of Mr. Webster, who earnestly urges a friendly negociation to settle the dispute about the Oregon territory.

No further succession, it was said, had taken place on the question. All the Indian papers seemed to take it for granted that the 4th of April steam-ship from Liverpool would bring instructions to the British Minister to resume negociations, taking as a basis the proposition refused by him so peremptorily as March last year.

In the meantime the uncompromising party, the "54 deg. 40 min men," as they are called, had been gradually losing ground, and the line of 49 deg. appeared to be coming into more general favour throughout the country.

The New York papers comment severely upon the proclamation of the Governor-General of India in which the Punjaub was annexed to the British possessions. One of them says, "And yet England denounces the annexation of Texas as an act of rapacity and as an evidence of aggrandisement and ambition which the leading powers of Europe are called upon to combine against and resist!"

The report of the Secretary of the Navy, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Message, contains no estimate for the increase of the navy, and the total of appropriations estimated as necessary for this branch of service was less than usual.

The Henry Clay, 1400 tons, and the finest and largest vessel belonging to New York, went on shore thirty miles from that city in a tremendous gale on the night of the 24th ult. The sea made a complete breach over her, and the masts were all immediately cut away. Six persons were thrown into the sea, and to go ashore [illegible] two sailors, two steerage and two second cabin passengers. The ship was valued at 90,000 dollars; and her cargo, which was light, was mostly insured. A great many had, however, at the last accounts, been got on board a steam-vessel, and the ship might probably be got off when the whole of her cargo was out. All the cargo remaining in the ship at the last accounts was in a damaged condition. There were about three hundred people on board, mostly emigrants, all of whom were saved except the six before alluded to. The vessel, if she could be got off, would be taken to New York.

CANADA.

The provincial Parliament was opened at Montreal on the 30th ult., with the usual formalities. The speech of Earl Cathcart alludes to the unsatisfactory state of our relations with the United States, and the necessity of immediately taking into consideration the question of the defence of Canada.

In the first paragraph of the speech, his Excellency announces the fact that her Majesty has been pleased permanently to designate him as her representative in that province.

SPAIN.

In our late impression last week we announced the resignation of Narvaez. The Gaceta states the fact officially, and also the resignation of Sen. Castro, Orlando and Burgos, Ministers of Finance and the Interior. General Armero, who had been named Minister of Marine, is likewise charged provisionally with the Ministry of the Interior. The Royal decree which accept the resignation of General Narvaez and of MM. Burgos and Orlando are countersigned by M. Egaña, Minister of Grace and Justice. Those which contain the appointment of General Armero and of the other charges provisionally with the direction of the other departments of the state are countersigned by M. Isturitz, the new President of the Council. The Under Secretary of State for the Finance Department is appointed provisionally Minister of Finance. General Portella is at present Captain-General of Madrid.

The nomination of a new Ministry has been followed by a startling event, the expulsion of Narvaez from Spain. He went as an exile to Bayonne, in the same town where, only a day or two before, the Infante Don Henry was received a banished man, and banished by order of Narvaez. The resolution to send Don Henry from Spain was not taken a minute too soon, for accounts had just reached of a rising in Galicia. The regiment of Zamora, quartered at Lugo, had revolted, crying, "Down with Narvaez! Live the Constitution!" It appears that, although Narvaez quitted Madrid, escorted by a troop of dragoons, he parted only with an order giving him only twenty-four hours to prepare, yet was he not taken quite unawares. The alternative of an embassy to Naples was offered him and declined, and his refusal followed by an imperative order to leave the country. Madame Narvaez arrived at Bayonne on the night of the 8th, and descended at the Hotel de Commerce; but immediately afterwards removed to the Hotel de Londres, considering that the Infante Don Henry was beneath the same roof. Don Henry has been placed under the strictest surveillance by the French Government.

It appears that General Narvaez, before he quitted Madrid, was waited upon by the most eminent individuals of that city, and of all parties. The Heraldo contains the following:—"Seldom has there been seen so distinguished or so numerous a Parisian as that which yesterday crowded the salons of the Duke Valencia. Amongst the persons of all political shades of opinion who went to take leave of General Narvaez, we remarked—the French Ambassador, Senors Mons, Pidal, Olozaga, Count de Santa Colonna, Pacheco, Cortes, General Cordova, Sotos, Orau, Figueres, and a host of others. The places allotted to the ladies were filled with the most distinguished women of Madrid. At midnight the General left the palace. A few minutes before he entered his carriage, he received from the hands of Brigadier Armero, a Royal decree, naming him Extraordinary Ambassador to the Court of Naples. The General respectfully returned it, and as soon as a private individual, accompanied by his secretary, M. Garnier, and a valet de chambre. An immense crowd filled the [illegible] his house, and his departure was a real ovation."

The same journal contains a warm eulogium upon Narvaez, declaring that his patriotism was pure, and that in all he did he had the interest of his country at heart. It then goes on in a sort of sarcastic tone to appreciate at such a moment, when the country is rejoicing with revolutionary enthusiasm, all party differences. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Minister Isturitz has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Ministry has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Ministry has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Ministry has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Ministry has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Minister Isturitz has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Minister Isturitz has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

The new Minister Isturitz has already accomplished a revolution. Without waiting for the assembling of the Cortes, he has convoked the Cortes for the 24th—recalled the decrees against the press—announced his intention of presenting a law of libel—placed upon trial by jury—accorded a general amnesty, from the Duke of Victory himself down to the humblest of Don Carlos's followers, who has not been excepted. It appears, therefore, that Narvaez is regarded more as the victim of the Queen Mother, with whom the whole struggle is supposed to have been, than a tyrant, breaking the constitution. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions. Her unpopularity has, indeed, been manifested on several occasions.

SPANISH SOLDIERS AND PRISONER.

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul had been officially informed by the Political Chief of Corunna, by order of his Excellency the Captain General of Galicia, that in consequence of martial law having been pronounced, the British mail steamers would not be allowed to land the mails and passengers at Corunna except during the day time. They would not be allowed either to touch at Vigo.

Martial law had been declared at Corunna. The Governor is determined to fire on the town, in the event of a movement in favour of the young Prince.

Other parts of Galicia were in a very distracted state. Nearly all the troops had marched from Corunna to Vigo to suppress the revolt, if possible.

We have, this week, resumed our Artists' characteristic "Sketches in Spain," with a party of Soldiers conducting a Prisoner under arrest.

LAUNCH OF HER MAJESTY'S BRIG "CONTEST," OF 12 GUNS, AT COWES.

Cowes has, for a long period, been advancing in naval architecture, and many good specimens of Britain's bulwarks have been launched on its waters. To the patronage bestowed on the port and its merchant-builders by the Royal Yacht Squadron, the navy, it may be said, is indebted to the great improvements which have taken place in that branch of science, and to the superiority over all other navies. Although the Port of Cowes, during the last century, has added several frigates, and even "seventy-fours," to the Royal navy, those vessels were built by contract after designs furnished to the respective builders by the Government; and it was not until latterly that the superior lines of the "Whites" attracted the attention of the Admiralty: the result has been that the Water Witch and the Darmy have been added to the list, and now the Contest, the subject of our present sketch, which represents the brig as she appeared on leaving the premises of her constructor, Mr. Joseph White, of East Cowes.

It having been announced in the local journals that the launch would take place on Saturday last, it being holiday time, a numerous assemblage arrived from all parts, to witness the ceremony. As the hour approached for the "anxious moment of her builder," every avenue leading to his premises, and from which a view could be obtained, was crowded with persons; at the same time, the Medina was literally studded with fleets of boats, with gaily-dressed persons, notwithstanding the somewhat unpropitious weather; for the spectators were too fond of aquatics to lose the sight of the day's ceremony to escape from a mere shower.

The shipping in the harbour displayed their bunting, as well as every flag-staff along the shores in the neighbourhood; even flags were suspended from house to house, across the streets; and her Majesty's revenue cutter Adder, Mr. Thomas Morgan, Commander, which was moored a short distance from the slipway, was also gaily dressed with signal-flags, low and aloft. The coup-d'œil had all the appearance of a regatta.

To enliven the company, the inhabitants of West Cowes sent their subscription-band over to the East, and which played several appropriate airs with much spirit and effect.

Among the company assembled on the temporary platform erected for the occasion, we observed Lady Harriet Paget, and her amiable family; the Collector of the Customs, J. Moore Hodder, Esq., and his lady; N. Barwell, Esq., of East Cowes Castle; Mrs. Barwell and Miss Barwell; W. Carter Hoffmeister, Esq., M.D., the Surgeon to Her Majesty's Household at Osborne; Spenser de Horsey, Esq., and several Members of the Royal Yacht Squadron; together with a goodly sprinkle of nautical gentlemen.

At eleven o'clock, it being nearly high water, the workmen proceeded "to set her up" (as it is termed), previous to clearing away the shores and stages; every man striking his wedge with his maul, in regular Dockyard time; until the Brig as it were came up like a feather, and was suspended by her cradle: the blocks were then neatly removed from under the keel.

All being now in readiness, the constructor, Mr. Joseph White, proceeded to the platform for the amiable sponsor, and, like a gallant knight, proud of his charge, conducted the "ladie faire" to the stage erected under the bows of the Brig. The ceremony of naming the vessel was then performed by Miss Paget, who pronounced the name of "Contest" in a clear and audible voice, and named the Brig in a short and appropriate speech, the company drinking "Success to the Contest, and health to her builder." This part of the ceremony over, and the moment having arrived for setting the vessel in motion, the gallant Sir Edward's daughter gave the command, "Down triggers"—"down dogshores!" and the Brig glided majestically along the ways for some two lengths, until she touched the water, amid the deafening cheers of the multitude present.

The Admiralty flag was hoisted (in addition to the Union Jack, the Royal Standard, and the Red Ensign, which were already displayed on board), emblematical of her being then in the possession of the Crown.

The following are her dimensions:—

	Feet.	Inches.
Extreme length	110	8½
Length of keel for tonnage	88	6½
Extreme breadth	31	7
Breadth for tonnage	31	3
Breadth moulded	30	9
Depth of hold	15	2

Load Water Line - Forward, 11 feet; Aft, 15 feet.

Draught of water on leaving the slip—Forward 6 feet; Aft, 9 feet 8 inches.

Burden in tons—459 76-94.

The Contest has been constructed on the lines of Mr. Joseph White. She is five feet longer than her Majesty's Brig Darmy, which length has been added to her midship body, the dead flat; this addition giving her the increased tonnage over that of her sister Brig. On inspection of her hull, to the experienced eye, there is symmetry in every part; and, to use the general opinion of the nautical and scientific persons who have inspected her, "there is nothing to stop her progress through the water." She possesses the requisite qualifications of a man-of-war "speed, capacity, and stability."

The figure-head of the Brig is a full-length of a man running (a "contest" against time), and is well carved; it is painted white, the Brig being all black. She has a top-gallant forecastle, and her fittings-up altogether are unique. She has, however, no wheel, and steers with a simple tiller; for, as Jack says, a child may steer her.

Her Majesty's steam-tug Echo arrived early in the morning from Portsmouth, with the Assistant-Master-Attendant of her Majesty's Dockyard and a party of Dockyard Riggers, and the Contest was taken in tow about noon, and she left the harbour, amid the cheers of the spectators, for Portsmouth, where she will be commissioned. She is, we are informed, to compete with the Recruit, 12, and the Goshawk, 12 the former building of iron, by Ditchburn and Mare, and the latter of timber, upon the lines of Sir William Symonds, the Surveyor of the Navy.

LAUNCH OF H. M. BRIG "CONTEST," COWES ISLE OF WIGHT.

WINTER THE KING, AND SPRING THE POET.

(FROM VITALIS.)

BY LEWIS FILMORE.

Proud and stern on his mountain throne,
King WINTER kept his state:
In his cloudy robe, with his icy crown,
Dark Monarch of earth! he sate.

His aged head was wreathed with snow—
With snow like heavy hair,
Dim, mist-like forms were crouching low,
In homage round his chair

Dread and drear is the Monarch's power,
And blighting the breath he breath.t—

But the sternest heart hath its gentler hour,
As the rock-cleft beareth the moss-born flower,
With its pink and tiny wreaths.

"I will prepare a royal feast :—
So spake the Monarch a voice—
That may—such weary ages pass'd—
My lonely heart rejoice

"Then go! ye vassals, hasten forth
As on the lightning's wing;
Gather all that is fair of earth,
Gather and to me bring'

"A robe of soft and summer green
Around my shoulders throw;
Of ivy wreath a verdant screen,
To hide my couch of snow!

"Unlock the bound and fetter'd stream,
To run in silver down;
Call here the zephyr and the beam,
To make the flowers their own.

"And reach me, in a foaming cup,
The juice of the southern vine,
That I may see it flash up
In its bright and crysta. shrine.

"Call, from the sunny lands of song,
The minstrels of the air

For I have missed and mourned too long,
Their notes so silver clear

"And bear, ye vassals, bear my throne,
Where flowers may round me spring;
I will no longer dreate alone
That I on earth am King

And low their heads his vassals bow'd
Before their Master's well;
But said, "Thy slaves are not allowed
Thy bidding to fulfil.

"Hadst thou for gold or treasure ask'd
Or the flashing diamond store,
We would for thee our strength have task d—
They should have been thine own.

"We'll build for thee thy palace walls
Of crystal, clear and bright,

And hang around thy regal halls
The rock-born flowers of light,

"If so thou will'st" His face the King,
In sorrow, turn'd away.
"Go! I have ask'd of ye a thing
From powers beyond my sway.

"Stern is my strength, wide my command;
But my domain of dread
Gives but the sceptre to the hand—
No garland for the head.'

And as he spoke, the palace wall
Sprang open with a sudden sound,
Again it closed, and in the hall
A beauteous youth was standing found.

A lofty mien, yet gentle too,
Told that his birth and power he knew;
Yet as to show his skill to charm,
He bore a lute upon his arm.

His graceful limbs with strength were strung,
He ruled a bright sun-spoken of gold,
Which he behind him carv.es flung,
Waved rich in many a glossy fold.
With dauntless brow he gazed upon
Old Winter and his ancient throne,
And Winter felt a secret fear,
As if a rival power were near.

Yet first the Monarch silence broke—
"Speak, youth, and be thine errand told;
Why hath thy foot our echoes woke?"
So spoke old he the Monarch bold,
And boldly 1 o the answer came—
"A POET I, and SIR, by name;
Where er I go I bear along
The life of light, the love of song.

"But where I dwell, and whence I come,
I may not tell: 'tis distant far
Thou canst not live where I may roam;
And when I leave my glowing star,
As now I do, to seas the main,
And field, and flood, and mountain chain,

I breathe the spell that sets them free
From all thy icy tyranny.

"The voices that around me rise,
Companions of my onward path,
A greater power with in them lies'
Than dwells in all thy stormy wrath.
For if my golden lyre I take,
And if my gentle song I wake,
The world is softened to the strain,
And laughteth forth in flowers again.'

"Then,' said the Monarch, "wake for me
The song in which such magic dwells,
That I may drink its melody
And mark the marvel of thy spells.'
The youthful minstrel touched the string,
And sang unto the aged King:
And gardens spread, and flowers spring
Around, like visions, as he sung

The song was o'er; the minstrel ceased;
No word the Monarch said,
But he his hands together pressed,
And bowed his hoary head.

What should that falling tear-drop speak?
It did not flow for pain.
What flush was on that aged cheek
When he raised his head again?

"Take thou the guerdon: 'tis thine own;
My kingdom falls to thee;
Its tithes my diadem and crown,
My empire thine shall be.

"I'll bend no more beneath the weight
Of stern and blighting power;
I sought in vain, on my throne of state,
For this ever-exciting hower.

"My heart the joy could never know
That lows that song could bring POET, thy heart! Farewell my throne
I'll blend my being with thine own,
Thou SPIRIT of the SPRING!"

ANTIQUITY OF THE POLKA.

It appears that this celebrated dance, which has created such a sensation all over the Continent, and has even subdued the phlegmatic English, from the peer to the peasant, is not of that recent origin which many of its ardent admirers would lead the good people of the present day to believe. Far be it from us, however, to attempt to detract any of its glories; but that it has no new beauty, and has been copsetting with the votaries of Terpsichore for the last three centuries, is plainly illustrated by the accompanying Cut, taken from a curious and highly interesting work, recently acquired by the Trustees of the British Museum, published at Nuremburg, in 1588, entitled "Jodoci Ammani, Charta Lusoria;" or, as the German title-page further explains it, "Artistical and well executed figures, in a new game of cards, by the illustrious and far-famed artist, Jost Amman, citizen, of Nuremburg." This clearly proves the exciting dance to have been as much admired in the 16th century as at the present time, and illustrates the old, but equally true, proverb, "that there is nothing new under the sun."

THE POLKA 300 YEARS OLD!

ANOTHER CONVERSION TO FREE-TRADE. The Earl of Essex has proclaimed his conversion to Free-Trade, in terms which impart to it the greatest possible weight. At a meeting of the Watford Farmers' Club, very numerously attended by the landlords and tenant-farmers of the district, he took the opportunity of pronouncing for Free-Trade, and stated that he had taken up his former opinion in favour of the Corn-laws too lightly, and made a complete reexamination. Lord Essex is as strong a Free-Trader in April as he was a Protectionist in December.

THE NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITION.

As we anticipated, this novel exhibition, at the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly, proved one of the greatest Easter attractions; a success which argues well for the improved intelligence of sight-seers.

The Collection comprises Paintings of the Natives and Scenery of New Zealand and South Australia, &c., in three divisions:—1. The New Zealanders and their Country. 2. The South Australians and their Country. 3. Views of the Coast of Brazil, &c. The whole have been painted by Mr. S. F. Angas, the son of Mr. Angas, the principal founder, and long the Chairman, of the South Australian Company. The scenic views of New Zealand are extremely beautiful; and Mr. Angas appears to have seen more of the country than any other English artist. The subjects are well chosen; whether we select the boiling volcano in the centre of the island, or the evening serenity of the Bay of Islands. The carved houses of the natives are, also, minutely delineated, and impress us with their resemblance to the carvings of the ancient Mexicans and inhabitants of Yucatan.

Among the portraits, that of Heki, the refractory chief, is very attractive; there are, likewise, portraits of other chiefs, and under them are their autographs—some in a style of penmanship that would reflect credit on a lettered European. There are, also, several portraits of New Zealand belles, a few of whom appear to be as graceful in their carriage and dress as an European beauty.

NEW ZEALAND YOUTH AT THE EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

But the living attraction of the Exhibition is a New Zealand youth, about fourteen years of age, and named James Pomara; he is a grandson of Pomara, a chief of the Chatham Islands; has been educated in New South Wales, speaks English fluently, and is a very intelligent person. He was present at the last soirée given by the Marquis of Northampton, where he excited considerable interest among the savans.

The South Australian views, in the wretchedness which they depict, present a painful contrast with the New Zealand scenes and portraits.

Mr. Angas has had the honour of exhibiting his drawings to Her Majesty and Prince Albert, who were both much gratified with the clever execution of these beautiful ethnographical illustrations.

SCENE FROM THE NEW CLASSIC BURLESQUE OF "THE BIRDS OF ARISTOPHANES," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mr. Planché has taken "The Birds" of Aristophanes as the subject for his Easter piece—following the original satire to a certain point, and then grafting upon it a dénouement of his own; by which means he has given to it a plot and a meaning, which the original did not possess—at least to be comprehended in the present day—a somewhat pardonable fault, when we consider that something over two thousand years have elapsed since the local squibs and allusions were written.

Jackanorides (Mr. Hudson) and Tomtolyseron (Mr. Caulfield)—in which classical cognomenations we discern the Greek for Jack Nokes and Tom Styles—are two discontented citizens of Athens, who, trying to discover some happy spot where taxes, laws, and work are unknown, and where they can do nothing but eat, drink, and go to sleep, arrive at the top of a mountain—a very effective scene, by the way. Here they call upon the King of the Birds (Mr. J. Bland), and propose to build a city in the air for his subjects. A parliament of birds is immediately convened, and the plan of Jackanorides approved of. His companion enters into the idea so thoroughly, that he changes at once to a cockatoo, to associate better with their new friends. Various Athenians now offer their services to Jackanorides, to help him in working out his new scheme: a poet, an architect, and a politician, especially furnish matter for some capital hits at the passing occurrences of the day. Their assistance is rejected, and the city is built. But it does not turn out such a paradise as was anticipated. All the feathered inhabitants fall out with one another; the goose misses his common and the duck his pond—all are miserable, and Jackanorides becomes the target for their abuse. The Eagle, at this position of affairs, turns into Jupiter; the city of the Birds changes to Olympus, where all the gods and goddesses are assembled; and the piece concludes with a lecture, read by Jove to the discontented Athenians, upon the folly of scheming, and becoming discontented with their position.

The burlesque has but one fault. As the intelligent critic of the Post has observed, it is too good—too good, at least, to elicit shouts of laughter from a general audience. Nothing can be more polished or witty than the writing; but in some instances the allusions were too esoteric. The author, however, may rest assured that not a point was missed by the more educated portion of the hearers, although the appreciation was subdued and quiet.

It is admirably put upon the stage. Without any extraordinary display of painting or mechanism, the entire mise en scene was perfect, and very carefully arranged, even to the most unimportant details. The costumes were also in exquisite taste, and the entire piece was a good specimen of that almost mosaic-like construction which characterises every drama in the production of which Mr. Planché is allowed to have his own way, unfettered by that almost ludicrous clinging to stage conventionalities so deeply implanted in the ideas of all ruling the various departments of a theatre. The stage itself was cleverly platformed into a rude rocky model of the ancient Greek stage, backed, however, by modern scenery.

To the performers, all praise must be given. Miss P. Horton, who played the Nightingale, and was the "Chorus" of the drama, is, in our opinion, the most graceful burlesque actress on the stage. Her manner of delivering the points of the dialogue—sending them right home to the understanding of the audience—is capital; and her beautiful voice is heard to great advantage in the incidental parodies. Her "Chorus" throughout was the prettiest piece of declamation we have listened to for some time. Mr. Hudson was a lively Jackanorides, and sang his sons with great spirit; and Mr. James Bland was as regal as he alone can be, both in the Eagle and Jupiter. An effective parody on "Lucy Neal" was beautifully sung as a glee, and loudly applauded. In a word, "The Birds" were all in high feather, and having, according to the bill, "put new feathers and tails" to his dramatis personæ, Mr. Planché may now plume himself upon the deserved success of his last production.

Mr. Sullivan's comedy of "The Beggar on Horseback" increases nightly in attraction; and the clever manner in which the interest is sustained and the plot worked out, renders it a most agreeable entertainment, which may be seen more than once with renewed pleasure—a rare thing to say of modern five-act comedies. It will enjoy a long run, which its merits entitle it to.

THE WINDSOR GRAND MILITARY STEEPLE CHASE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE WINDSOR STEEPLE CHASES.

This fine meeting came off on Tuesday and Wednesday week. The starts took place in Mr. Copeland's field, called Parson's-bush, on the western side of the Windsor and Slough road, out of which there was a small fence into a wheat-field, with a stiff fence into ploughed ground. Another stubble fence then presented itself, leading into a meadow, where were posts and rails about four feet high, over another ball fincher into a ploughed field of forty acres, and thence over a brace of ditto up to a stiff fence, with a wide ditch on the alighting side, into a grass field with a five-barred gate for those who preferred "timber for choice." Next two or three variegated fences and ditches, over a ploughed field, and a deep ditch nearly twelve feet in width, led into a grass paddock, where was the first turning-flag, at a distance of a mile and a half from the point of starting. The course then took a circle to the right, over a fence and brook, with hurdles by way of variety, leading to a wide ditch, with hurdles on the taking-off side, into a wheat-field, over posts of rails, to an awkward leap in the shape of a fence, with a ditch on the landing side, with a large grass field. The last leap was over a brook, with a flight of hurdles on the taking-off side, into the winning field, with a pretty run in, over the turf, of about 400 yards. Over this four miles of country, there were about thirty fences, including the posts and rails and the hurdles.

On the course were Lord Maidstone, Lord Dufferin, Mr. Lowther, Mr. Streatfield, the Hon. Captain Cadogan, Viscount Neville, Lord Glenmis, Albert Hearle, Esq., A. Murray, Esq., Captain Mountjoy Martin, Captain Peel, Captain Powell, N. Drinkald, &c., who were also subscribers to the race fund. Liberal subscriptions were also received by the stewards from his Serene Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar, the Marquis of Worcester, Sir Charles Kent, Lord Beresford, the Earl of Munster, Lord Seaham, Colonel Hall, M.P., Colonel Williams, Colonel Reid, M.P., Ralph Neville, Esq., and the whole of the officers of the Household Brigade.

Four temporary stands were erected, and respectably filled. Beneath the hedging-stand, Caroline erected his customary.

Great credit is due to the stewards, Viscount Neville, Hon. R. N. Lawley, and Albert Hearle, Esq. Mr. Thompson, the clerk of the course, performed the duty assigned him most satisfactorily.

We have not space for the details of the sport; but our artist has sketched one of the most animated scenes at the Brook.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 19.—Low Sunday. Byron died, 1824, aged thirty-seven.
MONDAY, 20.—Cromwell dissolved the Long Parliament, 1653.
TUESDAY, 21. Bishop Heber born, 1783.
WEDNESDAY, 22. Duke of Sussex died, 1843, aged seventy.
THURSDAY, 23.—St. George.
FRIDAY, 24.—Oliver Cromwell born, 1599.
SATURDAY, 25.—St. Mark.—Princess Alice born, 1843.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending April 25

Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m
3 31 | 3 56 | 4 20 | 4 43 | 5 6 | 5 29 | 5 53 | 6 18 | 6 44 | 7 11 | 7 40 | 8 12

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. B. A.," Brunes.—We will determine when we have seen the specimens, which must contain "seals."

"Pica" received the returned letter in due time.

"Veranda."—The First Number of our Journal appeared May 14, 1842.

"A Member of the Church of England and a Constant Reader" is thanked for his communication.

"J. G." We have not room for the long letter on Prison Reform.

"Kidnder" is recommended to apply to the Keeper of the Royal Academy, and to read Mr. Hautlake's forthcoming Work on Painting.

"A Servant" had better consult the popular abridgement of the Laws relating to Master and Servant.

"T. B." John-street, will be liable for the duty.

"W. S." Woodstock.—See the Advertisement in the present Number.

"The Lines on the late Victory, by J. W." are not sent.

"V. N. L." is recommended to write on one side of the paper only.

"D. W." Aberdeen, should address a letter to the Offices of the Company named at page 16.

"Chatham" The Advertisement need not be stamped.

"A Constant Subscriber" should appeal to the Income-tax Commissioners.

"Peter" Edinburgh. We do not remember any later edition of "Hansard's Typographia."

"Ignoramus" is not recommended to adopt the Hamiltonian System.

"Ann" should apply to the Registrar of the District. Three or four months' practice in Wood Engraving will be of little worth.

"Leatherhead" must consult the Directory.

"Meadow" is thanked. Our Engravings of the localities of the Indian War are from authenticated Sketches.

"H." is thanked for the note on Sanford Bay.

"An Old Subscriber," Plymouth. The "Illustrated New Testament" is in progress.

"Scrub" may find the desired information in the "Mechanic's Magazine."

"F. P." is liable for the amount of the Bill.

"W. S." "Lines on Childhood" will not suit.

"C. H. J. T." Presentations to the Blue-Coat School are somewhat difficult to obtain. Residence in the City will aid; and some Aldermen give their presentations only to children of the Ward.

"J. L." Whitelevens.—We shall be glad to receive the proffered Sketch, &c.

"A. A." Percy-street, is thanked; but we have not room.

"L. R." Islington. Declined

"A Constant Subscriber," Newport. The Engravings will appear only in our Journal.

"Southampton" Does our Correspondent refer to Dugdale's old Work?

"A Subscriber."—Lady Georgiana Woolf is daughter of the late Earl of Oxford.

"Argent." The bulge of brandy on a coat of arms is borne, in a fess, from the sinister chief point towards the dexter base. The illegitimacy of the noble house of Beaufort is expressed in the bordure which surrounds its shield of arms

"An Reader Resident in Ireland"—It was impossible to treat otherwise than imperfectly, so wide a subject in such limits We must declare the personal invitation to be one which we should receive every attention.

"Bath-road" is thanked for the hint; but we have not room for the subject.

"H. P."—Mezzotinto is a particular manner of engraving, so called from its resemblance to drawings in Indian ink

"A Clerk" We are not in possession of the address.

"J. J. J." London. The price of the "Nautical Almanac" is 5s. An excellent list of Maps of the Fixed Stars, and a Planetarium, by Mr. C. C. Mauger, Jun., has just been published, price 12s.

"A Farmer," and "A Friend," Barnsley The Treatise on Cattle, published by the Useful Knowledge Society is a sound work.

"Alpha" is thanked for the offer of the Renegade Sketch; though we had previously unpacked our own artists thither.

"J. B. C." is recommended to apply to the Assessor of his District.

"Come Again?" by Thorne, will suit us.

"Sigma" Tickets for viewing the State Apartments at Windsor Castle may be obtained in London; but, it is expected that an office for their distribution will shortly be opened at Windsor.

"A Constant Reader."—The Pelisse is part of the Hussar uniform.

"Locomotive."—The West London Savings' Bank, Farringdon-street.

"A Constant Reader," Dublin, should apply to a Patent Agent; as Messrs. Robertson, Fleet-street.

"X. Y. Z." Gloucester.—We are not in possession of a carver and gilder's tariff.

"G. W. T." Newport, may, probably, refer to the large View of Dublin, which will be presented to our Readers during the next month.

"A. Z." New Ross.—"The Treatise on the Horse," published by the Useful Knowledge Society, is a standard work.

"G. J." Barnstaple. All evidence whatever on a trial must be given before the Jury return their verdict.

"An Inquirer" should consult Mr. Pitman's Works on Phonography.

"D. D. C." Berkshire.—Valpy's Editions. Postage Stamps are received as payment for Foreign Letters.

"Carlotta" should apply to the Registrar of the district. The price of a Special Marriage License is five guineas

"Billy Button" may learn at Searle's, the boulders, the length, &c., of the winning Cambridge boat.

"O Εθιδος." The regulated difference between the commission of Ensign and that of Lieutenant in the Infantry of the line is £250.

"W. P." Baronets do not rank Peers, and they never had a seat in the House of Lords. They take precedence immediately after the younger sons of Barons.

"Inquisitor" and "A. B." shall receive Replies next week.

"T. P." Wood Engraving is learned by apprenticeship.

"Alma Mater." "Clericus," and "Pastor." We cannot undertake to settle disputed points of ecclesiastical law

"An Old Sub." Ramsgate, will be attended to.

"Quiz, Beverley."—In his signs exists" may be freely rendered, "Beneath this standard thou shalt conquer."

"Dart." Rosemead, is thanked for the hint to our artist.

"A Subscriber." Carmarthenshire Living is cheap in the Isle of Man: most of the agricultural population have all the necessaries, and some of them the comforts, of life

"P. ... ster" should ... t to by post

"... ..." *... ... ...

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.

The return of Mr. O'Connell and his friends for the holidays gave additional animation to the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday last. Many of the Aldermen and Councillmen attended in their civic robes, and a large body of the '82 Club, in their semi-military costume. At one o'clock the hall was tolerably well replenished, and corporation red cents, '82 green caps and Irishers' hats, contributed to give animation to the scene. At a quarter past one the "Liberator" made his appearance, attended by Mr. Alderman Staunton, the new member for Nayo, as an '82 Club officer, and several other distinguished "Association" lions. (Immense cheering.)

The Lord Mayor (Mr. Reshin), having assumed the President's seat, proceeded to justify the fact of his appearing in such a position. We were threatened, he said, by the projected Coercion Bill, with a suspension of the Constitution. The Government had selected a most unreasonable and ungracious moment for attempting to pass such a measure against Ireland, and while Irishmen had been so generously and successfully shedding their blood in fighting England's battles abroad (Hear.) However, he had no great apprehension, that, with the Liberals, assisted by every man in Ireland who was not a Tory, or a place-hunter, their battle, the bill would even pass. (Hear, hear.) He then passed a high encomium on Mr. O'Connell.

The business of business then commenced.

Mr. O'Connell read a list of contributions, several of which were young gentlemen's gifts of their "pocket money."

Letters were read, giving a most favourable account of the state of the repeal registries, in different towns and counties.

Mr. O'Connell then addressed the meeting at great length. The success of their cause was certain. Eight millions of people passably patronising the Legislature could not meet with disappointment. The people were true to themselves, and they would succeed. (Cheers.) He must first refer to the famine, which he regarded as altogether an affliction from Providence. In Parliament he had represented the distressed state of the people: he had been amply attended to, and I gave Government every credit for their anxiety on the subject. They had not done, however, all that they might do. He did not like Lord Heytesbury. His Lord Heytesbury) preferred protocols to potatoes. (Laughter.) He was too fond of "Orange shineans," and too tedious in dealing out relief to the people. But there must be no tumults, no violence. The people must be tranquil, but strong in their indignation against a Government which "hangs fire" in affording them assistance. On the other hand, the Government must not keep the people in long in expectation. With regard to himself, no man on his property should be a harsh landlord, and if every other landlord did the same, Ireland was safe. (Hear, hear.) He next adverted to the Coercion Bill. He denounced the murders that had been committed by the people, but he could not for the gre. the murders committed by the "clearance system." (Hear, hear.) He was in hopes that the case of Ireland was, at length, be coming to be understood in England. He described the horrors of the wholesale ejectment process. As to the Coercion Bill, it had not yet passed its first reading, and England should hear many a tale of Irish grievance before it did pass. (Hear, hear.) He complained of the shortness of the Easter vacation, which, however, only showed the eagerness of the Minister to pass the bill. The compliment should be amply returned to him. The bill should be opposed by every available form of the House. He (Sir O'Connell) would sit the Easter vacation, which, however, to profit by any contrivances that would serve to delay or to defeat it. (Hear, hear.) On all Free-trade questions he (Mr O'Connell) would vote with Peel. But what was Peel doing for Ireland? It was Free-trade and corn for England. I need draw no moral from this; but you might call the attention of the Irish members to it, that they might use the facts against the Coercion Bill, and against traducers of the people."

DISTURBANCES IN TIPPERARY.—On Monday, at Clonmel, a considerable mob collected at the outskirts of the town, and some of the leaders called upon those "in the midst of plenty." They moved towards the Carrick road, where they met a number of cars laden with grain, which were being driven to the Marfield distillery, in that neighbourhood. The grain was instantly thrown on the drivers of the carts beaten. This outrage has been reported in Clonmel shortly afterwards, a company of infantry, with a troop of cavalry, proceeded towards the scene of the robbery, and dispersed the mob, after taking four or five of the leaders into custody.

THE LADY OF THREE HUSBANDS. A Mrs. Jane Scott is undergoing her trial at Dublin on a charge of bigamy. It is stated, however, that she has actually had a husband living at the time of her marriage with the last. The case also states that Mrs. Scott having been, on the 11th of September, in the 53d year of the reign of George III., married to James Carter, at Letterkenny, in the county of Donegal, in the 54th year of the reign of George IV., fraudulently married Anthony Galway, her former husband being then alive. The trial, which excites considerable interest at Dublin, is not yet concluded.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

ALARMING ACCIDENT ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

An accident of a very fearful character occurred on Sunday afternoon, on the Eastern Counties line between Edmonton and Pender's End, and, considering the extraordinary cause, and the astounding escape of human life, it may be justly termed one of an unparalleled character. It is therefore, in order to meet the convenience of the subscribers to the Newmarket Craven Meeting and the public, determined to run a special train from Shoreditch on Sunday afternoon, at half-past one to Chesterford, undertaking to do the distance direct to Newmarket within four hours. For this occasion, more than usual pains were adopted in selecting first-rate engines, carriages, driver, guards, &c., with a view of avoiding the least mishap. At the appointed time on Sunday the train started, conveying Lord and Lady Chesterfield, Lord E Russel, and the élite of the sporting world, amounting to near 100. In advance, drawing the train, were two of the finest engines that the company possess, both of the same construction, with the exception of the foremost one having inside cylinders, and the second an outside one. The train was rather heavy. The train had proceeded exactly ten miles from the Shoreditch terminus, when the passengers became aware of the unusual rocking of the carriages, and in an instant or so afterwards, they experienced the unpleasant sensation of something heavy striking the bottom of the carriages. Several persons scrambled up, breaking the glass out of the windows to ascertain the cause, but, before they had time to do so, the second engine, by some means, ran off the rails, and, being pulled by the engine in advance, ran up the gravel road-way, the metal first, and was torn up for upwards of a quarter of a mile, when the great stress upon the coupling shackles no doubt caused it to snap asunder, and the whole train, except one or two carriages, was precipitated on the line into a deep ditch at the bottom of a slight embankment. In running over, one of the posts belonging to the electric telegraph was rooted up and the wires displaced, which caused a temporary suspension of the working of the telegraph. The scene at this time was indeed most alarming. The horse boxes were thrown into the ditch in a heap, one upon another; the carriages, both first and second class were to be seen, some lying on their sides, whilst others had their wheels sticking up in the air. Added to this, the horses in the boxes, in which there were not fewer than fourteen animals, could be heard plunging, kicking, and snorting, to such a degree, that for some time it was feared a most frightful loss of life had taken place. The secretary and superintendent of the locomotive department were, at the time, upon one of the engines, and they immediately sent information of the accident to Shoreditch, with a request that a number of the Company's men might be forthwith despatched to the scene. In the interim, the Deputy Chairman of the Company, with one or two Directors, arrived from Edmonton, and, with the aid of other parties, the affrighted passengers were got out. Strange as it may appear, not one of the passengers received any personal hurt. The acting guard, a young man named Gordon, when picked up, was believed to have been fatally injured. He was by their desire conveyed to the Spread-eagle Inn, where everything was done for him that surgical skill or humanity could suggest, and he is fast recovering. One of the parties was thrown down the bankment into the ditch; but, with the exception of a few contusions, he escaped unhurt. The only three, and they were not passengers, as was at first supposed, who received any injury. The line was re-layed and cleared of all obstruction during the evening of Sunday; but the Directors deemed it prudent not to use the down line whilst the men were working near the same, lest an accident should occur to any of them. It was, however, re-opened for public traffic on Monday morning, and the trains passed up and down during the day. The cause of the late accident has not as yet been ascertained. The loss to the Company will amount to between £3000 and £4000.

On Tuesday afternoon Major-General Pasley arrived at the Shoreditch terminus of the Eastern Counties Railway, for the purpose of proceeding down the line to inspect that portion on which the accident occurred. Both engines were dashed by the General to be unhipped. The one which did not go off the line has been running on several occasions since the accident; the other, however, has not been used since. After examining the broken carriages at Stratford, the General and party proceeded to view the rails that had been re-laid in place of those broken up by the train on Sunday. These were pronounced to be perfectly secure. The General, on examining the spot where the carriages had been thrown down, expressed his astonishment that no person had been killed.

FATAL AND EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT ON THE BRANDLING JUNCTION RAILWAY.

On Sunday last a serious accident occurred on the Brandling Junction Railway, near South Shields, by which several persons have been injured, and one of whom is since dead. The ten o'clock train from Gateshead was proceeding at a rapid pace from Brockley Whins to Shields, when, on taking a curve near the Jarrow Alkali Works, the engine got off the line, dragged the tender with it, and having become disconnected from the passenger-carriages by the breaking of the coupling-chain, dashed over the embankment, and through the roof of a row of dwelling-houses, on the ground-floor of one of which it finally stopped, resting on its end, with the tender above it, poised in a most fearful position. The only inmates of the house, which has thus been completely demolished, were two women and a child, all of whom are most seriously injured, one of the women by the engine having fallen upon her leg, which was literally crushed to atoms, and she, as well as the others, by the escape of steam and boiling water which rushed from the boiler. The force of the engine and its great weight seem to have cut through the building almost like a razor, which accounts for the inmates of the neighbouring houses having sustained but little injury—in fact, none at all worth mentioning. The engineman and stoker were thrown from the engine, and alighted on that portion of the roof which remained, receiving serious contusions by the fall. One passenger, who was now riding outside the train, had both his legs broken. Fortunately none of the passenger carriages were dragged from the line, and the extent of injury received by the passengers is not so great as might have been expected under the circumstances.

It appears from a subsequent inquiry, that the train had just passed over a switch, which had been locked over night, the man in charge of it being near to it when the train passed, and from the state in which it was found immediately after the accident, it could in no way have contributed to throw the engine off the line. The engine seems to have gone off just after taking the curve; and as soon as the engineman discovered this, he shut off the steam, and reversed the motion of the engine, which ran about sixty yards in the same direction in which the train had been going, and then turned off, down the embankment, which is skirted by a wall fifteen feet high, a row of pit-houses running parallel with the wall, a few feet from it, the true-fall being about the same height; and over this wall the engine plunged, toppling over, and descending end-ways through the roof. The engineman was thrown some feet into the air, and alighted on that portion of the roof which remained unbroken, from which he slid to the ground beside the engine, and was severely scalded by the steam which escaped. The fireman was also thrown upon the roof, but escaped with comparatively slight injury. The row of houses is very densely populated with the families of pitmen employed at the St. Hilda Colliery, but in that into which the engine fell, there were but the two elderly women. The man who was riding outside the carriage, and had his legs broken, is a stonemason, belonging to Sunderland. It is impossible to arrive at any certain information as to the extent of injury received by the passengers, but there is reason to believe that it is trifling considering the nature of the accident. The train consisted of eight carriages, five of which were dragged off the line, but not off the road, the chain between the first carriage and the tender being fortunately broken.

Sarah Ripon, one of the unfortunate women, died shortly after four o'clock on Tuesday morning. Her injuries were principally scalds on the head, chest, and arms. The deceased was a native of Alston, in Cumberland, and she had been on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Swalwell, whose husband had left the house but a few minutes before the accident, to attend a Sunday school. The deceased was sitting near the fire, and Mrs. Swalwell was at the table, when a rumbling noise was heard, and the one said to the other, "what could it be?" In a moment after, the engine descended through the roof. The Coroner's inquest on the body was commenced and adjourned.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF TWO LIVES OFF HUNGERFORD PIER.

On Sunday afternoon, between four and five o'clock, an accident occurred off the new pier, Hungerford-bridge, by which two persons unfortunately lost their lives, and another (a woman, was brought out of the water in an insensible state, but who happily has been since restored. It appears that a female named Mansfield, residing at 12, Jerusalem-street, St. James's, in company with Mr. Fowell, her brother, and another person, having paid their money at the hatchway as fare for their passage, in proceeding along the lighters, to wait for the steamer, stepped upon a plank laid so as to form a communication from one lighter to the other. The woman was first, and, in stepping upon the planks, or temporary bridge, they were displaced, and the parties fell upon each other into the water. The current was very strong at the time (it being about high water), and the two men, after momentarily floating, sank by the side of the lighters, and were not seen afterwards. Two watermen rescued the female, and without delay she was conveyed to the St. Martin Tavern, Duke-street, Adelphi, where every comfort was provided. Dr. Ratcliff, of the Strand, was called in immediately, and the usual remedies in case of drowning administered for a long time of great exertion, the poor creature was, by eight o'clock, so far recovered as to be able to be removed to her residence in a cab. In the course of a short time after the rescue of the female, the body of her brother was found. On Wednesday afternoon an inquest was held at the Golden Lion Tavern, Strand, before Mr. Bedford, Coroner for Westminster, on view of the body of John Fowell, aged 41, late cook at Simpson's Tavern, Cornhill, one of the unfortunate persons drowned by the falling of the platform. The jury returned the following verdict: "We find that the deceased, John Fowell, met his death accidentally, owing to the imperfect construction of the connecting platform of the two floating barges forming part of the Hungerford Pier, which a deodand of £50 on the said connecting platform."

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The railway between Darmstadt and Heppenheim (on the Bergstrasse, up to Heidelbargh) was opened on the 28th of March, but with a bad augury. From an act of negligence two empty waggons were left standing on the rails, close to the station. The locomotive could not be stopped and came with force with the waggons, breaking them into a thousand pieces. It is miraculous that no lives were lost, but all the passengers were hurt, though none dangerously.

A letter from Athens, dated March 28, says:—"Every day brings reports of crimes committed in the provinces, which never [illegible]. Some idea may be formed of the enormous number of offences committed, from the assizes for the Morea have now been sitting daily, for more than four months, at Patras, and are not expected to terminate their proceedings in less time than a month or six weeks more.

It is stated from Funchal, Madeira, that the wine growths of the island have progressively diminished for the last four years. In 1842 there were 3422 pipes made, in 1843, 3221; in 1844, 3012; and in 1845, only 2659. During the last year there were sent out of Madeira 2823 pipes, viz., 1011 to the British dominions (viz., 616 to London, 280 to Jamaica, and 175 to Calcutta); 669 to the United States; 320 to St. Petersburgh; 202 to France; 109 to Lisbon; and 112 to different other countries, each of which receives less than 20 pipes.

Intelligence has been received of the wreck of the ship Mary, and the dreadful fate of her crew, who sailed on a whaling expedition about three years since to Sydney, thence to Woodlark Islands. The statement is obtained from a survivor, named Valentine, the only one saved of the crew of 24 men, who perished in the shipwreck, and the remaining 23 were horribly massacred by the natives of Woodlark Islands.

Letters from Rome state that the Empress of Russia is quite recovered from her recent indisposition, and intended to quit that city on the 9th instant for Rome, where her Imperial Majesty is to stay only a fortnight. The Grand Duke Constantine proceeds to Toulon, Brest, and the coasts of Spain and Portugal. The Empress, accompanied by the King and Queen of Naples, Counts Apulia and Trapani, has several times visited Pompeii. Sir Henry Pottinger is amongst the personages of distinction at present sojourning at Naples.

The Athens journals subsequent up, inculpate the editors of the Minerve and Siècle journals had been convicted of defaming M. Piscatory, the French Minister, and sentenced, the first to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 300 drachmas, and the other to four months' imprisonment and a fine of 600 drachmas, with the costs of the trial. The trial created a lively interest. Sir Edmund Lyons and other members of the diplomatic body were present. The Minerve on the following day apologized to M. Piscatory.

A bill to prohibit horse-racing has passed the New Jersey Legislature. Racing for money, or where twenty or more people are assembled, is declared an offence, and all persons concerned, directly or indirectly, giving notice of it, advertising, &c., to be guilty of misdemeanor, and punishable by 1000 dollars fine, or imprisonment not exceeding one year. The bill has passed both branches of the Legislature, and now only waits the signature of the Governor to become a law.

We find the following in a letter dated Nagy Kavoly (Hungary), March 16:—"A fearful phenomenon took place early on the morning of the 9th instant, at the entrance of the Borzon Defile, near the Great Szamos. Mount Mormentzee, which is 1800 feet above the stream at that place, and 300 broad, suddenly split, and fell with tremendous fracas into the river. Its bed has been filled up, and the whole Zsamostal has been inundated."

The following intelligence is contained in a letter from Tampico of the 5th of February. "We had an express to-day bringing the news that the insurgent troops had taken possession of the Presidio de Santa Isabel, situated near to Matamoras—so near that it is considered Matamoras is already taken by the Americans. The Presidio de Santa Isabel was taken without a fight, and there were only some Mexican Custom-house officers and pilots, who were made prisoners."

A Constantinople letter of the 27th ult. announces that the Abbas, an independent tribe of Circassians, had taken the offer of several towns. A deficiency of food is the alleged reason for calling upon the poor work-people to take the law into their own hands; but the want of employment, occasioned by the suspension of commercial orders on Dutch account, is, probably, the primary cause of whatever distress may be felt.

The Emperor of Russia returned to St. Petersburgh from Moscow in good health on the 28th of March.

Advices have arrived from Hobart Town to the beginning of December, which are of a favourable tenor. The weather has been unusually warm, and some districts of the country had suffered from drought, but rain had followed, which was fast repairing the injury vegetation had sustained. There are also accounts from Adelaide of the same favourable tenor. The discovery of mineral treasures of great value was daily on the increase. Specimens of various descriptions of metals are on the way home, which will, doubtless, create much interest in the scientific world.

At the last meeting of the Eastern Countries Company on the subject of branches, Mr. Hudson stated that the weekly receipts had now reached £7440.

A letter from St. Petersburgh states that Professor Jacobi, of the Imperial Academy, has just communicated to that body the invention of an electrophonic telegraph, composed of ten keys, ten different accords, and ten conducting wires, by which the letters of the alphabet and words can be expressed by means of sound. The Academy has pronounced a favourable opinion of the invention.

The Reformed Jews of Berlin inaugurated, on the 5th inst., the handsome synagogue which they have lately got built in that city. The principal changes adopted by the Reformist party in their service consists of the substitution of German for Hebrew; in the admission of women into the body of the synagogue, whereas they had formerly been obliged to remain apart in a grated gallery, carefully curtained, and in the men being obliged to keep the head uncovered.

The States of Brunswick were suddenly dissolved on the 8th, in consequence of their refusal to approve of the expenditure of the Government for the construction of railroads. The Reigning Duke had, previously to the dissolution, made a reply to a remonstrance of the states, in which he expressed his regret at the difference between them and his Ministers, but declared that he could not approve of a refusal of the means of promoting the welfare of the country.

A bear-hunt took place on the 6th instant, in the forest of Bois Armenonville, in which the Duke de Nemours and the Prince de Joinville took part. An enormous wild boar, after having received a ball from the rifle of M. Audry, the head keeper of the Duke d'Aumale, was killed by the Prince de Joinville. The horse of one of the aides-de-camp of the Duke de Nemours, was wounded in the leg by the animal's tusk.

Mdlle. Charlotte de Hayn, the celebrated tragic actress, was married on the 3rd inst., in the cathedral of Berne, to the Baron Charles Theophilus de Hoven, one of the richest land proprietors of Prussian Silesia. Mdle. de Hayn, who followed a theatrical life from taste, is descended from a most ancient noble family in the Duchy of Brunswick, and is possessed of property to a large amount. She numbers many illustrious men among her ancestors.

M. Rosemond de Beauvallon, who was tried lately at Rouen for killing M. Dujarrier in a duel, passed through Bayonne last week, on his way to Madrid.

A letter from Gibraltar states that the Emperor of Morocco has prohibited the exportation of corn from his dominions. This measure is owing to the late bad harvest in Barbary, which have raised fears for the harvest. Saffi, Casablanca, and Mazogan, on the Western coast of Africa, were the principal ports for the corn trade. Various cargoes had just left for Marseilles. The exportation of barley has been prohibited for some time.

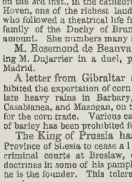
The King of Prussia has just issued orders to the President of the Province of Silesia to cease a l proceedings commenced against M. Ronge, by the criminal courts at Breslau, owing to articles contrary to the Roman Catholic doctrines in some of his pamphlets in favour of the German Catholics, of whom he is the founder. This toleration has had a most salutary effect on the public mind.

Buenos Ayres papers to the 6th of January have been received. They contain the annual message of Governor Rosas to the Legislature, in which are recorded the events that have taken place between the Republic and the allied powers of England, France, and Monte Video, as well as a statement of the public finances. This document was read on the 1st of January, on the opening of the legislative session.

The Rectory of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, with the Rectory of St. Nicholas Olave, in the City of London, have become vacant by the death of the Rev. John Mitchell. The presentation to the benefice is with the Lord Chancellor and Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, alternately.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LADY ELIZABETH PERCEVAL.



This venerable lady was one of the two recently surviving sisters of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval, who perished by the hand of Bellingham. The Lady Margaret Walpole, widow of Thomas Walpole, Esq., nephew of the first Earl of Orford, is now the only one alive of the seven brothers and sisters of the Minister Perceval.

The family of Perceval, Earl of Egmont, derives from the Conquest. Its first rise into eminence was through Richard Perceval, who became distinguished in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and filled some offices of State under that Sovereign. His descendant, Sir John Perceval, was raised to the Peerage as Baron and Viscount Perceval in 1715 and 1722, and was created Earl of Egmont in 1738. The son of this Earl, John Perceval, second Earl of Egmont, was born the 24th of February, 1711; he married first the Lady Catherine Cecil, second daughter of James, fifth Earl of Salisbury; and secondly, Catherine, daughter of the Hon. Charles Compton, afterwards Baroness Arden, in her own right. The Earl died the 11th of June, 1784; and left, with other issue, John James, his successor in the Earldom; Spencer, afterwards First Lord of the Treasury; Elizabeth, whose death we here record; and Margaret, who was married to the late Thomas Walpole, Esq., and who is still living.

The Lady Elizabeth Perceval was born on the 12th Dec., 1763; her Ladyship never married: she died on the 4th inst., at Odell Castle.

LOUIS EUSTACHE UDE.

This celebrated professor of the art of cookery, and writer upon the subject, was a native of France. He early in life commenced his famous culinary career, and was, when not long advanced in his art, cook to Louis XVI. Coming to England, he filled the same office in the domestic establishment of the Earl of Sefton. He afterwards acted as steward to the United Service Club, and then to the late Duke of York. His last engagement was, we believe, that of Maitre d'Hôtel at Crockford's. M. Ude's chief fame, however, rests upon his work, "The French Cook," which has gone through numerous editions, and which is now regarded as the standard work in the science of cookery. "Ude's fame," says Crofton Croker, in his "Legends of the Lakes," "is boundless as his talent. Does not London resound from St. James's to Irishland's favoured colony, St. Giles's, with the celebrity of this professor of the culinary art? Are not his bon mots the fortune of the magazines and newspapers. In short, English literature boasts a Ude and a Roscoe, while we have only a Norbury." By Major Beamish he was termed "Ude, the autocrat of cookery."

In private life M. Ude was an extremely witty and agreeable man: his unaffected piety and his many domestic virtues made him universally respected. After a long and eminent career, this genius of a knowledge which adds such amenity to the life of man, died a few days ago, at the advanced age of 76. In proof of the respect he was shown and felt for religion, is the fact of his having been interred with all the full pomp and ceremony of the Church of Rome, a funeral which that Church ever readily accords to those who die in the odour of sanctity.

An English Cook left us the "Institutes" as a mighty weapon of discord and litigation. The work of this French cook is, however, a greater gift to society, for it furnishes the means of social joy and hospitable harmony.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

Upon the annexed page will be found engraved two of the most meritorious pictures in this Collection. They are of unpretending size, it is true; but few visitors will fail to recognise in them genius far beyond that displayed in many of the larger productions.

The first Illustration is No. 40 in the Catalogue, Mr. Clint's truthful "View of Folkestone," commended in our notice a fortnight since. Every portion of the picture evinces the hand of a master: and the admiration is balanced between the glory of the summer sea and the lofty and [illegible] atmospheric effects of the sun's rays warming the distant cliffs. Altogether, it is a most interesting picture, and well merits the distinction it bears of "sold."

The second Engraving, No. 103, "A Welsh Girl at Rural," by J. J. H[illegible], is a charming scene—a rustic girl at a spring: the figure is painted with all the charm of truthful nature: and the distance, with the sheep—those effective accessories in landscape scenery—is cleverly executed. The whole is a most delightful, and, to admirably given.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

NEAR FOLKESTONE, MID-DAY.—PAINTED BY CLINT.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

WELCH GIRL AT RUNEL.—PAINTED BY J. J. HILL.

THE LATE RAJAH OF PATIALA.

This Portrait of the late Rajah of Patiala, whose name has been frequently mentioned in the late news from India, is copied from a native drawing, curiously executed in colours, and illuminated with gold. His Highness wears his war costume, which is most elaborately wrought; but in richness is rivalled by the superb caparisoning of the charger: the saddle-cloth, especially, is as exquisitely wrought as the page of an illuminated missal.

Patiala is the principal of the protected Sikh states under our Government, and the head of the Phullian confederacy of Sikhs. It was the first to seek British protection from the grasping ambition of Runjeet Singh, in 1809. The Rajah's territory is extensive, both in the hills and plains between the Junena and the Sutlej. The hill district was a tail of our conquests from the Nepaulese; but was conferred on the Patiala chief in return for his services rendered to us during our war with Nepaul. The other portion lies between Hansee and Umballah. The Rajah's revenue was about £35,000; and his military force 3000 troops, almost all irregular, and fit only for the duties of police.

The Rajah himself, from his remarkable stature, has been called "the Modern Porus." He always cultivated a closer intimacy with our Government than that of Lahore, which, in consequence, made him a greater object of jealousy to the latter than any other of our protégées. But, his treachery being discovered during the late war, he was summarily put to death by the British troops, by hanging him on a tree.

THE RAJAH OF PATIALA.—(FROM A MSS DRAWING.)

MR. HAYDON'S PICTURE OF "THE BANISHMENT OF ARISTIDES," AT THE EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

Mr. Haydon has just completed two large Pictures—"The Banishment of Aristides," to illustrate the injustice of a Democracy; and "The Burning of Rome," to show the heartlessness of a Despotism: and thus, by exhibiting historical scenes and facts, to convey great political lessons without recourse to allegory or fable. These pictures are intended by the artist as Parts of a Series of Six Designs, originally made by him for the embellishment of the "Old House of Lords," in 1812; and we infer they are now reproduced with a view to competition for the decoration of the "New House." On this great work, Mr. Haydon seeks to impress his views in his own forcible manner "For Heaven's sake!" he says, "let us return to English common sense, and illustrate the doctrines of Crown, Lords, and Commons, by subjects from the history of all nations, if applicable to illustrate a principle of our own Government, as well as from our own subjects, which tell their own story by expression and character, and require no allegory to confuse their common sense."

We have engraved that which must be considered by far the finest picture—"The Banishment of Aristides;" and it shall be described in the Artist's own characteristic language:—

The moment taken in this picture is the moment after the decree of the people, when Aristides, and his family, and household dog, are leaving the Piræan Gate. Plutarch says he appealed to the gods as he left the city, and hoped the Athenians might never again require the advice of Aristides

This is the instant taken. Aristides is looking to heaven, and appealing to the gods; on his left arm leans his wife, with her newly-born infant, looking with apprehensive indignation at the mob, which is hooting and pointing at her. Holding the belt of his robe, on the right, is his son Lysimachus, too young to comprehend completely the condition of his father, but not so young as not to be aware there is something to be alarmed at. Close to the right arm of Aristides is a venerable archon of the Areopagus (the great hall of justice), reasoning and appealing to Themistocles on the gross injustice of the decision. Themistocles, as statesman and warrior, is standing, armed, on the step of a tomb by the road-side, and maliciously enjoying the fate of the man he feared. The archon looks as if he had a strong suspicion that Themistocles was at the bottom of the whole. Behind the good and venerable archon are some of the vicious demagogues who had banished Aristides; whilst, on the opposite side, on the left of the wife of Aristides, is another with a red cap (the Pileus), an Athenian fisherman, venting his hatred, and only kept from violence by the look of a good man, with black hair, between the two, who checks, by his expression, the malice of the other, whilst a friend behind is smiling at his violence. Leaning on the shoulder of the fisherman is his old malignant mother, who is encouraging her son, and pointing at and hissing the good and virtuous family, who are so indignantly treated by the people. Below, kneeling, is a grey-headed veteran of republicanism and spite, picking up stones and dirt, to be used when Aristides is sufficiently distant. Above him is a young man crippled and blind, who, though unable to see, is gratifying his detestation of hearing the continual praise of Aristides by a hiss at him as he passes by! Such is human nature.

Up in the right hand corner rises a statue of the Goddess of Justice

MR. HAYDON'S PICTURE OF "THE BANISHMENT OF ARISTIDES," AT THE EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

(OEMIAI), as a sarcasm on what is passing below. At the base are two female friends of the family, mother and daughter, the young girl is unable to suppress her emotion, while the mother is looking with sympathy, though not in tears. Behind is the Piræus Gate, with two equestrian statues; inside, the roof of the Temple to Ceres, and other buildings; and in the background to the rock Acropolis, with the ancient Propylæum and the ancient Temple to Minerva, built before the Parthenon, and which the Parthenon supplied when the first temple was burnt by the Persians, just after this very time. On the left of the spectator is Mount Hymettus; and on the right, the point of Anchesmus and the Areopagus, where St. Paul preached. The wall running up is a portion of the towers which usually flanked a Greek gateway.

The localities are perfectly correct, owing to the assistance from Colonel Leake's Atlas.

Thus far the treatment of this fine subject. The figures are of life-size, admirably grouped, and most effectively arranged. All are freely and correctly drawn: the figure of the old Republican who is picking up stones is a fine specimen. The story is well told throughout; and, with a recollection of the majority of Mr. Haydon's pictures, we consider this to be the finest composition he has produced.

The second picture—"Nero Playing his Lyre, Chanting the 'Fall of Troy,'"—is less finished than its companion, but is powerfully painted.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

We are just recovering from the aching of the ribs which naturally follows two squeezes at the Greenwich termini, and two hours' jostle in the crowd at the fair, and may be excused for a little grave morality. There is no place, in fact, from which we return so sad and moralistic as from an English fair: we should say a suburban fair, however: a country fair, on open common, or half-reclaimed chase, with its green sward and chequered summer lights and shades, its rustic courtships, its open-mouthed belief in the ferocity of the wild Indians, and the fun of the Clown, is another thing altogether. Say what you will of the ignorance and brutality of agricultural labourers, they are Arcadian grace and purity compared with the mixture of cab, pickpocket, prize-fighter, and gent, which so lamentably counterbalances what there is of honestly merry holiday making and enjoyment with which one can sympathise in a fair near London.

But at Greenwich there is a redeeming grace in the picturesque old park. There is no park anywhere near London, few in England, to compare with it, for the varied undulation of its ground, the fantastic beauty of its trees, and the glory of its prospects. Would that the whole fair could take place in the park, without destruction to the greensward. As it is, the daylight part of the enjoyment is unexceptionable. There are few scenes more worthy a painter's study than Greenwich Park on such a day as this week's Easter Monday. And there is little to mar one's enjoyment in the appearance or demeanour of the crowd that is racing down One Tree Hill, or pacing the avenue to the upper gate. Nature has done so much, and people, after all, however coarse or unattuned to natural influences, are so unconsciously impressed with natural beauties. But one thing, which belonging to the Fair, intrudes itself into the Park, is abominable. We mean the "scratchers;" or, as they are called, "the whole fit of the fair." If there was one, there were five thousand of these infernal police-rattles in miniature, jarring and distracting the ear at the same moment in the Park. One got into a passion at the stupidity of the "gents" and "gentesses" who seemed to find treasures of fun in these instruments. Certainly the English, if the most practical people in the world, are the most tasteless in their holiday diversions. In France, we should have had fifty orchestras in full polka under the trees, and fifty al fresco ball-rooms filled with trim grisettes and their cavaliers in blouse and casquettes, instead of the sound of this unmeaning machine, and the laughter that accompanied it.

The locality of the booths at Greenwich is a dirty and confined cul de sac, along which there is no penetrating during the Fair, except at the risk of broken ribs. It was only our strong enthusiasm for "Richardson's," and the regard for "Circassian Ladies" and "Napoleons at Waterloo," which has grown in our growth, that enabled us to risk our coat-tails and corns on Monday. We regret to say that we felt ill repaid. The glory of the caravan and the parade has departed. Richardson's is only the ghost of what it was; and the "Wild Indians" have given way under the rivalry of real Ojibbeways, and the fatal influences of civilization. Worse than all, the people have ceased to believe in these things. We fought our way, with a courage worthy of better reward, to the platform of Richardson's. We felt, even while on "the parade," that all was not well within. The majestic presence of the gentleman in spangled tunics and Spanish hats seemed cowed by a consciousness of approaching dismissal. The Harlequin looked lumbering, and the Columbine was pan fully plain. Merrinan had not a joke to bless himself with; and the master's invitation to "walk up" was faint and despiriting.

On reaching the interior, which was very well filled, we found the lights up and the play commenced. It was a melodrama, in which one Sir Rupert of the Cross was the hero. As we believe this class of entertainment is dying out, we subjoin the piece, which we took down in shorthand as it proceeded, and which we believe to be the only Richardson's Drama in print.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ...

SIR REGINALD (father of Lady Evelina).
LORD RONALD (a wicked nobleman).
TWO BANDITS (in his employment).
SIR RUPERT OF THE CROSS (the heroic lover of lady Evelina).
A WANDERER (believed by us to be the mother of Sir Rupert, but this is by no means clear).
GREGORY (a comic servant).
A GHOST (whose, we have not the slightest notion).
THE LADY EVELINA (daughter of Sir Reginald).

SCENE I.

Enter Sir Reginald and Evelina.

Sir R. It is not the slightest use, my child, to conceal the fact. You love the unknown young man, Sir Rupert of the Cross. He is now preparing for the tournament. Is it not so?

Eve. Dearest father—I know not how you have discovered the secret of my heart. I love Sir Rupert, and may the powers that watch over innocence protect him in the combat.

Sir R. Lord Ronald woos you for his bride, but never shall it be said Sir Reginald stepped between his child and the man of her heart. The tournament all decide.

Eve. (clasping her hands and looking up). Oh 'Evens watch over and protect my noble Rupert!

Enter Gregory (with a low comedy taste of his person.)

Greg. Please your 'ighness you're wanted in the chapel, and my lady's wanted, and I'm wanted, and we're all wanted. [Exit with a very funny wriggle.

Sir R. 'Tis well—I attend you. [Exit Sir R. magnificently.

Evelina. Oh, Sacred Powers! this 'orrid hour is approaching! (Kneels.)

Enter SIR RUPERT.

Sir Rup. Ha! ma Hovelina! in the attitude of devotion? Soon thou will be mine—thy Rupert's. With this good sword and this strong harm will I win my rival to the dust and claim thy 'and. Hark! the knights approach. To battle! Invisagency! I'm announced by this gentleman.) One kiss and I am off—I return victorious. Away! [Exit SIR RUPERT, valiantly.

Eve. Oh, 'Evens! [Exit EVELINA, devotionally.

SCENE II.—A peaceful village landscape.

Enter LORD RONALD AND TWO DESPERADOES

1st Desp. Then you will keep thy promise.

2nd Desp. Ay. How say you, noble Captain?

Lord R. (with knowing emphasis) Do you but keep your words as I do mine, and all may yet be well. See he approaches! Then is an order in my path, and I will accept it once or perish in the attempt. He comes!

Enter SIR RUPERT, passing very closely by LORD RONALD, but not perceiving him at all.

1st Desp. (nothing on him.) You are our prisoner!

Sir Rup. Villains! would you murder me? [He is forced off very easily, two backing LORD RONALD over to the groove.

Lord R. Ha! Ha! Ha!

Enter the WANDERER, in a black cloak with a hood to it.

I did Lord Ronald not! Beware!

Lord R. 'Ence, opprobrious being!

Wand. Forbear!

Lord R. Hand off. Am I to be thus insulted by a madman?

Wand. And if I am mad, who has made me so? (LORD R. is puzzled.) I have been beaten for mad—scourged for mad—imprisoned for mad—but mad I am not!

Lord R. I never 'armed you or yours. Hence, I say.

[Exit suddenly, on the one side, the WANDERER on the other.

A Romantic Landscape. SIR RUPERT, standing with his back well against a Waterpot. (N.B. This Scene, from internal evidence, should be a Dungeon.)

Sir Rup. What a fragrant situation! Even now the tournament is prepared, but I am here chained (obviously a falsehood), and powerless. Ah! if the spirit of the dead can hear, be near me now! (No mention of any one in particular.)—(Recits.)

Enter the WANDERER.

Wand. Sir Rupert!

Sir Rup. (With uncalled-for incivility.) Hence, wretch—nor taunt me in my misery!

Wand. Thou wouldst win the hand of Evelina—follow me!

[Exeunt unaccountably.

SCENE IV.

A Grand Hall in the Castle. SIR REGINALD, Two Noblemen (N.B. The Desperadoes of Scene 2), and LORD R.

Sir R. 'Tis well. Noble Knights, let the sports commence. By immemorial usage, the victor in the tournament wins my daughter's hand. Noble knights, begin the martial exercise

(Combat of LORD R. and a Nobleman. The Nobleman goes down with disgraceful readiness.)

Sir R. 'Tis well. Lord Ronald is victorious. Bring forth my child, my Evelina

Enter EVELINA.

Lord R. Proud beauty, thou art mine.

Lady E. Never! I am Sir Rupert's.

Lord R. 'Tis well; we shall see.

Lady E. Alas! I know not!

Sir R. This is trifling! Take her, and accept my blessing.

Enter the WANDERER.

Wand. Forbear!

Lord R. Again this bold intruder! Thou art mad!

Wand. And if I am mad (&c., as in Scene 2.)

Sir Rup. Villain! I come to claim my bride! [Stabs LORD RONALD.

Sir R. 'Tis well!

Enter GHOST. Tableau and Curtain falls!

The merits of this drama are obvious. It is full of action and heroics; but deficient in clearness of plot. Many things are said and done, of which the piece furnishes no explanation. We regret to say it was received with derision by the audience.

THE THEATRES.

It has been the general remark of all, whom duty or pleasure took to the theatres on Monday, that many of them were open—that no extraordinary "hit" was made by any of the Easter pieces, nor were the audiences numerous as heretofore. The fine weather had a great deal to do with the latter state of things. Thousands upon thousands of the middling classes of the metropolis left town, by rail, van, omnibus, and on their own feet early in the day; and were to be encountered returning to their homes as late as three, and even four in the morning of Tuesday. Nor were the theatres the only establishments affected by this rush to the suburban resorts. Many of the taverns and gardens near London, although still patronised to a certain extent, did not reap the harvest of former years; and we were told that, in consequence of the fleet of cheap steamers on the river, one of the largest hotels in Chelsea, on the Thames did not take the pounds where he once took one hundred. We cannot quarrel with the holiday makers for preferring the pure air of the country to the heated atmosphere of a theatre; more especially at the present season, when the beauties of an early spring add additional charms to the really lovely scenery round London. But to our duties as critic; and this week they are of no ordinary character.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"I Puritani" stands apart from all other operas; just as its lamented composer, Bellini, though usually included amongst the maestri of the Rossinian school, is totally different to his fellow-countrymen, beginning with their great master and his most favoured pupil, Donizetti. His abundant melodies, deliciously sweet, but tinged with that melancholy train of thought from which he rarely emancipated himself, mark a wide difference between his compositions and those of Rossini, whose fancy, always active, was naturally lively and brilliant, and indulged itself in a wonderful variety and superabundance of ornament; such, for example, as the use of triplets, which he brought in on all occasions, whatever were the subject of his inspirations. With Bellini's compositions, it is evident that the idea or feeling he wished to express engrossed him so competely as not to allow any of the company himself with adventitious ornament, or artificial means of heightening the effect. His morceaux appear to be the spontaneous effusions of a mind more tender and melancholy than energetic or sprightly. They are purely Italian, and have all the liquid sweetness of his mother tongue; and, on hearing them, we feel convinced that had his native language been the guttural but profound German, the harsh but energetic English, or the lively, witty French, his inspirations would have been fettered by languages marking a characteristic nationality with which he had nothing in common.

These observations occurred to us with more force than usual last Tuesday night, when this charming opera was given, on occasion of the re-appearance of Grisi, Mario, and Lablache. None could, perhaps, have been selected which presented the qualities of these three great artists in a more striking and appropriate light. It is needless to say that enthusiastic applause greeted the appearance, one after the other, of the great trio. The original dresses appeared to us not to have quite all her wonted good looks; but that peculiar grace and softness of look and gesture which distinguishes her peculiarly in the part of Elvira, showed us that it was still the "Diva" who stood before the audience. The execution of the music was, as usual, the stamp of her genius, and that perfect ease which long habit of the part bestows, and which gives to it so many advantageous effect. Her bravuras were brilliant as ever. Her notes, if not so full as usual in the lower tones, probably from the fatigues of the journey, are, as ever, delightfully clear and sweet.

Mario has returned in improved health, his voice and style; his full, sweet tones produced a powerful effect; and his execution of the difficult duet in the third act—the gem of the opera—was pathetic in the extreme. "Credea si misera" was also admirably given by him. "Ah! per sempre io ceca" did not please us much as usual, though Mario displayed all the fulness of his beautiful voice in the famous quartet: he sang, in our opinion, with an exaggeration of the staccato, peculiarly unsuitable to Bellini's melodies; but we must repeat that, in the last act, he was truly admirable, and was loudly applauded throughout. Lablache as the same as ever. His magnificent voice is undiminished by time, while his musical skill must necessarily be on the increase as long as he continues on the lyrical stage. The duet between the two bassi was, as usual, splendidly given. We must pause an instant to remark the exquisite feeling with which Ferossari sings that movement of the duo preceding "Suona la Tromba," especially at the words, "Le d'Elvira il fantasma colorito." One of the greatest artists is that he lets no expression of feeling—no source of effect—pass by, without taking advantage of it. He gives a composer's music with a degree of completeness to which few artists even trouble themselves to attain.

The production of "Don Giovanni," on Thursday, was highly interesting, as presenting all the first artists of the theatre, combined in parts illustrating their mimic powers. To the performances of Mario, Grisi, Lablache, and Formasari will be performed next Thursday. The abundance of melody, the rich instrumentation, and the unusual excellence of the libretto, proceeding as it does from the pen of so eminent a comic writer as Beaumarchais, combine to render this delightful opera equal, if not superior, especially when given by such artists, to any now performing on the lyrical stage. The programme also includes selections from "Linda di Chamouni," in which Castellan, Brambilla, and Corelli will appear. There will, also, be various other entertainments in the ballet department.

DRURY-LANE.

We cannot altogether applaud Mr. Bunn's policy in selecting the pieces which he put up for Easter Monday. For, although "The Crusaders" is an admirable and successful opera, it is not one so suited to the tastes of the holiday audience as many others in the Italian repertoire: we may mention "Sonnambula" as one example. And the orderly and solemn manner in which the revival of "The Crusaders" was received, showed the futility of routing up these dull concoctions of half a century ago, merely because they were the best of their former attraction, or the traditionary admiration of a corps of unemployed pantomimists. People's notions of what is funny and entertaining have marvellously changed, even within the last ten years; and the only way to make these conglomerations of preposterous adventures and conventional incidents, as impossible as interesting, go down, is to use them as vehicles for smart burlesque dialogue and allusive anachronisms. We must say, in justice, however, to Messrs. Wieland, Andrews, Howell, W. H. Payne, and Mdlle. Louise, that they performed excellently well. The mockery of the first-named actor was inimitable—the best thing of the kind we have seen since the days of poor Goodall; and, without intending to depreciate the exertions of the others, we must give to him the credit of having kept the audience in tolerable good temper through the piece. Without him we believe the curtain would have fallen upon anything but a satisfactory state of things. We do not believe in revivals. However successful the original may have been, these resuscitations are always flat, and, we suspect, to the management, unprofitable. They bear the same relation to new pieces that the early representations as the ghastly movements of a galvanised corpse do to the active movements of the living muscular frame.

COVENT GARDEN.

This hapless establishment appears to us to be a species of Cosmorama Rooms upon a large scale. It is the refuge for all sorts of wonderful exhibitions, which succeed one another with singular rapidity—attract for a brief space—and then vanish away altogether and are seen no more. Masked Balls, Corn Law Meetings, Unending Concerts, Fancy Fairs, anything but what ought to be, have come and gone, and now the great original of the Land of the North has taken the house for a series of his necromantic performances. Mr. Anderson is the Cosmorama of Legerdemain, but we question whether the extraordinary illusions of M. Philippe have not robbed his performances of part of its attraction. To maintain his position, he must originate some incomprehensible deception, and thus follow those which the foreigners have already exhibited to us. From neglecting to do this several of the Sunday evening's performances went off but flatly; the audience had seen them done, as well as it was possible to achieve by means, even Unending Concerts, Fancy Fairs, anything but what ought to be, have come and gone, and now the great original of the Land of the North has taken the house for a series of his necromantic performances. Mr. Anderson is the Cosmorama of Legerdemain, but we question whether the extraordinary illusions of M. Philippe have not robbed his performances of part of its attraction. To maintain his position, he must originate some incomprehensible deception, and thus follow those which the foreigners have already exhibited to us. From neglecting to do this several of the Sunday evening's performances went off but flatly; the audience had seen them done, as well as it was possible to achieve by means, even

There was an encore in the course of the evening, arising from disapprobation expressed by the visitors at the performance of some foreigners on the stage; and the public wrath was not altogether allayed by a speech from the conjuror, to the effect that the hissing proceeded from parties sent into the house on purpose. This charge was made in bad taste, as those of a similar nature always are. It is a great mistake on the part of the profession to imagine that such things take place without being immediately put down by the mass of the audience, which, taken as a whole, always fights for fair play. And yet, during a moderately long intimacy with the coulisses, we never heard dissatisfaction expressed, without the performers asserting that somebody had been sent in on purpose, so unpleasant it is to attribute it to its real cause.

The entertainments concluded with a promenade concert of Sax horns and cornopeans, during which all indulged in the "promenade" who could, for the house was very full.

PRINCESS'.

Mr. Macready experienced a most enthusiastic welcome upon his return to these boards, in the character of Hamlet, on Monday evening; and the deep attention with which the tragedy was listened to throughout—broken only by warm and judicious applause—showed that an Easter Holiday audience can be as orderly instead of the fine old conventional theatricals, it was formerly the custom to put up in the hills, on similar festivals. After the tragedy, was produced "an original, legendary, historical, fairy extravaganza, entitled 'Lady Godiva and Peeping Tom of Coventry,'" which, we regret to pronounce the weakest of all the indifferent entertainments which we have lately been celebrated. Mr. Maddox appears to think that if he puts some of Beverley's beautiful scenery before the audience, and is there, in spangles, gauze, and tin, the piece itself is of no consequence. But, that this is a sad mistake, the grave demeanour and occasional waxing of the spectators during the scenes intended to be funny, was a sufficient proof. Scarcely a rattle of laughter interrupted the progress of the piece, which appears to be based on the libretto of a capital pantomime of the same name, produced some seven or eight years ago, at Covent Garden. The best part of the entertainment was some capital and effective dancing, by Mr. Gilbert, Miss Ballin, and Miss Marshall, and Mr. Plexmore. But for this, the favourable reception of the piece might have been considerably jeopardised. Mr. Compton, as Tom; Miss E. Stanley, as his wife; and Mr. Oxberry, as a very quaint critic, who only had to say "O yes," in answer to everything the Mayor (Mr. Granby) proposed—made all they could of their parts; but it was impossible to do much with the same lines set down for them to speak. We trust the beautiful legend of Peeping Tom will not again meet with such undeserved bad treatment—Alfred Tennyson forbid it!

On Tuesday evening, a two-act drama, called "Ernestine," was produced, and with perfect success. From the construction and distribution of the characters, we expect it is a translation from the French, although the name of the original piece was not given in the bills. It has all the ingenuity and intricacy of plot that characterise the dramas of French origin; but, at the same time, the progress of the action is perfectly clear and intelligible, although very difficult to describe. But there was a good part for Mr. Wallack, that of Frederick de Champcourtois, a gay, wild, devil-may-care spendthrift; and Mr. Cooper was well suited in the character of the Viscount, made to the foregoing. Mrs Stirling played the heroine, Ernestine, a gentle, patient, suffering girl; Miss Emma Stanley was the companion, Marie Perrot, a good-tempered paysanne; and Miss May enacted Juliette d'Arneville, the bride of the Viscount, who gives cause for an esquerque, in which the nephew believes, upon being bidden to the wedding, that he is jealous her. And as all these ladies and gentlemen played with their wonted excellence, and had capital materials to work upon, the result was that the piece achieved a perfect success, which it fully deserved; and was announced for repetition every evening amidst loud applause.

We are happy to see that Miss May, whose début we had to speak favorably some time back, on these boards again. Of all the clever representatives of the Adelphi girls in the "Cricket," not one played the part so well as we believe this young lady could have done; and, if we mistake not, this was the opinion of one best capable of judging.

ADELPHI

By the indefatigable exertions of the Management, two new pieces were produced at the above house on Monday, and both were entirely successful—a drama, entitled "Industry and Indolence," adapted from the French piece, "La Manivelle de la Cité" by Mr. Edward Stirling; and a burlesque on "Peter Wilkins," written by Mr. Gilbert Abbeckett, who stands second only to Mr. Planché, in this style of composition.

The drama is with the thorough-going Perrie St. Martin school, abounding in situations both novel and interesting; offering scope for plenty of good melodramatic acting, and constructed with regard to the introduction of those capital scenes, for which the Adelphi has been so long famed especially all local "sets" relating to Paris and its environs.

The plot is somewhat elaborate: indeed, it would take more room to describe it than we can well afford this week. The name of the piece will, however, show the moral intended to be worked out, which is simply by the agency of Ravens, the industrious workmen (Mr. Howe), and Marcel, the idle one (Mr. Selby). Them we see in the first scene at Rothe's Tavern, Bagatelle—a double dyed one, of course—and Madame Celeste as Cecile, an orphan, who is persecuted throughout the piece by Rollin and Monsieur Delasarre, a builder (Mr. Perkins), and protected by ties; Mr Wright is "an amorous spark," and Miss Woolgar a lively nonentity, very anxious to be married. From these types the class of pieces may be guessed. It is of the same school as "Clarisse," "The Bohemians," &c.

We have spoken of the excellence of Madame Celeste: the tableau at the end of the first act—Paris and Notre Dame by moonlight—is amazingly effective, and Cecile is rescued from the river, in the most dramatic manner, at an old street in the rue, with a well, was equally striking; and the final scene of the piece, in the Champs Elysées, was one of the best set pieces ever put on the Adelphi stage. It was long and loudly applauded.

All the performers exerted themselves to the utmost, and Miss Woolgar and Mr. Wright were encored in a very original polka. Mr. Selby was admirably made up as the idle scamp—his entrance was capital: The neral business reflect the highest credit upon that gentleman's judgment and intelligence.

The number of new pieces produced during the past week at the theatres, read as it impossible for us to speak of them all in our present number, altho' all the notices are in type. We must therefore postpone the accounts of the performances at the Surrey, Astley's, and some other houses until next week, when they will receive due attention. In the meantime we may mention that a new five-act play, entitled "Jeffreys, or a Wife's Revenge," was produced at the Adelphi with great success at Sadler's Wells on Wednesday. It is from the pen of Mr. Henry Spicer

MUSIC.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

DRURY LANE.	PRINCESS'S
Mr Watts	Mr Weiss
Mr Harrison	Mr. Allen
Mr Kaig	Mr. Gardner
Mr. Borrani	Mr. F. Bedford
Madame Thillon	Madame Thillon
Miss Poole	Miss Grant

Count de Campo Mayor
Don Henrique
Don Sebastian
Ruy Blas
La Luzarina
Dorcas

In the Drury-Lane version, four songs were introduced for Madame Thillon, Miss Poole, Mr. Borrani, and Mr. Harrison, not to be found in the original score. The practice of introducing such extraneous compositions is by no means to be condemned, and it is not at all beneficial for the introduced airs, as they may have to come in contact with the inspirations of a very superior writer. The system, however, of the new compositions happen in this instance to be unquestionable. That Mr. Bunn's words, are by Mr. Brinley Richards, a clever pianist and young and fast-rising composer. The first is sung by Mr. Harrison in the second act, "O wond'rous what then feelest," in D flat, and is a delicious melody, a charming effect being produced by the orchestra playing the subject whilst the singer holds on one note. It is well instrumented, and will no doubt be a standard song. It was discreetly accompanied by Mr. Harrison

The second musical piece introduced was a ballad, by Miss Poole, in the third act. "The haven of the heart is hope," in F minor, which very narrowly escaped an encore, being one of those melodies which cannot be easily forgotten. It was exquisitely warbled by the fair songstress. In the same act Madame Thillon gave a cavatina "Love dwell with me," which was not, unfortunately, one of her most successful efforts. In justice to her we enjoyed it much more when we heard it in Germany from his opera of "Stradella." It is elegant, but derives its importance principally from the talent of the fair executant. The fourth interpolation is a spirited song, composed by Mr. Tully, the chorus music in Act 3. Instrumented in a very characteristic style, and is well suited to display the best points of Borrani's voice.

Auber's own music was received with unbounded delight. Madame Thillon was called upon to repeat the playful Rondo, "The young Pedrillo," with its ingenious choral response. She was similarly honoured in the Nocturne and Bolero, "In the deep recesses of the forest." Her rendering of the latter, from beginning to end, was a veritable triumph, and no wonder, for her acting and singing of the Queen are perfect in their way. Her powers of witchery are the result of combined qualities. If she be not a first-rate singer, she has the most grace and elegance as to captivate her hearers. Madame Thillon was well supported by Mr Harrison, who played with more ease and animation than are usually observable in his acting. The house was crowded to excess, and the opera will no doubt be a hit.

Mr Bunn has just accomplished a great coup. He has succeeded in engaging Carlotta Grisi, the celebrated danseuse, who will appear in the new ballet of "Paquita," just produced with such great success in Paris.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The 108th Anniversary Festival of this noble Institution was celebrated at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday evening, T. H. Hall, Esq., the honorary counsel to the Society, in the chair, in the absence of Earl Howe, who was to have been the President of the day, but was prevented by his official duties in attendance on the Queen Dowager, who was on a visit to her Majesty at Windsor. The Chairman was supported by Sir C. Clarke, Sir G Smart, Sir Robert Gill, Dr. Belcher, Rev. F. W. Blomberg, Messrs Lucas, Hawes, Macready, Bennett, Broadwood, &c. The committee of management consisted of Messrs. Anderson, Bennett, Calkin, Challoner, Card, G. Cooke, Coote, Griffin, Horsley, Harper, Hodgson, Lee, Mountain, Nicholl, Percy, Phillips, Rowedine, Turle, and Wily. The vocal and instrumental performers were Mr. Parish Alvars (harp), Mr. Richardson (flute), Miss Rainforth, Miss Hawes, Messrs. Barnby, Blewitt, Howe, Keech, Lucas, Cooke, G. Cooke, Phillips, Rowedine, Bodda, Elliott, Hobbs, Moxley, Rovedine, Spencer, C. Taylor, Walmesley, and Signor F. Lablache. The accompanyists were Messrs. W. L. Phillips, Turle, Horsley, T. Cooke, Bennett, and Broadwood. The programme was as follows:—

Grace before Dinner—"Praise the Lord."

Ode—"Non Nobis Domine."

The National Anthem.

Glee—"Sir Oluf's Arbeur," W. Horsley, M. A Sung by Messrs. Hawkins, Howe, Elliott, and Chapman.

Ballad, Miss Hawes—"Then You'll Remember Me;" Balfe.

Fantasia and Evard's Gothic Harp, on themes from "Montecchi" and "Semiramide;" composed and performed by Mr. Parish Alvars.

Glee—"Heroes;" Spofforth Sung by Messrs. Hawkins, Howe, Elliott, and Chapman.

Scena—"Miei Rampolli," Signor F. Lablache, from Rossini's "Cenerentola."

Glee—"Full, fill me, boy;" T. Cooke

Ballad, Miss Rainforth—"I sing from Benedict's "Crusaders."

Song, Mrs. Hawes—"Ere infancy's bud," from Mehul's "Joseph"

Swiss Air, with Variations on the Flute, played by Mr. Richardson.

Song—"The Laughing Lilly of Man," by Mr. Keech.

Glee "Come, thou monarch of the vine;" Sir H. R. Bishop.

This was a great musical treat, and nearly every piece was encored. Signor F. Lablache gave the "Tarantella" with infinite spirit, and was greatly applauded for the same. The proceedings terminated with the loyal and occasional toasts proposed by the Chairman, who was very felicitous in his introductory remarks. Mr. Horsley gave the health of the President in a few appropriate remarks. The amount of the subscriptions for the evening reached £787 12 s., amongst which were Earl Howe, £10; the Countess Howe, £10; R. Cive, Esq.; M. Browne, Esq., 3 G. Ferry, Esq.; B. Pearson, Esq.; J. Harrison, Esq.; T. Bacon, Esq.; and Miss Laurence, ten guineas each; Mr. Benedict, five guineas; Mr. Moscheles, £5; T. Hall, Esq., two guineas; A Friend to the Charity, five guineas; Sir C. Clarke, Bart., 4 guineas; the Musical Critic of the Morning Chronicle, 4 guineas; W. Cossentey, Esq., two guineas; the Rev. H. Penny, two guineas, &c.

Mr. Parry, the Honorary Treasurer, exerted himself, as usual, most indefatigably in the arrangements. The Society is deeply indebted to him for his untiring energy and excellent judgement. The historical account of the Society, drawn up by him, contains some interesting details of its rise and progress. Its origin is thus explained:—"Above a century ago, a celebrated Oboe-player, of the name of Kytch, came to England from Germany; where performance was held in such high estimation, that he was engaged at two or three private parties of an evening, to play Oboe sonos, &c., which he executed with exquisite taste and feeling, to play Opera songs, &c., which he executed with exquisite taste and feeling, to play Opera songs, &c., which he executed with exquisite taste and feeling, to play Opera songs

OPENING OF THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY EXTENSION TO RAMSGATE.

PROCESSION PASSING THE MARKET-PLACE, RAMSGATE.

The South-Eastern Railway Company are gradually extending the benefits of their ably-managed Line to fine old towns and pleasure-places of the picturesque county of Kent. About two months since, we chronicled and illustrated the opening of a branch from the trunk Line at Ashford, to the city of Canterbury; and now we have to place similarly upon record the extension of this branch from Canterbury to the flourishing town of Ramsgate; to be hereafter extended to Margate.

Monday last was the day fixed for the spirited ceremony of opening the new Extension Line. The weather was delightfully fine; and, to signalise the event, the Directors of the Company hurried a large party of friends to accompany them; and a special train, consisting of seven first-class carriages, propelled by the "Shakspeare" engine, having been duly freighted, left the Bricklayers' Arms terminus at half-past eleven o'clock. Among the Directors present were Mr. MacGregor, the Chairman of the Board, and Viscount Torrington, the Deputy Chairman; the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington, Mr. Bodkin, M.P. for Rochester; Mr. Dodd, M.P. for Maidstone; Mr. Felden, M.P. for Blackburn; and many influential shareholders in the Company were also passengers in the train.

ALBION HOTEL, FROM THE HARBOUR.

The train being admirably appointed, the trip from London to Ashford was performed in somewhat less than two hours. The fineness of the weather, and the holiday associations of the day, (Easter Monday), drew forth thousands of spectators throughout the line. At the several towns and villages, the train was loudly cheered as it whirled along; and as it swept across the main street of Canterbury, the acclamations were long and loud; and many and strange were the thoughts that flitted in the brain as the giant power of our own times shot past the antique tower and gabled streets of centuries long past. A gratuitous trip had been granted by the Directors to such of the inhabitants of Ramsgate as chose to avail themselves of the opportunity of visiting the famed city of Canterbury, and many hundreds took advantage of this facility. A very long and crowded train reached the station almost simultaneously with the special train from London.

The new Line to Ramsgate, which is nearly sixteen miles in length, has been constructed under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Joseph Cubitt and Mr. W. J. Forde, engineers. It has been completed in a most substantial and effective manner, within fifteen months, and the cost has not exceeded, on the average, £15,000 a mile. The line runs through a flat country, with scarcely an undulation of surface, during the greater part of the journey.

The Ramsgate terminus is situated in the parish of St. Lawrence, and is a tasteful design. The whole population of Ramsgate appeared to have turned out to welcome the new comers by railway. The town wore a festive and holiday aspect, and the delightful serenity of the weather greatly contributed to the brilliancy of the scene. The houses were hung with flowers and boughs of laurel; flags and banners floated gaily in the breeze; triumphal arches were erected; bells chimed from every steeple, guns were discharged at frequent intervals from the pier-head; bands of musicians paraded the streets; in short, it was a high festival throughout; and the people seemed as deeply interested in the success of the South Eastern Railway Company as though they were all shareholders. There was an unusually gay sprinkling of "fair maids of Kent," and shoals of smiling faces to propitiate the welfare of the undertaking.

At four o'clock, the Chairman, Deputy-Chairman, and Directors, of the Railway Company, with 150 other gentlemen, dined together at the Albion Hotel; S. Sackett, Esq., the deputy of the town, presided, and amongst the guests were the following:—Right Hon. Viscount Torrington; Right Hon. S. R. Lushington; Mr. Bodkin, M.P.; Mr. Dodd, M.P.; Mr. Felden, M.P.; J. Canham, Esq., M.D. and J. P.; H. Benson, Esq., J.P.; Captain Garrett, R.N.; Lieutenant Gray, R.N.; Captain Hodges, R.V.C.; Lieutenant Hutchinson, R.N.; Rev. J. Snowden, &c.

The usual toasts of loyalty having been disposed of, the Chairman proposed the health of the Archbishop of Canterbury

The Rev. J. Snowden returned thanks, and expressed his earnest prayer that Heaven might speed and prosper the Canterbury pilgrims journeying by the South-Eastern trains; and that all the well-founded and legitimate expectations of those who were concerned in the great undertaking they were assembled that night to celebrate might be abundantly realised.

The Chairman proposed the health of Mr. MacGregor, the Chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company, and coupled with the toast the health of the Directors. The toast was received with every demonstration of enthusiasm.

Mr. MacGregor, in responding, took occasion to enlarge on the great benefits which were likely to accrue, not alone to the towns-people of Ramsgate, but to the community at large, from the opening of this new branch of Railway. The advantages which would be realised by continental travellers, in particular, would be very great. The South Eastern Railway Company had given rise to the South Eastern and Continental Steam Packet Company, and by means of the steam-boats of the latter Company, which would soon be established on such a plan that they would arrive in Ramsgate Harbour with a degree of punctuality and precision which mail-coaches had scarcely ever attained, facilities for communication between this country and the northern states of Europe would be procured, such as until now had not been attained.

The health of "Viscount Torrington and the House of Peers" was next proposed.

Lord Torrington acknowledged the compliment, and expressed a hope that his votes would always be found to be recorded on that side of the House which had ever advocated the best interests of the great masses of the people.

During the dinner, the Princess Mary, one of the Company's splendid steamboats, arrived in the harbour, and was saluted with a salvo of artillery.

In the course of the proceedings, the health of "his Grace the Duke of Wellington," as Warden of the Cinque Ports, was most enthusiastically received.

The return train left Ramsgate about nine o'clock, and, having been delayed at several intermediate stations, reached London at half-past one o'clock on Tuesday morning.

The total length of the Railway from Canterbury to the Terminus at Ramsgate is fifteen miles and three-quarters. The first thirteen miles are very light work, the gradients being 1 in 264. At the thirteenth mile, the line enters the chalk, and the gradients become 1 in 100 throughout the remainder of the distance. There is only one intermediate station—viz. at Minster, about eleven miles from Canterbury. The line for some two or three miles closely verges on Eastwell-park, the beautiful estate of the Earl of Winchilsea. The turnpike road is crossed once, and kept within sight throughout the whole distance; the line chiefly traversing the marshes washed by the river Stour.

The total distance by the Railway from London to Ramsgate is 97¼ miles. The time occupied by the express train in traversing the distance will be two hours and fifty-five minutes. Nevertheless, we understand that the South-Eastern Railway Company are now before Parliament, for powers to make a more direct line to this and other parts of mid-Kent, with every prospect of success.

PROCESSION IN HARBOUR-STREET.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.

THE GREAT DINING HALL.—SOUTH FRONT.

STATUE OF SIR JOHN MOORE.

In our various notices of this noble institution, we have hitherto illustrated the periodical recurrence of its fixed festivals, in each year of our Journal. Thus, in No. 21 will be found an Engraving of the Oration delivered in the Great Hall, on St. Matthew's Day; in No. 146, a view of the same magnificent apartment during a Lenten Supper; in No. 62, the ceremonial of "the Mathematical Boys" presenting their charts to her Majesty, at the first drawing-room of the season; in No. 101, the annual visit of the scholars to the Mansion House; and in No. 180, the memorable Visit of her Majesty and the Prince Consort, on Sunday evening, March 19, 1845, with details of the very impressive ceremonial. It will thus be seen that we have been ever-mindful of the great occasions upon which the public attention is annually directed towards the admirable administration of the affairs of this magnificent foundation; whence, during three centuries, have been dispensed the inestimable blessings of sound and religious education, and benevolent maintenance.

The origin of the Hospital has been already detailed in our Journal, so that we need not re-state it here. It is, besides, so pious an act of regal munificence as scarcely to have a parallel in our history. How touching is Stow's simple record of the endowment by the Royal founder: in the patent, the King (Edward VI.), "with his owne hand wrote this, summe: '4000 markes by the yeare, and then said in the hearing of his Councell, Lord! I yeild thee most hearty thanks, that thou hast given me life thus long to finish this work to the Glory of thy Name.' After which foundation established, he lived not above two dates; whose life would have been wished equall to the patriarches, if it had pleased God so to have prolonged it."

CHRISTCHURCH-PASSAGE, ENTRANCE.

The great painter Holbein, who was, doubtless, an eye-witness of this scene, has left us an admirable description of the event in his great picture, which still hangs in the Hospital Hall. The young monarch sits on an elevated throne, in a scarlet and ermined robe, holding the sceptre in his left hand, and presenting with the other the charter to the kneeling Lord Mayor. By his side stands the

STAIRCASE IN THE OLD CLOISTER.

Chancellor, holding the seals, and next to him are other officers of state. Bishop Ridley kneels before him with uplifted hands, as if supplicating a blessing on the event; whilst the Aldermen, &c., with the Lord Mayor, kneel on both sides, occupying the middle ground of the picture; and lastly, in front are a double row of boys on one side, and girls on the other, from the master and matron down to the boy and girl who have stepped forward from their respective rows, and kneel with raised hands before the King. The old-fashioned square windows, with rude niches between (two having statues), and the chequered floor, bear every mark of being actual representations of the chief features of the antient palace at Westminster.

The site of the present Hospital was originally "a voyd plot of ground neere to St. Nicholas' Shambles," whereon a benevolent citizen raised for the Mendicant Order of Grey Friars "very beautiful buildings," and afterwards entered the order as a lay brother. By aid of the rich and powerful, a splendid church and other edifices were progressively annexed to the original foundation, until it became one of the most extensive houses in London. After the Dissolution, King Henry made over the Grey Friars to the City of London, in trust for the relief of the poor;" and this was the place chosen by his successor, the young Edward, for the purposes of the new Hospital.

The old conventual buildings were then repaired: the citizens were animated by Edward's zeal, and, by aid of their benefactions, in November, 1552, 340 "poore fatherlesse children" were admitted within the old monastic walls. "On Christmas-day," says Stow, "while the Lord Maior and Aldermen rode to Paul's, the children of Christ's Hospitall stood from Saint Lawrence-lane end in Cheape, towards Paul's, all in one livery of russet cotton, 340 in number; and at Easter next they were in blue, at the Spittle, and so have continued ever since."

Since this period, the income of the institution has known much fluctuation; and, consequently, also, the number of inmates. The 340 children with which the Hospital opened, had dwindled down, in 1580, to 150. The object of the institution has also, in the lapse of time, become materially changed, which may, in a great measure, be attributed to the influence of the Governors or Benefactors, who have now long been the chief supporters of Christ's Hospital.

The Hospital suffered materially in the Great Fire of 1666, and the church of the Monastery was then destroyed. It was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren, between the years 1687 and 1705; and now serves for the united parishes of Christ-church and St. Leonard's, Foster-lane. We have engraved this church in No. 151 of our Journal; and have appended to it an account of the origin of the "Spittle Sermons" annually preached in it.

One of our present Illustrations shows part of Christ Church Passage, with the entrance to the east cloister, over which is the statue of the youthful founder.

There is scarcely any portion of the ancient friary remaining, except the cloisters. After the Great Fire, the cloisters were repaired: a specimen of them at the present day, together with an interior view, and part of the staircase, is shown in two of the annexed Illustrations.

The first important addition was the Mathematical School, founded by Charles the Second, in 1672, for the instruction of forty boys in mathematics and navigation. This appears to have been the first considerable addition to the system of education at the Hospital, which originally consisted merely of a grammar-school for boys, and a separate school for girls, where they were taught to read, sew, and mark. A book is preserved, containing the records of the Hospital from its foundation; and in it is an anthem sung by the first children.

The east cloister and south front were next rebuilt by Sir Robert Clayton, alderman; it was commenced in 1675, and cost Sir Robert about £7000. It was not known till the whole was finished to whom the public were indebted for the work; and then the name appears to have been only promulgated by a friend, in consequence of the worthy knight having been ejected from the government of the very Institution for which he had done so much: this occurred during the political excitement of the reign of the second James.

About the year 1686, Sir John Frederick, Knight and Alderman, built the old Hall over the west cloister, which was taken down about eighteen years since.

In 1694, was begun the Writing School, by Sir John Moore, Knight and Alderman, and one of the Presidents of the Hospital; and it was finished "at his sole charge," the architect being Sir Christopher Wren. In the façade is a marble statue of Sir John Moore, which our artist has engraved with the initial to the present paper. This School is situate on the west side of the playground; and, from being supported on pillars, the under part, called the New Cloister, affords a retreat for the boys in bad weather.

THE OLD CLOISTER.

In 1705, the Ward over the East Cloister was rebuilt by Sir Francis Child

THE INNER GATE.

Knight and Alderman. In 1795, the Grammar School, a neat yellow brick building, near Little Britain, and on the north side of the ditch playground, was erected partly with a sum of money bequeathed for that purpose, by John Smith, Esq.; the designs being furnished by Mr. Lewis, then architect to the Hospital.

The old buildings of the Hospital had been altered, enlarged, and augmented, at different periods, without any regard to symmetry, or architectural arrangement: besides which, they were becoming ruinous and unsafe; in consequence of which, the Governors, in 1803, determined to rebuild the whole, as soon as a sufficient sum of money could be raised to accomplish the work. A part of the present revenues of the Hospital was, therefore, appropriated to the establishment of a building fund; and with that, aided by a grant of £ 000 from the Corporation of London, and many generous benefactions, the grand undertaking was commenced. The architect was the late Mr. John Shaw, who has been successfully seconded by his son.

The magnificent nucleus of this re-edification is the Great Dining Hall, the first stone of which was laid by his Royal Highness the Duke of York, on the 25th of April, 18 . This noble structure is in the Tudor style of architecture: and is built partly on the ancient wall of London, and partly on the foundation of the refectory of the Grey Friars. The southern or principal front, facing Newgate-street, is shown, to its full extent, in one of our illustrations. This front is supported by buttresses, and has an octagonal tower at each extremity; and the summit is embattled, and ornamented with pinnacles. The second story is an open arcade (187 feet in length, and 16½ feet in width), for the shelter or recreation of the Boys; here, also, are a meeting-room for the Governors, the Hospital wardrobe, with the staircases and passages of communication, &c. Over the centre arch of the arcade is a bust of Edward VI.

The Dining Hall, with its lobby and organ-gallery, occupies the entire upper story, which is 187 feet long, 51 feet wide, and 47 feet high: it is lit by nine large and handsome windows on the south side, seen in the Engraving: next to Westminster Hall, it is the noblest room in the metropolis. (It will be found further described and illustrated in No. 46 of our Journal.) The arcade beneath the Hall is built with blocks of Haytor granite, highly wrought; and the remainder of the front is of Portland stone. The basement story contains the Kitchen, which is of Cyclopean proportions—67 feet in length, and 33 feet in width; besides butteries, cellars, &c.

In the rear of the Hall is the Refectory, a large building erected in 1822; and on the east and west sides of the Cloister are the privileged Dormitories.

The large area in front of the Hall is inclosed by large metal gates of handsome design, enriched with the arms of the Hospital, past which flows the busy stream of commerce through Newgate-street, to and from Smithfield. To look at the street, and look through the railings at the animated crowd of boys in their quaint costume of 300 years since, and then turn to the vast Hall, in design of the same period, impresses us with the strongest possible sense of great works.

The Inner Gate, of recent erection, by Mr. Shaw, the architect to the Hospital, and shown in the other large Engraving. The style of this building is of a purer character than that of the Hall.

The Hospital, together with the four other Royal Hospitals of the City of London, is placed "under the pious care of the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Governors thereof;" but more than a century and a half past, a dispute has existed between the head Officers of the Charity and the recognition of the supreme authority of the Chief Magistrate. The late Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Gibbs, formally laid the matter before Parliament in order to the Hospital, and demanding admission, which was only conditionally acquiesced in, and at once declined. The present Lord Mayor has proved himself as efficient as his predecessors in supporting the high office; and the Governors having refused to recognise his authority in the appointment of a preacher of the Spital Sermons on Easter Monday and Easter Tuesday, his Lordship determined to cause the sermons to be preached at St. Bride's Church, instead of Christ Church, as heretofore. This course was sanctioned by custom, and the opinion of the Archbishop of Canterbury. (It will be seen, by reference to our former notice of these Sermons, that they were preached at St. Bride's, previously to their removal to Christ Church in 1787.) On Saturday last, however, the Court of Aldermen resolved, in consequence of communications received from the ecclesiastical authorities of Christ's Hospital, at the first day of meeting, that the first Spital Sermon should be preached on Easter Monday, at St. Bride's Church; and that the second Spital Sermon should be preached on Tuesday, at Christ Church: and this resolution of the Court was coupled with warm approbation of the firmness of the Lord Mayor in asserting the privileges of his fellow citizens.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL: THE SCHOOL AT HERTFORD.

On Easter Monday and Tuesday, a Psalm of Thanksgiving is sung by the children, preceded by ancient custom, for their Founders and Benefactors. The Psalm, this year, was written by James Lemprière Hammond, one of the Senior Scholars; the Music by Mr. George Cooper. We annex the former —

'Twas holiday—but not for Christ's young train	But, why those honours? Life to Him
Were up at the first blush of night,	Was Lent a bitter sum of woe,
As if to greet his saviour's sleep,	Flowing with sorrow to the brim,
And bade it "Fly from Angels' sight	And anguish, more than man could know.
Yet had not God forsaken Him	Love he rejoiced all He suffer'd—Love
Nor heard His dreary cry,	Too great to be by man contracted was;
Amid the chants of Seraphim,	And, touch'd with pity, Just was He
The earth gave back her Lord again!	Here'd as He fed the hungry mass.
He came to die:	Prophet and Priest! He deigns to guide
His hour, announc'd by that bright beam,	The sinner in affliction's hour
Which, like the day-spring from on high,	And, pointing to His wounded side,
Stood o'er the palace Bethlehem,	Tells of Redemption's blessed power.
Sweetly it promis'd parting grace,	Thou, Thou dost guide us! Thou art He
And rescue unforeseen,	Who, throned in glory, rules the sky,
And, nestling in the Child of Peace,	Where greatest of mortals soar the story
Proclaim'd Him Prophet, Priest, and King.	Of Earth redeem'd, and man's new joy!

The direction of the affairs of the Hospital need not be detailed here. The revenue, arising from landed and funded property, purchased with the donations of private individuals, may be stated at £30,000 per annum.

There is printed annually, and freely circulated, a large Sheet, containing "A True Return of the number of Children and other poor People, maintained in the several Royal Hospitals of the City of London, under the care of the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Governors thereof, for the year last past." This document, in appearance, resembles a sheet almanack: it is headed by the Easter anthem, and is bordered in a wood-cut border, the design of which indicates this emblem of printing these Reports to have been of long standing. In the upper portion of the border are the Royal Arms; at the sides are the City Arms, adorned with tridents, in medallions at the corners; and three figures of the Christchurch Boys, and one of a girl; and at the foot is an emblematic group, with the old Hospital in the background; and beneath it is inscribed, on a ribbon, "Pray forward this design." We may remark, rather that "the support of this Hospital materially depends upon benefactions and bequests. As that part of its income which is permanent is far short of the building the usual number of children, whose education qualifies them for the church, for naval service, and for every station in life, for carrying to their subscribers, and, as the principles of religion, as well as the due order of civil society, are points to which their attention is constantly directed, it is hoped that all charitable persons will readily contribute to an Institution which is not only of local, but of national good."

The results of the last year are thus stated:

Children put forth apprentices, and discharg	from Christ's Hospital, the Year last past, 320, eight whereof being ma sted in Mathematics and Navigation, were placed forth apprentices to Commanders of ships bound out of the Port of London: and fifteen placed by the late Majesty King Charles the Second	335
Children added the year last past		345
Children now under the care and charge of the Hospital in London and at Hertford		1,167
To be admitted on Presentations granted to this time		1,502
The names of all which, as also when and where they were admitted, will appear in the Annual Printed Books.

Reference is then made to the Building Fund, established in 1829, for the gradual and complete rebuilding of the Hospital premises. It is added that "a great part has accordingly been produced, in a most commodious and substantial manner, without reducing the number of Children upon the Establishment during the progress of the work." Much, however, yet remains to be done: and the Governors regret to state that the fund originally subscribed has been completely exhausted, and a very considerable sum expended from the general funds of the Charity; but they are willing to hope, that the generosity of the public will afford the means of completing this great work, and prevent the necessity of encroaching further upon the permanent income of the Hospital, and thereby diminishing the scope of its usefulness."

We trust that the above appeal will be liberally responded to, and shall feel happy in our Journal being the medium of aiding its efficiency.

The system of education pursued at the Hospital has lately been extended to the French language. A scholarship has also been established out of a fund raised to commemorate the exertions of the Times newspaper in the detection of a gross scheme of commercial imposition. We learn from a late number of that journal, that "the first holder of the Scholarship is Mr. Romanis, of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, who was elected to it whilst a student of the Hospital, after an examination open to classical and mathematical; and has recently retired, on taking his B.A. degree, the same proficiency in both studies conjointly which had obtained for him the Scholarship, being in the first class of the Classical Tripos and Third Senior Optime. The other students from Christ's Hospital who took their degrees at the same time were Mr. Airey, of Pembroke, Second Wrangler; Mr. Brown, of Pembroke, second in the first class of the Classical Tripos; and Mr. Hamnill, of Pembroke, a Wrangler. While we join with the Universities in according to pre-eminence in either study it is full meed of applause which it must always command, we trust that "The Times' Scholarship," which has been thus efficient in the first instance in the object of promoting general education will continue to prove a stimulus to the pursuit of classics and mathematics conjointly, and to be, as it is at present, a most acceptable reward to the diligent and meritorious scholar who devotes his attention to both branches of study. We are happy to hear that another scholarship, to be denominated the 'Pitt Scholarship' has been founded at the Hospital by the members of the Pitt Club, which is to be devoted to precisely the same beneficial object as that which takes its name from our paper. If there were two more scholarships of the same nature founded, no fear one should become vacant in every year, it would be a valuable addition to that system of encouragement of combined science and literature which is now happily becoming prevalent in the great schools of this country."

We have spoken incidentally of the subordinate establishment at Hertford, to which five younger boys are generally sent previatory to their entering on the foundation in London, when takes place as vacancies occur. There is, however, accommodation here for 80 girls. The building at Hertford was erected by the Hospital Governors in 1683: we have engraved the entrance gateway, and the school-house: when full, it will contain 416 children, of whom about 200 are taught the classics.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Didst thou not fall out with a fellow for wearing his new doublet before Easter?
Romeo and Juliet

The end of Shrovetide is the beginning of a pretty general carnival: Easter is perhaps the most blithesome of all our holiday seasons—because it is their spring. Fashion, indeed, during the vernal festival, "quits the gay throng for the shade:" Rien Ne affects the country for the season, but that by no means interferes with the mirth or festivity of the occasion, because, among exclusive people, "melancholy and pensiveness" are synonymous terms. The body politic seizes upon it as a license for throwing labour and care to the dogs: the populace array themselves in their best attire: the tailor runs no risk of having a quarrel thrust upon him for wearing his new doublet before Easter, for no member of the proud live classes thinks of putting on his best coat—till after Lent.

The early part of this instant week was one entire and perfect holyday; and, if it was not spent in accordance with the taste of the highly fastidious, no one could have found fault with the enjoyment. "Delicate pleasures for susceptible minds," says the proverb; such, for example, as the instance recorded of one of its aristocratic amusements, in a newspaper paragraph headed thus: "In considerable repute—Three Horses Killed with the Queen's Buckhounds on Easter Monday," which, among its elaborate details, goes on to assure the reader that, over and above the trio actually put hors de combat, "several other horses, and some not expected to recover, reached their stables in an exceedingly distressed and disabled state."

It is the habit, just now, to republish fairs and places of pleasure resort even for common folks—and yet, probably, among all the mere populace engaged in merry-making during the recent holidays, there was not one who thought of such an expedient for killing time as killing a horse, or even reducing it to "an exceedingly disabled state." Pastime was the order of Easter everywhere—at least in merry England. The metropolitans rushed into steam, either by rail or river: the rurals had their revels at home, or greatly daring, took return tickets, and sought pleasure even in the distance. In the morning, the chief picture was that whereof the following notice is an epitomised sketch:

The Craven Meeting commenced at Newmarket on Monday, and terminated yesterday. It is, in fact, the opening of the regular turf campaign—the few days' racing here and there, by which it is preceded, being little more than skirmishes of the out posts. It has all very nearly been anticipated by a fatal catastrophe—the special train which took down the élite of the company, having escaped annihilation only by an especial providence. Sunday was distinguished, indeed, for railway accidents; on that day, also, a train on the Brandling Junction committed frightful devastation on the engine actually jumping through the roof of a house, and fearfully injuring the inmates.

Turning from these sublime scenes to the sport, which is our peculiar province, it dawned most propitiously for the fielders. True, the spirit of the ring was slack, but there always is betting at Newmarket, and the chief issues came off sadly in opposition to the opinion of "The Talents." The first day shorn of its once brilliant Roddingworth—produced several, and, by their fastnesse, the field threw in well.

Tuesday, with the speculating feature of the week—the Newmarket Handicap—was a great coup; for that race was won by an animal that never was in the market. These handicaps are the annalties settled on the Legs for good services in promoting the honour and honesty of the turf. Five-and-twenty horses came to the post for the exciting affair, and very few will that one won which nobody had ever thought of not even his own party. The Craven Stakes forms the staple of interest for the Wednesday in "the first week." It was won, it will be seen, by Colonel Anson's Derby nag Iago, that had just previously picked up a pretty little sweepstakes, worth to her valiant owner some £700. The remainder of the racing was good enough of its sort, but not of a character for especial remark. We must wait till the First Spring Meeting, for anything materially to influence the position of the Derby, or the betting upon it. We must look to Chester, with its Cup, for another "sop" for the betters round.

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING—MONDAY.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each, and 5 only if declared; for three and four year olds. D.M.

Col. Peel's King Cob, 4 yrs, 8st 12lb	.. .. .. (Nat)	1
Lord Albemarle's Nell Cook, 3 yrs, 6st 2lb	.. .. ..	2

Handicap Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, 10 ft: for four-yr-olds and upwards. T.Y.C.

Lord W Powlett's Espoir, 5 yrs, 9st 13lb ..	.. (Bartholomew)	1
Col. Peel's Garry Owen, aged, 8st 12lb	.. .. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each, h ft; for three-yr-old fillies, 8st 7lb. D.M.

Lord G. Bentinck's Blackbird	.. (Nat)	1
Duke of Rutland's Sister to Flambeau	.. .. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each; for three-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb: and fillies, 8st 4lb.

D.M. Five subs.

Lord Chesterfield's Free Lance	.. (Nat)	1
Lord Lonsdale's Ivy	.. ..	2

Match, 200, h ft: weight for age. D.M.

Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair, 4 yrs, 8st 7lb ..	.. (Nat)	1
Lord Orford's Bay Middleton, 4 yrs, 9st 12lb ..	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each, h ft; for two-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb each. Ab. M.

Eight subs.

Lord Lonsdale's b c by Bay Middleton, allowed 4lbs	(Bartholomew)	1
Mr. Payne's Collingwood	.. ..	2

TUESDAY.

The Riddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each.

Lord Exeter's br c, out of Galata	.. (Mann)	1
Duke of Bedford's Black Cap	.. (F. Butler)	2

Match, 200. Duke of Bedford's Lady Constance (Robinson) beat Lord Exeter's f. by Trotlus, out of Amaryllis (Mann).

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.

Duke of Bedford's Paragon	.. (Robinson)	1
Lord Chesterfield's Arkwright	.. (Nat)	2

The Newmarket Handicap Stakes of 25 sovs each, with 200 added.

Mr. Wigram's Keshma, 3 yrs, 7st	.. (Pettit)	1
Mr. Cuthbert's Queen of Tyre, aged, 7st 13lb	.. (Jay)	2

WEDNESDAY.

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs each.

Colonel Anson's Iago	.. (F. Butler)	1
Lord Exeter's br c by Colwick, out of Galata	.. (Mann)	2

Subscription Plate of £50.

Lord Stradbroke's Idas	.. (Robinson)	1
Colonel Peel's Garry Owen	.. (Chapple)	2

The Column Stakes of 60 sovs each.

Colonel Anson's Iago (allowed 5 lb)	.. (F Butler)	1
Mr. Wall's The Crown Prince (allowed 5lb)	.. (Wakefield)	2

THURSDAY.

Handicap of 20 sovs each.

Lord Waterford's Cornrama, aged	.. ..	1
Lord Milltown's Colleen Bawn	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.

Lord G Bentinck's Bumacle	.. ..	1
Duke of Bedford's Paragone	.. ..	2

Plate of £50.

Sir G Heathcote's Rhoessen	.. ..	1
Colonel Anson's Rowland Hill	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs.

Duke of Bedford's Paragone	.. ..	1
Lord Exeter's Galata colt	.. ..	2

FRIDAY.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Lord Chesterfield's Snake	.. ..	1
Mr. Watson's Gunpowder filly	.. ..	2

Match, £200, h.ft.—Cornrama beat Oakley.

The Port Stakes of 100 sovs each. T.M.M. ft

Lord Lonsdale's Jerico	.. ..	1
Mr. Gully's Old England	.. ..	2

Handicap Sweepstakes of 13 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Lord Miltown's Colleen Bawn, 7st 3lb	.. ..	1
Duke of Rutland's Faultons, 8st 3lb	.. ..	0
Mr. C. Brooke's Khorassan, 9st	.. ..	0

A dead heat for second place.

Sweepstakes. D.M.

Lord Stradbroke's Polecat	.. ..	1
Mr. Osbaldeston's Gisella	.. ..	2

GREAT SCULLERS' MATCH FOR £200. The trial of aquatic skill between Robert Newell, of London, and H. Casp r, of Newcastle, is fixed to come off on the 22nd of June, on the river Tyne, Newcastle.

GREAT FOOT RACE FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP AND £200.—On Tuesday, the long-expected and exciting foot-race between Benjamin Butler and Charles Westhall, who were matched to walk twenty-five miles of road for £200 a-side, came off near the White Hart Inn, at Hayes, in the presence of an immense number of spectators. Both men have acquired great celebrity as pedestrians, and have defeated some first-rate men, and the present match was made to decide their claim to the championship. In betting, Butler was the favourite. The men started at a clipping rate, keeping the horsemen at a full trot. Westhall first turned the 8, and kept the lead. Butler appeared full of confidence, and was waiting close upon his opponent. The men accomplished seven miles in fifty-eight minutes and a half, fair too and heel walking—a feat quite unprecedented in the records of a twenty-five mile race. At this stage of the race Westhall, to all appearance, made winning certain, and continued the contest at great speed; but, as the old adage says, "There is many a slip between the cup and the lip," at the fourteenth mile he began to flag. Butler then made the race, and pressed his adversary for speed. Westhall kept up to the eighteenth mile, when he was compelled to relinquish the race. Butler then went over the remaining distance in his ease, and finally covered the twenty-five miles under four hours, and won the honours of pedestrian championship and the pecuniary accompaniment.

LISTON'S WILL. This universally respected and popular comedian, whose death we so recently recorded, had for several years retired into private life, having attained a good old age, and acquired considerable property. His will was just been proved in Doctors' Commons, and his effects were valued for probate duty at £40,000. He has left his place, jewellery, pictures, books, furniture, carriages, horses, &c., to his wife, absolutely. The residue of his property, which he directs to be invested in the Funds in the names of trustees, he has left to be enjoyed by her for life, and given a power of appointment over the same by will or otherwise; and in case so much as £6,000 is by her unappointed, he gives such sum to his daughter, Mrs. Rodwell. The dividends for her own use, and the principal at her death for her two daughters, or to the survivor; and in case his wife does not make any disposition of the residue, he gives the same, or so much thereof as remains unappointed, to his son, Captain John Terry Liston. He appointed as his executors his wife, and R. H. Durrant, of Stock Exchange, C. Turner, of Brompton, and W. Taylor, of Park-street, Grosvenor-square. The will is dated in April, 1842; and he made a codicil in January last, and died on the 22nd ult., at his residence, Hyde-park-corner.

INSTANTANEOUS COMMUNICATION BY SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHS.—Amidst the many wonderful inventions of modern days, there are none more wonderful than that now about to be carried out by the establishment of submarine telegraph, by which an instantaneous communication will be effected between the coasts of England and France. The British Government, by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and the French Government, by the Minister of the Interior, have granted permission to two gentlemen, the projectors of the submarine telegraph, to lay it down from coast to coast. The site selected is from Cape Grisnez, or from Cape Blancnez, on the French side, to the South Foreland, on the English coast. The Lords of the Admiralty have also granted permission to the same gentlemen to lay down a submarine telegraph between Dublin and Holyhead, which is to be carried on from the latter place to Liverpool and London. The submarine telegraph across the English Channel will, however, be the one first laid down. The materials for this are now undergoing the process of insulation, and are in that state of forwardness which will enable the projectors to have them completed, and placed in position, so that a telegraphic communication can be transmitted across the Channel in the course of June. When this is completed an electric telegraph will be established from the coast to Paris, and thence to Marseilles. Upon the completion of the submarine telegraph across the English Channel, it is stated that a steam vessel, on the most gigantic scale, will be attempted to be formed, under the immediate sanction and patronage of the French Administration; this is no less than that of connecting the shores of Africa with those of Europe by the same instrumentality, thus opening a direct and lightning-like communication between Marseilles and Algeria.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed that an EXTRA NIGHT will take place on TUESDAY next, APRIL 21, when will be performed (for the first time this season) Rossini's celebrated Opera, entitled IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. Rosina, Madame Grisi; Bertha, Madame Bellini; Il Conte d'Almaviva, Signor Mario; Bartolo, Signor Lablache; Basil, Signor Ferdinandi; Figaro, Signor Formasari. In the course of the Evening, Scenes from Donizetti's LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR, in which Madame Castellan and Mdlle. G. Brambilla will appear. To be followed by various Novelties in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, in which will appear Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, Mdme. Petit Stephan, Mesdlles. Leconte, Desmolins, Cassini, and Mdlle. L. Taglioni; M. Gosselin, M. Bertrand, M. Di Matile, and M. Perrot. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'Clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Patronised by HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, PRINCE ALBERT, and the PRINCESS ROYAL.—Extraordinary hit of Mr. ERANUS HEER'S new Equestrian Spectacle, which has been pronounced by the Public Press to surpass all former productions. On MONDAY, April 20th, and EVERY EVENING during the Festivities of the Easter Week, and HIS MAJESTY STEEDS; or, the Pearl of the Esplanade. Magnificent effects, splendid scenery, and costumes, grand equestrian tableaux, &c. &c. The Scenes of the Circus will during the week prove more than ordinarily brilliant, presenting to the whole Town a host of first-rate performers, aided by the inimitable Chinese Barry, Wallett, and Hengler. To conclude with a Novel AFTERPIECE. Box-Office open from 11 to 4. Image Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

COLOSSEUM.—EASTER HOLIDAYS.—CONTINUATION OF PERILS. Jay Baldwin, Sr., Evening, at 8; (Doors near Twelve), in Shakespeare Caverns, Scenes, Shadows, &c. Sacred Music only on Wednesday and Friday, and the usual sunrise Overtures on the Great Mechanical Organ. The remaining days, from 2 till 4, and 8 till half-past 10. DAY EXHIBITION.—Panoramic Museum of Sculpture, Arabesque Curiosities, Gorgeous Gothic Arbery, Classic Ruins, Swiss Cottage, Moorish Palace, and Mountain Forests.—Open from 10 till 5. EVENING EXHIBITION.—The New and Extraordinary Panorama of London by Night, with additions. Admission for Adults, at 8, 9, and 10. The Museum, Conservatories, Swiss Cottage, &c. &c., open from 7 till half-past 10.

The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. B. ...ELL.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the THIRD CONCERT will take place on MONDAY EVENING, next, when will be performed Beethoven's Symphony in D—Spohr's in D—Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio" and Onslow's Adagio de la Vega. Solo performers—Pianoforte, Mr. W. S. Bennett; Harp, Mr. Parish Alvars; Vocalists, Madame Caradori Allan and Sig. F. Lablache. Conductor—Mr. Cooke.

Subscription Tickets, One Guinea; and Single Tickets £1 10s; to be had at the Music Warehouses of Messrs. ADDISON and HODSON, 210 Regent-street.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY Evening, APRIL 24 1846, will be performed HANDEL'S ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Conductor, Mr. COSTA. MENDELSSOHN'S C.V. 114. HAYDN'S SERVICE, No. 2. Principal Vocal Performers, Miss Birch, Miss Hawkins, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Phillips. The Band and Chorus will consist of all the best performers. The Society will receive Recruits in the Gallery, 3s.; Members, 2s.; Associates, 1s. Tickets, Members' Transferable Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Associates, 5s.; Non-Members, 7s. 6d.; Gallery, 3s.; Orchestra, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 15s. Tickets and Subscriptions received at the Society's Office, 6, Exeter Hall. J. BEWLEY, Hon. Sec.

THE EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS, Suffolk-street, Pall-mall East, is NOW OPEN DAILY, from Nine A.M. till Dusk. Admittance, One Shilling. EDWARD BESSELL, Secretary

LOVE'S POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENTS.—QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOM, HANOVER SQUARE.—VESTRIS QUISUMUS EN, Aug. 1. On the evenings of THURSDAY and FRIDAY, APRIL 23 and 24, Mr. LOVE will present his CHANGES of the ANCIENTS and MODERNS, Eccentricities, and Manners of the Age we live in, invoking the approved Assemblies of Character, Remarkable Persons of Imagination, Singular Characters, and Amusing Incidents, in Six Hundred Changes of Costume, &c., entitled LOVE IN ALL SHAPES; or, The Gallery of Portraits. Mr. HOBBS, the WELSH HARPER, will accompany Lad and the celebrated Dancer of performing before her Majesty; LOVE'S LABOUR LOST; Solo on the Violin, Mr. of Thirlwall; and Miss Christian Johnstone.—Doors open at 8; Commence at Half-past 8.—Tickets, 2s.; Reserved Seats, 3s.; Stalls, 5s.; Private Boxes, £1 1s.; and 2s.—Books may be had at the Doors, price 6d. On MONDAY, APRIL 20, Mr. LOVE will appear at the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, HALIFAX. On SUNDAY, APRIL 27 at the QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOM, HANOVER SQUARE.

Under the PATRONAGE of the QUEEN, and visited during the last week by upwards of 12,000 persons.

GENERAL TOM THUMB'S FAREWELL LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL.—All Tickets that have been issued will be received on presenting their dates. The little General appears in all the Costumes and Performances in which he had the honour of appearing before those Personages before her Majesty and before all the principal Courts of Europe. Hours, from Half past Twelve to Five; Half past Three to Five; and Half past Seven to Nine o'Clock. Admission, Is.; Children Half-price. After Nine o'Clock, he appears at the Lyceum Theatre.

EASTER HOLIDAYS.—Novelties of extreme interest and instruction at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. The SCENES by the OREGON PANORAMIC form a part of an entirely NEW SERIES of DISSOLVING VIEWS; PORTRAITS of the most distinguished men in the SIKH GOVERNMENT and ARMY of LAHORE, magnified by the OXY-HYDROGEN GAS MICROSCOPE, with PORTRAITS of Mr. HAMLIN JR. and Mr. ROBERT and Lady SALE. The PHYSIOSCOPE and CHROMATROPE, with new and beautiful variations. The most interesting of the Pictures at work are MACINTOSH'S LOCATELLI'S WATER-COLOURS PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes; FARMER'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, and NEWLANDS' CUTTING MACHINE; WOOD'S NEW PATENT STEAM ENGINE GOVERNOR, and the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY.—Open daily with the DIVING BELL and DIVER. LECTURES on CHEMISTRY and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments. Admission, 1s. Season's Tickets, 5s. A brief description of the Oregon Territory, from Notes by a Pilot Years' Resident, presented to the Visitors.

Just published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nineteenth French Edition) of CONSTIPATION DESTROYED; or, EXPOSITION of NATURAL, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Destroying Habitual Constipation, without using either purgatives or any artificial means whatever (discovery recently made in France by M. Wacton) followed by numerous certificates from eminent physicians and other persons of distinction. Free by post, 1s. 6d. Sold by James Youens and Co., 7, Ave Dealers, 45, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

In foolscap 8vo., price 5s., cloth lettered,

POEMS. By CAMILLA TOULMIN.
London: WM. S. ORR and Co., Amen-corner, Paternoster-row.

Second Edition, just published, foolscap 4to., price 6d.,

A RAILWAY TRAVELLER'S REASONS for ADOPTING UNIFORMITY OF GAUGE. Stated in a Letter to J. K. BR[illegible]
JOSEPH CUNDALL, 12, Old Bond-street

This day is Published, in 1 vol., foolscap 8vo., price 2[illegible],

A BOOK OF HIGHLAND MINSTRELSY; Ballads and other Poems, with Prose Introductions, Illustrative Notes, and Glossary. Dedicated to all the Scott-in-Highlades [illegible] ous Illustrations, from drawings by R. R. M'Ian [illegible] W. & A. K. JOHNSTON, Edinburgh; and 6, Paternoster-street.

Price only One Shilling, cloth, printed in 8vo., containing as much matter as two ordinary

THE CAMPAIGN ON THE SUTLEJ, and the War in the Punjaub, from the most authentic Sources. Including Copious Original Information with official lists of the killed and wounded, officers and privates. London: J. C. Edmonds, 184 Strand; W. Grapel, Liverpool; Abel Heywood, Manchester; W. Curry, Jun, and Co., Dublin. and M. Macdonald, Edinburgh.

Just Published, in foolscap 8vo., price 4s. 6d., cloth,

THE YOUNG LADIES' READER; or, Extracts from Modern Authors, with Observations on Reading Aloud and Elocution. By Mrs ELLIS [illegible] ed to improve the taste, strengthen the judgment, and confirm moral and [illegible] principles." Edinburgh Witness.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

Just Published, in one volume, 18mo., price 8s., cloth,

THE MODERN BRITISH PLUTARCH; or, Lives of Men distinguished in the Recent History of our Country, for their Talents, Virtues, or Achievements. By W. C. TAYLOR, LL.D., Author of "A Manual of Ancient and Modern History," &c. "A work which has long been a desideratum, either to place in the hands of youth, or as a reference to the more advanced in life."—Reading Mercury.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

Just Published, 8vo., 7s. 6d.,

THE POWER OF THE SOUL OVER THE BODY, considered in relation to health and morals. By G. MOORE, M.D., of the Royal College of Physicians, London. "This work is full of the sublimest truths."—Athenæum. "Intelligent, enlightened, full of knowledge, and steadfast in faith."—Britannia. "We cordially recommend it."—Weekly Chronicle.
SUTTABY, EVANCE, and FOX; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; SUTTON, SON, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS

Third Edition, price 8s. 6d., with numerous Cases and Plates

DISEASES of the LUNGS, AIR-PASSAGES, and HEART, SUCCESSFULLY TREATED By ALFRED B. MADDOCK, M.D. "The statement is ingenious and natural, and its efficacy is incontrovertible." Hampshire Telegraph
SIMPKIN and Co., Stationers'-hall-court; and may be ordered through any Bookseller

Just Published, fourth edition, with Cases of Cure and Plates, 8vo., cloth, price 8s

ON LIVER and BILIOUS DISEASES, Stomach Complaints, Piles, Flatulæ, and other Disorders arising from Intestinal Irritation By S. D. SIMPSON, M.D., F.S.A., Surgeon, &c. "We strongly recommend those of our readers who are suffering to procure a copy of this work."—City Chronicle. "A very valuable and instructive work."—Salisbury Journal
London: SIMPKIN and Co., Stationers'-hall-court; and OLIVIER, 59, Pall-mall

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row, CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street, HATCH[illegible], 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street Strand

THE CRUSADERS.—The most successful Opera of the Season, composed by Jules Benedict, and written by a Fred Bunn, Esq. among the popular pieces are "Sweet Home," sung by Miss Romer; "The heart's first dream of love," sung by Mr. Harrison; "They little know the charms," sung by Miss Romer; "Hilfford ring," sung by Mr Harrison. "In solid worth and sterling merit."—Morning Post "Mrs Rainforth, "The lies of Friendship," duet sung by Miss Romer and Miss Rainforth.
Lamborn Cock, 63, New Bond-street, and all Music-sellers.

THE FILHARMONICON for APRIL. No. 149, contains the Opera of "Nina," with the Secon[illegible] [illegible] No 148 contains a [illegible] or 2 Flute and Piano [illegible] Schuberth and Co., 59, [illegible] Every Number remains the Gems of an Opera for 8d. Post free, 1s. 4[illegible] Subscription, one year, one door from Cheapside. Complete Set always ready, in 12 [illegible]

THE LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price 1s., contains Double the Number of SUMMER FASHIONS given in any other work, and is the only Work that contains the ROYAL DRESSES, the NEWEST FASHIONS, and every [illegible] A superb coloured Plate (size, 16 inches), and Walking Dresses, Children's Dresses, Costumes, &c., in extraordinary variety. 36 Figures. 100 New Patterns. Portraits of the Queen, Albert, and Royal Children; Patterns of their Dresses; Descriptions Tales, Poetry, Music, and Answers to the Sights of Fashion.
G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

MUSIC FOR THE MILLION.—Lucy Neal, the popular Ballad, as sung and trio, for Threepence, the symphonies and accompaniments arranged for the Flute, Violin, or Violoncello, 1s. each. Also, Mary Queen of Scots, the popular ballads entire for Threepence. Why does Kamsthe Wander? original song. Home for Me, Mr. Bishop's duet for Threepence half price. "The Maiden's Prayer," "The Maniel Treasury," weekly miscellany of [illegible] the Family Piano Forte, the character-[illegible] by the Manager —"While it possesses the merit of cheapness, it has the still greater merit of being strictly correct."
DAVIDSON, Wine-street, leading from Black [illegible] ars Lodge towards the Temple.

PETER PARLEY'S EUROPE (LOWING EDITION.)
Elegantly bound in scarlet cloth, price 7s. 6d.

TALES ABOUT EUROPE, ASIA, AFRICA, AND AMERICA, by PETER PARLEY. Sixth Edition, greatly enlarged, with one hundred and eighty Engravings. Also, by the same Author, with same Illustrations Engravings.

PARLEY'S TALES ABOUT ANIMALS, price 7s. 6d.
PARLEY'S TALES ABOUT ENGLAND, price 7s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] ABOUT CHILDHOOD, price 7s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] ABOUT PLANTS, edited by M[illegible] LONDON, price 7s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] ABOUT THE SEA, price 6s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] ABOUT THE SKIES, price 6s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] ABOUT AFRICA
Pa[illegible] ABOUT HOME AND ITALY [illegible] 6s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] [illegible] 6s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] [illegible] and HOME, price 4s. 6d.
Pa[illegible] [illegible] 4s. 6d.

PARLEY'S LIVES OF FRANKLIN AND WASHINGTON, price 4s. 6d.
The above popular works, by this celebrated author, can be had in a handsome Mahogany, Case. Glass Door Lock and Key, price 24 [illegible]
London: Printed for THOMAS TE[illegible] side, and may be had of all Booksellers

Now performing, and published this day

JUDGE JEFFREYS. A Play in Five Acts. By HENRY SPICER, Esq., Author of "Sir Thomas Wyatt," "The Lords of Ellingham," "Lost and Won," &c
G. W. NICHOLSON, 59, Holywell-street, Strand.

"The plot is skilfully constructed, the action generally brisk, the characters are strongly marked, and they are adhered after nature; and the dialogue is always terse and pointed, and sometimes sparkles with passages of great beauty. The character is drawn to the life, and was played with a high vigour by Phelps, which could not part admirably, and no means to the of brutal licentiousness, quite in character with the historical traditions of the original. Mrs. Warner was quite at home in the character of 'Lady Grace,' and we must not forget to notice with special commendation, the acting of Mr. Roberts, in a small part of 'Tony Tea.' The play was put upon the stage with the greatest possible attention to scene effect, and was received by a crowded house with vociferous approbation. After the fall of the curtain the author was called for, and appeared, leading on Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps."—Morning Chronicle

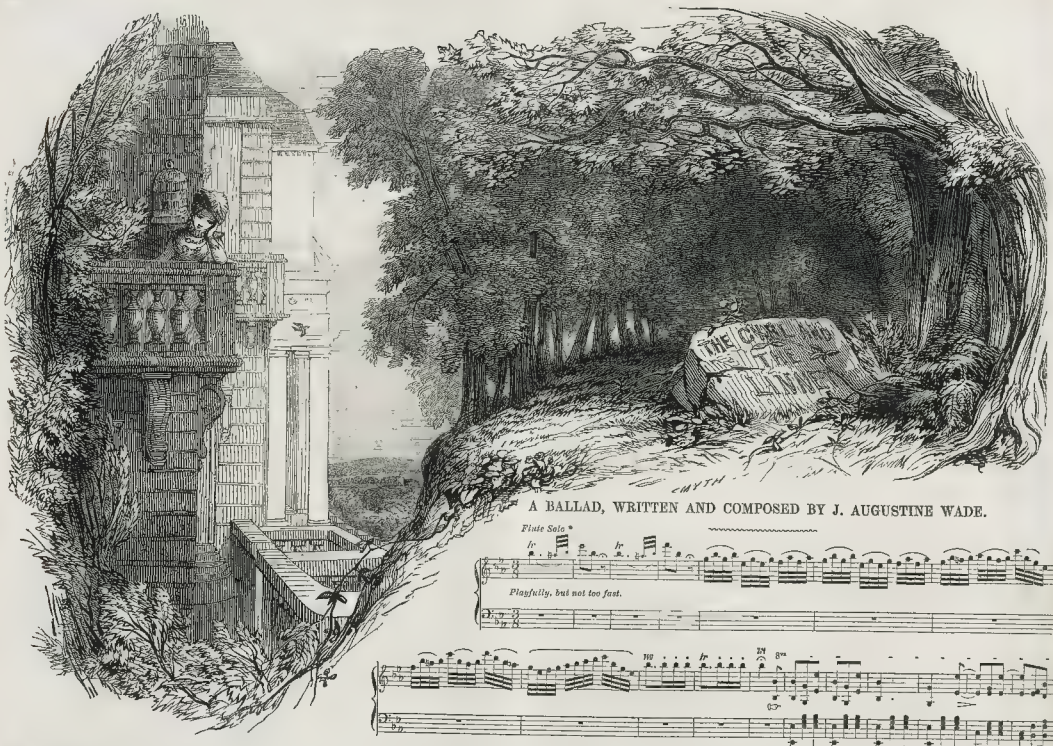
The fact is, a very clever reproduction—an historical personage. An unquestionable thirst for blood is combined with a sort of brutal jocosity, and the result is a character combining the misfortunes with the ridiculous as of a cut. The whole of Lord's character is worked out by Mr. Spicer in a spirit of irony. The dialogue abounds with point of the slang, and the [illegible] was a real treat for the author. Times

[illegible] this description, based on the great points of our country's history, if well and [illegible] managed, are most commonly successful, so in regard to the present production. [illegible] author has created the part of the over-zealous and merciless Judge Jeffreys. In the [illegible] scene [illegible] much applause, by the feverish haste he showed in sending more victims to the scaffold. The other characters were very creditably sustained. At the fall of the curtain, Mrs. Warner, Mr. Phelps, and Mr. Marston, had to re-appear the author (Mr. Spicer) was also loudly called for." Morning Advertiser

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—J. and J. DEANE invite attention to their Stock of LATHES and Machinery the only complete assortment in this department of manufacture in London. Every kind of [illegible] J. Deane, having established a factory, under the superintendence of artists who have had much time and capital, to the improvement of Lathes, so to enhance their [illegible] especially to such articles as may be conveniently rated upon for accurate construction and finish. Chucks of every discription, Slide rests, Rose engines, an apparatus common in the most approved plain turning. Attendance from [illegible] attended to. All kinds [illegible] machinery built to order.—DEANE'S, Gun Manufactory, 35, King William-street, London-bridge.

PEOPLE mindful of economy should recollect that, during the present depressed state [illegible] the markets, Ed Bags of useful and excellent TEA may be had for either 10s., 21s., or 32s [illegible] Company's Offices, 9, Great [illegible] Bishopsgate.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE [illegible] Hooper, 43, Rupert-street, Haymarket, [illegible] with Tea at the Wholesale Price, for Cash, [illegible] Congou, 3s. 4d. [illegible] 4s. 8d. [illegible] 5s. 4d. [illegible] 6s. 8d. [illegible] 8s. 4d. [illegible] 10s. 8d. [illegible] 12s. 8d. [illegible] 14s. 8d. [illegible] 16s. 8d. [illegible] 18s. 8d. [illegible] 20s. 8d. [illegible] 22s. 8d. [illegible] 24s. 8d. [illegible] 26s. 8d. [illegible] 28s. 8d. [illegible] 30s. 8d. [illegible] 32s. 8d. [illegible] 34s. 8d. [illegible]



A BALLAD, WRITTEN AND COMPOSED BY J. AUGUSTINE WADE.

Flute Solo *
Playfully, but not too fast.
Come hi - ther, come hi - ther, sweet lin - net; Look here, what a nice gold en cage; 'Twere bet - ter by far to dwell in it, Than bear with the rude tem - pest's rage. - - Here are hands that will feed and ca - ress you, And fond lips that will say, "Pretty dear!" You shall have ev - 'ry joy that can bless you; So fly in - to my cage with - out fear!" "Oh, no, pret - ty maid," said the Lin - net; "No gol - den barr'd cages for me; My pri-son's the wild-wood, and in it My songs are all hap - py and free! hap - py and free! hap - py and free! My pri - son's the wild wood, and in it My songs are all hap - py and free!"

Second Verse.

Away flew the bird: the poor maiden,
Disconsolate, envied its wing—
And with chains of captivity laden,
Thus, thus her poor heart tried to sing:
"You're right, pretty warbler; a palace,
Though rich, like the cage, it be found,
Is nought without Liberty's chalice,
To pour its sweet nectar around!

"Alas," sigh'd the maiden, "dear Linnet,
A golden-barr'd home is for me.
Oh, were it thy wild wood, within it
My songs would be happy and free!
Happy and free, happy and free!
Oh, were it thy wild-wood, within it
My songs would be happy and free"

The Flute Solo may be omitted at pleasure, in which case the Symphony must commence at this mark 𝄆.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, April 18, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 208.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1846. [Sixpence.

REGICIDE.

THE King of the French has had another escape from the hand of an assassin. One more name is added to the list of desperate criminals, that includes a Fieschi, an Alibaud, a Meunier, a Darmes, and a Quenisset: Lecomte closes the dark catalogue of gloomy and revengeful natures, which, brooding over fancied private injuries, or imagined public wrongs, have worked themselves into that bloodthirsty fanaticism which wreaks its violence on all who occupy great and prominent positions, and chiefly upon the persons of Kings.

When we think of the number of times attempts have been made on the life of the French King, it appears miraculous that he should have escaped them all. But the record begins to grow fearful; it cannot be contemplated without terror. We are not exempt from diseased minds and wretched dispositions, that have, in the same manner, sought to gratify their revenge, or love of a bad notoriety. But, except the maniac who murdered the secretary of Sir Robert Peel, they were rather weak and foolish boys, than desperate and dangerous men. The would-be regicides of France are more determined and more formidable. The attempt of Fieschi was perfectly fiendish in its contrivance, and fatal to many—but it missed its principal object.

The perseverance and malignity with which the life of the King is sought in France may be accounted for by the fact, that he is a political and ruling power—the active governor of the State, and not the agent through which other and greater influences act. He is the key-stone of the great fabric of political government, which with him would fall into confusion; at least, there would be the most imminent risk of that calamity. This was well known to the discontented spirits of the early part of the reign of Louis Philippe; and several of the attempts at assassination were real political conspiracies. The present one does not seem to have had any political object; no evidence appears either of accomplices or abettors. It appears, at present, to have been an act of isolated and individual revenge—the deed of a bad, violent nature—a kind of Caliban disposition, that could take no print of goodness, "being capable of all ill." As far as can be at present ascertained, Lecomte had no grounds for the hatred with which he pursued his superiors, and which was so general, that several others were threatened besides the King, though there is no doubt the shot was intended for his Majesty himself.

The few particulars that have been given of the criminal's past life, exhibit him as a most detestable character. No kindness or forbearance had any effect upon him; positive benefits awoke no gratitude; insolence to his superiors and equals, was accompanied by a disposition to tyrannize over all beneath him; he at last became insupportable, and was dismissed from his employment; yet, with more consideration than has been shown to many a better man, he was secured against that want which is generally the consequence of such misconduct. But nothing affected him; his wretched nature has finally hurried him to the last extreme of crime, and as all his acts exhibit a calculation and judgment inconsistent with the charitable and always ready plea of insanity, it is almost certain that he will close his miserable life under the knife of the guillotine. There are no "extenuating circumstances" to be found in the case.

The sword suspended by a hair over the head of Damocles at the banquet, was the mode the Monarch took to prove to the envious courtier that the condition of Royalty is not always a happy one. But it was a very imperfect expression of the continual and unceasing dread that must weigh down the spirit of a powerful Monarch, able to grapple with all enemies but the secret one.

"The arrow that flieth by night," is, in the unseen terror it awakens, a type of the fear that casts its shadow even on the brightest of earthly thrones. If we look back through history, we shall see how much reason there has been for this apprehension. The greater the power lodged in the hands of one individual, the more hatreds and jealousies he excites. To pass over the annals of Eastern rulers, filled with their bloody deaths, we find enough in the chronicles of European kingdoms to prove the existence of the "hard condition, twin born with greatness." There is not a Royal line in Europe that cannot furnish instances of the fatality. Russia has, even in modern times, witnessed more than one Imperial tragedy. Our own annals abound in transactions of a kindred character; and it has been proved over and over again that it is not among the ranks of their people that the most fatal enemies of Monarchs have arisen. Their families, favourites, or dependents, have mostly produced the assassin or the conspirator. Peter the Third was poisoned by his wife; and it is now well known that Alexander was cognisant of the assassination of his father, Paul; remorse, for having consented to the crime, is said to have darkened all his future life.

The present Emperor is safe among his people—the bulk of the Russian nation almost worship him; but he keeps a suspicious eye on the Nobles; it is from them the dangerous attacks on the Imperial Throne have always sprung. His most trusted Ministers are Germans, for the pure Russian Nobility rather keep aloof from the Court, and enter the public service by compulsion more than zeal. We find traces of the crime and its terrors wherever we look—in the present and the past, in the lives of great usurpers, as well as in those of legitimate Kings. The dread of assassination poisoned the peaceful years of Cromwell, and shook the heart that never quailed in battle. It pursued Napoleon like a curse, and hurried him into one of his greatest crimes, the execution of the Duc d'Enghien. It is with perfect knowledge that Shakspeare makes the fallen Monarch anticipate his own death, and speak of "graves, and worms, and epitaphs." And the train of thought in which his Richard II. indulges, may be taken as a short, but eloquent, comment on what has too often been the doom of Monarchs:—

LONGCHAMPS, PARIS.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

> Some sleeping killed.
> All murdered! for within the golden crown
> That rounds the hollow temples of a King,
> Death keeps his court; and there the antic sits,
> Mocking his state, and grinning at his pomp,
> Allowing him a breath, a little scene
> To monarchize, be feared, and kill with looks—
> Then comes at last

But singular among Monarchs has been the destiny of Louis Philippe. He has survived political convulsion, battle, proscription, and exile; amid all these his youth and manhood were passed. His age found him with the "gold-bound brow;" few Kings have so often been in peril from the hatred that directs itself towards the wearer of the crown as to its centre. Few have so often found reason to believe that there is a divinity that "doth hedge a King," for the hand of treason has trembled and failed as often as it has been lifted against him. Long may his life be preserved, for we look on him as one of the securities for the peace of Europe; he has a ruling mind, that can guide and govern, and when we look at the state of France, and reflect on its destinies under the dominion of a child, it is with mistrust and forebodings, not for France only, but for the world. There is a general consciousness of this danger; from it springs the hearty congratulations that arise from every quarter on the preservation of the King's life. Not the least significant is the address from the City of London, which we hope will worthily express the feeling of the people of England at large.

LONGCHAMPS, AND MAY FASHIONS.

We present our readers, this day, with an Engraving of that Parisian rendezvous of the elegant world, where continues, every year, on Good Friday, and the two preceding days, a pilgrimage, which, two centuries ago, began in motives of piety, and is now persevered in for purposes of fashion and amusement.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

When the convent of Longchamps was still in existence, this drive was, on the three last days of Lent, filled with carriages, transporting those devotees who wished to combine the pleasures of the world with an outward observance of the duties of religion, to this sanctuary, where, on these days, the most beautiful music was to be heard. This practice continued up to the time of Marie Antoinette, who was wont to repair thither with her Court. The building, however, in the time of the Revolution, met with the fate of so many other religious edifices. It was destroyed, but fashion adhered to the place; and, at the present time, on these holy days, Longchamps presents to the spectator the most brilliant scene, and one rendered still more piquant and original, by the admixture of odd faces, and still more singular attires, which contrast amusingly with the elegance and good taste of on tume of the really fashionable portion of the visitors. Of late years, this characteristic of the Longchamps réunions has become still more striking.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

Many English fashionables were present at Longchamps; amongst others, the ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, with his lady; the Marquis and Marchioness of Aylesbury; and several members of the aristocratic Parisian world, the femmes and élegantes of high society, then displayed the newest costumes, and the most brilliant equipages But, alongside of these, were actresses from the Variétés or Palais Royale, rejoicing in an exuberance of knots, sashes, flowers, and ribbons, when made it a matter of wonder how they could compress themselves in the allotted space of their vehicles; amongst other oddities, was seen a carriage actually made of tin, painted over in plain grey, with a grey horse, in which was stationed an eccentric individual, with a long beard, who is reported to be very rich, and who appeared indifferent, if not unconscious, of the amusement he excited

These were, however, only accidental blemishes upon the aristocratic elegance of the scene, in which new toilettes, remarkable for simple elegance and freshness, added additional charms to the fair forms and faces of the occupants of the carriages which perambulated the fashionable residence. We will now give our gentle readers an idea of the most prevailing forms of toilette then witnessed.

Amongst the bonnets most prevailing at Longchamps were those of Paille de Ris, trimmed either with flowers of the season or with feathers. The style of trimming which particularly deserves to be recorded is a green and white ribbon, simply twisted round the bonnet, forming into small, flat bows on one side of the crown, while on the other side the trimming terminated in a branch of weeping willow, with shaded leaves: the bonnet was lined with green crape, and trimmed inside with bows of green and white crape.

For a blonde, nothing can be fresher or more elegant than this style of trimming. Capotes in crape, either grey-mallow colour, pink or straw colour, trimmed with a ruche of the same shade, were almost universal and produced a light and charming effect. We are happy to say that the short reign of the Pamelas is over. Bonnets, though they retain the upward slope, and are still open and short at the ears, are made with a curtain behind, and are altogether less exaggerated in form. Another advantage of this new fashion is that volieties are restored to favour. A very favourite method of disposing of them, is by pleating them carelessly over the crown, and fastening them down on both sides with a bunch of flowers. We must not omit to mention that bonnets of very fine tawny straw are still worn; they are lined in delicate pink-blue or lilac, trimmed with bunches of flowers jonquils and violets, mixed; pink and white hawthorn, white narcissus, or primroses: in fact, all the flowers which are peculiar to the lovely season of the year.

The form of mantlets, in spite of Longchamps being passed, appears yet somewhat undecided. Those most in favour, however, hold the medium between the visite and the scarf, they are rounded at the back and descend with long ends in front. They are frequently trimmed with broad lace; the prettiest are in rather light coloured silk glacés for dress, in black are too common, and, moreover, have somewhat the air of extinguishers. When the season is more advanced, lace scarfs will, it is thought, become very fashionable. Cashmeres, the constant resource of ladies at this season of the year, will continue to be worn for some time longer, unless the weather should suddenly change to a warmer temperature. At Longchamps, silks were the ruling material for dresses, made in the fashionable colours, fawn, lilac, steel-grey, dove-colour, or green. Those most in favour are made in stripes covered with a brocaded pattern. Lace flounces were much worn. Flounces of the same material as the dress are not yet completely out of vogue. They are worn more for silks than for any other material; a fashion has been introduced of pleating the upper flounces into the waistband; but this, we think, has a very ungraceful effect. Fil de chèire will be a prevailing material for morning dresses. Morning dresses are made with full bodies, confined by a sash with long ends instead of a waistband.

We must not omit to add, that lilac and peau de chine are the ruling colours for gloves.

PROMENADE DE LONGCHAMPS.

Queen of Fashion, Wit, and Mirth!
Paris! brightest spot of earth.
What's this festival to-day?
Whither flock thy children gay?
Is it for a victory won
'Neath Algeria's scorching sun?
Is it for a trophy bright,
De Joinville gained in naval fight?
A new Tom Thumb, a new strutfit,
Or Abd-El-Kadar and his staff?
Why flock these myriads, Paris, say,
Fast to thy famed Champs Elysées?

See! Funchon has resign'd her mop!
Monsieur de Snip has shut up shop.
The clerk throws down his useless pen;
The student leaves his classic den;
Count Calico is maîtaire;
Struts the Garçon apothicaire.
The sly grisette, with eyes and lips
Most eloquent, on tiptoe trips,
And then the Milliners—oh Lord!
Desert their Mauzains de Modes.
His studio the Artist closes—
Flies from his plaster—palettes—poses.
The Chambers—centre, left, and right—
Have in a body ta'en to flight.
E'en the grey Invalides are come,
And eke Lords Palmerston and Brough'm.
Oh! City of Seduction, say,
Why rush they to Champs Elysées?

No victory on land or sea,
Stranger! has caused this bustling glee.
This is the festival of Spring,
When Fashion soars on airy wing—
When Winter's garb is cast aside,
And Beauty in her graceful pride,
Assumes the robe and lig.at chapeau
The supreme "ton," through Summer's glow.

Survey from Neuilly's glorious arch,
Gay Taste and Fashion's triumphmarch;
A thousand equipages there,
Fill'd with the gallant and the fair,
Display the pow'r of Victorine,
Camille, and Baudran; while I ween
The genius masculine are seen
Brilliant as butterflies new wing'd.
Be-laced, be-whisker'd, and be-ring'd!
Attired in Fashion's nascent suit,
From bore to stock from hat to boot:
'Tis brave! but, come October soar,
These g.ories all shall disappear!

E'en so shall we, then city bright!
Thy Longchamps promenade is right.
It lends to industry some scope;
Gives labour bread and talent hope;
And though, perhaps, the plumy bonnet
Holds less ardus it than what's on it,
It may have dried the widow's tear—
I wish we had a Longchamps here!

O'C——L——.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Whatever may be the genius of a man, good fortune must serve him; luck—which is but a name for that which is more sacred—is the power that watches over the fortunes of great statesmen and great generals in the hour when their inspirations are deficient, and more so than Providence itself does over good men without ambition, because their reign is not of this world. This species of good fortune no one has had to a greater extent than Louis Philippe; his enemies have served him more than even his friends, and the assassin that have attempted his life have contributed immensely to consolidate his throne. Once more has the last attempt awakened and aroused in their hostile habits the French nation, carried away by the torrent of bons mots, personalities, and invectives against la meilleure des Republiques: they are thus made to think of the value of the King's life. It ensures Louis Philippe three or four months of popularity at the important moment of his election, and many years of strong government may be obtained

Magnificent as the coup d'œil was, I cannot express with how much sorrow I beheld those beautiful environs of Paris—Puissay aux Roses—desecrated by the crowd come to witness the steeple-chase of La Croix-Berny. If there is any animal with which we should hold sympathy, it is the horse—suffice its trials on the field of battle, on the marché, in Algiers or in the Punjaub. The steeple-chase with all its accidents, and not incidents of field and flood, is an invention of cruelty as foolish as racing is noble and useful in maintaining the breed. I thought that the shouts of rain were justly merited that fell upon the whole Jockey Club, with its leaders, MM. Gryo de la Tourlupin, Prince de la Moskwa, Leon Le Contenly Vaublanc; and at their head the English representatives, Lords Coutelige, Canterbury, Exmouth; Sir Massey Stanley, Mr. Ricardo, M. H. Baring, &c. The French fortunately got no encouragement to continue this cruel pursuit, for the horses of MM. Cremieux and de la Mariemas, the only two French proprietors in the first race, were distanced at once, and one of them sadly hurt. The coup d'œil amidst the rain, was most extraordinary—not so much for the crowd as for the description of persons present In the privileged places you might behold gentlemen of the highest rank—Brisach, Noailles, Clermont Tonnerre, &c.—mixed with all the horse-dealers, jockeys, jobbers, and blacklegs of Paris. On one side were numberless second-rate carosses, the Ozyr, Leviene, Plunkett, Duvergier, &c., with demi galants no less numerous, and all under special care of more attentive cavaliers; whilst the Duchess d'Istrie, the Countesses de Gouy and de Tregust, and other ladies of rank, were mostly standing on the tops of their carriages, unprotected from the pelting rain. That most amiable Prince the Duke de Nemours, who, from pressure of business, only arrived in his carriage-and-four at the end of the race, has lost still more in public estimation of the giddy throng. Sir Robert Peel, on the contrary, is thought to be sure to carry all the questions now battling in your Parliament, on account of the success on this occasion of his nephew the Captain—whose unaffected, off-handed manner, and unflinching spirit, have turned him into the greatest of heroes in the eyes of our Parisians. Besides, he is said to have netted £30,000—and a man with a large sum in his pocket, is sure to be adored here. The result of the sensation occasioned by this Steeple Chase is, that our young Nobility, who, thanks to the abolition of the law of primogeniture, have only just enough fortune to be idle, will ruin themselves in this heartless pursuit; in which, whilst every horse that is not a cart-horse will be tortured by our heedless countrymen until, figuratively or positively, they all break their necks.

SPAIN.

Our latest accounts from Madrid indicate an actual crisis with the new Ministry. M. Isturitz is already at loggerheads with his colleagues, and it is reported that he and the new Minister of Finance have already tendered their resignations. The Cabinet cannot agree as to whether the Cortes is to be called together or not. The Members who lean towards Constitutional Government say yes—the Absolutists say no. Unhappy Queen Christine, who is the prime mover in everything, joins the Absolutists, and the victory will probably be in their favour. The question of the liberty of the press also leads to difficulties. In the meantime Queen Maria Christina and her daughters enjoy themselves. "The day before yesterday," says a letter, "a concert was given in the drawing-rooms of the Royal palace; its principal object was to hear las mete palabras of the celebrated Haydn, executed by their Majesties, her Royal Highness, and other persons, in compliance with the Queen Mother's pleasure. The performance, which took place under the direction of Don Francisco Valdenosa, the Royal family's professor of singing, was admirable. All the parts were splendidly performed by the Queen-Mother, the Infante, Malle. Campuzano, the Duke de Rianzares, and MM. Signer, Calvo, and Regnar. The Queen sang to perfection, with Malle. Campuzano, a duet 'De Giuramento.' The Infante Don Francisco sang, with M. Regnar, the base duet of the 'Puritani,' and, with the latter, the Queen sang also a duet of the 'Straniera.' The two new fantasias, by Don Pedro Alberuis, were executed on the piano by the Queen and her sister. The Infante Don Francisco's daughters shone in a six hand morceau, accompanied by M. Lydon. A morceau, for the organ and piano, was also played in admirable style by the Queen-Mother and Malle. J. Munoz, whom MM. Alberniz and Guelbenzu accompanied."

INDIA.

COMPLETE TERMINATION OF THE WAR. CONVENTION WITH THE MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH.

The half-monthly mail from India has arrived with despatches from Bombay of March 13th; from Calcutta of March 8th; from Madras of March 13th: and from China of February 27th.

The accounts they bring are highly satisfying. Peace has been completely restored in the Punjaub. We subjoin full particulars of the circumstances attendant on the arrangement of this happy consummation with the Government of Lahore; but, previously, in order to render our relation of the events which have occurred since the date of our previous accounts more clear, it will, perhaps, be better that we should recapitulate a few of the more important particulars subsequent to the great victory at the bridge of Sobraon, which decided the fate of the Punjaub. This battle, by which the Sikhs were driven across the Sutlej, took place on the 10th of February. The first division of the British army entered the Punjaub on that day. On the 14th, the Governor-General was at Kussoor, where he issued a proclamation declaring the independence of that country. The alarm of the Sikh Government was great: Gholab Singh, the Wuzeer, represented to the Queen-Mother that the defeat of the Khalsa was attended with the loss of 30,000 men. He was commissioned to make terms. He sent word to the British authorities, and promised to be at Kussoor, where the Governor-General was waiting for the remainder of his army. Gholab Singh arrived four hours after his time, and was received with coldness, and was referred to the Secretary, Mr. Currie, and to Major Lawrence, the Political Agent, with whom he remained in close conference until past midnight. The terms of the Convention prescribed to him were the cession of all the country to the east of the Beas, in addition to the provinces declared in December to have been confiscated; the payment of a million and a half sterling; the surrender of all the cannon used against the British army, and the total disbanding of the Khalsa army. Gholab Singh had another long conference on the 17th. The presence of the young King, Dhuleep Singh, was required in the British camp, which, on the 18th, was removed to within eighteen miles of Lahore. Dhuleep Singh came there, and was received without any salute. He then "expressed his contrition for the late hostile proceedings, and his acquiescence in all the terms and conditions imposed by the British Government." The Governor-General then ordered a Royal salute to be fired, and issued the following proclamation:—

PROCLAMATION BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA

Foreign Department, Camp Lullesanee, Feb. 18, 1846.

The chiefs, merchants, traders, ryots, and other inhabitants of Lahore and Umritsir, are hereby informed that his Highness Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has this day visited upon the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and expressed the contrition of himself and the Sikh Government for their late hostile proceedings

The Maharajah and Durbar having acquiesced in all the terms and conditions imposed by the British Government, the Governor-General has every hope that the relations of friendship will speedily be re-established between the two Governments. The inhabitants of Lahore and Umritsir have nothing to fear from the British army. The Governor-General and the British troops, if the conditions above adverted to are fulfilled, and no further hostile opposition is offered by the Khalsa army, will use their endeavours for the re-establishment of the Government of the descendant of Maharajah Runjeet Singh, and for the protection of its subjects

The inhabitants of the cities in the Punjaub will, in that case, be perfectly safe in person and property from any molestation by the British troops, and they are hereby called upon to dismiss apprehension, and to follow their respective callings with all confidence.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India,

F. CURRIE,

Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

In the morning of the 20th the British army appeared under the walls of Lahore, where no resistance was shown. Preparations were made for sending Dhuleep Singh to his palace, under an escort of the British troops. The general order issued on the occasion is as follows:—

GENERAL ORDER BY THE RIGHT HON THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA

Foreign Department, Camp of Lahore, Feb 20, 1846.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General requests that the Commander-in-Chief will cause the following arrangements to be made for escorting his Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh to his palace, in the citadel of Lahore, this afternoon. The escort will consist of two regiments of European Cavalry, two regiments of Native Cavalry the Body Guard to be one; one regiment of Irregular Horse, two troops of Horse Artillery, one European and one Native

The Secretary to the Government of India, F. Currie, Esq., will take charge of his Highness and his suite, and will be accompanied by the political agent, Major Lawrence; the Governor-General's private secretary, Charles Hardinge, Esq.; the Aides-de-Camp of the Governor-General; two Aides-de-Camp of the Commander-in-Chief, one Aide-de-Camp from each general officer of division, in uniform.

The escort will be formed at the nearest convenient spot to the Governor-General's camp at two o'clock, and proceed to his Highness' camp and thence to his palace.

On alighting from his elephant a salute of 21 guns will be fired by the Horse Artillery.

His Highness the Maharajah of the Sikh nation, selected by the chiefs as their sovereign, having on the 18th inst. intimated his intention to proceed to the Governor-General's camp at Lulleesanee, attended by his Highness' Wuzeer, the Rajah Gholab Singh, and other chiefs, was received in Durbar on the after noon of that day by the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, and the staff being present. His Highness' Ministers and chiefs there tendered his submission and solicited the clemency of the British Government

The Governor-General extended the clemency of the British Government to a prince the descendant of the Maharajah, the late Runjeet Singh, for so many years the faithful ally and friend of the British Government, as the representative of the Sikh nation, selected by the chiefs and the people to be their ruler, on the condition that all the terms imposed by the British Government should be previously explained to his Highness' ministers and chiefs should be faithfully executed

On withdrawing from the Durbar, the Maharajah received the usual salutes due to his Highness' exalted rank.

His Highness has since remained near the Governor General's camp; and, as it will be conducive to his Highness' comfort, that he should rejoin his family, the Governor-General deems that a proper escort should, with honour and in safety, be conducted by the British troops to the gates of his palace this day

The following proclamation was issued on the 18th inst., by the Governor-General, promising protection to all persons and classes, and elsewhere was peaceably continue in their usual employments of trade and industry.

The Governor-General is satisfied, after the experience of this campaign, that he can rely on the discipline of this native army, as fully and securely as he has always been confident that the day of battle, under their distinguished commander, would be one of victory.

He trusts, at present, that no officers or soldiers will pass the advanced sentries of their encampment to enter the town of Lahore, and he requests his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to give the necessary instruction to carry this order into early effect, as well as to protect all persons bringing provisions into the camp.

By order, &c.,

F. CURRIE,

Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

The report of Mr. Currie, the Secretary, of the ceremony of introducing Dhuleep Singh into his palace is highly interesting:—

TO THE RIGHT HON SIR HENRY HARDINGE, G.C.B., GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA

Right Hon. Sir,—I have the honour to state, for the information of your Excellency, that, in accordance with the instructions contained in the order of the Governor-General of yesterday's date, I proceeded in the afternoon with the escort ordered, and accompanied by the officers mentioned below, on elephants, to conduct the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh to his palace in the citadel of Lahore

Major Lawrence, the Governor-General's Political Agent. W. Edwards, Esq., Under Secretary of the Foreign Department. R. Cust, Esq., Assistant Secretary to the Foreign Department. C. Hardinge, Esq., Private Secretary to the Governor-General. Lieutenant-Colonel Wade, Native Secretary to the Governor-General. Captain Cunningham. Captain Hardinge, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General; Captain Grant, ditto; Lord Arthur Hay, ditto; Captain Mills, ditto. Captain Bagot, Aide-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief; Captain Edwards, ditto. Captain Gilbert, Aide-de-Camp to General Gilbert. Captain Tottenham, Aide-de-Camp to General Smith. Lieutenant-Colonel Irvine, Engineers; Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, ditto; Captain Napier, ditto; Captain Smith, ditto.

The procession was arranged in the following order:—9th Irregular Cavalry, 3rd Light Cavalry, Her Majesty's 16th Lancers; Troop Horse Artillery, Europeans; Troop Horse Artillery, Natives; Her Majesty's 8th Lancers, the Secretary with the Maharajah and suite, the Governor-General's Body Guard

The escort was formed in open column of troops left in front commanded by Brigadier Cureton, C.B

We proceeded in this order to the encampment of the Maharajah, about one mile and a half from our pickets, and nearly the same distance from the citadel gate of the city.

At about three-quarters of a mile from the Maharajah's camp I was met by the Minister, Rajah Gholab Singh, and some of the chiefs Intimation of our approach was then sent on to the Maharajah, that he might be ready upon his elephant upon our arrival.

On reaching the Maharajah's camp, the troops of our escort drew up, and the Maharajah, with Rhaee Ram Singh on the same elephant, came forward from his tent, accompanied by several chiefs.

After the usual salutation and complimentary questions and replies, I placed the Maharajah's elephant next to mine, and the troops having fallen in, as at first, proceeded round the walls of the city to the gate of the citadel.

On arriving, Brigadier Cureton drew up the escort in line in front of the gateway, and I took the Maharajah, accompanied by the officers enumerated in the former part of this letter, with Rajah Gholab Singh and the other chiefs, into the interior of the citadel, and to the inner door of his palace.

I then observed to the Maharajah and chiefs, that by order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General, I had then brought the Maharajah, conducted by the British army, to his palace, which his Highness had left for the purpose of tendering submission to the British Government, and for placing himself, his capital, and his country, at the mercy of the Governor-General, and requesting pardon for the insult that had been offered; and that the Governor-General had thus restored him to his palace as a mark of the favour which he desired to show to the descendant of the late Maharajah Ranjeet Singh.

A salute of 21 guns was then fired by the Horse Artillery.

We then took leave of the Maharajah at the gate of his palace, and returning to the outside of the city, we continuing our progress round Lahore, thus returned to our camp.

As our camp is situated opposite the south-east end of the city face, and the citadel is immediately within the city walls at the north-west angle, we made the entire circuit of Lahore. I considered this preferable to going through the city, the streets of which are very narrow, and would have much impeded the progress of our large escort.

We did not see one gun upon any part of the walls; all their embrasures were empty.

I have the honour to be, &c.,
F. CURRIE,
Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

On the 22nd the citadel of Lahore and a part of the Palace was formally taken possession of by the British authorities.

On the 23rd of February a general order was issued by Lord Hardinge, announcing that the army of the Sutlej had brought its operations to a close, by the dispersion of the Sikh army and the military occupation of Lahore, preceded by a series of the most triumphant successes ever recorded in the military history of India.

The Governor-General being determined, however, to mark with reprobation the perfidious character of the war, has required, and will exact, that every remaining piece of Sikh artillery which has been pointed against the British army during this campaign shall be surrendered.

The order then states that a donation of a twelvemonth's batta has been granted to all engaged, or who were ordered to join. This "batta" means the "pay," so that the gratuity amounts to twelve months' pay.

The Khalsa troops, after their defeat at Sobraon, retired towards Umritsur. Their commander, Tej Singh, was twice wounded in their last conflict, and, seeing no advantage from further resistance, gave in. The remnant of the Khalsa army was obliged to surrender their cannon, and to disperse. The surrender of their guns was the proof of their conquest, for on them their great reliance was placed in battle. Groans and tears attended their departure from Lahore.

The Wuzeer Gholab Singh was the chief agent, but the Queen-Mother wished to promote her paramour, Lall Singh, to the Wuzeership, and Gholab is discontented. Intrigues are busy.

The first instalment of the money had not been paid on the 1st of March, but it was daily expected. The withdrawal of the British army was to take place about the 10th. The state of the country around Lahore is described as tranquil, but there were bands of armed men prowling in the adjacent districts.

Permission was given in the general orders of the 26th of February to the men of the 16th Lancers and of the 31st Foot to volunteer into other corps. These regiments are to come by water to Bombay, and there to embark for Europe.

Arrangements were fast making for the occupation of the conquered country, which is exceedingly fertile, and will yield an annual revenue of £400,000. The chief town is Jullinder, with 40,000 inhabitants; Pauloor, Pugwarra, and Kattampore are also of note. The cantonments of the British will not be far distant from Lahore, so as to be able to keep down all attempts at insurrection.

India throughout is tranquil.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

IMPORTANT POINTS OF RAILWAY LAW.

On Wednesday argument was heard in the Court of Exchequer, on the case of Wallasch v. Spottiswoode.

The defendant, Mr. Andrew Spottiswoode, her Majesty's printer, was sued as one of the Provisional Directors of the Direct Birmingham, Oxford, Reading, and Brighton Railway. The plaintiff, Mrs. Elizabeth Wallasch, had recovered from him the full amount of the deposits which she had paid on 30 shares in the above-named railway, a verdict having been found in her favour at the Guildhall sittings after last term, before Lord Chief Baron Pollock. Leave was reserved at the trial to move to enter a nonsuit.

Mr. Martin now moved accordingly. The first count (he said) was framed on a contract to the effect that the plaintiff on presenting the bankers' receipts for the payment of the deposits should have scrip certificates delivered to her and alleged a breach in that respect; the second count was in the common form for money had and received. At the trial it was proved that the defendant was by his consent a member of the committee; that 30 shares had been allotted to the plaintiff on her application, and an agreement that the letters of allotment would be exchanged for scrip upon the production of the bankers' receipts for the deposits, and executing the necessary deeds. The first objection was, that there was no evidence to support the contract in the first count; and it was submitted the latter statement, that the letters of allotment would be exchanged for scrip, was no part of the contract, which ought to be confined to the previous part only. The second objection taken was, that the defendant's liability should be limited to the responsibility imposed by the Joint Stock Companies Act, 7th and 8th Vict., c. 110, on the Directors of Companies not completely registered. Here the defendant did not appear to have given any personal authority to extend his liability further—he therefore was not responsible but positive evidence of usage or custom. The ground on which the verdict rested was simply, that as a member of the Committee, the defendant was bound to secure the delivery of scrip certificates, and that having failed to do so, he became liable to repay the amount of the deposits

Mr. Baron Alderson inquired if the Act of Parliament 7 and 8 Vict., c. 110, pre hibited Directors of Companies provisionally registered from issuing scrip up to a certain time?

Mr. Martin replied in the affirmative. The Act was, at first sight, a little confused, but, upon analysing its provisions, they would be found clearly to bear out the view for which he was contending. Indeed, he did not think any doubt could exist in this case, if it had not been for the case of Woolmer v. Toby, which had been tried before Baron Rolfe, on the Western Circuit.

Mr. Baron Rolfe said the case of Woolmer v. Toby could scarcely be said to have been tried; it went off on a number of points, which were hastily ruled at Nisi Prius, but could not be said to be determined.

Mr. M. Smith said that the understanding of the counsel engaged in Woolmer v. Toby was precisely what had been described by Baron Rolfe.

The Chief Baron: Woolmer and Toby was probably decided as this case was, formally at Nisi Prius, reserving the real decision for the court. The points reserved in both these cases were still sub judice, and no one would be warranted in drawing any inferences as to the real state of the law from what passed at Nisi Prius in those cases.

The Lord Chief Baron said it appeared to him, upon the statement of counsel, that the two counts in the declaration must stand or fall together. If it were illegal to issue scrip as suggested, the plaintiff could not enforce a contract so to do. The rule might be granted, generally, leaving both points open for argument.

Rule to show cause accordingly.

IRELAND.

SERIOUS PROVISION RIOTS.

We last week mentioned that there had been some provision riots of rather a serious character. On Thursday (last week) great excitement took place in Clonmel, a scene between the counties of Tipperary and Waterford. A Clonmel paper gives the following account of the riots:—

"On Thursday morning, in consequence of information received by the Magistrates, they very prudently had cars stationed in the barracks for the prompt conveyance of the troops in case of necessity; and subsequent proceedings will show how very well-timed and prudent their arrangements were. In a short time an express arrived in town stating that an immense mob were [illegible] Bridge, Kilsheelan, and [illegible] of the 1st Royal Dragoons, under the command of Major Bagwell, Mr. W. Bagwell, Mr. [illegible] Esq., R.M., attended them, and when within [illegible] of the mob, they were ordered to disperse. The work of robbery going on was most extensive. Mr. Fosberry and a mounted policeman immediately galloped on, and when they reached the spot, the scene which met their view was more easy conceived than described. An immense multitude were pulverising the boats; a vast quantity of Indian corn, the property of Mr. Going, of Cahier, was destroyed or made off with, and a quantity of wheat, the property of Mr. T. Hughes, was also taken and destroyed. The military quickly came up, and a regular engagement took place. Stones were firing in all directions, several soldiers were struck; Mr Fosberry received a blow of a stone in the leg, and it was not until some time after the [illegible] that the rioters were subdued, and thirteen of them taken prisoners and brought into our gaol. Nothing could exceed the coolness of our magistrates, officers, and soldiers during this transaction, and we are happy to say that a portion of the wheat was retaken."

The Case of [illegible] Scott. In our paper last week we stated that a curious trial for bigamy had been going on in Dublin, in the case of Mary Jane Scott. The prisoner was before dealt for the same offence, while Mr. Galvey, her first husband, was alive, but acquitted on a point of law, Galwey not being her first husband, but a person named Carter. She was on this occasion tried for having [illegible] Galwey while Carter was living. She was also tried, but on Tuesday last was again arraigned, on an indictment containing two counts, for marrying Mr. Scott, [illegible] Clare, her husband, James Galwey, being alive. Again a verdict of "Not Guilty," was given; and there being no other charges against her, Mrs. Scott was discharged. This was the third remarkable trial for bigamy. The first in 1844, for marrying Mr. Scott, her husband, Carter, being alive; second, last week, for marrying Mr. Galwey, Carter being dead; and the third was given on Tuesday, for marrying Mr. Scott, Galwey being alive. Thus the charge of bigamy assumed three forms. Mr. Scott will be called upon forthwith to pay the arrears of alimony, and also all the costs incurred by his now lawful wife. Mrs. Scott is upwards of 40, but described as still personally attractive.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Speaker entered the House before four o'clock, but 38 members only being present, the House stood further adjourned till Tuesday at that hour.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The House of Lords resumed its sittings to-day, but sat only half an hour. The only matter of interest was a motion of Earl Caledon, that all proceedings on Railway Bills should be postponed to the 27th inst. The object of this postponement was to give time for the introduction of a bill which it was the intension of her Majesty's Government to put on the table, to facilitate the dissolution of railway companies, where the shareholders desired that the concerns in which they were interested should be wound up. He gave notice that on Thursday he should submit that bill to the consideration of their Lordships.

Lord Brougham, in presenting a petition, praying their Lordships to refuse their sanction to the Bill for the Management of Charitable Trusts, said he had intimated to the petitioners that he did not concede with them in their opinion with respect to the Charitable Trusts Bill. As to the passing of this or any other bill, he believed they might not be under any alarm. They could not see what was passing elsewhere (meant in not the say where [illegible]—and have any apprehension for any bill passing. There seemed to be an utter incapacity to do business elsewhere. (Laughter.) So far from doing any business, they seemed never to think of it. (Laughter.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

New Members. Lord Milton took the oaths and his seat for Malton; and Henry Rich, Esq., for Richmond.

The third reading of the Corn Bill, and the first reading of the Protection of Life (Ireland) Bill were fixed for Friday. No remark was made upon the subject.

The Timber Duties.—Lord G. Bentinck drew attention to an error in the return relating to the timber duties. He stated that in a return moved for by him in January, but which had been most appropriately delivered to the House on the 1st of April, the prices of Memel and Canada timber had been shamefully misrepresented, with the view of making it appear that great advantages accrued to the English consumer by the reduction of duties. Lord G. Bentinck asserted a censured the Board of Trade for sanctioning such false, and, he feared, wilful, false returns.—Sir R. Peel admitted the error, and said he had ordered a correct return to be made without delay. He right that there was the responsibility of the mis-statement upon the subordinate officer who had prepared it.

Alleged Mismanagement of the Post-Office.—Mr. T. Duncombe drew attention to certain allegations against the Post-office, contained in the petition of Mr. Jonathan Duncan. They related mainly to the alleged way in which the authorities permit the letter-carriers to be employed in getting up the, "Post-Office Directory," a private speculation, undertaken by Kelly and Co., who by the facilities afforded them, were enabled to put down all competition at the public expense. He also complained of the system of fees for the "early delivery," and other irregularities, and moved for a select committee of inquiry.

Mr. Williams seconded the motion.—Mr. Cardwell replied that the Treasury and the Postmaster-General had not the slightest disposition to screen any delinquencies such as those alleged, and that any memorial plainly drawn up, and respectfully expressed, would receive prompt attention. He was in the habit of receiving daily scores of such memorials, and no real grievance ever went unredressed. The official duty of collecting addresses was one which would have to be performed by the letter-carriers, if the "Post-office Directory" were to cease to be published to-morrow; and he entered into an explanation of the circumstances under which Mr. Kelly, with the sanction of the Post-office authorities, had undertaken its publication. To other allegations made by Mr. Duncombe he gave direct contradictions, in consequence of having made searching inquiry; and concluded by opposing the motion.—A rather long debate ensued, and the motion was rejected by 92 to 49.

Irish Railway Bills.—Mr. W. S. O'Brien then, after stating his views at length, moved, "That, with a view to diminish the inconvenience and expense now incurred in carrying through Parliament bills for the construction of railways in Ireland, it is expedient that, in the case of Irish railway bills, all such inquiries as are now conducted in London by committees of both Houses of Parliament, should, after the termination of the present session, take place in Ireland."

After a debate participated in by several members, chiefly Irish, the motion was carried to a division, and was lost by 89 to 25.—The House sat till half-past twelve.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

The Friendly Societies Bill. On the motion of Sir J. Graham, the House resolved itself into a Committee for the further consideration of the report on the Friendly Societies Bill. Some conversation took place on the 1st and 2nd clauses of the bill, and several suggestions offered by hon. members were incorporated into them.—On the 3rd clause, Mr. T. Duncombe proposed an amendment, of which due notice had been given, to legalise all benefit societies at present established in proposing that amendment, he admitted that such had been his object in introducing the bill. Sir J. Graham objected to this amendment; and, after some conversation, it was negatived by a majority of 33 to 7.—The bill was ordered to be reconsidered County Elections Bill.—Mr. Ewart then moved the second reading of the County Elections Bill, the object of which is to limit the time for taking the poll in counties to one day, as is now the case in boroughs. He vindicated the change on the ground that it would lead to a great saving of expense.—Colonel J. Wood moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months, on the ground of the inconvenience of the change which it proposed to make.—After a conversation, in which Lord Worsley, Mr Newdegate, Mr Bright, Mr B. Denison, Sir J. Graham, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Ewart, Colonel Sibthorp, and Lord G. Bentinck joined, the House divided, when the amendment was carried by a majority of 50 over 39 votes. The bill was accordingly lost.

New Writ. On the motion of Mr. Pemberton, a writ was ordered to be issued for the election of a new Member for Linlithgowshire, in the room of William Baird, Esq., who has accepted the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds.

The Railway Deposits Bill, and the Commons Enclosure Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS Tuesday.

Railway Bills.—The Earl of Dalhousie asked for leave to introduce his Bill concerning the dissolution of railway companies, notice of which he had given before Easter, and also to propose a series of resolutions identical with those proposed by Sir R. Peel in the House of Commons. The noble Earl, in his speech, recapitulated the arguments used by Sir R. Peel, and concluded by proposing his resolutions, which are to be embodied in a sessional order. Leave was given to bring in the Bill, and it was agreed that the sessional order should be taken into consideration on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

REGULATION OF RAILWAY BILLS.

Sir R. Peel submitted his proposed resolutions relative to Railway Bills. There was no one more opposed than he was to any interference with the commercial speculations of the country, and under ordinary circumstances he should have had great reluctance in interfering with the application of capital in schemes requiring extensive powers from Parliament. But, at the same time, where there was a great risk of public inconvenience to arise from such speculations, he thought that in the present state of the commercial circumstances of the country, and the extensive railway projects before the public, that Parliament should interpose to check undue speculations, and it was with that view that he would submit certain resolutions to the House. There were three considerations which had acted him to submit a proposition to the House. The first was the amount of capital required, next the high rate of construction, and third, the rapid fall in the shares of existing companies; and he might add a fourth reason, namely, the willingness—he might say the anxious desire of the parties themselves to be relieved from a continuation of their responsibility. The evil which necessarily resulted from the railway speculations of last year, was greatly increased by the policy of keeping back a large number of shares for the benefit of the Provisional Committee, to enable them to trade with them in the market. (The Right Hon. Baronet here read a letter detailing several cases in which this had been done, and which created considerable laughter in the Commons.) Now he, in a very unsatisfactory state with respect to the subscribers in railway companies, and he thought it was necessary that some legislative measure on the subject should be adopted. The provisions of the Joint-stock Companies Act, which passed in 1844, were found deficient in the present state of things; and in the present defective state of the law her Majesty's government had felt it their duty, seeing the evils which had arisen from unprovident speculation, to submit a proposition to the House. The Government did not wish to throw any arbitrary obstacle in the way of the progress of embryo schemes, but he hoped that what he had to communicate should submit to the House would avoid that at the same time it would give an efficient check to the imprudent and dangerous spirit of speculation which prevailed last year, and the evil consequences of which were felt in every branch of trade. Whatever might be the result of the proposition, it was that her Majesty's Government had done their duty in submitting them to the House. (Cheers.) The right hon. bart. then read the following resolutions:—

1. That the House will not read a third time any Bill to empower any Company (whether intended to be incorporated by such Bill, or already incorporated by Act of Parliament), to construct a Railway, unless three clear days before the third reading there shall have been deposited at the Private Bill Office, there to be open to the inspection of all parties, a certificate signed and authenticated in manner hereinafter mentioned, and comprising the particulars hereinafter expressed, and stating the following facts, viz.—

1. That a copy of the Bill was submitted to the consideration of a meeting of the scripholders of the Company, or, in case of a Company [illegible] of the Shareholders or Stockholders of the Company, specially called for that purpose.

2. That such meeting was called by advertisements inserted once in each of two consecutive weeks in the London Gazette (if the Railway be an English or Scotch Railway), or in the London and the Dublin Gazettes (if the Railway be an Irish Railway), and in each case, in at least three London daily newspapers, and not less than three times in each paper, in each of such two consecutive weeks.

[illegible] the Company being intended to be [illegible] the Bill.—3. That [illegible] persons producing thereat [illegible] shares in the Company, and that [illegible] the Bill (such scrip having been actually issued, or the deposits in respect the of such shares actually paid).

4. That [illegible] Railway, intended to be made by the Company, and the deposits in respect thereof, and the [illegible] ing called in pursuance thereof, in the event of the above prescribed quorum of scrip shares or stock (as the case may be) not being represented at such meeting, to cause the votes of the [illegible] stituting the said meeting, approving or not approving of the Bill, to be taken and recorded and then to adjourn the same to some day, hour, and place to be declared by the Chairman, such day not being less than three days, and not more than one week, from the original day of meeting, and such day, hour, and place being, in the meantime, advertised twice in each of three London daily newspapers; and at such adjourned meeting it shall also be competent to the Chairman thereof to cause to be taken and recorded the votes of such of the persons constituting the same as have not voted at the original meeting, and the total votes given at the original and adjourned meeting shall be summed up as if given at one and the same meeting.

III. That such certificate shall also comprise, in a tabular form, the following particulars:—

1. The day, time, and place of the meeting, and of the adjourned meeting.

2. The dates of insertion of the advertisements for the meeting, and the names of the newspapers in which they were inserted.

3. The names and addresses of the persons producing scrip at the meeting, or, in the case of a Company already incorporated, the names and addresses of the shareholders, or stockholders, present at the meeting.

4. The [illegible] numbers, and the amount of the scrip respectively produced by the persons so producing the same at the meeting; or, in the case of a Company already incorporated, the respective amounts of shares or stock, held or represented by the shareholders or stockholders attending the meeting.

5. The fact of the approval or non-approval of the Bill (as the case may be) by the several persons producing scrip at the meeting, or by the several shareholders or stockholders attending the meeting.

6. The total amount of scrip produced at such meeting, and the amount thereof produced by the parties approving of the Bill; or, in the case of a Company already incorporated the total amount of shares or stock represented, either in person or by proxy, at the meeting, and the amount thereof so represented by persons approving of the Bill.

7. The total amount of capital required to be raised by the Company under the Bill; or, in the case of a Company already incorporated, the total amount of the capital [illegible] of such Company.

IV. That such certificate shall be signed [illegible] the Chairman of the meeting, and by [illegible] Directors of the Company, and in the case of a Company already incorporated, by [illegible] nature of the Parliamentary Agent depositing the same.

Ultimately the resolutions were agreed to. Mr. T. Duncombe then moved several resolutions, the object of which was to ensure a more complete scrutiny into the affairs of Railway Companies. These resolutions were agreed to, with some modifications suggested by Sir George Clerk, and the House adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Friday.

The New Houses of Parliament. The Marquis of Clanricarde said he did not intend to press the motion of which he had given notice relative to the new houses of Parliament, and therefore moved that the order be discharged. Having done so, he wished to put a question to his noble relative opposite, as to the progress of the construction of their Lordships' house. Mr Barry stated that it could not be completed in less than two years, but the committee were perfect y convinced that it could be ready for their Lordships' reception at the commencement of the next year, if proper diligence and exertion were used. Lord Canning regretted to say that he was unable to give a satisfactory answer to the question of his noble relative. There were some essential points still to decide, which, as yet, had scarcely been inquired into The subject of ventilation required more consideration, in order that the safety of the building might not be perilled, and three gentlemen had been requested to inquire into the subject, and report upon it. Those gentlemen were Mr. Hardwick, the builder of Lincoln's-inn Hall; Professor Graham, of the London University; and Mr George Stephenson, the celebrated engineer.—Lords Brougham and Campbell said a few words upon the subject, and the House adjourned at four o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Bridport Election. The following members were sworn at the table to try the merits of the petition presented against the return of Mr. B. Cochrane for the borough of Bridport, viz., Mr. B. Escott, Lord Claude Hamilton, Lord Dalmeny, Sir W. Somerville, and Mr. Charles Wood, the latter member as the chairman of the Committee.

Protection of Life (Ireland) Bill adjourned debate. On the order of the day being read for resuming the adjourned debate on the first reading of this bill,

Mr. Smith O'Brien said he had hoped that the Government would have come down to the House this evening, and expressed some commiseration for the present awful state of Ireland. The Government, however, having failed to perform their duty, he felt imperatively called upon to call attention to the present serious state of affairs in that country, and to the alarming distress which existed in that country. The hon. member then proceeded to read extracts from documents, showing the distress which existed in certain parishes in Ireland, which he contended, called for the immediate attention of the Legislature. In some of the provinces, the poor were actually dying of starvation; they could not possibly obtain the common necessaries of life.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

More than one harsh discord has broken in upon Easter revelries. Starvation is rapidly depopulating Ireland: Louis Philippe has again been a mark for the bullet of the assassin at Fontainebleau. We are glad to believe that this attempt upon the life of him, on whose existence, most probably, hangs the peace of Europe, is the result of private malignity, and in no way the work of any political party

Besides those unpleasant events, the week has been marked by little save the continual bursting of the railway bubbles, blown so industriously during last year. Besides the obvious impossibility of bringing the works to completion, in most cases, from want of funds or tightness of the money market, the uncertainty of railway law has frightened many from their embroilments. They are generally anxious to wash their hands clean of all concern with railways and railway liabilities. The "dissolving views" are exhibited daily in greater and greater numbers, and the year will see at least two kinds of those visionary schemes melt into thin air—leaving nothing behind them but a caput mortuum of waste paper-scrip, as valueless as those piles of one pound note ashes, which are exhibited in "the museums of the curious."

The theme is one pregnant with matter for satirist, moralist, or humorist. Perhaps a tome made up of the three best suits the subject.

1845.—STAG AND FAMILY LOQUUNTUR.

Old Stag. Yes, everything is going up,
The Lightest at the top;
When Fortune's self sits high the cup,
I'd be base not to quaff it.
Great Diddlesexes up at nine,
Ayrshire and Skye at six;
And the Great Stock-Smithy line
Is rising still like bricks
To sell, our new would be a bore—
There's no chance of a fall;
I'll realise five thousand more,
Then stop for good and all.

Old Doe. When, sell out, sell out, Railway shares
My love, don't talk such stuff
No tho' I hate all paid and airs,
That name ain't aged enough.
Fred. should see Paris, Naples, Rome;
And Jane wants change of air;
Besides, how only think Buckingham—
The Grandies drive a pair
Then Anna's voice, love, might be made
By Cossi, more sweet;
We must have a master I'm afraid,
Poor girl, she'll never sing!
Just look next door, there's Mr. Rudd—
He made it all in stocks;
And now, he's got his Melton stud,
And she her Rock-Smithy line
Tho' Envy is a vice I hate—
It she has, why not I?
Look, now, ambitious up at eight—
Do, some Timbuctoos try.

Chorus of Fawns Oh, yes, Papa, they're up at eight—
Do across Indies try.

Old Stag. Yes, yes, as they're up at eight,
I think I'll have a say
[Exit Old Stag, in the direction of the Stock Exchange.

1846.—STAG AND FAMILY QUIT.—THE REVERSE OF BEFORE.

Old Stag loquitur. My gracious! Here's a pretty go—
Six writs again to day.
"Woolmer and Toby" says, I know,
That allottees must pay
On this side, as Dir. just declared—
I still must bleed, I see;
On that, Directors on my head
Come down as allottee.
Horses, plate, carriage, houses gone,
No more can I retrench—
My country seat's exchanged for one
Inside of the Queen's Bench.
Great Diddi essexes are involved,
Six at two Gs. per share,
The Ballochsmithy line I dawdled
Into its native air!
Confound the Railway Times,
Confound each [illegible]
If I am wanted, use th
I seek the Serjeants'—

Chorus of Old Stags and Fawns.
Why did Papa are join
The Serpent! A tragic tune.

Address from the Court of Aldermen to Louis Philippe.—A Court of Aldermen was held on Tuesday, at which an address of congratulation was unanimously [illegible] late escape from assassination. A [illegible] understand, that the [illegible] affected their welfare was an object or interest to this country.

THE LATE WAR IN INDIA.—PORTRAITS FROM THE PUNJAUB.

(SKETCHED BY G. T. VIGNE, ESQ.)

BULBYO-SEIN, RAJAH OF MUNDI.

We resume our Illustrations of the late War with a series of characteristic Portraits of important personages in the territory just acquired by the British.

First is a striking likeness of BULBYO-SEIN, the RAJAH of MUNDI, the principal place in the above territory. It lies north-east of the Punjaub, comprising several valleys with their enclosing ridges, on the southern slope of the Himalayas. The capital, which is also called Mundi, is situate at the confluence of the Saykt river with the Beas, which is here 200 yards wide, very deep, and crossed by a ferry. The Rajah's Palace is an extensive building, with whitened walls, and covered with slate: it is surrounded by a beautiful garden, containing a profusion of the finest fruit-trees and flowers. Mundi seems to be peculiarly under the influence of Hindoo superstition, and the horrible rite of suttee, or burning the sati, or widow, with the corpse of her husband, is frightfully prevalent. When the Rajah dies, between twenty and thirty women invariably perish in this dreadful manner, and the number who suffer among the humbler classes, is proportionate to the rank of the departed. There were twenty-five wives burnt at the funeral pyre of Bulybo-Sein's father. The Rajah was tributary to the Sikhs, and was treated with much oppression and contumely by them: the greater part of his revenue was derived from iron and salt mines in the territory.—(See Thornton's Gazetteer.)

THE FAQUEER UZEER-OOD-DEEN, the original of the next portrait, was, with Dheaa Sing, supposed to possess more influence over Runjeet Sing than any other of the Sikh chiefs. He was one of the three deputies who had an interview with Sir H. Hardinge, after the battle of Sobraon. The Faqueer "is a fine-looking man, of about fifty, not over clean in his person, but with a pleasant and good-humoured, though crafty-looking, countenance, and his manners are so kind and unassuming, that it is impossible not to like him."—(Osborne's Court and Camp of Runjeet Sing.)

ALLADAD KHAN is the Khan or Chief of Tak, a thriving town of the Derajat, situate north of Dera Ismael Khan, and twenty-six miles west of the Indus. He has a revenue of about 150,000 rupees per annum, on which he lives in petty state, though compelled to pay the Sikhs a tribute of 60,000 rupees annually. To avoid their oppression, he, some time since, fled to Dost Mohamed. Tak is celebrated for fine fruits—grapes, oranges, pomegranates, apples, and especially mulberries. It is surrounded by a strong and high mud wall, surmounted with towers; within, is a citadel, of burnt brick, mounted with 13 pieces of cannon.

ALLADAD KHAN, OF TAK.

It has some transit trade, being situate on a route from east to west, which crosses the Sulimun range to the north of the Goulaira Pass.

RAM-SING, whose portrait is placed beneath that of the Chief of Tak, was a cousin of Sirdar Bishen Sing, son of the Jemidar, or Chief Captain, Koosal Sing, a general officer of Runjeet Sing's Court. Ram-sing was killed at the recent battle of Sobraon.

THE SOURMEE WOMAN, in the right hand corner of the page, is a native of the vill of Rouel, in Tiknee, near Chumba, and the only village in the Alpine Punjaub where the women wear turbans. Chumba lies north-east of the Punjaub, among the southern mountains of the Himalays, on the river Ravee, at the foot of a lofty peak, covered with snow. Its elevation is very picturesque and beautiful. Chumba is the residence of the Rajah of the neighbouring country, and was once "a mart of the first note" in this quarter.

THE FAQUEER BUNGA NATH, of Lahore, is a specimen of a class of scamps, who are intolerable in the Punjaub; "great athletic fellows," says the Baron Hugel, "and, without exception, the most impudent beggars in the world." The Baron travelled in Kashmir and the Punjaub with Mr. Vigne. His volume, lately translated in this country, and published under the patronage of the Honourable the Court of Directors of the East India Company, with notes by Major T. B. Jervis, F.R.S., contains an admirable account of the Government and character of the Sikhs, to understand which is now doubly important to Europeans.

Of the faqueers, Baron Hugel relates many interesting particulars. Thus, we learn from his excellent journal, that the term faqueer actually signifies the poor man of the place. Still, every village owns a beggar of this species, who receives something from each inhabitant, or sometimes there is one faqueer to so many small villages. The Baron heard it said occasionally, "We are too poor to have a faqueer here;" but, wherever there is one, the people generally have a pride in taking care that he is properly supported. There is often a spirit of contention between different villages most ridiculously carried on, to see which faqueer is kept best; and they seem most desirous that strangers should consider them benevolent in proportion as their own particular object is seen well maintained

THE FAQUEER UZEER-OOD-DEEN.

At page 312, the Baron gives a portrait of such a personage as that shown in our engraving:—

"We rode back for a mile along the city wall, and when not far from home, I descried a black faqueer dancing with his guitar, and singing praises to Govind Singh. He was standing on a lofty terrace before a handsome tomb, in which he had taken up his abode. His long black robe was lined with red; a black and white belt with astrological signs hung from his right shoulder across the left side, and a high magic cap completed his fantastic array. He had a circle of female auditors. I alighted from the carriage to view this novel spectacle somewhat nearer, and was surprised at the manner in which he danced to the melody of a very fine voice."

Again, the Baron relates these amusing instances of "the flowery discourse" of the Faqueer Sahib:—

"It began to rain, and his elephant marched close to mine. 'This will be a rainy day,' said I. 'When princes meet in the garden of friendship,' said the faqueer, 'the water-bearers of heaven moisten the flowers, that they may give out all their perfume.' I expressed my disappointment at being obliged to appear in a dark suit, on account of the non-arrival of my uniform from Loodiana, which I had ordered to be sent on to me to Lahore. He then began to tell me a long story about a tiger, who had made his appearance in a city to the terror of everybody, and how the King of the country, having heard what the tiger was doing, and found that his actions were all very noble, discovered his real nature in spite of his disguise, and, sending for him to his palace, recognised in the tiger a great Prince. 'What,' said I, 'do you compare me with a tiger?' 'Under this disguise,' he answered, 'your noble actions and your talent will betray you.' Such, in brief, was the meaning of his prolix tale."

DANCING FAQUEER, OF LAHORE.

RAM SING, KILLED IN THE BATTLE OF SOBRAON.

SOURMEE WOMAN OF THE ALPINE PUNJAUB.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WALTER RALEIGH GILBERT, K.C.B.

This courageous officer, commanding the Second Division of the army of the Sutlej, is the third son of the late Rev. Edmund Gilbert (vide Prince's "Worthies of Devon"), Rector of Helland, and Vicar of Constantine, in the county of Cornwall; Prebendary of Exeter Cathedral, and the lineal descendant of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, Kt., of Greenway and Compton, in Devonshire, who was half-brother of the renowned Sir Walter Raleigh. The Major-General was born in 1784, and entered the Indian service as a Cadet, in 1801. He served his first campaign under Lord Lake; and, subsequently, held situations of great responsibility with Sir George Nugent and the Marquis of Hastings. During the late war with the Sikhs, Lord Gough has borne ample testimony to Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert's courage, activity, and military skill.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WALTER RALEIGH GILBERT K.C.B.

The accompanying portrait has been engraved from a miniature in the possession of a branch of the family. Truly has it been remarked by a sporting friend of the Major-General's, that "he who was so often first in the race, was now foremost in the battle;" and there are many who have witnessed the generous intrepidity with which Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert has risked his own life to save that of others, both in India and in England.

LOSS OF THE PACKET-SHIP, "HENRY CLAY."

We regret to be obliged to record the loss of this noble packet-ship, belonging to the Liverpool line of Grinnell, Minturn, and Co. She was driven ashore on Tuesday night (March 24), about twelve o'clock, on Squam beach. The gale from the south-east was fearful; and when the ship struck, she broached to broadside on, the sea making a breach over her. Captain Nye ordered the masts to be cut away, in order to ease her; and, although she thumped heavily during the night, she remained perfectly tight until about daylight, when the keel broke off and she commenced making water. At this juncture, the second mate, Mr. Cooley, volunteered to attempt carrying a line to the shore in the life-boat. Four of the sailors accompanied him, and they succeeded in reaching the beach, where already many persons were assembled, all eager to render assistance. Having established a communication by drawing a hawser on shore and making it fast, the second mate gallantly returned to the ship, but, owing to the drift of the spars around her, he was unable to approach within several yards. He, therefore, lay off under the hawser, while along it six persons made their way and dropped into the boat. Thus freighted with 11 souls, he was drawn again to the shore by a line there made fast, but, before the boat could reach it, an overtopping wave broached her to, stove in the side, and six of the passengers, of whom two were seamen, and the other four second cabin passengers, were drowned. Mr. Cooley and the other five, clinging to the wreck of the boat, were drawn ashore, and they were taken from the surf, Mr. Cooley then senseless, having been dragged down by one of the crew, who had seized and held on to his leg. As soon as he had recovered, this gallant fellow was for again attempting the rescue of those on board, amounting to more than 300 persons, of whom four were cabin passengers, two gentlemen and two ladies, the others steerage passengers and seamen. The men on the beach, however, who by this time numbered some 80 or 90 persons, dissuaded him from any further attempt, as the tide was falling and the "under tow" very strong. Meanwhile, they promised to busy themselves in establishing other lines from the shore to the ship; and as Captain Nye, who remained by the ship, had hailed Mr. Cooley while in the boat, and, as well as he could understand, had said something about sending up word to New York, Mr. Cooley at once started from the beach, and by dint of hard riding reached New Brunswick just as the Philadelphia night train was coming through, and so went on to New York. When he left the beach the ship lay about five lengths from low-water mark, on the beach, high out of the water. The wind had shifted somewhat to the southward, and the surf was subsiding, and the expectation and the belief of the surfmen was that all on board would be saved. Captain Nye had taken every precaution, by battening down the hatches and lightening the vessel, to keep her from being water-logged; and there were on the beach a large force of men and several surf-boats, to be used as soon as the state of the sea permitted. The ship had no pilot, had had no observation for two days, and had not made the land; the weather thick and very stormy.—New York Morning Courier of March 26.

UPSET OF THE "JUPITER" STEAMER, IN THE SEVERN.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO THE "JUPITER" STEAMER, NEAR BRISTOL.

On Wednesday night, the 15th instant, about ten o'clock, as the Jupiter steam-packet, Captain Spencer, was on her way from Cork to Bristol, with a valuable cargo of horses, bullocks, pigs, and merchandise, she ran aground in the river Avon, a little below the Hotwell House, Clifton, at Round Point, a projection in the river. The night being very dark, and the tide fast ebbing, as the water fell, she soon heeled over on her side, and a scene of the utmost confusion arose. The horses being greatly terrified, broke loose, and several valuable hunters, the property of Mr. Mason, a gentleman resident in Oxfordshire, also, eight or ten head of cattle, and upwards of 200 pigs, were drowned. The vessel, being much strained, sprung a leak, and the general cargo was much damaged. Great consternation arose amongst the passengers, upwards of two hundred in number, each endeavouring to save his own property. On Thursday morning, the shore was literally strewed with the carcases of the animals. The vessel was got off next morning, and now lies at the entrance of the Cumberland basin.

The Jupiter was a fine three-masted vessel, of 200 horse power, and was placed on the Bristol and Cork station, in place of the Sabrina, refitting. The river Avon, from its sharp turnings, muddy and rocky banks, and from the rapid flowing and ebbing of the tides, is thereby rendered peculiarly difficult for navigation.

WRECK OF THE AMERICAN PACKET-SHIP "HENRY CLAY."

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

Sunday, April 26.—Second Sunday after Easter.
Monday, 27. Stothard died, 1834.
Tuesday, 28. Jupiter sets 8h 10m. p m
Wednesday, 29 Last War with France commenced, 1803.
Thursday, 30 Mercury rises 4h. 12m. a.m.
Friday, May 1.—St. Philip and St. James.
Saturday, 2.—Camden born, 1551.

High Water at London-bridge for the Week ending May 2

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A.	M	A.	M	A.	M	A.	M	A.	M	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
2 5.	1 14	3 24	3 53	4 12	4 31.	4 49	5 8	5 27	5 47	6 9	6 32

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Zaphnath," Durham.—A series of small Maps of England and Wales is published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, Strand.

"A Subscriber." A small work on Bookbinding may be purchased at Mr. Weale's, 59 High Holborn. The duties of a Master in Ordinary in Chancery are to report to the Lord Chancellor the number of days, and hours in each day, he has attended; and to state fully the steps, &c., of the causes pending in his office The Masters hold their offices only during good behaviour, and are allowed a salary of £2500 a year each

"W." The mirage (French) is an optical illusion in the atmosphere, by which, for example, a ship appears as if transferred to the sky, and a village in the desert as of boats in a lake. We have no specific name for this phenomenon in our language unless it be the sea term looming.

"Beta"—See the Treatise on Painting on Glass just published by James Ballantine, Edinburgh, showing its applicability to every style of architecture.

"Ann." Belfast. Mr. Moore was married many years since, to Miss Dyke, a lady of great personal attractions and accomplishments

"An Old Subscriber." Lewis, may, doubtless, obtain the printed Report of Christ's Hospital by the courtesy of the clerk.

"Harriet Macdonald" can only travel in the Government trains on railways at 1d. per mile, in which there is no distinction of classes.

"An Old Subscriber" is thanked for the drawing of the relics of Lord Bacon.

"Henry J." Gloucester.—A fine Engraving of Inkpyl's "Spanish Peasant" appeared in our Journal for March 21.

"J. J. M."—Several Sketches of Harrow Church and School appeared in No. 69 of our Journal

"Ariel" should address a letter to Messrs Ackermann, Print Publishers, Strand.

"Bureau."—It is hard to speak in these terms as to the salary of Annuity Associations: that named by our Correspondent is in fair repute

"A Young Bat." Northampton.—There are dozens of Manuals of Cricket, to be purchased at 6d. or 1s each, containing the Marylebone Laws.

"R" The large View of Dublin will certainly be issued next month

"H. P." Hammersmith, should address the letter, by post, to Marlborough House.

"Amicus." Nottingham. "Pastor on Bookkeeping," just published. "Hints on Etiquette" (Longman and Co)

"J. N." Glasgow, is not recommended to attempt to remove the spots.

"H. N." Seaford, is thanked; but we have not a sketch of the Bay.

"A Subscriber." Warrington.—"Gorton's Biographical Dictionary," 3 vols 8*vo*, price about 42*s., is an accredited work. The "New General Biographical Dictionary" very nearly completed is a more extensive work, but expensive.*

"Adventurer."—The best mode of reaching the West Indies is by a Royal Mail Steamer We are not able to answer the question as to the soldier's discharge

"E. H. P." should try the "Mining Journal," for full accounts of the Iron Market.

"R. C. S" unpuns the Memoir of the late M. Ude, in our Journal of last week, by stating that he was an excellent master chemist, "but no cook." We suspect that to be a statement of a frère de cuisine; and it must, therefore, be received cum grano salis.

"E. H" is recommended to try Ede's never-to-be-washed-out Marking Ink.

"Ignoramus."—Probably, at Peele's Coffee-house.

"Anonymous," who writes about a new aerial machine, is recommended first to get into a basket, and then to try to lift himself with his hands. The cost of a patent is about £140.

"C. S. W." Kirkdale.—The consent of the commanding officer is, doubtless, requisite for the discharge of a soldier from his regiment.

A Correspondent who writes from Oldham, should address his complaint to the Secretary to the General Post-office.

"S S" —Exceptionable advertisements are invariably excluded from the columns of our Journal.

"B. O. P." No step can legitimize children born out of wedlock.

"S. R." should address his inquiry to the Secretary of the School of Design. The price of "Jackson's Treatise on Wood Engraving" is £3 13s.

"E. M. C." The wills lodged in Doctor's Commons are verbatim copies. We have not room for the Charade.

"S'il vous plait." Merit is the standard.

"W. E." A cheap Dictionary of Gardening is announced; of which we have considerable expectation.

A Subscriber" is correct as to the priority of our Journal.

"Enosma." —We have not room.

"Zopus."—Our Correspondent's last shall be attended to.

"Constant Reader."—"Linear Assistant may be obtained at Blagrove's Rooms, in Mortimer-street; or at Addison and Hodgson's, in Regent-street, J. C. Cross first appeared in London at Nisetta in "La Gazza Ladra," in 1831.

"Subscriber for 1845."—The information required would extend to a greater length than we can afford at this moment, considering that we have to attend, on an average, about a dozen musical meetings every week. The coming entertainments of the week are always recorded in our columns. The Philharmonic, Ancients, and Musical Union will be open during the period.

"W."—The third part is called by the quality of voice used by the composer; for a trio may be written for every extent of register.

"Johannis."—Mendelssohn at present. We have the pleasure of his acquaintance; but we never asked him questions as to his religious tenets

"Metaphor" has two very slight chances of success, unless he possess interest: in the latter case especially

"L. M. P." may obtain the copy of a Will from a Lawyer; the cost, of course, depending on the length.

"J. S." Worksop Mr. Lockhart is the author of "Valerius."

"M. G. A." Probably southward through Switzerland to the North of Italy, for embarkation: examine the Map.

"A. J. B."—The Sketch shall not part

"Sugar Planter," Berbice, may ascertain the desired information by application at the Government Annuity Office, 19, Old Jewry, London.

"A Foreigner" is recommended to consult a Treatise on Railways; or the article Railway, in the "Penny Cyclopædia"

"A Subscriber," Herne Hill.—Were the edges of the volume gilt, the charge for binding would not be unreasonable

"Beta" can compel the party to refund a reasonable proportion of the premium, or find another place for the apprentice.

"J. A." Camberwell.—The Portrait of the gentleman named has not appeared in our Journal.

"Timothy Tablet" is thanked

"Y. Y." is returned

"Equity" had better consult a Solicitor

"A. X."—The Parish Constables' Act of Parliament may be had at Shaws', Fetterlane

"One of our Oldest Subscribers," North Devon.—We should have avoided ourselves of the communication, if our Correspondent had given his name; but we cannot assert anything upon anonymous authority

"Inquirer, Jun."—"Esoteric" is derived from the Greek word εσωτερος—"inwardly." It is applied to anything peculiar to a clique or art; but which cannot be so well understood by the masses. Thus, the ceremonies of Freemasonry are "esoteric" so is any joke or allusion, founded upon subjects whose meaning or point, is apparent only to a certain set. The word "technical" may give a rude definition of its meaning

Ineligible.—"Happiness," by C. L. D., "Spring," by H. M.

Errata.—In the Song in our last Number, at the 8th bar of Flute Solo, for the 8th note, D, read E; at 11th bar of Song, for first two notes, D, C, read B, A; and at last bar but two, in the Bass, add B to third chord.

The Large View of the City of Dublin will, certainly, be issued to our Subscribers during the ensuing month.

 By the activity of the Express despatched to Paris for this Journal, and the co-operation of the able Engravers, MM. Best and Leloir, we are, this day, enabled to present our Readers with Illustrations of the recent Events in Paris, which have absorbed so large a share of public attention. All who are acquainted with the difficulties of the art of Engraving will be able to appreciate the amount of exertion, and the almost incredible celerity, which have been indispensable to the production of those illustrations within so short a period of the Events themselves. And, we tender our special thanks to the Parisian Artists and Engravers for their skill and promptitude on this memorable occasion.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1846.

The "ins" of public business still continues; indeed it is rather increased in complexity than otherwise. The unlucky Coercion Bill still blocks up the path of legislation; the Opposition will not pass over it, the Government will not go round it; so there it stands, uncomfortable and annoying; neither passing nor progressing, not even retrogressing which, would at all events be something positive. The most important business of the whole Empire is at a stand still, because "precedent" requires that a Bill sent down from the House of Peers should be read a first time immediately, whether bad or good; parliamentary etiquette is being strained a little too tight, and everybody begins to wonder where or when it will end. Lord Brougham is getting restless, and with his usual readiness to sneer at the House of Commons—he is such a very ancient peer—whenever he can, has begun to talk of the "utter incapacity" of the lower House, to which Henry Brougham owed all his reputation, but for which Lord Brougham expresses a contempt worthy of the Emperor Nicholas himself. Business is stopped certainly, but not from "utter incapacity" of working; men will not be "coerced" into doing things in an absurd sequence or order that has neither reason nor necessity to recommend it. Up to the introduction of this unhappy Curfew Act, the most auspicious harmony prevailed. It was as near an approach to the golden age, the saturnia regna, the millennium of politics, as we have yet seen; all was concord and agreement; the mightiest opposites were discovering how nearly they agreed, and lamenting that they had been separated so long; the Lamb of Protection—fittest emblem of the Arcadian simplicity of Agriculture—was seen lying down beside the Lion of Manufactures, which had been roaring like the voices of Furnace and Power-loom; the guileless children of Bond-street and the Carlton Club, were found laying their hands on the cockatrice eggs of the League. All was running as smoothly as a billiard ball; the dissentients were overborne and utterly overwhelmed; from both sides of the House came one voice and the strongest verification was given to the sarcasm that "when Doctors do agree their unanimity is wonderful." In fact the condition of things was too good to last; it was too perfect for such a mundane sphere as St. Stephen's; the harmony required the introduction of a discord if only for the sake of a little variety. It was according to the fitness of things that the division should be introduced by the great Leader himself; so he stepped short in the "movement" and varied the theme to Ireland and Coercion. From that moment peace departed, and concord sighed farewell. There is a natural repugnance to the question itself, and having an ungrateful task allotted to it, the House lost its inclination to work, which had shortly before amounted to an enthusiasm. Knowing what awaited them after the vacation, members prayed for the full measure of holidays; the Premier sternly refused it, and limited the period of recreation of three days of pleasure, in order to gain one of work. Of what use was his zeal? Men will not be virtuous on compulsion; industry cannot be coerced, at least that hearty kind which only can effect anything. The House met on Friday, to hear a few ineffective speeches made to so limited a number of members that the assembly could at any time during five or six hours have been "counted out." Another adjournment of the first reading so strongly insisted on was carried; but on Monday, nature, outraged by the Premier's unreasonable industry, and zeal for work and labour out of time, revenged itself. There was "no House!" Members took the holiday that Peel refused to give them; no exertions of the little less than frantic Secretary of the Treasury could whip in the mystic number. The visages of Hibernian representatives were visible through doorways, grinning at the distress of the official, and refusing to cross the threshold and be counted. Why should they help the Government out of the scrape? They were not sent there to lock the doors of a nation at sunset! So the Speaker counted and paused, and Mr. Young rushed through lobbies and libraries in search of stray members; but the fates were against him, and even the Commissioners of Pavements joined with them for his discomfiture. While one member only was wanting to complete the number, Dr. Bowring was voyaging westward from the Bank in an omnibus, and, from the state of the streets, arrived only in time to be too late! Little did the driver of that obstructed omnibus know the value of his passenger to the nation, or the consequence of being five minutes behind time, with a Legislator. The doctor has demonstrated in a Letter to the Times that but for this accident he should have been in his place, the required forty would have been made up, a House would have been formed, the Coercion Bill would have passed, and a whole week—for to that the loss of time actually amounts—would have been saved to the Prime Minister, the Parliament and the Empire. The extreme value put by Sir R. Peel on the time of the House, and his refusal to allow the usual holidays at Easter, for the sake of making quicker progress, render this loss of time the more remarkable; the obstinate determination to have the Coercion Bill read a first time, before going on with the other measures of the Government, appears every day more unaccountable.

The Post-Office has again furnished Mr. T. Duncombe with an opportunity of exposing abuses, defects, and mismanagement. He discharges the task he undertakes on these occasions with admirable skill and boldness, and certainly the answers he elicited from those who felt bound to defend the establishment were not wholly satisfactory. We do not speak of the publication of the Directory, which is a most useful work, nor do we think it a matter of complaint that the compiler should derive a profit from it. But we wish it had been more clearly made out, whether the letter carriers are compelled to collect the information for that work to serve the Government or an individual; and, in either case, to prevent profit derived from the publication, these men ought in justice to be paid something for their trouble beyond their official salary. The knowledge on their part that their labour does benefit a superior officer, by imposing on them extra labour, is calculated to cause great discontent; it would appear that the Post-Office is in a state of semi rebellion. This should at once be remedied. The other points alluded to have already received the public ear. Not a single improvement has ever been made by the Post-Office that was not forced on it by the public; it was, so to speak, beaten into mending its pace, and keeping up with the changes in conveyance and locomotion. Very much remains to be done; the fees for the early delivery of letters should be abolished; they are a direct and positive abuse. The system is not defended by the Government, and if vigorously attacked will be given up; it is only maintained as all ancient and perverted abuses are maintained, because it is old; the malpractice has continued so long that it has grown respectable. The effect of the abuse is well known to a large portion of the public, but Mr. Duncombe puts it in a very striking point of view:

> A public institution ought to be for the equal benefit of all. No man, because he paid more than another, ought to have his letters sooner. That was not the principle on which the Post-Office should be conducted. To illustrate the working of this early delivery, he would take the case of Chancery-lane, occupied chiefly by lawyers, many of whom submitted, like idiots, to the extortion which prevailed under the system. A man who resided at No 1 on the third floor paid the extortionate fee, whilst a man on the first or second floor did not submit to it. The letter-carrier in going his round passed the doors of these two, but delivered the letters to the person on the third floor, and went up Chancery-lane, delivering in the same way the letters of those only who paid the fee, and passing the doors of all others. He then came back to the bottom of Chancery-lane and commenced there with his late delivery letters to those who did not submit to the extortion.

From what fell from Mr. Cardwell we gather hope that this will be remedied; he says if the victims of this abuse "do not think it too much trouble to favour the Treasury with the particulars of the grievance under which they labour, he undertook to have it fully redressed." The course is obvious; Chancery-lane must agitate, and all other alleys, courts, and lanes where merchants and lawyers most do congregate must assist. This "ancient practice," as Mr. Cardwell calls it, will then be abolished or modified. It is such official admissions as this that give such motions as Mr. Duncombe's, great public utility.

Though the Corn-Bill and the Tariff are for the present suspended, yet speculation as to their ultimate fate is still indulged in; rumour gives to Sir R. Peel a majority of thirty in the Peers, in favour of the Corn-Bill; but when it will reach that assembly the boldest politicians dare not anticipate. On the other hand, an immediate dissolution is spoken of as not improbable.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE LOUIS PHILIPPE.
LATEST PARTICULARS.

We find, by the latest Paris papers, that, after all, there is a strong opinion that there was some political motive in the regicidal act of Lecomte.

The Débats of Wednesday says: "At twelve o'clock this day, Lecomte was conveyed in a hackney-coach from the Conciergerie to the prison of the Luxembourg. He has been interrogated by the Chancellor and the six Commissioners appointed by the Court. At five o'clock, Lecomte was brought back to the Conciergerie, the prison of the Luxembourg not being yet completed, notwithstanding the exertions of the operatives, who labour night and day. It is believed, however, that the prison will be ready for his reception to-morrow. Lecomte affects a tranquillity which his features belie; whilst, on the contrary, he appears to be intensely agitated in no small degree. The gun with which the crime was effected was likewise brought to Paris yesterday. Lecomte, in the examination which he underwent at Fontainebleau, is said to have exhibited a degree of dejection which is not in accordance with the energetic character attributed to him. It is now certain that Lecomte, a sportsman by profession, when committing the crime, did not use his own gun, which was found at all its indgings. He procured the gun which he fired on the day of the crime by means which will be revealed during the course of the trial."

The Journal de Toulouse of the 18th instant, when publishing the telegraphic despatch, dated Paris, the 17th, which announced the attempt of the 16th, subjoins to that publication the annexed article: "The following fact, which appeared at first insignificant, acquires some importance in consequence of the attempt mentioned in the foregoing telegraphic despatch. An elevated functionary of our city received three days since a letter dated Paris, the 17th of April, and signed with a fictitious name. In this letter the death of the King was announced."

The King continued to receive congratulatory addresses from the public bodies of the State, the Bishops and the clergy of the principal dioceses, the different corps of the army, &c

The following is one of the address agreed to at the meeting of British residents in Paris on Wednesday:

"May it please your Majesty,

"We, the undersigned British subjects now in Paris, beg leave to approach your Majesty with the expression of our sincere congratulations on the providential escape of your Majesty from the atrocious attempt made by a reckless assassin on your precious life. Most heartily do we unite with the people of France in recognising, in the fortunate escape of your Majesty, the continued protection of Divine Providence: and we trust that this expression of sympathy and respect, coming from British subjects, may find a favourable acceptance with your Majesty; the preservation of whose life we, in common with your loyal and devoted people, feel to be most important to the well-being of France, and to the general peace of Europe."

Address from the City of London to Louis Philippe.—On Thursday, the Court of Common Council, on the motion of Mr. Wire, agreed unanimously to present an address of congratulation to Louis Philippe, on his recent providential escape; and a similar address of the Court of Aldermen having been submitted to the Common Council, it was adopted as the address of the Corporation.

Dreadful Catastrophe in Cashel. A dreadful accident occurred on Monday, at Cashel, by which, it is supposed, a great number of persons have been killed, and many upwards of 100 bruised or maimed in a greater or less degree It appears that, about half-past six o'clock, an immense number of labourers employed by the Relief Committee assembled in the market-place to hear some person inform them of the improvement of their condition by giving up smoking, &c., when suddenly the floor gave way with a frightful crash, and all were precipitated to the ground. Forty-seven were removed to the hospital, but further particulars of the casualty have not yet been received.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Return of the Court to London. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Royal Family, and attended by the Royal suite, took their departure from Windsor on Monday afternoon, at twenty minutes past three o'clock, from the Slough station, for Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty's journey to the London terminus occupied exactly thirty-two minutes; the Queen having given special direction that the distance should not be performed in less than half an hour.

Death of Her Royal Highness Princess William of Prussia.—We regret to announce the demise of the above Princess, which took place at Berlin, on Tuesday (last week). Her Royal Highness had been in an ill state of health for some time, arising from a cold she caught last summer, from which rheumatic fever ensued The deceased Princess was the fifth daughter of the late Landgrave of Hesse Homburg, and was born on the 7th of December, 1785. On the 19th of January, 1804, she married his Royal Highness, Prince William of Prussia (uncle to the King of Prussia), by whom she has left issue, the Princes Adalbert and Waldemar of Prussia, the Princess Alexandrina married to Charles, Prince of Hesse Darmstadt, and the Princess Maria, Consort of the Crown Prince of Bavaria. Most of the members of her august family were present at the moment of her dissolution.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

BANQUET TO THE MINISTERS AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

On Wednesday the Lord Mayor gave a splendid banquet to her Majesty's Ministers, at the Mansion House.

Amongst the company were Sir Robert Peel, the Premier of England, and Lady Peel; the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl and Countess of Morley, the Earl and Countess of Jupon, the Earl and Countess Dalhousie, the Earl and Countess Jermyn, the Earl and Countess of St. Germans, Viscount and Viscountess Emlyn, Viscount Hill, Viscount and Viscountess Jocelyn, Viscount and Viscountess Mahon, Lord Howden, the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench and Lady Denman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord and Lady Kinnaird, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, Lord Somerset Gre.ville, Lord and Lady Ernest Bruce, Lord and Lady Ashley, the Lord Advocate of Scotland, the Lord Bishop of St. David's, Sir James and Lady Graham, the Hon. William and Lady Gladstone, Admiral Sir George and Lady Cockburn, Mr. Bingham Baring and Lady Harriet Baring, Sir George and Lady Clerk, Mr. Sidney Herbert, Lord Chief Justice Thesiger and Lady Tindal, Lord Baron Pollock, Vice Chancellor and Lady Shadwell, Lord and Lady Langdale, the Cursitor Baron and Mrs. Banks, Dowager Lady Abergar, the Solicitor General for Ireland, the Attorney General and Lady Thesiger, the Solicitor General and Lady Kelly, Mr. Henry and Mrs Fitzroy, Mrs. G. and Mrs Dawson, Sir Henry and Lady Goring, Miss Panton, Mr. and Mrs. Cripps, Mr John Masterman, Mr. and Mrs. Lyall, Mr. and Mrs. W. Johnson, Mr. Robert Peel, Sir W. Somerville, Lord and Lady Viscount and Lady Canning, Lord and Lady Hawarden, Aldermen Sir C. Hunter, Lucas, Sir Peter Laurie, Farebrother, Copeland, Humphery, Sir W. Magnay, Gibbs, Wood, Sir G. Carroll, Pepper, Sir Duke, Farncomb, Hughes Rees, Musgrove; Mr. and Mrs. Delane, Mr. Michell, Mr. Richard Lambert Jones, Mr. Deputy Brown, Mr. Charles Farebrother and Mrs. Farebrother, the Bishop of Calcutta, &c

After the first seven loyal toasts to the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family, the Lord Mayor rose and said that it was a high distinction which belonged to him, as chief magistrate, that he was honoured with the presence, on this occasion, of her Majesty's Ministers, and he (the speaker) was gratifying to him in the extreme, because he perfectly well knew that the high and important duties which devolved upon them as Ministers of the Crown were such as to enable these distinguished individuals to spare but a few hours from their official duties. Hence it was that their presence was the more gratifying to him. He made no allusion to politics, because he felt that that was neither the time nor the place for their discussion; and although he was aware that the conduct of the right hon. Baronet who was at the head of the Government would be approved by those who were assembled in the hall, he would not press it upon their attention. (Cheers.) He was sure they would join in the sentiment he had to propose "The Health of her Majesty's Ministers, and Long Life and Happiness to Sir Robert Peel."

The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm.

Sir Robert Peel rose and spoke as follows:—My Lord Mayor, ladies, and gentlemen, it is my duty, on my own part and that of my colleagues in the service of her Majesty, to return to you our grateful acknowledgments for the honour you have been pleased just now to confer upon us. We are deeply sensible of the value while I justly attaches to the possession of the confidence and favourable opinion of the City of London. We well know that the merchants and residents of the City of London, from their connexion with the East and Government, and from their ready access to the best intelligence —from their wealth, their high character, and their respectability, are perhaps better qualified than any other portion of her Majesty's subjects, justly to estimate the motives of public men, and to appreciate the results of their policy. (Loud applause) We are, therefore, most anxious to deserve and to possess the good opinion of this great city, and we consider it to be no sacrifice; but on the contrary, we rejoice in the opportunity of marking our respect for this great community by attending here on the summons of the chief magistrate of the City of London. (Great applause.) The Lord Mayor (I justly observe), that this is not the place nor occasion upon which to introduce any controverted topics of political policy; but I trust I may, without exaggeration or arrogance, state that it has been the earnest desire of her Majesty's servants, during the period they have been honoured with her Majesty's confidence, to promote to the utmost of their power the comfort, welfare, happiness, and prosperity of all classes of her Majesty's subjects. (Great applause.) I trust that I may, without arrogance or exaggeration, state that during the period we have held power the lustre of the British arms has not been tarnished —that peace at home has been preserved without any harsh exercise of authority or any undue enforcement of the law, and that peace abroad has been maintained without the sacrifice of any British interest, and without the compromise of the national honour. (Great applause.) These things we have done, and I trust they have entitled us to the approbation of the citizens of London. (Great applause.) Whatever may be the differences of opinion which may prevail in this room on the measure of public policy adopted by the Government, there is one point upon which I am sure we shall all be unanimous. We all desire to mark our respect to the City of London and its Chief Magistrate, and I am sure you will all receive with satisfaction and drink with enthusiasm the toast which I shall now propose, that of "The Health of the Lord Mayor and Prosperity to the City of London." (Loud applause.)

The Lord Mayor returned thanks for the high and distinguished honour conferred upon him by the Prime Minister of the Crown, and declared his determination to maintain and preserve the rights and privileges of his fellow citizens. His lordship proposed as the next toast, "The House of Lords," and coupled with it, "The Health of his Grace the Duke of Cleveland."

The Duke of Cleveland, in returning thanks, said he was most unexpectedly called upon to answer for himself and the branch of the Legislature of which he was a member. He felt duly sensible of the honour conferred upon that body, and felt confident that they, not an unimportant branch of the constitution, had rendered already essential services to the country. Similar occasions for such services might arise; and he would say that, while the House of Lords would continue to be the protectors and upholders of the Monarchy, they would still evince, as they ever had, the strongest sympathy for the best interests of the people. The noble Duke concluded by proposing, as the next toast, "The Health of the Lady Mayoress" (Applause.)

The Lord Mayor returned thanks; and the Lady Mayoress, accompanied by the rest of the ladies, retired to the drawing-room, where a rich musical treat was prepared for their entertainment.

The Lord Mayor then proposed "The Health of Sir James Graham and the House of Commons;" a toast which was received and drunk with all the honours

Sir J. Graham said, that in the presence of so many members of the House of Commons, who, by the exercise of their talents and their ability, were so much more qualified to return thanks than himself, he was painfully conscious of his own inability to address the assembly on behalf of the great and powerful body to whom the compliment by the Lord Mayor had just been paid. In addition to the office he had the honour to fill, he must admit the support which he had at all times received from the City authorities in his endeavours to maintain the public credit, and it was with great satisfaction that he knew that in this great metropolis, containing nearly two millions of population, life and property were more secure than in any other capital or remote town in the civilised world. This was the uniform answer which her Majesty's servants had received from those who from time to time filled the exalted station which the Lord Mayor now so worthily held. With regard to the House of Commons, composed as were the representatives at present, of so many parties, there must be serious differences of opinion, but he was quite sure, that however they might differ as to the mode, all were animated by feelings of loyalty to the Sovereign, and of deep attachment to the interests of the country, and that their efforts were directed to the single object of promoting, according to the best of their judgment, the extension of commerce, and the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the whole community. On behalf of that body and himself, he begged to return their sincere thanks for the honour conferred on them. (Applause.)

Sir Robert Peel then rose, and addressed the company in the following terms: —The Lord Mayor has been good enough to permit me to give a toast. That toast is not one which, I believe, has been placed in the list prepared by the Lord Mayor, and, therefore, in proposing it. I am departing most certainly from the established usage which prevails on these festive occasions. But I feel, notwithstanding, the utmost confidence that it is a toast which will be received by you with the utmost satisfaction and enthusiasm. I beg to propose to you "The Health of the King of the French." (Loud cheers.) I have reason to believe that under any circumstances that toast would be acceptable to your feelings. (Hear, hear.) It would be acceptable to your feelings on account of the high personal character of the King of the French on account of the great relations which have so long subsisted between this country and France, and the maintenance of which uninterrupted is of such importance to the peace and welfare of Europe, and it must be peculiarly acceptable to the City of London on account of the manner in which the French Monarch had graciously received the representatives of this important city, and expressed his cordial satisfaction in receiving from them a tribute of their esteem and respect. (Hear, hear.) There is, therefore, at this moment which I am sure will make you more than ordinarily anxious to join in this toast (Loud applause.) It is important that we should show that the cry of indignation raised at the base, cowardly, and infamous attempt at assassination should be re-echoed on the banks of the Thames. (Loud cheers.) It has pleased Almighty God to frustrate the repeated attempts which have been made to assassinate the Sovereign, and preserve his life from those cowardly and base attempts. They have given the King of the French an opportunity of exhibiting that degree of personal courage, fortitude, and heroism which he possesses, but which he is deserving, by his high position, from showing in the field in the command of his armies, and to a gallant people like those of France — a people eminent for their bravery I can conceive nothing more likely to recommend the Sovereign to their affection and attachment than these signal instances of courage, which that illustrious personage has always displayed under the most trying circumstances under which he has been placed. (Cheers.) I am confident it will be most agreeable to every Englishman to mark his indignation against these detestable crimes, and to offer their sympathies to that illustrious lady, the Queen of the French, who has shared the Sovereignty of England with the King of the French, who by her high character and virtues, has thrown a lustre upon the exalted position which she holds. (Cheers.) It will be equally agreeable to mark your sympathies at the occasion on which the noble Duchess of the King of the French — noble not only by birth, but noble from the fact "that all the sons are brave, and all the daughters virtuous." (Renewed cheers.) I am confident that, by drinking this toast with the utmost honour in our power, we may express that it may long please Almighty God to protect the life of that Sovereign for the benefit of his own country and the advantage of the world; and that, by the continuance of that life, the bonds of peace may be cemented between this country and France, as that, while it endures, is the best guarantee afforded for continued tranquillity throughout the world, for the advancement of civilization, and for the promotion of the social interests of all classes of the great community. I propose "Health and long Life to the King of the French." (Loud cheers, enthusiastically reiterated.)

His toasts which followed in succession from the chair were those of "The Judges" (responded to by Chief Justice Tindal) "The Bar" (acknowledged by the Attorney-General)—"The Aldermen"—"The Recorder"—and "The Sheriffs." A number of strangers returned to join the ladies in the drawing-room. The distinguished visitors to the Lord and Lady Mayoress did not separate until a late hour.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FATAL ACCIDENTS ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

On Monday, between twelve and one o'clock, an elderly female, named Jane Bass, was killed at the Witham station. On Tuesday morning the body of Mrs. Cobb, one of the Coroners for Essex, and from the evidence it appears that the poor creature's husband, who was also present, and their son, were in a carriage on the return home, instead of taking the footpath which passes under the line, and which the Company had so formed for better security, to avoid crossing it on a level, she crawled up a slight embankment and proceeded to pass over the rails. At this moment, the eleven o'clock train from London was coming up, and the engineer had shut off the steam to stop at the station. On perceiving the deceased on the line, he immediately sounded the whistle, but seemed, however, not to take any notice of the approaching train, and, in a few moments, the buffer of the engine caught her on the chest, and, with great force, dashed her on the up line. On the train being stopped, the guards assisted to get her assistance, and found that her quite dead The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidents. death," considering that not the slightest blame could be attributed to the officials of the Company.

On Tuesday morning, a gentleman, named Sturges, died at Chelmsford from the effects of a severe injury which he received by a cattle train on Sunday night at the station of that town. He was detaching the coupling of the engine from the train, in order to take some coals. He had not the slightest suspicion on leaving did not take the usual precaution of passing over or under the buffers, but went in front, or between them, and the engine slightly backing, the engineer thinking it necessary to proceed to the watering, the poor fellow was caught between the buffers and severely injured internally. He was removed home in the greatest suffering, and it is a matter of much surprise how he could have survived so long

An inquest was held on Tuesday evening, at Guy's Hospital, on the body of Roger William Gray, aged 29, an engine driver on the Cambridge line of the Eastern Counties Railway. From this Coroner's inquest, which was held on Wednesday (last week) he was on an engine with the deceased, on the line near Broxbourne, taking a passenger train down to Cambridge. They had stopped at Broxbourne, and were at the full speed of about the middle of the train, when he looked back for the purpose of counting the number of carriages. In doing so, he overbalanced himself and fell, his head striking against a post on the line. Witness went to his assistance after he had stopped the engine, and took him to a shed, where he was attended by a medical man. The same day he was brought to the hospital. The deceased died on Sunday morning last, from serious injury to the brain, the skull being extensively fractured. Verdict, "Accidental Death."

CURIOUS SUICIDE OF A BOY.—On Tuesday an inquest was held at the Lord Nelson, Nicoll's-row, Church-street, Shoreditch, on the body of William Thomas Diggins, a boy, aged nine years, who committed suicide, by hanging himself. The deceased was the son of a poor woman, residing in Vincent-street, Shoreditch, and, some time since, fell from a ladder, and, in his descent, struck his head against a wall. He was ill for several weeks afterwards, and complained very much of pains in his head. On Sunday morning he went out to play, as he said, but, shortly afterwards, his mother heard some one call out, "Here's your son hanging on the stairs;" and on going to the spot, she found her child suspended to the balusters by a piece of cord, which he had made fast round his neck. The jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased committed suicide while labouring under temporary insanity."

SUDDEN DEATHS.—On Wednesday, Mr. W. Baker held two inquests on the bodies of persons who had died suddenly. The first was held at the Cooper's Arms, High street, Poplar, on the body of Charles Pamplett, aged 37. The deceased was a shipkeeper aboard the Adelaide, lying in the East India Dock. On Tuesday night last, he entered the cabin in apparently good health, and whilst engaged in his berth, he dropped to the floor insensible. Mr. Baillie, a surgeon, was called in, but life was quite extinct. His death was attributable to an attack of apoplexy. The second inquest was held at the Black Horse, Kingsland-road, on the body of Charles Webb, aged 68. The deceased was an inmate of the Shoreditch workhouse. On Friday (last week) he dined with his son, who resided in Christopher-square, Moorfields, and whilst carving his dinner his hands suddenly dropped by his side, and he fell backwards in his chair a corpse Mr. Davis, a surgeon, who was called in, said he had died of apoplexy. In each case a verdict of "Natural death" was recorded.—On Wednesday evening an inquest was taken at the Ship, Jones'-end, Borough, on the body of Mr. James Langley, aged 39, lately filling the situation of confidential clerk in the firm of Messrs. Teasdales, Symes, and Co., solicitors, Fenchurch-street. About nine o'clock on the previous morning, the deceased entered a Camberwell omnibus at the Elephant and Castle. When the vehicle reached Stones'-end, deceased was suddenly taken ill. He was immediately attended by Mr. Alcock, shopkeeper, Coal Harbour-lane, who stopped the omnibus, when he was conveyed to the surgery of Mr. Olding, where he died in a few minutes. The brother of the deceased was passing at the time, and identified him as he was being conveyed in. Deceased had been attached to the above firm from his boyhood. Verdict, "Visitation of God."

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Advices have reached us from the Cape of Good Hope to the end of February. The excitement that had arisen along the frontier from apprehensions of an inroad by the Caffres was subsiding, the latter being perfectly satisfied with the resolution of the Governor not to proceed with the erection of the proposed fort beyond the colonial boundary.

The Birmingham Peace Association have just forwarded an address to the citizens of New York, signed by their chairman, Joseph Sturge, and earnestly remonstrating with them on the subject of the present dispute about Oregon, and urging the friends of peace in that city to use all their influence to prevent war

The Frankfort Gazette des Postes of the 17th states that all Eastern Gallicia is in commotion. The gentry had excited the peasantry not to lay down their arms until Government had accorded their rights, and Good Friday was fixed for a general rising. The authorities of the districts of Rochnia, Kressor Tarnow, Sandec, and Jaslo had all been put on their guard. Two regiments of infantry had been marched to Tarnow, and the town put under martial law. The rebel Saolak had several thousand peasants under his orders, of whom 300 had firearms. At present he was near Sanok, and two regiments were marching against him. Upwards of 20,000 troops had entered Gallicia. The German inhabitants were in great alarm. At Lemberg all was tranquil.

It is stated in the Cologne Gazette, on the authority of a letter from Pesth, in Hungary, that the banker Stamps. of Vienna, has recently purchased a large Hungarian estate at the price of 1,800,000 florins. This acquisition has been made, it is remarked, for account of the King of the Low Countries, who has conceived the idea of employing it in the formation of a colony of about 2000 German families, in order at once to double the value of the property.

A Correspondent at Warsaw writes to the 5th inst. to the Universal German Gazette:—"We are informed that the negociations between the Governments of St. Petersburg and Rome are suspended for the moment. This is more than probable, as the Roman clergy are strongly implicated in the Polish conspiracy, and the Russian Government wishes to ascertain the real facts before it makes any concessions in favour of the Court of Rome."

We learn by a letter from Malta that two English and a Neapolitan engineer have obtained the grant of the railroad from Naples to Barletta, and the continuation from Belinde to Otranto, on depositing 30,000 ducats, as caution money. The works are to be begun immediately, and carried on with all possible expedition. The commerce between Illyria, Dalmatia, and Istria will be greatly benefited by it, and the journey from Naples to Trieste may be made in from fifty to fifty-four hours. A new treaty of commerce and navigation between the Neapolitan and Austrian States is said to be under consideration

A letter from Lemberg, in Gallicia, of the 7th, states that the greater portion of the bands of peasants who continued under arms had been dispersed, but that assassination were daily taking place. Count Gudenau had been attacked on the previous day by a body of the peasantry, and murdered. In the town of Styria a peasant, who had taken a very active part in attacking the chateaux of the Nobles, had died of his wounds, and was interred with extraordinary pomp. The public authorities, both civil and military, attended, and military honours were given—a circumstance so, unusual and improper, that it disgusted, not only the Poles, but the Germans, and especially the officers of the army.

Our letters from Italy state that the agitation in Lombardy increases. Field-Marshal-General Radetzky has demanded more troops. Some of the Italian functionaries at Milan have been found dead in the streets, shot by assassins

The Post Ampt Gazette under date of Posen, April 18, states that though order has been to all, outward appearance restored, there still reigned a kind of dull feeling of uneasiness. Arrests had been commenced at Rogasen, where several of the public functionaries had been insulted. A sentinel on duty had met with some indignity, and had discharged his musket at the people, who had taken to flight. One was wounded, but the military authorities had published a notice cautioning the inhabitants to refrain from such conduct for fear of more fatal consequences.

A letter from Constantinople, dated April 7, says:—"The late modification of the Corn-laws has caused some speculation Lere in maize for your market. It must cost 30s. a quarter, freight and sale charges included. When the good people of England get accustomed to this grain they will find out that not only does it make capital bread, but puddings and tea cakes fit for Kings to eat."

By Athens journals to the 9th inst., it appears that there was still much excitement in the Chamber of Representatives. In the sitting of the 7th, M. Daras, the deputy for Syra, informed the President that he had just been struck in the Chamber itself by General Grivas. He said that the latter general intended only to inflict a little corporal discipline upon M. Daras, but that he had interfered and prevented any blows being given. M. Daras wished to make a speech on this occasion, but the President refused, and the latter could not allow him to do so until the affair should have been regularly inquired into. Several of the deputies complained of this conduct of the President as partial, and demanded that M. Daras should be heard. A great confusion ensued, in the midst of which the President broke up the sitting.

A letter from St. Petersburgh, of March 25, states that a deputation of the nobility of Livonia has been summoned to that city to draw up a new act of regulations between the nobles and peasants of Livonia. Some high functionaries have been joined to them to direct their labours

A solemn mass was celebrated on Monday in the church of St. Jacques, Brussels, by order of the Queen of the Belgians, in thanksgiving to God for the miraculous preservation of her Royal father, the King of the French. The Queen, and all the military and civil authorities, and the majority of the ambassadors at this court, including M. Pecci, the Pope's nuncio, were present.

According to letters from Berlin the question of a Constitution for Prussia was still under discussion in the Council of Ministers; but the accounts given of the progress of the question are very contradictory. A Frankfort journal publishes a letter from Berlin, stating that at the last conference 14 Ministers and the Prince of Prussia were present, and that the Prince and six of the Ministers voted against the project, whilst eight Ministers voted for it, giving a majority of one in favour of a constitutional system.

The town of Ostend has voted the sum of 2500 francs as a prize for the regatta which will shortly take place there. English, Belgian, and other yachts will compete for it

The Universal German Gazette states, on the authority of letters from Riga, that the cholera has just penetrated into Russia from Persia, and has advanced as far as Cassan and Orenburg.

The Echo de l'Orient, of Smyrna, states that the accounts from Syria continue to be satisfactory. The whole of the Druses have submitted, and, to all appearance, this tranquillity is becoming more and more confirmed every day. The two Turkish commissioners, Chekib Effendi and Emin Pacha, were still at Beyrout, and were likely to remain there for some time. The question of the mixed districts had, however, not been definitively settled.

Baron A. de Humboldt has just been nominated Doctor in Philosophy by the University of Erlangen (Bavaria). This is the 19th honour of the same kind which this savant, called by W. Schlegel, "the Aristotle of the Sciences," has received from various universities. The number of decorations which have been presented to him by Sovereigns is even still greater.

The Debats Français, which was published at Smyrna, and the articles in which were frequently so very hostile to England, has ceased to appear. The ex-editor, M. Giroux, is on his way to France.

A rather ridiculous riot took place at Aix-la-Chapelle on Easter Sunday. According to very ancient usage, the bakers have presented to their customers yearly on this festival a Paschal cake, but this year 113 of them published a joint notice that they would not continue to observe it. The workmen of the manufactories, disappointed of their expected treat, assembled before the houses of the coalition-bakers, shouting our Paschal cake! and at length proceeded to break windows, and commit other acts of violence. The police endeavoured to disperse the mob, but they being too weak, it became necessary to call out the troops. Upon this the multitude dispersed, without its having been necessary to resort to violent means.

The Moniteur publishes despatches from Algeria of the 13th inst. On the 6th, General Jossouf, after a force march of 14 hours, overtook a large column of Ouled Nayi emigrants, and captured an immense booty. The General described the demonstration of the tribes in the Desert of Titery as very great, because, although continually submitting to the French, they resume the offensive at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Courrier de Smyrne states, that in consequence of the success which has attended the cultivation of the sugar cane in Egypt, Ibrahim Pacha, the system adopted in France, Mehemet Ali has determined to establish two refineries, and that some workmen who had been employed in erecting one at Nantes, have been engaged by the Pacha for the same purpose, and are on their way to Egypt.

The Courrier Francais asserts that General Narvaez is the object at Bayonne of a special surveillance. It is said that he has in vain demanded from the Ministry the authorization to proceed to Paris, and it is added that the Duchess of Valencia, who has joined him at Bayonne, will speedily return to Paris, to repeat the solicitation for the permission which has been refused her husband.

THE LATE EARL OF ERROLL.—The remains of the late Earl will be removed on Monday next, from Portman-square, to Wimbledon, Surrey, there to be interred. The Queen Dowager visited the noble Earl's afflicted family on Wednesday.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The season has arrived wherein nature and art seem to contend in boon rivalry as to which shall lavish the greatest amount of munificence upon life. The courtier now takes his fill of pride, pomp, and circumstance—for spring is to him the season par excellence: for the lover of rural sounds and rural sights, the woods are harmonious with thousands of natural orchestras the fields gorgeous in array—such as the cunning of man's hand could never contrive.

> Take but the humblest lily of the field,
> And, if our pride will to our reason yield,
> It must by sure comparison be shown,
> That on the regal seat great Solomon,
> Arrayed in all his robes and types of power,
> Shines with less glory than the simple flower,

While, for the lover of manly sports and exercises, there is a banquet spread, so rich and various, that the till of care threatens to cloy its appetite, even before he can settle himself to the feast. No year, since the instinct of sporting developed itself into a system in this country, were its appliances over so prodigally provided as in that upon which we have entered. Local societies, for promoting the popular pastimes, are everywhere springing up; for—we write it with satisfaction—the spirit of asceticism is fast subsiding in districts where once it was despotic; and the high-class sports, such as racing and yachting, have assumed a national importance, not inferior to any of our social institutions.

Yacht sailing will rescue the navy of Great Britain from a shame that never ought to have attached to it: surely the best seamen in the world deserved the best ships. But the best craft in our fleets, it is notorious, are the vessels Jack won from the Frenchman. The cause of this anomaly is one so plain that it is only wonderful how those supposed to be earned in such lore could venture to act as if they had not read it. All improvements in naval architecture submitted to the French Minister of Marine, he is bound on certain conditions to grant the trial of; it was not until after years of persevering effort, and upon the understanding that he should be at all the cost, that Mr. Porter could induce the Admiralty to allow captains of men-of-war to seat the merits of his anchors. Lord Belfast built the Waterwitch, and the English Government bought her, that we might have one barky that could sail; and now the same nobleman has another on the stocks—with a similar view, it is said! Mr. White, of Cowes, is able to do for the British Navy more than a Board of never so many Lords of the Admiralty, with unlimited resources at their command! To the sport of Yachting we shall, probably, be indebted for vessels of war fitted to sail with the navy of other nations.

The turf, more popular as a pastime than ever it was, is now likely to divide with its rival the honours of social service. So long as racing was conducted upon the principles which first distinguished it, much good was done to our rural statistics. When it became notorious that only the horses "meant" by the ring could win, the spirit of the breeder began to languish and decay. The Jockey Club has come to the rescue; and though they have certainly not done enough, it is a thing to be thankful for that they have done so much as they have. The disclosures made during the October Meetings of 1844 at Newmarket, and subsequently at their place and in London, in the cases of Sam Rogers, William Day, John Day, jun, and Messrs. Stebbings, Bloodsworth, Burrett, Braham, and Crumpton, prove that a system was (and no doubt is) in existence on our turf, by which robbery and chicane made the fortunes of a class of men tolerated, nay, indeed, patronised, by the racing circles.

When more stringent rules are established to frustrate the machinations of sharp practitioners—when laws are enacted, not only to banish defaulters from our racecourses, but all who can be shown to have acted as commissioners for them—when, in short, racing shall be governed by a code to be interpreted in the spirit of honour, and not by the letter of special pleading—then the turf will be a sport beneficial to English rural interests, and worthy the countenance of English gentlemen. Racing will never be in a legitimate state until the horse is understood to be its chief agent—and not merely the Leg.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—A great anxiety to back Rest Rower had the effect of springing him to 11 to 1 for the Chester Cup, and to make him quite as good a favourite as Sweetmeat: the Weatherbie not mentioned, and the general betting flat and unimportant. The Derby transactions were not by any means extensive, but they had the effect of improving the positions of Tom Tulloch, Spithead, Tibthorpe, and Fancy Boy: the favourite was not backed. The following were the prices:—

SOMERSETSHIRE STAKES.
3 to 1 agst Intrepid — 7 to 1 agst Giantess
7 to 2 — Lord Ralston (t) — 8 to 1 — Queen of Tyne
LANSDOWNE STAKES.—2 to 1 on Burlewque

CHESTER CUP.

11 to 1 agst Sweetmeat (taken 6 to 1)	30 to 1 agst Miss Burns		30 to 1 agst Pedometer (t)
11 to 1 — Rest Rower	30 to 1 — Clumsy		35 to 1 — Inheritress
20 to 1 — Corranna	30 to 1 — Mermaid		40 to 1 — Clown Cona.
	30 to 1 — Wyndham		50 to 1 — Glossy

2000 GUINEA STAKES. 6 to 4 agst Tom Tulloch.

DERBY

9 to 2 agst Sfog	22 to 1 agst The Traverser		35 to 1 agst Ingo
7 to 1 — Ingle	25 to 1 — Splendorum		40 to 1 — Sir Lawrence
20 to 1 — Brocardo (taken, afterwards offered	27 to 1 — Tibthorpe (t)		40 to 1 — Tagnet
	27 to 1 — Fancy Boy (t)
	30 to 1 — Jacob
12 to 1 agst Queen Anne	20 to 1 agst Cocker		125 to 1 agst Astonishment

THURSDAY.—A very large attendance, but more talk than betting. All that was used was in the way of introducing what will appear in two or three of the betting rags, and chiefly to Tom Tulloch, who has been backed for upwards of twelve hundred pounds in the course of the week, and in several bets has been taken at even against Sfog. Spithead and Tibthorpe are also advancing in favour, and a few fresh outsiders are adding a trifle to the field money—not before they were wanted, for a variety, the book-makers on this race are not likely to get back their "scrip" money.

CHESTER CUP.

7 to 1 agst Rosebiche's lot (t)	30 to 1 agst Miss Burns		30 t8 1 agst Corranna
11 to 1 — Sweetmeat (t)	30 to 1 — Vitella		33 to 1 — Magnet
13 to 1 — Rest Rower	35 to 1 — Pedometer		40 to 1 — Sir Lawrence
15 to 1 — Weatherbit	35 to 1 — Inheritress (t)		50 to 1 — Glossy
20 to 1 — Polish	38 to 1 — Clumsy		50 to 1 — Roderick

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES

6 to 5 agst Tom Tulloch (t)	7 to 1 agst Tibthorpe (t)
7 to 1 — Ingo	1000 to 50 King's Lynn (owner to ride) (t)

DERBY

9 to 2 agst Sfog	25 to 1 agst Ingle Boy		1000 to 20 agst Draco
5 to 1 — Tom Tulloch (t)	30 to 1 — Iago		1000 to 15 — Frenzier (t)
20 to 1 — Spithead	33 to 1 — Phœnicians		1000 to 15 — Maid of Hampton colt (t)
25 to 1 — Tibthorpe	40 to 1 — Mulleton
25 to 1 — Brocardo	40 to 1 — Crown Prince

BATH RACES. TUESDAY.

The Landdowne Trial Stakes of 15 sovs each, with 50 added.

Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque	..	..	(Crouch) 1
Mr. Wall's The Crown Prince	..	..	(Wakefield) 2

The Weston Stakes of 15 sovs each, with 25 added.

Lord G. Bentinck's Glenlili	..	..	(Nat) 1
Lord Caledon's f by Simoon, out of Pergama	..	..	(Marlow) 2

The Somersetshire Stakes of 25 sovs each, with 100 added. Two miles and a distance.

Mr Cuthbert's Queen of Tyne	..	..	(Nat) 1
Mr. O'Brien's Lord Saltoun	..	..	(Frances) 2

WEDNESDAY.

The Prodnce Stakes of 10 sovs each. walked over.

Mr. J. Sadler's f. by Venison, out of Temper

The Dyrham Park Stakes of 15 sovs each, with 100 added

Mr. Godwin's Dexterous, 3 b.	..	..	(Crouch) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Blackbird	..	..	(Nat) 2

The Bath Handicap, of 20 sovs each, with 20 added.

Mr. Herbert's c by Venison, out of Pet, 3 yrs, 6st 10lb	..	..	(J. Sharpe) 1
M. G. Dumbie's Roan-the-Boad, 3 yrs, 8st 7lb	..	..	2

The City Cup of 100 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Mr. Wall's The Crown Prince, 3 yrs, 6st 6lb	..	..	(J. Sharpe) 1
Mr. A. Johnstone's Brother to Sir Henry, 3 yrs, 6st 6lb	..	..	2

RAILWAYS.—The Ashton Branch, connected with the Manchester and Leeds Railway, was opened to the public on Monday last.—The 1st of June is now named as the day on which, in all probability, the Brighton and Chichester line will be opened in its whole extent. The works are proceeding very rapidly, and the labourers being employed on the Arun at Litchampton has been in operation for some time.—The proceedings, with a view to the "winding-up" of Railways, continue On Monday, a meeting of the shareholders and scripholders, holding the regular stamp, in the Direct London and Manchester Companies, was held at the London Tavern. It was convened by Mr Pocock, an original subscriber in both companies. A noisy and most unseemly discussion, or rather squabble, during which seldom fewer than ten or twelve persons were speaking at the same moment, took place. A formal resolution, calling upon the directors to wind up the affairs of the companies, and protesting against any further expenditure of the deposits, was at length carried.

DEATH OF SIR WILLIAM BOOTHBY.—Sir William Boothby, Receiver General of Customs, died on Tuesday morning. He was the husband of Mrs. Nisbett, the popular actress, who survives her as a widow

DEATH OF MR. TEGG, THE PUBLISHER.—We have to record the decease of Mr. Thomas Tegg, the well-known publisher, who died on Thursday last, in the 70th year of his age, at his residence in Cheapside. Mr. Tegg, for many years, kept a small bookselling booth opposite to St. Paul's, and there, by cutting down accumulated considerable property. He next removed to No. 73, in Cheapside, where he began with a handsome stock from the premises of Messrs. Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, and Brown. Here Mr. Tegg greatly extended his business, and became a publisher on a large scale; reprinting many costly standard works at prices suitable to the purses of the million, and giving work to literature and authors. By the republication of Dr. Adam Clarke's edition of the Bible, Mr. Tegg is understood to have cleared a large sum; as well as by publishing many books of merit for young persons. This, by printing, and by purchasing largely from other publishers, Mr. Tegg must have gathered a very extensive stock; and have died wealthy. He was, some years since, nominated Sheriff of London and Middlesex; but paid the fine of £400 to be excused from serving the office; which sum, by the consent of the Corporation, has been appropriated towards establishing an exhibition at one of the Universities, to be enjoyed by students who have been pupils in the City of London School.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE KING OF THE FRENCH.

LECOMTE SHOOTING AT KING LOUIS PHILIPPE.

In great part of our impression last week we gave a brief account of an attempt made by a man named Lecomte to shoot Louis Philippe on the previous Thursday, at Fontainebleau. Our announcement was translated from the Journal des Débats of Friday, which was received last Saturday morning by express. We now give a detailed account of the event. On Thursday afternoon (last week), says the Débats, the Royal family had taken a drive at Fontainebleau after a boar hunt which lasted until near five o'clock. The King, Queen, Madame Adelaide, the Prince and Princess of Salerno, and the Duchess of Nemours, were in a char-à-banc. The Duke de Nemours and the Prince de Joinville were on horseback. M. de Montalivet, who accompanied the King, was seated by his Majesty on the first bench of the carriage, which was not attended by any escort. Some officers of the 1st Regiment of Hussars, who had been at the hunt, galloped near the carriage doors, with Captain Brahault, the King's orderly officer. From the moment of the King's departure for his drive, an individual whose head was covered with a handkerchief was concealed behind a wall in the private park holding in his hand a gun levelled at the Royal equipage, but the attempt was adjourned until the return of the Royal party, because, according to the supposition of that man, the King would be better placed to receive the shot at about six yards from the mouth of the gun. The individual thus posted like a poacher who is waiting his prey was, as may have been anticipated, the person named Lecomte.

"Lecomte is 48 years of age; he was born at Beaumont (Côte d'Or); he is a vindictive and violent man, ill conducted, of limited intellect, and of a detestable reputation. He is unmarried, and at one time resided in the Rue du Colysee, in Paris.

"Lecomte is said to have served, before the year 1830, in the Royal Guard, with the rank of non-commissioned officer, during the expedition to Spain, and he subsequently made the campaign of the Morea. He received in the first of the two campaigns the Cross of the Legion of Honour. Having left the service, he entered as wood-ranger in the household of the Duke of Orleans. It was after 1830 that he was appointed chief guard of the Royal domain at Fontainebleau, after having passed in succession through all the inferior ranks. During the several periods he every year accompanied the King in his drives at Fontainebleau. Lecomte was treated with the greatest indulgence, inasmuch as he had always ill-discharged his duties. About eighteen months since, he resigned his situation in a letter filled with the most insolent expressions. A thousand efforts were made to induce him to retract and to use becoming language. But he was obstinate and persisted in his resolution. He was offered half-pay, although he had no right to any. He then formed the strange idea of demanding the value of his half-pay in money. This was refused. From this cause Lecomte conceived a violent hatred against his former masters, and in particular against M. De Salvhune, Conservator of the Crown Forests, whom he is said to have threatened with his vengeance. After having carefully concealed his mode of life during three months, he reappeared on the 16th of April in the park of Fontainebleau, armed with a regicide gun. Lecomte enjoys the reputation of being one of the best shots in the Department of the Seine and Marne, and it is said that he could strike a fawn at the distance of 150 yards.

We left him ensconced behind a wall to wait the return of the Royal family. The approach of the Royal carriages was heard. The King's char-à-banc was perceived coming out of the small park of Avon and entering the private park called the Pheasants' Preserve. The king was seated on the first bench, having the Count de Montalivet at his left. The Queen was seated beside the Princess of Salerno, on the second bench; Madame Adelaide and the Duchess of Nemours on the third; and the Prince of Salerno, the Queen's brother, on the fourth. The carriage, drawn by six horses, preceded by an outrider, passed close to the wall of the small park at a brisk trot. The assassin was at his post, mounted on a heap of fagots, his double-barrelled gun levelled skilfully at a height calculated to kill, and resting on the wall. The Royal equipage approached, but in place of finding himself on a level with the King's head, as Lecomte had expected, he met that of Count Montalivet whom he perfectly well knew. He was then obliged to make a rapid but incomplete movement, and to change the direction of the gun. The trigger was drawn—the shot was fired, at about 12 yards' distance, and the charge, composed of balls of musket size, cut the fringe of the char-à-banc above the head of his Majesty. The wadding of the gun fell on the Queen's knees.

A second shot was fired in the same direction. The King exclaimed, "It is nothing.—It is the conclusion of the shooting party!" and added, to the postilions "Well, go on to the château." When the report was heard, the little Prince de Wurtemberg exclaimed, "that's a salute for good papa." The carriages then continued their course. At the noise of the two shots, one of the grooms, named Millet, who followed the King's carriage, approached the wall, jumped on his saddle, crossed the wall, and pursued the assassin. "I will capture you living, or lose my life," exclaimed he. Lecomte turned round, and endeavoured to defend himself. He was of prodigious strength, and Millet, notwithstanding his courage, incurred much danger, but he was quickly assisted by the officers of hussars who had followed the King, and who had galloped round the wall, as well as by M. de Labadie and M. de Brahault, orderly officers of his Majesty. The assassin surrendered and confessed his crime, expressing regret that he had not accomplished his object. Lecomte is a man of lofty stature, dark complexion, with a habit of staring, and a countenance expressive of strong passions. He wears mustachios and an imperial. "I was too hasty," said he, with an expression of bitter sarcasm. He wore a blouse as a disguise, and covered his face with a handkerchief, but he was otherwise neatly attired. His gun was an excellent weapon and of considerable value. Lecomte was conducted to the town prison in the midst of an immense multitude, and it was with difficulty his guards could protect his life from the furious crowd, who, from imprecations, were proceeding to violence. The officers of the hussars finally succeeded in pressing through the multitude, and delivered him up to the keeper of the prison. The King's Attorney-General and the examining magistrate soon after arrived, and Lecomte, during an interrogatory which lasted two hours, confessed that he had come to Fontainebleau well determined to kill the King. During the evening the entire town was brilliantly illuminated. Joy succeeded to indignation. Providence preserved the King, and it was a complete festival at Fontainebleau in consequence.

The news of the attempt against the King was known in Paris at 11 o'clock on the same night. The Minister of the Interior was at a party at the British Ambassador's. He immediately apprised the Keeper of the Seals, and the Attorney-General, who proceeded at midnight for the Royal residence. The King, during the afternoon, wrote several letters—one to Marshal Soult, the President of the Council; one to the Minister of the Interior; and one to the Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Queen despatched an express to her daughters. Their Royal Highnesses proceeded to Fontainebleau the following morning. The Duchess of Orleans, the Princess de Joinville, the Duchess d'Aumale, and the Duchess of Saxe Coburg, travelled in the same carriage. A Te Deum was sung in the chapel of the Castle. The entire Royal family assisted at it. When Count d'Aphony, the Austrian Ambassador, who was about to proceed to Vienna, heard of the attempt, he immediately gave counter orders, and adjourned his departure. Lord Palmerston immediately addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs a letter for his Majesty.

The Peers and Deputies crowded to their respective chambers, where the news of Lecomte's crime became the object of general indignation.

The account of the attempt produced a most painful sensation in the Chamber of Deputies, on Friday. The speech of the President, in announcing it, was hailed with loud cheers and cries of "Vive le Roi!"

The King and Royal Family returned to Paris at one o'clock, on Saturday, and shortly afterwards the members of both Chambers repaired to the Tuileries, to congratulate his Majesty on his providential escape. About the same time, the Second Legion of the National Guard of Paris, which had been convoked on the Place Vendome, to receive its officers in presence of the Prefect of the Seine, dévouchet in the Carrousel to the number of about 4000, and a deputation of its officers was preparing to proceed to the Palace, when the King himself descended into the court, holding the Count de Paris by the hand, and accompanied by the Dukes de Nemours and Montpensier, the Prince de Joinville, and all the Ministers. His Majesty passed before the lines of the Legion, and afterwards, taking his station in front of the central pavilion, the National Guards filed before him, and saluted him with the most enthusiastic cries of "Vive le Roi!" The King appeared in excellent health and spirits. The Queen and Princesses of the Royal Family witnessed the review from the balcony.

The following are the addresses of the two Chambers to the King, and his Majesty's answer:

The Duke Pasquier, Chancellor of France, in presenting the Peers, said:—"Sire,—I come here not to make a speech to the King, but to present the Chamber of Peers, as soon as all the members shall have entered the room—and I must wait for a long time, for they are very numerous. The sentiments which their presence here silently expresses to you, are the sentiments of all France."

The King replied:—"I appreciate the propriety of the reserve which you have imposed upon yourself; and I am not on that account the less touched with the step taken by the Chamber of Peers. The expression of the feelings of the Chamber is always dear to me, but it becomes still more so under the present melancholy circumstances. I do not speak of myself. I only think of the danger which my family has run. It is pleasing to me to receive this new testimony of the affection of the Chamber of Peers."

M. Sauzet, the President of the Chamber of Deputies, said:—"Sire, the whole Chamber of Deputies comes to you with the expression of its emotions and wishes. All shades of opinion and all ranks hasten to congratulate you on your preservation, as they would have hastened to defend you, to serve as a rampart between the crime and you. Our language, sire, is the faithful echo of the country. At this moment a long cry of indignation and of devotion rises from one end of the kingdom to the other. France, that ancient country of loyalty, so hospitable to all unfortunates, so generous even to its enemies, is roused at the thoughts of those disgraceful attempts from which it thought its repose freed for ever. Not its confidence is not discouraged; it knows that a wretch may disgrace its soil, but that he cannot compromise its institutions nor dishonour its renown. It knows that assassins have been discovered among the most noble people, and that they have armed themselves against the best of kings (Loud cries of 'Vive le Roi'). But He who protects Kings and protects the people does not allow His designs to be thus crossed. It is to Him that it belongs to maintain the great missions which He has given, and to consecrate the elect of nations with the inviolability of his person. He has visibly stretched forth his hand to shield your august person. Sire, let us bless Providence—let us congratulate the country let us congratulate that Queen whom we always see at your side, as the devoted companion who always shares your perils, and as the angel of virtue she shields you from them. Let us congratulate those Princes to whom we entrust with confidence the future prospects of the country and our liberties, and that Royal child; for the protection accorded to you affords him a hope that you will be allowed to accomplish your task of forming his youth, and of preparing, by the lesson of your trials, your courage, and the affection of your people, the accomplishment of his precious destinies." (This speech was followed by loud cheering.)

ARREST OF LECOMTE BY MILLET, A GROOM OF THE ROYAL HOUSEHOLD.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE KING OF THE FRENCH.

PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU, FROM THE AVENUE OF MAINTENON.

The King replied:—"I am too much moved by what I have just heard too much penetrated by the sentiments which you have expressed with so much eloquence, as those of the numerous assembly which surrounds me as well as the Queen, my family, my sons, and grandsons, to express all the emotions which fill my heart. I leave it to your own hearts to understand what is passing in mine, and which I am totally unable to express. You will perceive, without my ex pressing it, how painful is the feeling to me, not of the danger which I myself have run, but the thought that my family was exposed to share the danger. I trust, with you, that Divine Providence will continue to watch over us, and that there will remain of those deplorable attempts but the remembrance of the indignation which they excite, and of the testimonies of affection and devotedness which they call forth around me. (Cries of "Vive le Roi!") France is well aware how much I am devoted to her—it is for her I wish to live, and my whole life shall be consecrated to her happiness and her prosperity." (Loud acclamations greeted the termination of this address.)

The Paris papers express the deepest indignation at this atrocious attempt upon the life of the King, and the event has called forth a general expression of attachment to his person. The Débats asserted that there was a political motive in the attempt, but the other journals deny this in indignant terms. The Débats, however, persists in this view. Our contemporary says:—

"It appears that we have made ourselves guilty against society, perhaps against the dynasty and even the monarchical system in France, by having said that we found it difficult to believe that the crime committed by Lecomte was purely a private crime, perpetrated under the inspiration of private vengeance, the motive for which was unaccountable. We shall not reply to the silly invectives thrown upon us on this occasion. Let those who like believe that in firing at the King of the French, the assassin did not seek to kill the Chief of the State, but only the head of a family. We, for our parts, do not think that we deceived ourselves in expressing a contrary opinion in declaring that we saw a political crime in an attempt at regicide. We base our excuse most naturally on the past. Were the attempts of Fieschi, of the Pont Royal, of Alibaud, of Meunier, of Darmes, and of Quenisset, private crimes? Justice, we trust, will succeed in bringing to light what has passed in the mind of the wretch who has added his name to this list, which was, alas! already too long."

On Sunday morning, Duke Pasquier and M. Hébert, the Procureur-General repaired to the Conciergerie, to put a fresh interrogatory to Lecomte.

He is said to persist in denying that he had accomplices, and when his crime was spoken of, he, with that morbid vanity which has marked the conduct of similar villains, exclaimed that he had committed no crime—his act was an attentat. The police had searched his residence, where they found some fragments of letters addressed to the King.

The Constitutionnel states that, almost immediately after the attempt of Lecomte, the King wrote to Queen Victoria, to inform her Majesty of his escape.

On Sunday, at one o'clock, the King, accompanied by the Queen, the Prince, and Princesses of the Royal Family, and holding the Count of Paris by the hand, received in the Throne Room the Municipal Corporation of Paris, who were presented by Count de Rambuteau, the Prefect of the Seine. The Count expressed to the King the profound indignation with which the attempt on his Majesty's life had inspired the population of Paris, and their affliction that such an act should have taken place. The Count's expressions were warmly responded to by the acclamations of the members of the Corporation. The King, much moved, replied to this striking manifestation by thanking, in warm language, the municipal body for their loyal and affectionate sentiments. The conclusion of his Majesty's address was greeted with loud cries of "Vive le Roi! Vivent la Famille Royale!"

ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS.

On the morning of the King's return from Fontainebleau, the 2nd Legion of the National Guards, to the number of nearly 5,000 men, assembled in the Place Vendôme, upon the occasion of the re-election of their officers, demanded, with one voice, to be led to the Tuileries, to congratulate the King upon his providential escape. This manifestation caused a profound sensation in Paris, and was hailed with satisfaction by all the friends of order and peace.

The preliminary examination of Lecomte, which commenced at the moment when he was arrested, was directed by M. Dignan-Desaix, Procureur du Roi, and M. Bandelair, Juge d'Instruction. Immediately after the arrival of Duke Pasquier and M. Hebert, the Procureur-General, minute search was made in the enclosure where Lecomte had been standing, and on the different points which he allowed he had gone over. All the details of the search are not known, but the Constitutionnel says it is able to affirm that the result of the examination and investigation has furnished proof of his not having had any accomplices. Lecomte still exhibits the same firmness; he speaks but little; his look has something wild and determined his colourless complexion, his angular features, and his abrupt movements announce resolution carried to audacity.

THE "FAREWELL" COURT, FONTAINEBLEAU.

The Presse says: "During the journey of Lecomte to Paris he exhibited the greatest sang froid He conversed with the officer of gendarmerie respecting the details and preparatives of the crime. He attributes his missing to the precipitation with which he got up on the heap of fagots, when he heard the Royal carriage coming sooner than he expected. For three days he refused all food, and it was only in the carriage, on his way to Paris, that he consented to eat a morsel, and drink a glass of beer."

The officers of the National Guard of Paris, being at the muster on Sunday last, got up impromptu a dinner to celebrate the King's happy escape from assassination. The most loyal toasts and speeches were given and received with the greatest enthusiasm

The Archbishop of Rouen was making his annual visitation through his diocese, when the news of the late attempt on the King's life reached him. He immediately ordered a "Te Deum" to be chanted in the Cathedral. This was done on Sunday, in the presence of the Prefect, the General in command of the district, all the civil and military authorities, and an immense concourse of the inhabitants.

The following details respecting Lecomte are extracted from the Journal des Débats of Monday:—"Lecomte arrived at Fontainebleau on Thursday morning (last week), at two o'clock, by the Nemours coach; after remaining a few minutes at an inn, and taking, it is said, two glasses of wine and a light repast, he went and concealed himself in the forest, and crept into the enclosure, where he awaited the King's passage. It appears that he was there the whole forenoon without any body disturbing him. He made every arrangement, not only for the crime he meditated, but also for his escape, on which he counted. Several ranges of fascines which he had heaped up for that purpose, have been found. They were placed against the wall, whereby Lecomte might have scaled it, at the other end of the enclosure, opposite to that where he had established his surveillance post. Had it not been for the groom Millet's energetic attack, it is probable that the assassin would have escaped. From the enclosure which he could descend into the forest, where, being long ago well acquainted with it, he might have baffled every pursuit. Millet has been promoted to the rank of under joueur in the King's stables, and will also have a gold medal. Lecomte has already undergone several examinations. When questioned as to the crime he had committed, he exclaimed, 'Ce n'est pas un crime de tuer sur le Roi; c'est un attentat.' He persists in maintaining that he has accomplices. The papers seized at his lodgings are solely relative to his pretended grievances; grievances which, according to his notions, he would have avenged on the person of the King, as being the author of the whole evil."

The Journal de Fontainebleau says, "To the first questions addressed to him, Lecomte replied proudly that he was the author of the attempt, and that he did not wish either to escape or conceal himself. It since known that when he said so he thought he had struck his Majesty. When, subsequently, he discovered his mistake, he expressed his deep regret at not having effected his object. Since his capture, Lecomte has refused to taste any description of food. He merely drinks pure water, and passes his entire time lying on his bed, his head covered with the skirts of his frock-coat. He asked for a razor, and appeared much disappointed that he was refused. On Saturday he was taken from his prison and conducted to the spot where he committed the crime, and he then described the preparations with the most imperturbable coolness. He had even taken the precaution to cover the barrel of his gun with leather, to prevent the reflection of the sun from betraying his position."

A private letter from Paris states that, from the private examination of the assassin Lecomte, before the magistrates, at Fontainebleau, there is reason to believe that he had some accomplices among the Carlists.

Millet, the groom, who arrested Lecomte, has, by his promotion to the place of piqueur, a large increase of wages. He has now 4000 francs a year, whereas, as a groom, he had only 1200 francs.

The preparations for the trial, by the Court of Peers, are going on with activity. The Court of Peers met on Monday, at one o'clock, in the Council Chamber, to deliberate on the measures to be adopted in consequence of the Royal Ordinance of the 17th inst. The Chancellor was in the chair. M. Hebert, the Procureur-General, and M. Bresson, the Advocate-General, being introduced, the former addressed the Court with a statement of the attempt on the King's life. The Court, after having deliberated, came to the following decision:—"The Court of Peers taking into consideration the Royal Ordinance of April 17—taking into consideration, moreover, Article 28 of the Constitutional Charter—having heard the reading of the Procès-Verbal of the meeting delivered thereon, acknowledges the presentation by the said functionary of a copy of his [illegible] at against the perpetrator and accomplices of the attempt against the King's person, committed at Fontainebleau on the 16th of the present month; does hereby order, that, by the President of the Court, and by such Peers as he may designate to replace him in case of absence, there shall be forthwith proceeded the proofs in examination required for ascertaining the circumstances, moreover, order that, in the course of such examinations, the functions attributed to the Council Chamber by Article 128 of the Code of Criminal Instruction shall be filled by the President of the Court, Count Barthe, Count Barois, Count de Pontecoulant, Count de Bondy, Baron de Frayille, M. Laplagne Barris, M. Persil, President de Gascq, President Bouliet, Baron de Crouseilles, President Legagneur, and M. Mesnard, which aforesaid Peers shall, on the report, does also order that the rules and proceedings of the criminal instruction, in such cases laid down, shall not be departed from; does further order that the letters, and all other articles relative to the crime, be forthwith examined, lodged with the registrar of the court; does further order that the citations and other acts performed by ushers of the ordinary courts of justice shall be performed by the ushers of the Chamber; finally, does order that the present decision shall, with all diligence, be carried into effect by the Procureur-General Deliberated on and ordered at the Court of Peers, at Paris, this 20th day of April, in the Council-Chamber, by us, the undersigned."

[Here follow the names of the Peers present—229 in number.]

A meeting of the British residents and visitors in Paris was held on Wednesday, at Lawson's Hotel Bedford, to consider of an address to his Majesty the King of the French, on the occasion of his late providential escape from the atrocious attempt of an assassin.

THE ENGRAVINGS

By the zealous co-operation of our Parisian artists, we are enabled to present our readers with the annexed Engravings of the Event detailed in the preceding columns

The first Illustration shows the Royal char-à-banc entering the Pheasants' Preserve; and the wretch Lecomte firing at the King.

In the second Engraving is shown the arrest of Lecomte, by Millet, one of the grooms who followed the King's carriage, and who, instantly after the firing, crossed the wall, and secured the traitor.

The third and fourth Illustrations show—1. The principal front of the chateau or palace of Fontainebleau—an irregular pile, resembling a group of distinct edifices rather than one united building. The architecture is of the style of the age of Francis I., in which the taste for ornament prevailed to an elaborate excess. 2. One of the six courts of the Palace, termed "the Farewell Court," wherein Napoleon took leave of the Imperial Guard, previous to his retirement to Elba, in 1814.

THE ESCAPE OF HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF THE FRENCH FROM THE ASSASSIN'S SHOT.

"Domine! fac salvum Regem."

Vive le Roi! God save the King,
Whom God so frequently hath saved;
Heaven shield the Monarch, who can bring
Peace to the heart of France—enslaved

Too long by Anarchy's wild hordes
To the false Glory's fatal phase,
That melts the sceptre in the sword,
And triumphs o'er a land's despair.

Yet France has known Misfortune's [illegible]
Which best can purify the soul;
'Twas there her King was taught to rule—
'Twas there he learnt that self-control
(God's choicest gift to fallen man)
And hence the Monarch's prudent power,
Which welcomed when his reign began,
Is hail'd and hallow'd to this hour.

Vive le Roi! Oh, burning stain,
Upon a noble nation's crest!
Assassin—the wretch insane,
Nor idiots honour'd by arrest;

But men who execrate the reign
Of peace, and mourn o'er rapine gone,
Hugging in thought the gilded chain
Which bound them to Napoleon.

No! 'tis not France—oh, libel foul!
Her soul abhors the dastard deed.
'Tis Revolution's gory ghoul
That loves to sow the serpent's seed.
Men who at industry will scoff,
Men without country, law, or creed—
Whose life is in the war-wolf's howl,
These be your Tells by Heaven decreed!

Vive le Roi! The nations press
Around thee, Monarch of the French,
In gratulation. Millions bless
Thine honest brow, which scorns to blench
At ruffian outrage. God's own hand
Will guide thee still in duty's path;
Saving a good and glorious land
From Anarch's rule, and Rabble's wrath.

Vive le Roi!

WINDSOR AND ETON AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society, which is under the patronage of her Majesty, was held on Thursday in the Town Hall, Windsor; the chair being taken by the Hon. and Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell. It was stated, in the course of the proceedings, that the parent society, since its establishment, had distributed, in distant countries, twelve millions of copies of the Sacred Volume, and 4,500,000 at home. From the statement of the Treasurer it appeared that the funds of the Auxiliary Society were in a most prosperous state. At the close of the meeting a very liberal subscription was received at the doors of the Town Hall.

ETON COLLEGE George Tomline, Esq., M.P. for Shrewsbury, and the son of the late Bishop of Winchester, who was educated at Eton, has just announced his intention of founding an annual Mathematical Prize, at Eton College. Mr. Tomline has presented the sum of one thousand pounds to the Provost and Fellows, the interest of which is to be appropriated to the purpose contemplated by the liberal donor.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

An opera, to be perfect in all its parts, should, by its libretto, by its cast, and by the music itself, possess a peculiar nationality. The same reproach which is raised against French tragedies—namely, that no matter whether the scene be laid in the countries of the ancient world, you see none but Frenchmen of modern times before you might be justly applied to the Abbé Casti and Mozart, in that which the actions and feelings represented are those of Italians, to whatever country they may be pretended to belong. Without asserting that in both cases the defect is one of equal importance, the Italian librettists and composers, by neglecting this point, have, in our opinion, overlooked a great source of effect. Rossini's delightful "Barbiere" is a happy illustration of the advantage of paying it attention. Beaumarchais succeeded in a great measure in giving a local colouring to his scenes, which the maestro transferred to his score; but even the accomplished comic writer and the great composer have, in this respect, fallen far short of the two-fold inspiration of the Abbé Casti and Mozart, in that wonderful composition, "Don Giovanni." It is not only that Spanish life, with its murders, its midnight fays, its serenades, and its intrigues, is most effectively brought upon the stage—but it is the power which the writer has exercised and delineated the Spanish character—the intimate mixture of the grave with the burlesque—the compound of quaintness and bonne foi with the most audacious hypocrisy the wonderful galeté de cœur, and never-failing disregard of human life, together with an invincible pride and natural elevation of mind which renders the performance of the actors in "Don Giovanni," especially Leporello and his master, by far the most striking, most peculiar, and most national of that of any heroes and heroines of the lyrical stage. Its present caste, at Her Majesty's Theatre, is wonderfully appropriate to elicit this peculiarity of the work. Let us take, for example, Hoffman's ideal description of Donna Anna. What a picture! exclaims the enthusiastic poet—"She might be, perhaps, slimmer, taller, more majestic in her step; but what a head! Her eyes dart fire like electric sparks, full of love, hatred, anger, and despair!" Who could so well as La Dora Grisi, realise this portrait:

Let the remainder of the German's animated description be read—and the reader will find points of amusing resemblance in the imaginary sketch of each of the actors in this chef d'œuvre of the lyrical stage. Let us proceed from generalities to particular description, as far as our space will allow, of the performances of the past week. The astonishing improvement of Mario is the theme of every tongue. Not only in his florituri, has this accomplished artist acquired an agility and delicacy infinitely surpassing what he manifested before—and in his sustained notes a still further increase of the richness of tone; but his style has since now acquired an energy and pathos, which is, after all, the most important feature of his advance in lyrical art. Of this, since last week, we have had an excellent occasion of judging.

"Don Giovanni" and "La Sonnambula" are both operas, though calling forth his powers in very various degrees, yet each now excellently adapted to his style. Indeed, with the wonderful development of his powers there are but few parts which this artist could not take with advantage. In "Don Giovanni" there is, it is true, but one aria in which his talent is fully elicited; but Mario's "Il mio tesoro" is now worthy of being ranked with the finest pieces of the great composer. Basili, and, in some points, perhaps, superior. With all the delicate discrimination of lights and shades of the tenor of Bergamo, there is not that exaggeration of the sotto voce, which rendered half of the air inaudible; but there now will be a close proximity to the stage; and the exquisite sweetness of his tones throughout could not be surpassed.

In "La Sonnambula," on Saturday, Lablache was suffering from indisposition; we consequently lost his inimitable "Madamina;" but this was all; in every other respect, the great Neapolitan was as irresistibly droll as ever. The scene in which he envelopes his bulky person in his master's splendid cloak, and endeavours to imitate his movements, while serenading the hapless Elvira, is not only admirable in itself, but, given with the greatest comic humour by both Lablache and Mario, was the height of drollery.

In "La Sonnambula," given on Tuesday, Mario's improvement was still more manifest. The beautiful finale of the first act, in which Elvino has discovered the supposed faithlessness of his love, was given by this artist with a verve and passionate expression, of which those who were accustomed to hear him in days of yore, quietly relying upon the effect of his beautiful voice, and troubling himself but little about the rest, would hardly have had an idea. "Il più tristo dei giorni," also was sung by Mario with a touching expression perfectly admirable. The second movement had much force and energy; but are we wrong in thinking that he gives the last verse in a less perfect manner, too much in the form of a malediction, instead of representing the struggle of wounded affection?

Madame Castellan on Saturday was more than ever bewitching in the part of the village coquette, in "Don Giovanni." Her singing, 26th of March, called "Lady sweet, appear," sung by Mr. Bennett, and an elegant Canzonet, "Beautiful Morn," sung by Miss E. Lucombe, were accompanied by the veteran, and were deservedly applauded. He sang his racy song "The Manchine, Merry, Little Fat Man," with infinite gusto, although he was labouring under indisposition. One "great fact" distinguished the programme; this was the first appearance in this country of Herr Kellerman, the violoncellist of the King of Denmark. The new performer created a great sensation. He played the slow movement of one of Romberg's Concertos, and his exquisitively full and liquid tone, certainty of intonation, and complete mastery over every difficulty were proved beyond a doubt. He has equal command all over the board, and is essentially a player who has taste and poetry as his leading attributes. He was rapturously encored. We can only record the names of the other artists who assisted Mr. Blewitt: as instrumentalists there were, Miss Day, piano; Master Day, violin; Regondi, concertina; Grattan Cooke, oboe; J. B. Chatterton, harp; and Mr. Wallace, Mr. T. Cooke, and Mr. Mühlenfeldt, as accompanyists. The vocalists were the Misses Rainforth, Lucombe, S. Fower, Messrs. Mrs Weiss, and Madame Albertazzi, Messrs. Bennett, Francis, Borrani, Weiss, H. Phillips, and Mr. Payden.

MR. CLINTON.—This clever flute-player gave a Concert at Crosby Hall, on Tuesday night, and engaged a host of talent for the occasion, including, as solo instrumentalists, Messrs. F. B. Jewson and C. Horsley, pianists; Master Thirlwall, violin; Herr Hausman, violoncello; Don J. and Don R. De Ciebra, guitar; Mr Williams, clarionet; Messrs. Weiss, Leftwich, and Sippel, flute. The vocalists were Mdlle. Scuboa; Misses Steele, Lucombe, Lincoln, Durel, Hill, and Dolby; Messrs. Phillips, Wetherbee, Bamford, Wrighton, Latter, and Russell. The programme contained thirty-three pieces, and the Hall was crowded to excess.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

The fourth meeting of the Beethoven Society, and fifth of Dando's Quartet Party, will be on Monday evening. Mr. Wilson opens his season of Scotch Song the same night, at the Music Hall; and Miss E. Lucombe has her annual Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Tuesday night will be the first meeting of the Vocal Concerts, under the direction of Miss Birch, Miss Hawes, Messrs. Hobbs and Phillips. Prince Albert has subscribed to the series which are intended for the performance of our national music.

The second Royal Academy Concert takes place this morning (Saturday). We shall notice Mr Parry's Cantata of "Belshazzar's Feast," performed last night at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, next week. Mendelssohn's 104th Psalm, "When Israel," and Haydn's Service, No. 2, were included in the programme. Mr Bunn's annual benefit takes place on Monday next, and he has provided a great musical entertainment for the occasion. As he has displayed much activity during the season, there can be no doubt that he will be well supported by the patrons and friends of Drury-Lane Theatre. Vieuxtemps will not arrive in London before the middle of May. Tamburini has met with such success in Berlin, that he has resolved not to visit London this season. Jenny Lind is now in Vienna, where Pischek is extremely popular. Madame Rossi-Caccia, who appeared at her Majesty's Theatre last season, made her debût at the Académie Royale de Musique in Paris, on Monday last, in the character of Rachel, in Halevy's opera of "La Juive." She was very well received, and Duprez seconded her exertions as Eleazar with his customary success.

TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

NO. III.

PLEASURE-TRIPS OF THE PEOPLE—NO. I.

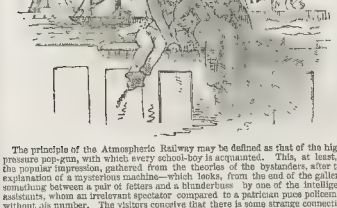
THE ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY AT THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION

BODY morbidly given to mourn over the oppressed condition of "the people," need only visit any one we don't care which of the popular resorts of holiday-makers, on Easter Monday, to form altogether a different opinion; and believe that "the people" are not a together the hapless class that clever literary gentlemen labour so hard to persuade them that they are.

As the "Pleasure Trips of the People" form an important feature of this portion of the year, we propose to consider, popular; and as short Railway Excursions rank amongst these, we will commence with a journey on the Atmospheric Line at the Polytechnic Institution, which is the shortest we know of, the train running several times in an hour from the Diving-Bell Station to the Basket-Stall Terminus, and vice versâ, on the edge of the lake.

Although the journey is short, it is not altogether devoid of excitement. For the seat on which the two voyagers are perched is about the size of an average ledger, without any back or front; and if the bold traveller is not endowed with a considerable portion of moral as well as physical courage, he either pitches head over heels forward amongst the company, or tumbles heels over head backwards into the water, causing much commotion amongst the Chinese Junks, Archimedean Hulks, Anti-Lightning Frigates, and Tom-Thumb Feluccas constantly lying there at anchor. This dilemma accounts for the anxious expression of countenance, not unmixed with pride, always observable on the faces of the passengers. You will see the same expression, in two people standing up for the dismal Cellarius at a party. They know they are amid hosts for the minute; but they are afraid of committing themselves by an awkward step, and are never altogether sorry when it is over.

The view from the Polytechnic Atmospheric line is not extensive, inasmuch as you have your back to the Gallery at large, including the revolving lighthouse, and the fountains, beer-engines, pumps, squirts and galvanised basins, which adorn the canal. On looking over the catalogue, we see there is also a "Bonzoy Grab." What this is, we have not the least conception; but presume it is what every Sikh would be, if he could, only we never let him come so far. But this by the way.



The principle of the Atmospheric Railway may be defined as that of the high-pressure pop-gun, with which every schoolboy is acquainted. This, at least, is the popular impression, gathered from the theories of the bystanders, after the explanation of a mysterious machine—which looks, from the end of the gallery, somethings between a pair of fetters and a blunderbuss by one of the intelligent assistants, whom an irrelevant spectator compared to a patrician puss pelliceman without an number. The visitors conceive that there is some strange connection between the seat and the pellet, or pistol, and that the train is shot off by the hand of daring mariners, in striped Jerseys, who blow up the little Royal George, work the air-pump; and who look as though they could appear in a nautical drama at a minute's notice, and reef their best bower, douse their tarfrail, or port their lobstays, as well as Mr T. P. Cooke, or the First Lord of the Admiralty.

The two other other pleasure trips at this resort are down the fire-escape and the diving-bell, which we may hereafter allude to. But, now our little laugh is for the present over, we must be acquitted of making game of the Polytechnic Institution, which everybody knows to be a sensible and well-conducted establishment

CHARADE THE THIRD.

Gentles list: rub up your wits, and are you stop at the next station,
To the following varied poems discover a clear explanation.
When too many thousands rushed to Capel Court in search of shares,
Thinking they had made vast fortunes for themselves and for their heirs;
When the public er in Paris gave a cheque to Eugene Sue,
Thinking he should rear a Phalanstery—"The Wandering Jew,"
Which I must confess I never saw the merit of—did you?
When the "Guru" who went to Epsom, thinking he was sure to win,
Back'd the favorite at long odds against the field through thick and thin;
When folks thought that Henson's Aerial Ship was certain to succeed;
When the "Nonus" so blindly trusted to the blasts of Dr. Reid;
When the country visitor got in the bus at Cockspur-street,
Thinking he should reach the Bank much sooner so than on his feet;
When these maniacs came to pass—I scarcely know which was the worst—
Then, be sure, without exception, everybody was my first.

Stake and block have pass'd away,
Duck-ing-stool and sever'd wrist;
Wheel and rack have come for aye,
Yet my powers still exist.
'Tis not easy to define
What the attributes can be,
Which together may combine,
Till my second you could see
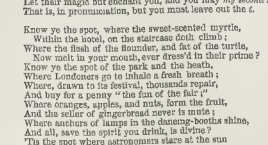
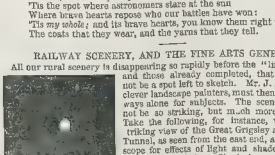
It might be old age decrepit, ever bent on doing wrong,
It might be a lovely woman's voice when gushing forth in song,
It might be her bright eyes glancing;
It might be her grace in dancing,
It might be her radiant smiles—
Any of the thousand wiles,
Which, to turn the heads of mortals, unto womankind belong.
Let their magic but enchant you, and you may my second see—
That is, in pronunciation, but you must leave out the c.

Know ye the spot, where the sweet-scented myrtle,
Within the hotel, on the staircase doth climb;
Where the flesh of the founder, and fat of the turtle,
Now melt in your mouth, ever dress'd in their prime?
Know ye the spot of the park and the heath,
Where Londoners go to inhale, as fresh breath;
Where, drawn to its festival, thousands repair,
And buy for a penny "the fun of the fair."
Where oranges, apples, and nuts, form the fruit,
And the seller of gingerbread never is mute;
Where anchors of lamps in the dancing-booths shine,
And all, save the spirit you drink, is divine?
'Tis the spot where astronomers stare at the sun
Where brave hearts repose who our battles have won:
"Tis my whole; and O, brave hearts, fresh breezes from them right well,
The coats that they wear, and the yarns that they tell.

RAILWAY SCENERY, AND THE FINE ARTS GENERALLY.

All our rural scenery is disappearing so rapidly before the "lines in progress," and those already completed, that soon there will not be a spot left to sketch. Mr. J. Allen, and other clever landscape painters, must then trust to the railways alone for subjects. The scenes will certainly not be so striking, but much more easily depicted. Take the following, for instance, which is a very striking view of the Great Grigsley and Dumbledum Tunnel, as seen from the east end, and affords great scope for effects of light and shade, powerful from their very simplicity. Similarly grand would be the view of the cutting through the Nogo Hills, on the same line; which might be done in chalk, from materials found on the spot: and in all cuttings of a similar nature would save the artist the trouble of "walking his chalks" from one place to another, as is now the case.





As it is much more creditable to originate than to copy, we advise some artist at once to take up this line, for assuredly as surely must do so before long. Every existing "Nook and Corner of Old England" having been so closely ransacked by painters and our own Correspondents, as Venice was by Canaletti. We predict that the Exhibition will undicted what Astley's would come to last week. The dergo a similar change. Landseer will paint "Fireworks, a thoroughbred locomotive, the property of the Great Western." Turner will treat us to a pair of "Night—Going into the Tunnel;" and "Morning—Coming out of it." The first of these will contain a fine effect, from the lamp of the first-class car shining through the windows on the brickwork; and the second will vividly portray the glories of a May morning, in that artist's best style—the emerald sheen, the azure foliage, and ruby tuft, tied into a knot by a rainbow. Miss Setchell will have a companion to "The Momentous Question," called "The Evasive Answer"—the subject being the hester at the Nine Elms Pier declining to tell a young woman with a bandbox whether the iron boat is alongside. Frank Stone will contribute "The First Appeal"—a beautiful girl soliciting a ruddy traveller to have the window shut at the commencement of the journey. Cattermole will have a fine gloomy interior of the "Blackwall Terminus on the Heights of the Minories;" and Chalon will immortalise the pretty girls who serve out the bedding coffee and new buns—capital things for a hurried meal—at the Wolverton station. Frank will give us a sketch of everyday life, "The Lost Return-Ticket:" and Stanfield will take a grand subject from the London and Greenwich, "Deptford Creek—a Storm Blowing Over." Maclise will, we believe, receive a commission for a fresco—the subject, "Liberty"—the allegory, "Knowledge letting off the pent-up steam of Freedom, by the safety-valve of Truth."

ANSWER TO CHARADE THE SECOND.

1. Pup. 2. Pet. 3. PUPPET.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"P. W." Your second attempt is correct.
"H. C. M.," Kensington—You may Castle when, by so doing, you give checkmate to your adversary. The question has been frequently asked.
"Nemo." Checkmate cannot be given by the King and two Knights only.
"Circa."—Your remarks on the Chess problems assour of hypercriticism. With respect to the games between Messrs. Staunton and Staunton, we quite agree with you. They are a "Pasm and nuse" inferior to the best played by the latter with Mr. Cochrane, and not to be named with the earlier ones in the French match. The attempted solution of 116 is a failure.
"A Young Beginner."—You forget that Black may interpose his Queen when the K to P is played on. in Problem 115
"J. B. H."—You can Castle after your King has been checked.
"G. R. F."—Try "The Shades," in Leicester-square; or Gliddon's Divan, King-street, Covent-garden.
"D. C." Not later than Wednesday morning.
"R. D."—It shall be examined.
Solutions by "G. A. H." and "R. H." (of Nos. 114 and 115*). "Shakebach," "Academus," "Ladimagister," "H. C. M.," "M. S.," and "A. C." Huntley, are correct. Those by "Medicus" and "Sirado" are wrong.*
"Any Amateur desirous of playing a game of Chess by correspondence may apply to "R. D., South-terrace, South Lambeth."

The foregoing Replies were omitted last week.

"H. P. W." Alford.—The "Economic Chess Board" may be got of any respectable bookseller.
"A. and B." request our decision upon the following point. They are playing a match of 13 games: each party has won six; in the decading game, "A." (White, Queens his Pawn, but, in the flush of victory, mistakingly puts on the board a Black Queen instead of a White one. Upon demanding to restify the error, his opponent maintains that the move must stand, and claims the match accordingly. There is no rule of the game, in any authority worth notice, which justifies "B." in his attempt to take advantage of "A.'s" mistake. The latter must substitute a White Queen, and pursue the game.
"Parma" is thanked. Will he aslo to our obligation by sending a copy of the paper from whence the positions were extracted?
"G. C."—"R. P. O."—Anyway. We have not space for the insertion of letters on the controversy touching the Pawn taking en passant: send them to the "Chess Player's Chronicle." Mr. Lewis's address is Chatham-place, Blackfriar's.
"Union Jack," and "Cymri."—We are in receipt of several communications of the same tenour, and shall not dispute that Mr. Staunton might with propriety have declined a challenge from a comparatively unknown competitor, unless for a large stake. Mr. Staunton probably thought, however, with Montrose—

"He either fears his fate too much,
Or his deserts are small,
Who dares not put it to the touch
To win or lose it all."

And, when all's done, competent impartial judges must feel that a player who, lacking the undispensable stimulus of fame or lucre, yet wins at the rate of two to one, with it would conquer in a much greater proportion.
"G. W."—Yes. Nine Queens on the Board at once, if you can get them. Your attempted solutions of both No 107 and No. 114 are failures.
"F. H. H." Mr. Hurst, Publisher, of 27, King William-street, Strand; or Mr. Hastings, of Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn.
"Cura." The Anniversary Dinner of the London Chess Club is to be held on the 27*th of next month: you must apply for tickes to the Honorary Secretary.*
"A Young Beginner."—In your attempted solution of No. 115, you forget that Black may interpose his Queen when the K to P is advanced.
Solutions by "H. C. M.," "Veteran," "Cissarus," "J. G.," Dublin, "G. A. N.," "Sigma," "E. V.," Durham," "N. S." "T. G. M.," "E.," "Subscriber," "Automaton," "J. L." Bodmin; "G. A. H." "A. C." Leeds; and "Fabius," are correct. Those by "Philigree," "Vega Valley," "M. P." "Willo," "King Cole," "Ferdinand," "Sigh," and "W. L." are wrong.
"An Amateur wishing to play a game of Chess by correspondence may meet an opponent by addressing "G. A. B., Horne's Library, Leicester square."

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 117.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B takes Q B P (dis ch)	Kt takes Q or (a)
2. Kt to K 4th (ch)	K to K 3rd
3. B to Q 7th (ch)	K takes B or (b)
4. Kt to B 6th—mate

(a) 1. K to B 4th
2. Q to K 3rd (ch) K to Kt 5th. (If Q to her 5th White may play Q to R 3rd—mate; or, if K to Q's 3rd, P one—mate.)
3. R to R 4th—mate

(b) 3. K to B 2nd
4. R to K B 6th—mate

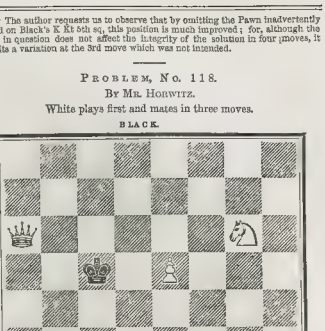
* The author requests us to observe that by omitting the Pawn inadvertently placed on Black's K Kt 5th sq, this position is much improved; for, although the Pawn in question does not affect the integrity of the solution in four moves, it permits a variation at the 3rd move which was not intended.

PROBLEM, No. 118.

BY MR. HORWITZ.

White plays first and mates in three moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

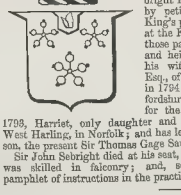
OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE EARL OF ERROLL.

THE Noble man was second son of the late Earl, and succeeded to the honours of his house, in consequence of the death, at Waterloo, of his elder brother, James, Lord Hay. The distinguished family he represented, was the senior line of the great Northern race of Hay, from a junior branch of which springs the Marquis of Tweeddale; but Lord Erroll derived, by female descent only, from the Hays: paternally, he was great grandson of the ill-fated Earl of Kilmarnock, who suffered death on Tower Hill in 1746, for his participation in the rising of the previous year. With the Coronet, his Lordship inherited the honourable office of Lord High Constable of Scotland. He was also Lieutenant-General of the Royal Archers, Lord Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire, a Knight of the Thistle, and a Knight Grand Cross of Hanover. During the Administration of Lord Melbourne he held successively the appointments of Master of the Buck Hounds, and Lord Steward of the Household.

His Lordship was born 21st February, 1801, and married, 4th Dec., 1824, Elizabeth Fitzclarence, sister of the late Earl of Munster, by whom he has left one son, William Harry, now Earl of Erroll; and three daughters, of whom the eldest is the wife of Viscount Campden. The Earl died on Sunday last.

SIR JOHN SAUNDERS SEBRIGHT, BART.



SIR John Sebright, who died on the 15th inst., in his seventy-ninth year, was the seventh Baronet of his name, and represented an old and respected family, derived from Peter Sebright, Esq., of Sebright Hall, in Essex, who held his estate by petit sergeantry, "the keeping the King's palfrey, or saddle-horse, forty days, at the King's charge, whenever he visited those parts." John was the elder son and heir of the late Baronet, by Sarah, his wife, daughter of Edward Knight, Esq., of Wolverley; succeeded to the title in 1794; and became M.P. for Hertfordshire in 1806, having previously sat for the city of Bath. He married, in 1793, Harriet, only daughter and heir of Richard Croft, Esq, of West Harling, in Norfolk; and has left, with several daughters, an only son, the present Sir Thomas Gage Saunders Sebright, Bart.

Sir John Sebright died at his seat, Beechwood, in Hertfordshire. He was skilled in falconry; and, several years since, published a pamphlet of instructions in the practice of this art of "merrie England."

VICE-ADMIRAL ROBERT LLOYD, OF TREGAYAN.

Died lately, at Tregayan Hall, Anglesey, Vice-Admiral Robert Lloyd, a gentleman of large property in the counties of Anglesey and Carnarvon. He entered the navy in 1780, as Midshipman on board the Valiant, 74; he then joined the Fairy, 18, in which he was wounded in action with the French frigate Madame, and carried prisoner to Cherbourg, whence he escaped, and sent to England, France; in a short time, he was re-captured, and sent to England, where he joined the Medway, 60. In 1783, he became Midshipman and Acting Lieutenant on board the Hebe, 40, a beautiful French frigate, captured by Captain Trollope, in the Rainbow, two years before. Prince William Henry served at the same time as a Lieutenant on board the Hebe. Being afterwards appointed Lieutenant of the Latona, 40, he took part in the Battle of the First of June. He was First Lieutenant of the Robust in the action off L'Orient, under the command of Lord Bridport; and proceeded to Nicheron Bay with Sir John Warren, where he distinguished himself in the several skirmishes with the French army in support of the Royalists—in one of these he was severely wounded. In 1796, he obtained the rank of Commander, and was appointed to the Raccon, 18 guns: in this brig he received severe wounds in several engagements with the enemy. He was made Post-Captain in 1796, and promoted to the Nemesis, which he never joined, on account of his wounds. His next appointment was as Flag-Captain to Rear-Admiral Thornborough, in the Mars. In 1806, he commissioned the Hussar frigate, 40 guns, and assisted at the reduction of Copenhagen, in 1807, by Admiral Gambier; hence he proceeded to the West Indies station, and the following year exchanged into the Guerrière, 40 guns. In 1811, he was appointed Flag-Captain to Sir John Warren, on board the Swiftshire; and the following year he took the command of the Plantagenet, 74 guns, and proceeded to the Baltic during the Russian war: thence he went to North America; was engaged in the attack upon Washington and New Orleans, under Sir Alexander Cochrane; and, after the general action with the Americans brought home the bodies of Generals Gibbs and Pakenham. He paid off the Plantagenet, in 1815, at Portsmouth; since which time he has lived at his seat in Anglesey, and been an active Magistrate.

ITINERANT ANTIQUARIES, &c.—A Correspondent of The Builder says, that on paying a visit to Lewes, for the purpose of inspecting the interesting remains of antiquity which have recently been brought to light, and to the notice of the public, by that active body, the "British Archæological Association," imagine my disgust and indignation on discovering that the leaden coffin lid of Gundreda had been removed—it was believed by the sexton to London, to exhibit at the meeting of some learned institute, while the lid of the Earl had undergone some vile process of rubbing, so entirely effacing the inscription, that, with the exception of the letter W, the rest of the name is positively rubbed into a hole, large enough to admit two fingers.

NEW CHURCH AT BEAR WOOD, NEAR WOKINGHAM.

NEW CHURCH OF ST. CATHERINE, AT BEAR WOOD.

This handsome edifice has just been erected at the sole expense of John Walter, Esq., upon his estate, Bear Wood, near Wokingham, Berks. The Church is finely situated; the design is in the best period of our architecture; itsmain feature being a lofty and well-proportioned tower, embattled, and finished with pinnacles and buttresses, besides a stair-turret at one of the angles. The other finishings are in good taste; and the gables are surmounted with enriched crosses.

The Church was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Oxford on Thursday The Rev. Robert Aris Willmott had been appointed minister of the church, which is dedicated to St. Catherine, and will afford great accommodation to the inhabitants of the district in which it is situate.

TESTIMONIAL TO EDWARD BALDWIN, ESQ., M.A.,

PROPRIETOR OF THE "MORNING HERALD."

The accompanying Engraving represents a very beautiful and costly piece of plate which was presented to Mr. Edward Baldwin, the proprietor of the Morning Herald, by the members of the literary staff of that journal, on the occasion of his meeting those gentlemen at a sumptuous dinner, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Saturday last, the 18th inst.

It is a massive ten-branched Candelabrum, 34 inches in height, and weighing nearly 600 ounces of silver. From a triangular base, most exquisitely wrought, springs a vine stem, whereon the fruit, tendrils, and leaves are interlaced with admirable skill; while in the midst are two infantine figures, of whom one gracefully holds a cup into which the other sportively presses the grape. Altogether, it is a piece of composition which, whether for beauty of design, or elaborate workmanship, reflects the highest credit on Messrs. Hunt and Roskell (late Storr and Mortimer), from whose establishment in Bond-street it has been sent.

The piece of plate bears the following inscription, in raised Roman capitals, burnished, upon a frosted ground:—

PRESENTED TO
EDWARD BALDWIN, ESQ., M.A.,
THE PROPRIETOR OF THE "MORNING HERALD,"
BY THE GENTLEMEN
CONNECTED WITH THE VARIOUS LITERARY DEPARTMENTS OF HIS JOURNAL,
AS A MARK OF THEIR APPRECIATION
OF HIS EARNEST AND UNCEASING EFFORTS TO ELEVATE THE CHARACTER OF THE PUBLIC PRESS OF THIS COUNTRY,
AND ALSO AS A SINCERE, BUT INADEQUATE TESTIMONY
OF THEIR AFFECTIONATE ATTACHMENT AND ESTEEM.
APRIL 18TH, 1846.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO EDWARD BALDWIN, ESQ., M.A.

THE "ELIZA," BRAZILIAN SLAVER, CHASED BY H. M. SLOOP "FLYING FISH,"

THE "FLYING FISH" UNDER ALL SAIL.

THE "FLYING FISH" SHORTENING SAIL.—TORNADO AT DAYBREAK.

CAPTURE OF THE SLAVER "ELIZA."

On the morning of the 14th of December, a strange sail was discovered, close under land, by her Majesty's ship Flying Fish, stationed off the Gold Coast. All sail was made, as the stranger appeared trying to get out to seaward. At nine o'clock, the wind fell: the Flying Fish then got out sweeps, and the hard work of rowing the brig was kept up until one o'clock, with such trifling success, that it was feared if the wind should spring up the chase would escape. It was now a perfect calm, and in this state of affairs Lieutenant St. Leger volunteered to take her with the two whale-boats, the only boats on board, as the pinnace and cutter were out on a week's cruise with the First Lieutenant. In a few minutes the boats were alongside, manned and armed, and stretching out with eighteen men, under three hearty cheers, towards the chase, now distant about six or seven miles. When they were distant about three-quarters of a mile they lay on their oars to take breath before boarding. This was an anxious moment, and all eyes and glasses were directed towards them, when, just as the men were giving way again, the chase dropped her ensign and surrendered. She proved to be the brig Eliza, only one year old, and fitted up for slaves three weeks before, when she cost 8,000 dollars. After cruising about for a month under command of Lieutenant St. Leger, she was sent up to be condemned.

We have been favoured with the following additional details of the affair, together with the annexed Illustrations, by an obliging Correspondent.

THE "FLYING FISH'S" PINNACE IN CHASE.

SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF IL DON GIOVANNI, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—(SEE PAGE 274.)

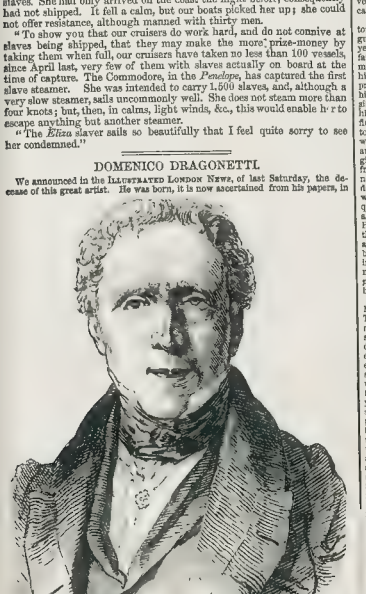
"The Eliza is a beautiful Brazilian brig, fitted for carrying 1,000 slaves. She had only arrived on the coast the night before, consequently had not shipped. It fell a calm, but our boats picked her up; she could not offer resistance, although manned with thirty men.

"To show you that our cruisers do work hard, and do not connive at slaves being shipped, that they may make the more price-money by taking them when full, our cruisers have taken no less than 100 vessels since April last, very few of them with slaves actually on board at the time of capture. The Commodore, in the Penelope, has captured the first slave steamer. She was intended to carry 1,500 slaves, and, although a very slow steamer, sails uncommonly well. She does not steam more than four knots; but, then, in calms, light winds, &c., this would enable her to escape anything but another steamer.

"The Eliza slaver sails so beautifully that I feel quite sorry to see her condemned."

DOMENICO DRAGONETTI.

We announced in the Illustrated London News, of last Saturday, the decease of this great artist. He was born, it is now ascertained from his papers, in



THE LATE SIGNOR DRAGONETTI.

1755, and died on Thursday, April 16, having, therefore, attained the age of ninety-one years. It is curious that, during his life-time, he only admitted to being eighty, and, like a lady's calculation in this respect, the period never advanced beyond the avowed limit. A funeral service was performed yesterday (Friday), at the Catholic Chapel, in Moorfields. Dragonetti expressly desired that the processional part of the funeral should be strictly private.

He has left some property, which he has bequeathed to his sister's family, and, if no members thereof can be found, the money to go to his native city, Venice. To San Marco he has consigned the keeping of his famous Amati double bass, and to Signor Casolani, of the opera band, his second best bass. Mr. J. B. Heath, Count Pepoli, the Italian poet, author of the libretto of "Puritani," and Vincent Novello, are executors. From a Memoir written by his most intimate and devoted friend, published in 1836, we make the following interesting extracts of his career:—

"His father Pietro was a performer also on the double-bass, and was accustomed to play at public assemblies for dancing; he also played upon a species of guitar, strung with steel wires, and at that time in general use. When only nine years old, Domenico Dragonetti was accustomed surreptitiously to purloin his father's guitar, and in a remote quarter of the house to practise upon the instrument; and such was the force of his genius, that, in a short time, and without his parents being conscious of the circumstance, he had made so extraordinary a progress as to propose accompanying Doretti, a celebrated violinist and friend of his father, who wished the latter to try over with him some of his compositions. Pietro Dragonetti not succeeding very well, the little boy offered to take his place, and, to the astonishment of his father, both read and played the music fluently, accompanying Doretti's melody with chords so just and appropriate, as to resemble the efforts of a well-versed practitioner. At the same time that he was practising his guitar, he induced a friendly shoemaker in his neighbourhood, an indifferent performer on the violin, whose name was Giacomo Sciarmadori, to give him instructions on that instrument. The slender assistance he derived from this good-natured mechanic was sufficient for the lad (who at that time was not twelve years old) to convert his knowledge of the violin to the practice of the double bass; and he again surprised his friends; for at a public performance with Doretti, he a second time proposed taking his father's place, and actually acquitted himself in so extraordinary a manner, that the violinist induced Pietro to allow his son to accompany him at the various concerts he attended in Venice. He now became, and naturally, the talk of the whole city. We may be sure that the novelty was not that of a boy, only twelve years old, playing a trifling accompaniment upon so unmanageable an instrument (although that would have been surprising); yet this could not have been sufficient to preserve a sustained interest in his favour; but his progress towards perfection, even at that period, must have been beyond all precedent, since we are informed that Berini, the prima basso at Venice, gave him but eleven lessons, and acknowledged that he had no farther instruction to impart to his little scholar.

"At this period of his life, he made the acquaintance of the celebrated violinist Mestrino, who was his senior by several years, and rapidly rising in his profession. These two friends, incited by the love of their art and the desire of fame, commenced a series of studies together at the house of Dragonetti, consisting of scientific exercises for their several instruments; also in practising many hours a day; a considerable portion of which time they employed in making practical experiments upon music not adapted to the violin or double bass. To these exercises they added the composition of 'Capricci,' in which they introduced passages of unusual difficulty; and these labours occurred when our hero was under fourteen years of age; no wonder, therefore, that this early exercise, combined with natural muscular power and energy, should have given him, in after years, the grip of a tiger when clenching the strings of his instrument. The two friends were constantly engaged at all the public and private musical parties in Venice; and on their return home they would amuse crowds of citizens with serenading upon the violin and guitar. At the age of thirteen, Dragonetti was appointed prima basso at the 'Opera Buffa,' in Venice; and at fourteen obtained the same situation in the 'Grand Opera seria' at the theatre of San Benetto. Some two or three years afterwards, when at Treviso, and playing at the house of the Signori Tommasini, he received a handsome compliment from a nobleman of the name of Morisini, Procurator of San Marco, who told him that he was only sure of his not being engaged in the chapel of San Marco, by there being no double-bass there comparable with him. A short time after this he was offered the situation of primo basso in this same chapel; but, in delicacy to his old master Berini, who held the appointment, he declined the honour. Berini, however, insisted upon his accepting it, assuring him that he himself had been complimented with an increased remuneration for his services, and was perfectly willing to resign in favour of so competent a successor.

"During his engagement at this chapel, and when only eighteen years of age, he received a tempting offer to enter the service of the Russian Court; and, in consequence, he applied to the Procurators of San Marco for leave to resign: they, however, so fully appreciated his talent, that they instantly increased his salary, and took upon themselves the office of declining his acceptance of the offer from the Court of Russia.

"The next event in his life that we hear of, is, that he was engaged as a concerto player, and to take the violoncello parts in quartets, with his double bass; and, upon one occasion, being suddenly called upon to play a concerto, and excusing himself on account of his having no music with him, his apology was so far from being admitted, that the company compelled him to play an excessively difficult concerto, written for the bassoon. He now set himself the task of writing several sonatas for the double bass, in which he introduced passages which no one besides himself was able to accomplish. Somesof these he had the opportunity of playing before a congregation of Sovereign Princes who had been invited by the Republic to his native city, and who had constituted him one of the directors of the music festivals given on the occasion. His talent shone forth so pre-eminently, that he was sometimes called upon to play seven and eight times during the evening, and almost always his own pieces. One of these was so great a favourite with the Queen of Naples, that he was commanded to repeat it fourteen successive nights. This piece Dragonetti afterwards presented to the Queen.

"The next event in his life was his removal to Vicenza, having received an engagement to play there in the grand opera. It was in this town that he met with his renowned double-bass, the work of Gasparo di Salo, who was master to the celebrated Amati. The instrument had formerly belonged to the Convent of San Pietro. The happy Dragonetti hastened to have his prize repaired; and, when finished, he proceeded to make the full trial of its power in the hall of his residence. We are informed that so great was the strength of tone he produced that some of the servants came out of the kitchen, wondering what had caused the vibration of the brazen vessels on the shelves. They who are inclined to question this fact, should recollect that it is no uncommon occurrence with powerful voices, in a room, to produce a considerable vibration of the wine glasses on the table or sideboard. Incledon's prowess in performing this feat is notorious.

"From Vicenza, Dragonetti went to Padua, where he paid a visit to the monks of the convent of San Giustina. His beloved bass was, of course, his companion; and when, in conversation with the organist, Turvini Bertoni, he ventured to hint that its third string could be made to produce as powerful a tone as the lower bass pipes of the convent organ, Bertoni treated the notion with contempt. Our contra basso said nothing; but, providing himself with some bass strings of enormous diameter, in the dead of a fine summer night, when the inmates of the convent were all asleep, he stole into one of the corridors, and commenced a "Solo fulminato;"—in common English, he imitated the noise of a tempest with such effect, that on the following morning, every one was talking of the last night's thunder, and were not a little surprised to find that the weather had been unusually clear. On the succeeding night Dragonetti repeated his joke; one of the monks, however, running out of his dormitory, blundered over the double-bass, and at once discovered the philosophy of the thunder-storm. Bertoni yielded the palm for power to the Amati bass

"Our artist was now in his twenty-fourth year, when, through the recommendation of Banti, who was at that time singing in London, he received an engagement to take the situation of principal contra basso at the King's Theatre; and this situation, with only one or two intervals already alluded to, he has held ever since.

"The fine observation of Shelley, that 'The mist of familiarity shuts out from us the wonder of our being,' may be applied to the playing of Dragonetti; we are so constantly in the habit of hearing his performances, that they have become a mere matter of course to us; and, yet, he rarely goes into an orchestra when a fine symphony is being performed, but he exhibits feats of skill that are more astonishing than those of the finest violin players. It is true that he is almost always heard in combination, and few persons but those who are practised musicians can discriminate, and at the same time appreciate, the passages he has performed. We have heard him play a solo upon one string, and felt that, on the score of achievement, Paganini had accomplished little in comparison with him. We once heard him, by way of amusement, and to show the command he had over his instrument, play the second violin part to Mozart's 'Mass, No. 1,' and which was an astounding effort of skill. It was at a little private party. Upon arriving, he found the bass occupied, and said he would play the tenor: No. 1 of Mozart has no tenor violin; upon which he took the second, and kept us laughing and admiring all through the performance. The being able to surmount the difficulties of his unwieldy instrument, forms, however, but a minor portion of his excellence. He possesses the most exalted feeling for the poetry of his art. If there be one solitary passage in a composition worth notice, Dragonetti is sure to pull it out, and give it the finest expression. It was notorious to the whole orchestra at a York festival, some years ago, that when the choruses were becoming unsteady, his single bass swayed them. In short, so many qualifications requisite to form a consummate artist are concentrated in him, that, until the same qualities in combination shall concur, it is impossible we should have an equal to Donizetti. There must be the early predilection; the physical conformation; the talent of aptitude; the zeal and power to apply; the tone, the execution, the feeling, the expression. The conformation even of his hand is remarkable; the fingers are disproportionately large, muscular, and knobby—they are, indeed, a bundle of muscles—and, which is curious, when we consider the wear and tear they have undergone for full 30 years, they are pulpy and soft to the pressure of those of Mr. Lindley, on the contrary, are corneous, and literally worn into grooves.

MISS LINWOOD'S EXHIBITION, LEICESTER SQUARE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

"Without a spark of undue assumption, Signor Dragonetti is one of the finest and truest aristocrats in the profession He dines with Lords, and he gives dinners to Lords. Wife is the real and honest pride, he has unvaryingly maintained the dignity of his order. He knows its value—he would be a fool or a coxcomb to deny it; but he has never, by one single act, that we have heard, compromised the character of the musician or the man. He has never insulted the self-love of his brethren, or injured the general interests of the musical society by selling the birth-right of his noble nature for 'a mess of pottage.' On this ground, thank Heaven, we have as good men and true as he, and our homage shall be recorded as often as the occasion shall present itself.

"If the phrenologists were to examine the cranium of Dragonetti, it is highly probable, that, with their usual accuracy, they would discover a large development of the organ of language, and this discovery in a great measure would be correct; for he speaks four languages—but all of them with so amusing an ineffaceable that no one but a person accustomed to his manner can hope to comprehend him. He has been above forty years with us, and has yet, to this day, it is probable that, in two minutes' conversation, he will introduce French, Venetian, and even Germaut, into one sentence. Yet, with all this, to those who are habituated to his society, he is the most delightful companion: social, cheerful, and child-like; he is very fond of children, particularly females, and he levels his gossip and behaviour to their capacities in the most engaging manner. He is full of anecdote. His stories would make a further possessing great qualities, either of head or heart, or both. Dragonetti's mother was full of tender sorrow at his leaving Italy; his father preferred witnessing the ascent of a balloon to the accompanying his son part of the way on his journey. We introduce the following anecdote in honour of the memory of the amiable Gretry. When Dragonetti first visited Gretry, he carried with him letters of introduction from Viotti to Cherubini and Gretry. He called upon the former, who was from home, and then proceeded to the residence of Gretry, which was at Montmorency. In the course of conversation, Gretry asked his visitor in what quarter of Paris he had taken his lodgings. Soon after, he proposed a walk to the fields, which ended a couple of hours. On their return to the house, his host asked Dragonetti whether he would wash his hands before dinner. 'When you reach the landing-place,' said he, 'turn to the right, and take the chamber door on the left.' In this room, Dragonetti found his portmanteaus, &c., arranged as if he were domiciliated. During their walk, Gretry had contrived to have all his effects removed from his lodgings. 'Friends must not part thus,' said he; 'while you remain in France you must consider my house your home.'

"The following anecdote will be deeply regretted by all double-bass players. Upon his return to Venice, after an absence of some years, he found that all his papers and MSS., which he had left in the care of a 'friend,' had been dipper ed and sold. He endeavoured, at any price, but in vain, to recover them. The one of which he appears most to regret the loss, was a 'Complete System of the Double-bass, or instruction-book for that instrument,' containing many elaborate exercises and studies."

SALE OF THE LATE MISS LINWOOD'S PICTURES.

Thirteen months ago, we recorded the death of this amiable and highly-gifted lady, in her ninetieth year; and, at the same time, briefly noticed her famed Collection of Needlework Pictures, exhibited during forty-seven years past in the metropolis.

On Thursday, this Collection was disposed of by auction, by Messrs Christie and Manson, at the Gallery in Leicester-square. There were fifty eight pictures in needlework and three oil's, which were sold in the ranging line. We have no space to enumerate a few of the prices: Jephtha's Rash Vow (Opie), 16 guineas; Shepherd Boy (Gainsborough), £17 6s. 6d.; and the Ass and Children (Guns borough), £23 2s. The Farmer's Stable, after Gainsborough, £32 15s.; the Portrait of Miss Linwood, after Rosselli's picture, 18 guineas; and the Judgment upon Cain, which occupied ten years in working, £64 1s. A Woodman in a Storm, by Gainsborough, brought £23 1s.; the Cottage Children, by the same artist, 15 guineas. Hubert and Arthur, £36 15s. (bought in). Northcote's fine original was sold for £38 17s. The Woodman, by Barker, brought £79 8s.; and the Girl and Cherubs, £10 15s. The Infant Bacchus (Guido Gerci) (Northcote), £24 13s; and a Girl and Cat (Gainsborough), £14 3s. 6d. Waterfall (Reynolds) was bought in at £45 3s. In the Scripture Room, the Nativity (Carlo Murratti) was sold for £21; and Dead Christ (Lodovico Caracci) brought 14 guineas; but the Madonna della Sedia, after Raffaelle, was bought in at £38 17s.

The purchasers were mostly dealers, one of whom bought to the extent of £500.

Thus has the collection of Miss Linwood's famed works been dispersed, and the Town has lost one of its sights; though not until it had delighted town and country sight seers for nearly a century.

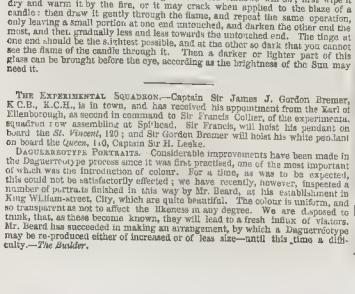
It may be as well to remind the reader that in No. 151 of our Journal is engraved a fine portrait of Miss Linwood, from a family picture.

SOLAR ECLIPSE THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

There will be a partial Eclipse of the Sun this afternoon (Saturday, April 25); and which will be visible throughout the whole of Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. The following diagram, adapted to Greenwich and Dublin, is taken from the "Illustrated London Almanack" for 1846, and it will serve tolerably well for every part of the British Isles

At Greenwich the Eclipse will begin at 32 minutes past 5 o'clock this afternoon; it is at its greatest obscuration, or middle of the Eclipse, at 14 minutes past 6; when almost one quarter part of the whole diameter of the Sun will be eclipsed, on the south limb; and the Eclipse will end at 54 minutes after 6 o'clock.

This Eclipse will commence at Dublin at 5h. 29m.: its greatest obscuration will be at 6h. 11¾m., and it ends at 6h. 52m., Greenwich time; or at 5h. 4m., 5h. 46m., and 6h. 27m., Dublin time respectively.



GREENWICH. DUBLIN.

At Edinburgh the Eclipse is very similar to that at Greenwich, and it will commence at 32 minutes after 5 o'clock; its greatest obscuration will be at 8 minutes after 6; and it will end at 42 minutes after 6 o'clock, Greenwich time, or at 5h. 19m., 5h. 56m., and 6h. 33m., Edinburgh time respectively.

In observing the Eclipse, dark glasses should be used to defend the eye from the intensity of the sun's light. Should any of our readers not be provided with a coloured or smoked glass at the time the Eclipse takes place, they may observe the image in water, placed in a situation that the water is not agitated by the wind. But it will be better to be provided with a piece of smoked glass, which may be done as follows:—Common glass used for windows will do; first wipe it dry and warm it by the fire, on it may crack when applied to the blaze of a candle: then draw it gently through the flame, and repeat the same operation, only leaving a small portion at one end untouched, and darken the other end the most, and then gradually less and less towards the untouched end. The tinge at one end should be the slightest possible, the other as dense as the pupil can see the flame of the candle through it. Then a darker or lighter part of this glass can be brought before the eye, according as the brightness of the Sun may need it.

THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.—Captain Sir James J. Gordon Bremer, K.C.B., R.C.H., is in town, and has received his appointment from the Earl of Ellenborough, as second in command to Sir Francis Collier, of the experimental squadron now assembling at Spithead. Sir Francis, with his pendant on board the St. Vincent, 120; and Sir Gordon Bremer will hoist his white pendant on board the Queen, 110, Captain Sir H. Leeke.

DAGUERREOTYPE PORTRAITS. Considerable improvements have been made in the Daguerreotype process since it was first practised, one of the most important of which was the introduction of colour. For a time, as was to be expected, this could not be satisfactorily effected; we have recently, however, inspected a number of portraits finished in this way by Mr. Beard, at his establishment in King William-street, City, which are quite beautiful. The colour is uniform, and so transparent as not to affect the likeness in any degree. We are disposed to think, that, as these become known, they will lead to a fresh influx of visitors. Mr. Beard has succeeded in making an arrangement, by which a Daguerreotype may be re-produced either of increased or of less size—until this time a difficulty.—The Builder.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Since Monday the arrivals of wheat of Foreign have been 3 at mederate, though of fair average quality. To-day the stands were by no means heavily supplied with samples of that grain, yet so inactive was the demand for it that prices were almost nominal, and a clearance was not effected by the finish. Upwards of 18 000 quarters of foreign wheat have arrived from Dantzic, Memel, and Hamburgh, and by private transactions took place, either in free or under lock parcels, at late rates. The quantity of barley was somewhat on the increase. The finest qualities were in fair demand, but all other sorts were much neglected. The supply of malt was not large, yet it was fully equal to the wants of the buyers. In prices no alteration to notice. Oats were very scarce, and fine parcels produced a little more money. Beans, peas, and flour as last noticed.

MARK LANE.—Wheat, 5000 qrs.; barley, 2000; oats, 3200. Cash: wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, 6000 qrs.

Monday.—Wheat, 4000 qrs.; barley, 1000; oats, 4800. Cash: wheat, ——; barley, 2100 quarters.

Ragsdale.—Wheat, Essex and K. ut, red, 46s to 50s; ditto, white, 55s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 50s to 56s; ditto, white, 56s to 58s; rye, 34s to 35s; grinding barley, 32s to 33s; distilling, 35s to 38s; malting ditto, 42s to 45s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 54s to 58s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 58s; Chevalier, 59s to 62s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire oats, 24s to 28s; potato ditto ——s to ——s; Poland ditto, ——s to ——s; ditto, ——s to ——s; beans, ——s to ——s; ditto, ——s to ——s; peas, ——s to ——s; flour, ——s to ——s.

Wheat—The prices of wheat have been, in the metropolis, are from 42s to 56s; of household ditto, 64s to 68s per 4 lb loaf.

Imperial Average—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 30s 2d; oats, 22s 9d; rye, 35s 5d; beans, 34s 9d; peas, 34s 0d

The Six Weeks' Average—Wheat, 56s 5d; barley, 30s 2d; oats, 22s 4d; rye, 34s 1d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 35s 11d.

Duties on Foreign Corn—Wheat, 17s 0d; barley, 8s; oats, 5s, rye, 5s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 8s 6d

Tea.—On the whole a steady business has been doing in this article privately, and prices are steadily supported. The stocks in the Company's warehouses still exceed 30 millions, and the corresponding period in 1845 [illegible]

Sugar.—The finest sorts of raw sugar continue in good request at full prices. In all other kinds a moderate business is doing, at late rates Refined goods [illegible] are previous quotations.

Provisions.—During the week the arrivals of Irish butter have been on a full average scale The show of Irish bacon has been small in number, but well in stock, the demand for it very heavy, at barely stationary prices. Foreign butter is dull, yet we can notice no material change. English butter steady at 78s to 84s per cwt. for fine and fine mild, and 66s to 76s per firkin for Devon The sale for all kinds of bacon is active, and the quotations are fully supported. Prime Waterford steady to Messrs. Harnett, at 56s to 58s; heavy, 46s to 47s; prime small limerick, 47s to 48s; and hoavy, 43s to 45s per cwt. For forward delivery, 2s per cwt. higher. Bad and ordinate middles firm, at late rates Hams command a steady, though not to any brisk inquiry, at from 56s to 62s for Limerick, and 60s to 70s per cwt. for Waterford. Lard, hard firm, at 42s to 44s for kegs, and 44s to 46s for barrels Waterford, landed, may be purchased at 38s to 40s per cwt. English meats very little doing; the quotations are nominally quoted. Scotch pork, in per owt, dearer prime small, 50s to 52s; second sizes, 42s to 46s, and large, 40 to 44s per cwt. Eggs in good request, at 14s to 15s per 120, Scotch, are 2s to 3s dearer, at 16s to 18s per 120.

Oils.—The market is very firm for most kinds of oils, and previous rates are well supported.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 5s to £4 15s; clover ditto, £4 8s to £6 0s; old straw, £1 5s to £1 15s; wheat straw, £1 1s to £1 5s per load

Potatoes. The arrivals of potatoes at the waterside continue moderately extensive. Scotch potatoes move off steadily, at from 70s to 140s; but other kinds are dull, at from 40s to 70s per ton.

[illegible] present week, has [illegible] kets and bags, the demand for them [illegible] There are sovereigns, large parcels of old [illegible] or rates must be complied with. The [illegible] tolerably well. Seeds [illegible] Kent ditto, £7 5s to £9 0s; [illegible] Kent ditto, £7 10s to £9 0s; cantrava, [illegible] day).—Adair's, 12s 6d; New Tanfield, 12s 6d; Stewart's Hartley 12s 6d; Bowes and Co., 12s; Gosforth, 12s; Hetton, 12s 6d; Wearsdale, 12s 6d; and Hetton, 16s per ton.

Smithfield Friday.—The arrivals of beasts up to our market are rather below the average, and the attendance of buyers by no means numerous, the beef trade was somewhat inactive, yet Monday's quotations were supported in every instance. From Scotland we received 380 beasts and 250 sheep, and from Holland 34 oxen and cows, prime 3s to 3s 2d; second qrs. 2s 8d to 2s 10d; third qrs. 2s 4d to 2s 6d; fourth qrs. 2s to 2s 2d; prime Scots 3s 2d; second qrs. 2s 10d to 3s; prime oxen 3s 2d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; prime cows, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime heifers, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; large coarse calves, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime ditto, 5s 2d to 5s 4d; large coarse sheep, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime Southdowns, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; lambs, 5s 6d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s, and quarter [illegible] ings, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 798; sheep and lambs, 5400; calves, 190; pigs, 270.

Newgate and Leadenhall Friday.—Our markets were again fairly supplies with [illegible] kind of meat, which moved off steadily, at the following quotations:—

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Interior beef, 2s 4s to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; small porkers, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; inferior mutton, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; weak, 4s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 6d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 6d to 6s 6d.

HENRY HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The protraction of the debate upon the Irish Coercion Bill, from its continued interruption to the settlement of the Corn and Tariff questions, joined to the state of our political relations with America, and the cessation of investment by the Government in the public funds, have operated to depress the prices of stocks in the English House, at the beginning of the week. Consols, on Tuesday, were done at 10½ for money, and 96 sellers for account. On Wednesday, however, an improvement occurred. The "Consolidated" proposed by Sir Robert Peel and the previous evening upon the railway question, from their tendency to at least lib. rate a portion of the capital locked up at present, and also to relieve allottees from liabilities which, if not speedily met, would, in many cases, entail ruin, gave an impetus to Consols, which closed at an advance of nearly ⅛ per cent. Considerable business was transacted on Thursday, and prices varied from 96 to 95⅞, 96⅛, and closing at 96⅛. This price was maintained at the close of the week; quotations standing at 96 to ⅛ for Money, and ⅛ for the Account. Exchequer Bills have not betrayed any marked improvement; and this indicates the continued demand for money: the quotation is 58 to 56. New Three and a Quarters are 97. Bank Stock is better—closing at 205¾ Reduced is 95¾; and Long Annuities, 10¾.

Absence of specialties and a limited amount of transactions, have been the characteristics of the Foreign House for some months past. Operations during last week have not tended to alter the dull uniformity. The only variation was in Spanish on Monday, which appreciated to 20¾ for every Five per Cents, the Three per Cents 26¾. This improvement has been since maintained, and, at closing, the quotations stand, Five per Cents, 25¾ to ⅞; Three per Cents, 36¾ Mexican has ranged between 31¾ Monday's price) and the improved quotation, 32¾, at which it closed. Portuguese Four per Cents have receded one per cent from Monday's quotation of 38. Dutch are rather heavy, particularly the Ctf. Russia, which close at 92. The Two-and-a Half per Cents are 59¼. Peruvian is 36. Grenada, 31¾.

Although the transactions in the Share Market continue to be very limited, there is an improvement in some of the old lines is visible. Brighton, Croydons, Dovers, Great Westerns, and Birminghams, are all firmer. South Westerns are heavy; and the Scotch lines have rather receded than otherwise. For the Irish lines (with one or two exceptions) no purchasers can be found. There is an indisposition to create a "rigs" upon the supposed result of Sir R. Peel's resolutions. But without the public come into the market, the attempt will only recoil on the projectors. As the lessons on Scrip have been so generally diffused, the probability is that a forced rise in prices will not tempt those who have anything remaining to dispose at present, on a rising market. After the dissolution of the bubble mania, and the return of the transparent portion of the deposits, such a prospect may be indulged in, with better hopes of success. Closing prices of the shares most dealt in, will be seen in the list subjoined: Aberdeen, 3; Birmingham and Gloucester, 125; Bristol and Exeter, 69; Buckinghamshire, 21; Caledonian, 6; Chester and Holyhead, 21½; Direct Manchester (Remington's), 3; Direct Manchester (Rastrick's), 3½; Dublin and Galway, 2½; Eastern Counties, 23; Ditto New, 7¼ pm.; Eastern Union, 6¾; Buckinghamshire, 21; Glasgow, Half Shares, 10½; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, 1½; Great Eastern and Direct Great Western, 146½; Ditto, Half Shares, 85½; Ditto, Fifths, 33½; Harwich and Eastern Counties Junction, 2 All and Selby, 104½ Ditto, Half Shares, 25; Lancaster and Carlisle, ; Ditto, New, 9½; Liverpool, Manchester, and Lime Junction, 1½; London and Birmingham, 224; Ditto, Thirds, 74½; Ditto, Fifths, 44; London and Blackwall, 8; Ditto, New, 3; London and Brighton, 64; Ditto ditto, Fifths, 28½; London and Croydon, 21½; London and South-western, 77; Ditto, New Consolidated Eighths, 60; Ditto, New, 21½; Ditto, New, 17; London and York, 14; Midland Counties, 175; Ditto, Half Shares, 87½; Newcastle and Darlington, 144; Ditto New, 48; Newcastle and Berwick, 19; Newark, Sheffield, and Boston, 14½; North British, 29½; Ditto New, 8; North Midland, 56; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 25; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1½; North Staffordshire, 2 pm.; North Wales, 1; Norwich and Brandon, —; Ditto, New, 8; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 77. Perth and Dunfermline, 3; Preston and South Union, —; Rugby and Huntingdon, —; Scottish Midland, 6; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 4½; Manchester and Hereford, 1½; Shropshire Union, 1 ds.; South Devon, 20; South Midland, 3 ds.; South Eastern and Dover, 8½; Ditto, New, 2½; Ditto, Half Shares, 1½; Ditto, New (issued at £33 6s. 8d.), No. 2, 1½; Ditto, New (issued at £20), No. 4, 1½; Ditto New (issued at £10), No. 4, 3½; Stanhope and Richmond, —; South Wales, 1½; West Riding Union, 4 pm.; Worcester, Hereford, Ditto, and Gloucester, 1½ ds.; York and North Midland Extension, 33½; Bullogne and Amiens, 12; Brussels, Tpalouse, and Cette (Espelete), 2½; Ditto Rhenish, 6; Great North of France Constituted, 15½; Lyons and Avignon, 3; Luxembourg, 1½; Over Yssel, 3½ ds.; Paris and Strasbourg Constituted, 5½; Sambre and Meuse, 6; Paris and Rouen Unregistered, 3½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—There was not much business doing yesterday in either the English or Foreign House. Consols closed at 96 to ⅞ for money, and 96 to ⅞ for time. Prices in the Share Market did not vary materially, but a slight reaction on the previous day's quotations was perceptible towards the close of business.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21.

WAR OFFICE, APRIL 21.

11th Light Dragoons: Cornet T. Y. Hollins to be Lieutenant, vice Somerville; L. Alexander to be Cornet, vice Dalrymple.

1st Foot. Capt. J. M. Ia ait to be Captain, vice J. M Carter; H. F. Jones to be Ensign, vice Wansbrough. 4th: J W Tovey to be Ensign, vice Cureton. 8th: Lieut. J. Johnston to be Captain, vice Clowes. Ensign R. B. Sneyd, vice Carpenter. 9th: Lieut. W. Johnston, vice Hamilton, Assist-Surgeon Fontaine, vice Forster 13th: Quartermaster-Sergeant T. Airy to be Ensign, vice Tyrer. Jones to be Ensign, vice Wansbrough. 14th: Ensign W. C. Tryer to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton. Ensign T. Hainsworth to be Lieutenant, vice Tryer; Quartermaster Serg. ant Minister to be Ensign, vice Hammersley; Lieut. W. Douglas to be Adjutant, vice Dwyer 29th: J. W. D. Acklie to be Ensign, vice Bevan. 31st: Ens.-Lieut. G. Dudgeon to be First Lieutenant, vice Deane. 32nd: R. S. W Smith to be Ensign, vice Ussher. 33rd: R Sweetnam to be Second Lieutenant, vice Alexander. 35th Serg. Major H. Mitchell to be Ensign, vice Smith. 39th: Ensign A Wright to be Lieutenant, vice Mitchell. P. H. P. Aplin to be Ensign, vice Wright. 52nd: Capt. A. L. Gardiner to be Captain, vice C. F. Dashwood. Assist-Surg. W. S. Johnstone to be Lieutenant, vice Hartnell. 57th: Assist-Surg. C. F. Stephenson, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Stewart. 60th: Lieut. J. C. M'Leod to be Ensign, vice Chisholm. 90th: Ensign S. W. H Weekes to be Lieutenant, vice Cotton. 97th: Ensign W. B. Doveton to be Lieutenant. [illegible] 72nd: Captain A. Warren to be Captain, vice Balfour. [illegible] Col. to be Ensign, vice Followes; R. P. Harvey to be Lieutenant, vice Sweetnam; Ensign R. Williams, 73rd Ensign W. Muscombe Jones to be Lieutenant, vice Berry. 82nd: L. Sclobertson to be Ensign, vice Wansbrough. 83rd: Capt. F. White, from the Cavalry, vice C. F. Dashwood. Assist. Surg. W. S. Johnston, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Hartnell. 92 d: R. Bayliss to be Ensign, vice Thom. 93rd: Lieut. A. Fraser to be Lieutenant, vice Dunn. Ensign W. G. H. Richarson to be Lieutenant, vice Miller. J. W. G. Ross to be Ensign, vice Richardson. 95th: Major J. S. Ramsay to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Hamilton; Sergeant W. Smith to be Ensign, vice Maxwell. 97th: R. Ived West to be Ensign, vice Forrest.

Regiment: Ensign W. S. Cumming, vice Mayne; Ensign W. C. Bancroft, vice Davidson, to be Lieutenants.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, APRIL 20.

Royal Artillery—Second Capt. J. W. Cornish to be Captain, vice Gover. First Lieu [illegible] T Devereux to be Second Captain, vice Ormsby. Second Lieut. W. B Saunders to be First Lieutenant, vice Devereux. Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor to be Captain, vice Foulkes; First Lieut H. Blackwood to be Second Captain, vice Taylor; Second Lieut. C. G. Smith to be First Lieutenant.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED. GOLD-SMITH, Bristol, silversmith.

BANKRUPTS.—S. M [illegible] HAM, Dover, banker. H. STEPHENSON, Southwick-street, Hyde-park, builder. J. HOLLINGSWORTH, Hanover-square, tanner. H. BRAHAM-OLIVER, Richfield, common brewer. J. HIGGS, Houndsditch, undertaker. J. B. CHAMPION, Wharfside, Rotherhithe, merchant. J. and H. GRAHAM-MORRIS, Mincing-lane, Cornhill, general merchants. J. SALMON, Rainham, Essex, carpenter. J. CLARKSON, Bramley, Yorkshire, plumber and glazier. J. WALKER and J. WALKER, Leeds, shearbinders. W. CROSS, Weymouth, coal merchant. T. TALLOW, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, grocer. T. ALLEN, Holcombrook, Derbyshire, cotton manufacturer. W. BRAHAM, Birwood, Staffordshire, road contractor. D. ANTALOUS, Ashton-under-Lyne, Staffordshire, spirit merchant. J. WAVERHAMPTON, Jigsaw. W. HESLAM, Manchester, journal's bookseller. R. HAWSON, Rochdale, Lancashire, woollen manufacturer. J. HOLDEN, Rochdale, Lancashire, woollen manufacturer. H. FOWKES, Sandwich, Kent, draper. D. JOHNSTONE, Manchester, joiner and builder. H. L. FITZJAMES Bar [illegible] H. MITCHINSON, Liverpool, merchant. W. KELLY, Liverpool, commission merchant. J. HUGHES, Liverpool, commission merchant. G. SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. D. WEIR, Glasgow, innkeeper. T. LENNOX, Perth, grocer.

FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED. T. REYNOLDS, Cowcross-street, cheesemonger. W. BENYON, Birmingham, saddle manufacturer

BANKRUPTS.—J. [illegible] Master [illegible] moniller and wine, wright. P. KLETT, South-street, Manchester, [illegible] J. CHAMBERLAIN, East Dereham, Norfolk, cabinet maker. WILLIAMS, Fenchurch-street City, merchant. T. E. DEACON and J. DAY, Hounsl Hempstead, Hertfordshire, common brewers. R. BONE, Durham, grocer. P. HEWITT, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, grocer. W. H. WILSON and R. VAUSH, Kingston-upon-Hull, merchants. B. BENSLEY, POOLHOLM, Shrewsbury, printer. J. BUTTER, Manchester, commission-agent. T. JACKSON, Saltersbrebble, Halifax, Yorkshire worsted spinner. W. MILNER, Halifax, Yorkshire, worsted spinner.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION. [illegible] Avoch, Ross-shire, merchant. J. MURRAY and R STEWART, Paisley, printers.

BIRTHS

At Sedgmore-sar-Mire, the Hon. Mrs. Henry Graves, of a daughter.—At Gl [illegible] S. W. road, Mrs. Lawson.

[illegible] Lady Caroline Neville-Grenville, the lady of William Archer Shee, Esq., of a son.—At Hanover-terrace, Regent's-park, the wife of Arthur Powell, Esq., of a son.—At North Cranke Rectory, Yorkshire, the Hon. and Rev. Thomas H. Keppel, of a son.—In Belgrave-square, Lady Caroline Vesey, of a daughter.—At Camberwell, Mrs. Townsend Charles Lance, of a daughter.—At Upper Clapton, Mrs. S. Searle, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES

At Sudbiton New Church, Kingston-upon-Thames, Mark Anthony, Esq., to Miss Ellen Mary Stafford, daughter of the late Captain Stafford, R.A.—At Chelsea, Charles Caroline Rose, eldest daughter of J. D. Rebbet, Esq.—At Headley, Surrey, John George Kent, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, to Miss Mary Dalgleish.—At Leicester, Captain Henry Hutton, son of Colonel the Hon. Henry Chetwynd Chetwynd, to the eldest daughter of Sir John Gardiner.—At Eaton Church, Essex, by the Rev. Charles [illegible] Lamplough, Rector, Mr. W. Haney Wilson, of Lincoln's-inn, to Miss Louisa Ann Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Mr. James Cumberbatch.—On Thursday, the 16th instant, at St Mary's Church, Leicester, by the Rev. Richard Fawcett, M.A., Mr. Edward Cowell, of Trinity College, Cambridge, to Hannah Hemsdale, Perrot Baker, M.P., to Caro [illegible] daughter of John T [illegible] Esq., of Ice Newarks.

DEATHS

At Carlisle, Sir Simon Heward, Knt, F.R.C.S., late Royal Collegs of Surgeons of England, and formerly Senior Member of the Medical Board at Madras, aged 77.—At Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, Mrs. Moore Dupuy, Esq., and daughter of Lieut.-Colonel Chaun, of water on the brain, Henry Thomas, Earl of Carlisle, aged 12.—At Tunbridge-wells, Lieut.-Col. James Lewis Aplings, late of the 3d Dragoon Guards, aged 71.—On the 20th year of his age, Sir John Saunders Sebright, Bart., of Beechwood, Herts.—At Kensington, Edward Hove Bayne, Esq., in the 89th year of his age, for above 50 years an active magistrate, and Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Middlesex and Surrey.—At Hatch-street Gravesend, in his 65th year, Mrs. Sarah Gardiner, mother of Mungo Park.—At Sudbrook street, Hyde-Park, Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Thomas Wallis, Esq., of Bedford-square.—At Rome, Dominica Walton, D.D.—In the 72nd year of his age, Mr. Hubert Teggin, of Cascadia, publisher.—At Exmouth, the Rev. Henry Ward, of Princes-row, Staffordshire.—On the 21st instant, Charles Vavasour, son of Sir Edward Vavasour, Bart.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE For the BENEFIT of MDLLE. LUCILE GRAHN On THURSDAY NEXT, APRIL 30, will be performed Donizetti's Opera, DON PASQUALE Nortes, Mesdms. Grisi; Dr. Malatesta, Sig. Fornasari; Ernesto Sig. Mario. Don Pasquale Sig. Tamburini. In the course of the Evening will be rendered Mendelssohn's [illegible] mond, LE DELIRE D'UN PEINTRE. Stephano, M. Perrot; Baboli di Grende, [illegible] Mdlle. Lucile Grahn. Le Capitaine, M. Perrot. Le Lapidaire, LA CASTILIANA By Mdlle. Lucile Grahn and M. Perrot. With SELECTIONS from CATARINA; or, [illegible] To be followed by the last Act of NINA [illegible] Sager; Carlini; Sig. Lablache; Sig. Rotelli; Ferrers, Mdlle. Corbari [illegible] Coulon; Mdlle. Adeline; Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and the Ballet Corps. [illegible] LA DRAPIE Ballon, Mdlle. Lucile [illegible] Saddler's Wells Theatre.—Will be made at the Box-office, Opera-colonnade, [illegible] to commence at Half-past Seven o'clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE, Westminster-bridge. Proprietor, Mr W. BATTY.—Patronised by her MAJESTY THE QUEEN, PRINCE ALBERT, and the PRINCESS ROYAL.—Unparalleled Success of Mr. LEMAR HOOK'S new Equestrian Spectacle of the ARAB AND HIS STEED; or, the Pearl of the Desert, performed nightly, successful! nightly crowded by [illegible] with rank and Fashion! On NEXT MONDAY, April 27 and following evenings, will be presented the GRAND ASIATIC DRAMA, in which the whole resources of the Establishment will be brought into re [illegible] combating the Double Stud, &c. &c. Now on, popular SCENES of the Circus to CIRCE. The whole concluding with the Grand Drama of the [illegible]-HOY OF ST AUSTELLS, or, The Fatal Snow-drift. Clowns Mr. Frank Paul; Mr. Thompson.

COLOSSEUM. CONTINUATION OF PRICES.—

Box Exhibition	..	.. 2s 6d
[illegible]	..	.. 2s 6d.
Children under Twelve	..	.. 1s 6d
[illegible]	..	.. 1s 6d.
Children	..	.. 6s. 6d.

The most favourable Views now on the Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five; and Eight till Half-past Ten

DAY EXHIBITION Panorama of London—Museum of Sculptures—Conservatories—Gothic Aviary—Classic Ruins—Swiss Cottage—Mont Blanc—and Mountain Torrent, &c., from Ten [illegible]

EVENING EXHIBITION The New and Extraordinary Panorama of London, by Night with additional Attractions, in the Effects, at Eight, Nine, and Ten. The Museum, Conservatories, Mont Blanc, &c. &c., from Seven till Half-past Ten.

[illegible] be protected and designed by Mr. W. BRADWELL

GENERAL TOM THUMB'S FAREWELL LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, the crowded state of the Room last week, and the thousands of persons that were unable to gain admittance, has induced the Proprietor to announce that he will positively discontinue their duties. The Little General appears every Day [illegible] at Three and Eight o'clock precisely, in which he had the honour of appearing seven times before her Majesty, and all the principal Courts of Europe. Hours, from Half past Two till Six and from Eight till Ten. Half-past Seven to Nine Admission, 1s. Children Half-price. After Nine o'Clock each evening, he appears in his New Fancy at the Egyptian Hall.

ANCIENT HALL OF ROME, Great Windmill-street, Eight [illegible] Haymarket.—Brilliant Success. The unrivalled pictures of [illegible] UX VIVANS of the Prize Cartoons, and Great Paintings and sculpture of the great masters, are daily attracting thousands of persons, on which the public press has passed such high encomiums. The lovely Tableau of Venus rising from the Sea, is pronounced by all to be a masterpiece of beauty and [illegible] further notice.—Morning performances to commence at three o'clock, and half-past eight in the evening Reserved seats and Private Boxes, 2s. 6d.; [illegible] splendid series of Tableaux of peculiar character and interest, on Monday, April 27th.

EXHIBITION OF TABLEAUX, OIL PAINTED and in RELIEF, 209, [illegible] STREET.—The Public is respectfully informed that the above Rooms, for [illegible] and [illegible] Exhibition, will be opened every part of the Day, on Monday next, April 27th. [illegible] Admission, 1s.; which will also admit to the Gallery of Tableaux open from Ten till Six.

NOVELTIES of extreme interest and information at [illegible] ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION SCENES at the OTTOMAN TERRITORIES a part of an entirely NEW SERIES of DISSOLVING VIEWS, PORTRAITS, and duels published now in the SIKH GOVERNMENT and ARMY [illegible] GALOPE, illustrated by the GRAGUE MICROSCOPE; also PORTRAITS of Sir H. HARDIN [illegible] and ROBERT and LADY SALE. The PHYSIOSCOPE and CHROMATROPE, the new [illegible] Optical exhibition. The most interesting of the Novelties at work are MAGNETISM [illegible] RIC ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE, for ascending [illegible] ing Inclined Planes, [illegible] RAILWAY, an UNRIVALLED [illegible] MACHINE, DOD'S NEW PATENT KEDGE-BOAT, GOVERNOR, and the ADMISSION [illegible] ments with the DIVING BELL and DIVER. [illegible] ON MISTRY and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant [illegible] Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price. A brief Description of the Ottoman Territory, from Notes by a Rhine Years' Resident, presented to the Visitors.

A RAILWAY TRAVELLER'S REASONS for ADOPTING UNIFORMITY of GAUGE. Stated in a Letter to the Rt. Hon. J. BERNAL, Esq. JOSEPH CUNDALL, 12, Old Bond-street.

THE PLEASURES OF HOME, by STUART FARQUHAR. Part I. Collected, by permission, to Lord Brougham Part II. to Charles [illegible] See the leading journals

Lately published in post 12mo. price 5s. or neatly bound in leather, with a pocket, 7s 6d., THE EXECUTORS' ACCOUNT BOOK. Exhibiting a Concise and Comprehensive Method [illegible] By THOMAS SPRY [illegible] Hinckley, and all Booksellers

On Saturday, May 2, will be published, price Three Half-pence, No. I. of THE LITERARY BEACON, a WEEKLY JOURNAL, for the Drawing-room, the Study, and the Cottage; containing articles of Literature Science, and Art, by Unbeneficed Living Authors.—London: Published by W. STRANGE, 51 Paternoster-row, and sold by all Booksellers

MUSIC FOR THE MANY.—THE MUSICAL HERALD, Edited by an Eminent Writer, containing Four Quarto Pages of Select Music, and Four of entertaining Literature, will be Published on the 2nd of May, for the small charge of only TWOPENCE Notwithstanding its unprecedented cheapness, the lovers of Music are invited to inspect the contents of a new ora To be had of all Booksellers

PARISIAN COSTUMES.—TOWNSEND'S Selection of Parisian Costumes for May price Twelve-pence, contains four Quarto Plates coloured, consisting of those works have ever been published at a price so low. A reference to the last numbers, any of which may be procured will prove how invariably the London fashions have been taken from those models Published by SIMPKIN and MARSHALL and may be had of Booksellers

Just Published, fourth edition, with Cases of Cure and Plates, in 8vo., cloth, price 8s. ON LIVER and BILIOUS DISEASES, Stomach Complaints, Indigestion, and Disorders arising from Intestinal Irritation By S.D. SILVA, M.D., F.S.A., Surgeon, &c. "We strongly recommend those of our readers who are afflicted to procure a copy of this work."—City Chronicle "A very valuable and instructive work."—Saltaby Journal. London: SIMPKIN and Co., Stationers'-hall-court; and OLIVER, 33, Pall-mall.

"DON GIOVANNI," "NINO," "SONNAMBULA," and "FRA DIAVOLO," the three Operas, with their respective Overtures, are given in PIKE PIANISTA. Nos. 66, 67, 68, and 87, 2s. each, the price of a mere song. They are beautifully printed on large and clear music paper, from engraved facsimiles of the original MSS. By post, twelve postage extra. The price will shortly be raised to 3s Pianista-office, 67, Paternoster-row (one door from Cheapside).

THE FAMILY HERALD.—PARTS 34 and 35 of this popular and interesting Literary Miscellany, price only Sixpence each, contain "Mabel Grey" by Mrs. Stephens; "The Lady Helen;" "Valerie, or the Young Italian;" "The Scotch Wife;" "The Sheep Worker," by Tyro Pedestre, or the Family Herald; "Jessie Ross, or John and his Nephews;" "Alonzo and Zamora;" "The Professor's Daughter," and several other charming Tales, with a variety of useful, moral, entertaining, and instructive reading for all ages. Everybody reads the FAMILY HERALD, the most unrivalled favourite ever published.

HARK ON SPINAL DISEASE. This day is published, royal 8vo., 7s., PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on the Causes, Prevention, and Cure of CURVATURES of the SPINE. With Twelve Engravings, illustrative of the Cases. By SAMUEL HARK, M.R.C.S. Lately published, by the same Author, 8vo. 5s. 6d. CASES AND OBSERVATIONS, illustrative of the Beneficial Results which may be obtained by close attention and perseverance, in some of the most Chronic and unpromising instances of Spinal Disease. With 18 Engravings on Wood. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street; and may be had of all Booksellers.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price 1s., contains Double the Number of SUMMER FASHIONS given in any other work, and is the ONLY ONE that contains the ROYAL DRESSES, the PARIS FASHIONS, and every other Fashion of the Month. Also the WEDDING DRESS and Dresses for Children Novelty A superb coloured Giant Plate (size, 16½ inches), and Eight Pages of Music, by John and his Nephews." "Alonzo and Zamora;" "The Professor's Daughter," and several other charming Tales, with a variety of useful, moral, entertaining, and instructive reading for all ages. Everybody reads the FAMILY HERALD, the most unrivalled favourite ever published.

HARK ON SPINAL DISEASE. This day is published, royal 8vo., 7s., PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on the Causes, Prevention, and Cure of CURVATURES of the SPINE. With Twelve Engravings, illustrative of the Cases. By SAMUEL HARK, M.R.C.S. Lately published, by the same Author, 8vo. 5s. 6d. CASES AND OBSERVATIONS, illustrative of the Beneficial Results which may be obtained by close attention and perseverance, in some of the most Chronic and unpromising instances of Spinal Disease. With 18 Engravings on Wood. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street; and may be had of all Booksellers.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price 1s., contains Double the Number of SUMMER FASHIONS given in any other work, and is the ONLY ONE that contains the ROYAL DRESSES, the PARIS FASHIONS, and every other Fashion of the Month. Also the WEDDING DRESS and Dresses for Children Novelty A superb coloured Giant Plate (size, 16½ inches), and Eight Pages of Music, by John and his Nephews." "Alonzo and Zamora;" "The Professor's Daughter," and several other charming Tales, with a variety of useful, moral, entertaining, and instructive reading for all ages. Everybody reads the FAMILY HERALD, the most unrivalled favourite ever published.

DODD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, AND TITLED CLASSES, FOR 1846. Now Ready, in royal 8vo., with 18 Engravings on Steel, price 30s., cloth, A PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND including the Junior Branches of the Nobility and Titled Classes, elaborately arranged, and containing, in addition to the usual contents of a Peerage, Knights, Bishops, Judges, Privy Councillors, &c. By C. R. DODD, Esq., Author of "The Parliamentary Companion," &c. "The arrangement of this volume is simple; the care, diligence, and accuracy with which it has been executed, fully realize the original design of the work."—The Times. WHITTAKER, 13, Ave Maria-lane.

SIR HENRY POTTINGER, BART., G.C.B.—The brilliant termination of the Chinese War has invested with extraordinary interest the details of the services of Sir Henry Pottinger, and will, no doubt, cause the volume recently published respecting them to be eagerly consummated; and it is with peculiar pleasure that Messrs HENRY GRAVES and Co announce to the British Public "MEMOIRS and SERVICES of the most distinguished and most successful of modern diplomatists, painted by SAMUEL GRANT, Esq., A.R.A., has been entrusted by Her Majesty's Government to His Excellency, KEYING, the High Imperial Commissioner of the Celestial Empire, and has been executed by him in the presence of the Commissioner of the Celestial Empire, and has been executed by him in the presence of the Queen, and may now be viewed, daily, at the Gallery of Messrs. GRAVES and Co No. 6 Pall Mall, London

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATION Now Ready, in royal 8vo., with Portraits, 24s LORD BROUGHAM'S LIVES OF MEN OF LETTERS AND SCIENCE Who Flourished during the Reign of GEORGE III. (with Original Letters): comprising Dr. Johnson, Adam Smith, with an Analytical View of his great work; Lavoisier, Gibbon Sir J. Banks, and D'Alembert HEARTSEASE; or, THE SOLDIER and STATESMAN. By the Rev. G. CROLY, LL.D., Author of "Salathiel," &c., 3 vols. [illegible] III. EMILIA WYNDHAM. By the Author of "Two Old Men's Tales," "Mount Sorel," &c. 3 vols. "Emilia Wyndham' is a masterpiece [illegible] on and the whole story a delightful combination of the natural, the picturesque, and the [illegible]—Examiner.

LIVES of the KINGS of ENGLAND. By THOMAS ROSCOE, Esq. Vol. I., comprising WILLIAM the CONQUEROR, and HISTORICAL SKETCHES with Miss Strickland's "Lives of the Queens of England," 10s 6d bound. HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough street.

Library, 19, Holles-street. BULL'S NEW SYSTEM FOR FAMILIES AND BOOK SOCIETIES Families paying £6 6s. the year have all the New and Standard Works as they appear, twelve volumes at a time in town, or twenty-four in the country; Catalogues and Boxes free of expense, and Two Guineas' worth of the New Books to keep at the end of each year. The Terms for country Circular, with full particulars and grants and post-free, on application, enclosing two stamps, to MR. BULL, Librarian, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London. Also, a Supplement to Bull's Catalogue of Popular Works, whatever from the Library, at 2d. per volume.

Just published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nineteenth French Edition) CONSTIPATION (CONSTIPATED); the Exposition of Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Destroying Habitual Constipation, without using either purgatives or any artificial means whatever (the discovery recently announced by M. Morison) Extraordinary certificates from eminent physicians and other persons of distinction Free by post, 1s. 6d. Sold by JAMES KNOX and Co., Tea Dealers, 45, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING, Patronised by the ROYAL [illegible] Hodges and Co., Wes-

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY. NEWMARKET RACES Special Trains will leave London for Chesterford and Cambridge on [illegible] Tuesday, the 28th Instant, at 8 a.m., for Chesterford, at 8h. 45m., and Cambridge, at 9h. 30m. Returning from Cambridge at 5h 30m., P.M., and from Chesterford at 7h. 0m., P.M. On Friday, the 29th, Train will leave Cambridge for London at 5h. 30m. P.M. only. Second class carriages will be attached to the Trains leaving London at 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Passengers booked through to and from Newmarket, at the same fares as for the Last Spring Meeting. For particulars see hand-bills, to be had at any of the Company's stations. By order, C. P. RONEY, Secretary.

Offices, Shoreditch Station, 22nd April, 1846

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—THOMAS HEWIS attracts attention to that Stock of LATHES and Machinery therewith connected; together with the very best description of Lancashire TOOLS, &c., now on hand. The Proprietor, having greatly increased the extent of [illegible] and having devoted much time and capital to the improvement of Lathes, beg to announce their determination to supply only such articles as they can recommend, and which shall be made with every attention and skill. Chucks of every description, Slide rests, Rose-engines, and other contrivances and details. Lathes fitted up with Elevating and Screwing apparatus constructed on the most approved principles. Alterations and repairs promptly attended to. All kinds of machinery built to order DEANE, Gun Manufactory, 30, King William-street, London-bridge.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel-Keepers and Large Consumers, supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Price, for Cash

Black	2s 8d	3s 0d	3s 4d	3s 8d	4s 0d	4s 4d	4s 8d
Green	3s 4d	3s 8d	4s 0d	4s 4d	4s 8d	5s 0d	5s 4d
Coffee	9d	10d	1s 0d	1s 2d	1s 4d	1s 6d	1s 8d

One pound and upwards sent carriage paid to any part of the Country or Town for Gifts of Tea and Specimens delivered free of carriage to any part of the Kingdom

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD, London.—The following sample package is recommended to Families, who wish previous to purchasing their usual supply of Tea, to test for themselves the superior excellence of the goods sold by DAKIN and COMPANY, Tea Merchants, and to will be forwarded to the Country the 24 hours after the receipt of a Post-office order.

3 lbs	The Finest True Rich Congou Tea	at	4s	6d	0 13 6
1 lb	Very Fine Hyson or Gunpowder	at	5s	6d	0 5 6
1 lb	Strong Congou, Tea for Domestics	at	3s	4d	0 3 4
6 lbs	Coffee, ripe and rich in Flavour	at	1s	4d	0 8 0
1 lb	The Lil English Mustard	at	1s	6d	0 1 6
2 lbs	Best Barnsdale Arrowroot (in a Tin Case)	at	1s	6d	0 3 0
1 lb	Finest Taylcon imported	at	7s	8d	0 7 8
1 lb	Finest Benecolon Cloves	at	3s	0d	0 0 3
1 lb	Finest Bruised Cassia	at	2s	0d	0 0 2
1 lb	Very Best Cayenne Pepper	at	3s	6d	0 0 10
					£2 0 3

All Goods afterwards ordered will be sent warranted equal to those samples.

PAPER HANGINGS.—A Stock of 50,000 Pieces always Ready, in Satins, Flocks, Gold, Damasks, Lincrusta Walton, Granite Hard Stone &c. &c. at extraordinary prices. Terms, Cash.—Paper Stainers supplied with long Elephants at Manufacturers' Prices—Cash.—LESCHALLAS, 32, Bedford-row, City, corner of Rise-lane

AIR-GUNS and AIR CANES.—An entirely New and further Improved Assortment of these portable and exhilarating-destructive weapons now on sale, opened by REILLY, Gun-maker to the Queen, and Inventor of the Detonating Gun, 502, Holborn A shot, fall with harpoons, &c. &c., from 25s. each.—REILLY, Gun-Maker, 502, Holborn

R. WILLY and CO., 15 and 16, LUDGATE-STREET (and Regent-street), will show on MONDAY, and following days, for WALKING DRESS, a magnificent assortment of French and English SUMMER CASHMERES [illegible] PRINTED MUSLINS [illegible] ...satty fine, in very good taste and much in demand for Spring Costume

R. WILLY and CO., 15 and 16, LUDGATE-STREET (four doors from St. Paul's) will show on MONDAY, and following days, a very good assortment of WALKING DRESSES, in rich printed cloth—By under their value; particularly a parcel of rich French Poult de Soie, 21 inches wide that are per yard under cost

R. WILLY and CO., 15 and 16, LUDGATE-STREET (and four doors from St. Paul's), wish to call the attention of the Public to their MANTLE DEPARTMENT, which contains all the novelty of the Paris market; and the Style and Fit cannot fail to please the most fastidious. The models must in request are the Visite, Syrian, Spagny, and Duchess de Nemours. N.B. Milliners and country buyers are requested to see how designs previous to making their purchases

R. WILLY and CO., 15 and 16, LUDGATE-STREET (and four doors from St. Paul's), are offering the largest and most choice selection of BONNET and CAP RIBBONS ever exhibited in one Establishment; and they respectfully invite all parties requiring this article to inspect their immense stock, more especially Milliners and Country Buyers who require very large quantity for Trade.

OUTFITS for INDIA, by Ship and Overland, including every requisite, both for Ladies and gentlemen, are SUPPLIED, at the lowest wholesale prices, by FRESHER and GLENNY, 152, Strand, where lists of outfits necessary for every purpose and requirement, with prices and particulars, may be had on application. N.B The only house in London for Thresher's India gauze waistcoats and the new overland trunk.

THE CORAZZA SHIRT.—Directions for Gentlemen to take their own measures for the Corazza, and every variety of Shirt, are now post free on application to the Makers, CARPER and WATERS, Carlton Chambers, 8, Regent-street, London. If a hat be ordered, a sample will be first made, and sent, carriage-free.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very low prices, for sale by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warehouse, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels for Country or Foreign, forwarded free of carriage, per the Parcel Delivery Station. John Capper and Son's General Linendrapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is conducted in Gresham-street, without change.

SILVER PLATE for the DINNER and TEA TABLE.—A Pamphlet is published containing Drawings and Lists of Prices of Silver Spoons and Forks, Tea and Coffee Services, and all the articles of silver required in family use. It may be had gratis, or will be sent to Tradesmen in any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies. A. B SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank).

ROMAN CAMEOS.—Recently Received, a few ROMAN CAMEOS, by some of the best Italian artists on the subjects consisting of the Graces—Bacchus—Nymph in the Well—and various Classical and Historical Dodges They are mounted in Gold, as Brooches. The price is from 30s to 5 guineas each, and upwards. A. B SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Statue of the Duke of Wellington.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—MESSRS. J. SANGSTER beg to solicit an inspection of their PARASOLS for this Season, including the most Elegant Patterns yet offered to the Public in Moreen, Glacés, and Brocaded Silks. The SYLPHIDE, Dapper and Son's General Linendrapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is conducted in Gresham-street, without change.

NEW PARISIAN ESTABLISHMENT for PERFUMERY, GLOVES, and ARTICLES DE PARIS, 180, REGENT-STREET, organized by L. T. PIVER, proprietor of the two largest Houses in the Style of Paris and Brussels, and to be OPENED MAY 4 Every effort has been made to render the London Establishment splendid and unique. Its fine beauty and quality of its productions, many of which have hitherto been unknown in this

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, Kitchen Ranges, Sinders, Register and general furnishing ironmongery, fitted complete, and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for verandahs, tents, &c., and every stands. Every article is warranted and marked at the lowest prices in plain figures for cash. Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square

STONE'S COFFEE-ROOM, PANTON-STREET, HAY-MARKET.—Messrs STONE beg to announce that their Coffee-room has been Re-embellished, Ventilated, and Improved, regardless of expense, with an extensive stock of the superior accommodation Mull its appointments, and is now open for the reception of their friends. An extensive Stock of old Bedford Port, Sherry, French and German Wines, of the first-rate Shippers, and most approved vintages. Burton and Scotch Ales. Lane's celebrated Cork Stout. Bass's Pale Ale, &c., always in fine condition

TO CONNOISSEURS.—A Delicious Novelty for Table.—Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Her Majesty Queen Adelaide, Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, Their Royal Highnesses Princess Alfred, Her Majesty Queen Adelaide, His Royal Highness Duke of Cambridge, His Royal Highness Duchess of Cambridge, and the Royal Family have graciously honoured [illegible] with their Patronage and Support. Manufactured by the Inventor, Sir GEORGE JOHN TURNER, Bart., of Bordeaux, and Bonded Stores, Hungerford Wharf, Strand, London. Sold in Packages, 1s.; Boxes, 1s. 6d., 2s., 3s. 6d., and 5s., containing 12 Biscuits Wholesale, and for Exportation To be had of all Italian Warehousemen, Grocers, and Biscuit Bakers. Town and Country Agents Wanted

BERDOE'S LIGHT WATERPROOF OVER-COATS, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever.—The established reputation of those garments has been so long and universally satisfied, that containing this to notice remains only to be necessary to add that their well-known extensive sale is continually producing fresh improvements, and that their well-known extensive sale is continually producing fresh attempts to mislead. For quality and style, sufficiency respectability, and real economy, the most luxurious and admired garments are unquestionably still unrivalled.—An extensive assortment of the above and other new materials, manufactured exclusively for W. B. for the present variety in Lamas and other new materials, manufactured exclusively for W. B. for the present season, is now ready at the Original Establishment, 96, Newgate-street, only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Over-Coat Maker, and Waterproofer, 69 Cornhill (North Side). A particular style for Ladies only for Clergymen.

PERRY AND CO.'S PATENT PAPER HOLDERS, or LETTER FILES, with Elastic Bands The advantages of these Paper Holders, with Patent Elastic Bands, over ordinary Letter Files, are very important Letters or papers are kept in perfect order, without folding or defacing them, they may be instantly referred to, removed, or replaced, and the number may be increased or diminished without affecting their security Manufactured of the following sizes, from 1s each, and upwards, 12mo., 8vo., 4to., and 4to. and foolscap folio Other sizes made to order.

PERRY and CO., Stationers and Dealers in such articles. Wholesale and for Exportation, by PERRY and Co., 37, Red Lion-square, London.

PURE BREATH.—The salubrious and disinfecting qualities of ROWLAND'S ODONTO render it the most effectual agent yet offered to the public for purifying and perfuming the Breath, and with its inestimable properties as an improver and beautifier of the Teeth and strengthener of the Gums, have obtained its adoption by the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe while the gouty, demand for it at once announces its fame in which it is universally held while the gouty, demand for it at once announces its fame in which it is universally held Price 2s. 9d per box. * * * "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden," is engraved on the Government stamp which is affixed on each box. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers of Eminence throughout the World.

THE PATENT READING EASEL.—The "Poetic Æsculapius." Dr Armstrong, in his celebrated poem, "The Art of Preserving Health," first published in 1774, has the following beautiful and appropriate testimony of this invention:—

"To sit
As nature grants,—is best, but o'er your
To lean for ever cramps the vital part.
And robs the fine mechanism of its play."

This portable and elegant piece of furniture can be fixed and detached at pleasure to and from any chair or sofa. To the student and invalid it is invaluable, and it will be found to be very useful in every family where there are young persons. The prices are 30s., 35s., 42s., and 50s. Sold by Benham and Co., 170, Regent-street; W. and C. Wilkinson, 14, Ludgate-hill, Sowa and Son, 5, Paternoster-pavement; Letts and Son, 8, Royal Exchange, London; and all

HAVE YOU SEEN THE GIANT? [illegible]
Have you seen the great "Giant" that stands in the City?
If not you can easily exclaim—"What a pity!"
For, really, you've lost a remarkable sight,
'Tis Giant, in bulk, and a Giant in height.
At any rate reader, the still in its place,
And all may behold its form and face,
Many "Giants," no doubt, [illegible]
But none can [illegible] ...ourse want we say
This "Giant" is truly a wonderful belag—
[illegible] such as Marshall and Snelgrove put forth your seeing,
'Tis a perfect Colossus—no wonder you stare,
[illegible]
[illegible] whose bold stock attention are [illegible]
Is the mighty new warehouse of MOSES and SON.
From whose Columns this giant is made
To all its gigantic extent is display'd
At the rising sun of March and the season for the spring
The "Monster Establishment" rose like a King.
While the public, in thousands, agape'd upon for what was done
By the "Giants" of commerce, E. MOSES and SON
And now, worthy reader, permit us to
To note a more "Giant in outward dimb
This Warehouse is filled with a gigantic stock
Vests trousers, and over-coats, dress-suits and frock,
The various cloths and the patterns of which

[illegible]
Thus have you will find of the [illegible]
And none can out-rival them, bear this in mind
In genuine cloths and beaver too,
The watch-word of MOSES and SON is "CUT-IN"
In one great particular point, let us show,
Just this Warehouse is "BIG"
The prices are "dwarfish"
Are certainly not like a [illegible]
And now at us close (with the reader's consent),
Or else we shall go to a "Giant" length more
Let us close with the hope that you'll give, as you ought,
The "Giant of Commerce your "silent support

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen Drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, and Outfitters, 154, 155, 156, and 157, Minories, [illegible] A

CAUTION.—Any article purchased [illegible] to receive it not approved of, will be immediately exchanged or [illegible]

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen Drapers, Clothiers, [illegible]

General Warehousemen, regret [illegible] obliged to guard the public against [illegible] falsehood "of being connected with them. or in the concern, and been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons, they have no connexion with any other house in or out of London; and those [illegible] clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the church, City, London

NOTICE.—The entrance to the bespoke department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is re-opened till twelve o'clock.

PEOPLE mindful of economy should recollect that, during the present depressed state of the markets, 8lb Bags of useful and excellent TEA may be had for either 10s., 21s., or 32s. 6lbs of good COFFEE for 5s., and fine sorts on equally advantageous terms.—East India Tea Company's Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Instructress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most fashionable Style in Six Lessons, for One Guinea the occurrence of the same can be fully obtained by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by MR. WILLIS, 41, Jermyn-street, Golden-square, Private Lessons in the Polka, Mazurka Galop, Cellarius, Deux Temps, at 42 hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Academy on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Academy on Wednesday and Saturday Terms may be had on application as above.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 268, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted to keep correct time half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for 8d. stamp.

NICOLL'S PALETOT of LLAMA CLOTH, registered 6 and 8 Vic., cap. 65. Patronised by the Prince Consort, Prince George of Cambridge, &c. This Overcoat recommends itself to the public generally, by its peculiar elasticity and lightness, moderate price, and also defiance against the almost constant humidity of the climate of Great Britain. To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, Regent-street.

BURTON BREWERY COMPANY (late Wilder- and Co.), at Burton-upon-Trent.—INDIA PALE ALE, and every variety of BITTER ALE. The celebrated Pale Ales manufactured at this Brewery, forwarded direct from the Brewery, to all parts of the Kingdom, or may be obtained of the following Agents already appointed for the sale thereof:—Messrs. Reid, Sandeman, and Reid, 5, Lawrence Pountney-hill; and Messrs. Warwick-st. Leamington; G. Wannwright and Son, Oxford-street, Liverpool, C. Boart, Marsh-lane, Leeds.—April, 1846.

CURL-OF-THE-HAIR and COIFFURE.—The invigorating properties of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL induce a strong tendency to curl: to [illegible] Price 3s. 6d. Patronised by the Nobility and Gentry of Europe. [illegible] This Overcoat recommends itself to the public generally, by its peculiar elasticity and lightness, moderate price, and also defiance against the almost constant humidity of the climate of Great Britain. To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, Regent-street.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly approved Preparation is universally admired for its delightful fragrance, for nearly a century past, established unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the skin, together with the valuable properties of giving a pure and radiance of complexion, and the most pleasing appearance of sallowness and discoloration, and promoting that transparency and freshness of the skin, which constitute the peculiar grace of a fine complexion.—"ROBERT GOWLAND, LONDON," is in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. 6d., Quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty, and the East India Company. Established 145 years. An extensive Stock of the finest description of Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, at the Manufactory, 18, Finsbury-pavement, London. Every article warranted and supported for so many years. Compensated duplex and lever watches, upon the principle [illegible] taken in exchange.—WEBSTER and SON, 74, Cornhill

IMPORTANT TO GENTLEMEN.—The SHIRTS supplied by W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, Strand (established twenty years), are unequalled for durability and superior fit. The following are universal satisfaction, and are 20 per cent cheaper than any in the trade, viz.—Marsland's patent Long Cloth with fine linen fronts, collars and wristbands, and very best work, 6s. 6d. each, and all Linen with extra fine fronts 10s. 6d. each Gentlemen waited upon in any part of London, or a sample shirt sent into the country, postage free, upon the receipt of a P.O. order for the amount, which is added as part payment of carriage The measure required is the size of the neck, chest, and wrist, tight.

THOUSANDS of SHIRTS for INSPECTION.—RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, Hosiers, and Outfitters, 89 St. Martin's-lane, and 29, Newstreet, Covent-garden, beg to inform the nobility, gentry, and the public that they keep for inspection and sale, an assortment of several thousand Shirts, including every description, from a shilling to five guineas, and that among them are some beautiful specimens of superior needlework at very moderate prices. Boys' Shirts in all sizes, and Ladies' Ready-made Linen of every description, at exceedingly low prices RODGERS and Co. allow Captains and other persons of influence a liberal commission on orders procured for this Establishment.

Agents Wanted. Country Agents Wanted.

SILKS, MANTELETS, and SHAWLS.—SEWELL and CO., of Frith-street, and Compton-street, beg to announce the completion of their magnificent Rooms; and solicit the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to an inspection of their new Silks, and other articles in their Linen Hose. From the recent reduction of duties on foreign silks and other materials, the prices this season will be found extremely moderate. A quantity of Rumnad Silks, 2s. 6d. per yard, 24 inches wide. A large assortment of Rich French Silks from 3 to 4 guineas A splendid choice of Gold and Silver Llamas from 8 to 8 guineas. S. and Co are also specifying an exceedingly low prices ROGERS and Co allow Captains and other persons of influence a liberal commission on orders procured for this Establishment.

COMPTON HOUSE, 89, Frith-street, Soho, and 29, Compton-street, Soho Agents Wanted.

SILKS, MANTELETS, and SHAWLS.—SEWELL and CO., of Frith-street, and Compton-street, beg to announce the completion of their magnificent Rooms; and solicit the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to an inspection of their new Silks, and other articles in their Linen Hose. From the recent reduction of duties on foreign silks and other materials, the prices this season will be found extremely moderate. A quantity of Rumnad Silks, 2s. 6d. per yard, 24 inches wide. A large assortment of Rich French Silks from 3 to 4 guineas A splendid choice of Gold and Silver Llamas from 8 to 8 guineas. S. and Co are also specifying an exceedingly low prices ROGERS and Co allow Captains and other persons of influence a liberal commission on orders procured for this Establishment.

COMPTON HOUSE, 89, Frith-street, Soho, and 29, Compton-street, Soho Agents Wanted.

THE PARISIAN GENERAL MOURNING ROOMS, Nos. 246, 248, Regent-street.—The Proprietors, in returning thanks to their numerous and [illegible] for the liberal support they have received since the opening of their establishment, they are compelled to enlarge their premises, and that they are now fitting up the whole of the premises, forming a spacious Assurance, as the Army, Income, being in the occupation of the Hudson's Bay Fur Company, as a GENERAL MOURNING ESTABLISHMENT. The Proprietors will be enabled to execute orders with that promptitude which they will be opened with complete assortment of every description of Mourning, and all the novelties direct from Paris. Public entrance to the Parisian Mantle and Manilla Rooms, 248, Regent-street.—CHAS COOK and Co., Proprietors

[illegible] EVERY OF SPRING COSTUME.—TO LADIES J. BAILLA begs to inform the Public that he has a premier [illegible] this season's Fashions, and each department is

ATTENTION TO THE FOLLOWING LIST IS [illegible]
The newest French Chenille, Shaded Gros, and Brocades.
The Queen's Royal Velvet Ribbons, in all widths.
The much-worn Claremont Lamases, Chinese borders
The Victoria Plaid Ribbons, in all widths and Widths—Parisols.
La Vielle Pardessus, le guimes, 1 guimes, trimmed with velvet.
[illegible] and Ribbon, 19s. 9d; usual price, 31s. 6d.
A lot of 600, at 4s. 9d each. Manufacturer's price,
600 Pieces of French Ribbons, Sky-lin Patterns
The Tuileries Brocade, at 3s. 9d per yard, First Quality
The Duchess of Irish Lin ns, Warranted
150 pieces Devise's Irish Linens, 8d. per yard
[illegible] in the Sobriety Gauze Graduated Robes
[illegible] and Cashmeres
360 pieces of Washing Check Muslin Ginghams, 6½ per yard.
Above Parisian patterns for Children.
An early inspection of these goods is desirable to Ladies and Families purchasing
J. BAILEY, Albion House, 77 and 78, St. Paul's Church-yard, the nearest house to

TO THE NERVOUS GIVEN AWAY, A PAMPHLET consists on Four Chapters on the History and Physiology of NERVOUS COMPLAINTS, and on the Curative Discovery, by which all Disorders of the Nerves, however severe and deeply-rooted, may be efficiently and permanently removed, with as much certainty as Henry Roby's Pleasure by Uber Mihi With an Appendix of Cases, and Testimonials of Cures Apply to Mr. HENRY NEWTON, 7, Northumberland-street, Trafalgar-square, London, enclosing one postage stamp, in return for which the Pamphlet will be forwarded by Return of Post. At Home, daily from 11 a.m. to 4, and in the Evening from 7 to 9, Consultation Fee. The remedies sent to all parts, at ONE-HALF THE PRICE the public has hitherto been charged for them

NERVOUSNESS CURED FOR THE MILLION

CAUTION.—A PUBLIC STATEMENT having appeared in a variety of the London papers, purporting to proceed from the Rev. WILLIS ROSELEY, and containing allegations prejudicial to Mr. HENRY NEWTON (late late Private Secretary to [illegible] FALSEHOOD—satisfactory proof of which Mr NEWTON will have much pleasure in submitting to all who will send for his Pamphlet, or favour him with a personal interview The unfitting to all who will send for his Pamphlet, or favour him with a personal interview The statement in question, there is every reason to believe, is the authorship of some designing person, dictated by motives of pique, and entirely without the cognisance and sanction of the Reverend gentleman alluded to, whose regard for the Public would scarcely admit of his [illegible] the enunciation of what he knows to be UNTRUE

NERVOUSNESS CURED FOR THE MILLION.—One [illegible] Monday in a normal quality, for a few weeks, to go on months, thus offices &c., at a sale, of 12s. a-week, and not as a Manufacturing Chemist in the meanest sense, for which he [illegible] Lately published, Sterling stated these facts, he thinks himself from the responsibility of the public health being tampered with by any designing and unqualified individual

THE MORE IMPORTANT OF HUMAN DISCOVERIES.—A Clergyman, late of Cambridge University, having cured himself of a NERVOUS or MENTAL COMPLAINT [illegible] by various [illegible] and by Miss Yates, out of 12,000 applicants knows not Twenty unscured who followed his advice, offers, from benevolence, rather than gain, to [illegible] others. Low spirits, nervous debility and exhaustion, determination of blood to the head, vertigo, groundless fear, failure of memory; incapacity for business, study, &c.; restlessness, irresolution, palpitation, timidity, blushing, indigestion, melancholy, dread of self-destruction, and insanity, &c., are curable by this important discovery shortly, the effects of self-destruction, and insanity, &c., are curable by this important discovery Most recover in six weeks.—Apply or address Rev. Dr. WILLIS ROSELEY, 18, Bloomsbury-street, Bedford-square. "I am from 6 to 7 in the morning," says the Courier. News, &c., "testimonials from persons of all ranks, from peers to peasants, expressing their gratitude to Dr Wade By every or during them."

BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH, New-road, London

MORISON'S PILLS.—THE VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE.

An Agent for the Sale of the above Medicine is to be found in every Town in the United Kingdom, and most of the principal Cities throughout the world. See the Directory "MORISON'S UNIVERSAL MEDICINE" are engraved on the government stamp affixed to each box, in white letters on a red ground, without which none can be genuine. No Chemists or Druggists are allowed to sell the Pills.

The following are the principal Depôts in London.

[illegible]	308 Strand
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

THE GREAT FRENCH STEEPLE CHASE.

This great sporting event, concerning which so much interest has been excited for some time past, both in England and France, came off on Sunday. With the single drawback, that the sun "disdained to shine," everything passed over in the most admirable manner. The concourse of spectators was such as we never before witnessed at any race in France, and the long line of carriages seamed of never-ending duration. The villages of Sceaux, Fontenay-aux-Roses, &c., are in the neighbourhood, and, on this occasion, they poured out their inhabitants with extraordinary profusion. Every road was dark with the living masses to the great scene of attraction. The arrangements at the scene of action were excellently conceived; stands of various degrees were erected for the spectators, and ample place was assigned for carriages and horsemen. The ground where the race took place is a flat, through which the Bièvre runs. It is mostly grass land, and is cut, at the far end, in two places, by roads which the horses had to cross. The starting point was a small meadow, right in front of the little stream just mentioned. The winning post was placed precisely opposite the starting point, so that when the horses cleared the river, they turned suddenly to the left, went along up the country for about two miles, and then, making a circuit, came back on the ground they had before traversed, and raced home past the point they had started from, leaving the point where they had cleared the stream on their right. When the horses turned suddenly to the right, after crossing the stream, they had to cross several hedges, ditches, and the piece of water, and two park walls, in all nineteen obstacles.

In consequence of the rain, the ground was exceedingly heavy, and some of the horses were greatly distressed at the finish. The bell rang for weighing a little before two; but, in consequence of the number of horses, it was near three before the preliminaries had concluded. About a quarter of an hour was occupied with the preparatory gallops in front of the Stand, and the greatest anxiety was manifested to view Pioneer, Culverthorpe, and the Roarer. The riders also came in for their share of wonderment; Captain Peel, Mason, M'Donough, and Oliver, being particularly inquired after. At this moment the crowd of sportsmen looking anxiously on, not only comprised all the gentlemen of the Paris Jockey Club, but a great number from England. Amongst the latter we perceived Lord Exmouth, Lord Canterbury, Lord Cantelupe, Sir Massey Stanley, Mr. Ricardo, &c. The Duke de Nemours was also present. The rain had by this time ceased, and every preparation being completed, the horses proceeded round by the bridge to take their places for the start.

Handicap for 10,000f, added to a sweepstakes of 500f; half forfeit; and 120f only, if declared to the Secretary of the Paris Jockey Club, before 11 o'clock at night on March 20th. The second horse to receive 1,200f from the entries, and the third to receive back his stake. Distance, 6,400 metres (about four English miles); 42 subs.

Mr. Tilbury's ch h Culverthorpe	..	..	(Captain W. Peel)	1
Mr. Vever's b h Little Tommy ..	..	..	.. (Owner)	2
Earl of Chesterfield's b h The Roarer	..	..	.. (Mason)	3
Lord E. Russell's b h Ragman ..	..	..	.. (Dixon)	0
Mr. Hay's br h Lancet ..	..	..	(W. McDonough)	0
Mr. W. Taylor's b h Pioneer	..	..	(Sir W. Don)	0
Mr. R. Cowen's b h Amsterdam ..	..	..	(Allsboue)	0
Captain Campbell's b h Cremeus	..	..	(Bradley)	0
Mr. G. Lambton's b m Chance ..	..	..	.. (Oliver)	0
Mr. Pearce's ch h The Scavenger	..	..	(Kitton)	0
Marquis de Las Marismas's b h Discord	..	..	(Taylor)	0

When the word was given to go, they all dashed together at the brook, which The Roarer went over first, Pioneer second, and Culverthorpe third. All the rest cleared it well also, except Cattonat, whose jockey fell. They all went over the second leap, a made fence, with equal success, except Cattonat, who refused, and whose chance was lost. Little Jimmy then went in front, and made strong running, followed by Lancet. Discord refused the third leap, and appeared no more on the race. No change of consequence occurred till they came to the road, where a sort of jumble took place, as sliding gently down. Culverthorpe here was obliged to hang back, Cremeus, who up to this point had gone a forward horse, but who now appeared distressed, being right in his way. At last, The Roarer, Lancet, Culverthorpe, Cremeus, Little Tommy, and Scavenger, got clear, the rest being a little behind. Scavenger refused at the last fence, near the turning flag, and lost ground; but, being a speedy horse, soon came up again to the others. After getting into the run home, Little Tommy, The Roarer, and Culverthorpe, were the only horses that had a chance, and, as they neared the winning-post, The Roarer fell behind, and the two others came along neck and neck. They cleared the last fence nearly at the same moment, Culverthorpe being perhaps a second in advance, and then set to for the finish. Little Tommy was, however, outpaced, and Culverthorpe won by about a length and a half. Loud cheering greeted Captain Peel, as he walked the winner back to the weighing stand; and it must be acknowledged that he merited the applause, as he rode capitally throughout. The second horse, too, was admirably jockeyed; and, when it is borne in mind that Mr. Vevers is a man of sixty-five years of age, it must be allowed that his nerve and determination are something altogether out of the common run.

THE COURSE, AND GREAT STAND.

THE COURSE.

It was an exceedingly quick race, the time being two or three seconds over eleven minutes. The value of the stakes is a trifle over 20,000 francs.

After the excitement occasioned by this crack affair had a little subsided, the bell rang for saddling for the second race, with gentlemen riders. It was a very different affair from the other, though not without interest also.

Purse of 1200f, added to 250f entries, half forfeit. The winner to be claimed for 5000f. Distance about 4000 metres (2½ miles). Gentlemen riders.

Mr. Rowles's br m The Witch	..	..	(W. Power)	1
M. de Bonexic's b h Chandos	..	..	(Owner)	2
Captain Best's b h Repealer	..	..	(Owner)	0

This race is easily described. The distance was shorter than the preceding event, but, excepting that the horses did not go so far from home, the ground was the same. They again started in the meadow in front of the Judge's stand, and Chandos in front, the Witch well up, and the old horse, Repealer (eighteen years, we understand), behind. Chandos bungled at the third or fourth leap, and lamed himself. The Witch then went on, and Repealer, not being able to compete with her in speed, was obliged to give in. The Witch went quietly over the ground, and won as she pleased.

The arrangements during the day reflect the greatest credit on Count de Vanblanc, the steward. Everything was in perfect order, and from beginning to end he discharged his arduous duties in the most able manner.

THE RACE COURSE—(CROIX DE BERNY.)

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, April 25 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 209.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE TEN HOURS BILL.

No doubt can be entertained that the commercial and manufacturing greatness of England has been gained by some sacrifice, and that no slight one, of social happiness: our enormous wealth has been acquired by enormous work, the last much more widely distributed than the first, and with fewer exceptions. All are not rich, but all are condemned to excessive toil; that condition applies to every one except those who live on their own gains, the accumulations of their predecessors, or hereditary fortunes. The professors are not more favoured than trades and handicrafts; all are pursued under a system of "high pressure," applied to every energy intellectual, no less than physical. The result of such a system is certain; we are always producing and exporting, and the wealth of the world flows to us as to a centre, the profit remains with us as an accumulation, and we are a rich people—among the nations what the millionaire is amid merchants. We are undoubtedly respected, probably envied; but it may be questioned if our condition is altogether as enviable as it seems to be.

There are drawbacks and abatements even to that pride of wealth in which, we fear, there is some disposition among us to indulge. The vaults of the Bank are heaped with bullion; the balance of trade is in our favour on every Bourse of Europe, and our war ships arrive from the ends of the world, freighted with treasure—Chinese ransoms and Lahore tributes. But the medal has a reverse; and there are Andover Unions, with men gnawing putrid bones; poverty in our cities, struggling always, and almost in vain; women overtasked at occupations underpaid; machinery revolving from year's end to year's end, compelling nerves and sinews to keep up with it, and yoking the wasting powers of man to the inexhaustible strength of iron and the elements of nature. It is a wonderful spectacle: wherever we look, there is toil severe and continual, as if men were born only to feed power looms and weave cotton till they sink into the grave, leaving another generation to follow the same career. But, absorbed as we are by occupation, symptoms are every now and then visible, calculated to shake our faith in this universal sacrifice of souls to Mammon. The average of life is shortened, and what remains is but a long working day; existence is rendered painful, by the excessive anxiety to make the most of it.

The wealth we create seems to bring no general and wide-spread blessing with it: the process is always going on, the result never obtained. It is beginning to be believed that in some cases a limit can be placed to the power that drags every class along with such terrible velocity. There is a tendency to restrict the demands of the wealth-creating monster on the energies of those to whom, for all their toil, it gives but a bare subsistence. To this feeling belong the class of measures which of late years have become of growing importance—such as those interfering with the employment of women and children in mines, and restricting the hours of labour in factories. To the same movement must be attributed the exertions that are being made to obtain the earlier closing of shops and establishments. They are all expressions of one general feeling, which will hereafter have to be directed by legislation, however reluctant legislators at present seem to enter on the task.

The whole of Wednesday was devoted to the Ten Hours Bill, which has fallen from the hands of Lord Ashley to Mr. Fielden. We think the cause has changed advocates for the better. It is true that Mr. Fielden has not one of the qualities of a leader. He is advanced in life; has never mixed in the strife of parties; and, in the art of addressing public assemblies, he is totally deficient. In the House of Commons, at least, he is physically incapable of making a single sentence audible, even to the most attentive listener.

Lord Ashley, on the contrary, was a very able debater; had the prestige of noble birth in his favour; possessed all the personal advantages that Mr. Fielden lacks; and was unquestionably sincere in his endeavours. But, we fear, his benevolence was almost too universal. His efforts were divided among many clients, for all of whom they could not, in the nature of things, be successful. It constitutes no reproach to his philanthropy; but, we fear, Lord Ashley was too good for the worldly atmosphere of the House of Commons, and the cold, hard natures of politicians.

Mr. Fielden, with respect to this particular question, has some advantages over him: one of which is the greatest and most effective quality that can be brought to bear on the Legislature; he is a practical man—intimately and thoroughly conversant with the subject, in all its details. He is also one of that class, which, it is said, would be injured by this kind of legislation; he is one of the largest employers in England; and his opinion must carry great weight with it. He strongly advocates a limitation of the hours of labour for children, young persons, and women. For adult men it is not proposed that any restriction should be made.

Sir James Graham grounds his opposition to the measure on principle; when he is told that the principle has been broken through with advantage, he resists the bill, not because what has been done already has not succeeded, but because he thinks the relaxation of the principle has been carried to the verge of safety. He cannot deny that every change in this direction, hitherto, has been for the better, but he fears to go any farther. He thinks it unreasonable that workmen who have experienced the benefit of limiting the hours of labour to eleven, should petition in favour of a bill that fixes the limit at ten. We should think it is a decisive proof in favour of the proposal. A power might be given to suspend the law in extraordinary cases where it could be proved that embarrassment to the manufacturer or the loss of a foreign order would be occasioned by the failure to execute it in a certain time; or the difficulty might be got over better by paying extra wages for overtime. But the danger is not very threatening from this quarter; the greatest evils arise from "slackness," and often total want of employment. If the work could be more equally distributed over the year, it must be an advantage; the two extremes of too much work or none at all, are equally to be avoided, it is between these two extremes that we at present vibrate, for the want of some regulating power.

The debate is adjourned till next Wednesday week, a longer interval than appears auspicious; but, from the present extraordinary and complicated state of public business, quite unavoidable. It is the third adjovrned debate of the House of Commons has this week had on its hands.

Whatever may be the result, the principle will make its way; the Premier once objected to it that it was impossible to apply it by law to all the myriads of classes and callings who were overworked. It may be so; but it is as well to do as much as we can, even if we cannot effect all we desire. Among some of these classes, at least, we hope there is energy enough to regulate their own position without appealing to a rather [illegible]. We have great hope from the spread of clearer ideas on the subject among the employers. The root of the evil is with the [illegible] competition of capital that enforces the severest labour on those to whom that capital gives occasional relief. While the employers do not spare themselves, it is vain to suppose they will spare others.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF PARIS.—VISCOUNT PALMERSTON AND M. THIERS INSPECTING MONT-VALMRIEN.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

There is, perhaps, no class in the kingdom that undergoes more constant, more severe, more wasting toil, than those of the retail shops and traders; its effects are not redeemed by the luxuries they can command, but which they can scarcely be said to enjoy; how many of this class perish in the prime of life! The anxiety of the mind wears out the frame, and both of them often break down together, long before their time. The wish to make a fortune, to leave their families independent, is, among this class, often carried to excess. The industry that should be spread over many generations is condensed into a single life, spent in a fever of accumulation, that his successors may live in idleness; and the consequent dissipation which so often squanders the wealth so clearly purchased, frequently teaches one of the most striking illustrations of the "vanity of human wishes." But these are the holders of the great power that moves the enterprise and industry of the world, and the destinies of mankind are almost in their hands; a little wisdom in the use of their influence would benefit themselves and others incalculably. It cannot be taught them by Acts of Parliament, but their intelligence [illegible] argument; and we think the more rational [illegible] in the [illegible] to be looking to find converts among those whose own personal influence would have more efficacy than the bills of a whole Session.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF PARIS.

[illegible] hours: the two Ex-Ministers started at eight o'clock in the morning, and did not complete the circuit till half-past four o'clock in the afternoon; walking, riding [illegible]

[illegible] of the most important fort, Mont-Valérien, upon the bank of the Seine, near the Versailles railway, and placed beyond the reach of any probable attack. It is intended to protect arrivals from the west, and to serve as a store for arms and ammunition: it contains, also, barracks for a very numerous garrison. A road [illegible] and a strategical route has been constructed, which descends in a zig-zag form towards the Seine, and abuts upon the Abbey of Longchamps.

Mont-Valérien is also called Mont-Calvary, from a chapel consecrated there, in 1633. It is a conical, isolated hill, two and a-half leagues from Paris. Hitherto it had been [illegible]

[illegible] tion, the latter custom ceased; but it was revived at the Restoration. At the Revolution of July, 1830, however, the hill and its dependencies passed out of the possession of the Church, and [illegible]

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

There are not even nine days' wonders in Paris: so rapidly do its ecstatic inhabitants exhaust a new topic, that four or five days suffice to explode all its interest. Lecomte's attempt upon Louis Philippe excites less interest at this moment than [illegible] world, by his silence in this centre of all secrets, that human parrots are the least original, and the most indifferent.

In Paris, the absurdity will suggest, at this moment, is racing; the Steeple Chase of "Le Croix Berny" has turned the heads of ladies, as well as gentlemen. Ones more the day before yesterday—the whole of the fashionable population in Paris poured into the Champ de Mars, the latter of rank the Duchesse d'Istrie and her pretty sister; the ladies of commercial eminence by Madame Charles Laffite (an Engnish lady), and her friend, Madame Blum; whilst Mdlle. Rachel headed the Jockey Club. What it was like, the most exemplary of réunions, was proved in the first race, for of all horses entered, the only one that did not make his appearance was Vanity, belonging to Mr. Pasquel. One great effect of this mania is to make the Bois de Boulogne, as the latter lies in such sports, and even their technica. words have taken possession of the French language: beginning by the collective name of the recreation, "le sport." Sir William Don, whose guns form overwopped the world, created a new sensation on Monday, when he won his race against Oliver, as Captain Peel at the last steeple-chase Indeed, each Englishman on such occasions is treated as an oracle, by whose opinion the crowd directs their bets.

One of the sources of a far more enduring good understanding betwixt the two nations, is Lord Palmerston's visit to Paris. The generous forgetfulness of past enmity [illegible] been fortunate indeed if his Lordship and the French Government had been on such excellent terms in former times. The misunderstandings of the latter retarded the commercial treaty, ready at the very moment of its conclusion, and whilst (thanks to the prohibitive system), with our railroads but just begun, we are now left at the mercy of the monopoly of the great proprietors of the small iron with wood, in all parts of France an artificial prosperity has been imparted to the new manufactories. [illegible]

[illegible] every where as a Sovereign Prince, presented at Court by the Turkish Ambassador as a subject of his master. Had I time and space I could give you the most curious details as regards his Highness; but all well-informed persons here at Court announce that there is no basis for rumours of his marriage, he will visit England; therefore you will have abundant opportunities of observing him yourselves. The English ladies will be surprised to find the truculent leader of the Egyptians so mild and gentlemanly a personage, and their curiosity will be gratified by be[illegible] person of most real and very clever renegade, Soliman Pacha, once Colonel Selves. Ibrahim Pacha and his staff are expected in the early part of September, and who are to visit England in June and July. At your Court the son of the Czar will, probably, meet Ibrahim Pacha, King Leopold, the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, &c. &c. The King of Wurtemberg, the Duke of Modena, Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, and the Prince of Prussia (Count Ravensburg), have been mentioned here as other visitors to Windsor in July—but these are mere on dits.

One of the most interesting ceremonies I have witnessed for years, was that which took place for the inauguration of the tomb of the Queen Hortense, which has been erected in the church at Rueil, opposite that of her mother, the Empress Josephine, [illegible]

[illegible] features a poet and a musician, as she has proved, by exquisite romances, still popular in all civilised countries; adored by Napoleon, and the mother of the late Prince Louis Bonaparte, now a state prisoner at Ham: this resuscitation of Queen Hortense's memory was full of the deepest interest. The Cenotaph and Statue are of remarkably tasteful workmanship, and by the well known sculptor of Florence, Bartolini. Above, in the coloured windows, you read these pathetic mottoes:—

> "Moins connue, moins trouble.
> Plus connue, plus aimé."

Words which are the summing up of the life of all these denizens of the higher world, who are, at the same time, good, beautiful, and celebrated. What increased the interest, was the presence of the lovely Princess Demidoff, wife of the great Russian millionaire, and daughter of Jerome Bonaparte; she was at hand to Prince de Montfort, (the son of Marshal Ney), to make a collection in the Church, within whose precincts were standing a relative of the departed, the Countess de Querelles, née Beauharnais, the Duc esse de Raguse, Mademoiselle de Lavalette, La Marechale Ney, the Countess Clam, and other personages, whose names recall the most paltry times of the imperial Régime.

ITALY.

The Paris papers contain very little additional information respecting Lecomte. It is somewhat remarkable that the Débats still persists in arguing that he is the dupe of some malignant political party. In fact, great efforts are evidently being made to connect Lecomte's crime with some political plot. The Brussels press eagerly publish a strange story from the Armoricain, of Brest, stating that a warrant has been issued there for the apprehension of a person who, being on his [illegible] from Morlaix to Brest, the traveller of the Irish mail, told his fellow tra[illegible] that Louis Philippe had just been assassinated.

It is stated that, as soon as Lecomte was arrested, Millet and the two gens-d'armes searched him, and found a razor and a small bottle on his person. On being asked if it was poison, he smiled and said, "No, I have no other weapon but my gun; I meant to shave off my beard and rub in the ointment, so that it might have the appearance of having been saved off two or three days since." One of the [illegible] gives the following account of Lecomte: —"Lecomte was a [illegible] Chasseurs of the Royal Guard during the Spanish campaign of 1823. He received the decoration of the Legion in rather a singular manner. The French Chasseurs charged a regiment of Spanish Cuirassiers, who, not being able to bear the charge, took [illegible] At the same moment, the horse of Lecomte fell away with him; and, notwithstanding his efforts, carried him into the midst of the enemy's ranks. Slashing right and left, Lecomte found himself opposite the Spanish Colonel, called on him to surrender, took him prisoner, and was decorated in consequence."

Lecomte has been again examined for two hours together, by the Chancellor [illegible]

[illegible] the Duke of Montpensier, accompanied by the Marquis Hastings, Lords Grey and Dacres, the Right Honourable Henry Ellis, General Sir John Doveton, and Colonel Sandercson, late of the Grenadier Guards, who had prepared the address, which was signed by more than 500 of the residents and visitors of Paris, proceeded to the Palace at the appointed time, and were received by his Majesty. The address having been read in a very impressive manner by the Duke of M[illegible]

His Majesty said that he was deeply sensible of the kind sympathy which was expressed by the British residents in Paris, and that the warmth of his feelings on this occasion prevented him from giving that utterance to them which he could have desired. This was not the only occasion, said the King, in which the hand of Providence had been conspicuously exposed him, and he could never be sufficiently grateful for the Divine favour which had been showered upon him, his Queen, and his family.

His Majesty added, that the hospitality exercised towards him in England could never be effaced from his heart and memory. He was strongly impressed with the cordial reception which he met with from all classes, particularly from the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London on the occasion of his late visit. He [illegible] said, and whilst has been since further exemplified by that body in a most gratifying manner.

His Majesty, in conclusion, said he was truly grateful for the cordial expressions contained in the address which had just been read to him.

The satisfaction of the gentlemen who presented the address was much increased by the following circumstance. His Majesty having noticed that the Queen's name was [illegible]

Wanting to repair to her Majesty, and make this known to her. The Queen graciously condescended to appear, and the committee were presented to her by the King individually. After the ready of the [illegible]

[illegible] that she derived from the cordial sentiments contained in the address.

Lord and Lady Palmerston were to leave Paris for London on Tuesday morning.

Last Sunday was the birth-day of the Queen of the French, who on that day entered her sixty-fifth year.

Ibrahim Pacha has arrived at Paris, and taken up his residence at the Hôtel [illegible]

[illegible] horses, went to the Elysée Bourbon, to bring Ibrahim Pacha to the Tuileries. His Highness entered the first carriage, with Colonel Thierry, Aide-de-camp of the Duke de Montpensier, [illegible]

[illegible] of the Egyptian school were in the three other carriages; and the suite of his Highness followed in private carriages. They were attended by twelve servants and outriders in the King's livories. The carriages drove to the entrance at the Pavilion de Flore, where Ibrahim Pacha was received on alighting by the Duke de Montpensier, who conducted him [illegible]

[illegible] same, in the uniform of a Lieutenant-General, with the Queen, the Duke de Nemours, the Prince de Joinville, and the Princesses. His Highness was followed by his numerous suite, among whom was Soliman Pacha (Colonel Selves), Marshal Soult, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Marshal Sebastiani, and several general's all in full-dress uniforms, [illegible]

[illegible] Sublime Porte in the following terms:—"I request permission to present to your Majesty the son of the most illustrious servant of the Sultan, my master, Ibrahim Pacha, son of Mehemet Ali Viceroy of Egypt." The [illegible] Ibrahim Pacha, [illegible]

[illegible] during the excursion of his Royal Highness in Egypt. His Majesty also conversed with Colonel Selves and the other officers of the Prince's suite. Ibrahim Pacha was afterwards presented to the Queen and Princesses. His Majesty then conducted the Prince to the Hall of the Marshals, and thence the Duke de Montpensier attended him to the entrance of the Pavilion de Flore, where he and his suite re-entered the carriages, and returned in the same order as they came to the Elysée Bourbon.

Ibrahim Pacha is a little under the ordinary stature; his countenance is calm, but very expressive, and while quite animated and penetrating. His beard is long and grey, his step firm, and his carriage dignified. At dinner on the King [illegible]

[illegible] The Prince of Salerno sat on the right of the Queen, and the Prince of Salerno on the right of the King. Marshal Soult, President of the Council, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Spanish Ambassador, Grandmaster of Ambassadors, and Dr. Lallemand, Ibrahim Pacha's Physician, and also the Prince's secretary and his Majesty. Ibrahim Pacha left the Palace at half-past eight, attended by Col. Thierry, after having taken leave of the Queen, royal family, and particularly from the Duke de Montpensier, the most cordial and flattering attentions being paid to him respect. His Highness' sojourn in Paris, it is said, will be prolonged three weeks.

In the Chamber of Deputies, the Minister of Marine, amendment, brought forward by M. Cremieux, to impose the system of public instruction on the Government, was rejected by a majority of 33 votes, 111 having voted for and 145 against it. This vote is of importance, as it will affect all the railway bills which have yet to pass through the Chambers. There is now no doubt that the Chambers will concede to the Minister of Public Works the power of making direct concessions. The whole of the Ministers were present, and voted against the amendment.

The Courrier Français says: "Among the acts of grace to be issued by the [illegible] Ledru-Rollin and others, who were banished at the commencement of March [illegible] be commuted into that of five years' imprisonment, including the period which has elapsed since her conviction."

PORTUGAL.

SERIOUS REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

Our letters from Lisbon of the 20th ult. announce that agrarian disturbances had broken out in the province of Minho. The Constitution was suspended on [illegible] were was by means of a telegraphic despatch, which stated, "That on the 14th instant (April) the people of the districts of Guimarães, Prado, and Penella, rose tumultuously, and entering the city of Braga attacked the 8th infantry there stationed, by whom they were driven back with the loss of many killed and wounded."

According to the other accounts received at Lisbon, the insurgents were in possession of Guimarães, having overcome the detachment of troops there sta[illegible]

At Braga, however, the troops still maintained the upper hand. In Lisbon, everything was perfectly quiet, but the cause of the insurgents evidently met with much sympathy, especially from the lower orders.

A subsequent account from Lisbon says:—"The authorities placed themselves immediately in an attitude of defence, and were joined by also a eighty of the police forces armed, which kept, for a short time, the people in check, and prevented a denouement of the 8th Infantry, from Braga, arrived, and it was intimated to the party which had revolted, that they must leave the place. The character of this revolt[illegible] is of a more serious grade than any we have had since 1820; it is that of the people against the robbery, or rather the authorities, but, hitherto, where the troops have met disorder, they have met with no harsh treatment."

An Oporto paper says:—"The revolution in the neighbouring kingdom progresses with rapidity. The city of Lego, capital of the province of that name, has joined the standard of liberty, which was raised by the whole garrison. Ciudad Rodrigo, and the forces which were stationed there, have likewise pronounced. At this place, a colonel, who obstinately refused to acquiesce in the movement, was killed."

The Minister of Justice (José Bernardo da Costa Cabral) has come up from Lisbon, with a small reinforcement of infantry, and has taken the supreme Government of the North of Portugal into his own hands.

THE UNITED STATES.

New York papers to the 4th of April have reached us. There is still nothing decisive in regard to the Oregon territory, but what has taken place is certainly of a pacific tendency. In the Senate, General Cass had made a bellicose speech, in which he argued strongly for not giving up an inch of Oregon to England, and spoke of war in terms of glory, rather (judging from his general tone) as if war would be more a matter of joy than of regret, contending that the treaty of Utrecht made no line of boundary south of 54 deg. 40 min. (the Russian line), and that if it could be shewn that the treaty of Utrecht meant 49 deg. to be a boundary between the then French and English colonies, he would not say another word upon the matter.—Mr. Benton made a speech in reply, which excited much interest. Mr. Benton successfully proved that the treaty of Utrecht contemplated, intended, and, in fact, established the 49th parallel as the true boundary [illegible] lowed, and made a warm war-speech, for 54 deg. 40 min., in the wake of General Cass—but in vain; the die was cast, for Mr. Benton's voice had laid the war-[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [ might think proper to signify to the Committee of Selection that on special grounds they should be exempted from serving on committees, should be exempted accordingly. The Committee of Selection to report to the House the names of all such members, and also the grounds for such exemption.

Sir R. Peel contended that, as Mr. Charles O'Neil had obtained the authority of the House, and that after every consideration had been offered to him by the Chairman of the Committee, they were bound to declare Mr O'Brien guilty of contempt. To affirm such a proposition as that proposed by Mr. Warburton would be absurd.

After a long discussion, a division took place, and the amendment was defeated by a majority of 139 to 15.

The question then divided on the original motion, which was carried by a majority of 133 to 13.

Mr. Charles O'Neil was then called at the bar, and Mr. Smith O'Brien was committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The debate upon the bankers was adjourned to Thursday.

Winding-up of Railway Companies.—Mr. Hudson obtained leave to bring in a bill for enabling or facilitating the winding up of the affairs of joint-stock companies for making Railways, which shall have been formed subsequent to the commencement of the last session of Parliament, and for which acts of incorporation shall not be obtained during the present session.

The House adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS — Wednesday.

The House, as usual on Wednesday, sat at twelve o'clock.

The Factories Bill.—When the order of the day was moved for the second reading of the Factories Bill, Mr Hindley rose and said to Mr. Fielden not to bring a bill of such importance forward on a Wednesday, and appealed also to the Government to fix one of the days appropriated to Ministerial business for the purpose of taking the measure. Sir E. Peel said that in the present state of public business he could not give up one of the Government days to this discussion, however important. Mr. Hume said he meant after the Corn Bill should have been disposed of.—Sir James Graham said there was other most important business which would occupy all the time at the disposal of the Government.

A desultory discussion ensued upon the propriety of postponement, and ultimately Mr. Fielden moved, and was seconded by Mr. Brotherton, that the bill be read this forenoon Bill, limiting the labour of young persons between the ages of thirteen and eighteen to ten hours a day Mr. Ainsworth seconded the motion, although he recommended a compromise of eleven hours.—Mr. Hume opposed the bill, because it would be an interference with the application of capital. He moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day six months.

Sir Gerard Noel gave his cordial support to the bill. Sir J. Graham said that, after most carefully and dispassionately considering his former opinions with reference to the subject, he considered it his duty to concur with Mr. Hume in resisting the further progress of the bill. He then referred to the alterations which had been made on the subject, to the capital employed in the three trades that would be affected by the bill, and to the number of persons employed in those trades, and contended that the measure would indirectly affect adult labourers, and lead ultimately to a reduction of wages. He concluded by stating that he and his colleagues had made up their minds to resist the further progress of the measure. The debate on the bill was adjourned to Wednesday, 13th inst.

The House sat till six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The Insolvent Debtors' Act.—Lord Denman brought in a bill to amend one of the provisions of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

Religious Opinions Relief Bill.—The Lord Chancellor moved the second reading of this bill, and in doing so entered into a brief explanation of the nature of the bill. The bill was founded upon the report of the Criminal Law Commissioners, who had deeply investigated the subject. The intention of the bill was to remove various disabilities and penalties imposed by more than thirty Acts of Parliament.

After some discussion, in the course of which the Bishop of Exeter strongly opposed parts of the measure, it was read a second time, and their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

New Member.—Mr. Edward Sandels took the oaths and his seat for Ripon.

Complaints against the Post-Office.—Captain Vivian wished to learn from the Secretary of the Treasury the cause of the many delays in the transmission of letters and papers through the Post-Office? The complaints against the Post-Office authorities were extremely numerous, and the Government should take some steps to remedy the evil.—Mr. Cardwell was aware that complaints had lately been made with respect to the transmission of newspapers, but he did not believe that the error lay with the Post-Office. He had not heard any complaint with respect to the transmission of letters. He held in his hand a return, by which it appeared that 125,000 newspapers had been transmitted during one week; and the errors were comparatively few, and when they had occurred, they were not attributable to the Post-Office. but to other causes, such as the covers coming off, &c. An addition to the building of the Post-Office, and several other measures, had been resorted to, to give increased facilities for the transmission of letters and papers in future. It was to be regretted that many of the newspapers, indeed the greater number, were posted at the latest possible moment, and it was utterly impossible to avoid occasional mistakes. All that could be done to remedy the evil would be done by the Government, and, he hoped, to the public satisfaction.

Commitment of Mr. W. S O'Brien.—Mr. Estcourt moved the order of the day for the adjourned debate upon the motion to commit Mr. W S. O'Brien. The Speaker said that, before he called upon any hon. member to address himself to the question, he thought it his duty to state the opinion of the Chair. The Speaker regretted to say that [illegible] he would have [illegible] right at the bar of the House.—The Speaker said that there was no precedent of a member appearing at the bar, except as what he might almost say as a criminal. After a few words from Mr. H. Grattan and Mr M. Milnes, strangers were ordered to withdraw, but no division took place. On our re-admission, the House ordered that Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to take Mr. William Smith O'Brien into custody, in conformity with the motion.

In the course of the evening, the Sergeant-at-Arms announced that he had taken Mr. S. O'Brien into custody, in pursuance of the orders of the House.

After disposing of the motions on the paper, the House rose at half-past nine o'clock.

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.

The Railway Committee recommenced their proceedings on Monday. The Groups occupied, for the first time, the rooms on the ground floor of the Committee; the rooms on the river front having been fitted up temporarily, and appropriated to the use of the committees for the remainder of the session. These lofty and spacious rooms present a striking contrast to the small, low, flat rooms in which the previous day occupied as committee rooms. They are, however, as yet, very far from being finished. The largest of these rooms is that occupied by Group No. XVII., the chairman of the North Eastern lines, which leaves a cul-de-sac capital of nearly three millions, were opened on Group XXVII. The number of Committee Groups which met on Monday was nine, two of which assembled for the first time. On Tuesday the number was ten, an additional Group (GXXVI.) having assembled in No. XXV. Room.

There were fourteen Committees on groups of railways on Wednesday, a greater number than on any since the commencement of the session. Much has been evident progress made already in the disposal of the Committee business. Two of the groups have been cleared off, all the Bills having been disposed of, and in none of the others do Committees sit habitually in advance towards the end of their labours, so as to clear the space for the forthcoming groups. Even the proceedings in the North East Railways seem to be approaching a period. The preamble of the Northern Extension of the Edinburgh and Northern has been found proved in Group VII. The labours of Group XXII. have been closed with the adjustment of some clauses in the Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham bill, which preambles had to be declared proved.

Mr. Smith O'Brien, resolutely refuses to go to Group XI. The Sergeant-at-Arms, anticipating that the honourable member would naturally entertain an antipathy to a transfer either to the Isle of Correction or Tower, has laid the needless to prepare for his future residence a Parliamentary prison cell. This rare place for impending impeached members having for some years past fallen into decadence, it has recently been tenanted by unchangers of the house and tickets, who, by dint of whitewashing and whitewash, have converted it into a comfortable domicile. The interior has an air of supreme comfort, and the only peculiarities that distinguish it are certain basaltic embellishments at the window in the shape of bars and balustrades There is a French sedstead prepared for the new visitor. The room is three feet wide, and six high. On Wednesday the honourable member, will Mr. Grattan, M P., personally inspected this contained cell.

Art Unions.—On Monday evening a meeting of artists was held at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St James's, for the purpose of supporting the bill introduced by Mr. Wyse, for the legalisation of Art Unions. The chair was taken by Sir W. C. Ross, surveyed by many persons of professional distinction. Some resolutions were unanimously adopted, expressing the opinion of the meeting strongly in favour of the principles on which art unions are based, and their influence in fostering the fine arts and [illegible] the bill. A petition, founded on the resolutions, and [illegible] Legislature to pass the bill, was adopted. The meeting was very numerously attended

The Late Murder at Berkeswell, near Coventry.—James Read, who was accused at the late Warwick assizes on the charge of murdering an old man named Fran er, in the parish of Berkeswell, has been again committed for trial on the charge of having the old man's house [illegible] a hat, and other articles were pawned in Birmingham, a day or two after the murder, in the prisoner's name.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY AND THE COURT.

It is now decided on that the approaching accouchement of the Queen, an event to which her subjects look forward with so much affectionate interest, is to take place at Buckingham Palace.

It is stated that the Queen, on the intelligence reaching her of the attempt to assassinate King Louis Philippe wrote an autograph letter in her own friendly and affectionate style, to the [illegible] on the providential escape. The letter was instantly despatched by a special messenger to Paris.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, attended by the Hon. Miss Mitchell, visited the Queen on Thursday, at Buckingham Palace, and remained to luncheon with her Majesty Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Hon. Miss Murray, [illegible] Miss Stanley, Lord Byron, Lord Caernarvon, and [illegible] Seymour, honoured the [illegible] with their company at dinner on Tuesday last. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent was also present.

The Queen had a dinner-party on Wednesday at Buckingham Palace. The company included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, his Royal Highness Prince George, his Serene Highness the Hereditary Prince of Saxe Meiningen, his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Abercorn, Lady Augusta Bruce, Lady Caroline Murray, Lady Augusta Gedogan, Baroness de Speth, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Delaware, the Earl of Jersey, Earl Howe, Earl of Cawdor, Lord George Lennox, Hon. and Rev C. Leslie Courtenay, Captain the Hon. James P. Murray, Mr. Edmund Mildmay, Colonel Wylde, and Baron de Reitzenstein. The band of the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, under the direction of Mr Tutten, was in attendance during dinner.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took an airing in an open carriage and four, accompanied by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton.

Visit of Prince Albert to Osborne House.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by a very small retinue of persons, arrived by special train from the South-Western rail, at the terminus in the Royal Clarence Victualling-yard, Portsmouth, on Tuesday morning, soon after eight o'clock. By his expressed desire, all demonstrations of respect and ceremony were dispensed with. He immediately proceeded to the Lightning steam-tender, Master Commander Petley, and as soon as his Royal Highness was on board she left the harbour for Osborne House. The day was beautifully fine, and the Prince remained on deck during the whole time occupied in crossing the Solent. The steamer arrived off Osborne House a short time before ten, when Prince Albert landed. At three the Prince attended in the Lightning, honour had five hours to view the improvements and alterations now in course of completion in the house and grounds. At four Prince Albert landed at the Royal Clarence-yard, and proceeded to London.

Royal Birth-days.—The birth-days of the Duchess of Gloucester, on Friday last 70th year, and of her Royal Highness the Princess Alice, born in 1843, were celebrated on Saturday last.

The Duke of Wellington's Birthday.—Yesterday (Friday) the Duke of Wellington completed his 77th year, having been born May 1, 1769.

Cabinet Dinner.—On Wednesday evening the Earl of Aberdeen received at Argyll House, the following members of the Cabinet:—Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Haddington, Sir James Graham, the Right Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone, the Right Hon. Henry Goulburn, the Earl of Ellenborough, the Earl of Ripon, Lord Granville Somerset, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, the Earl of St Germans, and the Earl of Dalhousie Aristocratic Marriages.—His Grace the Duke of Marlborough is about to lend to the hymeneal altar the Hon. Charlotte Augusta Plowden, daughter of Viscount and Viscountess Ashbrook.—On Wednesday, Mr George Granville Francis Egerton, eldest son of Lord Francis Egerton, and nephew of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, was married to the Lady Mary Louisa Campbell, youngest daughter of the Earl and Countess Cawdor.—The marriage of the Hon. Jane Lawley, only daughter of Lord and Lady Wenlock, and the Hon. James A Stuart Wortley, M.P., brother of Lord Wharncliffe, is to be solemnised on Wednesday next. The marriage of the Hon. Percy Moreton, third son of the late, and brother of the present Earl of Ducie, and Miss Jane Frances Price, daughter of the late Sir Rose Price, Bart., was solemnised on Tuesday last.

Death of the Countess of Beauchamp.—The Countess of Beauchamp expired on Sunday last, at the Albion Hotel, Brighton, after an illness of a very few days' duration. The deceased Countess was at the 87th year of her age. Her ladyship was the only daughter of John, first Earl of Clonmel, and Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench in Ireland, sister to the late, and aunt to the present Earl. Her Ladyship was married, in March, 1814, to John Reginald, present and third Earl of Beauchamp, by whom she leaves no issue. The remains of the deceased Countess will be interred in the family mausoleum in Worcestershire.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Sir James Graham's eldest son, Mr. Frederick Uvic Graham, has joined the 1st Life Guards as Cornet.

The Vacant Colonelcies.—The Colonelcies of the 8th and 19th Regiments vacant by the deaths of General Sir Henry Bayly, G.C.H., and Sir Moore Disney, K.C.H., have been filled up. General Sir Gordon Drummond, G.C.B. (from the 49th Regiment), replaces General Bayly in the 8th Regiment; and General Sir Phineas Riall, K.C.H. (from the 74th Regiment), General Disney in the 19th Regiment. They are, in turn, replaced by General Sir Edward Bowater, K.C.H., who goes to the 49th, and General Sir Alexander Cameron, K.C.B., who goes to the 74th Regiment.

The Brevet.—We understand that a brevet in the army and navy, will very shortly be announced, and that the period at which we are to look for it will be the auspicious day of her Majesty's accouchement. It is stated in a circle most likely to be well-informed, that a promotion would have been given last year, but not the expense of the Navy and Ordnance Department been so great as to check the announcement of it at that time.

The Falkirk District of Burghs.—Lord Lincoln is a candidate for the [illegible] presentation of this district of burghs. Last Saturday he arrived at Falkirk, where he paid his respects to the Magistrates and Council, and others of the [illegible] owing to his being understood that Mr. Wilson, of Dundyvas, had agreed to come forward to contest the vacant seat, in compliance with a requisition from a number of his friends, as also from certain [illegible] ours which had gone abroad relative to the circumstances attending Mr. Baird's withdrawal from the representation, over the electors like so many sheep of the dogs-tron. (Laughter.) He also alluded to Lord Lincoln's conversion as having "sprung out of the rottenness of the potato crop" (great laughter)—and went on to criticise his Lordship's measures very freely, amidst the laughter of the crowd. Lord Lincoln made some observations in explanation, whereupon Mr. Brodie declared that he did not mean to impute anything dishonourable to his Lordship. On the suggestion of Douglas Baird, Esq., three cheers were given for Lord Lincoln; after which the assemblage quietly dispersed.

Abolition of the Punishment of Death.—On Wednesday evening, there was a very numerous meeting at Exeter Hall, to adopt steps to procure the abolition of the punishment of death. Mr. Ewart, M.P., was in the chair; several other Members of Parliament were present. Lord Nugent moved the first resolution:—"That the efficacy of criminal laws depends less upon the severity of punishment than the certainty of infliction; and that laws which cannot be carried into execution without shocking the feelings of society, and making abhorrence of the crime in sympathy for the offender, are contrary to reason, inconsistent with morality, and opposed to the interests of justice objections which most forcibly apply to statutes enacting the punishment of death." The motion having been carried, Mr. O'Connell moved a resolution condemning the punishment of death; and, after denouncing the law which inflicted that punishment, he said he considered that he was a competent witness in the case, for he had been the means of his life having been spared by the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy in the case of a few minutes, both vessels came in collision. The Scrivapatam struck the Harriet amidships, and, being almost triple its size, the consequence of the latter was tremendous, cutting her down to the water's edge, and carrying away her mainmast. Such was the force, in fact, that the Harriet was thrown almost on her beam ends. Her unfortunate crew, that were on the watch, clamby ran up the fore and main mast, and jumped on to the bowsprit of the Scrivapatam, and shortly afterwards, the remainder of the crew, who were below, in bed, followed in a state of nudity. They had scarcely done so, when her remaining masts broke short off, and went overboard. By some means, her rigging got entangled with the bow of the Indiaman, but, as the Harriet filled, the pressure carried away all forward, viz., the bowsprit, jibboom, and other spars of the Scrivapatam, clean off by the hull, and, rolling over for a time, disappeared. Luckily, the Scrivapatam sustained no other damage, although so terrible was the collision, that her crew feared she would founder.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR MAY.

NAPOLEON'S PASSAGE OF ST. BERNARD.

If the passage of the St. Bernard deserve far more blame than praise as a military operation, the reverse is the case if considered as a political one; for if its object were to dazzle and [illegible] with a view to aid in Napoleon's elevation, then, certain!, nothing could be better calculated. The novelty of the undertaking—its real and exaggerated difficulties—the march of an army over the lofty [illegible] of snow and ice that cover the highest summits of the Alps—the breaking into the fair lands of Italy from such wilds as these—the [illegible] and barrenness, so long astonished Europe, as the avalanche bursts from the lofty regions whence the invaders descended, had something striking and romantic that could not, if attended with success, fail to captivate the ardent and excited imaginations of the French people [illegible] of the Parisian soldiers for description and declamation: "enabled [illegible] as he says, "to praise their own nation, according to custom, beyond all bounds and measure" and tended naturally to make them idolize the man who, to be the first among the French, had performed actions that, as represented, seemed almost to border on the miraculous. If looked upon in this point of view, and as a road towards a crown, for which every thing was to be risked, then the passage of the St. Bernard was a great conception. If it be examined as a strategical monument, and tried by the fate of Genoa, the small army brought into the field at Marengo, and by the situation of affairs at one o'clock on the decisive battleday, then it is little, indeed.—Fraser's Magazine.

SHAMS OF LIVING.

There are a great many very painful methods of earning a livelihood. [illegible] dashery appears to involve a large proportion of human suffering, [illegible] everybody connected with that branch of trade, from those who make the [illegible] to those who sell them. A chimney-sweep is a proverbial [illegible] and we should pause some time before we decided upon following that of a postman in St. Giles's, a waiter at a night-tavern, a break-of-day coffee-stall or, or an after-midnight cabman. Then there are the come writers; a wretched parson, who are obliged to be funny by the page, and make any quantity of jokes to order that may be demanded: but who are supposed by the world at large to live in a state of constant merriment at their own prediction; a thrower down their pen from time to time to scream with laughter at what they are inventing And there are gentlemen in dirty tights and trunks, and braces worked with faded spangles, who dangle through the pit through the [illegible] and walk on their heads in the gutters, upon mere speculation of the available halfpence to be pitched into the ring upon the promise that the young man will now go through his extraordinarily performance. Then the Bounding Ball or the Pyrenees, performed before Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and at the parties of the nobility." There are also the wandering artists, who draw mackerel on the pavement, in coke or cinder; and in coloured chalks, who are ordered to walk them by the policeman. There are, too, steamboat stokers in the Dog-days; and morning-paper newsvendors in the winter: toadeaters of every description, who never [illegible] known knaves, for their breakfast; and questionable personæ struggling for a position, who also undergo much misery and privation, constantly making the humble mutton of private life atone for the rarebit and venison of the party; and sneaking from the parlsian wine to the world-be-so-if-we-could composite, or even the domestic mould, when they consider themselves safe from the clown's announcement in a pantomime of "Here's somebody coming!" Dort Household Book of Lascellany.

THE OLD PARLOUR CARPET

My old parlour carpet! not Persian nor Turkey,
But right Kidderminster, the true British loom;
Thy face, once so bright, is now ragged and murk;
And they'd fain cast thee forth from my snug little room.

Thou art threadbare and ancient, but still my eye traces Thy square Grecian scroll, and the quaint Arabesque;
And my fancy yet pictures all sorts of odd faces,
And griffins and gnomes in thy pattern grotesque.

And oft o'er my heart steals the spirit of sadness,
As then leaded me back to a long-vanished day,
When I think of the feet, in whose steps ever was [illegible] dness,
And that once swept thy surface—alas! where are they:

Ah me! those dear feet the far mountains are trendin
That are hid from our eyes by the gloom of the grave;
While we, broken-hearted in the lonely dwelling
Vain tears of regret for the fond and the brave.

O! how fresh to my mind thou bringst many a vision,
Which, though thronged with dead faces, I would not d
Nor thee sudden exchange for the day-dreams Elysian,
On which youth's teeming fancy delighteth to dwell.

Then remain where thou art, for they shall not remove thee,
Though death's sped thou hast in tatters and stains;
A grey cringer shall be, like a friend, loth to leave thee,
And shield from derision thy honoured remains.—W. H. B.

The Union Magazine

ORIGIN OF HERALDRY.

The word Heraldry is derived from the German Heer, a host, an army—and Held, a champion; and the term blazon, by which the science is denoted in French, English, Italian, and German, is derived from [illegible] word Blasen, "to blow the horn." For, whenever a new knight appeared in tournament, the herald sounded the trumpet, and as the competitors were clad in complete armour, it was impossible to know any of the shield, armour belonging to each. Thus, the knowledge of the various devices symbols was called Heraldry; and, as the announcement was made by the sound of trumpet, it was termed "Blazonry" or "Blazoning." The Germans transmitting it to the French, it reached us after the Norman Conquest.—From the "Patrician," No. 1, [illegible] by John Bull

SMALL WRONGS

[illegible] s who would take small wrongs with them into Par Go where they will, they carry with them a travelling-case of injuries. D we not know Trumpery? A very regular man, and a most respectable shopkeeper.
[illegible]

recollects the bald-sovereign taken in days [illegible], and at the excited contemplation of his mouth the smile dies, a death of sudden s.—Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine

THE MIDDLE AGE MANIA

The only persons who really do cause a bold stand against this foolish pr [illegible] are the female portion of the community. Instead of evincing a taste for the appearances peculiar to the middle age, the struggle among them is, to [illegible] the longest to set Lei face against all mediæval attrib [illegible] dresses.

HORRORS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Eye-witnesses have likened the appearance of Paris, in 1793, to a city [illegible] by demons and harpies. Down the gutters of its silent streets crept [illegible] a stream of human blood; through its numerous and gorgeous fountains pa [illegible] an inundation of horrid and delicious wine. Every house [illegible] was the [illegible] factor, ignominies and cruelties for the good: there was luxury for the [illegible], privation for the multitudes. Never, in the [illegible] records of Dante, has man conceived more appalling scenes of hideous and ineffable horror. Never witnessed such day in the public thoroughfares of the French capital "Death is an ordinal sleep:" were the ominous words painted above the porch of every [illegible] the rue cadaverique of Père la Chaise proclaimed from [illegible] lation, maddened by an accumulation of blasphemy and [illegible] maquisle about the gory planks of the guillotine, and [illegible] the [illegible] of the performers of their [illegible] To have [illegible] were in full operation; the bank [illegible] Paris, the [illegible] sent crowds of his fellow [illegible] to the

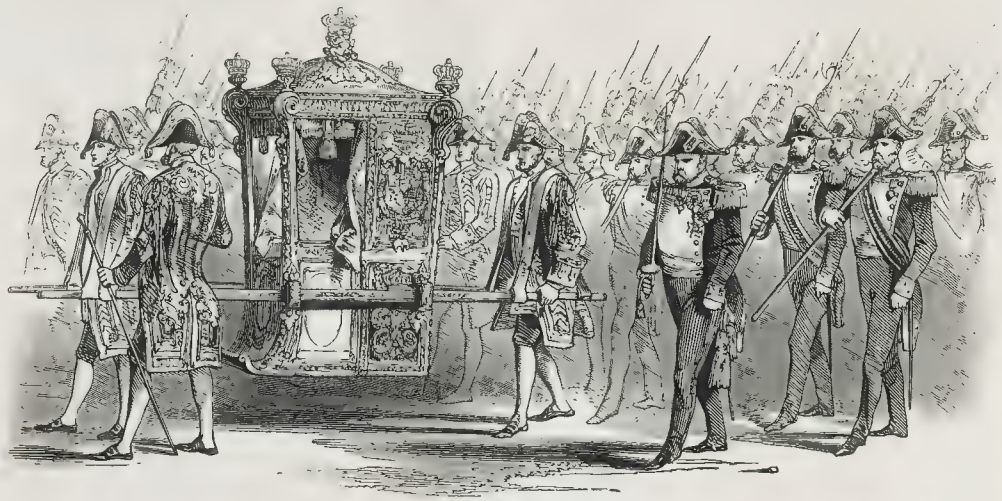
SKETCHES IN SPAIN.

Our Artist has resumed his Illustrations of Spanish manners with a pair of life-like groups of Spanish Officers (Lancers and Engineers, and the 1st Regiment of Cuirassiers). The uniform of the former is dark blue and gold, with dark grey undress frocks. The uniform of the Cuirassiers is scarlet, purple, and gold, polished steel cuirasses, and helmets of brass gilt, with raven-black horse-hair.

A note upon the Army of Spain may be interesting. Before the breaking out of the Civil War, the standing army amounted to 60,000 men, besides a reserve of Milicias Provinciales, which consisted of 30,000 men. These forces were considerably increased in 1833, and at the close of the war amounted to upwards of 300,000 men, including in this number several regiments of national guards, who performed the same service as troops of the line. Since the peace, this number has been greatly reduced; the Royal Guard has been abolished, and its regiments have been incorporated with the rest of the army.

The larger Engraving shows a portion of the Royal procession, on Thursday in the Holy Week, when the Queen goes in state, on foot, to visit the churches. The cortège is headed by a staff of officers, then a picked troop of hussars, and their band; the Grandees preceding the Queen, bareheaded; then the Queen with the Archbishop, train-bearers, ladies of the Court, &c. Next comes a group of the Royal halberdiers; next, the sedan-chair of her Majesty, richly carved and gilt, borne and attended by the Royal footmen, in rich state liveries; and then follow halberdiers, a troop of cavalry, cuirassiers, and hussars, closing the procession, which passes in silent state through lines of infantry.

SPANISH OFFICERS.



THE ROYAL PROCESSION TO CHURCH.

SPANISH CUIRASSIERS.

Our letters from Spain announce serious occurrences in Gallicia. The Madrid Gazette publishes four despatches from different parts of that province. The Political Chief of Orense wrote, on the 17th, that, at three o'clock in the afternoon of that day, a body of 600 or 700 insurgents, belonging mostly to the provincial battalions of Oviedo and Zamora, and commanded by Brigadier Leandro Rubio, had presented themselves at the bridge of the town, but that, having been fired upon by the provincials of Guadalaxara and Mondonedo, they retired, leaving a party in a house not far distant from the bridge. General Concha was at Monforte, seven leagues from Orense. Part of his division was stationed at Villaviejas, Pereira, and Gudina.

General Concha is stated in one of the despatches to have been at Monforte, seven leagues distant from Orense, and in the opposite direction to Rivadiva. His division is distributed between Villaviejas, Pereira, and Endiva, which towns are in the limits of the province of Zamora. Another account, given by the Minister of War, speaks of Concha's being at La Chantada, somewhere in the same direction, and five leagues distant from Orense, and more than ten leagues distant from Lugo, from which he had been obliged to retire. Not a word is said in the despatches about the battalion of Malaga, which was reported to have passed over to the insurgents.

The Political Chief of Lugo, writing from Nogales, six leagues distant from Lugo, mentions that much discouragement exists amongst the insurgents there. He had issued circulars, cautioning the Ayuntamientos to pay them no money, and to furnish them with no supplies. They had issued from the town to collect provisions, and returned without leaving any advanced post. Troops were reported at Villafranca, whither they were proceeding, by forced marches, to put themselves in communication with General Concha.

The Political Chief of Oviedo informed the Government, that, on the night of the 15th ult., an attempt was made by the sergeants of the provincial regiment of Salamanca, to induce it to pronounce and join the insurgents. The plot, however, was denounced by the soldiers, and the conspirators were taken into custody. The Heraldo announces that the Government had sent four ships of war to cruise off the coast of Vigo, for the purpose of preventing the landing of supplies for the rebels, and to co-operate with the Queen's troops in an attack on the place. At Malaga and Carthagena, symptoms of revolt had manifested themselves, but the authorities had adopted measures to check any attempt at insurrection.

A decree of General Villalonga, dated the 15th ult., from Corunna, declares the coasts of Gallicia, from Rivadeo to La Guarda, in a state of blockade. The Captain-General of Gallicia, in a despatch of the 14th, states that the column under the orders of General Puig Samper has repulsed the insurgents at Seguerro, and compelled them to disperse. Several of the rioters were killed, and an officer and some privates among the troops wounded. General Concha was preparing to march on Orense, which was menaced by the insurgents.

Letters from Vigo mention that considerable ferment was observable in that neighbourhood.

General Iriarte was at Vigo, and had declared for the Constitution of 1837. The Spanish brig Nervana, lying at Cadiz, had also pronounced in favour of Don Enrique. In short, at several Spanish ports, the insurrection was gradually becoming more popular.

Letters from Seville, of the 17th ult., mention that it was proposed to proclaim martial law in that city and province.

The following is published officially, in the shape of an extraordinary bulletin:

Superior Political Government of the Province of Corunna, Friday, April 24.

His Excellency the Captain-General of Gallicia, at half-past nine this morning, communicates to me the following:—

"His Excellency the Commandant-General of the expeditionary division of Galicia, Don José de la Conchas, under date of yesterday, from Santiago, says as follows:—

"'Excellent Sir, I have the satisfaction to announce to your Excellency that after an engagement commenced from the heights of Cocheiro, and after storming this city, notwithstanding the strong defence of the insurgents under the command of De Solis, all the forces here assembled have been compelled, at seven o'clock at night, to surrender at discretion.

"'The number of prisoners will be above 1400, composed of the battalions of Zamora, Gijon, and Segovia; of some 70 men of the Civil Guard, and several detachments of Gijon and Oviedo, with 20 cavalry of Villaviciosa. The number of officers reaches 54, amongst them the Commandant Solis.

"'I cannot, from want of time, give your Excellency further details, but must, notwithstanding, inform you that the troops under my command have conducted themselves with the greatest valour, which will be shown by the capture of this city, which has cost me more than 100 men in killed and wounded.'

"JOSE MARTINEZ, the Political Chief

(Countersigned) "FYGENIO REGUERO, Secretary."

A Valladolid letter states that the notorious General Nogueras, the murderer of Cabrera's aged mother, has entered Pontevedra with a reinforcement of 160 men, and that the rebels are daily receiving succours from Portugal by sea. Their retreat from Santiago was a well-calculated and prudent movement, as there they were in an open town, whilst at Vigo and Pontevedra strong fortifications defend them on the land side, and the sea is in their rear to escape by, if necessary.

THE GREAT FRENCH STEEPLE-CHASE.

MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH.

We have been favoured with the original of the annexed Portrait of the youthful Sovereign of the Punjaub, sketched in Durbar, by a gentleman in the suite of the Governor-General, at Lullecanee, a village twenty-six miles south of Lahore.

The name of the Maharajah occupies a very prominent position in our pacificatory intelligence in our Journal of last week. (See page 266.) The boy ruler is a reputed son of Runjeet Singh, who was set up by Herab Singh as Maharajah, after the murderous Ajeet Singh had been cut to pieces. In the capacity of Minister to this child of tender years, Herab Singh endeavoured to grasp the powers of the state. He was not strong enough to keep the place he had won.

THE MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH, SKETCHED IN DURBAR.

New factions arose, new mutinies occurred among the troops, and Herab Singh, becoming an object of hostility to his nearest of kin, died as most of his predecessors had done. And now, the mother of the infant Maharajah put in her claim to be treated as Regent, and the whole framework of society fell to pieces: the soldiers roamed about the country at will; towns were sacked and villages plundered; whilst the wretched woman nominally at the head of affairs lived in debauchery. This state of things brought about the recent conflict of the Sikhs with the English, and the signal defeat of the former. After the battle of Sobraon, the youthful Maharajah, attended by Rajah Gholab Singh, came as a suppliant for mercy, to Sir Henry Hardinge. It was left to him. The blame of the war was thrown, as it ought to have been, on the turbulent chiefs—though, to mark the Governor-General's sense of the national offence, the Sovereign was, at the outset, refused the honours that are given in the East to crowned heads, but peace was granted to him and to the Punjaub, on terms which indicate as much of true wisdom as of moderation in him who assigned them. (We quote the substance of these facts from a well-timed paper—"The Sikhs and the Late Campaign" in Fraser's Magazine for the present month. It merits immediate attention.)

ERUPTIONS OF MOUNT HECLA.—A letter from Copenhagen, of the 16th of April, says "The eruptions of Mount Hecla continued to be very violent The flames which issued from three great craters attained a height of 14,400 feet, and their breadth exceeded the greatest breadth of the river Pegersen, the most considerable river in Iceland. The lava had already formed lofty mountains, and among the masses of pumicestone vomited by the volcano, and which have been found at a distance of three-fourths of a mile, there were some which weighed half a ton. By the eruption of Hecla, the enormous quantities of snow and ice which had accumulated for several years on the sides of that mountain have been melted, and partly fallen into the river Rangen, which has overflowed its banks several times. The waters of that river, which runs almost at the foot of Mount Hecla, and which receives a large portion of the burning lava, were so hot that every day they cast upon the banks numbers of dead trout, almost half baked! Every night vivid streaks of the aurora borealis illumined the sky."

THE GREAT FRENCH STEEPLE-CHASE.

Our Paris Correspondent having returned to this spirited affair, we shall merely affix to our artist's clever picture of the glories of "La Croix Berny," a pendent in verse by way of souvenir.

The Chase! the Chase! the Steeple-chase!
The rasping leap and the rattling pace;
The rider brave and the gallant steed,
Where lava-veins display his breed;
The flashing eye and hoof of light,
That far outstrips the tempest's flight;
The start, the struggle, and the goal,
Where victory winds up the whole.
Oh! ne'er on turf or stream a race
Can match the manly Steeple-chase.

The morning lours; but the sporting men,
Native and British denizen,
Regardless of the drenching cloud,
Dash forward on their chargers proud.
The Jockey Club cries "Whip and spur!"
The "Lancer," scorning shawl and fur,
Drives wildly on in britzka gay,
With millionaire from the Chaussée.
The "Amazone" ne'er slackens rein,
But flies along the flow'ry Seine.
Sweeps on the motley cavalcade,
Of every rank, and class, and grade,
From prince and peer to gamin bare,
From Notaires down to Rob. Macaire.
The cafés have a sinecure,
The Palais Royal's precincts pure
Are tenantless. The estaminet
And billiard shut up shop to day.
(The Sabbath! London, 'tis confess'd Keeps differently the day of rest.)
Onward they bowl! each mother's son,
Impatient for the novel fun.
And, as a river in its course
Is swelled by streamlets' tribute force,
E'en so the gay Parisian crowd,
Increas'd by peasants laughing loud
Rolls like an avalanche along;
At every step fresh numbers throng,
Till Croix de Berni shows on high,
Its gay flags fluttering in the sky.

Oh! 'tis a spirit-stirring sight!
The steed is weigh'd the girth made tight
The jockeys mount—the signal's given,
The mass beneath the hoofs is riven!
Away! away! across the brook
Where poor Cattonian water took!
Away! The Roarer takes the lead,
But Little Tommy tops his speed.
(Sure seldom yet were seen a pair
Like Little Tom and brave Vevers;
Tom, staunch a bit as e'er was foal'd,
And Vevers sixty-five years old.)
Away! The Lancer shows its blood;
The Scavenger is trick'd in mud;
Discord is consort (conquered), and the Roarer
Is out of breath, as from a floorer.
Away! away! there's little Tommy,
With Vevers, famed for his bonhommie.

Ply, Vevers, ply the lash and steel.
For here comes Culverthorpe and Peel!
The name is ominous! they come,
Close neck and neck. The crowd is dumb;
And now their shoutings rend the skies
For Culverthorpe has won the prize.

The prize is won by England's son,
Yet France has gain'd a higher meed,
Her generous spirit smil'd upon
The rider and his victor steed.
Our gratitude the Gaul commands,
Who hails a Briton as a brother,
Proving that two such noble lands
Need only know—to love each other.

VICTORIA PARK.

We are happy to find that this newly-formed "public walk" is progressing well, so as already to afford the eastern inhabitants of the metropolis an amusement to which they have, until lately, been strangers. To show how extensively the boon has been estimated, we may state that on Good Friday, the new Park was visited by 29,000 persons; and by a considerably greater number on Easter Monday. The plantations are thriving upwards of 20,000 trees and shrubs are now in the ground, and the plan of a scientific arboretum is followed in their disposal, so as to combine amusement and information of a high class. The leading roads and footpaths are in course of completion. A handsome lodge in the Elizabethan style, for the residence of Mr. Curtis, the forester, has been completed at the entrance from Bishop Bonner's Fields, which is across an adjacent iron bridge of very light and elegant construction. A plot has been staked out near the entrance, of about four acres in extent, for ornamental water. The regulations of St. James's-park, with regard to the admission of visitors, are observed as far as possible, the park-keepers having orders to exclude all disorderly and drunken persons, itinerant vendors, and dogs. During the recent holidays, notwithstanding the crowds of visitors, excellent order was kept by an efficient staff of park-keepers, under the direction of Mr. Mobbs, the chief gate-keeper, and very trifling injury or damage was done. The precise locality of the new Park, and its excellent provision for the health of a crowded district, will be best understood by reference to the plan in the second volume of our Journal. Its success proves the liberality in providing recreations for the people will be rightly estimated; but niggardliness in admitting them to such privileges will create abuse of the slight advantages.

VICTORIA PARK.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 3.—Third Sunday after Easter.
MONDAY, 4 ... Jupiter sets at 8h 32m p.m.
TUESDAY, 5.—St. John Hamburgh nearly destroyed by fire, 1842.
WEDNESDAY, 6. Battle of Prague, 1757
THURSDAY, 7.—Earthquake in Pernambuco, 1842; 10,000 lives lost.
FRIDAY, 8 — Accident on the Paris and Versailles Railway, 1842.
SATURDAY, 9. Battle of Lodi, 1796

HIGH WATER at ... n-bridge, for the Week ending May 9

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
7 52	8 27	9 4	9 40	10 25	10 48	11 18	11 38	0 0	0 12	0 24	0 35

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Adonis," Camberwell.—Our Journal can only be had stamped. The tower of Beddington Church is temp. Richard the Second. (See No. 199 of our Journal.) Richmond Park is a Royal demesne, and is about twelve miles in circumference.

"J. B." may purchase the London Gazette at the office in Cannon-row, and Acts of Parliament at the Queen's Printer's.

"A. A. F." The "brads" is much too long.

"G. A. H." Leeds, is Queen's for the registration.

"Pontefract."—We cannot solve precisely the anonym of the author of "Eothen."

"Juvenis" Too much care cannot be exercised by the Post Office in the issuing of Money Orders. The Christian names of the parties are indispensable.

"T. N." is thanked for the Sonnet, but we have not room to insert it.

"A Three Years' Subscriber" is recommended to appeal to the Income-Tax Commissioners in case of overcharge.

"D. T C." The Numismatist's Manual.

"A. B. M."—We have not room.

"W. G." Smithfield—Gough is pronounced Goff.

"T. J." New-street, Covent garden. See the Memoir in our present Number.

"A Man of Kent" "The Kentish Fire," if we mistake not, first originated at the last-Catholic meetings some sixteen years ago.

"D. D. C." Mr Dickens's first published work was his inimitable "Sketches." To your questions we reply in the affirmative.

"should apply at the Government Annuity Office, Old Jewry.

"J. L." Liverpool.—We have not seen the work in question.

"Inquirer." It is not likely that any correct return has yet been made of the number of killed and wounded in the late Indian war.

"P. M. A. P."—We cannot entertain the suggestion for publishing the Engravings apart from our Journal.

"Pigeon."—The term "Cannel" applied to a certain kind of Coal, is a corruption of "Candle," from its burning best to light the men at their work. It was so called before canals were dug, and the people of Kendal do not recog. the term from that place. (See "Popular Errors Explained and Illustrated.") The French word "Brevet" is a brief of the Crown, warrant, writ, diploma commission, patent, &c.: thus, a "brevet" officer is one whose rank is above his pay.

"S. W." Rochborne.—Apply, respecting the Music Type, to Messrs. Robson, Levey, and Franklyn, Great New-street, Gough-square.

"Jeremiah Doolittle" will find a notice in our present Number of the Drawing of the Art-Union Prizes

"A Subscriber" may obtain the License of the Bookseller of his District.

"F. B." "Impromptu"—inadmissible.

"A Correspondent."—We cannot reprint the extract from Archbishop Browne's Sermon in the Abbey.

"S. G." Wells, is quaint.

"A Constant Reader," Ramsgate.—The Great Steeple Chase at Paris took place on Sunday, not Monday, as stated in some journals.

"I. N." Enfield, will perceive, by our present No., that we have already paid attention to the subject

"G. J. S" will, perhaps, favour us with a Sketch of the new Building at Battersea. Our Correspondent is mistaken: an official notice of the death of Mr. Tegg appeared in our Journal of last week.

"A Subscriber," Wakefield. —We have not room.

"G. C." Ireland.

"A. Old Subscriber." —We do not settle disputes at Cards.

"W. T." The worthless Act.

"Z. Z." We cannot give the information relative to the cheap Harp-maker.

"A Musician and Subscriber for 1842." Mr. Pugnì is principal Second Violin in the Opera Orchestra, and also leader of the Italian Opera.

"W. F." Hammersmith.—Mendelssohn will be here in August, and we recommend our Correspondent to deliver his MS. Opera in person. Such a treasure—judging from the specimen sent to us—might be lost in the transit.

"M. P."—The Red Hand (the arms of Ulster) was adopted by James I. as the Badge of the Order of Baronets The device of the Institut. is being the colonisation of Ulster, in Ireland, the Province were deemed the most appropriate insignia.

"Sennenwald." The Prince of Wales will succeed. In no country does a monarch's heart, of the name of brother, the Highland Chief," McDonnell of Glengarry," emigrated some years since to New South Wales; but we have not seen that he has returned to Scotland, or is about to do so. The address of the "Calcutta" that of the Doctesan of Calcutta, "Kingston, Jamaica.

"J. A. A."—A commission in the East India Company's service is not purchasable.

"W. T. M. O."—The word Percy is pronounced nearly to Mercy. Harry is sometimes used as a Christian name.

"A. F. H."—Miss Burdett-Coutts' address is 1, Stratton street, Piccadilly; that of Lady Emily Stratford, 40, Wilton-crescent, Belgrave-square.

"A Canadian Reader." The Marchioness of Anglesey was not the wife of the Hon. Sir Henry Wellesley (now Lord Cowley), Sir Henry's wife is Lady Elouise first Earl Cadogan, and the Marquis's wife is married to the Hon. and Rev. G. C. Wellesley.

"Caribbean." The "bonded coal tests" to which our Correspondent alludes are those to which coals from other articles are taken out of bond. Sir Robert Peel explained in the House of Commons, in regard to the new tariff, that the warehousing regulations are intended to remain as they would be taken, on an understanding being furnished, that, if the bill for reducing the duties should not be passed, the original duty would be paid.

"C. S." The list is beyond doing to all subscription of Mining Shares, renders quotations at present, (and, in fact, under ordinary circumstances), merely nominal by the sea mean, that to buy or sell at the price quoted, is barely possible. An actual price being "made" when the nature of the transaction is declared. To state one, would, therefore, be only occupying space devoted to matters of more than usual interest.

Some Replies to Correspondents are unavoidably postponed, for want of room.

PARISIAN FASHIONS.—Next week, we shall present to our Readers a finely executed illustration of the prevailing fashions in Paris, as received from that city at the commencement of the season.

 THE LARGE VIEW OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN will certainly be issued to our subscribers during the present Month.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1846.

IF "Justice to Ireland" consisted in obtaining a fair share of the time and attention of the Legislature, there would be no cause of complaint on the part of that unhappy country. Enough, and more than enough, of time and talk is consumed over her wrongs, miseries, and errors; the present and many past weeks have been absorbed by Ireland; the rest of the British Empire has been kept quite subordinate and secondary to it. We are stopped on the road to commercial prosperity by the gaunt and fever-stricken figure of our sister country, like a fat and wealthy citizen arrested, on his way to "Change," by an importunate mendicant, all rags and hunger; and the man of wealth cannot help feeling his own prosperity as a sort of reproach, in the presence of such an embodiment of misery; a twinge of conscience crosses him—a doubt, whether his wretched fellow-subject can have had fair play; so, he grasps a handful of silver, bids the poor object take it, and buy bread, and goes his way to his merchandise. But, in the course of time, the same figure crosses his path, bearing about it additions and variety of wretchedness, and the same process of relief is repeated, ending in satisfaction on one side, and humiliation on the other. And so the weary drama goes on, and we begin to ask whether something more and better cannot be done? It is this question which is now being asked in a thousand forms. It seems long and tedious; but there is a long arrear of neglect and error to be made up; it is not one session, or many sessions, or even generations of those who make sessions and Parliaments, that can remedy evils which have been the growth of centuries. Time is the last thing we should grudge in the process.

We are approaching the termination of the debate on the Coercion Bill, or rather the end of the first debate on that measure; and parties will be glad to see it put aside for a time; for, besides its negative quality of obstructing everything else, it is a sad subject of itself. It casts a gloom over the mind to think such a thing can be a necessity; we cannot help contemplating its provisions with the same sort of feeling we look at the thumbscrews and implements of torture in the Tower. there is a terrible fitness in all their parts; as means to an end, they are perfect; but in that very perfection there is something repugnant to our better nature, and we wish they had never been invented. We have outgrown the barbarisms of rack and screw,—we have yet to hope for the time when Coercion and Curfew Acts, and similar specimens of brute force legalised, will be needed no more. We are sure that the world progresses; it does move after all, as the old astronomer said in another sense; but our motion in the cycle of improvement is very, very slow.

A few rays and gleams of hope, however, have pierced through the clouds and confusion of the past week's debate. From Sir Robert Peel's defence of the course adopted by the Government, on the Coercion Act, something may be gathered that looks like the germs of future legislation—some acorns, as it were, of future oaks. Every one will recollect the small threads and filaments of novel, and, to some, startling colours, that ran through the web of the Premier's latest Protection speeches; they showed that new materials were mingling in the work, and predictions were spoken upon them which time has amply fulfilled. The slight indications then, of coming change, are always of importance from Sir Robert Peel; we may be sure they have been carefully considered, and that they are not given to the world carelessly or before their time. He has laid Ireland and its people before him, the state of both being like that of no other people on the face of the earth, and he is coming to the conclusion that one of the causes of the many anomalies to be there witnessed, is the tenure of land. It is not impossible, also, that the doubts which hung suspended in solution have been precipitated into the state of certainties by the conduct of the Irish landlords during the present crisis. He complains of their backwardness in helping the Government, who relied on their aid, and censures their wholesale evictions, at a time when every particle of poverty and discontent is doubly dangerous. They have shown the stuff they are made of, and have most surely pulled down legislation upon their heads, which will, in some degree, re-adjust the balance of justice. The law has hitherto been all on the side of the landlords; the scale is beginning to turn. The Premier warmly cheered the speech of Mr. Macarthy, on Monday evening, paid a handsome tribute to its ability during his own address, and on Tuesday evening crossed the floor of the House, and entered into conversation with the member for Cork—not, we fancy, to tell him he thought the speech bad and mischievous. Let the "ascendancy" party of Ireland read the opinions the Premier cheered and the sentiments he admired, and they will see what chance they have of maintaining their system. From the Premier's own speech they will gather quite as little of approval of their proceedings. We extract a few passages, and recommend them to attention: they will be wanted at no very distant day for reference. If the following is not the precursor of an Act of Parliament, we are grievously mistaken:—

> It is impossible to contemplate the state of landed property in Ireland without being compelled to admit that, at present, it is in a most unsatisfactory condition. A great number of estates are wholly unprofitable from being in the hands, not of the proprietors, but of receivers; and it is impossible to contemplate the number of estates in this position, and their unprofitableness either to the creditor or the proprietor, without being forcibly convinced of the absolute necessity of some change in the law
>
> So much for those who, perhaps, have the will but not the power. Inasmuch as their inheritance is in the hands of others; but those who have the power, and exhibit no disposition to do good, have also a moral lesson read to them:—
>
> You will excuse me if I speak with freedom when I say that I think you are apt to rely too much upon the power of the Executive Government. You are always saying that the Government ought to act, that the Legislature ought to pass new laws. Believe me that you, the landlords of Ireland, have it in your own power to do more immediate good to your country than can be conferred by the Legislature. If you would but consent to a voluntary abatement well as of prudent proprietors—and seriously consider what are the real evils of your country, and what are the obligations imposed upon you as possessors of property. If those who are armed with legal power, would more frequently exercise the privilege in some measure against the dreadful consequences of such a course, which a very little liberality and forbearance would enable them to do, you would confer greater benefit on your country than the Government or legislation could effect.
>
> Here is full warning: the suggestions of what they should do, show clearly what they have not done; "those who have ears to hear, let them hear"—as "a very little liberality and forbearance" is not much to ask; but the adoption of them, shows they have not been practised. In the above extract, and others of the same kind, how many ifs if the world was perfect, and men all that they should be, there would be no occasion for laws, and less than there is for Parliaments and Prime Ministers; but, unluckily, the world and men are much what bad laws and bad passions make them; and restraint and compulsion are necessary to both, or goodness would be trampled and crushed out of existence.—

Of this, however, I have the strongest conviction, that if the landlords of Ireland would consider the condition of the people; if they would imitate the peace in this country with respect to the building of houses for the occupation even of the poorest labourer; if they would enter into a combination the most laudable and honourable in which they could enrol themselves; if they would procure correct information as to the state of the country; if they would resolve to follow that noble example to which I have referred (that of Lord G. Hill), the relations between rich and poor would be ameliorated, more kindly feelings would be encouraged, and greater confidence in the law would be established, than would be effected by any measures that Government or the Legislature could adopt.

While, therefore, you call on the Government to introduce measures, and upon Parliament to sanction them, I do hope that you will recognise that principle for which I have been contending, that there is a moral obligation incumbent upon the possessor of property, which laws can not supersede or control, the existence of which is essential to the well-being and prosperity of the country.

But if the holders of property will not do all those things, or any of them, what then remains for a well-disposed Government? Peel is on the path of legislation; and a little farther contempt for his advice, will bear its fruit in the shape of a Coercion Act, very different from the seventeen Courts Martial in disguise, which have, with short intervals, afflicted Ireland, without improving it, for two generations.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE April 30.

At a Congregation holden yesterday, the following degrees were conferred:—
B.A. S. Kerrick Mackay, A.M. of St. John's; James Griggen, St. John's; J. Saunderson Clarke ditto; J. Herbert Lee, Clare; C. John Bunyon, Corpus Christi; R. Alder Goodwin, ditto; Thomas Jones, Queens'; Edward Lloyd Owen ditto; T. Lloyd Owen, Jesus; Frederick Fitch, Christ's; Robert Middlemist, ditto, M.A. Richard Bendyshe, Trinity; Bolton Waller, ditto; T. James Bennett, J. Hawkins Edwards, M.B. Caius; John's; H. P. Pellew Crespi, Trinity; J. Rees Rathbone, Clare: A. Charles Forbes, Caius; Wilton Fairfax, Caius; J. Sidney Smith, T. George Smith, Trinity Hall. J. Thomas Brown, T. Pritchard Whate, Corpus Christi; Edwyn Fox, Queens'; E. Cunningham Didham, Q. Plumpton Oakes, Emmanuel, B.A.

CONSECRATION OF ST. CATHERINE'S CHURCH, BRAMWOOD.—This beautiful structure, engraved in our Journal of last week, was consecrated, with the accustomed ceremonies, on Thursday, the 23rd ult.: after prayers, the Lord Bishop of Oxford preached a most eloquent discourse upon 1 Corinthians, c. 3, v. 9: "And the house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent." There were present several of the clergy and gentry of the neighbourhood: the anthems, &c., were sung by some gentlemen from St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The church is in the Decorated style, from the design of Mr. W. Good, jun. It consists of nave and chancel, and a tower at the west end, rising nearly ninety feet. A few of the windows are filled with stained glass, and the floor is paved with encaustic tiles. The sittings are entirely free, and will accommodate about 340 persons. The cost of the erection, the endowment, &c. has been little short of £2,500. Towards which Mr. John Wall, jun., of Bramwood, has contributed the munificent sum of £1,000; the remaining £1,500 is about £250.0. The church is beautifully situated on the most commanding point of the estate of Bearwood, on the borders of the two extensive parishes of Hurst and Wokingham, and at a considerable distance from the parish church of either

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

DEODANDS.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the order of the day for the House going into Committee on the two bills which he had introduced, relating to the law of deodands. He had, in drawing up the bills, followed the principles of the Scotch law, which allowed the relations to sue jointly or singly, and he hoped it would receive the sanction of the House. Lord DENMAN said that he entertained a strong opinion that the bills should pass, and he had so expressed himself when they were before the House last year.—Lord BROUGHAM also expressed his cordial approbation of the bills before the House.—The House then went into Committee on the bills, and the clauses were agreed to. Lord BROUGHAM read a letter from a broker in Liverpool stating that the railway mania had again revived in that town, and increased vigour.

The Irish Great Western (Dublin and Galway) Railway Bill, and the Midland Great Western of Ireland (Dublin and Mullingar) Railway Bill, were, after a discussion, severally read a third time, and passed.

The second reading of the Railway Deposit Bill was postponed.

RAILWAY DISSOLUTION BILL.—On the motion for going into Committee on the Railway Dissolution Bill, the Earl of HARDWICKE protested against the bill, which was calculated to break up many excellent projects for railways, and in all instances to encourage intrigue and gambling.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—Mr. E. B. ROCHE read a letter from Mr. Smith O'Brien to himself, to the effect that that hon. gentleman was sorry he had not an opportunity of making an explanation yesterday. Mr. O'Brien also complained that only a portion of his correspondence with the Committee of Selection had been read. As he had not, in Mr. O'Brien's) case was a new one, and not supported by any authorities, he thought a Committee ought to have been appointed to consider the subject. The letter concluded thus:—

> It will perhaps be sufficient if I merely state that I submit to the terms of the motion which is founded to make in reference to my case, as soon as his own determination was formed. I should apply to the Government Annuity Office. Ida not wish you to travel to the House without such a mode of proceeding. Suffering from the injustice of the British House of Commons, I expect nothing from its generosity. I shall make no further appeal to the Yesterday I was extremely anxious to have been allowed to speak on my own behalf; but in my conduct, in private as a subject, I do not again condescend to solicit favour. In acknowledging I beg most cordially and earnestly to request you to inform the House that I am no party to any motion for my discharge
>
> I remain, my dear Roche, very sincerely yours,
>
> E. Roche, Esq., M.P. WILLIAM S O'BRIEN

MR. O'CONNELL gave notice that he would postpone his motion relative to the discharge of Mr. Smith O'Brien from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms till Monday next.

PROTECTION OF LIFE (IRELAND) BILL.

SIR J. GRAHAM having moved the order of the day for the first reading of this bill,

MR. P. SOMERS rose and opposed the bill.

MR. MAURICE O'CONNELL next addressed the House against the bill.

MR. COLQUHOUN supported the bill, on the ground that if safety were guaranteed in Ireland, absenteeism would diminish.

MR. T. O'BRIEN contended that a bill like the present was more calculated to increase crime than diminish it.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—In pursuance of the permission given by the House of Commons on Thursday night, Mr. Smith O'Brien was yesterday morning allowed to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords on the Poor-laws. Mr. O'Brien was under examination for some time, but the proceedings are private. It should be understood that Mr. O'Brien is not kept in close confinement Yesterday afternoon, he walked for some time outside the House of Commons, apparently without restraint, and in company with Mr. John O'Connell and other friends.

NOMINATION FOR THE FALKIRK DISTRICT OF BURGHS. The nomination of candidates for the representation of the burghs of Falkirk, Airdrie, Hamilton, Linlithgow, and Lanark, took place at Falkirk, on Wednesday. The two candidates, Lord Lincoln and Mr. Wilson, appeared on the hustings, surrounded by a large body of friends. The candidates having been duly proposed, a show of hands was taken, when only about a dozen hands were held up for Lord Lincoln. A poll was demanded on the part of his Lordship, and the polling was fixed to take place yesterday (Friday).

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ART-UNION OF LONDON.

The annual general meeting of the association was held on Tuesday, in the Theatre Royal Drury-lane, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee, and distributing the prizes. In the absence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the chair was taken by Lord Monteagle. His Royal Highness, however, subsequently arrived and presided at the meeting.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appeared that the total amount subscribed for the year was £16,500, or £1100 more than in the preceding year. The report went on to state that the works of art selected last year had amounted to 278, and the sum limitation had commissioned, on the part of Sir Erskine Perry (a prizeholder to the amount of £300), the execution in marble of Mr. W. Calder Marshall's group, "The First Whisper of Love." The committee, with the view of encouraging sculpture, offered the sum of £300 for a group or single figure in marble, not less than 4 feet 6 inches high, to be competed for by furnished models in plaster. The models were required to be sent in by the 1st of July next, and the work completed in the same day in the following year. Beyond the selected group, it was hoped that others might be found suitable for casting in bronze. The bronzes for the current year, after Mr. Foley's "Huntsman at the Stream," were nearly ready, and would be distributed after the allotment. The engraving due to the subscribers of 1844, "The Castle of Ischia," was delivered in May last. The engraving for 1845, "The Convalescent," after Mr. Mulready, had been delayed by the indisposition of the engraver, Mr. Doo. The subscribers had, however, the series of outlines by Mr. Rimer, illustrative of "The Castle of Indolence." The engraving due to the subscribers of the present year, "Jephtha's Daughter," engraved from the painting by O'Neil, was finished, and would be speedily sent to press A series of outline engravings, illustrative of "Gertrude of Wyoming," would also shortly be distributed, in addition to the last-mentioned print. For the ensuing year, a pair of engravings, by Mr. C. Rolls and Mr F. Heath, after pictures by Mr. Uwins, R.A., "The Last Embrace," and "The Neapolitan Wedding," were nearly completed; and the committee had decided, with a view to future arrangements, placed in the hands of Mr. Lightfoot, Mr. Frost's "Sabrina," to be engraved, and they had also obtained permission from Mr. Maclise to engrave his prize cartoon of "The Spirit of Chivalry." (Cheers.) For the premium of £300 offered by the committee for the best original picture illustrating British history, twenty-eight cartoons had been sent in, and after due consideration the committee decided that the author of the cartoon "Queen Philippa Interceding for the Lives of the Burgesses of Calais," was best entitled to receive the commission, provided he were found competent to execute the painting. On opening the letter accompanying the cartoon, the artist was seen to be Mr. H. C. Selous, to whom the committee had awarded a premium in 1843, for his illustrations of "The Pilgrim's Progress." The painting, when completed, would be engraved for the Society.

After the report had been read, the drawing was proceeded with The following were the principal prizes:—Mr. T. L. Robertson, Fredericktown, £100. S. C. Cox, Esq., £100; F. Fercdinando, West Ham, £200; E. L. Bell, Bayswater-square, £100; J. Brittan, Birkenhead, £200; J. Dudley, Mornington-crescent, £200; Mr. King, Newmarket, £100; F. J. Bladen, Regent-street, £300. Mr. J. Pyne, Wellington-square, £100; Mr. W. Moffatt, St. John's-lane, £100; C. Davey, Yarmouth, £150; Miss Chubb, Atherstone, £100; Mrs. Evendin, Tunbridge, £100; J. C. Elliott, Northam, ton, £150.

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council, the first which had been summoned for several weeks past, was held at the Foreign Office on Monday. The Council was attended by Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Gladstone, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of St. Germans, Lord G. Somerset, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Ellenborough, the Hon. Sidney Herbert, and the Lord Chancellor.

FISTULA INFIRMARY.—On Monday, the anniversary dinner to celebrate the establishment of this benevolent Institution, took place at the Albion Tavern, in Aldersgate-street, and was honoured by a larger number of guests than on any former occasion The chair was filled by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who was supported by Mr. Sheriff Laurie, Mr. Alderman Copeland, M.P.; Mr. Masterman, M.P.; Mr. Powell, &c., and a number of gentlemen of influence. In the course of the evening, the health of Mr. Salmon, the Surgeon to the Infirmary, was most cordially drunk, and that gentleman made a very efficient speech, in which he set forth the difficulties which the Institution had had to contend, and the efforts which had been made to carry out the views of those by whom it had been projected. The report of the contributions showed that the Institution was most influential under the benevolence of those present, and an amount of subscriptions to nearly £600 was announced by the Secretary. It appears from the printed report that the Society is daily increasing in publicity, and that the number of cases also is steadily on the increase; yet so great is the number of applications of patients for relief, that without a great effort on the part of the benevolent, not a tenth part of the applicants can be relieved. The present building, which has been devised and temporarily put up to contain animated discussion, it was determined to embody the views of the meeting in a memorial; and a deputation was appointed to wait on Sir Robert Peel, to urge on the right hon. Baronet the necessity of pressing through Parliament the measure agreed upon by his Government, and sanctioned by the House of Commons, with all possible despatch.

CLERKENWELL RAGGED SCHOOL.—On Tuesday evening the first annual meeting of the Clerkenwell Sunday-school, for poor ragged children, was held in the parochial school-rooms, Amwell-street, Clerkenwell, for the purpose of receiving the report. The chair was taken at seven o'clock, by Lord Ashley, amid loud cheering. The school was first opened on the 19th of January, 1845, since which time there had been ... boys and 76 girls admitted. Of this number, 80 regularly attended. The meeting having been addressed by the Rev. H. Hughes, the President of the School, and the Rector of St. John's, Clerkenwell, by the Rector of St. James's, and other gentlemen, and resolutions moved, pledging the meeting to support to the utmost the establishment of Ragged Schools, for the reconciliation of the children of the poor and destitute classes, a vote of thanks was passed by acclamation to the noble Chairman.

IMPORTATION OF FRENCH GREEN PEAS.—Much curiosity was excited in Covent-Garden Market on Monday, by the appearance of two packs of French green peas or sale, and for which the vendor demanded £2 10s. As a matter of course, this precocious production of nature found a purchaser.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number registered in the metropolitan districts during the week which ended last Saturday, numbered 866, being below the average of the corresponding weeks during the previous six years, by 15. The number of births registered was 1439 an excess over the deaths of 583.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT NEAR BRISTOL.—On Monday a very severe accident, by which five men were more or seriously injured, occurred at the New Church, Knowle-wood, near Bristol. The interior of the church has for some time been undergoing extensive repairs, and was being entirely repainted, and the unfortunate sufferers were painters engaged at the time in painting the ceiling of the church. For this purpose, as is usual, a plank was placed for the men to work upon having each end held upon a scaffold erected for its support. Upon this plank four men, Thomas Nash, William Kent, William Lambert, and James Morgan, very incautiously went to work. The motion and weight of the four men while at work upon the plank so increased its vibration that one end of it was grad... ... off from the scaffold that supported it, and it fell with a loud crash, precipitating the four unfortunate men into the body of the church, a depth of about nine feet, and in the process of its fall striking down another man at work in the organ loft. The utmost consternation immediately prevailed, and the five sufferers were picked up in a dreadfully mangled condition, and the were removed to the Bristol Infirmary, where they are now lying in a very precarious state. The man who was struck by the falling plank was also severely, but not dangerously injured, and was removed to the house of some of his relatives.

A CHILD MURDERED FOR HER BURIAL FEE.—On Monday (last week), an inquest was held at Sedgley, Staffordshire, on the body of Mary Rodda, about a year and a half old, the daughter of John Rodda, a labourer. It appears that the latter is a member of a burial club, and that he would have been entitled to £3 10s. on the death of the child. Under pretence of killing vermin in his house, he purchased some oil of vitriol, which he poured down the throat of his child while she was at home in the cradle, which caused her death. The jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the father, who was committed to York Castle, to take his trial for the horrid offence at the next assizes.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

MANSLAUGHTER OF A HIGHWAYMAN, NEAR RAMSGATE.

An affray of a fatal and extraordinary character has recently occupied the attention of the magistrates and Coroner of Ramsgate. The facts elicited are these: It seems that on Wednesday (last week) a large number of the inhabitants of the neighbouring villages congregated in Margate to celebrate a festival of a benevolent society, in the Tivoli Gardens. Amongst them was a man named James Sutton, reported to be reputably connected, who, towards night, attracted attention by his boisterous conduct. It appears that after the evening's amusement at the latter brother's company, and nothing was heard of him until midnight, when two men named Reap and Stichney, on their return home from the gardens, while proceeding along a footpath leading to Ramsgate, an adjacent parish, saw a man some distance in advance calling "Holloa!" On coming up they found it to be John Price, a carrier, living at Hunnover Price said ... very excited manner, "Here is a man who has been attempting to rob me ... I will not leave him until I see who he is." A few yards distant they saw ... lying on the ground, who seemed senseless. On examination they discovered to be Sutton Price then charged Sutton with attempting to rob him. His statement to the Inspector on duty was as follow ...

"On Wednesday night, about half-past ten, I was going home from the Tivoli, and when ... way between that place and Hereford, Sutton jumped out of the hedge by the footpath, and demanded of me, calling me by the name. I said I had a watch for him. He asked me if I had any money. I said I had. He then caught hold of me by the neckerchief, and said he must have it or my ... I will not leave him until I see who he is." A few yards distant they saw ... lying on the ground, who seemed senseless. On examination they discovered to be Sutton Price then charged Sutton with attempting to rob him. His statement to the Inspector on duty was as follow ...

"On Wednesday night, about half-past ten, I was going home from the Tivoli, and when ... way between that place and Hereford, Sutton jumped out of the hedge by the footpath, and demanded of me, calling me by the name. I said I had a watch for him. He asked me if I had any money. I said I had. He then caught hold of me by the neckerchief, and said he must have it or my life. We struggled together, and I slipped up my hand and untied my neckerchief. He then seized me by the throat, and kicked me. I at length got the better of him, and got him down. I struck him several times violently on the head, calling out for assistance, and hitting across him, to keep him down. I was the first to leave off struggling. We were struggling for three-quarters of an hour. I was sober, and alone. I did not know the man."

The man Sutton being apparently dying, medical aid was promptly called to him, but he never rallied, and expired in the course of a few hours. On the magistrates hearing of the death, they ordered Price to be arrested, but subsequently liberated him on bail. On the Inspector inspecting the spot where the struggle occurred, he noticed a quantity of blood on the ground, and marks of a very violent struggle; and on the ground was a hole, evidently made by a man's head beating against it, and in the centre were two small stones sticking up about an inch....

At the Coroner's inquest, Mr. Thornton, a surgeon, who had made a post mortem examination of the body, deposed that death had been caused by violence applied to the brain, and which might have been produced by beating the head upon the ground. The head was dreadfully knocked about; the eye blackened, and injured, and marks on the throat, as if some one had attempted to put a noose round it, and had pressed the flesh. It was proved that the deceased and Price were perfect strangers. The deceased's relatives spoke to his being a quiet, orderly man; and called the police to show that they knew nothing of him, at least in the shape of a highway robber. The Coroner's Jury, after a lengthened consultation, returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against Price, considering the circumstances to have been necessary; and he was forthwith committed to Maidstone Gaol to take his trial at the ensuing assizes.

THE LATE FATAL ACCIDENT AT HUNGERFORD MARKET PIER.—Mr. W. Baker held an inquest on Sunday evening, at the Crown Inn, High street, Shadwell, touching the death of Mr. Frederick Edgell, aged 29 years, late a clerk in the service of Messrs. Williams, merchants, of 163, Lower Thames street. The deceased was one of the unfortunate persons drowned at Hungerford Market Pier on Easter Sunday last. His body was picked up off St. James's-stairs, Surrey-side, on the evening of Friday. The same witnesses were in attendance as at the previous inquiry. Nothing new transpired as to the cause of the accident, and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," with the following addendum—"The Jury recommend the Directors of the Hungerford Market Company to express greater caution in future in the construction and management of their approaches to steam-boats near the river, and paying at their pier."

CASE OF POISONING NEAR NORWICH.—On Saturday last, a female about 30 years of age, named Sarah Smith, who has been living as cook in the family of R. J. H. Harvey, Esq., of Bergh-apton, near Norwich, son of Sir Robert John Harvey, Bart., was committed to take her trial, on a charge of having administered poison (cantharides,) to a fellow-servant named Martha Digby, and also to a younger girl.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AT MILBANK.—An accident of a most frightful character, by which persons were killed, and several parties seriously, if not fatally injured, occurred on Friday evening (last week), on the premises of Mr. Battin, a stone merchant, at Milbank. Between three and four o'clock, a number of Mr. Battin's men were engaged unloading a barge, containing marble blocks, by a ... sliding crane. Whilst a heavy block of stone, weighing several hundred weight, was being raised, the cross-bar of the crane snapped asunder, and the whole mass fell into the barge lying at the side of the wharf. As soon as the men perceived that the crane had given way, they made an attempt to get out of the way, but before they had time to do so, the crane also fell into the barge amongst the men. A young man, named William Johnson, a native of Oxford, who had been employed on the works only a few days, was the first person picked up. He was removed in an insensible state to the Westminster Hospital, where he died, in less than ten minutes after his admission. Another of the workmen, named George Richards, of Dorset street, Vauxhall bridge road, was found in a similar state to his companion. He was taken to the same institution, and he (there is regret to say) after he was received. Eight persons in all were more or less totally wounded by the accident, named George Holloway, Henry Barker, and William Murray, were also taken to the Westminster Hospital. Murray is a married man, with a young family, and Holloway and Barker are single men in a very precarious state.

SUDDEN DEATH IN AN OMNIBUS.—On Wednesday night Mr. W. Payne held an inquest at the White Lion Tavern, King William-street, London-bridge, on the body of Mr. Frederick Edgell, aged 31 years, a gentleman residing at Wandsworth. Thomas Gregson, conductor to one of the Clapham omnibuses, deposed that on Tuesday night last, about eleven o'clock, he was standing in front of the Queen's Head Tavern, Oxford-street, when the deceased entered witness's omnibus, in ... were seven other gentlemen. The vehicle proceeded as far as the Monument, in King William-street, when witness was ... by the passengers calling out ... that one of the gentlemen had been taken ill. Witness and the other ... took the deceased to the ... Fuller, who opened a vein in the arm ... but life was then quite extinct. He was searched, and on his person were found a ... case and ... Fife Assurance, No. High Holborn, No. 49, Aldermanbury, and Wardour-street, Surgeon, said that when he first saw the deceased he was quite dead. His eyes were contracted, and the features very pallid. Other evidence having been ... the Jury returned a verdict of "Natural death." The deceased was Secretary to the Paris and Strasburg Railway Company, and the Rouen Havre Dock and Railway Company.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SOLOMON v. LAWSON—LIBEL.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, printer and publisher of the Times newspaper, for a libel he case was tried before Lord Chief Justice Denman at a late sessions for the county of Surrey held at Croydon. The alleged libel consisted in the publication of a letter in the Times newspaper, charging the plaintiff with supplying unwholesome water to ships which called at St. Helena. The particulars of this case have been recently reported. The Jury at the trial returned a verdict for the plaintiff ... damages £500. Subsequently a rule for arresting judgment was obtained, which having been fully argued on Monday morning, Lord Denman pronounced the decision of the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH. His Lordship said his learned brothers and himself were of opinion that the counts and pleas were not sufficient in law to maintain the verdict. The judgment must therefore be arrested.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY.—A long legal discussion has taken place in the LORD MAYOR'S Court upon the construction of the law regarding persons who act as dealers and chapmen in the City of London. The case submitted to the Court was the Chamberlain of the City of London v. Sturt and others. It was an action brought by the Chamberlain of the City against the defendant, who is a wholesale warehouseman, carrying on business in Fore-street, to obtain certain penalties to which he had subjected himself by reason of his carrying on his business in the City without taking up his freedom. It was contended, on the part of the defendants, that the bye-law did not apply to wholesale dealers. The Lord Mayor concurred in this view. The Jury gave a verdict for the defendants on all the counts.

SENTENCE UPON MR. GREGORY.—In the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH on Thursday, Judgment was pronounced upon Mr. Bernard Gregory, for libels on the Duke of Brunswick. The libels were published in the Satirist, while Mr. Gregory was connected with it, and one of them charged the Duke with having murdered Miss Clermont. The defendant was brought up last week from the affidavit of his Serene Highness a statement was made that the defendant, at the Strand Theatre, on the stage, still further added to his former offence by various allusions to the prosecution—when the Court allowed further time to answer this new matter. Affidavits on the part of the defendant were now put in denying the new matter. Mr. Justice Patteson pronounced the judgment of the Court, which was, that for each of the libels the defendant should be imprisoned for two months in the Queen's Bench prison, making in the whole eight months, and that the imprisonment should be under the first class as provided by the Act of Parliament.

POLICE.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION IN DRURY-LANE.

Last Saturday evening, a boy of 15, named John Braham, attempted to assassinate Thomas Blewitt, a lithographic printer, in the service of Messrs. Graff and Co., of Oxford Market, while returning from his place of business to his residence in White-cross-yard, Drury-lane.

The prisoner Braham was examined at BOW-STREET, on Monday, and the following evidence will explain the circumstances under which this atrocious attempt at murder was committed. The charge on the police sheet was for shooting and wounding Thomas Blewitt, and thereby endangering his life.

The first witness called was Louisa Crooke, who said: I live at No 12, Great Earl street, Seven Dials, and am servant to a Mrs. Dowling. About five minutes past eight on Saturday night I was going down Princes-street, Drury-lane, towards Clare-market, when I met the prisoner, whom I had never seen before, at the corner of Princes-street. I accidentally pushed against him, and he said, "You ..., what made you do that?" I said, "You puppy, what made you call me that?" He then tried to catch hold of me by the arm, and I ran away. He followed me, caught me by the arm, and used the same expression as before, adding, "if it wasn't for one thing I would do for you to-night." He then took a pistol from under his arm, but I am not sure whether it was the right arm or the left. I think it was the right. I said I would give him in charge, and called out "police," and he ran away. He appeared very timid and wishful.

Mr. Humphreys asked whether "wishful" was the term used? And on her replying that it was, Mr. Henry inquired what the witness meant by "wishful.—She said she meant that he looked wild, and as if he would do something to her if he dare."

William Hathaway, of 37, Hertford-place, Drury-lane, said that at about twenty minutes before nine o'clock on Saturday night he was passing through Drury-lane, and the prisoner passed him from the opposite side, and walked towards him, presenting a pistol towards him. He was very much alarmed, and turned aside, so that the prisoner passed him, and he immediately heard the pistol go off, and a man's voice exclaim, "I am shot!" The prisoner ran away against him, and then ran away. He (witness) was so frightened that he was not able to run after the prisoner, or to assist the wounded man. A man came up to the spot at the time, named Edward Phillips, a carpenter, living at Hunnover, and carried the wounded man to a chemist's shop. The wounded man was going the same way (witness) was, for he had passed him hardly a moment before. He did not see the prisoner for some minutes afterwards, but was so convinced that he hardly noticed anything. He would know the wounded man again.

Charles Baker, policeman F 83, said that he was on duty in Drury-lane on Saturday night, and that, at about twenty-five minutes before nine o'clock he was passing by Princes-street, and heard the report of a pistol. He saw a cloud of smoke at the door of a cook's shop, at the corner of that street, and saw the wounded man, who had his hands pressed upon his shoulder, and carried him into

MAY MORN.

Bella madre di fiori,
D'erbe novelle e di novelli amori.
GUARINI.—Pas. Fido.

Awake! arise! 'tis May's glad Morning—
The Hebe of the teeming year;
A thousand sylphids are adorning
Her sun-path to our hemisphere.
Before her flees chill Winter's gloom,
Around her Nature's beauties bloom;
The frozen trance of Earth is o'er
The Sea swells joyous to the shore;
The wood-nymphs chant their festive lay
The Naiads hail the radiant May.

From Heaven, upon the rainbow's slope,
Descends Man's truest Blessing—Hope.
The Patriarch Boy his homage pays,
And Jeffs Love Titania's fays;
The minstrel's pipe and morris bells
Ring cheerily, while Laughter swells
Among the gay and youthful train
Flocking from hill-side, dell, and plain
To welcome May with heart and soul,
And dance around her festive pole.

Flow'rs, flow'rs for the vernal Queen,
On the first day of Her reign!
Erect her throne on the village green,
Each rural nymph and swain!
Young May comes forth, and Heaven and earth
Smile on her jocund throng;
All Nature shares the genial mirth,
And joins in choral song.

Young May beams forth with the morning star
Along the orient skies,
While Flora decks her opal car
With wreaths of thousand dyes.
The cowslip and the nascent rose
Upon May's teeming breast repose;
And every floral gem,
Or from the garden, wood, or brake,
From heath-hill, or the marge of lake,
Forest or fountain, all would make
May's fragrant diadem.

Flow'rs, flow'rs, for the dawning May,
For the month of hope and love!
The wild lark pours his tribute lay,
And coos Cytherea's dove;
The eagle in his eyrie high—
The swan upon the stream
The trout beneath it, shooting by—
And even May's own day-liv'd fly
Rejoice in her blessed beam.

Oh! joyous laugh'd the young May Morn,
In England's olden times!
When the blythe sound of harp or horn,
And church-tow'r's merrie chimes
Arous'd the Knight and Ladye bright,
The bashful hind and maid,
And the Camp and Court
Would join the sport;
And e'en "the Queen of the lion port"*
Off to the Maypole would resort,
In Windsor's Royal glade!

Flow'rs! flow'rs for the May-day wreath—
A garland fresh and fair;
Let Gallia's brilliant lily breathe
Therein; and who shall dare
To tear it from the Rose's side,
Or from the Thistle's downy pride,
Or Erin's emerald flow'r?
May Time more closely knit the band
That joins in love each brother-land
Firm and united to withstand
A world's concentred pow'r!

Awake—awake! 'Tis May's glad morning,
Blest be thy sceptre o'er our Isles,
The wings of Commerce danger scorning,
Expand beneath thy sunny smiles.

Thy smiles will cheer rude Labour's brow,
And Ceres' heart with grief oppressed.
Around thy throne the seasons bow
Sweet May and hallow thy bequest
Oh! first great month of all the year
Propitious prove thy presence here.

* Elizabeth

A GARLAND FOR MAY DAY.—DRAWN BY WILLIAM HARVEY.

FINE ARTS.

A GOSSIP ABOUT THE WATER COLOUR SOCIETIES.

Amateurs may bewail the short comings of our oil painters—Mr Haydon may insert indignant advertisements in the Times, and bitterly contrast the thousand admirers of Tom Thumb, with the units who pay their shillings to see his "Aristides and Nero"—Art may be on the decline, and artists languishing, but the Water-Colour Societies flourish in spite of all. The inspiriting little blue ticket is seen on a score of frames in both 53 and 5, Pall-mall, for one in Suffolk-street, and, we might add, in Trafalgar-square, did the Academy condescend to have a sale book and salesman in their exhibition rooms. The reasons of this continued prosperity of the Water-Colour Societies are obvious. In the first place, Water-Colour drawing is a self engendered art among us, and bears the onward marks of vitality in the spirit and skill of its productions. In the next place, Water-Colour prices, like Water-Colour successes, are unambitious, and within the reach of lighter purses than the more pretending canvasses of the oil painter. And to heighten the effect of all this, both Old and New Society number masters in their art, in more senses than one—masters who not only make drawings, but also teach pupils—influential and rich ones to dilate on the pet style, and purchase the pet works, which go off so rapidly at the private view. It is quite delightful to see the connoisseurship exhibited in the Water-Colour exhibitions, particularly by the ladies. Nothing can be in more striking contrast with the hopeless, helpless, lack-lustre stare with which the well-dressed crowds defile before the pictures of the Academy Exhibition, catching, as drowning man do straws, some portrait or miniature of an acquaintance, to let loose the flood of remark (very much "from the purpose" of painting), which they have found no pretext for discharging, before attempts of high art genre or landscape

At the Water-Colour Exhibitions you will see people looking into the drawings in the most knowing way possible, and gibly letting off volies of technicalities—"washes," and "left lights," and "scratched lights," and "body colour," and "broken colour," and we know not what. In fact, every one talks like a painter and looks like a judge. The Water-Colour Exhibitions are the only ones at which English people really "assist." There is something in the art which suits the effects England presents to the artist, and its secrets are not so deep and inscrutable to the amateur as those of oil

Another feature in these galleries is the pleasant rapidity with which purchasing goes on. You see a secretary diligently employed in entering sales and receiving deposits, and an assistant as constantly at work affixing the little blue tickets to the corners of the drawings; until, in a week or two after the opening, everything you covet is disposed of, and the artist's peculium comfortably and pleasantly augmented. Our workers in oil might borrow many useful hints from their brethren in water. On the other hand, there are members of the Water-Colour Societies who would by no means suffer by borrowing a warning or two from the faults of the Academy or the British Artists.

Of the former class, hints for the oil-painters, we would enumerate the essentially English character which predominates in the subjects chosen by the best of the Water-Colour draughtsmen. Look at the Old Society. The misty downs and darkling seas of Copley Fielding—the vigorously-dashed Welsh mountain glens, or weedy river banks of David Cox—the scarcely inferior Thames scenes and Kentish cottages of George Fripp—the broad, rain-moistened landscapes of De Wint—the moss-covered, time-worn stone work of Rayner—the life-like, solid, apple-cheeked son of the soil of Hunt—the flowers of Mrs. Bartholomew—all are native: "tis English, English, Sirs, from top to toe." It is true, Front goes abroad for his Norman porches, his high-waisted and shapeless market-women, and his gally-striped awnings; and Harding has this year left the corn-fields and trees he paints so well, to rise to the highest range of the Alps; while Oakley has abandoned his undisputed field of gypsydom for the distinguished foreigners who visit our hospitable shores with the passport of a barrel-organ or a guinea-pig. But we may set off against this, Frederick Taylor's faithful adherence to the homely, in such exquisite works as his "Roadside Travellers," and his cabinet gem from "Waverley

The balance on the whole Exhibition is decidedly in favour of native subjects. The gain by this is hardly to be rated high enough. It keeps us out of the domain of Anglo-Italian comedine and Baker-street bandits, of "findings of Harold" and sucking Eleanors, of everlasting Gil Blases and wearisome Vicars of Wakefield, on the one hand, and that of Egyptian deserts with English grey skies, Roman campagn as with English turf, and compositions in which Poussan and Claude are reflected instead of that nature the study of which made them what they are on the other. Now that Müller is gone, where are we to look for a worthy successor of Constable? Creswick is there, but he wants the scope and genius—Lee is there, but he wants the force and nerve. Perhaps Delphin, young as he is, bids fairest for the vacant honours.

As to the warnings which the Academy holds out to the Pall Mall Exhibition, they are neither few nor far between. Let them not strive, urged on by pretending criticism, after aims as much beyond the artists' reach, as beyond the approbation of the public. Let them eschew large works, in which the size only serves to magnify the defects, and the ambition of the attempt to stamp the completeness of the failure. Nor while they do this let them contrariwise studiously level their productions at the lowest apprehensions. Let them learn what they can do, and be conscientious in doing it—thinking not too much of the old masters on the one hand, nor of Art-Unions on the other. Let them remember what the domain of Water-Colour drawing really is; its capacity for giving atmospheric effects, and the tones of a well-watered, highly cultivated country like England; its inability to rival either the depth or force of oil in landscape or figure subjects. Why—if the domains of oil and water be as separate in painting as in chemistry—if the two will no more combine on the paper or canvass than in the glass or crucible—should Mr Fyne's foregrounds in oil be weaker even than Mr. Harding's in water; or Mr. Corbould's sacred subjects suggest such disagreeable comparisons?

We subjoin a detailed criticism of the Water-Colour Exhibitions, to which we refer our readers for more complete exemplification of the doctrines involved in the above remarks.

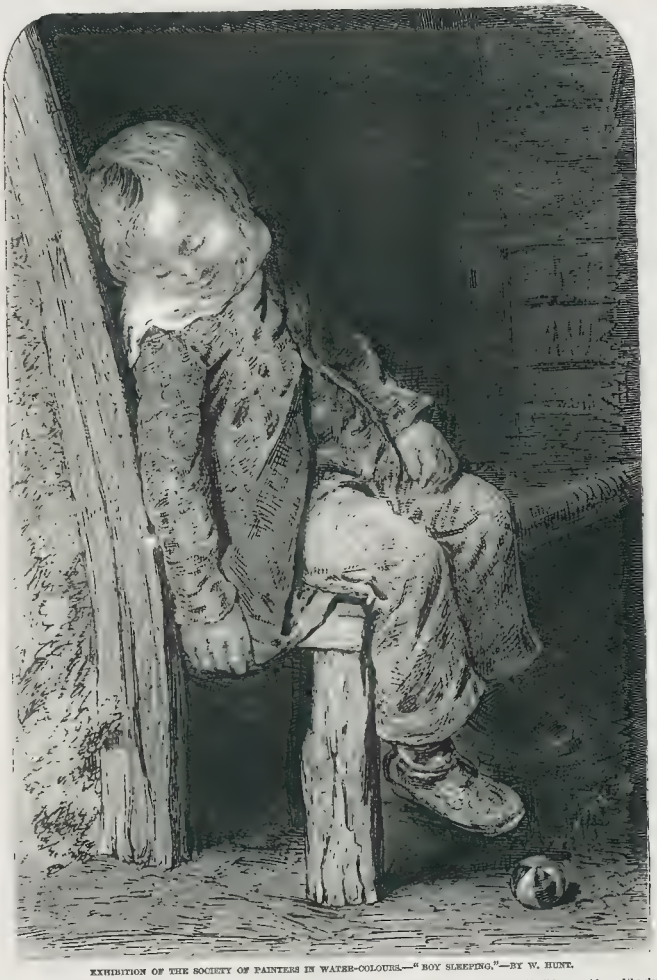
THE OLD SOCIETY.

This claims priority of place not only on the score of its longer existence, but on the more substantial ground of real and indisputable superiority. Its members show a clearer apprehension of their true field of subjects, and a greater mastery, on the whole, in carrying out their conception The names of its principal contributing members are household words with us. Copley Fielding, De Wint, Cattermole, D. Cox, J. Nash, Frederick Taylor, the Fripps George and Alfred; Bentley, Prout, Hunt, Rayner, and Harrison. Who does not at once associate the names with the well-remembered merits of the works? We shall take them in alphabetical order.

Bentley has not made any remarkable advance this year, if, indeed, he keeps up at his old level. His "Wreck on the Rocks, Dunluce Castle," (20) is one of his most ambitious attempts, little superior, however, to works of Mr Callow's in the room. He seems to us, to have fallen into a fault of coldness, while his water wants that liquid motion and sparkle in which he was wont to be so successful.

Cattermole, the Salvator of water colour, has one large, and several smaller drawings, if we may abuse the word so far as to apply it to the daring impasto of gum and body colour, which, reckless of damp and decay, he plasters on his paper His large drawing, (631) "The Unwelcomed Return," is perhaps the lion of the room. It is a primeval oak forest, with a mounted knight gloomily taking his way across the foreground, and a figure watching him from behind a gnarled and gigantic bole in the centre. That such trees, so huge, so antediluvian in stem and leaf never grew, save in the artist's brain, is no good objection to the work, if it be one of those enchanted woods in which old romance loved to set its Knights astray. But we have no reason to believe that this is other than an every-day ancestral oak forest, with a Crusader coming back as Crusaders were wont to do, to find his lady married to somebody else, and his own draw-bridge drawn up under his knightly nose. The force of the handling of this drawing is as undeniable as the means used to attain the effect are unscrupulous and inconsistent with any care for the durability of the work. It was cracking when we saw it, even on the first day, in every direction, and much of the surface will probably have peeled off by the time the Exhibition closes. In point of merit as a drawing it falls infinitely short of his "Battle in the Wood" last year, and, for our humble parts, we prefer by much his small drawing of "Conspirators" (291), although this is a thing he has done a hundred times before, and always as well. Still, in firmness of drawing and well managed mastery of effect, slightly indicated, but apparently complete, it is a good specimen of this wayward but powerful and manly draughtsman, who would be working in oil, if he will have impasto

Hunt has the usual number of the usual subjects. He has immortalized his "Sleeping Boy," we have engraved. The hang of head and foot is nature itself; and it is humanity, however humble. But when Hunt's marvellous power of imitation is applied to interiors of modern drawing-rooms and the litter of an old stable, we feel a certain annoyance. Unworthy employment of this rare gift is solicited on every side—in the joys, sorrows, and moving accidents of every-day life and character—why should it be recklessly flung away upon old boxes and barrels, and hayforks and straws? There is a wilfulness about this habit of Mr. Hunt's, which critics are bound by their admiration of him to stigmatize, not less than they are to enquire the meaning of a certain unaccountable purplish tone—meant for daylight, we presume—with which he floods these assemblages of uninteresting objects—as in (14) "Plucking a Fowl." In one instance, a picture of still life—composed by a fowl basket, a piece of stick, a bowl, and a brown jar—there is added to the family choice of subject, an utter want of proportion in the respective sizes of the objects, which surprises us in a man of Mr. Hunt's power and skill. His picture of "Devotion" presents us with a head so beautifully manipulated, so true in colour, so lofty in feeling, that we are the more annoyed to find such powers so misapplied.



EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—"BOY SLEEPING."—BY W. HUNT.

(Continued on page 292.)

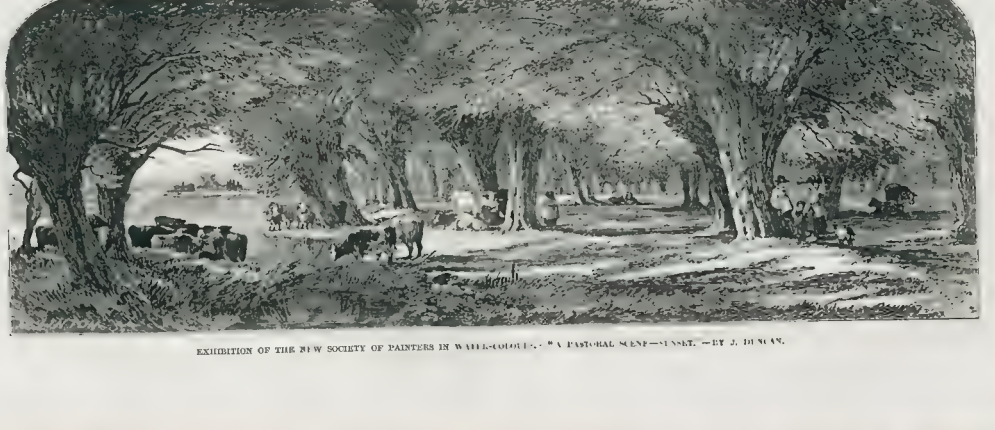

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—"A PASTORAL SCENE—SUNSET."—BY J. DUNCAN.

MUSIC.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The Fourth Concert was given on Wednesday night, under the direction of his Royal Highness Prince Albert. We subjoin the Programme as a musical curiosity:—

PART I.

The National Anthem
* Chorus. Hosanna to the Son of David. (Boyce in B Minor.) Cherubini.
Recit. Madame Castellan. Armida dispietata } (Rinaldo.) Handel.
Aria. Lascia ch'io pianga }
* Anthem. O Lord, the maker of all things. King Henry the Eighth.
* Offertorium. Christus natus est nobis. L'Abbé Vogler.
* Corale (full Choir). O magnify the Lord. Benno, Bishop of Meissen, A.D. 1107.
* Chanson de Roland. Signor Mario. Soldats Francois.
Recit. Miss Birch. But, lo! the conqueror comes. } (Judas Macabeus.)
Aria and Chorus. See the conquering hero. } Handel.
March. }
Chorus. Sing unto God.

PART II.

* Overture. (King Stephen.) Beethoven.
* Duo. Miss Birch and Signor Mario. Un bandeau. Gretry.
(Richard Cœur de Lion.)
Chorus. Oh, what delight. (Fidelio.) Beethoven.
* Romance. Signor Mario. L'autrier par la matinée. (Provencal Melody of the 13th century.) Thibaut, King of Navarre.
* Duetto. Madame Castellan and Labiache.
Un briccone senza core. (La Cosa rara.) V. Martini.
* Chorus. Al Basch. (Il Seraglio.) Mozart.
* Terzetto. Miss Birch, Madame Castellan, and Labiache.
Io son la prima. (Il Direttore della Commedia.) Mozart.
Glee. Peace to the souls of the heroes. Dr. Callcott.
Chorus. Cum Sancto Spiritu. Haydn.

The pieces marked with an asterisk were novelties at these concerts

[illegible] "It is curious, though, of course, the effect of mere accident, how regal a feature pervaded this Concert. Let us only view the following mere names and titles:—King Henry the Eighth, King Stephen, Richard Cœur de Lion, Thibaut King of Navarre, Song of the time of William the Conqueror, Handel's Hymn to Cecilia and Mercy, and we may add also the Overture to the Grand Signor. The Royal selector displayed likewise elevated feeling in the gleanings from the ecclesiastical schools, and we cannot but suspect that the choice of the Oratorio Glee, of Callcott, had a graceful and special reference to the fallen heroes in the late great battles in India."

We have rarely heard a Concert go off with more excitement. The Prince displayed his usual tact and judgment in reviving musical illustrations of the past. Mario's singing of the inspiring strain of "Rolando" produced a great effect. Some notion was afforded by the choral response of what might have been the [illegible] last Monday night. [illegible] Mario's singing was quite modern.

The Overture to [illegible] VIII is open to controversy, but it is not worth the trouble. Vogler's Offertorium is a mystification. Cherubini's Chorus is sublime, but it lacked smooth execution. The orchestra did not go well in the overture. The comic Duet of Martini, and the buffo Terzetto of Mozart told well. Gretry's Duet was unmercifully dragged by Miss Birch and Signor Mario: it is a playful theme, and not a psalm. Madame Castellan sang Handel's air from "Rinaldo" pleasingly, but she indulges too much in the shake, in which she is by no means perfect, as was shown in her verse of the National Anthem. Labiache had no solo of importance, but his concerted pieces was most effective. The characteristic Chorus from the "Seraglio" was encored. Sir H. R. [illegible] these are the weakest, and display his research and learning in an adverse point of light. The Glee ought to have been placed in the first part, before the selection from the "Judas Macabeus." It was nicely sung by Messrs. Hawkins, Lockey, and Machin. The Misses Williams and Miss Birch assisted also in the concerted music.

In the room were Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke and Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Saxe Meiningen, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duke of Wellington, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marchioness of Aylesbury, Aberdeen, and Douro; the Marquis of Abercorn; Earls Howe, Cawdor, Devon, Powis, Bandon, Liverpool, Delaware, Jersey, Lords Clive, Templetown, Byron, G. Lennox; the Countesses of [illegible] with their ladies; the Speaker of the House of Commons, and Admiral Otway, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishop of Oxford; Sirs W. Curtis, A. Barnard, J. Campbell, G. Staunton, T. Phillips, G. Baker, H. Wheeler, S. Glynne, R. Gyn; Colonels Bowles, Wylde, and Grey; Hon. Captain Murray; Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Anson, &c.

VOCAL CONCERTS.

Miss Birch, Miss Hawes, Messrs. Hobbs and Phillips, have coalesced to give a series of Concerts as the Home-Grown Nature Requires for the purposes of producing the best works of our musical composers. The first scheme was executed on Tuesday evening, under the patronage of Royalty and rank, and we entertain no doubt that the principle of the undertaking is sound, and the speculation will prove successful. There were some foreign works introduced in the programme, but we understand that this will not be the case for the future. The music of "Macbeth" was effectively rendered by Miss Birch, Miss Loxy, Mr. Phillips, and chorus, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Turle. The great treat of the evening was Miss Hawes's magnificent scena in Callcott's Glee, "With Sighs sweet Rose." The Earl of Mornington's Glee, "A Bird of Eve," was smoothly sung by Miss Birch, Miss Hawes, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. H. Phillips. The other Glees were from Handel, Webbe, Arne, Purcell, W. Knyvett, &c. Mr. Blagrove played a violin solo.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY. At the Fourth Meeting, on Monday night, the programme comprised No 2 of Op. 18, in G Major; No. 6 of Op. 18, in B Flat Major; No. 11 Op. 95, in F Minor; and Op. 135, No 7 (published posthumously), in F Major. The room in Harley-street was crowded with distinguished amateurs and artists, and the performance went off with the highest enthusiasm. Sivori led No. 6 and No. 17, and Salmon No. 11. Hill tuned, and Ronsseloi violoncello, in all the Quartets. The Scherzo Allegro of No. 6 was rapturously encored.

MR. DANDO'S FIFTH QUARTET CONCERT. —Crosby Hall was well attended for the Fifth performance; but the audience was disappointed at not hearing Beethoven's Grand Sestuor [illegible] Mr. Hill, [illegible] Mr. Dando's Quartet in C Major, Op. 29, were the other pieces; and the Misses Williams and Mr. Machin were the vocalists.

MR. WILSON'S PANTOMIMES. [illegible] was [illegible] Mr. Wilson, in his unrivaled Scotch songs. His didactic matter was as effectively delivered as ever, alternately indulging in the most pungent sarcasm with genial humour, and [illegible] Mr. Wilson's pantomimes are [illegible] Mr. Wilson's [illegible] Mr. Wilson's [illegible] Mr. Wilson's

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. W. C.," Liverpool.—Get "Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess." Any bookseller can obtain it.

"Lucy." Cambridge.—A King cannot, under any circumstances, be moved to a square next to the one occupied by the adverse Monarch.

"J. W. T." Brighton. You must settle the preliminaries of your proposed games with "C. A. B." through the medium of the Post-Office.

"A. and B." Birmingham.—A Pawn advanced to the eighth square acquires the rank and title of a superior officer, and the player to whom he belongs should immediately assert him with his dignity, calling him to honour as a Queen, a Rook, a Knight, &c. By not doing so, however, he incurs no penalty, but his opponent before moving should demand to know the title of the promoted Pawn.

"Stet." Your solution is correct.

"Sigma." The solutions you require will, doubtless, be given in "The Chess-Player's Chronicle" of next month.

"Carloman."—The Paton can never move diagonally, except in the act of taking a piece.

"Rook." Correct all but "your looking attentively at Problem No 116, will find he has erred in supposing it can be solved in two moves.

"H. F. W. and "J. M. G." Beverley.—The anniversary meeting of the York-shire Chess Masters is appointed to be held at Wakefield on the 13th of May.

"J. W." Hove. Yes. "The Chess-Player's Chronicle," published in monthly numbers for the last few years, was next published by Hall, Kay, Walker, Mason, Strand. We prefer the Muzio Gambit to either of the other two named.

"B. C." Huntley.—You have forgotten to consider that if White, in Problem No 106, play on his Q R P, Black may take the Queen's Pawn, and afterwards Q K's Pawn, with the Rook.

"Alpha." The games between Mr. Horwitz and Mr. Staunton have terminated in favour of the latter.

"Post Captain."—Copies of both Bilguer's "Handbuch," and Major Jaenisch's "Analyse Nouvelle," may be got of Williams and Norgate, Foreign Booksellers, of Covent Garden. Carvers was translated by Mr. Lewis.

"V." Dover.—The new Chess Chronicle is published at Leipsic, and edited by Hermann Hersebusch. The opening Bonnet contained was Lasted on Chess, by the Editor, (to be continued.) 2nd. Notes on Chess by Correspondents. 3rd. Chess players Dinner and Liberb. 3rd. A position at the end of a Game. 4th. Two Games, in one of which a Rook is given. The rest of the Number is made up of copious extracts, on the shape of Games, Problems, &c., from the "Chess Player's Chronicle," and "Le Palamede."

Solutions by "Anonuston," "W. H. W.," "H. C. M.," "Ludmagister," "Sen Week," "P. P.," "P. P.," "House Guinness," "F. R. S.," "G. S.," "H. Hern," "Sarrail," "Addison," "Alpha," "Amateur," "Subscriber," "F. B. M.," "J. C. Bellis," "R. B. Leeds," "P. C.," "Sefton," "G. A. B." "Leeds," "J. B. P." "Penzance," "Chesmount," "P. W.," "J. W. L.," "Shakespeare," "E. V." "Durham," "S. M.," "F. J. F.," "Epsilon," "H. S.," "Aber, North Wales; and "D. C." are correct. Those by "Slyk," "H. M.," "B. B. T.," "J. W. S." and "Omega," are all wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 118.

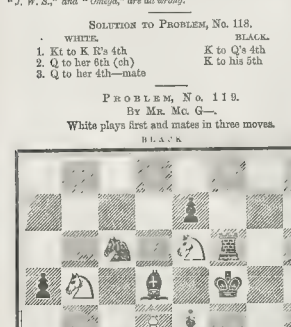
WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K K's 4th	K to Q's 4th
2. Q to her 6th (ch)	K to his 5th
3. Q to her 4th—mate

PROBLEM, NO. 119.

By MR. MC. G—.

White plays first and mates in three moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

MATCH AT CHESS,

BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND MR. HORWITZ.

GAME THE TWENTY-FIRST.

WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. S.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)
1. Q P one	K B P two	27. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Kt 4th
2. Q B P two	K Kt to B 3d	28. Q to her K 4th	Q to her Kt 3rd
3. Q to B 3d	K P one	29. Q to her Q 3d	Q takes Q K P
4. K P one	K B to Q Kt 5th	30. Kt to K 4th	Q to her h 5th
5. K B to Q 3d	Q B P two	31. Q to her R 2nd	Q R to his sq
6. K Kt to K 2d	Castles	32. Q to her Kt 3rd	Q takes Q
7. Castles	P takes P	33. B takes Q	K R to Q Kt sq
8. P takes P	Q Kt to B 3d	34. R to Q 3rd	Q K checks
9. Q B to K B 4th	K Kt to R 4th	35. K to B 2nd	Q R to Q Kt 8th
10. Q to her 3d	Kt takes Q B	36. R to Q B 3rd	Q R to Q Kt 7th (ch)
11. Q takes Kt	B to Q R 4th	37. R to Q 2nd	R takes R
12. Q Kt to his 5th	Q R P one	38. K take R	R to Q Kt 3rd
13. Kt to Q 6th	B to Q B 3d	39. Kt to K 2nd	K to B sq
14. Q B P one	Q to K 3d (a)	40. K to his 2nd	K to B sq
15. P takes P	Q to her 3d	41. h to Q 3rd	K to his sq
16. Q R P one	Q Kt to R 3rd (b)	42. K to his 3d	K to Q 2nd
17. P takes P	B takes P	43. B to Q Kt 5th	K Kt P one
18. Q B to Kt 2nd	K R to Q sq	44. K to Q B 4th	K R P one
19. Q to her 3rd (c)	Kt to K 4th (ch)	45. Q P one	P takes P (ch)
20. K to his 2nd	Q R P one	46. K takes P	R to K 7th
21. Q B to Q 3d	Q Kt to R 3rd	47. B takes P (ch)	K to Q sq
22. Q to her 3d	Q R to K sq	48. Q to her 6th	Q to her K 7th
23. K to R sq (d)	Q to K R 4th	49. K to his 6th	R to K 7th
24. Kt takes Q Kt P	B takes K Kt (q)	50. K to his 6th	K Kt P one
25. Kt to Q 6th	Q to her 3d	51. B to Kt 5th	K to his 2nd
26. Q to her B 3d	Kt takes Kt	White mates in three moves.
27. B takes Kt	R takes B (h)
28. Q to her K 3d	Q R to K sq
29. Q to her Q 3d	B takes K Kt (q)
30. Q to her K 3d	Q to her K 3rd
31. Q to her K 2nd	Q R to his sq
32. Q to her K 3rd	Q takes Q
33. B takes Q	K R to Q K sq
34. R to Q 3rd	Q K checks
35. K to B 2nd	Q R to Q Kt 8th
36. R to Q B 3rd	Q R to Q Kt 7th (ch)
37. R to Q 2nd	R takes R
38. K take R	R to Q Kt 3rd
39. Kt to Q 2nd	K to B sq
40. K to his 2nd	K to B sq
41. h to Q 3rd	K to his sq
42. K to his 3d	K to Q 2nd
43. B to Q Kt 5th	K Kt P one
44. K to Q B 4th	K R P one
45. Q P one	P takes P (ch)
46. K takes P	R to K 7th
47. B takes P (ch)	K to Q sq
48. Q to her 6th	Q to her K 7th
49. K to his 6th	R to K 7th
50. K to B 6th	K Kt P one
51. B to Kt 5th	K to his 2nd
White mates in three moves.

(a) Playing forward the Pawns on the Queen, would have compromised Black's position to no purpose.

(b) At the first view, it appears that White might gain a valuable Pawn, by now taking the K B P with an R. Looking a little deeper, we find, however, that, by doing so, he would lose a piece, as Black would immediately retreat his Q to her 4th square. White plays his Queen to K 3rd, both for the object of taking the K B P with his 3d, and to avoid the danger of the attack of his opponent's Queen's Knight's Pawn.

(c) The game is fraught with interesting at this point.

(d) Well attended. This is to prevent the adverse Q from occupying her King's 5th sq, when attacked by the Bishop prematurely.

(e) Upon the termination of the game, Mr. Horwitz and his supporters expressed their conviction that he must win the game easily, had he continued Kt to K 4th, before playing the 3d R to Kt sq, in that case. White dared not take the Kt with it, and, for his best move, must have played either his Bishop for the exchange, or his Queen's Pawn. Mr. Staunton was at some pains to point them out to their notice, and proved the point incontestably, that, play as Black might, he could not possibly avoid the loss of position. The following are a few of the variations he adduced in support of his views :—

WHITE.	BLACK.
23.	R takes K R
24.	R takes R
25.	Q to her 3d
26.	Q takes Kt

(1) White takes the Knight, but at least "the Exchange" must be obtained with his Queen, or Queen's Rook for Black, and eight to win without the loss. As soon as this occurs, therefore, appears to be "R takes K P" (ch), and leads to a long and difficult contest, in which the advantage is on the side of Black. There is another move, however, by the continued use of which his opponent introduced that server of his ability to qualify the apparent advantages of Black's situation—that be—

WHITE.	BLACK.
23. Q P one	P takes P, or 4
24. R takes Kt	P takes R (ch) (5)
	And White must win.
25.	K takes P, or ?
26.	K to Kt 3rd
27.	K takes P.
28.	K to Kt 4th (This is the best move,
29.	Q takes Kt

(2) If White take the Knight with his Queen, Black plays Q to her 3d, and White must win.

(3) Should he take the Knight with his Queen, Black plays Q to her 3d, and White must win.

(4) If he play any other move, Black takes the Knight with his Queen, and White must win.

(5) If White take the Knight with his Queen, Black plays Q to her 3d, and White must win.

(f) Intending to gain a piece by playing Q Kt to Q 6th.

(g) If he had taken Q Kt with Kt, White would not have retaken, but played K B to Q B 4th, winning the game.

(h) From this point Black, with common care and foresight, ought, surely, to have won without much trouble.

(i) Providing he take the Kt (checking) next move.

(k) It takes a K P, followed by K to K 8th, if the Q took Kt, would have won the game, we believe.

 Since the above were prepared for the press two additional games have been played, which terminate the contest, and give the following final result :—

Mr. Staunton has won 14 ; Mr. Horwitz, 7 ; Drawn games, 3.

The two concluding games shall appear next week.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The week's arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on a fair average scale, yet the show of samples of that article here to-day was small indeed, whilst the consumptive demand was very limited, and other kinds were in a full supply, quarterly, at barely late rates. Of foreign wheat the imports have been trifling. Fine dry samples, rounded and under certificates, were in steady request, and prices were well supported. The middling and inferior samples, as well as bonded sorts, were very dull. Barley was in a very sluggish state, both for malting and grinding parcels, at late currency. The quality of malt on offer was not fine, yet the malt trade was in a very inactive state [illegible] we have no alteration [illegible] There was a steady sale for oats, at almost Monday's quotations. Beans, peas, and flour as last advised.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 4720 qrs.; barley, 1200; oats, 5736. Irish: wheat, ——; barley, —— oats, 2870. Foreign: wheat, 1760; barley, ——; oats, 1010. Flour, 2870 sacks; malt, 1672 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, rel. 65s to 68s; ditto white, 56s to 70s; Norfolk and Suffolk, fine do. 65s to 68s; ditto white, 67s to 69s; rye, —s to —s; grinding barley, —s to —s; distilling ditto —s to —s; malting ditto —s to —s; Lincoln and Norfolk, fine, —s to —s; brown ditto, —s to —s; Kingston and Ware, —s to —s; Chevalier, —s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible] oats, new, 24s to 25s; fine ditto, 26s to 27s; Scotch, fine, 25s to 26s; ditto, 23s to 24s; potato ditto, 23s to 24s; tick beans, new, 30s to 32s; ditto old, 32s to 34s; grey peas, 32s to 33s; maple, 33s to 35s; white, 36s to 40s; beans, 41s to 43s, per quarter. Town-ground flour, 37s to 40s; suffolk, 33s to 41s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 39s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat —s to —s; in bond, red, 48s to 50s; ditto white, 58s to 70s. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto feed, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s, per quarter. Flour, American, 27s to 29s, Baltic 22s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Red clover seed is in fair request, at fully previous quotations, but white is dull and nearly neglected. In all other kinds of seeds we do not well see what [illegible] is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 57s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 44s. Hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 15s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 10s to 14s; white ditto, 10s to 12s. Tares, 7s 6d to 8s 3d per bushel. Rapeseed, English Rapeseed £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £6 10s to £10 10s; ditto, foreign, £7 5s to £8 5s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 42s to 46s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 42s to 50s; extra, 56s to 66s; white, 60s to 68s; extra, up to 80s. Foreign red, 40s to 46s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 70s per cwt.

ARRIVALS.—The prices of wheaten meal in the metropolis, are from 37s to 39s per sack; ditto, 6d to 8d per 4lb loaf.

The Liverpool Market.—Wheat, 5s 6d; barley, 30s 1d; oats, 22s 4d; rye, 33s 7d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 33s 10d.

The Scotch Markets.—Wheat, 55s 7d; barley, 32s 4d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 33s 11d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 33s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s 6d; barley, 8s; oats, 6s; rye, 9s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 8s 6d.

Sugar.—A small sales of colonial raw sugar have been in good request, at a further advance in the quotations of 6d to ½ per cwt. Refined goods are firm, at higher rates—brown lumps producing 63s, and standard ditto 58s per cwt.

Indigo.—The quarterly sales have been brought to a conclusion. The best Kurpas have prin, and 36 per cwt. more money. Ivi Bengal has sold at a discount of from 1d to 3d.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, 75s to 84s; ditto, new, 70s to 80s; clover, £4 15s to £5 15s; straw, £1 14s to £1 16s, per load.

Oils.—We have very little alteration to notice in the general features of this market, either as respects demand or value.

Provisions.—Irish butter is in steady request, at very full prices. Best Carlow and Clonmel cannot be purchased under 86s to 88s; Cork, 76s to 80s; and Waterford, 66s to 70s per cwt. For forward delivery next to nothing is doing. Dutch butter steady, at 74s to 76s per firkin for fine. Foreign in good business is doing, at late [illegible] per cwt. more money. Prime Limerick Waterford, landed, 43s to 44s; best [illegible] and Limerick, 42s to 43s; and inferior, 40s to 42s per cwt. Irish hams have advanced 2s to 4s per cwt., prime small being worth 48s to 52s per cwt. English Cheese-steady, old, 42s to 50s; extra, 56s to 64s; new, 60s to 64s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 42s to 46s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 70s per cwt.

ARRIVALS.—The prices of wheaten meal in the metropolis, are from 37s to 39s per sack; ditto, 6d to 8d per 4lb loaf.

The Liverpool Market.—Wheat, 5s 6d; barley, 30s 1d; oats, 22s 4d; rye, 33s 7d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 33s 10d.

The Scotch Markets.—Wheat, 55s 7d; barley, 32s 4d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 33s 11d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 33s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s 6d; barley, 8s; oats, 6s; rye, 9s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 8s 6d.

Sugar.—A small sales of colonial raw sugar have been in good request, at a further advance in the quotations of 6d to ½ per cwt. Refined goods are firm, at higher rates—brown lumps producing 63s, and standard ditto 58s per cwt.

Indigo.—The quarterly sales have been brought to a conclusion. The best Kurpas have prin, and 36 per cwt. more money. Ivi Bengal has sold at a discount of from 1d to 3d.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, 75s to 84s; ditto, new, 70s to 80s; clover, £4 15s to £5 15s; straw, £1 14s to £1 16s, per load.

Oils.—We have very little alteration to notice in the general features of this market, either as respects demand or value.

Provisions.—Irish butter is in steady request, at very full prices. Best Carlow and Clonmel cannot be purchased under 86s to 88s; Cork, 76s to 80s; and Waterford, 66s to 70s per cwt. For forward delivery next to nothing is doing. Dutch butter steady, at 74s to 76s per firkin for fine. Foreign in good business is doing, at late [illegible] per cwt. more money. Prime Limerick Waterford, landed, 43s to 44s; best [illegible] and Limerick, 42s to 43s; and inferior, 40s to 42s per cwt. Irish hams have advanced 2s to 4s per cwt., prime small being worth 48s to 52s per cwt. English Cheese-steady, old, 42s to 50s; extra, 56s to 64s; new, 60s to 64s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 46s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 70s per cwt.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The undecided nature of the American news received on Monday did not, as may be supposed, for a moment affect the price of Consols, which ended at 86¾ for Money, and 86¾ for Time. Some degree of flatness prevailed on Tuesday and Wednesday, but speculative purchases on Thursday gave an impetus to prices. Consols have since improved to 86⅞ for Money, and 86⅞ to ⅞ for account. The Foreign Loan market has participated in the improvement, quoting at closing 26, 23, 27 premium. Bank Stock has not varied, closing at 205½. New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. have advanced, in consequence of some large purchases : the last quotation is 99¼ to 99⅜. Long Annuities are 10 9-16 ; India Stock, 251.

There has been rather more business transacted in the Foreign Market during the last week, and some fluctuations have occurred in Portuguese and Mexican Stock. The revolt in the north of Portugal, although not of a character to inspire any fear of its speedy suppression, is still sufficient to keep speculation tame, and, consequently, the quotations for the various descriptions of the value of the Stock about one per cent. The closing quotation is 36½. Mexican Stock has improved, and there exists little doubt that, in a short time, the full dividend will be paid. The bondholders ought, now that tranquility is restored, to make some immediate efforts towards, at least, funding the overdue coupons, or arranging for a gradual liquidation of dividends that would be equivalent. At closing, the Active Stock quotes 32¾ ; Deferred, 16¼. A revolt in the north of Spain caused a sagit depression in Spanish towards the close of the week, the Active Stock receding to 20 ; the Three per Cents ; to 20¾ 37. Dutch Stock has not varied materially, and closes at 50¾ for the Two-and-a-Half per Cents. ; the Four per Cents., 91¾. Brazilian is 82 ; Chilian, 93¾ ; Danish, 87¾ ; and Peruvian, 37.

There has been a considerable advance in the prices of many of the registered and dividend-paying lines of Railway, but the business transacted has been far from extensive. The facility with which the account was arranged, in some instances favoured this upward movement, which is probably to be traced to the anticipated benefits likely to result from clearing the market of the worthless scrips. It remains to be seen how far the public will support this movement in advance, for, at present, it is clearly confined to the Share-market. The lines upon which the greatest rise has occurred are the Great Westerns, South Westerns, Brightons, South Easterns, and Eastern Counties. At the close of the week, the subjoined list will show that prices were not quite supported, doubtless in consequence of realising.—Aberdeen, 4½ ; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 2½ ; Bristol and Exeter, 8½ ; Ditto, New, —, Buckinghamshire, par ; Caledonian, 7¼ ; Ditto, Half Shares, ½ ; Ditto, Extension, ¼ ; Chester and Manchester, ¾ ; Cornwall and Central Devon, 1½ ; Direct Manchester (Remington's), 1 ; Direct Manchester (Harris's), ½ ; Direct Northern, 2½ ; Dublin and Cork, 2½ ; Eastern Counties, 2¼ ; Ditto New, ¾ premium ; Ditto, Perpetual, ¾ per Cent, No. 2, ¾ premium ; Ditto, York Extension, 1½ ; East Lincolnshire, 1½ ; Ely and Huntingdon, 4½ ; Goole, Doncaster, and Sheffield, 6s. premium ; Great Eastern and Western, 1½ ; Great North of England, 2½ ; Great Western, 15½ ; Ditto Half Shares, —; Quarter Shares, 19½ ; Hull and Selby, 10½ ; Ditto Half Shares, 25 ; Lancaster and Carlisle, 8½ ; Ditto, New, —9 ; Leicester and Hitchin, 1 ; Ditto Shares, 1½ ; London and Birmingham, 22½ ; Ditto Thirds, 6¾ ; Ditto Quarters, 30½ ; Ditto Fifths, 28½ ; London and Blackwall, 8½ ; Ditto New, 3½ ; London and Brighton, 66 ; Ditto Fifths, 3½ ; London and Croydon, 2½ ; Ditto Half Shares, 5½ ; Ditto Quarters, 3½ ; London and South Western, 8¾ ; Ditto New Consol. Eighths, 5¼ ; Ditto New, 2¼ ; London and York, 2¼ ; Londonderry and Coleraine, 4 ; Lynn and Dereham, 6¾ ; Manchester and Leeds, 13½ ; Ditto Quarters, 12 ; Ditto Fifths, 11 ; Manchester and Birmingham, 8½ ; Do. Quarter Shares (A), 1¾ ; Ditto Quarter Shares (B), 1¾ ; Do. Quarter Shares (C), 9 ; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 7 pm ; Manchester and Southampton, 3½ ; Midland, 15½ ; Ditto, New, 3½ ; Ditto Birmingham and Derby, 19½ ; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 4½ ; Ditto, New, 1½ ; Ditto, New, Branding, 4½ ; Newcastle and Berwick, 2½ ; North British, 2½ ; Ditto Half Shares, 1½ ; Ditto Dalkeith, 6½ ; North Staffordshire, 3½ pm ; Norwich and Brandon, 2½ ; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 9½ ; Perth and Inverness, 1½ ; Portsmouth Direct, 3½ ; Scottish Central, 15½ ; Scottish Midland Junction, 2½ ; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2½ ; South Eastern and Dover, 3¾ ; Ditto New (iss. at £32), 2½ ; Ditto New (do. £33 6s. 8d.), 1¾ ; Ditto New (ditto £30), 1½ ; Ditto New (ditto £15), ¾ ; Vale of Neath, 1½ ; Welsh Midland, 1 ; West Riding Union, par ; York, North Midland, Scarborough Branch, 4½ ; Ditto, Selby, 7½ ; Ditto, Extension, 1½ ; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 10½ ; Boulogne and Amiens, 1½ ; Dutch Rhenish, 6¾ ; East Indian, 1 ; Great North of France Constituted, 10½ ; Louvain and Jemappe, 1¼ ; Luxembourg, 2¾ ; Namur and Liege, 2 ; Orleans and Vierzon, 17 ; Orleans and Bordeaux, 11¼ ; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 8¾ ; Paris and Strasbourg Constituted, 5 ; Rouen and Havre, 30¼ ; Sambre and Meuse, 8¼ ; West Flanders, 2¼ ; Australasia, 28¾.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The rumour that prevailed, of an intention on the part of the Bank of England to reduce the rate of discount, appears to be without foundation. Yesterday was a close holiday in all the Markets, it being the First of May ; consequently, no variation in prices was quoted.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY [illegible]

WAR-OFFICE, MAY 1.

10th Light Dragoons: Major H. F. Bonham to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Wallington. Capt. G. A. F. Quentin to be Major, vice Bonham: Lieut. W. A. Hyder to be Captain, vice M'Donough: Lieut. Sir E. Manro, Bart., to be Captain, vice Quentin.

2nd Foot: Lieut. C. E. Thornton to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice [illegible] Lieut. H. W. Wynn to be Captain, vice Lord J. Butler: Lieut. H. Griffiths to be Adjutant, vice H. W. Wynn: Sub Gen. Sir G. Drummond, G.C.B., to be Colonel, vice [illegible]

4th Foot: Major Wynyard, vice Roper: Capt. A. C. Robertson to be Captain, vice Nickerson: Lieut. W. T. Granville to be Captain, vice Holmes: Capt. E. G. Dunlo 1 to be Captain, vice [illegible] Ensign W. H. Herrick to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]

7th Foot: Ensign [illegible] to be Ensign, vice Frost: 18th Gen. P. Hall to be Colonel, vice [illegible]

21st: W. T. M'Gregor to be Second Lieutenant, vice Dirkes: 54th [illegible]

Royal Lieut.-Col. vice Townshend: Capt. Paynter to be Major, vice Marsh, Lieut. Wood [illegible] to be Captain, vice Paynter; Lieutenant R. J. Fleming to be Captain, vice Lovell: Ensign [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice Rutledge: Ensign W. Selby to be Lieutenant, vice Wood [illegible] Ensign J. Daubeny to be Lieutenant, vice Cumming: E. B. Bulteel to be Ensign, vice Selby: [illegible] Dobbs to be Ensign, vice Daubeny: 72nd, Lieut. and Adjutant Hutchison to be Captain, vice Phillipps: 79th Captain C. F. B. G. Dickenson to be Captain, vice Robertson: 85th S. F. Bush to be Ensign, vice Cuming: 95th C. H. Carew to be Ensign, vice Forrester: 98th Major-General Sir E. Bowater to be Colonel, vice General Sir G. Drummond: 84th Captain [illegible] Granville to be Captain, vice [illegible]: 86th Lieutenant E. M. Hankey to be Lieutenant, vice Thornton: 95th Captain O. B. D'Arcy, to be Captain, vice W. S. Cook: 98th J. B. Digby to be Ensign, vice Hawker: 71st L. Brown to be Ensign, vice Newman. Third: Staff Surgeon of the Second Class N. S. Camp [illegible] to be Surgeon, vice M'Dont: 74th Major-General Sir A. Campbell, K.C.B. to be Colonel, vice M'Dont: 74th Major-General Sir A. Campbell, K.C.B. to be Colonel, vice Wynyard: 84th Lieut. and Adjutant Sir E. Hall, Bart. to be Captain, vice Bowater: 86th Lieut. J. Phillips to be Lieutenant, vice Hall: 92nd Lieut. A. Stewart to be Captain, vice Sir W. Musgrove, Bart.: Ensign E. P. Mann to be Lieutenant, vice Stewart: 93rd A. Robertson to be Ensign, vice Mann: Assistant Surgeon R. Mo[illegible] to be Assistant Surgeon, vice Milligan.

Fifth Foot: H. S. M. Cromwall to be Second Lieutenant, vice Alcock[illegible]

[illegible] Regiment—A. Morphy to be Ensign, vice Flecklin

[illegible] Dragoon Guards: C. H. Martin to be Ensign, vice Cumming: G. S. Tyler to be Ensign, vice Rainolf.

[illegible] Regiment—Major R. Brookes to be Lieutenant-Colonel

[illegible] Dept P. Gordon to be Major in the Army in the [illegible]

HOSPITAL STAFF.—Surgeon J. A. H. M'Swan to be Staff Surgeon of the Second Class, vice Campbell: Assistant-Surgeon J. C. Millingen to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Downes.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—J. QUANTON, Stamford-bridge, Yorkshire, grocer

BANKRUPTS.—C. J. BOYD, Blackheath, Kent, tailor. H. WALDUCK, New Road street, Cornmill and Grosvenor, Lewes, Sussex, ironmonger. J. LANG, Hay's Wharf, Tooley-street, potato salesman. A. BIRCHALL, Manchester, shareholder. J. HAMPSON, Manchester, grocer. THOMPSON, Liverpool, stockbroker. C. CROWTHER, Liverpool, stockbroker. J. HOLYOAKE, Birmingham. G. LEATHER and C. W. WARDLE, Leeds, cartwheelwright manufacturers. J. FIELD, Sheffield, ironmonger. T. PERRY, Wolverhampton, hosier. W. PERRY, Wolverhampton, hosier. T. ROBINSON, Wolverhampton, edge-tool manufacturer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—P. BROWN, Ayr, clock maker. J. PATRICK, Paisley, manufacturer.

FRIDAY, MAY 1.

WAR-OFFICE, MAY 1.

1st Regt of Life Guards: Cornet and Sub-Lieut. H. Hart of Munster to be Lieutenant, vice Lord Glanely. H. S. Crawley to be Cornet and Sub-Lieutenant, vice the hard of Munster.

6th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. R. Warrington to be Captain, vice Major, Cornet H. C. Fane to be Lieutenant, vice Warrington. R. M'Evoy to be Cornet, vice Walker, J. M. Heath to be Cornet, vice Carter.

16th Light Dragoons. Lieut. R. E. Blake to be Lieutenant, vice Hyder: Lieut. A. J. Lefroy to be Lieutenant, vice Sir T. Munro, Bart. Hitler Capt. W. H. Hare to be Captain, vice S. A. [illegible] Lieut. A. C. Keane to be Captain, vice Marsh, Cornet and Adjutant J. de M. H. Prior [illegible] Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Sankey to be Cornet and Adjutant, vice Keane: Corps [illegible] Lieut.-Col. Cornet H. M. Sutton to be Lieutenant, vice Money: J. W. Bent to be Cornet, vice Sutton: 14th, J. W. Bennet to be Cornet, vice Keane.

[illegible] H. Finney to be Ensign, vice Charlton. 2nd: Lieut. W. Powell to be Lieutenant, vice Hodgson: Ensign J. Hodgson to be Ensign, vice Powell.

19th: H. D. Barry to be Ensign, vice Boyden. 23rd: R. V. Dickens to be Lieutenant, vice Lieutenant Sir [illegible] Ensign W. Barry to be Lieutenant, vice Dickens: Ensign J. H. Meadet to be Captain, vice Shaen. Ensign C. Laurence to be Lieutenant, vice Meadet: T. Jackson to be Ensign, vice Barry. 27th: Lieut. J. Wood to be Captain, vice Hamley: Ensign W. Hamley to be Lieutenant, vice Wood: T. Hoadley to be Ensign, vice Peel. 36th: To be Captains—Lieut. H. W. Lacy, 1844; Lieut. J. Waddell. To be Lieutenants—Ensign A. M'Donald, Ensign R. Wyatt, Ensign H. C. Lamaney, vice Lacy: To be Ensigns—Sergeant-Major J. S. Hamfray, [illegible] vice Ward. S. W. L. Cheetham, vice Lamaney. 56th: Capt. G. F. F. Boughey to be Major, vice Lieut.-Col. Sir [illegible] Lieut. W. Wilson to be Captain, vice Boughey: Ensign W. J. Hall to be Lieutenant, vice Wilson: G. G. Morley to be Ensign, vice Hoare. 69th: Ensign W. G. Lumley to be Lieutenant, vice Brown. Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. 73rd: Lieut. and Adjutant Sergeant-Major J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. 78th: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. 84th: Lieut. and Adjutant Sergeant-Major J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. 88th: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. 94th: Lieut. and Adjutant Sergeant-Major J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. 97th: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. 98th: Lieut. and Adjutant Sergeant-Major J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Rifle Brigade: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Staff: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Fifth: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Sixth: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Seventh: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Eighth: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Ninth: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Tenth: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lieutenant, vice Lacy: N. C. Bowden to be Ensign, vice Lumley. Ensign and Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Hore to be Captain, vice Crabbe, Capt. A. F. Ansell to be Major, vice Crawley: Lieut. F. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Ansell: Ensign C. Wilson to be Lieutenant, vice Manning: Brvt. to be Ensign, vice Brown. Eleventh: Ensign J. E. Large to be Lie

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—"CASTLE AND TOWN OF PAU, BIRTHPLACE OF HENRY IV. OF FRANCE."—BY W. OLIVER.

(Continued from page 283.)

How could J. Nash, who painted "the Ewelme Almshouse," perpetrate the abomination (24), "The Interior of Lincoln's-Inn New Hall, on the Queen's Visit," in which admiration seems challenged by the finish of the confectionery, the mangling of the table-cloth, and the wigs of the barristers? It only shows what choice of subject will do to degrade powers the most indisputable.

Oakley has several Italian Boys, painted with his usual skill, and a Family Group, in Oriental dresses, distinguished by its cleanness and dexterity.

Of Frost, we need say little. His stone-work is as solid as ever, and his subjects the same they have always been, as far back as we recollect them.

Stephanoff has a couple of terribly ambitious failures; and Frank Stone contributes one sweet little drawing (279), "The Lesson," which creates a regret that it should stand alone. There is nothing more gracefully unpretending, or more highly-finished, in the room.—To be continued.

THE NEW SOCIETY.

The New Society treads more closely on the heels of the Old than the forty-two years of the one, and the twelve of the other, might prepare us to expect.

It is not to be denied, however, that the younger body does, on the whole, fall below the elder Exhibition. We have neither the same well-defined limitation of subject (though, by the way, Mr. Stephanoff's wonderful mistakes in the Old Society should make us careful in our assertions), nor the same perfect mastery over the material.

But Topham, Duncan, Absolon, and Mrs. Marjetts, may challenge comparison with any competitors in their several styles; and, while we recognise a certain trick about such drawings as D'Egville's, Penson's, and Mapleson's, we have nothing in workmanship so reckless and self-destructive as Catternole's or Rayner's gum and body colour.

Absolon has fewer drawings than usual this year. The most elaborate is 78, "Thread the Needle"—a joyous rustic round, in which the figures sweep before the eye with a freedom and grace that would impress us still more, if the artist had been less indebted to the well known dancing group in Rubens's rustic merry-making, in the Louvre. But there is a freshness and cheerfulness about Absolon's figures, and an apparent ease in the handling, which make his drawings unusually pleasant to us. These qualities are very marked in 78, of which we give an Engraving. His "Do re mi sol fa" is the music scene from "Il Barbiere." Rosina is a charming figure; the Count has rather too much of the innocence of the dove in his attitude and physiognomy; while Figaro, to some conceptions, may seem deficient in something of the arch plotter's expression: still it is a delightful drawing, and we refer to the Engraving, which, though it wants the pleasant, cheerful colour of the original, will indicate the ease and grace of the grouping.

We have also engraved Oliver's large and picturesque drawing of "Pau—the Birth-place and Scene of Education of Henry the Fourth of France," taken from the Promenade du Parc.

Duncan reigns supreme in landscape in the new society. The subject of our engraving from him is his "Sunset—a Pastoral Scene," in which we regret that black and white cannot convey any of the warm sunny colour which steeps the low, level willow glades of the original so deliciously. We hardly know which of this skilful artist's drawings to select for particular mention. Perhaps his "Musele Gatherers, Swansea Bay," is among the most agreeable. A hot, hazy, summer atmosphere, with the long stretch of sand and well introduced figures. It is a triumph of simple effect. His "Dutch Ferry on the Meuse" (63), with a rising gale bending the trees of the bank, and roughening the water into a ripple, is another beautiful and true drawing, dependent upon no trickiness for the impression it makes upon the spectator. His "Sketch from Nature at Eton" (133) is made up apparently of a few careless blottings of colour, but, viewed aright, presents a fresh transcript of English meadow scenery.

Our space warns us to close our notice of the New Society for the present, to return to it next week, and give to its other exhibitors their deserved meed of praise. We owe an apology to the ladies who so honorably distinguish themselves (names new to us), Miss Fanny Steers and Miss Egerton, for postponing them to those of their brethren in art we have mentioned. We hope to make amends next week.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—"THE COUNT AND ROSINA, (BARBER OF SEVILLE.)—BY JOHN ABSOLON.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

LORD G. BENTINCK, M.P.

Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." Lord G. Bentinck has been raised to eminence in all three of the modes in which fortune is said by the poet to exalt her favourites. He was born to the "greatness" conferred by rank; he "achieved" success, with which greatness is synonymous, in a sphere where competition is keen, and not very scrupulous -on the turf; and lately he has had the greatness of political leadership thrust upon him. He is at present recognised as the head of the Protectionist party, Mr. Miles and Mr. Stafford O'Brien, having apparently fallen into the ranks. It was after the great defection of the Conservative members, whom Peel has carried with him in his Free-Trade policy, that Lord George Bentinck "burst out into sudden blaze" as chief of the Landed Opposition; the touch of Harlequin never produced anything more surprising in a pantomime.

LORD GEORGE BENTINCK, M.P.

In a large circle his Lordship had the reputation of being a clever man: it is impossible the qualities he has displayed could have so long remained quite dormant. But his cleverness was not thought to be of a political kind: if he had a good head, his powers of calculation and combination, his ability of dealing with statistics, had not been exhibited in the House of Commons. The Turf, however, was not perhaps so bad a school for the purpose as some might think: if all tales are true there may be a good deal of "jockeying" out of Tattersall's. Not for a moment do we insinuate that his Lordship ever condescended to what is described by the term; but he has had to deal with it, to meet it, and to counteract it, and no doubt knows what it is.

He is one of those who can touch pitch without being defiled. His success in the sporting world has left him what it found him, a gentleman of high honour and unquestioned integrity.

But with this we have less to do than with the day when he woke up, and found himself famous—as a politician. Perhaps his Lordship was as much surprised as anybody. He is a striking example of how little we know what we can do till we try. Till his sudden outbreak, he very seldom spoke in the House: his speeches were very few and very short. But the Corn Bill came, with all its concomitants. He had the first great requisite of a champion—a strong feeling of the justice of the cause he espoused; his position, as a man of birth and fortune, was an advantage; his capacity was good; facts and figures could be got by application. He applied himself to the task; and the man who had scarcely addressed the House for a consecutive five minutes, poured forth a speech of three hours duration, filled with intricate and elaborate statements, taken from every kind of expert, imported and manufactured, from whence a fact could be drawn to tell against the Premier.

Since that time he has stood at the head of the Protectionists, as if the post had been conceded to him by common consent as to his fitness to fill it. He has even been addressed as the "Prospective Premier," not, however, by his friends; no doubt he can detect the motive of this little exaggeration of his importance.

Lord William George Frederick Scott Bentinck is the second son of the Duke of Portland. The family is of Dutch origin, the founder of it having come to this country with William III.: he was a trusted Councillor of that Prince, and a soldier too. He was actively engaged in the battle of the Boyne, and was created an English Peer for his services.

Lord G. Bentinck sits as member for Lynn Regis, and has done so from 1828, so that he is no novice in Parliamentary business. The effect of his addresses depends more on the matter than his style of speaking, which is capable of improvement; he often repeats himself, and the intonation of his voice is not pleasing, though distinct and audible. He indulges sometimes in personal allusions as to the motives of those who have abandoned the Protectionists, rather strong than delicate, and this has provoked some angry replies; but he has a good-tempered air with him that prevents ill-feeling. He supports the Coercion Bill; and the half-compact he made the other night with Smith O'Brien will, it may be anticipated, prove a mistake; the parties are too completely opposed to each other. There is nothing wanting to his Lordship's political career but a successful cause, and that he has not; it is too late; the question is beyond the power of any man or parties. His efforts are on that account, perhaps, more chivalrous; but he should have begun his opposition in the first session of the present Parliament.

MR. VERNON SMITH, M.P.

Mr. Vernon Smith, the member for Northampton, stands among the ex-Ministers who, if the political destinies can ever be again propitiated towards the Whigs, will be once more found on the Treasury Bench. He is the son of the late Robert Smith, Esq., and nephew of the late Rev. Sydney Smith, the witty

MR. VERNON SMITH, M.P.

Canon of St. Paul's, whom the party he so well served would never think grave enough for a Bishop. Mr. Vernon Smith was a Lord of the Treasury during the Whig Administration, and was appointed Secretary of the Board of Control in 1835; in 1839 he was made Under-Secretary for the Colonies, which office he held up to the dissolution of the Government.

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.

ST. JAMES'S, WESTMINSTER.

This edifice, situate on the south side of Piccadilly, nearly opposite Sackville-street, has little or nothing exteriorly to recommend it; whereas, it possesses one of the most elegant interiors that the metropolis can, perhaps, boast of. Ralph says: "It is finely-situated, with regard to the prospect on the north side of St. James's-square; and, if it had been built in suitable taste, would have appeared most nobly to fill the vista, and add a pomp to the whole view: but the builders of that pile did not much trouble themselves about beauty, and I believe it is a mere accident that even the situation is so favourable."

The Church was erected by our great architect, Sir Christopher Wren, and is one of the best constructed and most perfect of his designs. It was founded in the latter part of the reign of Charles II., at the joint expense of Henry Jermyn, Earl of St. Albans, and the principal inhabitants of the district, as a chapel of ease to St. Martin's: and it was consecrated in the first year of James II., and named in honour of both Saint and Monarch. "London," says Pennant, in his lively, gossiping way, "was so vastly increased about this period, that a new church in this place was necessary." In the year above-mentioned, (1684) it was made parochial, by an Act of Parliament intituled "An Act for erecting a New Parish, to be called the Parish of St. James's, within the Liberty of Westminster;" thus making another division of the immense parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, from which St. Paul's, Covent-garden, had been previously severed.

The exterior is principally of brickwork, but has rustic quoins and other dressings of Portland stone. At the west end is a tower, surmounted by a clock spire, rising to the height of about 150 feet.

ST. JAMES'S CHURCH, WESTMINSTER.

The interior is equally admired for its commodiousness, beauty, and ingenuity of construction. Wren himself considered it as one of the best contrived of his parochial churches, and so speaks of it in a letter to a friend, which is printed in his Parentalia. It is in the Basilical style, and is divided into a nave and two aisles, by a double range of Corinthian columns, placed on square panelled piers, which serve also to support the galleries; from these pillars spring a semicircular arched roof, divided into sunk and enriched panels, and intersected by arches, which run through to the external walls. "The construction of this roof," says Mr. Elmes, "is singularly ingenious and economical, both of room and materials; and it is not too great praise to say that it is the most novel, scientific, and satisfactory as to results of any roof in existence."

At the east end, over the altar, is a large window, originally designed for Raffaelle's celebrated Transfiguration: it consists of two series of columns, the lowermost of which is of the Corinthian order; the upper (the centre intercolumniation of which is connected by a semicircular arch), is of the Composite order. The body of the Church, which is 84 feet in length, 68 feet in breadth, and 40 in height, will accommodate 2000 persons. The organ, which is of superior excellence, was the gift of Queen Mary, in 1691; it is said to have been made by order of King James, and designed for his Catholic chapel at Whitehall. The altar-piece is exquisitely carved by Gribelin Gibbons; and the enclosure of the altar is of white marble, ornamented with pierced scrolls of bronze, formerly also of marble.

The entire altar appears to have been much admired at the date of its erection. Thus, Evelyn, in his Diary notes: "December 16th, 1684, I went to see the New Church at St. James's, elegantly built; the altar was especially adorn'd, the white marble inclosure curiously and richly carved, the flowers and garlands about the walls, by Mr. Gibbons, in wood; a pelican, with her young at her breast, just over the altar, in the carv'd compartment and border inviroding the purple velvet fringed, with I.H.S. richly embroider'd, and most noble plate, were given by Sir R. Geere, to the value, (as was said,) of £200. There was no altar anywhere in England, nor has there been any abroad, more handsomely adorned."

MARBLE FONT, BY GIBBONS.

The Baptismal Font, which stands in the middle aisle, is also from the chisel of Gibbons, and is a most beautiful specimen of art. It is sculptured in white marble, and between four and five feet in height; the circumference at the top of the basin being about six feet. The shaft which supports it represents the Tree of Life, with the serpent twining round it, and offering the fata apple to Eve, who, together with Adam, are reclining against it: these figures, which are most delicately sculptured, are about 18 inches in height. On the basin are three scriptural scenes in basso-relievo, viz.:—St. John Baptizing our Saviour; the Baptizing of the Eunuch, by St. Philip; and the Ark of Noah, with the dove bearing the olive-branch, the type of peace, to mankind. There seems formerly to have been a pipe passing down the shaft from the interior, secured by a plug, in order to carry off the water.

This font, (as is evident by a print of it engraved by Vertue,) had formerly a suspended cover, ornamented with foliage and surmounted by a flying angel, above which, on the chain which suspended it, was a group of four cherubs. Mr. Brayley, in his "Londiniana," states this cover to have been stolen about 47 years ago; adding, "however that may be, it was subsequently hung up as a kind of sign, at a spirit-shop in the immediate neighbourhood of the Church."

Several men of genius are interred within these walls. Here are deposited the remains of Akenside, the classic poet; and Skillingfleet, the naturalist, whom Pennant so touchingly laments in the preface to the fourth volume of his "British Zoology." Here too sleeps the footman, bookseller, and poet, Dodsley, who was many years in business in Pall Mall. In the aisle, near the south door, sleeps Dr. Sydenham, "the restorer of true medical science;" but the epitaph that indicated the spot being nearly obliterated, the College of Physicians, in 1809, erected, very near the spot, a mural monument to the memory of this illustrious man, with an elegant Latin inscription. In the south front of the exterior of the church, is a humble memorial—a plain slab of stone, inscribed "Tom d'Urfey, 1724" such being the only bic jacet of the wit and poet, who was "wont to act the table on a roar." St. James's being one of the wealthiest parishes in the metropolis, many aristocratic marriages are performed at this church. The Bishop of London, also, occasionally preaches here, and his Lordship will hold a confirmation here towards the close of the present month.

RAINE'S CHARITIES, ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—ANNIVERSARY, MAY 1st.

These Charities were founded in the years 1717 and 1736, by Mr. Henry Raine, who once carried on an extensive business as a brewer, in the parish of St. George-in-the-East: and who, in an extract from his will, states "that, whereas from a small beginning, it pleased Almighty God to raise him to a plentiful fortune, he thought it his duty, in gratitude to God, and obedience to the precepts of Christianity, to settle part of his substance for charitable uses." He, consequently, in the year 1717, built a commodious School Room in Fawdon Fields, for the education and clothing of 50 boys and 50 girls, born in the parish of St. George only, who should be instructed in the principles and duties of the Christian religion, as they were taught by the Church of England, and such other useful learning as might be conducive to their future welfare in life; providing for each boy, after continuing in the School four years, an apprentice fee, to bind him to some useful trade.

At the expiration of nineteen years after founding the first School, his trade as a brewer still prospering, and having, from time to time, laid by certain sums of money, and kept himself, as he states, unmarried, for the purpose, he thought, further of adding to the necessities of the poor girls who were educated in the first School, by the establishment and endowment of an Hospital or Asylum, into which a certain number of these girls, after four years' continuance in the School, should be elected, viz., ten in each year.

RAINE'S CHARITY.—DISTRIBUTION ON MAY DAY.

In the year 1736, this building was completed, near the old school, which is now called Dr. Raine's Asylum, governed by a Matron, and under the superintendence of forty-five Trustees, of which the Rector and Lecturer of the parish are always to be of the number; herein forty girls, chosen from the first school are wholly maintained and taught, for four years, such services as may be considered sufficient to qualify them for the situation in which they are afterwards usually placed. In the months of March and September in each year, ten girls, after comp eting their four years in the Asylum in these duties, are qualified as servants, and go to their respective places well provided with clothes and books—to which they may have been hired by previous application at the Asylum.

Still, the founder thinking that he had not fully carried out his plan to its full extent, and not willing to lose sight of the young women whose early lives had been spent under his protecting care, made a further provision for those who wished to accept his bounty on the terms which he thought most desirable and right; he consequently left by £1000, which was to accumulate until it produced the yearly value of £200, which sum was to become a marriage portion for two of the girls in every year, who, after attaining the age of 22 years, and producing certificates from their masters and mistresses of their good behaviour and industry during their six years servitude, should be eligible to obtain it, provided they wished to settle in life with some honest and industrious person as the majority of the Trustees should deem fit; with must be an inhabitant of the parish of St. George in the East, or the neighbouring parishes of Wapping and Shadwell, and likewise a member of the Church of England.

The usual way of proceeding to obtain this sum is singular, and entirely the original plan of the founder. He appointed that six candidates only should at one time be available for obtaining the marriage portion; and if more than six at one time offered themselves to be admitted as candidates, it should be determined by an election amongst the Trustees, who alone should be allowed to contend. These arrangements being previously completed, on the 1st of May and the 26th of December in each year the choice is determined by lot. The ceremony begins and ends with certain appropriate hymns, being sung by the children. After singing the first hymn, the six pieces of paper (if the number be six) are similarly rolled up and sealed, on one of which the sum of one hundred pounds is written, the others blank. These are placed in a tin canister in the centre of the large room belonging to the Institution; and each girl in order of rotation is led by a Trustee to the canister to draw out one of the pieces of paper, and present it to the lady in the chair, who opens it and announces the contents. After a discourse "On Diligence and Industry in our calling," agreeably to the founder's will, to be preached by the Lecturer, the Rev. W. Quekett, the procession returns to the Asylum, where the drawing takes place, as before mentioned.

The bride and bridegroom return to the Asylum during the afternoon, where a dinner is provided under the will, at the expense of the Charity, for them and their friends; and, in the evening, the Trustees, at their own expense, give tea together, with such other friends as the Stewards of the day may be pleased to invite. After dinner, the newly married couples are ushered into the presence of the Trustees and their guests, when all the girls of the school again assemble, and sing the usual ode, No. 3, after which the Rev. W. Quekett, the Lecturer, in an appropriate address, presents to the bride her marriage portion of one hundred new sovereigns, usually put into a handsome purse made by some young lady of the parish.

Immediately after the presentation, the whole company arise, and, wish health and happiness to the newly-married pair. After another ode, No. 4, sung by the children, the interesting ceremony concludes, which gives a greater feeling of joy bosom a feeling of gratitude, satisfaction, and pleasure. Many respectable inhabitants of the parish, who are now subscribers to the Charity, commenced their prospects in life with only the sum which this good man's liberality conferred upon them.

This interesting Charity owes its establishment entirely to Mr Raine, and it was his intention to have founded it free from assistance of any individual; but, unfortunately, such is not the case. The Trustees are obliged annually to appeal to the liberality of the parishioners, and a generous public, to enable them to supply a number of diligent, and respectable domestics, and thus keep up the number of forty girls—the original intention of the generous Founder.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The month of May, save when Easter falls out of season, is great in Olympics. It has not a week, a day, without an holiday, that does not give an impetus to some one of interest for those concerned in the turf, for pleasure or profit. The present will be one of its brilliant anniversaries. Between this and the close of its career two of the most popular of the season's meetings will be disposed of—those at Chester and Epsom.

It is the object of this essay to show in what degree the horoscope of those important items may be read from the key afforded by the racing in the Newmarket First Spring Meeting, which took place during the current week . . . . The cruel, cunning Cockney, who, in voyaging to Margate, sees some gull flying after him, from Erith to the Nore, vows, nowadays, no longer believes that such family are considered foolish fowls. Should you say to him, trundling as you proceed, "Mutato nomine de te fabula narratur," it's odds but he laughs in your face. Yet it is among the most proverbially penny and astute of their species that the unfeathered gull is to be sought, and found.

Once upon a time the wonderful feats of the Indian thieves were being discussed in presence of an ancient Leg, long deemed unapproachable, turning up his nose with contempt, observed, "Don't tell me about drawing a man when he is asleep. I'll fad ye fifty fellows in the ring, that, however wide awake you are, shall pick your back of your shirt." And they are the men who, year after year, as regularly as spring succeeds winter, are hunbugged and barnboozled into any belief it may suit those who have regularly, at similar periods, humbugged and barnboozled them, to require at their hands

Anon, we shall have to relate "one modern instance men."

Monday was not a propitious day for a descent into Cambridgeshire; but the weather kept few of the right kidney at home. The morning was quite ample entertaining nine events of one sort or other; but al. interest was prospective—centring in the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes, to be decided on the morrow. That morrow set in as insane a high day and holiday as ever was known in such a company on the heath, as, probably, never congregated there since the Romans celebrated the finishing of their Dutch. They asked you a couple of guineas for a hack for the omnibus of honour, and when you had offered the guineas, it would not have sat nished us to see them accepted. The town overflowed with visitors; the crowd in front of the rooms resembling a fair when that word means, great concourse of people: and this multitude was not composed of the mere simple emanating nine events of one sort or other; but al. interest was prospective—centring in the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes, to be decided on the morrow. That morrow set in as insane a high day and holiday as ever was known in such a company on the heath, as, probably, never congregated there since the Romans celebrated the finishing of their Dutch. They asked you a couple of guineas for a hack for the omnibus of honour, and when you had offered the guineas, it would not have sat nished us to see them accepted. The town overflowed with visitors; the crowd in front of the rooms resembling a fair when that word means, great concourse of people: and this multitude was not composed of the mere simple emanating from—where do you think? From York: from the land of the Tykes: and the subject here-of-fesh: what becomes of the sattee after that? Not one of that host of rural knew any more than Tulloch—to the contrary. They were ready to back him Tulloch—to win outright, with odds on him a great stake in a field whose strength they neither calculated nor cared about. They thought, till within a few hours of the race, that Sir Hussey was not to buy what he was "scratched," nobody cared. It was all over, but shouting—the "crack" had won the Two Thousand, and would win the Derby. Thus insisted the multitude—"Have I not said so?" The Jockey Club were called on to have the age of Tithorpe investigated. This may serve to keep up the excitement, but the fact is disposed of, and with it our duty ends. In our next we shall have something to say touching the result of the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes in reference to the Oaks. So far as the fate of the Derby is concerned in the issue of the Two Thousand, our impression is—

Tithorpe or Tulloch—but stmar—
A pinch of snuff which either was be—

ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB.—The members of this club have appointed the 11th, 12th, and 13th of August for the regatta. H. R. Highness Prince Albert have signified their intention of honouring the regatta with their presence. The following is the programme:—The Royal Victoria Yacht Club Annual Prize of 100 guineas in money to the first vessel, and 20 guineas to the second, to be contested for by cutters above 31 tons and under 51 tons; a piece of plate, value £50, for cutters above 50 tons, and not exceeding 70 tons; a piece of plate, value £50, for yachts of not less than 15 and under 31 tons; a piece of plate worth £50, for schooners not under 120 tons, and not exceeding 100 tons. A piece of plate, value £50—a grand handicap race by yachts belonging to any Royal yacht club.

NEWMARKET FIRST SPRING MEETING.—MONDAY.

Fifty pounds.

Mr Shelly's Maynooth	.. ..	(Sly) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis	.. ..	(Nat) 2

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Lord Orford's Blackie	.. .. ..	(J. Sharpe) 1
Lord Exeter's Cocoa Nut	.. .. ..	(Mann) 2

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs. each.

Colonel Anson's Iago	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Duke of Bedford's Taurina	.. ..	(Nat) 2

Sweepstakes of 30 sovs each, for foals of 1843

Duke of Bedford's Paragone	.. ..	(Robinson) 1
Lord Exeter's Lebanon	.. ..	(Mann) 2

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. King's Young Lochinvar	.. ..	(Pettit) 1
Sir J. Hawley's Bolingbroke and Rondorel's Cob	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 2

Match 300, h ft. T. Y. C.—Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon (Pettit), beat the Duke of Bedford's Oakley (Robinson). Wood Pigeon made all the running and won by a length.

Match 200 h ft. R.M.—Lord Glasgow's f by Retriever, out of Emilia (S. Mann), beat Lord Orford's Prussic Acid (Nat). Won by two lengths.

Match 100, h ft. A.F. & Sir J. Hawley's Almonde (F. Butler) beat Mr. Ramsbottom's Pane-Apple (H. Bell). Won by a length.

TUESDAY

The race for the 2,000 guineas proved, as was anticipated, unusually attractive, and drew together a larger assemblage than we have witnessed for many years on a similar occasion

The following are details of the racing:

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.

Duke of Rutland's Alexa	.. ..	(W. Boyce) 1
Lord Exeter's Lebanon	.. ..	(Pettit) 2

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas, for mares.

Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis, 4 years	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Osbaldeston's Sorella, 5 years	.. .. ..	(Owner) 2

The Two Thousand Guinea Stakes by subs of 100 sovs each

Mr. W. Scott's Sir Tatton Sykes (late Tibthorpe)	.. ..	(Owner) 1
Lord. Maldstone's Tom Tulloch	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 2
Lord Exeter's by Oxwich, out of Galata	.. .. ..	(Mann) 3

Iago was declared not to start at twenty minutes past ten this morning.

The Coffee-Room Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Duke of Bedford's Paragone	.. .. ..	(Robinson) 1
Sir J. Hawley's Cymbeline	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 2

Sweepstakes of 300 sovs each, 100 ft.

Duke of Bedford's Leopard	.. .. ..	(Robinson) 1
Mr. Fox's Luzius	.. .. ..	(J. Howlett) 2

Match 300, h ft. R.M. Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon received ft from Lord Glasgow's c, by Ray Middleton, out of Miss Whip.

WEDNESDAY.

Match 100 sovs, h ft, T.Y.C Lord Glasgow's F. by Sir (Nat) beat Lord Exeter's Cocoa-nut (Pettit). Won by a length.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs. each.

Lord Orford's Footstool	.. ..	(Mann) 1
Mr. Osbaldeston's Pet. Moreeau	.. .. ..	(Marlow) 2

Fifty Pounds.

Mr. G. H. Moore's Woolftog	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Shelly's Maynooth	.. ..	(Sly) 2

9,000 GUINEAS STAKES.—Mr. Field not having arrived, the settling took place this morning as usual, bets being paid under protest.

THURSDAY.

Sweepstakes. T.Y.C Winner to be sold for 150 sovs.

Lord W. Powlett's Fountain Filly	.. .. ..	1
Duke of Rutland's Alexa	.. .. ..	2

Handicap T.Y.C

Duke of Rutland's Paultons	.. .. ..	0
Mr. Lowther's Lyons	.. .. ..	0

A dead Dent.

The One Thousand Guineas Stakes.

Mr. Gulley's Meadicant..	.. .. ..	1
Mr. Bowes's Mowerma ..	.. .. ..	2

FRIDAY.

Handicap, A F.

Duke of Richmond's Peasant	.. .. ..	1
Mr. Payne's Collingwood	.. .. ..	2

Match.. Alamode beat Sorrella.

Match The Cob beat Corranna

The Newmarket Stakes of 50 sovs each, &c.

Mr. Gulley's Pyrrhus the First	.. .. ..	1
Col. Anson's Iago	.. .. ..	2

BETTING AT NEW MARKET THURSDAY EVENING.

10 to 1 and 5 to 1 Bower	22 to 1 ag 1 Inheritress	40 to 1 agst Tyrwhitt
10 to 1 Sweetbread	25 to 1 The Magnet	40 to 1 Voltaire
12 to 1 — The Baron	25 to 1 — Pyramus	40 to 1 — Will Do
14 to 1 — Pedometer	25 to 1 — Polish	40 to 1 — Count Agenor
18 to 1 — Miss Burns	25 to 1 — Hope (h)	Best Bower

7 to 2 agst Sting | 25 to 1 agst Sathead | 33 to 1 agst Phenomena
7 to 1 — Tibthorpe (h) | 25 to 1 — The Traverser | 40 to 1 — Malcolm
20 to 1 — Tom Tulloch | 30 to 1 — Cossack | 40 to 1 — Count Prince
20 to 1 — Humdrum | 30 to 1 — Fancy Boy | 40 to 1 — Peri colt
25 to 1 — Brocante | | 40 to 1 — Poppet

Odds

14 to 1 agst Osprey (h) | 14 to 1 agst Mendicant

THE DERBY.

4 to 1 against Sweet seat (h)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.—Tibthorpe has been examined and pronounced to be of the proper age.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that an EXTRA NIGHT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, MAY the 7th, when will be performed, for the First Time this Season, Rossini's Opera, LA GAZZA LADRA Ninetta, Mad Grisi; Lucia, Mad Bellini and Pippo, Mdlle Brambilla, Gherardo, Sig. Marlo, Pedesta, Sig Lablache, Isaac, Sig Dal Fiorli, Fabrizi Vingradin, Sig. A. Giubilei; and Fernando Villabella, Sig. Fornasari. With a Selection from a Favourite Opera, in which Mad Castelan, Mdlle. Sandrini, and Mdlle. Corbari, will appear and various entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT in which will appear Mdlle Carlo, Mdlle Louise Taglioni, and Mdlle. Lucile Grahn: M. St. Leon, M. Gosselin, M. Li Matteo, and M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office. Opera-colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half past Seven o'clock.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—Mr. HARLEY (Stage Manager) has the honour to announce that his BENEFIT takes place on WEDNESDAY NEXT, MAY 6th, when Rossini's Opera, the well-known and favourite Comedy of THE ENCHANTRESS. After which, a Vocal and Instrumental CONCERT, combining the entire strength of the Company.—To conclude with a favourite BALLET. Tickets, private boxes, and stalls, to be had of Mr. Harley, No. 14, Upper Grosvenor-street, Bond-street, and at the Box-office of the Theatre.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—MISS RAINFORTH most respectfully announces that her BENEFIT is appointed for MONDAY, May 11, on which occasion her Majesty's servants will act a GRAND OPERA, a Favourite BALLET, and a Grand Divertissement. Particulars of which will speedily be published. Tickets, Private Boxes, and Stalls, may be obtained of Miss Rainforth, 27, Berners-street, and at the Box-office of the Theatre.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—Miss RAINFORTH has the honour to announce that her MAJESTY THE QUEEN, PRINCE ALBERT, and the PRINCESS ROYAL.—Tryan hast ourseef Mr. LEMAN REID'S new Equestrian Spectacle, entitled by Command, THE CHARIOT RACE, or, THE CROWN JEWELS, which will be produced with the most Successful Theatre in London. On MONDAY, May 4th, and Every Evening until further notice, will be presented the much admired Equestrian Drama of the ARAB AND HIS FOREST, or, the Desert Steed. The Arab Steed, Mr. Leman Reid. The Horse of the Circle, Mr. Magnolet. Feats of the Hippodrome, by the Forman and British Professors. . . . A Dramatic Entertainment, adapted entitled THE PEDLAR-BOY OF AUDLEY END. AND THE GARNISH WRECKERS. Doors Open Each Evening at Seven: Commence at . . . Box-office Open from Eleven to Five. Equestrian Tuition as usual.—Sole Director, Mr. T. Taylor.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the FOURTH CONCERT will take place on MONDAY EVENING, next, May 4th, 1846, upon which occasion will be performed Beethoven's Chora Fantasia, and Grand Mass in D. Solo performers—Pianoforte, Mrs. Anderson; Violin, Mr. Blagrove; Violoncello, Signor Piatti. Vocal etc., the Misses Williams, Miss S. Novello, Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. H. Cotta, Signor F. Lablache, and Mr. A. Novello. Conductor, Mr. Costa. Single Tickets, One Guinea; and Double Tickets, £1 10s; to be had at the Music Warehouse of Messrs. ADDISON and HOLLIER, 210, Regent COLOSSEUM. —LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE.—In consequences of many persons having been disappointed in obtaining admission on Monday evening, the Proprietor has determined to open the Colosseum on Monday Evening next, and to repeat every half hour instead of every hour. Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five and Eight till Half-past Ten. Sunday Evenings excepted.

DAY EXHIBITION. Panorama of London. Museum of Sculpture.—Open from Nine A.M. to Dusk. Model Steam and Mountain Railway, &c. &c.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—London by Night.—Museum of Sculpture.—Conservatories, beautifully illuminated. Model Steam and Mountain Railway. Current surrounded by a real gilt—Open from Ten till Half-past Five, and the Organ Seven till Half-past Ten.

GENERAL TOM THUMB'S LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL.—The Little General has to return his sincere thanks to the Nobility for the honour of appearing three Hours before her Majesty, &c. If the parties at Court Dances from half-past two to two, half-past Eleven to five, and in future seven to nine o'clock. Admission, 1s., Children under Ten years of age, Half-price. After nine o'clock each evening, he appears in his New Play at the City of London Theatre, Bishopsgate-street

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY.—The EXHIBITIONS of PLANTS, FLOWERS, and FRUIT, in the Gardens of the Society, Inner Circle, Regent's Park, will be held this Season in the New Conservatory, on WEDNESDAYS, May 20, June 17, and July 1.—Tickets may be obtained at the Gardens, by presenting an Order from a Fellow or Member, price 4s. each, until May 9. Fellows privileged Tickets will cease to be issued after the 9th May 9

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK.—The Fellows are informed that the FIRST PROMENADE this Season will take place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, May 6th. A Military Band will attend at Half-past Three o'Clock. The Crown gates will be constantly opened Wednesday in May, June, and July, excepting those appointed for the Exhibitions.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS is NOW OPEN, at their GALLERY, 58, PALL-MALL, next the British Institution, from Nine o'Clock till Dusk. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary

HENLEY-ON-THAMES GRAND REGATTA, 1846.—This REGATTA will take place on TUESDAY and FRIDAY, the 30th and 26th days of JUNE, when the following Prizes will be contended for:—The Grand Challenge Cup, for eight-oared Boats, now held by the Cambridge University Boat Club. Entrance £6.—The Ladies' Challenge Cup, for eight-oared Boats; now held by the St. George's Boat Club. Entrance, £5.6s.—The Stewards' Challenge Cup, for four-oared Boats, now held by the University Boat Club. Entrance, £4.4s.—The District Challenge Cup, for four-oared Boats, now held by the Leander Aquatic Club. Entrance, £3.3s.—The Town Challenge Cup, for four-oared Boats, now held by the Henley Aquatic Club. Entrance, £2.2s.—The Silver Wherry, for Watermen Prizes for Amateurs, in pair-oared Boats; open to all England. Entrance, £2.2s.—The Diamond Sculls (Freemanship in Henley) for Amateurs, open to all England. Entrance £1.1s.—Silver Medals will be presented to the Winners of the Cups.—Entrances must be duly made with the Secretary, at Miss Wallbank's, Catherine Wheel Inn, Henley, on or before the 16th day of June next. JAMES NASH, Secretary.

Subscriptions received by P. B. Cooper, Esq., Treasurer; the Secretary; and Messrs. Hoare and Knox, Post-office, Henley

HUGHES' MAMMOTH and GRAND ORIENTAL EQUESTRIAN ESTABLISHMENT of the THEATRE NATIONALE, PARIS, arrived at first taken by storm the Capitals of the world, and Monarchs, with one consent, have constituted towns in the following order of precession, viz.—The second Egyptian Dragon Chariot, drawn by four gorgeous Camels, followed by the Chariot of Victory, the whole of the male and female Artistes, on their richly caparisoned steeds and the Band, or immense Imperial State Carriage, drawn by the Royal mules and Horses, &c. &c. &c. The whole forming the most gorgeous cavalcade ever witnessed on the Europe—Bradford, Yorkshire, May 4th; Leeds, 5th; Tadcaster, 6th; York, 7th and 8th. The Nobility are respectfully apprised that the First Grand Performance will take place in the afternoon, at two o'clock, the second, in the evening, at seven o'clock, in one Tents

NOVELTIES of extreme interest and information at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The SCENES in the OREGON TERRITORY form a part of an entirely NEW SERIES of DISSOLVING VIEWS. PORTRAITS of the most distinguished Men in the SIBTH ARMY of LABOUR, magnified by the OPAQUE MICROSCOPE, and PORTRAITS of Sir H. HARDIN B. and Sir ROBERT and Lady SALE. The PHANTASMAGORIA and CHROMATROPE, with new and beautiful varieties. The most interesting of the Novelties is WOOD'S ARGENTOSCOPIC ROTARY ENGINE, ARMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FAIRBAIRN'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, an ENVELOPE CUTTING MACHINE, WOOD'S NEW PATENT STEAM ENGINE GOVERNOR, and an ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY. Professor BACHHOFFNER and Mr. HENRY BELL and LIEWELL, LECTURERS on CHEMISTRY and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments. Admission, 1s.; Stalls, Half-price. A brief description of the Oregon Territory, from Notes by a Nine Years' Resident, presented to the Visitors

Now Published, 8vo., price Threepence, with a coloured Map,

NARROW GAUGE SPEEDIER THAN BROAD GAUGE RAILWAYS, AS WELL AS CHEAPER. By HERBERT S. MELVILLE, Esq London, W. STEPHENSON, 12 and 13, Parliament-street

NATIONAL UNIFORMITY OF GAUGE.—The REPORT of the COMMISSIONERS appointed to inquire into the Gauge of Railways will appear in TWO SUPPLEMENTS, GRATIS with the SPECTATOR of SATURDAY, MAY 2nd, and the SPECTATOR of MAY 9th. Advertisements should be sent early.

MUSIC FOR THE MANY.—THE MUSICAL HERALD, Edited by an Eminent Writer, containing Four Pages extra Pieces of Select Music and Full Critiques on Concerts, Operas, &c., is published on the 1st of MAY, for the small charge of only TWOPENCE. Notwithstanding the unprecedent of cheapness, the Proprietors of Music are invited to inspect this specimen of a new era To be had of all the Trade.

ART-UNION OF LONDON. On SATURDAY, May 9th, No. 109 of THE BUILDER, an Illustrated Journal for the Architect, Operative, and Artist, price 5d., or stamped to go by post 6d., will contain full particulars of the General Meeting at Drury-lane Theatre, and a Correct List of all the Prizeholders; a Paper on Fresco and Arabesque by the Rev. J. Dalton, Architect; and Much Interesting Matter. Office, No. 2, York-street, Covent-garden; and of all Booksellers

Just published, price 1s.,

WOMAN'S LOVE: a Romance of Smiles and Tears. By G. HERBERT RODWELL, Illustrated by Alfred Crowquill. Published by W. SAMS, Bookseller to the Queen, 1, St. James's-street.

Also, Part III., price 1s.

MEMOIRS of an UMBRELLA. By G. HERBERT RODWELL. Illustrated by Phiz. With Inside City Agent, SAMUEL GUNDRY, 21, and 22, Finsbury-pavement.

THE CRUSADERS.—The most successful Opera of the Season, composed by Alan Benedict, and written by Alfred Bunn, Esq. Among the popular pieces are—"Ah! Bella, mia Bella," "Miss Lucy, my dear," "The hours are seasons of love," sung by Mr. Harrison; "They little know the charms," sung by Miss Romer; "Hope of long," sung by Mr. Harrison; in chorus, "Love is an old, old song," sung by Miss Rainforth; "The fair of friendship," duet sung by Miss Romer and Miss Rainforth.

CRAMER, BEALE, and Co., 201 Regent-street.

"DON GIOVANNI," "SONNAMBULA," and "FRA DIAVOLO" Three Operas, with their respective Overtures, are given in THE PIANO-FAN, Nos. 56, 57, 58, and 59, for 4d. each, the price of a mere song. They are beautifully printed on the largest and finest music paper, and contain plates on a new principle. By post, twenty stamps extra. The price will shortly be raised to 8s. Pianists-office, 67, Paternoster-row (one of the cheapest).

Just published, price 1s.,

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CAVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MARSH, 39, Cornhill; and BAILEY, 81, Arundel-street, Strand.

PETIT COURRIER DES DAMES DE LONGCHAMPS.—FASHIONS. The novelties which this season produces in female Fashion will make their appearance in the "PETIT COURIER DES DAMES" the first week in MAY. A Number of Coloured Plates, which will be given in the Parts of Europe have to be sold for many years, continues to arrive from Paris, with increased elegance and beauty, it is engraved from the figures of female costume handed for exhibition.

Subscribers names received by S. and J. FULLER, Sole Agents, 34, Rathbone-place, at 12s. 6d. quarter, and 50s. postage free to any part of Kingdom.

TO CHESS AMATEURS.—Price 1s.

SPLENDID COLLECTION of MATCH GAMES.—The MAY NUMBER of the CHESS PLAYER'S CHRONICLE, price 1s., will this Month contain, in addition to many beautiful Games and Problems, by the leading Players of the day, the Two Games of the Great Match by Correspondence, just terminated, after four years' hard contest, between Mr. Falkbeer and Count Jean de Rodolphe and the celebrated German Player, Mr. Horwitz. Games of the Great American Match, and Games in a Match recently contested between Mr. Stanley and Schulten, &c. &c.

London: BOSWORTH, 215, Regent Street.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES.—Now Ready (Second Series), A NEW PLAN FOR READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES THROUGHOUT THE KINGDOM

This plan gives an unlimited choice of New Works—all the new books—and the right of members to purchase any work (extra), as soon as the first demand has subsided, at one-third the usual price. Prospectuses sent free by post-office order, enclosing one stamp, addressed to Mr. HULL, Librarian, 31, Hans-street, Cavendish-square.

Also, HULL'S New Monthly Circular of Works withdrawn from the Library, at very reduced prices, sent to any one enclosing one stamp.

THE PARLOUR NOVELIST. A Series of Works of Fiction by the most celebrated Authors. This day is published, MANSFIELD PARK. By MISS AUSTEN. Forming the Fourth Volume of the Series now published. I. TALES OF THE O'HARA FAMILY. Part I., containing "Confessions of the Bullhook and the Fetches." II. TO OXFORD AND BACK AGAIN. By EUGENE SUE.—III. THE CHARLATAN. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS.—Of these last, will appear the Second Part of No. I. and No. II. on the 1st of June next.

Price of each Volume, in sewed cover, 2s. 6d. cloth

Part I. of each Work may be had in Monthly Parts, price 1s. Orr and Co., Paternoster-row; Cumming and Ferguson, Dublin; and Menzies, Edinburgh; and to be had of all Booksellers.

LUCY NEAL, the Popular Ballad, as Song and Trio, for the Threepence, the Symphonies and Accompaniments written expressly for this Edition by Henry Russell. The Music by Jones, Esq., the Poetry by Bayly. Popular Ballads, causing by the Metropolitan Threepenny Who does Barnsbury Wanders, Original Song, the Music by M. W. Balfe, Threepence. Lucy Neal, the Popular Ballad Song, written for this work by R. J. Lodge, Threepence. Le Petit Jean Claire, Threepence. Attwood's Glee of the Curfew, with Accompaniment, and Chorus, Threepence. The Crown Jewels Quadrille, from Lotte's celebrated Opera, Threepence; or the whole in Two Shilling Parts, in neat wrappers, being the Key Edition of Popular Music ever published. Specimens of Music for the Parts, Post-free, for three stamps.

London: Published at the Office of the Musical Times, 6, Paternoster-row; and to be had of all Booksellers and Music-sellers.

THE MONTHLY PART FOR MAY

Is NOW READY, price 1s.

THE PEOPLE'S JOURNAL.

Contains Four Illustrations by Kenny Meadows, Margaret Gillies, F. W. Topham, and Edward Leahead; and the following Papers:—

1. Christmas in the Alps. By Frederick Romer.
2. Letters on Ireland. By Thomas Wright.
3. Mary and the Pleiades of the Hairdresser Family.
4. [illegible] Study of History. By W. J. [illegible]
5. [illegible] By [illegible]
6. [illegible] themselves! By Dr Sm[illegible]
7. [illegible]
8. [illegible] and the Tent: a Tale. By Caroline Tolman
9. [illegible] of the People. By [illegible]
10. [illegible]
11. [illegible] recall. By W. J. Fox
12. The Wedding Ring-dance. By Angelo L. Rossi
13. [illegible] By Thomas Hood
14. The Sister Isle, and Gathered Wax. By Mrs. Wentworth
15. [illegible]
16. [illegible]

Original Contributions by Miss Mitford, Miss Mulford, Charles Mackay, LL.D., H. F. Chorley, and Mrs. Loudon, will appear in a subsequent numbers

Office of Journal, 335, Strand: and by all Booksellers

Just published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition, translated from the Nineteenth French Edition,

CONSTIPATION DESTROYED; or, Exposition of Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Curing this Disease, Indigestion, without the use of Purgatives or any other Injurious Remedies whatever, recently made in France by M. Warton, followed by numerous Authentic Certificates from Physicians and other persons of Eminence. Price 1s. 6d. Sold by JAMES EPPS, 170, Piccadilly; 112, Dean-street, Soho; and 48, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

THE FORTUNES OF TORLOGH O'BRIEN. A Tale of ... Author of "Harry Lorrequer." No II., price 1s., on May 1st. To be completed in ten ... Illustrations by PHIZ. ... DUBLIN: M'GLASHAN, 21, D'Olier-street. London: W. S. Orr and Co. Edinburgh: ... Fraser and Co.

PAPER HANGINGS.—A Stock of 50,000 Pieces always ... Ready, in Satins, Flocks, Gold, Damasks, Oaks, Granite, Hand Marbles, &c. &c., of extraordinary taste. Terms, Cash.—Paper hangers supplied with long Alsatian at Mr. ... Prices.—Cash.—LESCHALLAS, 32, Hedge-row, City, corner of Sise-lane.

GOLD AND SILVER PLATE.—MR. ELKINGTON, 22, Regent-street, S.W., 1st floor, invites ... UPTON'S NON-ABRASIVE GOLD AND SILVER PLATE POLISHING DETERGENT gives the highest polish and lustre to Gold and Silver articles, and imparts to the latter an unique appearance, entirely removes blackness from ... stores. Protects parts to their original whiteness. Not wearing the surface ... and Plated articles, it leaves them free from scratch, is unequalled ... and imitations of Silver Plate. Sold by Upton and Co., 66, Bassinghall-street. N.B Plate ... Gold Detergent, 8s 6d; 10s 6d.; 15s., 1s. 6d. per box.

A PERFECT and LASTING RESTORATION of the most Tarnished and Fly-spotted Gilding instantly follows a single application of ... SMITH'S GOLD REVIVER, 2s. 6d. per Bottle. GOLD VARNISH, 1s. 6d., replaces the ... gilding, when off. ELECTROPLATING SOLID SILVER, 1s. and 2s., re-silvers the most ... ery parts of worn plated articles, instantly restoring their original beauty and durability. ... LAFKIN REVIVER, 1s., copper and Or-molu, Lamp, and Bronze.—These are the original and established Preparations, simple in application, trifling in cost; instant, astonishing, ... and lasting in effect.—Smith, 261, Strand (opposite Norfolk-street).

THE REGISTERED STRAW HAT FOR CHILDREN.—HERBERT NUNN, Straw Hat Manufacturer and Milliner, 130, ... Berkeley-square, in returning his sincere thanks to the Nobility and Gentry for the ... he has hitherto received, begs most respectfully to inform them that he has succeeded in obviating the great inconvenience that results from Hats becoming too small, owing to the ... growth of children's heads. The Registered Hat is flexible in the band to the extent of three inches, thus, the same Hat fits equally well after being worn two entire months as when ... purchased. H. N. continues to receive every novelty in Bonnets, Ribbons, and Flowers, from ... Paris weekly.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, MOORGATE-STREET, ... ESTABLISHED 1837.—PATRON—THE EARL OF ARDEN. TRUSTEES—The Hon. ... Archers, and Hon. ... to the Benevolent Fund, will be held at the LONDON TAVERN on ... THURSDAY next, May 7, at Eleven o'Clock precisely, for the purpose of ELECTING TWO additional ANNUITANTS. JOHN ABEL SMITH, Esq., M.P., in the Chair. The Right Hon. the MARQUIS of SALISBURY, President of the Board of Trade, will take the Chair at the Dinner at Six o'clock in the Evening. By order of the Board of Managers, THOS. M'LUINDER, Secretary.

TOOTH-ACHE, TIC DOLOUREUX, NEURALGIA, &c. ... Dentist, 12, New Burlington-street, Regent-street, has ... invariable treatment and remedy for the above excruciating maladies, which ... irresistible effect, frequently in a few minutes, without the ... operation of extraction, begs to call the attention of the public to this effectual means of relief ... to preserve sight and decayed Teeth. It will be found invaluable.

LOSS OF TEETH.—Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, ... Berners-Street, Oxford-street, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, without springs or ... wires, upon his new System of Self-Adhesion, which has procured him such universal approbation, as practice, by most respectable families, to adopt his painless yet effective ... system, which is at much less expensive than others.

THE PATENT READING EASEL.—The "Poetic Æsculapius" Dr Armstrong, in his celebrated poem, "The Art of Preserving Health," published in 1744 has the following lines singly apt by recommendatory of this Invention:—

As nature promises to lend, and never vary leaves
To aim for ever cramps the vital parts,
And it is the fine mechanicy of its plan,

This portable and elegant piece of furniture can be fixed and detached at pleasure from any article of furniture, and is recommended as invaluable to all who read or write. ... It is ... in every family where there are young persons. The prices are 20s., 30s., 42s 6d., ... and Guineas. Of No. 170, Regent-street, W. and T. Williams e. 4, Ludgate-hill. ... Finsbury-pavement in Lettis and Son 8, Aldgate. Exchange.

by all respectable Upholsterers and Stationers.

FURTHER REDUCTION IN TEAS AT No. 2, SKINNER STREET CITY (two doors from Farringdon-street) The great patronage which the Proprietors ... to enable them to carry out their system, viz., small profits and ... returns, consequently they are able to publish a very good Quality. Congou, 3s. 4d., ... 3 lb. for 10s. 8d. A post-office order will meet 30 Sets ... Also, receipt on the Proprietors' new and improved Patent Tea Pot, by which ... Economical Mixture of Coffees, 1s. 6d.; Superior Old Mocha, 1s. 8d. JENKINS and Co., Proprietors.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel-Keepers, and Large Consumers, supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Prices, for Ready Cash:—

Black	2s. 6d.	..	3s. 0d.	..	3s. 6d.	..	4s. 0d.	..	4s. 6d.
Green	2s. 8d.	..	3s. 6d.	..	4s. 0d.	..	4s. 6d.	..	5s. 0d.
Coffee	9d.	..	10d.	..	1s. 0d.	..	1s. 4d.	..	1s. 8d.

One pound and upwards of Tea or Coffee sent to any part of the Kingdom, carriage free. MANSELL and Co., 2, Bow-churchyard, Cheapside.

Country orders for 5lbs. of Tea and upwards delivered free of carriage to any part of the ...

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD, LONDON.—The following sample package is recommended to Families, who wish ... economy in their usual supply of Teas, Coffees, &c., to satisfy and prove the superior excellence of the goods sold by DAKIN and COMPANY, Tea Merchants, and it will be forwarded to the Country (carriage free), on receipt of a Post-office order for 22s.:

		£	s.	d.
3	lbs Finest True Rich Congou Tea	0	13	6
3	lb. Very Fine Fine Congou Tea	0	12	0
1	lb Strong Congou, Tea for Domestics	0	4	0
6	lbs Coffee ripe and rich in Flavour	0	12	0
3	lb. The Old Mixture	0	14	6
2	lbs Best Marmalade Arrowroot (in a Tin Case)	0	3	0
3	lb Finest Spices imported	0	4	0
2	lb Finest Bencoolen Cloves	0	2	0
2	lb Finest Brown Nutmegs	0	2	0
3	lb Very Best Cayenne Pepper	0	2	6
		£2	0	3

All goods afterwards ordered will be sent warranted equal to those sample ...

NOTICE.—TO HABERDASHERS, SILK MERCERS, DRAPERS, &c.—KIRBY, BEARD, and Co., No. 48, Cannon street, ... respectfully to inform the above trades that they continue to manufacture their celebrated and ... PATENT GLOSS ULTRA ROYAL BRITISH CRAPE, PATENT FINISH and MOURNING, and their manufactories being in full operation, embracing every recent improvement invented to the Trade, they are prepared to furnish the above articles in the greatest perfection, and notwithstanding the attempts of many parties to imitate and palm off inferior ... neither up to the present time has either equalled or surpassed in the slightest degree their manufacture of Plain and Spotted, the superiority of which has been repeatedly stated by the most competent judges, and has always been pronounced pre-eminent. Kirby, Beard, and Co., 48, Cannon-street, London.

ANCIENT ROMAN COINS in each, in BRASS, with good ... Portraits of the Ancient Emperors from Cæsar, ... then, Caligula, Hadrian, &c. in Silver, 9s. and 5s. 6d each. Many Antiquaries in ... country are not aware that Medals and Current Coins of the all ... of antiquity are to be obtained, ... and of decrement. The Advertiser begs to inform virtuosi that he has Coins of all the Roman Emperors; of numerous of the Kings of the Saxons, all of which he will guarantee to be antique. He will procure ... Coins, and is England, Silver Coins of the Kings of Scotland, Silver Coins of Mary among them 4s. 6d. and 2s., Pumpey the Great, 10s., of Julius Cæsar, 5s. and 6s. each; Octavius Augustus, 4s. and 5s.; Syria, 4s. 6d. and 5s.; Roman Brass Coins, with good portraits of the Emperors, from Cæsar, 1s. each, and Coins worthy from 1s. to 1s. 6d. each, down to the ... of current money. Brass Medals of the Popes, from Martin V. to Pius VI., 1s. each. Medals of Queen Caroline, silver Portraits of Edward the Confessor 7s. each, Canute, 7s. and 8s. each. Alfred, 8s., of William the Conqueror, 8s. and 9s. 6d. each; of the Henrys and Edwards, 5s. 6d., and 8s. each; of the Protector, his Sister, Charles the Martyr, the Queen, the Chevalier and Cardinal, of York, 8s. 6d. each. Assigns of the French Revolution, in each ... days of the first year, can be sent by post. T. PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 48, Strand, London. Ladies would find the study of Saxon and English coins a most agreeable and pleasing one. Medals are supposed to have been carried as Jewels in our forefathers' times. "Tribute Penny" in Silver, 5s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. T. P. W. begs to inform gentlemen that he has a fine Fine Head Tiberius, a Silver Lepidus, a Magnus Urbon, a Vetranio, a Dalmatius, and a Constantius Athalaric, a fine ...

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES (A BRIEF OUTLINE).

The extensive New Establishment of HOWELL and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of the business, and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it has been started, and the means whereby leaders which it has opened on ... principles. ... ten have been devoted to them a spacious range of show-Rooms, entered ... a Private Entrance from 64, Aldgate. The ... are apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select ... at Room. Ladies are informed that a private Ladies Room is likewise set apart; and ... Department is at present four doors from the former extent, and its business will ... constantly, be despatched with much greater facility. The ... every ... and Cape, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 330, ... is ... furnished in a novel and variety of Articles, for which this ... chance are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing ... has equal claims to attention, and the Proprietors will ... SON. Let it be remembered that 'Economy! Economy! E ... y is the maxim at the New Establishment, 64, Aldgate, and 64, and be it also remembered ... all are to the marking of the articles in plain figures ... from which no abatement can be made. At the home, in ... Hotel, Cape, and ... may be purchased, and the ... of every article may be ... without the ... information. For particulars of ... Patent, and ... other useful ... Information ... new book applied ... Patent, and future, which may be ... and 64, 194, 195, 196, 197, Minories, ...

Inasmuch as the ... Inserted that the ... concern, and ... book inserted ... at the establishment from sunset ... every evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is re-opened till twelve o clock.

AN IRISH WELCOME.—Families and Commercial Gentlemen, visiting the North of Ireland, will find at the IMPERIAL HOTEL, BELFAST, Home, which, for comfort, elegance, and economy, cannot be surpassed by any House in the ... Kingdoms. T FRASER, Proprietor.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM, consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Dig ... Groups, Vases ... Statuettes, Candlesticks, beautiful inlaid Tabl-s, Paper-weights, Work-stands, &c., in ... Rosewood, marble, bronze, Derbyshire spar, &c., kept on sale by J. TREVITT, 134, Bishopsgate-street ... Within, London. He has also an extensive assortment of Minerals, Shells, and Fossils.

NICOLL'S PALETOT of LLAMA CLOTH, registered 6 and 7 Vic., cap. 65. Patronized by the Prince Consort, Prince George of Cambridge, &c.—This Overcoat requires neither Brush nor Sponge, two coats being sufficient for a season; is perfectly rain, snow, and hail proof, and also defies ... the almost constant humidity of the climate of Great Britain.—To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, Regent-street.

THE CORAZZA SHIRT.—Directions for Gentlemen to take their own measures for the Corazza, and every other style of Shirt, are sent by post ... application to the Makers, CAPPER and WATKIS, Cartoon Chambers, 8, Regent-street ... Patent. If a set be ordered, a sample is on the first made, and sent, accordingly, by return ...

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very low prices, for cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warehouse, 42, Oxford-street, two doors from Newman-street. Patterns ... free. £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son, Family Linendrapers, Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued at Gracechurch-street, without change.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, fenders, fire-irons, ... ornamental finishings, ... and copper, tin, and steel tea-urns, and every description of ... Smiths' ... and table cutlery, japanned trays, ... dish ... ornamental iron and wire work, for verandas ... Prices. Sir, Lord, Queen, and Prince Grates that have received the lowest prices ... this System for cash. Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker street, Portman-square.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING, Patronised by the ROYAL FAMILY, is entirely free from any unpleasant smell, gives a lasting Polish, equal to ... brilliancy, causes leather to wear soft and pliable, and ... Prepared only at ... as arising from leather best ... Sold at Bottles, at ... and ... 49, St. James-street, Edinburgh: Duncan and Co., 26, Prince-street. Dublin: Hodges and Co., Westmoreland-street.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.—The Thorn that veils the Primrose ... Rose, or Arms of Beauty. For its removal HUBERT'S ROSEATE POWDER stands ... Sold ... the Inventor and Proprietor, 76, Newman-street, and by Chemists and Perfumers. ... Price 4s., or two in one parcel, 7s.

THREE DESCRIPTIONS of BRANDY.—Each warranted the ... Pure ... of its kind. No. 1 Brown Imperial Patent Brandy, 18s. per ... 2 The finest brown Cognac imported, 24s. per ... No. 3. Choice, old, pale, Champagne ... Of various prices and qualities in bottle ... samples may be freely tasted at our counting-house; and orders for ... gallons or upwards will be promptly executed, for carriage paid, at Glossop, by Lodge ... HENRY BRETT and Co., Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn.

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—C. G. and J. DRANE invite attention to their Stock of LATHES and Machinery ... Lathes constructed; together with Foot-motion, Overhead Motion, Drilling, Boring, and Slide Rests, Dividing Plates, Chucks, Centres, Screwing Apparatus, &c. Every description of apparatus constructed on the most approved principles. Alterations and repairs promptly attended to. All kinds of machinery built to order.—DRANE'S, Gun Manufactory, 20 King William-street, London Bridge.

TO CONNOISSEURS.—A Delicious Novelty for Table.—BRECKNELL and SON'S BISCUIT, Patronised by Her Majesty the Queen, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, her Majesty Queen Adelaide, His Royal Highness Duke of Cambridge, and other Royal Families, &c. &c. This Biscuit, which is composed of the most exquisite ingredients, in ... Tea-Supper and Dessert.—Manufactured by the ... tor, by BRECKNELL, TURNER, III, High-street, ... Bakers, in Packages, 1s., Boxes, 1s. 6d., 2s., containing 12 Biscuits. Wholesale and for Exportation. To be had of ... warehousemen, grocers, and Biscuit Bakers ... Town and Country Agents Wanted.

BERRIDGE'S LIGHT WATER-PROOF OVER-COATS, ... ranteed to exclude any rain whatever.—The established reputation of these garments has been so long and universally admitted, that continuing thus to notice them would be unnecessary, were it not that their well-known extensive sale is continually produced attempts to imitated. For quality and style, efficiency, respectability, and real economy ... most commendatory, they and adapt the publicity and patronage. Originally ... Coats, in a ... variety in Lamas and other new materials, manufactured exclusively for W. B for the present season, and ... Sold by the Inventor and Proprietor, 61, Strand, ... Price 30s. Only by W. BERRIDGE, Tailor, Over-Coat Maker, and Waterproofer, 68 Cornhill (North Side); a particular style made expressly ... Agents ... Country ... Agents ... Wholesale ... Agents ... Foreign ... Agents ... Colonial ... Agents ... Indian ... Agents ... American ... Agents ... European ... Agents ... Asiatic ... Agents ... African ... Agents ... Australian ... Agents ... New Zealand ... Agents ... Pacific ... Agents ... Atlantic ... Agents ... Mediterranean ... Agents ... Black Sea ... Agents ... Caspian ... Agents ... Red Sea ... Agents ... Persian Gulf ... Agents ... Arabian Sea ... Agents ... Bay of Bengal ... Agents ... China Sea ... Agents ... Japan ... Agents ... Philippines ... Agents ... Moluccas ... Agents ... Java ... Agents ... Sumatra ... Agents ... Borneo ... Agents ... Celebes ... Agents ... New Guinea ... Agents ... Australia ... Agents ... New Zealand ... Agents ... Pacific Islands ... Agents ... Sandwich Islands ... Agents ... California ... Agents ... Mexico ... Agents ... Central America ... Agents ... West Indies ... Agents ... South America ... Agents ... Brazil ... Agents ... Argentine Republic ... Agents ... Chile ... Agents ... Peru ... Agents ... Ecuador ... Agents ... Colombia ... Agents ... Venezuela ... Agents ... Guiana ... Agents ... Trinidad ... Agents ... Barbados ... Agents ... Jamaica ... Agents ... Bahamas ... Agents ... Bermuda ... Agents ... Canada ... Agents ... Nova Scotia ... Agents ... New Brunswick ... Agents ... Prince Edward Island ... Agents ... Newfoundland ... Agents ... Labrador ... Agents ... Hudson's Bay ... Agents ... Greenland ... Agents ... Iceland ... Agents ... Faroe Islands ... Agents ... Norway ... Agents ... Sweden ... Agents ... Denmark ... Agents ... Germany ... Agents ... Holland ... Agents ... Belgium ... Agents ... France ... Agents ... Spain ... Agents ... Portugal ... Agents ... Gibraltar ... Agents ... Malta ... Agents ... Ionian Islands ... Agents ... Greece ... Agents ... Turkey ... Agents ... Egypt ... Agents ... Abyssinia ... Agents ... Nubia ... Agents ... Sahara ... Agents ... Barbary States ... Agents ... Morocco ... Agents ... Algiers ... Agents ... Tunis ... Agents ... Tripoli ... Agents ... Cyrenaica ... Agents ... Fezzan ... Agents ... Soudan ... Agents ... Timbuctoo ... Agents ... Senegambia ... Agents ... Guinea ... Agents ... Ivory Coast ... Agents ... Gold Coast ... Agents ... Slave Coast ... Agents ... Niger ... Agents ... Benin ... Agents ... Biafra ... Agents ... Cameroons ... Agents ... Gaboon ... Agents ... Congo ... Agents ... Loango ... Agents ... Angola ... Agents ... Benguela ... Agents ... Mozambique ... Agents ... Zanzibar ple, by the flukes moving in separate pieces, on a pivot. It was then suggested that one of Porter's anchors should be tried, it being, at the same time, pointed out how it might be fired from a mortar. Capt. Jerningham then applied to the patentee for permission to use Porter's anchor, and not only obtained it, but several suggestions were, at the same time, made for its use with perfect success. An alteration was made to assimilate one of the anchors previously used to Porter's, and the addition afforded evidence, that the principle and the holding powers were decidedly the best yet tried.

CAPTAIN JERNINGHAM'S EXPERIMENT FOR SAVING LIVES FROM SHIPWRECK.

ANCHOR IN GUN.

We gather from the "Naval Intelligence" of the Times that the above experiments have not been carried on with any view of benefitting Commander Jerningham personally, as he is simply the party selected by the Controller of the Coast Guard to superintend experiments which were suggested to, and considered advisable to be made by, the Board of Customs, by whom the expense of the superintendence is to be defrayed. It is highly creditable to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that on the subject being submitted to them, their Lordships ordered that every facility should be afforded to Commander Jerningham; and the authorities at the Royal Arsenal were ordered to afford every aid in their power; and a corporal and four gunners of the Royal Artillery, to be the same men on every occasion when the experiments were carried on, were detached for that special purpose, that no difficulty might be experienced by having to instruct new parties on different occasions. Commander Jerningham, so far from wishing to take any credit to himself in connection with the experiments, or deprive previous inventors of means for saving lives from shipwreck, of the claims they have to public gratitude, wished it to be understood that his only object is to discover a plan which would be so simple and effective in its operation, that any person who had once witnessed it might be able, on a subsequent occasion, to operate with it in the same manner without the chance of failing.

ANCHOR AS IT HOLDS.

ANCHOR FOR PLACING IN GUN.

Besides the experiments made at Woolwich, Commander Jerningham has fired anchors several times from the beach, at Yarmouth, and found them to answer tolerably well, with the exception that the springs were liable to get out of order; by taking off the tail-board of the cart which conveyed the ropes, anchors, and other articles, to the beach, and placing the tail-board over the fore part of the shafts, and burying the whole a short distance in the wet sand, and by turning the rope round the axles of the wheels of the cart, so powerful a purchase was obtained, that it was almost impossible to drag it or cant it over, as the greater the strain, the deeper it became imbedded in the sand.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.

MAY, more especially if we reckon by the Old Style, is the month which, on an average, affords the fly-fisher the most sport and the most pleasure. Spring, which, in the month before, "came slowly up this way," is no longer hesitating and coy; she has gained confidence as she has become better clothed, and she now trips forward like a mountain nymph in a new green kirtle, courting the gaze of admiring mortals. How delightful is the walk to the water-side

> So early in the morning, in the merry month of May!

The Angler is up before the sun, and has walked a long mile before he meets him on the upland lawn; and just as he is admiring the brilliancy of the dew-drops that gem the grass, up springs the lark within twenty yards of him, in the full burst of song. As he is crossing the stile, by the side of the coppice, about half a mile further on, he hears, or thinks he hears, a note which never fails to arrest attention: he pauses for a moment, and hears it repeated—"Cuckoo! cuckoo!" He hails the winged voice as a favourable omen, and goes on his way rejoicing. And now, having reached the stream, which is beginning to curl under the gentle breeze which has just wafted the mist away, he lits his rod, and "goes at" the water for a pannier full.

Leaving the Fly-fisher to enjoy his sport, we shall now take a look at his tackle. The epic rule is always to be observed in treating of Angling, whether in prose or verse: plunge in medias res—i. e., set your Angler to work, and then talk of his tackle by way of episode.

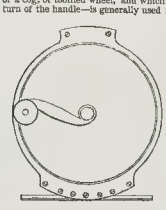
OF THE ROD.—"What ought to be the length of a rod for trout-fishing?" This is a question that is sometimes asked by novices, who seem to fancy that there is some peculiar excellence in a rod of a certain length, without any regard to the reasons which might induce a practical angler to employ a comparatively short or long rod, according to circumstances. The advantages of a long rod consist in the power which it affords the angler of throwing a greater length of line, and in the greater command that he has over the line, by raising or lowering the top of the rod, after a fish is hooked. In fishing-streams, which are either wide, frequently requiring the angler to make a long cast, or in which the trouts run large, it is advisable to use a double-handed rod, of about fifteen feet long. For narrow streams, in which trouts generally do not exceed a pound weight, a single handed rod, of about twelve feet long, will be sufficient.

The excellence of a rod consists in its being at once light and strong; of gradually increasing pliability from the stock, or bottom piece, to the top, neither feeling to the hand, when making a cast, too elastic in one part, nor too stiff in another, but "playing" freely from the stock in a line of gradually increasing curvature. Some persons prefer a rod that is comparatively elastic; others, one that is rather stiff; this, however, is merely a matter of taste, as fish may be hooked, killed, and landed, equally well from either, in the hands of a person accustomed to use it. A beginner will be able to throw the line better with a rod that is rather stiff than with one that is very pliable; though, if he should chance to hook a large and vigorous fish, he will be more liable to break either his rod or his tackle.

We shall not pretend to discuss the merit of the various kinds of wood of which rods are made; but shall merely observe that, in a fifteen feet fly-rod, we prefer a stock or bottom piece of ash, to one of willow; and that a hollowed stock, for the purpose of containing a spare top-piece, is our aversion. The London fishing-tackle makers turn out capital fly rods; but he who wants a really good one, and is not a judge of the article, should ask some of his angling friends to recommend him to a "good shop," otherwise he may happen to get "taken in;" for, in London, fishing-rods, as well as razors, both there and elsewhere, are "made to sell," by parties who never expect the same customer to call twice, but are content with the chance of serving all her Majesty's liages once with "an extremely low-priced article," of proportionately small value.

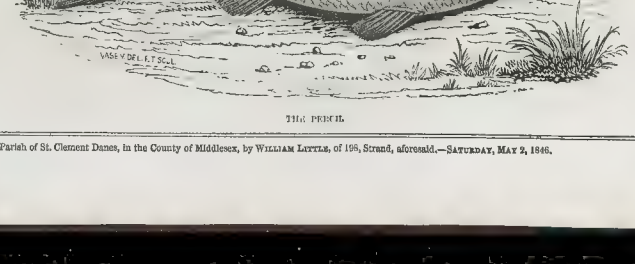
LINES, AND WINCH, OR REEL.—The line generally used in fly-fishing for trout consists of two parts: 1st, the Casting-line, to which the fly or flies are attached; and, 2nd, the Reel-line, to which the Casting-line is knotted, and which runs through the small wire rings on the lower side of the rod, to the reel or winch fixed on the stock. The casting-line ought to be of fine, yet strong, single gut, carefully knotted, and dyed of a neutral tint—either of the colour of London smoke, or a dingy olive; and it should be about three or four feet shorter than the rod. The best reel-lines are made of silk and hair; a length of about thirty yards will generally be sufficient, though, where trout are large, and show much play, about fifty yards, or even more, will be requisite.

A REEL, or WINCH, is of essential use to the fly-fisher, as it enables him not only to lengthen or shorten his cast according to circumstances, but also to give line to a trout when he makes play, and to wind it up again when he no longer resists. A "multiplier" that is, a reel whose barrel, or axis, is moved by means of a cog, or toothed wheel, and which makes three or four revolutions at each turn of the handle—is generally used in trout fishing. The excellence of a reel consists in its strength, comparative lightness, freedom of movement, and the rapidity with which it can give out and take up lines. Mr. Little, fishing-tackle-maker, 15, Fetter-lane, has recently introduced an improved reel, which possesses in a high degree all those advantages, and which appears likely to supersede every other. From an improvement in the mode of placing the bars connecting the circular ends, Mr. Little's reel will contain more line than one of the old kind of the same diameter at the ends; while, by taking away a portion of useless brass at the sides, it is made lighter without impairing its strength. By means of a rim carried round one of the ends, the line is prevented from becoming entangled with the axis and crank of the handle. So much for tackle at present, for we have now a fish to look after.



The Cut of a PERCH appended to our article indicates that this fish is now in season,—that is, any angler, who is fond of such sport, has now, and will have for the next three months, a good chance of catching him. The PERCH, though a handsome fish, both as regards form and colour, is not of much use for the pan, being dry, bony, and insipid; and he bites so freely, and yields so tamely that he may be captured with very little skill. Almost any kind of tackle is good enough for him, provided it be strong enough to pull him without the aid of a landing net; and no bait is more tempting to him than a brandling worm. He lies mostly in quiet pools, or stacks; and bites most freely at about six inches from the ground—in the morning for three hours after sun-rise, and in the afternoon for three hours before sun-set.

X. Y.



THE PERCH.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 210.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE LAHORE TREATY.

INDIA is again at peace; a campaign almost unexampled in the rapidity of its operations, and the completeness of its results, has placed the whole territory of the Sikhs in our power. With so much at command, we may, doubtless, lay some claim to the virtue of moderation, since we have not taken the whole; and the terms of the Treaty we have dictated are, when examined, temperate enough. We did not provoke the war; it was one of defence, not conquest; true, it has ended by an increase of our territory—but that result has always followed our wars in India. Our Empire in the East was founded by the sword, and rests now on the belief that the same sword has lost nothing of its invincibility. For this reason, a reverse sustained by our army in India is likely to produce the most disastrous consequences; a victory is something more than a triumph on the field. A whole Empire, peopled by millions, to whom the number of Europeans who rule them is a most insignificant fraction, watches our progress; and broken up, and decayed, and worn out as the power of the native Princes undoubtedly is—weak as may be the spirit of nationality among the bulk of our Indian subjects, yet a series of disasters to our arms would be certainly followed by the revolt of the more warlike races of the peninsula, and its past history of incursions, battles, conquests, and massacres, the crushing down of the weak and peaceful by the strong and ferocious, would be acted over again. There are races in India who can fight and subdue; but the capacity of ruling they have not. It is the comparative quiet, security, and justice which the natives enjoy under our sway which constitute the other great element of our supremacy. There is much in the history of the earlier periods of our dominion in India that we could wish blotted out; but what we hope is now impossible with us—what we denounce as oppression, sordid avarice, and cruelty, is practised in all its enormity by the independent rulers of India; and the records of the Court of Lahore, with its extortions, mutilations, murders, the robberies that fill the treasury, the bribes that buy justice as a matter of course, would soon become again the system of government over all India. Humanity and civilisation in the East would be thrown back, perhaps for centuries, by the subversion or decay of the dominion of England. It is only by contemplating what might have been the probable effects of a defeat of the English arms in the last campaign that we can appreciate the immense importance of our victories.

The destruction, slaughter, and suffering of war are, in the abstract, terrible to contemplate; they are alike lamented by the wise and deplored by the merciful. It is only by considering the greater havoc, the wider slaughter, the deeper suffering that war prevents, that we can be brought to admit it as a necessity—a dreadful one indeed, but to be encountered for the sake of escaping the greater evils that would otherwise ensue. A surgical operation, with all its accompaniments of knives and incisions, flowing blood and intense physical pain, is frightful and ghastly enough to the individual; yet it must be encountered, on the penalty of the extinction of life, or dragging it out miserably through years of disease and pain. Happy are those who are never exposed to the dire alternative; happier still would it be for mankind if his frame were exempt from these fleshy ills. but it is not so, and we must accept life on the conditions upon which the Creator bestows it. Happy would it be for the nations if war could be blotted out of the list of possibilities; but we are as far from the state of perfection in our social and political constitutions, as in our physical natures. Religion, Law, Science, the Arts, Security—all that makes life worth prizing—would be held at the mercy of the first barbarous power that chose to trample under foot the excellence of a system they could not imitate.

Nations are no better, collectively, than the men who make them: the best are obliged to be on their guard against the worst. Between man and man there are laws, with force to carry them into effect: prisons, chains, fetters, and convict-ships are the weapons of defence used by the honest and peaceable, against rapine and violence. Between nation and nation there is no court of law; with few exceptions, the power of a nation is the exact measure of respect paid to it; and, as far as communities are concerned, History is full of illustrations of the poet's maxim, "to be weak is to be miserable." If all the world were really civilised, and truly Christian, war would not exist. Some time will come when this happier state of things will be realised; but that hour is not yet—and thus nations live in a state of mutual fear and suspicion, so that no small part of their wealth in fleets and armies, that they may enjoy the remainder in something like security. The weak, by a natural law, fall under the yoke of the strong; and the strong are not always wise nor merciful. When they are, the world may sleep unwatched by sentinels. The most quiet of men may be forced at any moment, by a ruffian, either into actual fight for self-defence, or into appealing to the law to defend him; so the most pacific of nations may be compelled to engage in a war, or to merge its existence in that of the aggressor.

KING LOUIS PHILIPPE RECEIVING THE OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD, AT THE TUILERIES, ON MAY 1.—(SEE PAGE 303.)

A calm review of the world as it now exists, proves that the means of waging war is still a necessity—we believe that opinion in so far advanced, that wars of aggression would be generally condemned; but the Treaty of Lahore shows that the campaign of the Sutlej cannot be so considered. We were attacked, and conquered—we took a large territory, and resign the most of it: this vanquished pray for the continuance among them of the English army, as a protection against the violence of their own troops; but so little anxious are we to keep up the appearance of victors, that it is only partly and for a time complied with. The rest of the conditions resolve themselves, in effect, into this:—Govern yourselves as you please, but do not molest us: some security is necessary that you will do this; but more than is necessary, we will not require. The stake that was risked on the result of the campaign was enormous; we won it—and India is secure, and in peace. In the hour of conquest, the temptation to exact all that can be conceded, is almost irresistible; but we have proved that we did not do battle for territory—that we gained, yet relinquish the greater part of it. It was not for treasure, for the less is taken as an indemnity than might have been asked. We fought for the integrity of our empire in India—which is something of greater importance than a mere question of frontiers and boundaries. That we have asserted, and with that we are content. It is the spirit of moderation and justice that enables us to rule such millions of men of a different race, language, and religion from ourselves, that gives its moral value to the Treaty of Lahore.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The report gains ground in Paris of the recall of a highly important personage—the Count d'Appony, the Austrian Ambassador, a nobleman who, through his exalted views, his dignified conduct, his noble hospitality, and the manner in which he has conducted himself in the many trials his country has had to undergo during his embassy at this Court, enjoys the highest esteem and popularity. It is the more extraordinary as Austria has not a clever diplomatist and statesman to spare. Prince Metternich is rapidly declining, and the state of the country, whose real Sovereign he is, shows his feeble sway, whilst his colleagues, Counts Kolkowrat and Figuelmont, are scarce less enfeebled by time. Louis Philippe employs his utmost efforts to keep the Count at his Court, and it is expected he will succeed

A subject which causes no less sensation here, in some quarters, is the number of suicides, and the suicides of females. It is now become a perfect fashion. The relatives manage to conceal most of the deaths of ladies of station in society, but still you daily hear of some case of the kind. It was only the day before yesterday that Mdlle. Augustine, a favourite actress, only twenty years of age, put an end to her existence—as they all do for a disappointment in love. If the affair were duly investigated, it would be found that France, contrary to general opinion, has always been a country remarkable for suicidal propensity, the most gifted men not free from it. Who does not remember the anecdote of the dinner of seven great literary characters at Baron Holbach's house? These gentlemen, despairing of spending a month or day so happily, had determined to commit suicide in company; and, of Mulbère, who was ill in bed, had not got up and prevented them, they would have effected their purpose.

He attempt on the King's life appears to have banished all idea of the Queen's journey to France, whilst the Ministerial papers are striving very wisely to prove that this attempt is only the result of a conspiracy, and the instigation of an irradicable evil spirit, fomented by the constant enemies of the State. It would be impossible for the King or the Government to urge a visit on the part of the Queen of England—at least to France—whilst a plan would involve the Sovereigns of both countries, through the opportunity thus afforded to assassins, to effect at one blow, so much evil. Internally, it is known that the late event has deeply shaken the spirits of the King, that most amiable and august lady, Queen Amelia, is con tantly on her knees, and is nightly wet in tears. However, from one of the visits just paid here by foreigners, the Government thinks to derive great benefit.

The marriage of Viscount Castlereagh with the Viscountess Powerscourt was solemnized on Saturday, at the British Embassy. The ceremony was performed in a private manner, there being present only the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, the Earl and Countess of Roden, and other limited circles of relatives of the noble pair. The newly-married couple have left Paris, to spend the honeymoon in Switzerland.

I have to mention the death of M. Pierre Lafitte, which took place a few days ago, at his residence, near Paris. M. Pierre Lafitte was the eldest and last of the four brothers, who, in different careers, have so worthily maintained the honour of their name, rendered so eminent by M. Jacques Lafitte. He was his brother's partner during the days of his prosperity and grandeur, and, like him, gave proofs of the highest intelligence and probity. Of this numerous family, the only surviving relative is a sister of the deceased, Madame Benoit Lafitte, who is nearly eighty years of age.

The Moniteur notifies, that letters of congratulation to the King, on his recent escape from assassination, have been presented to his Majesty by the representatives of the Sovereigns of Belgium, Sardinia, Saxony, Wurtemberg and Hanover, and by the Ministers of the Hanse Towns, Saxe Weimar, Electoral Hesse, and Hesse and Baden.

The Chamber of Deputies adopted, on Tuesday, the Western Railroad Bill, by a majority of 229 to 12.

SPAIN

Our intelligence from Galicia is of a more pacific character. The bulletin published at Corunna on the 24th April, before noticed, giving brief particulars of an engagement having taken place between the Queen's troops and the insurgents, was a correct version of the affair. Of the 62 officers taken in the previous engagement, 12 have been shot by order of Government within a league of Corunna. They were 10 captains and 2 commanders. The other 50 are kept close prisoners for the present, but it is supposed their lives will be spared. After the battle of Santiago, the two principal insurgent chiefs made their escape into Portugal in a Spanish man-of-war, which had been placed to blockade the coast, but afterwards pronounced against the Government. The battle was a sanguinary one; the Queen's troops lost 100 men, killed and wounded. The loss sustained by the rebels is not known. The insurrection may be considered at an end, in this part of Galicia, at least. At Vigo, Oviedo, and other towns, all persons professing liberal opinions have been ordered to quit Ruin twenty-four hours.

PORTUGAL

We find, by our latest accounts from Lisbon, that the insurrection in the province of Minho had been suppressed, but there had been several conflicts between the troops and the people without any decisive result. Much blood had been shed, and desperate badness, as well as remarkable order, and an appearance of discipline had been exhibited by the latter. Treason had been poured in from various parts upon Minho. The Government endeavoured to give this movement the character of a Miguelite conspiracy concocted by the Jesuits, and carried into effect by their agents.

THE UNITED STATES.

CLOSE OF THE DEBATE ON THE OREGON QUESTION.

By an arrival at Havre, the important news has been received from Washington of the conclusion of the debate on the Oregon question, which took place on the 16 h ult. The following is a report of the proceedings on that day:

The Senate Chamber and galleries were very much crowded this morning by persons anxious to see and hear the closing scene of this long-protracted debate, which has extended over nine weeks, and also to see to what results it would lead.

Mr Crittenden, of Kentucky, led off in a very able and eloquent speech, in support of the preamble and resolutions which he had offered, authorising the President to give the notice at his discretion.

Mr Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, moved the adoption, as a substitute, of the following preamble and resolution, which is the same as that offered by Mr. Crittenden, with the insertion of the word "amicable" before the word "settlement" at the conclusion of the preamble, and the omission of the following proviso at the end of the resolution—"Provided, however, that, in order to afford ample time and opportunity for the amicable settlement and adjustment of all their differences and disputes in respect to said territory, said notice ought not to be given until after the close of the present session of Congress."

"Whereas, by the convention concluded the 20th day of October, 1818, between the United States of America and the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the period of ten years, and afterwards indefinitely continued in force by another convention of the same parties, concluded the 6th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1827, it was agreed that any country that may be claimed by either party on the north-west coast of America westward of the Stony or Rocky Mountains, now commonly called the Oregon territory, should, together with its harbours, bays, and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be free and open to the vessels, citizens, and subjects of the two Powers, but without prejudice to any claim which either of the parties might have to any part of the said country, and whereas it has never become the duty of the second article of the said convention of the 6th of August, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, that either party might abrogate and annul said convention on giving due notice of twelve months to the other contracting party—

"And whereas it has now become desirable that the respective claims of the United States and Great Britain should be definitively settled, and that said territory may no longer than need be remain subject to the evil consequence of the divided allegiance of its American and British population, and of the confusion and conflict of national jurisdictions, dangerous to the cherished peace and good understanding of the two countries—

"With a view, therefore, that steps be taken for the abrogation of the said convention of the 6th of August, 1827, in the mode prescribed in its second article, and that the adoption of the Government of both countries may be the more earnestly and immediately directed to renewed efforts for the amicable settlement of all their differences and disputes in respect to the said territory—

"1. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby authorised, at his discretion, to give to the British Government the notice required by the said second article for the abrogation of the 6th of August, 1827." Mr. Allen moved to amend this substitute by striking out the second and third paragraphs of the preamble, and inserting an extract from the President's Message, commencing, "and whereas it has now become the duty of Congress," &c. Mr. Pennybacker, of Virginia, then rose, and spoke at some length, in explanation of his reason for opposing the substitute. The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Allen, it was decided in the negative. by a vote of—yeas, 22; nays, 32.

Mr. Allen moved to lay the resolution reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on the table, in order that the resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives might be taken up and acted upon; which was agreed to.

Mr. Breese, of Illinois, then moved to amend the substitute, by striking out the words "at his discretion" in the resolution. This motion being taken, the motion was decided in the negative by a vote of—yeas, 23; nays, 32. The question was then taken on the adoption of the substitute, and decided in the affirmative by a vote of yeas, 30; nays, 25.

Mr. Allen then spoke at some length in opposition to the resolution as thus modified, declaring his intention to vote against it even if he voted alone. Mr. Crittenden replied to Mr. Allen, who replied, and Mr. Crittenden re-rejoined in a strain of great severity towards Mr. Allen. The Committee of the whole having reported the amendment to the Senate—it was concurred in.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution to be engrossed and read a third time, which was decided in the affirmative by a vote of—Yeas, 40; Nays, 14.

So the Senate agreed by a majority of 26 out of 54 votes to adopt the resolution as amended, which will now have to be sent back to the House of Representatives for its concurrence.

It is said that the Senate will not act upon any measure of importance sent to it by the House, until that body has acted definitively upon the resolution of notice which the Senate passed.

The Tariff Bill, which has been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, is hardly expected to pass Congress this Session, or, perhaps, the next either.

INDIA.

THE PACIFICATION OF THE PUNJAUB.

The Overland Mail has arrived, with letters and newspapers: from Bombay, April 1; Cc ntta, March 20; Delhi, March 23; Madras, 26; and the Governor-General's camp, March 17. The intelligence is of the most satisfactory character The pacification of the Punjaub has been completed, and its Government settled on what promises to be a permanent basis. The Sikh army has been disbanded, and the whole of its artillery surrendered, and although it is to be partially reorganised, its numbers will be limited in future to 20,000 infantry and 12,000 cavalry. Our last advices communicated the terms of the treaty which had been agreed upon between the Governor-General and the Lahore Government; but circumstances have since arisen which have rendered its modification to a considerable extent imperative

The Delhi Gazette Extraordinary of the 23rd of March, contains several most important documents connected with the treaties which were framed for the pacification of the Punjaub. Some of these documents have been published.

The first and most important of them is the treaty of peace between the British Government and Dulleep Singh, which was signed in Feroze on the 9th inst. The territory south of the Sutlej, and also the hill country which lies between the Beas and the Sutlej, including the fresh cessions of Cashmere and Hazareh. The Maharajah is to pay 50 lacs (half a million sterling) on the ratification of the treaty, to disband all the mutinous troops of Lahore, and to keep 20,000 infantry and 12,000 cavalry and no more. The British armies are to be allowed to pass through the Lahore territories, and the six guns pointed against the British are to be surrendered, as in fact they have been. The control of the rivers Beas and Sutlej to the Indus is vested in the British. No European or American is to be employed by the Lahore Government without the consent of the British. Rajah Ghoolab Singh is to become an independent Sovereign in the territories which the British may cede to him. All changes in the frontiers of the Lahore State are prohibited, and all its disputes are to be referred to the British authorities, who are not to interfere in its internal administration.

The treaties remarkable in not naming the title Punjaub, or Five Rivers. The dominions of Dhuleep Singh are called the State.

Among the documents is a copy of the treaty entered into by the Governor-General (Sir Henry Hardinge) Maharajah Ghoolab Singh, to whom the British give over, in independent possession, all the hilly or mountainous country between the Ravee and the Indus, including of course the valley of Cashmere and the provinces of Hazareh and Cheeba, but excluding Lahool.

Ghoolab Singh is to pay half a million on the ratification of the treaty, and a quarter in October next, and is not to employ any foreigners. The British undertake to protect him against all foreign enemies: while he and all his forces are to be ready when called on to assist the British in any unknown quarter of British supremacy he engages every year to present a horse, twelve shawl goats, a d three pair of Cashmere shawls.

Thus the Jamoo Chief, who contrived to obtain possession of the greatest part of the treasures of old Runjeet, has been able to raise himself into the rank of an independent Maharajah. While he was Wuzeer of Lahore, he, in February last, promised to pay £1,500,000 to the British; but when the day of payment arrived, in March, the money was not forthcoming, and new treaties became necessary, by which the Lahore Government was deprived of the Kohistan (hill country), and Ghoolab or Gh ab (for his name is written both ways) having undertaken to pay half a million down, and another sum of a quarter million seven months after, was declared an independent Rajah (or rather Maharajah—great King), with the fa-famed valley of Cashmere at his disposal.

Intelligence from China, and Bombay, extends to the 27th February. It has already been anticipated. Trade was dull, and the prospects of the mercantile community in the East far from cheering.

BALLOON ASCENT AT ROME.—(From a Correspondent.)—A Balloon ascended from the Borghese Gardens on Tuesday afternoon, the 14th inst., and, it having been the first public ascent, the interest was excited; the number of the visitors admitted inside the Gardens being estimated at no less than forty thousand: this was at a charge of two pauls each, and five pauls is the extra. At about three o'clock the preparations for the balloon was inflated with hydrogen gas, made on the spot. All the preparations being completed by four o'clock the aëronaut, M. Arban, mounted the car, and, after being guided round the arena, distributing flowers and lilies among the crowd, he let go the ropes, and the balloon ascended in good style, amid the acclamations of the spectators, among whom the clergy and various orders of friars were rather conspicuous. The wind being at that moment in a favourable direction, and after rising to a considerable height, two parachutes were cast off. Nothing was heard of the descent of the balloon until the evening, when the aëronaut himself arrived in Rome: it appears that his descent in the neighbourhood of Civita Castellana, about fifty miles distant, on the road to Florence, after being up between two and three hours.

THE IRISH MEMBERS AND THE RAILWAY COMMITTEES.—Mr. Dillon Browne, it appears, seems inclined to share the fortunes of martyrdom with Mr. Smith O'Brien. Mr. Browne does not, indeed, refuse to serve upon Committees, but he has written a letter to Mr. Creed, the Secretary of the Committee of Selection, in which he says:—"I am advised by a friend, who is a Parliamentary agent, and I am neither an engineer, a lawyer, nor particularly well versed in the standing orders of the House, and other regulations, a conviction with which is imperative upon the promoters of railway schemes. Besides, if it should happen not to be an Irish railway of whose merits I am about to be made an unwilling and inefficient judge, great detriment may ensue to the public by the exclusion of some honourable member better acquainted with the locality, whose interests must necessarily be involved in the projected undertaking. However, if I be selected for a railway committee, I shall endeavour to discharge the duties required strictly and conscientiously, a course of proceeding likely to cause untoward and unforeseen delay; for, in the first place, in consequence of the inspitude of my mind to the business of railway committees, I shall deem it absolutely necessary to examine every witness produced before the committee, and take a full and copious note or each question and answer, in order to place the evidence before me in that consecutive shape which is required by the judge of the land, and which may guide me in coming to an equitable and just decision. In the second place, in consequence of my ignorance upon the subject matters likely to be involved in the consideration of railway bills, I shall also deem it necessary to examine counsel and authorities upon geology, geometry, mechanics, hydrostatics, parliamentary precedents, and the written and unwritten law of the land. I beg you will further inform the Committee of Selection, that during the sittings of the House of Commons I shall hold myself excused from attending any Committee whatever, as I have an undoubted right, in my capacity as one of the Knights of the Shire for the county of Mayo, to take part in all proceedings, and vote upon all questions brought under the consideration of the representatives of the people when assembled in the Commons House of Parliament—a privilege which the Crown itself could not interfere with without violating the first paradigm of the Constitution."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

THE RAILWAY DISSOLUTION BILL. The Earl of DALHOUSIE, on moving the reception of the report on the Railways Dissolution Bill, said it was his intention, in order to meet the objections of certain noble lords, to insert a clause enabling the minority against the dissolution of a company, to have the option of purchasing the plans and sections at a valuation to be made at their own cost. He could not, however, agree with the former proposition, of prohibiting persons who had become possessed of scrip since the 31st of March, from exercising the right of voting.—Earl GREY said that the bill would do great injustice to the minority, who were in the situation to carry on companies. He believed that since the introduction of the bill, parties had gone into the market for the express purpose of purchasing the dissolution of companies.—Lord BROUGHAM laid on the table a string of twenty-three resolutions respecting railway and private bill legislation, which were ordered to be printed, and the Earl of DALHOUSIE gave notice of an alteration in the Standing Orders, with respect to railway bills in progress.—The House adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—Mr. O'CONNELL withdrew the motion of which he had given notice, in consequence of the indisposition of Mr. W. S. O'Brien, stating that he so withdrew it at the request of Mr. O'Brien himself

LORD HARDINGE AND LORD GOUGH.

The House having resolved itself into Committee on her Majesty's gracious messages respecting the services of Lord Hardinge and Lord Gough,

Sir R. PEEL gave a short sketch of the glorious military career of those two noble Lords, concluding with a proposition that £3000 a year should be granted to Lord Hardinge for his own life and the lives of his two next male heirs; and also that a provision of £2000 a year should be made for Lord Gough and for his two next male heirs. As it was in the contemplation of the East India Company, however, to make a liberal provision for those two noble Lords for their lifetime, in that event, the provision which the House was about to make would not take effect until after their deaths

Lord D. STUART rose to congratulate the House the claims of Sir Henry Smith. The noble Lord said that the brilliant success of Sir Henry Smith at Aliwal was calculated to dismay the spirits of our enemies, and to spread a wholesome dread among insecure allies and barbarous foes, whilst the bodies of the defeated and the slain, floating down the stream of the Sutlej, proved an augury of evil and ruin to our enemies, and of future triumph to the British force. (Hear, hear.) He had scarcely fallen to the lot of any individual to close so long, distinguished and unostentatious a career as that of Sir H Smith, with an op ration so brilliant in its conduct and so important in its results. He felt deeply conscious of the inconvenience and embarrassment which might result to their discussions if gentlemen came forward in that House, for such an object as he had in view, moved by personal acquaintance, private regard, and friendship. Therefore he should not have presented himself to the notice of the House on the present occasion if he had known the claims of the gallant officer through any other medium than a wood-cut in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. His knowledge of Sir H. Smith was derived from the public records. He was aware that in pursuing this subject he was about to touch on delicate ground, but thus much he would say, that when a man had gone through a series of successful services, had had more successful battles and taken more towns than his imperfect recollection enabled him to enumerate, it was to that man's credit, and, above all, to the credit of the service, and of the country to which he belonged, that they should be able to say, as, indeed, generally was the case, that he was richer in honours than in wealth, and that no climate had been more fatal to his fortunes than it had been (Hear, hear, hear.) On the question more particularly under discussion, he felt it would be improper for him to say more than that he earnestly prayed that those two brave and deserving men (Lord Hardinge and Lord Gough) might long live to enjoy the honours they had earned. (Hear, hear, hear.) With respect to the Governor General of India, his long acquaintance with him caused the present proposal to afford him additional gratification (Hear, hear, hear.)

Lord J. RUSSELL would say a few words in support of the proposal of the Government, and considered Lord F. Egerton's suggestion as an interference with the prerogative of the Crown.

Mr. HOUR announced that it was the intention of the East India Company to bestow £2000 a year on Viscount Hardinge, and £1000 a year on Lord Gough, for their respective lives. This would be the first instance of a Commander-in-Chief receiving the grant of a pension from the Company whilst on active service. Mr. Hume could only understood that there existed no understanding between the East India Company and the Government respecting the peculiary rewards to be conferred on those gallant noblemen.

The Votes, as proposed by Sir R. Peel, were agreed to.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

On the question that the House should resolve into Committee on this Bill,

Lord G BENTINCK made another long speech in support of Protection, in which he protested against the Government having, in the middle of Parliament, altered the true Free Trade policy of Sir Robert Peel was finding imitators amongst the Continental nations; and quoted M Guizot, the wisest Minister of the wisest Sovereign who had ever ruled the destinies of France, to prove that in France, at least, the restrictive policy was likely to be maintained in its integrity. In conclusion, he moved, as an amendment, that the House should go into Committee on the Bill that day three months.

Sir R. PEEL reiterated the statements previously put forward by Government respecting the progress of famine in Ireland. That distress had been admitted by the Irish Members themselves, and it was partly to the temporary suspension of the duties upon the admission of foreign grain into the Irish ports. (This observation the House accepted with vehement cheers.) The recoil fell in the first instance upon the Irish Protectionists. The famine had created the true Free Trade policy of Sir Robert Peel was finding imitators amongst the Continental nations; and quoted M Guizot, the wisest Minister of the wisest Sovereign who had ever ruled the destinies of France, to prove that in France, at least, the restrictive policy was likely to be maintained in its integrity. In conclusion, he moved, as an amendment, that the House should go into Committee on the Bill that day three months.

Sir R. PEEL reiterated the statements previously put forward by Government respecting the progress of famine in Ireland. That distress had been admitted by the Irish Members themselves, and it was partly to the temporary suspension of the duties upon the admission of foreign grain into the Irish ports. (This observation the House accepted with vehement cheers.) The recoil fell in the first instance upon the Irish Protectionists. The famine had created the true ground for augmenting the supply of food in Ireland. The right hon. Baronet, after defending his policy generally, thus referred to his change of views in regard to the Navigation Laws:—"He never denied that which he had said at the outset, that those restrictions which he believed to be impolitic he now believed to be unjust (Cheers.) He was sorry that that conviction had not been inflicted in his mind at an earlier period (Loud cheers from the Protectionists.) Yes; the hon gentlemen who cheered might retain their impression; they had a perfect right to do so, and to act upon it. Their views might be more just than his; and it was their duty, even regarding the policy which he had said at the outset, that those restrictions which he believed to be impolitic he now believed to be unjust (Cheers.) He was sorry that that conviction had not been inflicted in his mind at an earlier period (Loud cheers from the Protectionists.) Yes; the hon gentlemen who cheered might retain their impression; they had a perfect right to do so, and to act upon it. Their views might be more just than his; and it was their duty, even regarding the policy which he had said at the outset, that those restrictions which he believed to be impolitic he now believed to be unjust. He was sorry that that conviction had not been inflicted in his mind at an earlier period; but he was not ashamed to avow his opinion, and not to persevere in defending restrictions which in his conscience he could not justify.

A debate ensued, in the course of which Sir R. PEEL defended the change of opinion of Sir R Peel as the natural result of reasoning upon the state of affairs in Ireland and this country. He contended that the aristocracy of this country could only be maintained by conceding to the just wishes of the people.

Mr DISRAELI, after some sarcastic allusions to Sir R. Peel's change of opinion, contended that the questions of reciprocity and hostile tariffs were still moot points amongst the most eminent statesmen of Europe.

The House then went into Committee without a division.

On the first clause, Lord G. BENTINCK moved that the Chairman report progress

A division ensued, on which his motion was defeated by a majority of 81 to 85.

After some further attempts at delay, it was agreed that the report should be brought up on Friday, and that the third reading should take place on Monday next

The House sat till a quarter past one.

HOUSE OF LORDS. TUESDAY.

HER MAJESTY'S MESSAGE.—The Earl of RIPON moved an address to her Majesty, in answer to her gracious message regarding the conferring of some pecuniary grants upon the late Royal Envoy and Viscount Hardinge and Lord Gough. The noble Earl recapitulated the services of the two gallant noblemen, and mentioned the amusing anecdote, that, when Lord Gough's son was asked what title his father would take, he replied that his father has always been called 'Old Gough,' and I do not think he would like to go to his grave under any other name."—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE passed a high eulogium on Viscount Hardinge and Lord Gough, and expressed his cordial approval of the object of the motion. He felt proud that he belonged to a service that in the East Indies, which had behaved so gloriously; and he felt assured that there was not a member of it, from the Field Marshal to the Ensign, who did not entertain the same feeling. The Duke of WELLINGTON, which echo of the address, was unanimously agreed to.

An interesting debate then took place upon Irish affairs.

The Railway Dissolution Bill was read a third time and passed, and the House adjourned at eight o'clock

HOUSE OF COMMONS. TUESDAY.

THE NEW MEMBER FOR THE FALKIRK DISTRICT OF BURGHS.—Lord Lincoln took the oaths and his seat for the Falkirk District of Burghs, amidst slight cheering.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

The House went into Committee on this Bill, without any obstruction or observation being offered.

Lord G. BENTINCK immediately rose, and moved the omission of "oats" from the schedule of duties, being of opinion that the admission of foreign oats duty free would be a serious injury to the Irish agriculturist. The noble Lord then entered into an elaborate review of the political conduct of Sir R Peel. He said, "he remembered the time when the right hon. Baronet denounced the heartless doctrines of the political economists, and when he apostrophised Mr. Huskisson as the only representative of the harsh, cold-blooded sect—one whose only and exclusive aim was the development of his own system—one wedded to his own theory, who would rejoice if the produce of foreign soil, aided by a wretched system of navigation laws, could reach, in our own markets, the product of our agriculture. Mr. Hume might be at that time the true likeness of a harsh, cold-blooded political economist; but might not a no less striking resemblance, to noble Lord then addressed the very member, be not found in the person of an eminent cacher of political economy sitting on the Treasury bench?

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said the effect of Lord G Bentinck's motion would be, that after the 1st of February, 1849, oats would be admitted without any duty at all

Lord G BENTINCK withdrew his amendment, and on the question that the clause s ould stand, moved the omission of the entire clause

After a short discussion the gallery was cleared for a division, but none took place, and the clause was agreed to. The other clauses were likewise agreed to, and the report was ordered to be brought up on Friday.

The Customs' Duties Bill also passed through Committee—Lord G. Bentinck having declined to take a discussion in that stage. The report was ordered to be received on Friday.

The report of the resolutions respecting Lords Hardinge and Gough was brought up, and the bill founded on them was read a first time.

The Polling Places (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The House adjourned at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met to-day at twelve, and sat till five.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL.—The order of the day for the House going into Committee upon the Roman Catholic Relief Bill having been read, Mr. COLQUHOUN moved, as an amendment, that the House should go into Committee on the Bill that day six months. After a long discussion, the House resolved, by 110 to 67, to go into Committee.—On the motion of Mr. WATSON, the greater portion of the first clause was struck out; and the hon. member then moved that the Chairman report progress, in order that the amendments he should propose might be printed. Mr. LAW objected to this proposal, and moved the omission of the first clause altogether, because he considered the bill to be of a most pernicious character, and viewed with unspeakable measures which emanated from the Opposition side of the House, and which received the countenance of the head of the Government.—Sir H. PEEL said he hoped the honourable and learned gentleman discharged his judicial functions with more temper and acuteness than he displayed on this occasion. He was only what was quite usual, and according to the common courtesy of the House, to allow Mr. Watson to amend his bill. The bill was now actually divided, and he (Sir R. Peel) meant to oppose that portion which remained, if he found it would amount to a repeal of the clauses of the Act of 1829; therefore, he had given Mr. Watson no particular advantage.—Mr. LAW said he had a right to complain of the insinuation thrown out by the Premier, without reason or justice, that his judicial duties were not discharged with temper and acuteness. As the right honourable Baronet had been talking of courtesy, he (Mr. LAW) could not help saying that the insinuation was most uncourteous and most unwarranted. He was a plain and learned Recorder, and withdrew his motion.—The CHANCELLOR reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Wednesday week.

The Corresponding Societies Bill was read a second time.

The Administration of Criminal Justice Bill passed through Committee.

The Election Returns Bill was also committed.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.—LOSS OCCASIONED BY THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL, and moved for some returns respecting the quantity of corn in bond. He wished their Lordships to have their eyes as open as to the results that were likely to flow from the question. There were returns, he (the Earl of Radnor) believed, which would enable their Lordships to pause before they sanctioned the measure.—Lord BROUGHAM said he had given notice of a bill upon the subject, which bill happily now would not be required. He had no opinion, any depression likely to arise from the measures alluded to by the noble Lord would only be temporary.—Earl FITZWILLIAM said it was now about four months since this measure was introduced into Parliament (hear), and it had been announced for two months previously, so that the farmers had been almost six months' knowledge of it, and, under the circumstances, no merchant in his senses would take a single quarter of corn out of bond.—The Duke of RICHMOND would not believe that the measure could pass. At all events, the farmers had gained something by the delay; for, if an immense quantity of corn had come in, no doubt the price of corn would have been much lowered.—Lord BROUGHAM did not believe the measure was settled, but he would recommend people to act as if it were settled. (A laugh.)—Lord GREY did not say that one wheat of the last harvest was so bad, that the want of foreign wheat was urgently felt. Lord RADNOR expressed a hope that the measure would be before their Lordships next week.—The returns were then ordered.

The Railway Deposits Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Friendly Societies Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday.

Lord REDESDALE moved that no Select Committee should be appointed to consider an opposed Railway Bill, after Monday, the 20th of July.—The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE NELSON MONUMENT.—Mr J. COLLETT wished to know from the noble Lord lately at the head of the Woods and Forests (Lord Lincoln), if he would communicate to the House the present state of the Nelson Monument.—Lord LINCOLN said that the subject had been placed in the hands of four artists, and that was the subject last been mentioned in the House, he had expected that by this time greater progress would have been made by them. For the last two or three months, he had not been able to pay any attention to the subject, and he regretted that he could not give any satisfactory answer to the question put.

Mr. WATSON then moved for a "Select Committee to inquire into the nature and extent of the taxation of suitors by the collection of fees in the Courts of Law and Equity, and the application of such fees."—After a long debate, a division took place. The numbers were—

For the Committee	..	..	..	..	..	65
Against it	..	..	..	..	..	80
Majority against the Committee	..	..	..	..	..	—15

Adjourned at a Quarter to Eleven.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

TWO CHILDREN DROWNED BY THEIR MOTHER.

Last Saturday afternoon, a woman named Clark, drowned two of her children at Battersea-bridge. She was seen to go on to Battersea-bridge from the Chelsea side, accompanied by three children; one, a boy, about seven years of age; a girl, about four years of age; and an infant in arms, also a girl, about twelve months old. When she got to the middle of the bridge, she walked to and fro a few yards in a hurried manner, and then threw the children one after the other over the railings into the river, and was getting over the balustrades herself when she was prevented doing so by the passers-by, who secured her, and gave her into custody. At the station-house, she stated her name to be Eliza Clark; her age, twenty-four years; that she was the wife of William Clark, a journeyman painter, living at No. 7, Cumberland-street, Marlborough-road, Chelsea; and that the children were her own.

During the time occupied by the above proceedings attempts were being made on the river to save the unfortunate children, which were successful in one instance, that of the second child (a girl, four years old), who was rescued by a waterman named Hall, and conveyed to the Surrey side of Battersea-bridge, where it received every attention that its exhausted state demanded, and is recovering. The infant child was also promptly got out, but its life was quite extinct, and the body was carried to the Adam and Eve public-house, in Duke-street, Chelsea.

An inquest was held upon this child on Monday, at the Adam and Eve, Chelsea. The husband was present, and was examined by Mr. Wakley, the Coroner. He stated that his wife had attempted to poison herself about a month after she had her first child.

The first witness was James Perryman, the pot-boy at the Adam and Eve. He said: About three o'clock on Saturday last I heard a splash in the water, which called my attention to the bridge. I then saw a child thrown over the bridge, and almost immediately another. I threw a woman on the bridge. I ran in and told my master, who immediately put off a boat to their assistance.

Jesse Hattam said he was crossing the bridge at about three o'clock on Saturday last, when his attention was diverted to a woman who was standing on the side of the bridge to the river. I said to her, "My good woman, what are you going to do?" She said, pointing to the water, "Look, there are my children." She then took hold of the railing of the bridge, and threw herself over.

The Coroner, after stating to the Jury that it would be necessary to have the body of the deceased opened to ascertain the precise cause of death, adjourned the inquiry for a week.

When the woman was examined on Saturday at Westminster Police Court, and was asked what had induced her to drown the children, she said "Distress; she thought she had better see her children go before her."

Mr. Burrell asked the prisoner whether she wished to say anything.

Prisoner looked eagerly around her, and said, in a low tone: He said "Good bye," when he went out this morning; he has not said so for a long time before. He entered his flat in my face when he went out, and said, "I'll come home thundering drunk, and I'll be hung for you." He broke the panel of the door by kicking my hand against it.

Mr. Burrell: Have you anything to say to drowning your children?

Prisoner (incoherently): Suppose I had died, my poor children would be starved to death. It's a hard struggle now to get them a bit of bread. I have done all I could.

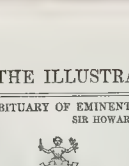
Mr. Burrell remanded the prisoner until Wednesday.

ACCIDENT TO THE DOVER MAIL TRAIN.—A serious accident occurred on Sunday night to the Dover down mail train, which leaves London-bridge at half past eight o'clock, and which, when going at the rate of about fifteen miles an hour, ran into an engine which was on its way to the New-cross station from London-bridge. This engine had become disabled, and was at a stand still; and the proper signals were given in consequence to stop the mail train which followed it. These signals were not observed by the engine-driver of the mail train. He was so surrounded by the steam, which he was blowing off, that he did not see the first signal that was made. The engine-driver of the disabled engine seeing that the signals were disregarded, ran forward with a light, to stop the mail train; and this was of some use, and the speed was slackened. The place of collision was between the junction of Greenwich and Bricklayers' Arms Railway with the Croydon. The stoker of the mail train engine had one of his legs very much crushed between the engine and tender. The engine-driver fortunately escaped. The mail train, and those passengers who did not require to remain in town, were forwarded to Dover by another special train at ten o'clock.

CURIOUS SUICIDE ON THE SHEFFIELD AND MANCHESTER RAILWAY.—On Monday night, there occurred a self-destruction took place on the Sheffield and Manchester Railway. On the forenoon of the above day a man named Richard Crooks, fifty-seven years of age, a widower with six children, residing in Castle street, Newton, left his family after eating a hearty breakfast. He was missed had been absent about two hours, when he was carried home a mangled corpse. He was seen between ten and eleven o'clock by several persons standing on a bridge crossing the above line of railway at Flowery Field, and, while there, he asked a woman, who happened to be passing, how long it would be before the next train came up. He remained on the bridge until the arrival of the eleven o'clock train from Manchester; and when it came in sight, he was noticed by two plate-layers, who were working a short distance off, to walk deliberately down the embankment at the end of the bridge, and lay himself down across the rails along which the train would pass. The engineer observed the deceased lying on the rails, but was unable at that time to stop the train; the result was, that he was literally cut to pieces. The train was stopped immediately, and a number of passengers going to the spot, found him dead.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

SIR HOWARD ELPHINSTONE, BART.



Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., of Sowerby, in Cumberland, Major-General in the Army, Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Engineers, and a Companion of the Bath, died at his residence, Ore Place, near Hastings, Sussex, on the 30th ult. At the period of his decease, he had completed the 73rd year of his age, and the 53rd of his Military service. He entered the Engineers in 1793, and, after passing through the various gradations, attained the rank of Major-General in 1837. His career included some of the most brilliant achievements of the British arms. In 1795, he was at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope; in 1801, served, as Commanding Engineer, in Sir David Baird's army in Egypt; and in 1808, having proceeded with Sir Arthur Wellesley to Portugal, fought at Roleia, and was severely wounded. In 1810, he was attached to the forces in Spain; and thence-forward shared in all the glory of the Peninsular campaigns, acting as Commanding Engineer at the passage of the Adour, the blockade of Bayonne, and the repulse of the Sortie; and receiving a medal and two clasps for his gallantry at Roleia, Nivelle, and Nive.

Sir Howard's father, the late Captain John Elphinstone, held the rank of Admiral in the Russian service, and commanded the fleet of the Czar at the battle of Tchesme, wherein the British officer succeeded in destroying his Turkish opponents. He was son of John Elphinstone, Esq., of the Royal Navy, and descended, in a direct line, from the Hon. John Elphinstone, second son of the third Lord Elphinstone, and elder brother of Sir James Elphinstone, the celebrated Lord Balmerino, whose representative, Arthur, last Lord Balmerino, the staunch but ill-fated adherent of the Stuarts, joined the risings of '15 and '45, and was executed in 1746.

The respected Baronet, whose death we record, possessed considerable property in Cumberland as well as Sussex. He married, in 1803, his cousin, Frances, eldest daughter of John Warburton, Esq., and has left, with three daughters, Frances, wife of Wm. Masters Smith, Esq., of Camer; Harriet; and Louisa, married to Major Robert Anstruther; one son, the present Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., M.P. for Lewes.

LADY SHEE.

Mary, wife of Sir Martin Archer Shee, the President of the Royal Academy, died on the 4th inst., at Brighton, after a few days illness. Her Ladyship, the eldest daughter of James Power, Esq., of Youghal, married in 1797, and has left, with three daughters, as many sons, one of whom is a Chancery barrister, and another the manager of a bank at Manchester; the latter is married to one of the daughters of Sir Joseph de Trafford, Bart. Our readers may probably recollect, that we announced a short time since that a pension of £300 per annum had been conferred on Lady Shee.

MRS FORSTER, OF NEWCASTLE.

Died on the 17th ult., in the 72nd year of her age, Mary, widow of Joseph Forster, Esq., of Seaton Burn; only daughter and heiress of the late Mr. Henry Scott, of Newcastle, and niece of the Lords Stowell and Eldon—a lady eminently distinguished by her virtues, her usefulness, and the unostentatious simplicity of her life. Mrs. Forster enjoyed the especial favour of her distinguished uncles, and was one of their most constant correspondents. Her death will be deeply lamented.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF SIR JOHN ROSS.—In the BANKRUPTCY Court, on Wednesday, Sir John Ross, the celebrated Arctic navigator, whose case has been so often before the Court, attended for the purpose of obtaining his certificate. It will be recollected that the cause which led to those proceedings being adjourned from time to time was that none of the creditors could be persuaded to act as the assignee. This difficulty was at length obviated by Mr. Gillott, of the Strand, accepting the books, and who now stated to his Honour that none of the creditors intended to offer any opposition to Sir John Ross having his certificate; on which his Honour expressed his gratification in being enabled to grant it. Sir John Ross, who was in attendance, then retired. The gallant navigator will immediately leave England, for the purpose of resuming his duties as the British Consul at Stockholm, from which he was, while before the Court, suspended, as it was necessary he should be in this country until he had passed the various examinations and audit of his accounts.

POLICE.

THE WOMAN CHARGED WITH DROWNING HER CHILDREN.

In page 308 we have given an account of the drowning of two children by their mother, Eliza Clark, on Saturday last. The prisoner was examined on Wednesday at WESTMINSTER Police Court. On her being brought into court, her husband, who was fined at that court on Monday for drunkenness, was standing at the end of the dock, and as she ascended the steps leading to it she caught a glimpse of him, and her countenance, before serene, assumed an expression of horror, and she sank on the seat. The magistrate ordered that the husband should leave the court.

Perryman, the potboy, examined on a former occasion, now stated, on looking at the prisoner, that he was certain she was the person who threw the children into the water.

Mr. T. W. Wansbrough, surgeon, King's-road, Chelsea, described the means adopted to resuscitate the child that was taken out of the water, and gave it as his opinion, that although there was a wound on its forehead, received probably in falling, the infant had died by drowning. Mr. Wansbrough was anxious to make a statement with regard to the unsound state of the female's mind, but

Mr. Burrell was of opinion that he had no right to hear any medical evidence excepting that relating to the cause of death.

Richard Champ, of 13, Wellington-street, Chelsea, uncle to the accused, was then put into the box, and said—The child I saw dead on Saturday at the Adam and Eve was my niece's. She had three children residing with her at home; two of these were her own; the third was a child of her husband's by a former wife. I saw them betwixt two and three o'clock on Saturday. The prisoner called at my house at that time to see her children, and remained until nearly three o'clock. She spoke of her husband having ill-treated her. She appeared very well in her mind.

Mr. Taylor: Did you find any letter left at your house?—Witness: Yes; I found a letter left on my bed.

Mr. Taylor: Have you ever seen her write?—Witness: No, but I have seen her writing. I have had documents from her.

Mr. Thomas Bocknell, superintendent of the V division, produced the letter, which he had received from last witness. It was written in so bad a hand, and so ink-stelt, that it was accordingly difficult to read; it ran as follows—

"I the Clark wife of James Richard Clark. Now, my Jeemmy, you need not trouble me with any more of your threats, because I don't mind, and hope that the next wife you get you'll know how to use them, and not act as I have done to them, and you have to me, and will be going on the morning and come home at night and knock my head the night before and the door, and break my rest the which of late right, and swear in the street that you will not come home drums at night and kill me, and I'd rather prefer seeing my children go before me, and then I shall know they did not starve.

On the back of the letter was written, "And if you go to Battersea-bridge, you will find the children there," and it was addressed to her uncle Champ.

Prisoner's former statement, which was given on Monday, having been read, she was asked whether she wished to add to it, and she replied in the affirmative.

Prisoner then said, in a low, subdued tone of voice, "We were married in 1841, and my husband has been frequently out of work, and we have seen a great deal of distress. In the first year, he was thirteen weeks out of work at one time, and when my Emma was a baby, we were so badly off, that I was obliged to go to service, and had half-a-crown a week, which he got when he got work; I sent home again. In the next year he was out of work four months, and I have many a night wrapped my poor child under my shawl, and gone out into the streets and begged to support us. He has been out of work for two months this year, and last week I took off my flannel petticoat and pawned it to support my family, and I was obliged to sell the remaining little rags of clothing belonging to myself and children, on Saturday. Those are the poor little creatures dead, and then we had nothing left but the things we stood upright in."

Mr. Taylor: Have you anything to say in answer to the charge against you?—Prisoner: He was a good husband when he was sober, but, like other men, when drunk was violent. He was a good husband and a good father when sober.

Prisoner was then fully committed to Newgate for trial. She faintly walked out of the dock, looking vacantly around her.

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.—A great many Railway Groups have assembled during the week, but the proceedings have possessed but little interest, and few decisions have been given. On Thursday, in Group 3A, the Committee decided that the preamble of the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston bad been proved. In Group 7, on the same day, the Committee decided that the preamble of the Stirling and Dunfermline Bill had been proved. The last Bill in Group 8 has been decided upon—the Forth and Clyde Junction, the preamble of which was declared to be proved.

LITERARY SOCIETY IN WESTMORELAND.—In the Town-Hall, Appleby, on the last in-stant, at a public meeting of the Literary Society, lately established here, the audience were greatly astonished by a powerful burst of oratory displayed by Mr. Close (a rural author and protegé of the Right Hon. Baron Parke) on behalf of the society, as deputation from the parent society in Kirkby Stephen.

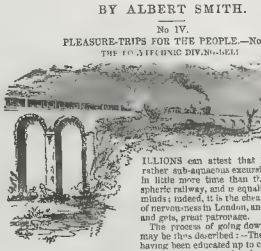
TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. IV.

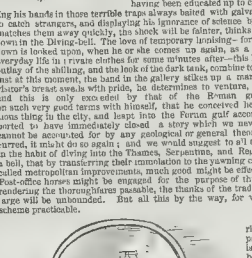
PLEASURE-TRIPS FOR THE PEOPLE.—No. II.

THE POLYTECHNIC DIVING-BELL.

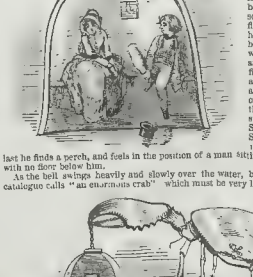


ILLIONS can attest that his submarine, or rather sub-aqueous excursion, is accomplished in little more time than the trip on the atmospheric railway, and is equally terrific to weak minds; indeed, it is the cheapest shilling's-worth of nervousness in London, and, as such, suits boys and girls, great patronage.

The process of going down in the Diving bell may be thus described:—The daring adventurer, having been educated up to courage pitch by putting his hands in those terrible traps always baited with galvanism which are set to catch strangers, and displaying his ignorance of science by thinking that if he snatches them away quickly, the shock will be fainter, thinks he should like to go down in the Diving-bell. The love of temporary insulting—for everybody who goes down is looked upon, when he or she comes up again, as a sort of mermaid of everyday life in private clothes for some minutes after—this love says "Go!" the outlay of the shilling, and the look of the dark tank, combine to suggest "Don't!" But just at this moment, the band in the gallery strikes up a martial air, and, as the visitor's breast swells with pride, he determines to venture, in his enthusiasm; and this is only exceeded by that of the Roman gentleman who was on such very good terms with himself, that he conceived he was the most precious thing in the city, and leapt into the Forum gulf accordingly, which is reported to have immediately closed a story which we never believed, since it cannot be accounted for by any geological or general theories. If a really occurred, it might do so again; and we would suggest to all those people who are in the habit of diving into the Thames, Serpentine, and Regent's Canal, without a bell, that they transferring their immolation to the yawning chasms in the streets, called metropolitan improvements, much good might be effected. A few of the Post-office horses might be engaged for the purpose of this devotion; and by rendering the thoroughfares passable, the thanks of the travelling public at large will be unbounded. But all this by the way, for we do not think the scheme practicable.



Well, the visitor arrives at the barrier, pays his shilling, and is told to get into the bell. But this is not so easily done: the first thing that strikes him on entering is the boot of a gentleman who is already seated; and then he has to fight his way through a cluckade of legs, with a vigour never needed otherwise except on the last train at the single omnibus, on the Sunday night, at the Son-in-Western terminus. However, at last he finds a perch, and feels in the position of a man sitting on a mantelpiece, with no floor below.



As the bell swings heavily and slowly over the water, by means of what the catalogue calls "an enormous crab" which must be very large indeed, but does not appear to be visible to the audience—the visitor looks through the glass bulls eyes at the people in the gallery, and half wishes he was amongst them. And just at this moment a terrible noise begins, which sounds like the aforesaid enormous crab breathing; and a blast of cold air rushes down from the top, more dreadful than any ever produced either by air-pumps generally, or Dr Reid in particular. And as the bell sinks into the water, the visitor feels as if somebody was tuning the drums of his ears by stretching them tight; and thinking that he is going to be stifled, he seizes the knocker, under which is painted "more air, knock once," and gives such a "rat-a-tat-tat-tat," that the whole tank quivers again. But the divers think he is "larking," and pay no attention to him; and then he gives himself up to intense fear as the water rises over his head, and finally closes over the skylights. So he remains, only too well to himself by finding that his feet are wet through by hanging down below the bell's mouth, whereon he gathers them up, to the additional peril of his balance.

At last the bell goes up again, and he finds himself amidst the surrounding and admiring crowd. As he walks proud away amongst them, he feels all his agony repaid, and tells the lady who asks him what it was like, that "it was the most delightful thing in the world—not at all unpleasant, but, on the contrary, rather agreeable than otherwise."

RAILWAY FINE ARTS.

An artist politely sends us the following letter —

"SIR,—You deserve the thanks of my brethren for so liberally pointing out to them the best line for them to take up. Your plan is being already acted upon, and the exhibitions of 1846 will abound in Railway Subjects.

"Edwin Landseer's 'Sanctuary' will be a fine picture. I am enabled to send you a sketch of it. His heart, which has been for some time in the Highlands will return to the south, and the picture will represent a 'Stag' (Cervus Railwayensis) crossing to the Sanctuary, Boulogne—his hills, or kites, as they are by some called, being given to the winds.

"Mr. Frith has been chosen by the Art-Union to do a set of outlines, companions to his 'Pilgrim's Progress.' The first, 'The Slough of Despond,' represents the Slough Station, with the distress of the visitor, who has arrived too late for the last up-train. Another will be 'Mr Greenheart Bowel Conquering the Giant Broadgauge,' and so on. Charles Landseer promises 'The Seeking of Cremorne House, by the Engineers of the Chelsea Extension,' which followed the unofficial map of the Committee of the Commons, in which that mansion was found to be exactly on the intended line. Corbaux has a charming work in hand—'Canterbury Pilgrims Preparing to Start from London-bridge Terminus.' The Knights of the Square have arrived in cabs, the Man of Law in an omnibus, and the Clerk has walked. The Shipman has arrived from Wapping by the Watermen No. 9. The respectable tradesman's wife of Bath has had her luggage wheeled over from the Blue-Boar Hotel, where she slept the night before, on arriving by the Great Western. She is going to a Ramsgate boarding-house. We do not exactly see who the Pardoner is, but conclude he is the philanthropic old gentleman who has just forgiven the uncle who tried to bolt with his carpet bag. The Cook is in attendance, with a tin can containing kidney pies. The engraving will be a prize in Boys' Intelligence.

"I may, perhaps, be enabled to forward you some more sketches shortly, meanwhile, allow me to be,

"Yours, obediently,

"BAPTISTE, JUN.

"P.S. Etty's 'Sinners Bathing' is not yet commenced. Our foreign brethren will join our scheme. Horace Vernet has promised 'The Locomotive's Last Gasp'—a companion to the 'Dying Camel;' and Scheffer sends two, 'Mignon regretting she did not take a Day Ticket,' and, 'Mignon aspiring to a First-class Carriage.'"

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—It appears that Vauxhall Gardens are to be opened on Whit Monday, the 1st of June, under the same spirited management as formerly. We hear that many novelties and attractions are in preparation. The company likely to be wanting is fine weather.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN, M.P., IN CUSTODY AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

PASSAGE TO THE PEERS' ENTRANCE.

We stated last week that Mr. Smith O'Brien had been taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms, in pursuance of the order of the House. The friends of the hon. gentleman have since called upon him daily, to make inquiries and leave their cards, at his temporary residence in Old Palace-yard. The rooms in which Mr. O'Brien is imprisoned are half-way between the entrance to the Houses of Lords and Commons. The door leading to these apartments is the second door on the left (there being no door on the right) after passing the entrance to the House of Commons, and entering within the hoarding which runs from the House of Commons to the House of Lords. The rooms are on the ground floor, and may be known by the iron railing outside the windows. There are two windows so railed: the first is the window of a room through which one must pass to enter Mr. O'Brien's room. His room is of small dimensions, and furnished neatly but scantily. It contains a folding-bed, a table, a few chairs, a wash hand-stand, and fender and fire-irons, and is laid with cocoa-fibre matting.

THE ANTE-ROOM.

We have engraved the two interior, the one serving as an ante-room, in which Mr. O'Brien usually receives his visitors. The walls of both apartments are coloured in imitation of granite. We have, also, engraved the exterior of the premises. The perfect erection on the left is a portion of Dr. Reid's apparatus. Next, on the first floor, are the windows of apartments of the Chaplain; secondly, of the Sergeant-at-Arms; next, of the Speaker's Secretary; and fourthly, of the Speaker's room. The next wooden building is the South Lobby of the House of Commons: next is a battlemented portion of the entrance to the House of Lords; and, on the right, is the hoarding dividing the passage from Old Palace Yard.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN'S ROOM.

On Thursday evening (last week), while the House was deliberating on Mr. O'Brien's case, the hon. member remained standing at the library door, in a state of great excitement, frequently clasping his hands together in a very agitated manner.

The hon. member is locked in his room at night, and one of the messengers is stationed outside, to attend on him. He cannot be permitted to leave the precincts of his prison without the leave of the House, except on Sunday, when he was allowed to go to chapel, in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Whilst before the Committee of the House of Lords the other day, the hon. gentleman was attended.

There are very often numbers of loiterers about Palace-yard, who are anxious to catch a glimpse of Mr. Smith O'Brien.

It is said that Mr. O'Brien persists in his determination to live upon the simplest food. He still declares that he will not pay the fees, which are considerable in amount, as much as £20 per day, it is stated. Unless these fees should be paid, the hon. Member can be kept in custody until the expiration of the present Parliament. Upon a former occasion, Lord Cardigan, when in the custody of a Messenger of the House of Lords, refused to pay the fees, which amounted to some thousand pounds, but we believe a compromise was made.

More than usual interest was excited at the meeting of the Repeal Association, at Dublin, on Monday, because it was expected that something would be said about Mr. Smith O'Brien. William Germon, Esq., having been called to the chair, proceeded to allude to that gentleman. With regard to the present position of the hon. member for Limerick (caused by his refusal to serve on English railway committees), he remarked that to a spirit less dauntless—to a disposition less magnanimous—the circumstances in which Mr. O'Brien was placed might be really distressing, really painful; but the case was the reverse as regarded him. (The entire meeting here rose, and continued cheering for several minutes.) The Chairman then passed a glowing eulogium on the political conduct of Mr. O'Brien, and recounted the various services which he had rendered to the cause of his country, which was loudly cheered.

A long letter was then read from Mr. O'Connell, in which he passed a strong panegyric upon Mr. Collett, the member for Athlone, who had become a member of the Repeal Association, and had sent twenty guineas as his subscription. The letter then referred to Mr. Smith O'Brien in these terms:—"Everybody must admire the manly bearing of our illustrious fellow-labourer, Smith O'Brien. Having convinced himself that there is a great principle involved in his controversy with the Committee of the House of Commons, there can be no doubt that he never will consent to any course that would, in the slightest degree, tarnish his high descent and patriotic virtues. Indeed, his country has a deep interest in the preservation of his high fame and honour, and that country must already have the consolation of knowing that such fame and honour are quite safe in his custody. If nothing untoward happens, I confidently expect that Mr. Smith O'Brien's constituents and country will have the full, undiminished, and unmitigated benefit of his eminent services in opposing the further progress of the absurd but atrocious Coercion Bill."

The rest of the letter was devoted to strictures upon this bill.

The following Resolution relative to Mr. Smith O'Brien was passed with considerable enthusiasm: "Resolved—That having learned with deep regret that, by a resolution of the House of Commons, the country has been deprived of the eminent services of Wm Smith O'Brien, and that illustrious member of this Association himself committed to a prison, we cannot allow this opportunity to pass without conveying to him the assurance of our undiminished confidence in his integrity, patriotism, and personal courage, and our admiration for the high sense of duty and purity of purpose which prompted him to risk his personal liberty in assertion of a principle which he believed to be inherent in the constitution of his country."

The rent for the week was declared to be £163 9s. 4d.

Mr. Smith O'Brien has addressed a letter, dated May 3, Prison of the House of Commons, to the inhabitants of the county of Limerick, and of which the following are the most essential passages:—"The question now at issue between the House and me is, whether the House has a right to impose upon me duties, the performance of which is incompatible with other duties which my constituents consider to be of paramount obligation. In addressing you, at least, it is not necessary that I should say that I have not refused to serve on Railway Committees from any disposition to shrink from the performance of public duty. You know that for many years nearly the whole of my time, from the moment at which I rise in the morning until I lay my head on my pillow at night, has been devoted to labours which, however ineffectual they may have been, have had for their object the advancement of human happiness, and especially the welfare of my native land. Neither is it necessary that I should refute the contemptible insinuation, which, during my absence, and when I was unable to reply to it, was lately uttered by more than one English member—that I had taken the course which has consigned me to a prison from a desire to obtain the bad notoriety of a pseudo-martyr. I entertain the most perfect confidence that you will appreciate the true motives under which I have acted. If I shall have the satisfaction of learning that you approve of my conduct, I shall cheerfully endure the utmost penalties which a tyrant Legislature can inflict—prouder and happier in my cell, than if I inhabited a palace. If, on the contrary, I shall find that my conduct is disapproved and disavowed by you, I shall resign my seat and abide the course of events, trusting that a time will yet arrive when a nobler generation will be prepared to give effect to that high purpose which has been proclaimed as the will and resolve of the Irish nation."

A meeting of the friends of Mr. William Smith O'Brien was held last Sunday, in Limerick, at which the Rev. Mr. Darcy, P.P., Mungret, presided, when a resolution was passed, calling a preparatory meeting of Mr. O'Brien's constituents and sympathisers, to be held at the Commercial Buildings, on Wednesday.

Yesterday week, Mr. E. B. Roche read a letter from Mr. Smith O'Brien to himself, to the effect that that hon. gentleman was sorry he had not an opportunity of making an explanation on the previous day. Mr. O'Brien also complained that only a portion of his correspondence with the Committee of Selection had been read. The letter concluded by earnestly disclaiming the idea that Mr. O'Brien was a party to any motion for his discharge.

In pursuance of the permission given by the House of Commons on Thursday night (last week), Mr Smith O'Brien was on Friday allowed to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords on the Poor laws. Mr. O'Brien was under examination for some time, but the proceedings are private. It should be understood that Mr. O'Brien is not kept in close confinement. He has usually walked daily for some time, close to his apartment, in company with some of his friends. On Thursday afternoon he was sitting at his door reading, so that every person who passed to and from the House of Lords, or to the Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons, could see him.

FESTIVITIES AT BURGHLEY.

BURGHLEY HOUSE, NORTH FRONT.

CHILDREN GOING TO THE TENT.

[illegible] domain of Burg[illegible] [illegible], in the [illegible] [illegible] son of the Mar[illegible]

This [illegible] in many respects from the fêtes on the Visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert to Burghley, in 1844, which were extensively illustrated in our pages. That was a visit of regal state, recalling many of the brightest glories of the age in which the splendid mansion was erected; and showing the sumptuousness of its appointments with honour to the loyal and noble owner, and high satisfaction to the illustrious personages thus splendidly entertained. The fêtes just terminated were, altogether, of another class: they were for "the people," in the most extensive sense of the phrase. By Lord Exeter's express wish, no party or class distinctions were allowed to stand in the way of a general rejoicing for the neighbourhood: all were "bidden to the feast" who were in the most remote degree connected with the estate; and the poor of the district were furnished with the means of being glad, as well as their neighbours in better circumstances.

The programme of the entertainments included a Grand Dinner to the Tenants, in a tent on the north lawn at Burghley; and for their wives, eldest sons, and daughters, a Ball at the Assembly-rooms, Stamford.

[illegible] the amusement of those who did not come under that character, Mr Charles Green, the veteran aëronaut, was engaged to ascend in his balloon from the [illegible]. The cottage tenants had an allowance of beef, bread, and beer; and all the poor people of Stamford and the neighbouring parishes were supplied with a gratuity according to the extent of their families. The distribution [illegible] to the [illegible] tenants was [illegible] of beef, the same quantity of bread, and a [illegible] among [illegible].

For the [illegible] gratuities in Stamford, there were 2,000 applicants. The noble Marquis also forwarded [illegible] money to the clergy of each parish where his Lordship has property, for the reverend gentlemen to dispose of as they thought best amongst those of their parishioners who were not tenants of the Marquis. The inmates of the Stamford Union were, by the request of the Marquis, regaled with roast beef, plum pudding, ale, tea, buns, &c.; the bedesmen in Lord Burghley's Hospital, in St. Martin's, were also supplied with a substantial dinner.

THURSDAY.

The morning was saluted by the Burghley guns, and the bells of Stamford and neighbouring villages; flags and banners waved from steeples and house-tops; and as the day advanced, the streets of Stamford were thronged with visitors, for here it was a general holiday.

At Burghley, the park was thronged at an early hour; and the preparations for dining upwards of 700 persons, caused great animation and bustle.

TAPPING THE BURGHLEY VAT.

THE MARCHIONESS OF EXETER AND FAMILY RECEIVING THE CHILDREN.

The Marquis's of Exeter, Lord Burghley, and the family circle, arrived from London and Newmarket on the previous day, accompanied by a few visitors, including the Earl and Countess Spencer, Lord Thomas and Lady Sophia Cecil, Mr and Mrs. Collins, &c. The house company was not very extensive, the occasion being deemed more an introduction of Lord Burghley to the tenantry than a celebration among the nobility

One of the incidents connected with the festivity was the broaching of an immense barrel of ale, holding 1122 gallons, which was brewed in the year Lord Burghley was born. About eleven o'clock, the ceremony of tapping this huge vessel was performed by his noble Lord, in the presence of the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Lord and Lady Spencer, and Thomas and Lady Sophia Cecil, Lord Brownlow, Henry, and Edward Cecil, Lady Mary Cecil, Thomas Walford, Esq., Mr and Mrs. Collins, &c. Lord Burghley's health was drunk with a shout, and Lord Burghley's health was drunk with many congratulations. Our artist has sketched this truly interesting scene.

Meanwhile, the tenants were on their way to Burghley to dinner, amid the ringing of the bells of six churches. The dinner was prepared in an immense pavilion, manufactured for the occasion by Mr Benjamin Edgington, of London: the exterior was appropriately adorned with flags—the Union-jack and the Burghley arms; from the poles in the interior were suspended Union-jacks. The conveniences of this spacious pavilion were surprising: at different parts were openings leading to other smaller tents, in which the wines, dessert, &c., were stored. It was 120 feet by 80, and so planned that right tables under it being of a quadrant form at one end, enabled the Chairman to see the face of every guest.

There was, besides, a reception-hall, in which the Marquis of Exeter and a party of gentlemen assembled to welcome the guests The Marquis, who wore the star and insignia of the Garter, received and shook hands with each visitor, and the company then passed to the pavilion.

About four o'clock, Lord Exeter took the chair, which was surmounted by a magnificent coronet, two feet in height, and the arms of the family on his right sat Lord Burghley, Lord Thomas Cecil, Mr. Collins, Colonel Chaplin, the Rev. H Chaplin (of Ryhall), Mr Walford, the Rev. F. E. Gretton, &c; and on his left, Earl Spencer, Lord Brownlow Cecil, the Mayor of Stamford, the Rev. H Alley, Dr Arnold, the Rev N. Walters, the Rev H Cheriton, Mr. Parker (of Hauthorpe), Mr. T. Jackson, the Rev. C. Arnold, the Rev. D. E. Jones, Mr Stephen Eaton, and Mr Cayley.

Grace having been said by the Rev. H. Alley, his Lordship's chaplain, the dinner commenced It was admirably served under the superintendence of M. Verdie, his Lordship's chef de cuisine; and, in addition to port and sherry ad libitum, a decanter of the twenty-one years' old ale was placed before each guest.

The following is the Bill of Fare:—45 tureens of soups (various), 22 dishes of roast beef, 27 dito of boiled beef, 22 dito of mutton, 22 dito of venison, 45 plum puddings, 45 dishes of pastry (various), 27 hams, 18 tongues, 18 dishes of chickens, 14 quarter- of lamb, 45 dishes of jellies and creams, and 265 dishes of dessert.

The dessert having been placed upon the table, Lord Exeter proposed "the health of the Queen," and afterwards that of Prince Albert, grate ully referring to many acts of kindness he had received from his Royal Highness, and adding his deep regret that circumstances had compelled him to leave the Prince's service. "The toast of the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family" were then drunk. Then followed "the Church." Lord Exeter specially thanking the several clergymen who attended the festivity. The Rev. H. Alley having returned thanks, then came the toast of the day; and, after the lapse of a few minutes, the Marquis of Exeter again rose, evidently with some emotion, and said: "In rising to propose the next toast, I request you will allow me to take this opportunity of expressing the great satisfaction I feel at having had it in my power to give you here this day, the twenty-first anniversary of my eldest son's birth. (A loud burst of cheering, which was continued for some time.) I presenting him to you on this occasion, I assure you I do it with a deep and religious feeling that he possesses those sociable and amiable qualities which are necessary to make one useful in society, and which I have already procured him many highly-valued friends. Although I cannot suppose, with regard to one so young, that his talents are equal to those of his illustrious ancestors, yet I hope there are indications of good sense and as I feel proud to say that Lord Burghley is endowed with good sense and steady judgment, I trust that he will be enabled to perform his duty to society with credit to himself, and with advantage to those who may place dependence upon him." (Cheers. Nine times nine repeated)

Lord Burghley, in rising to respond, was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm; and it was evident that the reception he had at once produced had an overpowering effect. When silence had been restored, he said: "In rising to address you on such an occasion as this, it is difficult to find words in which to express my gratitude for the honour you have done me in cordially welcoming my name. It is with no ordinary feelings of pleasure I meet you: and who could, when it is for the first time I meet an audience like this—who could doubt the sincerity of my feelings, when I reiterate the assurance of the gratitude in which your kind regards have placed me? (Loud cheers.) I trust that on the next occasion on which I shall have the pleasure of seeing you, I shall in some degree prove more competent to declare the sentiments and that be found deserving of the feelings of friend-ship you have manifested towards me. (Applause.) The time may come when it shall please Providence to place me in a more responsible position that which I at present occupy, though I trust that period is very, very far distant (loud cheers); but when, in the course of nature, which no human will can control, that event may happen, I hope to follow my venerated father's example in all I do that, I trust, few will take exception to my conduct. (Reiterated applause) But, whatever my position, I shall do my best to live for our mutual satisfaction and welfare. Allow me again to return you my most sincere thanks; and believe me that those amongst you, your wives and families, may live long, be happy, and enjoy all the blessings this world can promise." (The young Lord concluded his remarks amid a perfect storm of cheers.)

The Earl Spencer then rose, and after a well timed address, proposed, with three times three, "The Health of Lord Exeter; and may he live long, and see the first heir, as of a illustrious house flatlike that of the noble youth Low sitting on his right hand." (Drunk with enthusiastic applause)

Lord Exeter, in returning thanks, referred to the conclusion he had arrived at, in the early part of his life, that it was his duty to set a decident on him, and to acquit h. self honourably of the deep responsibility which devolved upon him, it was most expedient for his Lordship to reside from year to year in the place of his residence, and to make himself acquainted with the wants which he maintained through his tenants' industry. This manly declaration was received with loud cheers.

The Noble Chairman then proposed "the Navy and Army," and the health of Lieut. Spencer, Col. Chaplin, the Mayor of Stamford, and Lord Brownlow Cecil. Then followed "the Mayor and Corporation of Stamford." Lord Thomas Cecil then proposed the health of "the Marchioness of Exeter," which was received with enthusiasm; and Lord Exeter, having returned thanks, retired with the principal guests. The chair was then taken by Mr Biggs, the respected Steward to the Marquis of Exeter, who proposed "Lord Brownlow Cecil and the junior branches," and several other toasts; and the party did not break up until late.

In the evening, at about half-past six o'clock, Mr. Green ascended in his "Albion" balloon from the Stamford gas-works, amidst the vociferous cheers of thousands of spectators. Mr. Green was accompanied by Mr. G. Jones, manager of the gas works.

In the evening, Mr Grant had a grand exhibition of fire-works in Stamford.

A ball was given in the evening at the Assembly Room to the principal tenants, at which the Marquis of Exeter, Lord Burghley, and several other persons of distinction were present. The ball-room was tastefully decorated, and Mr. and Mrs. Hagg, did not terminate until five o'clock on Friday morning. Lord Burghley remained until a late hour, and gratified many ladies by taking them down a dance.

FRIDAY

The festivities were kept up at Burgeley during the whole of the day. At on o'clock, the children sang to the village cabinets were entertained at dinner in the grand marquee. This party was succeeded, at three o'clock, by the whole of the mechanics, labourers, and out-door servants, usually employed at Burgeley, and their friends.

After the children had dined, they repaired to the lawn on the west of the Hall to participate in a variety of amusements, which had been prepared for them. A knowledge of this drew thousands during the day, and the Marchioness of Exeter, Ladies Spencer, Sophia Cecil, &c. &c., were also present. The amusements consisted of clipping for oranges, boys running for new clothes, girls for books, bonnets, &c., swarming a pole for legs of mutton, foot hurdle-racing, jumping in sacks or hats, money, &c. &c. In the evening, the whole of the day had a ball, each having the privilege of inviting their friends or relatives, [illegible] display in the town of Stamford. Various rustic [illegible] provided, at Lord Burghley's expense, for the townspeople, in the Cose, and these amusements were repeated on Saturday. The arrangements were excellent; and the several entertainments furnished nearly three days' rational and hearty enjoyment to the visitors, amidst frequent shouts of "Long live the Lord of Burleigh."

COMING OF AGE OF LORD BURGHLEY!

"Quæ non fictuma ipsi
Vix ea nostra voco." OVID

The name alone suggests the song.
[illegible]
Have guarded well the [illegible]
With a valley [illegible]
[illegible]
On Stamford's [illegible]

Oh, "those were [illegible] men's blood,"
On [illegible]
To crush the [illegible]
[illegible]
Made England [illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

clearly wrong. The whole question is rather one of the fair division of labour than anything else. If there is any honour in being a Member of Parliament, it is shared collectively and equally, and so should it be with the labour; if one is sought, the other must not be shunned, nor can any individual have a right to map out his field of action, and say, "I will only accept my talents to such and such enterprises." Much obloquy has been poured upon men who have subscribed articles of belief with "reservations," and read them in a "non-natural sense;" the honesty of mankind has visited their specious dealing with just indignation. But no such blame is imputed to those who, having examined the articles, say at once they do not believe them, and cannot subscribe to them; they take their proper place without the pale of the body that receives the test. The imputation that rests on a man who continues to receive the honours and advantages of membership in a body whose general opinions and practice he renounces, is not a pleasing one: the course open to him is obvious—if he cannot submit to the rules of the general mass, he can cease to belong to it. The duties of a Member of Parliament are clearly enough established—are universally understood. In entering it, a man accepts the conditions; if his principles compel him to refuse the labour, he is bound in honour to resign also the credit of the position.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The House only sat for half-an-hour, and the business was not important.

The Burghs (Scotland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Earl of Chichester presented a petition from the Church Missionary Society against the Charitable Trusts Bill.—The Lord Chancellor said he intended to move the second reading of the Bill on Thursday next, and he would then take the opportunity of stating the course he intended to pursue with respect to societies of that description.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Sugar Duties.—Lord J. Russell rose to ask when the Government intended to bring forward the Sugar Duties Bill, as his noble friend, the member for Tiverton (Lord Palmerston), intended to submit a resolution to the House respecting sugar, the produce of the slave colonies.—Sir R. Peel said that the late introduction of the bill relating to the sugar duties, must depend upon the time that the debate on the Corn-law importation would extend to. Perhaps it would be in the course of next week, but it was probable, however, that his right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer would previously bring before the House his financial statement.

CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

Mr. Greene brought up the report on the Corn Importation Bill.

On the motion that the report be received,

Sir C. Burrell opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that the report be received that day six months

CHESTER RACES.—FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE CUP RACE.

The jockeys having drawn for places and mounted, paraded in front of the stand, and assembled at the post a few minutes after four o'clock, and at the first signal got away. Pedometer was the first to take the lead, but after going 200 yards was passed by Lady Windsor, who went on with the running, followed by Bay Middleton, Pedometer, The Roper's Daughter, Sir Lawrence, Miss Burns, Vol-au-Vent, and several others; Corranna, Inheritress, Queen of the Tyne, and Valerian bringing up the rear. They ran in pretty nearly the order once round, the pace excellent for such deep ground. Polish, Vol-au-Vent, Valerian, Sweetmeat, and Red-cross were then disposed of; at all events Lady Windsor had taken up a position she was not afterwards disturbed from, and Bay Middleton made no figure in the race afterwards. Flevnagh here showed with the leading horses, but dropped back, died away in a few strides, and Miss Burns and Glossy took the third and fourth positions, Roderick and Billy Purvis also lying forward; Corranna and the Queen of the Tyne in the rear. The race continued in this way to the last turn, and then the front rank rapidly lessened in number, Billy Purvis, who broke down, Miss Burns, Intrepid, and Roderick died away, and Corranna passing them, was fourth, when entering the straight running. Glossy reached the distance post Lady Wildair third, and Glossy went on with the running, Brother to Sir Henry second, and Corranna third, nothing else having a chance. This was how they ran home, and at this distance, where Corranna challenging, headed his opponents in two or three strides, and won cleverly by half a length, Brother to Sir Henry beating Glossy by two or three parts of a length for second place, Lady Wildair a bad fourth, and Intrepid a fifth place, Intrepid was fifth, Pedometer sixth, and Lady Wildair seventh. Valerian, Polish, The Baron (who was run against), and nearly knocked down at the back of the course in the straight, Sweetmeat, Redcross, Queen of the Tyne, and others, were pulled up some distance from home. Run in four minutes 40 seconds

Corranna.—This horse some time ago was a good favourite for the race; but he met with a slight accident, which threw him out of the betting. In fact, for four days he was not out of the stable. His owner, Mr. Moore, some time ago laid Royce five pounds to five that he would not win a race that year, which Royce laid 1000 to 20 to another party, so little confidence had he in the horse. At Northampton Races, Mr. Clifton betted 5000 even with Mr Hope Johnstone. Corranna against Mr. Ramsden's colt, Sweetmeat, Saturday morning before the race, he gave a twenty pound note for the bet to be off!!! So much for the knowing ones! Time will be generally harmless; and suits the book-men admirably.

DINNER AT THE MANSION-HOUSE TO THE BISHOPS.—On Thursday the Lord Mayor gave a splendid entertainment to the Bishops and other dignitaries of the Church, and their ladies, in the Egyptian Hall. Upwards of 150 sat down to the dinner. Perhaps there never was so many Bishops assembled under the hospitable roof of the Mansion-House on any previous occasion, which was a fine illustration of the anniversary of the Institution for the Propagation of the Gospel

SEAMEN'S CHURCH IN DOCK-STREET.—Prince Albert has fixed Monday next for laying the first stone of the Seamen's Church in Dock-street, and on that occasion the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and other public authorities, will be in attendance to receive the Prince. The service will be performed by the Bishop of London, and a very considerable number of the subscribers and friends to this important undertaking will be present. A large marquee has been erected to cover the area, which is calculated to contain 800 persons.

THE NORTH KENT AND SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAYS. An important decision was given yesterday in Group XIV. The Chairman of the Committee stated that the majority were in favour of the Bill. At this announcement, loud cries of "Bravo! bravo!" proceeded from the further end of the room. The Chairman begged to remind those gentlemen who were crying out so loudly that the South-Eastern Company has in all years got their bill.

THE LATE OUTRAGE IN WESTMINSTER.—Upon inquiry at the Westminster Hospital yesterday morning, relative to the case of Elizabeth Pullen, the report was in every respect favourable. In addition to the contusion of the forehead which is doubled to pass down the poor creature's throat some bits, and this nourishment has since been administered with success. The injured woman also passed a better night, and has now every prospect of speedy recovery. The attempt, in fact, was so much in favour that it was not deemed necessary to require the attendance of a magistrate to take her depositions.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM. On Thursday, the British Museum was reopened. The hours, to the 1st of September, are from nine to seven o'clock. The exhibition is open on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; the reading-room daily.

THE MYSTERIOUS CASE OF POISONING AT HACKNEY.—The investigation into the circumstances attending the death, three years ago, of a girl, named Harriet Monkton, at Bromley, which has lasted so long, the Jury having assembled no less than eighteen times, was concluded on Thursday, when the Jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown."

ACCIDENT AT HUNGERFORD PIER.—On Wednesday afternoon an accident of a frightful character occurred on board the Citizen steamer "D," which had just started from Hungerford Pier towards the City, when it was found that William Banks, aged twenty-two, one of the stokers, had got jammed in the machinery, and, had it not been for the immediate assistance rendered him, would inevitably have been crushed to death. The poor fellow was taken to Charing-cross Hospital, where it was ascertained that he had fractured both arms, besides sustaining other extensive injuries, and it was considered that amputation must be resorted to. The unfortunate man is married, and lives in Arthur-street, Chelsea.

ATTEMPTED MURDER IN WESTMINSTER.—On Tuesday evening, a brickmaker, named Luff, residing at No 4, Peabody-street, Westminster, quarrelled with a young woman (26 years of age), named Elizabeth Pulling, with whom he lived, and after violently beating her, seized her round the waist, and threw her out of an up-stairs window. The poor creature first alighted on her head upon a wall, and thence fell to the ground. She was taken to Westminster Hospital, in a state of insensibility, very much disfigured about the head. Not a feature of her face could be distinguished, from the violence she had received. It appears that amongst other injuries she received the skull is fractured as well as her jaw. At present it is impossible to say whether any hopes exist of her recovery, as the fever the injuries produced has not been allayed. The light from which she was thrown is about thirty feet. It has been deemed advisable to keep her as quiet as possible, so that no questions relative to the murderous attack have been asked. The fellow underwent an examination on Wednesday morning at the Police Court, when he was remanded until the result of the wounds can be ascertained.

SUICIDE AT BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE.—On Wednesday Mr. Payne held an inquest on the body of Ann Dean and, aged forty. From the evidence of George Everard, a waterman, and Guy Fawkes Constable No 319, it appeared that the deceased walked hurriedly across Blackfriars bridge, and was apparently about to turn back again, instead of which she deliberately jumped into the water, and three or four minutes elapsed before assistance could be rendered. She was picked up by the witness Everard, and conveyed to the Glasiers' Arms, Water-lane, where the inquiry was held, and died almost immediately after being taken in. The result of the inquest was a verdict of "Temporary insanity."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY AND THE COURT.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Royal children, returned to Buckingham Palace on Tuesday. The Royal party arrived at Buckingham Palace at five minutes past six o'clock. Her Majesty and the Prince were accompanied by the Misses Napier and Dawson, the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Horse, the Vice-Chamberlain, the Master of the Household, and Sir Frederic Stovin

WINDSOR, Thursday Evening. (From our own Correspondent.)—The Duchess of Kent, attended by the Baroness de Speth, arrived at Frogmore House, this morning, in a close travelling carriage and four, from town. Her Royal Highness, after proceeding through the grounds, and partaking of luncheon, took her departure, in the afternoon, for Clarence House, St. James's. It is expected that the Court will proceed to the Castle, for a short visit, in the course of a few days. An arrangement of this nature, however, will entirely depend upon the state of her Majesty's health.

INTERRUPTION TO THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM'S DAUGHTER.—Last Saturday morning, just as the Rev. M. D. French was about to commence the morning service at St. George's, Hanover-square, a license for marriage was presented by a lady and gentleman. The clerk, as in duty bound, commenced reading the document, and was much surprised to find that it authorised the performance of the ceremony for parties no less distinguished than the Lady Anna Maria Mary Temple Nugent Brydges Chandos Grenville, daughter of the present Duke of Buckingham, and Marquis of Buckingham and Chandos, and Gore Langton, Esq., grandson of Colonel Gore Langton. The late hour at which the proposed bride and bridegroom reached the church rendered it impossible for the ceremony to be performed previous to the morning service. Mr. French, in the meantime, seeing that the bride and bridegroom were not accompanied by any of their friends, and fearing that the proposed marriage was a clandestine one, sent a message to the Duke of Buckingham to inform him that a marriage in which he was so deeply interested was about to take place. His Grace hastened to the church, and, on entering the vestry room, a scene of considerable excitement occurred, in the midst of which the Rev. Mr. French entered the vestry-room from the church, having just concluded the morning service. The Duke of Buckingham immediately addressed Mr. French, expressing his decided objections to the performance of the ceremony. On the other hand, Mr. Gore Langton and the lady claimed as a matter of right that the ceremony should proceed immediately. Mr. French calmly stated that his duty did not afford him any option. Any marriage, he apprised, of matters, and in which the parties was in all respects sufficient, and he was bound to perform the ceremony without further delay. It would be vain to attempt to describe the urgent solicitations on the one hand, and the resolute opposition offered by his Grace on the other. His Grace urged his objection to this clandestine union in the strongest terms: he appealed to Mr. French, and undertook to hold him harmless from any penalties incurred by declining the terms of the license; and, finally, Mr. French, overcome by the entreaties of his Grace, declined to perform the ceremony. After some further delay, the lady retired with her father, and Mr. Gore Langton to his residence, both under the severe disappointment at this unexpected interruption to their anticipated happiness. It is stated that the objection of the Duke and Duchess applies chiefly to the clandestine manner in which the union was about to take place, and that in a few days the ceremony will be performed in a manner worthy of the daughter of the house of Grenville. Mr. Langton is about twenty-two or twenty-three years of age. The lady is twenty-six.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—On Wednesday the Honourable James Archibald Stuart-Wortley, M.P., second surviving son of the late, and brother of the present, Lord Wharncliffe, was married at St. George's, Hanover-square, to the Honourable Jane Lawley, only daughter of Lord and Lady Wenlock.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' ASSOCIATION.

The second election of pensioners to the privileges afforded by this excellent Association took place on Wednesday morning, at the London Tavern, where the occasion was also celebrated by a dinner, at which the Earl of Dalhousie presided. There was a very large attendance of members of the Association, and at the dinner-table we observed, amongst many distinguished guests, Sir R. Inglis, M.P.; J. A. Smith, Esq., M.P.; W. G. Prescott, Esq.; J. Mackillop, Esq.; C. Barr, Esq.; M. Boyd, Esq.; J. Wood, Esq., Chairman of the Excise; J. W. Gilbart, Esq.; Thomson Hankey, Esq.; H. Davidson, Esq.; W. Thomson, Esq.; J. Cook, Esq.; J. Fletcher, Esq.

After the usual loyal toasts, the Earl of Dalhousie rose and said—Gentlemen, I have now the honour of proposing to you the toast which is naturally of the greatest interest to those who are here assembled, and whom I have now the honour of seeing before me. It is, "Prosperity to the Provident Clerks' Association." It is a matter of true gratification to me that I am now enabled to advocate a fit, a fitting scheme, or one which is of doubtful success: on the contrary, I am happy to say that prosperity has, year by year, attended this Institution, and its present prospects are most encouraging. It is not necessary that I should trouble you with a detailed account of the state of the Society, but I may mention that the past year has been doubly prosperous in comparison with that which preceded it, while the quarter's account now present exhibits a still greater and more important increase. I am sure it is unnecessary in a company such as this to dwell on the benefits of mutual assurance. Every man can tell that, of all "the ills that flesh is heir to," there is not one more painful than the apprehension of the fall of those who are nearest and dearest to them from those comforts of life to which they have been accustomed, when they find themselves are gone. It is an apprehension we all naturally feel; and, if it be common to all, it is especially so to clerks, whose means are small, and who are not only unable to provide for the future, but who, possibly, are scarcely able to secure to their families such comforts as may be absolutely necessary for the present comfort. There are many hundreds who be ong to this society who will declare, that it is the thirtiest thought, and one which adds tenfold bitterness to their adversity, that it must be worse for those hereafter when we now present on them for support. If it be a question with them, in what way they are to exercise themselves from this terrible apprehension, a ready and complete answer will be found; it is in this society. Mutual assurance, it is true, does not prevent death, but it can, in some degree, control the future—it can provide against those contingencies in life which beset the path of all of us; and there is no clerk, how industrious, who desires to provide ever so small a sum for the future, who can find means of doing so. It would be unpardonable in me to dwell longer on this subject, but I must be permitted to advert to one point, and that is, that what I am now recommending to others I practise myself. I do not preach otherwise than I practise, and I feel the full value of being able to provide for my children by these means, and to secure to them an adequate maintenance for the future—a provision which is, perhaps, poor enough at any time. But even this I could not do without the aid of the Society. It is natural that we should desire to provide for our friends hereafter, but there are some whose means are so limited they declare themselves unable to take advantage of the benefits offered to them by the Society—they are obliged to rely on Providence for the future; but I would tell them that no one has a right to rely on that Providence when in the attribute of Heaven, until he has used and tried every effort to deserve it. Permit me, Gentlemen, to use one little word of admonition. If there be any here who have not aided the Society, let me impress upon them that by doing so they will benefit themselves. You cannot be in error in advocating the cause and promoting the interests of a Society which has for its object to help the poor, to succour the widow, and to rescue the fatherless, and I therefore beg earnestly to impress upon you to lend your strenuous aid to an institution from which I know none more worthy of support. (Loud and continued cheering.)

Mr. T. Hankey then proposed the health of the noble Chairman, paying a just tribute to his many valuable qualities and his well-stored mind. It is needless to say that the toast was received with the most unbounded applause

The next toast was "The Members for the City of London," coupled with the name of Lord John Russell, which was received with great cheering.

Lord John Russell returned thanks, and strongly enforced the advantages of the association, proposing in return "The City of London, and Prosperity to its Lord-mayor."

Several other toasts were afterwards proposed, and the festivities of the evening were kept up with animation, being aided by some admirable singing under the direction of Mr. Jolly.

At the election in the morning, J. A. Smith, Esq., M.P., took the chair, when two individuals were elected annuitants; the one an aged clerk, sixty-five years old, to a pension of £25, the other the widow of a clerk to a pension of £15. Neither case had they contributed more than four guineas to the association.

CHARTERHOUSE-SQUARE INFIRMARY. The tenth anniversary festival of this infirmary for the cure of fistula and other diseases of the rectum, took place on Monday evening, in the banqueting-room of the Albion Tavern, in Aldersgate-street. Three rows of tables were laid out the whole length of this splendid apartment, with a cross-table at the head; but ample as was the accommodation, there was scarcely room for the company, which consisted, for the greater part, of the most respectable men to be found in the City of London, exceeding 200 in number. The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor took the chair amid loud applause, soon after six o'clock, and was supported, right and left, by Mr. Sheriff Laurie, Mr. Alderman Copeland, M.P.; John Masterman, Esq., M.P. for the City (treasurer); A. Hasbe, Esq., M.P.; Henry Pownall Esq.; the Rev. Dr. Yyvyan; Dr. Farnwall (honorary physician to the Institution); Frederick Salmon, Esq. (the founder and honorary surgeon); the Rev. G. Taylor, M.A. (honorary chaplain); S. B. Merriman, Esq. (honorary secretary), &c. Until the foundation of the most meritorious institution, a few years ago, by the above-named gentleman, the eminent surgeon, of Broad-street, there was no establishment in London where the poor afflicted with those most severe and debilitating diseases could apply for relief; for, in the public hospitals, this class of disease was notoriously neglected, and that, too, notwithstanding the evident fact that in London, above all other places, was it most imperatively needed, on account of the vast numbers of poor who, in order to earn their livelihood, are obliged to pursue, in a confined, impure atmosphere, sedentary occupations which almost always bring on this class of disease, in some one type or another. Speeches in advocacy of the objects of the institution were made during the evening by the Lord Mayor, Mr. Sheriff Laurie, Mr. Masterman, Alderman Copeland, Mr. Freshfield, Mr. Hastie, &c. It appears from the Report that, during the past year, assistance had been afforded to 540 patients. The donations and new subscriptions announced, amounted to £600.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number of births registered during the week ending Saturday, May 2nd, was 1410; the number of deaths, 831. This is below the average of the weekly averages of the last five Saturdays, by 61; but below that of the corresponding weeks during the same period, by five only.

SCOTLAND.

ELECTION FOR THE FALKIRK BURGHS.

Lord Lincoln has been elected for the Falkirk district of burghs, by a majority of 11. The following is the state of the poll in the five different burghs, when the contest terminated

	Lincoln.	Wilson.
Falkirk	105	184
Linlithgow	27	55
Hamilton	165	44
Airdrie	113	143
Lanark	96	69
	506	495
Majority for Lord Lincoln	11.

On Saturday last, the Sheriff officially declared the numbers to be as above, and that Lord Lincoln was duly elected.

The district includes five burghs—Falkirk, Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie, and Linlithgow; and, in three out of the five, the noble Lord was in a decided minority. His return is, in fact, the work of the single burgh of Hamilton; and it is also been remarked that the town so called, happens to adjoin the domain of his race the Duke of Hamilton, the father-in-law of Lord Lincoln.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

EVOLUTIONS OF THE FLEET BEFORE LORD ELLENBOROUGH AND A BOARD OF ADMIRALTY.

The Board of Admiralty went to Spithead on Monday morning, at ten o'clock, in the Comet steamer, with the Admiralty flag flying, and on going on board the St Vincent, it was transferred to that ship, and she, with 19 guns, and the yards manned. At half-past ten the signal was made for the fleet to weigh, and, in a short time after, the following had their anchors up:—Superb, Rodney, Albion, Vanguard, Queen, Trafalgar, and Brilliant. Two steamers Terrible, Retribution, Gladiator, Cyclops, and Scourge, had been in readiness all the morning, and had only to get up their anchors. The St Vincent, with the Admiralty on board, did not weigh until half-past eleven, having carried away her chain messenger.

The wind was fresh from E.S.E., and the squadron had to beat down the Harrow to St. Helen's. By two o'clock they were out of sight. At four P.M. the Admiralty returned to the west, and before five o'clock the ships of the line were observed to be standing in for Spithead, in two columns, the St Vincent leading. By seven o'clock they all came to anchor. The Board of Admiralty landed immediately, and Lord Ellenborough entertained the captains at dinner at the Royal Hotel.

In this exercise there was not any trial of speed, but simply of quickness of evolution, and the working and manœuvring of the steamers was admirably well, and pretty well. The steamers were actively managed, but the Terrible was in every respect the superior. The Raleigh did not manœuvre, having a new ship's company. She only sailed until half-past eleven, having carried away her chain messenger.

The Rattler was not quite completed.

The squadron which put to sea consisted of seven sail of the line, one frigate, and two steamers, and the St. Vincent, Lord Ellenborough, in a very handsome manner, presented Lieutenant Twiss, the senior lieutenant of that ship, with a Commander's commission, and desired that Mr. J. L. Parish, the midshipman, might be informed that he would be promoted to Lieutenant, and appointed to the St. Vincent.

DEATH OF ANOTHER FLAG OFFICER.—Admiral of the Red, the Hon. Henry Curzon, died at his residence at Derby, on Saturday last, in the eighty-first year of his age. He entered the navy in 1776, consequently this gallant officer must have been in the service for seventy years.

THE KING'S BIRTH-DAY FETES, AT PARIS.

The chief topic of the Paris papers is the King's fête. The preliminary examinations respecting Lecomte are nearly concluded; and it appears probable that the affair will come before the Commission about the end of the present month, and not since the commencement shortly after.

A grand review took place at Vincennes, on Tuesday: 20,000 men were under arms, including four complete batteries of artillery, commanded by his Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours.

On Thursday (last week), the usual addresses from the foreign Ambassadors and the Chambers, were presented to Louis Philippe, on the occasion of his fête, which took place on that day. The addresses all contained congratulatory notice of the King's escape from assassination. In answer to the address from the Chamber of Peers, his Majesty said—"You know how much it contributes to the tenderness of affection which the Chamber of Peers gives me on all occasions—the confidence with which they inspire me has always aided me in my laborious career. I can conceive your reserve in presence of the functions which the Charter assigns to the Chamber of Peers; but that does not prevent you from uniting in thanksgiving to God for the great favour which he has conferred on me, and particularly for preserving those beings so dear to my heart, who surrounded me at that terrible moment. (His Majesty was here interrupted with several cries of "Vive le Roi," "Vive la Reine.")

The congratulations of the Chamber of Deputies were embodied in an address, in reply to which the King said, "It is with happiness that I see, as you have said, all shades of opinions for I cannot admit that there is anything more than shades melting together in the feelings with which I am surrounded, and for which the nation has given me testimonies more touching to my family and myself. I never knew any other ambition than that of serving my country and devoting to it my whole existence; and I may assert that my children will follow in the same path. I have been, and I will be the last, faithful to the motto inscribed on the national flag at the moment we resumed our glorious colour—'Liberty! Public order!' It is the liberty of every Frenchman that I have shared in equal measure, and it is by maintaining it against all attacks that I have believed myself worthy of what I think to be the highest of titles—that which has been conferred upon me by the suffrages of the people—the title of King of the French."

Other addresses of congratulation were received from the Aides-de-Camp and orderly officers of the King and the Princes, from the Ministers and the Marshals of France, the deputation of the Courts of Cassation and Comptes, the Royal Council of the University, the deputation of the Cour Royale, the Institute, the Prefects of the Seine and Police, the Mayors, Deputy-mayors, and members of the Municipal Council of Paris; the deputation of the Tribunals of Premiere Instance and Commerce, the Consistories of the Reformed Church, the Confession of Augsburg and the Israelites, the Justices of Peace of Paris and other bodies, the Prefect of the Seine-et-Oise, the Mayor of Versailles, and the other Mayors of the department, the general and other officers of the army not forming part of the garrison of Paris, and various civil and military functionaries; the officers of the National Guard of Versailles, and others of the department of the Seine-et-Oise; the officers of the General Staff of the National Guard of the Department of the Seine, &c.

In the first page of the present Number, our Artist has represented the reception of the officers of the National Guard.

The fête day was kept out of doors with the usual spectacles, and with more than the usual manifestation of pleasure on the part of the population of Paris, whose enjoyment of the day was evidently enhanced by the feeling that, but for the almost inviable interposition of a benign Providence, instead of a day of festivity, it might have been one of mourning throughout the land.

The day was ushered in with the customary salutes of the artillery at the Invalides; and the Champs Elysées and the Barrière du Trone were furnished with the usual quantity of ginguette booths, shows, and other minor places of amusement, in addition to the theatres and orchestras which figured in the official programme of the day.

As on former occasions, though there was no lack of holiday-makers at the Barrière du Trone, the principal point of attraction lay in the Champs Elysées and the vicinity. Here the booths were arranged in goodly row. Refreshments of various kinds were tempting arrayed; and savoury sausages and other viands, under the cullt ary process of frezzo, sent up a fragrant steam, not disagreeable to the most fastidious nose.

The theatres were, as heretofore, untiring objects of interest to the multitude, and in these the enemies of France experienced, as usual, the most signal defeat. During the afternoon the fortifications were crowded in their quarter by people, strangers, and the various orchestras, rich in the science of the lustrious Musard, lent their enlivening strains to the animated scene; but all their invitations to the pleasures of the dance were thrown away on the desert air; for, from some inexplicable cause, the stiff Terpsichorean displays so much in which the populace of Paris formerly so much delighted, and in which they so much excel, were wholly at a loss.

The most interesting feature of the day, beyond comparison, was in the gardens of the Tuileries, at the moment the venerable Monarch appeared on the balcony, leading the young Comte de Paris, and accompanied by the Queen and several other members of the Royal Family. The air rang with acclamations of "Vive le Roi, which were enthusiastically repeated when the King, having retired during the course of the concert, again appeared on the balcony, and the cry was taken up by the multitude. His Majesty was in excellent health and spirits, gave, himself, the signal for the commencement of the fireworks. These were upon the usual splendid scale, combining figurative devices in all the colours of the rainbow, with rockets and fireballs resembling myriads of stars, and closed with a bouquet which seemed to embody all that is bright and beautiful in the pyrotechnic art. The last display of the commemorations of the days which, for ages to come, were to be heard, were unmarred by the occurrence of a single accident. Notwithstanding the immense crowds, the unfailing good humour of the multitudes was everywhere conspicuous; and, as crown after crown, the weather was most propitious, the day being one of those which, from the proverbially fine weather usually attending His Majesty's fêtes, have acquired the denomination of "a Louis Philippe's day."

Our Artist in Paris have engraved the affectionate recognition of the Royal Family, by the holiday crowd in the Gardens of the Tuileries. Next are the fêtes in the Place de la Concorde; a down to the last scene in the Illuminations at Notre-the Illumination of the Hotel de Ville; and the crowning splendour of the Display of Fireworks.

ROYAL BIRTHDAY FETES AT PARIS.

FETE IN THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE.

THE HOTEL DE VILLE ILLUMINATED.

ROYAL BIRTHDAY FETES AT PARIS.

KING LOUIS PHILIPPE RECEIVING THE CONGRATULATIONS OF THE PEOPLE, AT THE TUILERIES.

THE FIREWORKS.

ROYAL BIRTHDAY FETES AT PARIS.

FETE IN THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE.

THE HOTEL DE VILLE ILLUMINATED.

ROYAL BIRTHDAY FETES AT PARIS.

KING LOUIS PHILIPPE RECEIVING THE CONGRATULATIONS OF THE PEOPLE, AT THE TUILERIES.

THE FIREWORKS.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Certainly in writing "Don Pasquale," Donizetti showed no symptoms of that want of vigour of which his later productions are sometimes justly accused. There is a remarkable freshness in this work; the melodies are abundant and varied, and a spar ling cheerfu ness is diffused throughout, which seems to indicate that the mind of the great composer was at the time he wrote this opera in the ha ppiest mood for composition. That in other of his later operas, his genius has shown occasionally symptoms of exhaustion, we are not disposed to deny; but this work there are few traces of this, and although "Don Pasquale" does not aim at so high a rank of lyrical compositions as, for example, "Lucia," "Anna Bolena," &c., its music is excellently adapted to a bouffe not certainly belonging to the high comedy school, but yet witty, spirited, and exceedingly stage.

There is one morceau in this opera, however, which deserves to be reckoned among Donizetti's best efforts. We allude to the finale of the first act—a magnificent composition, recalling the power and science displayed in the famous "Chi mi frena" of "Lucia," or even the splendid concerted pieces of "Ernani," or "Nino." This finale is truly superb, especially when sung as it is by Grisi, Lablache, Formasari, and Mario. The voice of the great Neapolitan thundering forth the splendid passage which commences the morceau, and is repeated several times, produces a grand effect. The whole part of Don Pasquale is evidently a favourite with Lablache; it belongs to that order of characters in which he commenced his career, and from which, says report, it was so difficult to induce him to rise to the higher walks of lyrical art.

It is a general subject of remark that Formasari gains ground daily in comic parts; as a tragedian, his reputation was long since established; but his impersonation of such parts as Fiorar Dr. Malatesta &c., are now characterised by a degree of mercurial lightness and real comic humour which he did not possess before. On the whole, there is no opera performed with in ex ensemble than "Don Pasquale;" and it is the perfection of cast which has no doubt contributed in a high degree to rendering it so great a favourite with the English public.

"Nina," and "La Gazza Ladra," performed this week, would afford no much matter of remark and reflection; but we must pass over the execution of these compositions to pay a tribute, as in duty bound, to one of the leading favourites of Terpsichore La Cerito, just returned amongst us. Remarkable is the contrast presented by this dancer to Lucile Grahn.

We now possess two ballerine, who exemplify to perfection the two different styles of their art. While our judgment and taste lean to that which Lucile Grahn has adopted, it is impossible to see Cerito without catching the enthusiasm of that natural gaiety and joyousness which seem to dictate her most extraordinary and fantastic freaks. "Alma" is a ballet well calculated to display the powers of this charming dancer. The blasting of ancient forests with that poetic element essential to a ballet of this description, the bright colouring, the warmth of effect, and the constant movement kept up throughout the very story itself, are marvellously adapted to set forth, in their fullest extent, the powers and the peculiar charms of Cerito's dancing.

DRURY-LANE.

On Tuesday evening the troop of little Dansenses Viennoises, who created such a sensation last year at the Académie Royale, and our Italian Opera, made their appearance at this theatre, and met with a most enthusiastic reception, the audience beaming at last night's performance in their applause. Some few changes have taken place in the young corps since we last saw them. Six or eight of the elder ones, who got too tall to harmonize with the others, have returned home to Vienna, and their places have been admirably supplied by dancers of smaller dimensions. On Tuesday they performed the "Pas des fleurs," the "Pas Hongrois," and the "Pas Oriental:" of these, the middle one was encored, and the audience would have had the others again, but for compassion for the panting little children.

The evening was otherwise a somewhat stormy one. Miss Romer was ill, and "Don Quixote" was played instead of the "Crusaders" In consequence of this, the band-room were not ready for their dance between the acts; and, after a long wait, the scenery had to be again changed, and the opera proceeded with. This threw them back al. through the evening; and the time-honoured selection from "La Bayadere," and the equally to be venerated "Perone" did not fill up the intervals, apparently, to the satisfaction of the audience. It was so, also, in the theatre, but in consequence of some private plan against the management, the whole of the shoes belonging to the small danseuses had been locked up. But, in spite of all these contretemps the success of the clever children was most decided: indeed, we expect their engagement will prove a brilliant coup of the Drury Lane management. We strongly recommend every body to go and see them. Their precision is really marvellous: and they enter with unbounded joyousness into all the evolutions and groupings of their dances. Some of these "little trots" do not appear above four years old, at they are quite as much on the alert as their seniors, and not the least amusing portion of their entertainment is the bustle with which they run amongst each other on a change of effect.

FRENCH PLAYS.

Mademoiselle Rose Chère has been, for three or four years, the leading favourite at one of the chief Parisian theatres; indeed, she is known in the dramatic world as "La Perle du Gymnase," and does not appear any reason why she should not ultimately become that of the Theatre Français.

This clever young actress was born at Rampes, in 1825, her father being in the pr fe-si n; and, we believe, first created an impression, in Paris, in 1844, when she took, at a short notice, the part of Mdlle. Nathalie, who was indisposed. Since then s e has been following a brilliant career of unvarying success

On Monday evening she appeared, for the first time in England, at the St. James's Theatre, performing in two vaudevilles, "Genevieve," and "Un Changement de Main." The first was not a piece well suited to the display of her powers; albeit she enacted the part of a daughter (whose father, intensely fond of her, objects to her marrying and leaving him) with much grace and intelligence. But in the second all her points came out—her impersonation of the Empress Elizabeth of Russia being admirable. Of the piece itself we gave a brief account, when noticing the translation of it, played some little time ago at the Adelphi, under the name of "The Lioness of the North."

The début of Mdlle Chère on our boards was altogether most satisfactory; and her repertoire will infuse fresh life into these performances in which, truth to tell, some little novelty was needed She was admirably supported, on the present occasion, by M. Rhozeville and M. Cartigny.

LYCEUM.

On Monday evening a new burlesque—the joint production of Messrs. Shirley Brooks, Stoppeuar, and Charles Kenney—was very success-fully produced at this house. It is entitled "Robin Hood and Richard Cœur de Li on," and is ingeniously constructed from several sources, including, of course, the old ballads on the subject, Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe," Mr. Bunn's "Crusaders," and passing topics from the newspapers. We have Mr Keeley as the Old Man of the Mountains, who subsequently turns out to be Friar Tuck. His clever spouse is Robin Hood; and his daughter, Miss Mary Keeley, enacts Blondel; and is found at last to be a young lady, the sweetheart of Little John gallantly represented by Miss Fairbrother. Then Mr. Frank Matthews is Front de Bœuf (à la mode), and Mr. Wigan was the lion hearted Monarch himself; and we have, besides, Miss Bromley a useful young lady with a nice voice—Miss Villars, Miss Laidlaw, and an archer guard, composed entirely of ladies, amongst whom we recognized most of our old friends who so long formed the Forty Thieves in "Open Sesame;" the Royal Guard in "Aladin;" the Maids of Honour in "Valentine and Orson," &c. &c. They looked very smart in their green dresses, and were warmly welcomed.

The piece has been very beautifully put upon the stage—more so, than any of the other burlesques that have been produced under this management. The opening scene of the three sisters is capital; and the succeeding discovery of the band at Sherwood Forest, exceedingly effective. One or two situations have been borrowed from "The Crusaders" with advantage—especially the sudden appearance of the troops of Robin Hood. The dresses are very elegant, and the scenery of first rate excellence.

The two best parts in the piece are those of Mr. Wigan and Mr. F. Matthews, as Richard and Front de Bœuf: and the burlesque acting of these two gentlemen is very clever indeed. The scene over the sherry cooler is highly ludicrous; and the rage of Front de Bœuf, at the end of the play, unrivalled the house with laughter. And a most capital parody it was. Mr. Keeley's schoolmaster, at the banquet. Had this gentleman passed al. his life behind the chairman's seat at the Mansion House or London Tavern, he could not have come out to greater advantage. Miss Keeley made a strong little Blondel, and Keeley's Old Man of the Mountain—perpetually on the lo k out for a murder—was sufficiently humourous. He handled the "bones," in a duet with Cuthyer, in the first act of our favourite Ethiopian Serenade. Mrs. Keeley, as Robin Hood, was admirable, in the comparatively little she had to do; but the other parts were too strong for her, to make much of her rôle. And, truth to say, we were somewhat disappointed in the title to the piece by the authors of this otherwise very clever burlesque. We had with the Robin Hood of our old story-books—not the wild but good Earl of Huntingdon, who discomfited the Bishop of Hereford's retinue when "he robbed him of his gold." And, after a most capital parody of the Maid Marian. We would have seen her in "merry Sherwood" upon "olde Maie dale" with the hobby-horse and Will Stukeley, and Friar Tuck, free from the assumption of Abbot of Kader. And we would have Robin a gallant highwayman—a dashing little Dick Turpin in Lincoln green, with the least sprinkling of Jack Sheppard's best attributes. Whist, Mrs. Keeley could so exquisitely have delineated. But the public are pleased with Robin as they find him, and so the end is answered.

The dialogue is filled with allusions to passing events, and quaint puns and anacronisms. If it has any fault, it is that of being overloaded with quotations; some of which are too trite to be amusing But the whole can be easily remedied: indeed, we believe that judicious curtailments have been made every evening. Some of the music is beautifully arranged by Mr. A. L—

That base burlesque will, we hope, run may be safely presumed. On Wednesday night, when we were present, the house was completely filled at half-price.

HAYMARKET.

A [illegible] "Twelfth Night" was brought out here on Saturday evening, [illegible] Irish Lion." It [illegible] ed by written to display [illegible] ety of opportunities of indulging in those pleasant conceits [illegible] H. Bernhard's ha [illegible] was seen, in the out of mind, so warmly attached. The trifle, which we heard with [illegible] from the pen of Mr. Morton, was successful, and has been performed every evening. Several novelties are underlined in the bills, one of which is a three-act comedy.

An adaptation of Mr. Rodwell's "Memoirs of an Umbrella," which has been some time in rehearsal, will be immediately produced at the Adelphi.

A new five-act piece is in preparation at the Princess', under the direction of Mr Macready. It is said to be written by a gentleman named Andersen, and the highest expectations are formed of its success. At a private reading at Mr. Macready's, a short time since, it was most warmly commended.

Mr Harrison's theatre will take place at Drury Lane on the 18th instant, when an unusually attractive programme will be offered to the public.

General Tom Thumb has gone to the City of London Theatre, and plays slightly to the wonder of the East-enders, in his burlesque of "Hop o' My Thumb."

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The great event of the Fourth Concert was the first performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D, which was executed at the Bonn Musical Festival, last year. In the Illustrated London News of August 1l, a description of the extraordinary enthusiasm attendi g its production was given, and a similar result was witne-sed last Monday.

Notwithstanding the enormous difficulties of this stupendous work, it was gone through without a single break-down; although, of course, it cannot be expected that, from the few rehearsals the "Missa" underwent, there were not, here and there, imperfections and blemishes The principal defect arose from the quantity of voices not being equal to the instruments force employed; and, as Beethoven has employed the brass instruments pretty freely in the score, the vocal parts were sometimes inaudible It was, however, admirably conducted and the accentuants in the world could have effected, with such short drilling, what the Philharmonic phalanx accomplished thanks to the consummate skill of Costa, the Conductor

With the exception of the singing of the trebles at Bonn, the superiority of our artists was manifested. Our band was far superior in the colouring and in the quality of their tones. The chorus at Bonn was quite a failure—here it was formidable, albeit, there was some uncertainty from the trumpets, in most intricate points almost defying facile execution. But our unbelievable and trombones were magnificent, especially the tenor trombone, played by the celebrated Dieffe. The wood band—flutes, oboes, clarionets, and bas-soons was also admirable, and we never heard the horns so well handled. Glory must also be awarded to the stringed instruments. The basses came out with astonishing vigour, and the tenors and first violins were delicious. We think the second violins, although there are some eminent artists amongst them, require strengthening.

There was a double jury for the quartet, Mes S. Wells and Miles A. Williams being the soprani; Miss Steele and Miss M Williams the contralti; Mr Lockey and Mr R Costa (brother to the Conductor), tenors; and Signor F Lablache and Mr A Novello, bass! These vocalists were most zealous and painstaking, and often distinguished themselves, as indeed did the choruses. The "Benedictus" went beautifully, and Blagrove's violin obligato was sustained throughout with unerring precision and excellent intonation. It was accordingly loud and exhilarating. The attention can never be withdrawn—one must mourn or exult

For rich and gorgeous instrumentation, boldness amounting to audacity of the harmonies, and overwhelming impetuosity of the whole, this Mass must be classed as Beethoven himself classed it, as his mightiest inspiration. After its execution on Monday last, it is no longer a sealed book—it is no longer to be designated as "wild, crude, and indigested music;" it is sure to be intelligible and as comprehensible as the Beethoven Society has rendered the posthumous quartets, and, like the ninth symphony, must now always find a place in Philharmonic programmes. Its performance has been a triumph for the Society, for its gifted Conductor, Costa, and for the progress of art in this country.

In the scheme of Monday's Concert there was one great mistake; the Mass ought to have been placed in the first part, instead of occupying the second act, after Mozart's Sinfonia in G Minor, Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, a Violoncello Caprice, and a vocal Quintet from Rossini's "Zelmira," had been performed, which are all pieces of the light school. Mrs. Anderson, after having been the teacher to her Majesty when Princess Victoria, is now the pianoforte preceptress of the Princess Royal, distinguished herself by her late ligent and spirited playing of the Fantasia. The andante of the Symphony at Mozart was encored with enthusiasm. Piatti, who is really a great artist, made a fiasco in his Caprice, arising first from the trash that he played, and secondly from his foolish desire to make a display of his execution. Hundreds were disappointed in obtaining admission to this Concert, and the repetition of the Mass has become inevitable at a future Concert.

CONCERT OF ANCIENT MUSIC.

The fifth Concert, on Wednesday night, was under the direction of the Archbishop of York, who was present at Monday's rehearsal, but not at the performance, on account of his advanced age His Grace has been a Director for nearly forty years, and his selections are greatly judicious and interesting, save as the present on an exception. There were choral gleanings from Haydn's "Creation:" Handel's "Ode to Cecilia:" from J. S. Bach; from Milton, "Fall'n is thy Throne;" from Gillet, "Non nobis;" and the hymn "All Thy Works Praise," from the "Laudi Spirituali," A.D. 1545. We had Cherubini's graceful "Faniska" overture, in which are the undulating passages for the tenors and violoncelli and «Handel's "Sama n" overture, and Dalbey's glee, "Sweet Thyrsis," warbled by Miss Birch, and Messrs. Hawkins, Horncastle, and Machin The solo singers were Madame Caradori, who gave Naumann's trying scena, "Ah se parda," very finely, and the stock piece, "Let the bright seraphim," with Harper's trumpet obligato: Miss Birch, whose holding notes and great compass were advantageously displayed in Handel and Hummel; and a Mdlle. Rappilin, who was as badly used by Mr Kearn's Parea and Zingarelli's "Ombra adorata" But the event of the evening was the first appearance this season of the far famed Fischek, one of the greatest singers Germany has ever produced. His was encored with rapture in Beethoven's "Adelaida," but his vocalisation was equally as great in the air of "Stradella," "Fiets, Signore," and in Mozart's "Bald naus ich," better known by its Italian title, "Mentre ti lascio:" and, with Caradori, the duet between Haydn and Beethoven, from Mehul's oratorio of "Joseph." The sixth Concert, on Wednesday next, is directed by Earl Howe.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

At the third Meeting on Tuesday, at Willis's Rooms, in the presence of the President, the Duke of Cambridge, the Dukes of Beaufort and Leinster, the Earl of Falmouth, Earl of Cawdor, and about 400 persons, of fashionable, literary, and artistical celebrity, the scheme comprised Mozart's Quartet in G, No. 1 of the set dedicated to Haydn, and performed by Messrs. Blagrove, Dando, Hill, and Lucas, with surpassing skill; Beethoven's trio in B flat, op. 97, the piano deliciously sustained by the celebrated Madame Oury, one of the first of lady-pianistes, M. D olfre (violin), and Hausmann (violoncello); Romberg's elegant Andante from his second violoncello Concerto, charmingly played by Herr Kellerman, the Danish artist; and, finally, Spohr's Nonetto in F, op. 31, interpreted gloriously by Salmon (violin), Hill (viola), Hausmann (violoncello), Howell (double bass), Nicholson (flute), Barret (oboe), Lazarus (clarionet), Baumann (bassoon), and C. Harper (horn). This programme was the best of the season, and excited great enthusiasm. Many ladies of rank, at these meetings, are seen to follow the performance with the scores.

THE MELODISTS' CLUB.

The fourth meeting of the season was celebrated last night, at the Freemasons's Tavern, H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. This club was founded in 1825, for the encouragement of Melody and Ballad compo-ition, and since its formation, forty prizes have been awarded; Mr. T. Cooke, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Parry, Mr. Parry, Jun., Mr. Bowyer, Professor Taylor, Mr. C. E. Horn, Mr. King, and the late Mr. Hawes having been the gainers. The Duke of Cambridge is Patron and President, and the Earl of Westmorland, Lord Saltoun, and Sir Andrew Barnard, G.C.B., Vice Presidents.

Mr. Parry, the indefatigable Honorary Secretary, obtained the Prize of £10, offered by the Duke of Cambridge for the best Pastoral Ballad. It was sung by Mr. Hawkins, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. H. R. Bishop, and obtained the votes against 6 for a second ballad. Mr. Parry's composition is called "The Cuckoo," and the words are translated from an ancient Welsh poem. Mr Parry's health was proposed by Sir J. Cockburn, and in returning thanks, the worthy Secretary declared that it was his last attempt at composition.

Goodrich, the harp player; Signor Sivori, the violinist; and Mr Hatton, the pianist, displayed their talents and were loudly applauded. Young Master Lockey, Robbs, Francis, T. Cooke, Machin, Handel Gear, Foord, C. Horc, Hawkins, &c Sir Andrew Barnard announced that he would give a Prize of £.0 next season for a composition.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT

Miss Bassano has returned to town from Italy, as also Miss Eliza Birch. Onslow, the great composer, is in London, and was present at the Philharmonic and the Musical Union Meetings. Sir Henry Bishop, Professor Bellenden Kerr, and Mr. Surman, are all busy at the Royal Academy of Music, on the approaching Concert for the benefit of the Royal Society of Female Musicians, was given on Friday. Mdlle Colletti's Concert takes place this morning, at which Madame Knispel, a German vocalist of fame, will be heard, and Herr Holzel, a baritone On Monday the Choral Harmonists have their seventh Concert, and the Beethoven Quartet Society their fifth Meeting. Miss Steele has her annual Concert, and Miss Rainforth her benefit, at Drury-lane, the same night. On Tuesday is the second of the Vocal Concerts. On Wednesday the fourth Choral Meeting, at Exeter-hall, and the sixth Ancient Concert. On Friday Haydn's "Creation" will be repeated, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and Madame Caradori will give her annual Morning Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Saturday morning rehearsal for the fifth Philharmonic Concert.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Teuton." The German Chess periodical mentioned on our last is published at Leipsic by Gustav. Brauns; but another, under the auspices and supported by the contributions of M.M. Bledow, Heydebrouk, Jaenisch, Haustein, Meyer Hortwitz, the Editor of the 'Chess Player's Chronicle,' and other distinguished players, will shortly appear. It will be brought out at Berlin, and we shall take care to give due notice of its birth

"D. C., Hayleigh.—The Problem shall be examined. One of yours alluded to appears in the Chess Magazine" for May; but, from want of a little care in the construction, is utterly valueless—as mate can be given easily in two, instead of four moves, as the conditions require.

"T. L. L." City.—"Q to K B 3rd" is a good answer when the opening player, for his 2nd move, prematurely plays Q to K R 5th

"Ishmael."—You may demand a Queen for every Pawn advanced to the eighth square, even when you have lost your minor pieces.

"G. T. N." Chichester.—We cannot at the moment refer to the position in question; but, if our recollection serves us truly, mate cannot be given as you suggest

"R. R." Carlisle.—In addition to the solutions you name, there is a neat selection of games played on the Bristol Chess Club, which may be had of Hastings, in Carey-street

"S. S. S." The Key is not debarred from Castling by having been checked, provided he is not at the moment in check. Your solution is quite a mistake

"S. H. W." Clarebourgh.—The King must not pass the check of an adverse piece in Castling.

"H. G. H." You can under no circumstances move your King into check.

"Automaton."—Thanks. We will tell you our opinion of the Problem next week.

"G. L." Bedford-row.—It is quite possible, and very easy, to give mate with a Rook and King against a King alone. See Elementary Lessons in "The Chess-Player's Chronicle"

"G. O'"—See the reply above to "Ishmael."

"A Subscriber."—We have not got the Number at hand, but will give the solution required next week

"W. B." Allans-street.—The challenge was possibly inserted merely as an advertisement of the shopkeeper. Such things are frequently done to obtain publicity.

"C. S. L."—In the position you have favoured us with, we would suggest the removal of Black's two Pawns; while they remain, he has simply to exchange his Queen for the Rook, and must then win without trouble.

"P. M. R."—Received with thanks.

"Edgeumbe."—Your game shall be examined and reported on.

"H. C. M." has omitted to send the Problem he mentions for our inspection.

"Vernon."—We mentioned last week, that the Annual Chess Festival of the Yorkshire Chess Amateurs would be held at Wakefield on the 13th. Four two problems may be solved within the given moves. In No. 1, B to G 5th followed by B takes P, wins directly. In the 2nd, by sacrificing the Q at his first move, White forces two other mates with P or B at the next.

"Sea Mew."—The term is inapplicable: Mr. Horwitz is not "a young player," but an able and experienced master of the game. Although too little known here, he has long enjoyed, in his own country, the reputation of being one of the leading players of the day; in proof of which, we have only to enumerate a few of the distinguished opponents with whom, in his career, he has had the advantage of successfully contending. Among these we find the familiar names of Mendheim, Meinefeld, Bilguer, Popert, Bledow, Heydebrunt, Jaenisch, Haustein, and Mayet: all men of mark and likelihood! In practice and fellowship with such players for many years, it is not surprising he has attained a very high degree of excellence

"An Old Subscriber to the C. P. C."—We have not got the Number at hand, but the solution shall appear next week

"Philo." "Mrs. T." "Q. E. D." "E. V." "P. W." "Πεσσοφιλος," "Marasion." "Alpha." "X. Z. Y." "S. R. W." "H. G. H." "Automaton." "J. C." "W." "Philipson." "M. M." "Amateur." "R. W. E." "W. B." "T & J. E." Leeds; "C. S. L." "D. H. R." "A Member of the Chester Chess Club." "R. T." "Edgcumbe." "Ludamagister." "Horn of Ramsgate." "J. W. D." "Perseverance." "J. G." Dublin; and "H. S." Ayr, are correct. Those by "Weland Smith." "Celt." "G. S." "A. P. F.," and "Mummy," are all wrong.

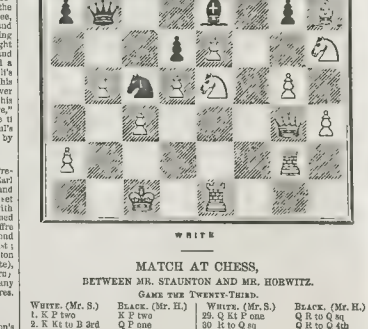
SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 119.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to K Kt 5th (ch)	K takes Kt (best)
2. Q takes B (ch)	K takes Q
3. B takes Q K P (ch)—mate

PROBLEM, NO. 120.

By Mr. W. Lewis, Author of the "Chief English Treatises on Chess," and translator of "Greco," "Carrera," &c.

White playing first to mate in eight moves.



MATCH AT CHESS,

BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND MR. HORWITZ.

GAME THE TWENTY-THIRD.

WHITE. (Mr. S.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)	WHITE. (Mr. S.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	29. Q Kt P one	Q R to Q sq
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q P one	30. Kt to Q sq	Q Kt to Q 4th
3. Q P two	P takes P	31. Q to K 3rd	K B P one
4. Kt takes P	K Kt to K B 3rd	32. Kt to Q B sq	P takes P
5. K B to Q B 4th	K B to K Kt 5th	33. Q P takes P	K R takes B P
6. Q B P one	K Kt to B 3rd	34. Q takes Q R P	K takes K P
7. Q B to Kt 5th	Castles	35. h to R sq	K R to Q 5th
8. Castles	K R P one	36. K to K 5 sq	Q R to Q 2nd
9. B takes Kt	B takes B	37. Q to her B 5th	K R to Q 4th
10. R B P two (a)	Q Kt to Q 2nd	38. Q to K 3rd	K to K 2nd
11. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q B P one	39. R to K sq	Q B to K B 4th
12. Q to her B 3rd	Q Kt to his 3rd	40. Q R P two	K R P one
13. Q B to Q Kt 3rd	Q P one	41. Q takes B	R takes Q
14. K P one	K B to Kt 2nd	42. R takes R	K to Kt 2nd
15. Q R to Q sq (b)	Q B P one	43. K to K sq	K to B 3rd
16. K Kt to B 3rd	Q B P one	44. R to Q Kt 5th	B to K 5th
17. B takes P (c)	P takes B	45. K to B 2nd	B to his 3rd
18. Q Kt takes P	Q to B 2nd	46. K to K 3rd	K to Q 7th (ch)
19. Q Kt to K 3rd	Q Kt to B 5th	47. K to B sq	K to B 4th
20. Q Kt to Q 5th	Q to her B 4th (ch)	48. K to Kt 4th	B takes P (ch)
21. K to K sq	K to K 5th (d)	49. K to Kt sq	B to h 5th
22. Q to K B 2nd	Q takes Kt	50. Q R P one	K to b 5th
23. Kt takes Q	Kt takes R	51. K to Q Kt 5th	K Kt P one
24. R to Q 4th	K to K 2nd	52. Q Kt P one	K Kt P one
25. K R P one	K R P one	53. P takes P	R P one
26. K to K sq	K to K B 4th	54. R to K R 5th	K to Kt 6th
27. K to K 2nd (e)	B takes Kt	55. R to K 5th	K to K B 6th
28. P takes Kt	Q B to K 3rd	And White surrenders.

(a) The first player has now an excellent game, and his opponent, chiefly from the mistake of his last move, has a very difficult position to defend.

(b) Having at this a position, White appears to play as if any reference to the move of Q to Kt 3rd had been entirely forgotten. A moment's consideration would have shown that this move involves the loss of a piece.

(c) He has nothing better to do. The loss is fatal. If, instead of taking with the Bishop, he takes with the Kt, Black would take Kt with Kt, and, after the B had taken Kt, would attack with his Q, and then take Bishop with his Q P. So also, if, in Reply to taking the pawn at all, he moves the Bishop; Q Kt 4th. Black equally gains the piece by playing Q to K Kt 4th.

(d) The play on both sides is unusually weak. After making a pawn, Black is now compelled, by this blunder, to give up the return, or sacrifice his Queen.

(e) From this point to the conclusion White's play is so deplorably bad, that it would be waste of time to comment on it in detail.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

During the present week, the progress of some of our most popular pastimes has been materially checked. The lover of cricket, being a member of the Marylebone Club, if he dined with that distinguished society, at the Carvendon, on Thursday, learnt the good things in store for him, in the shape of its grand matches for the season, on Monday next; and the amateur sailor, who attended the meeting of the R T Y C, on the same evening, at least, had an opportunity of hearing discussed the pleasant anticipations of the "jovial crew." The first match of the year will take place on Wednesday, the 20th instant; the last match for many was on Thursday. The most important sporting fact of this current se'night, however, was the passage of horse-coursing held on that primeval place of such contests, the Essex, situate beneath the grey walls of Epping Forest, where Bandel Hotter flies. But what horses then suffered, is now transferred to the owner. "Money makes his mare go," lame or lazy, according to the fat of that mysterious Secret Council in whose hands is the fate of the sporting world, and which is kept in a state of ferment among men as "the ring." This dark coi cluve has long been in the habit of selecting Chester as the scene of its especial achievements. Sometimes these were grim —sometimes picturesque—sometimes both in one. Between them—whatever their character—the public was certain to come to the ground People looked upon its course as a sort of racing "no man's land," where Law held its Saturnalia over Justice, and sable her stakes, but rewarded the bandage on her eyes. How far this charter was supported upon the latest opportunity that offered for claiming its privileges, will be seen in the sequel.

Chester Races commenced on Tuesday, and ended yesterday. In a late number of "Punch," it was stated the moment the announcement appeared that Vauxhall Gardens would open on Whit-Monday, the umbrella-makers struck for an advance of sixpence. If they only knew as much as we do, they would adopt a like course a month sooner. The Chester Meeting has, for the last three centuries, secured a copious supply of rain in the district during the whole of the first week of May, to the ruin and gardeners are no wiser of this, that they neglect the accession of their crops accordingly; and where the Grosvenor Stakes dawned upon the abomination of the husbandman, the Ladies' Purse has set upon the cheeks of Ceres and Pomona.

The current week brought no disappointment in its train, and the pilgrimage to the course by the way of the Watergate, as usual, proved an appropriate passage. The sport it began with was meagre. Burlesque taking the lead, in keeping with the occasion and its seasonable appliances. But as the last rest of the racing consists in one issue one event when so eclipses all others, as not only to hide their diminished heads, but to put their tails out of count also—we will confine ourselves to the narrative of the Cup, with its "moving accidents by flood and field." For this great fact, 142 horses were originally named, but as 50 "declared" to the customary process of cash subscription to run not on. Forty or fifty were backed at one price or other as being a certainty for the gentlemen of the ring; for whose peculiar profit, and consequent pleasure, it has taken the form of a handicap sweepstakes. These, of course, sauntered down to the Roodee, to witness whether it also ensure them a hundred or a thousand per cent on their investments. It is said that, if a pig be suffered to swim long enough, he must end by putting his own throat: the handicap is to the public what the fl aking is to the porker only let them wager long enough, and the end is the same. The Chester Cup was conducted and concluded as consistent with the issue of its kind. The legs laid a round anything, that the public would buck; and they, consequently, won upon every investment. A horse won that never was in the betting: that nobody thought capable of doing so because he never was in the betting.

The second horse placed nobody ever suspected would be placed, because he never had a place in the betting The most perfect humbug in the world is the table of odds on handicaps; consequently, handicaps are the best betting in the world for the Ring, which is, also, the most perfect humbug. Such is the morality of the Chester Cup; and, if graver matters were tested by a similar touchstone, they would be found, perhaps, of a similar metal.

TATTERSALL'S, THURSDAY.—A blank day not a bet laid.

AQUATICS.—The following regattas and matches are fixed: Royal Thames Yacht Club, first match for the season, May 20; Thames Club, six-oared race for silver cups, May 21; Eton Regatta, June 2; Kingston Regatta, June 3; Sculling challenge cup match, June 5; Match Newe l (of London) and Henry Cas per (of Newcastle), to row on the Tyne, £100 a side, June 22; Hen ley Regatta, June 25; Ramsgate Regatta, June 26, 27, and 28; Cowes Regatta, July 28; Kingstown Yacht Club Regatta, June 30 and following days; Royal Victoria Yacht Club, at Ryde, August, 11, 12, and 13; Royal Mersey Yacht Club Regatta, July 24—the usual monthly meeting of the members of the Royal Thames Yacht Club held on Thursday evening last, several new members were admitted.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Constantinople, dated April 18, says : "The Sultan gave a dinner a few days ago to the Prince of Hesse d'Arnstadt, the son of the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, and the Foreign Ambassadors were invited ; and Sir Stratford Canning, on their behalf, made a very complimentary speech, concluding by proposing as a toast, 'The eminente cordiale all over the world, and, above all, between England and Turkey.'

Two very violent shocks of earthquake were experienced at Malta on the afternoon of the 28th of March, which extended with equal violence to Sicily, Zante, Corfu, Mytilene, Rhodes, Smyrna, and Alexandria. At Rhodes it created the alarm that the end of the world was at hand. A letter from Malta Correspondent announces a third slight shock shortly before midnight on the 16 h of April, and a fourth sharper shock, at 8 45 p m on the 22nd inst. Accounts from Candia state that the shocks of the 28th of March had done much damage to the buildings in that town; and in consequence of loud and unusual rumbling subterranean noises in the vicinity of the base of Mount Ætna, great consternation prevailed among the inhabitants, who took upon them as forerunners of an eruption of some magnitude.

Smyrna papers of the 17th ult, state that favourable accounts continued to be received from Syria. The winds of the Lebanon was quiet, and both the reports of the Governors to the Porte, and letters of foreign Consuls, describe the people, aided by the priests, as being well disposed to give a favourable trial to the measures proposed by the Government for the future administration of the country.

Letters from Khiva announce the death of the Khan Dehlivi-Rattini-Coub, on the 26th January, while out hunting. His brother was proclaimed Khan of Khiva, on the 30th of the same month. No distinct account of the late. The second Russian caravan of this year was on the point of leaving Khiva for Bokhara, but the death of the Khan caused them to await news from Bokhara, to know if any steps had been taken between the new Khan and the Russian Government. The caravan has since proceeded on its way to Bokhara.

A letter from Leghorn mentions the arrival in that port of the Empress of Russia, and suite. Count Orloff, the Russian Ambassador, and brother of the King of Naples, escorted the Imperial frigate, on board the Stromboli. The Empress and her daughter were going to Florence, to pay a visit to the Grand Duke and family. The unexpected arrival confirms the report that the Czarina will not go again to Rome

A private letter from Tunis of the 19th ult., says: "In five or six days more the Russian frigate will arrive here, on board of which a very beautiful horses, a lion, and other animals will be put on board, as a present from H. H. the Bey, to her Majesty Queen Victoria. General Sidy Emir Mirakl, of his Highness' Cavalry, will accompany the animals.

Letters from Tiflis of the 10th of April, state that the Russians had been defeated by Shamil, the valiant Prince of Caucasus, at a place between Mezamayra and Grosnaya. The Russian entrenched camp is said to have been stormed by the Circassians, the guns captured, and the fortifications razed. The news, however, requires confirmation.

By accounts from Naples it appears that a commercial treaty is to be concluded between the Sovereigns and the Neapolitan Government. After England, the commerce with Germany is of the greatest importance to Naples.

By the Ellenborough, advices of March 11 have been received from the Cape of Good Hope. The Governor, Lieutenant-General Napier, arrived in answer to a statement addressed to him, had intimated his opinion that the Kafirs had not committed any act of hostility. It is certain, however, that there were plenty of cattle of which the Government could lay claim, the enquiry of the local Government had arrived, and appear to have been well received. The influential chief, Pandia, was anxious to cultivate friendly relations.

The Emperor of Russia, Minister of the Marine, has received from Captain Bérard, commanding the Alma corvette, on the New Zealand station, a detailed report of the different places he has visited in his late cruises. Having acquired certain information from the captain, surgeon, and steward of the crew of the Angelina whaler had been massacred about eight months ago by the natives of the island of Cayenne (Galle cup), he, in order to revenge this deed, landed and attacked a body of the natives, whom he put to flight, killing six of them, and destroying their huts. During his investigations he found many articles belonging to the crew of the Angelina.

The Augsburgh Gazette announces, on the faith of letters from Galicia, that Szala, the leader of the peasants in the circle of Tarnow, had gone to the head of the Government of the circle, and declared to him that he has sent home his peasants to their lodges, in order to cultivate the earth, and that everything was restored to order. All that is known positively is that order was allowed to withdraw freely.

The South Devon Railway, from Exeter to Teignmouth, is to be opened on the 8th inst, a circumstance not notewhile from the fact that it is to be worked on the atmospheric principle.

The Government have entered into a further contract with the British and North American Royal Mail Company, the effect of which is to secure a weekly communication by steam between Liverpool and the United States of Am rica. A steamer of great power and size will be dispatched from Liverpool to New York every alternate Sunday during eight months of the year.

The Baden Diet was opened on the 30th of April, by the Grand Duke in person. A project of law for the extension of the railway through the Kinzig Valley will be one of the first questions discussed

Amongst the feudal enactments from which the peasantry of Gallicia have been freed by the recently published decree of the Emperor of Austria, are two oppressive statutes which compelled them, when required, to work with their own horses and carts for the sole benefit of their landlords and also, for some trifling remuneration, to give their service to him, during the hay-making and harvest season, a time when they ought to be employed on their own land.

The Augsburg Gazette publishes a letter from Lemberg (Austrian Gallicia), which contains satisfactory accounts of the restoration of tranquility in the disturbed districts of that country. The recent disturbances at Trebizonde are represented in the same journal to have been completely subdued.

A letter from Bremen of the 25th ult. announces the arrival there of several Protestant mis sers from America, on their way to London, to attend the general mission, which is to take place in August They are about to travel in Germany, in order to study the state of religion in the country, and establish an intimate intercourse between the Lutheran Church in Germany and the same Church in America

By extracts from various journals, there seems reason to apprehend that the coming potato crop will be seriously affected by the disease. Should these anticipations unhappily be realized, the potato disease is to be employed as a staple article of food, and its use among the higher classes will probably be materially rest ict ed

EXPECTED VISIT OF PRINCE ALBERT TO LIVERPOOL.—There is now no doubt of the willingness of Prince Albert to visit Liverpool, for the purpose of laying the foundation stones of the new Sailors' Home, and his Royal Highness is expected in the month of August.

REPRESENTATION OF MONMOUTHSHIRE.—It is currently reported that a movement is in progress to reunite Lord Granville somerset from the representation of his county at the next election.

THE GOVERNMENT AND ANTI-UNIONS.—On Tuesday morning a deputation from the Anti-Union of London, consisting of his Majesty the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Ingestre, Mr. Bankes, M.P., Mr. Newdegate, M.P., Mr. Disraeli, M.P., George Godwin, and Mr. Lewis Pocock, had a long interview with Sir R Peel and the Chancellor of the Exchequer at Downing-street. The result was [illegible] We [illegible] attacked to inspire the [illegible]

THE JUSTICE COLERIDGE.—We regret to state that Mr. Justice Coleridge, who has been suffering from indisposition for a short time past, was unable to attend his official duties. The learned Judge presided in the Bail Court on Wednesday, but by the advice of his medical attendance, left town on Thursday morning for Brighton.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday). The arrivals of English wheat, during the present week, [illegible] as well as by land carriage coastwise, have been to a large extent, and of very [illegible] The quantity on offer to-day being large the demand was very dull at a decline in our quotations obtained on Monday of 2s per quarter. In foreign wheat, free as well as in bond, no little was doing that the prices were almost nominal. The imports last week have amounted to 5,950 quarters. The show of barley was small, yet the sale for that article was heavy, at barley malmary prices. For malt the inquiry was confined to small parcels, yet prices were maintained, especially those of the finest qualities. The arrivals of oats being on the increase the oat trade was very inactive, and the inferior kinds of grain have been pressed on somewhat easier terms. Beans, peas, and flour as last quoted.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 7,790 barley, 1,820 oats, 6600 [illegible] wheat, [illegible] oats, 14,130 Foreign wheat, 9650, barley, 990 oats, 790, Flour, 3220 sacks; malt, 2910 quarters

[illegible] ESSEX and Kent, red, 50s to 63s; ditto white 58s to 70s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, [illegible] ditto white, [illegible] Rye, 34s to 36s—grinding barley, —s to —s; malting ditto, —s to —s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 8s to —s; brown ditto, [illegible] and Ware, —s to —s; Kingston and Ware, —s to —s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire potato ditto, 29s to 31s; Youghal and Cork, ditto, 23s to 32s; ditto, [illegible] tick beans, new, 30s to 32s; ditto old, 33s to 36s; grey peas, 29s to 30s; maple, 30s to 33s; ditto, 31s to 33s; harlers, 41s to 42s per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 45s; Suffolk, 39s to 41s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 39s, per 280 lbs. Barley, Essex and Kent, —s to —s, Lincoln, —s to —s; Scotch, —s to —s per barrel

The Seed Market.—The imports of clover seed being large, holders, to effect sales, have somewhat receded their demand. In all other kinds of seeds little is doing, that the quotations are a shade [illegible]

LIVERPOOL, Friday.—The arrivals of Irish oats, since Monday,—the quotations being 4s 3d to 4s 6d per cwt. For delivery there are sellers at 4ls to 41s 6d in bond Home tallow is heavy, at 41s 6d to 42s 6d per cwt. Linseed cakes, £6 5s to £6 10s per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Monday last, £3 5s to £4 15s; over clo[illegible] £4 6s to £6 0s; out straw, £1 12s to £2 14s; wheat straw, £1 4s to £1 16s per load.

Wool.—Privately, owing to the approaching public sales, exceed ngly little is doing, and prices are with difficulty supported

Potatoes.—The arrivals of potatoes at the water-side continue good; while the demand for most kinds is inactive, at prices varying from 40s to 160s per ton

HOPS (Friday).—There is rather more business doing in the finest colonry hops of last year's growth, at full prices In all other kinds, exceedingly little is passing, at [illegible] The supply remains to offer to any extensive New pockets : Farnham, £7 7s to £10 10s; Kent, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; East Kent, 4l 0s to 4l 10s; Sussex, 4l 10s to 5l 5s; Farnham, 4l 4s to 5l 5s per cwt. Yearlings, 3l 10s to 4l 10s; Old hops, 2l 10s to 3l 3s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Adair's, 3s 6d; Chester Main, 3s; Tanfield Moor, 16s; West Wylam, 14s 3d; Bedlington, 15s; Stewart's, 15s 6d; Lambton, 15s 3d per ton

Smithfield (Friday).—Only a moderate supply of beasts [illegible] portion of which was the refuse of Monday,—was tolerably good, and of fair average quality. The attendance of buyers rose small, to just trade was very dull, at barely stationary prices There were 2,400 beasts 11,000 sheep, and 320 Scots from Aberdeen. The number of foreign cattle in a show were again on the increase, owing to which, the demand for that description of stock was inactive, at late rates From the last of 9l 6s, about 8l 18s have been paid per cwt. for the whole. On the whole, the lamb trade was steady, and previous quotations were well supported. In the calf trade there was a dull tone, at decline in value of 2l per 8lb.

Pork trade was fir[illegible] at late rates

Of 8lb to 8lbs. fat cattle came out for beasts, 3s 6d to 3s 8d, second quality 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 2d to 3s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; second quality, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large lambs, 5s 0d to 5s 4d; prime ditto, 5s 6d to 5s 8d; large calves, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large hogs, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; neat small porkers 4s 0d to 4s 2d; lean ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 32s each. Rosses, 292, oxen, 135; sheep and lambs, 6150; calves, 180, pigs, 280.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—The beef trade was very dull, and 4d per 8lb lower than previous quotat

Of 8lb to 8lb. of carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small di to, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; small pork, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 4d to 6s 8d.

ROBT. HERBERT

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although, at the commencement of the week, some buoyancy was communicated to the Funds, owing to the receipt of the Queen's Speech, the subsequent debate, and the absence of business, and general uncertainty that pervades political events has since produced symptoms of a reaction. Nor is the state of Ireland well calculated to give confidence to capitalists, as the difficulty of procuring commercial accommodation that has existed, and still exists to a certain extent, is gradually displaying its effects by the repeated suspensions in different branches of trade. These circumstances combined, and the inferior caution, and limit speculation, even in Consols. The closing price on Monday was 96¾ ⅞ for Money, and 96⅞ for Account. These prices have been barely maintained, and at the close of the week 96⅞ ⅞ for Money, and 96¾ ⅞ for Account. The rate of discount remains unchanged, and closing at 24 to 27 pm. Bank Stock is flat, at a slight decline, closi g at 201. Reduced is 96¾ ⅞; New Three-and-a Quarter per Cents, 97⅞ to ⅞; Long Annuities, 10 3-16

Although prices in the Foreign Market continue steady, yet business is limited in the extreme. The Spanish Bonds are flattened by the unsettled difficulty of procuring commercial accommodation that has existed, and still exists to a certain extent, is gradually displaying its effects by the repeated suspensions in different branches of trade. These circumstances combined, and the inferior caution, and limit speculation, even in Consols. The closing price on Monday was 96¾ ⅞ for Money, and 96⅞ for Account. These prices have been barely maintained, and at the close of the week 96⅞ ⅞ for Money, and 96¾ ⅞ for Account. The rate of discount remains unchanged, and closing at 24 to 27 pm. Bank Stock is flat, at a slight decline, closi g at 201. Reduced is 96¾ ⅞; New Three-and-a Quarter per Cents, 97⅞ to ⅞; Long Annuities, 10 3-16

Although prices in the Foreign Market continue steady, yet business is limited in the extreme. The Spanish Bonds are flattened by the unsettled difficulty of procuring commercial accommodation that has existed, and still exists to a certain extent, is gradually displaying its effects by the repeated suspensions in different branches of trade. These circumstances combined, and the inferior caution, and limit speculation, even in Consols. The closing price on Monday was 96¾ ⅞ for Money, and 96⅞ for Account. These prices have been barely maintained, and at the close of the week 96⅞ ⅞ for Money, and 96¾ ⅞ for Account. The rate of discount remains unchanged, and closing at 24 to 27 pm. Bank Stock is flat, at a slight decline, closi g at 201. Reduced is 96¾ ⅞; New Three-and-a Quarter per Cents, 97⅞ to ⅞; Long Annuities, 10 3-16

Although prices in the Foreign Market continue steady, yet business is limited in the extreme. The Spanish Bonds are flattened by the unsettled difficulty of procuring commercial accommodation that has existed, and still exists to a certain extent, is gradually displaying its effects by the repeated suspensions in different branches of trade. These circumstances combined, and the inferior caution, and limit speculation, even in Consols. The closing price on Monday was 96¾ ⅞ for Money, and 96⅞ for Account. These prices have been barely maintained, and at the close of the week 96⅞ ⅞ for Money, and 96¾ ⅞ for Account. The rate of discount remains unchanged, and closing at 24 to 27 pm. Bank Stock is flat, at a slight decline, closi g at 201. Reduced is 96¾ ⅞; New Three-and-a Quarter per Cents, 97⅞ to ⅞; Long Annuities, 10 3-16

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 5.

BANKRUPTS.—J. MILLER, Wellesley-street, Hampstead-road, painter. J. VALLE, Manchester, stay-maker. W. SMITH, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, tailor. J. DAILY and A. ANSELL, Long-acre, [illegible] coachmakers. J. G. UFFORD, Broadway, Somerset, [illegible] Bond-street, [illegible] lodging-house keeper. J. WESTON, Blackfriars-road, [illegible] W. WARD, Bond-street, [illegible] J. HOLLAND, Liverpool, [illegible] J. MANSFIELD, Manchester, earthenware manufacturer. J. TAYLOR, Huddersfield, [illegible] grocer. R. WALKER, Liverpool, [illegible] Lancaster, [illegible] J. LATOUR, Liverpool, [illegible]

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—BROWN, Edinburgh, writer. A. RUTHERGLEN, Glasgow, [illegible] J. FRASER, Edinburgh, china merchant. W. MACINTOSH & Co, Glasgow, [illegible] J. and W. STEVENSON and CO, Knows, Renfrewshire, power loom manufacturers

FRIDAY, MAY 8

WAR OFFICE.—Major and 2nd Light Dragoons—F. Chaplin to be Cornet, vice Shaw, 4th Light Dragoons. Cornet and Lieutenant—F. E. Jenkins to be Lieutenant, vice Hall, 13th Light Dragoons. Cornet—H. Lewis to be Cornet, vice Lord J. Browne, 13th Light Dragoons. Lieutenant—J. Hall to be Lieutenant, vice Jenkins, 2nd Foot. Cornet—J. De Rovenzi to be Lieutenant, vice Trower

Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards, Major and Colonel C. A. Shawe to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Watson Capt and Brevet Colonel T. Chapman to be Major, vice Shawe, Ensign and Lieutenant H. Wilkinson to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Chapman, Lieutenant and Captain Lord F. Paulet to be Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Dawkins; Ensign and Lieutenant G. H. White to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Lord F. Paulet. C. R. Burton to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice White, Ensign and Lieutenant C. G. H. Somerset to be Lieutenant, vice Lord F. Paulet.

13th Foot—Lieutenant E. Barnwood to be Lieutenant, vice Beale; Sergeant-Major G. T. Whitaker to be Ensign, vice Barnwood [illegible] Sergeant M'Cabe to be Ensign, vice Stanford. 14th Regiment of Foot—Lieutenant and Adjutant J. Hamilton to be Captain, vice Wilkinson, 1st Foot Lieutenant, vice Glennie, Ensign C. B. Downey to be Second Lieutenant, vice Forbes. 23rd Regiment of Foot—Lieutenant F. E. Jenkins to be Lieutenant, vice Hall, 13th Foot—Second Lieutenant, vice Fraser 29th Major G. Congreve to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Taylor, and 1 Captain W. Hall to be Major, vice Congreve, J. S. Walbran to be Captain, vice Hampshill, Ensign V. Tannoby to be Lieutenant, vice Wilbraham, Ensign W. L. Walpole to be Lieutenant, vice Tennoby. 31st Foot—Ensign and Adjutant J. Bell to be Lieutenant, vice D. Bayley to be Captain, vice Brevet-Major E. Quain, Ensign R. B. Cooke to be Lieutenant, vice Bayley, J. Spratt to be Ensign, vice Cooke; H. Quill to be Ensign, vice Bayley. 38th Regiment of Foot—Ensign the Honble. Edward Bligh to be Lieutenant, vice Hawtrey. 39th Foot—Ensign and Lieutenant W. Wombwell to be Captain, vice Zoltzick, Ensign W. Lindly to be Lieutenant, vice Wombwell. 40th Regiment of Foot—Lieut. D. M'Adam to be Captain, vice Brown; Ensign C. J. Powell to be Lieutenant, vice M'Adam, W. Bellairs to be Ensign, vice Powell. 41st Foot—Lieutenant and Adjutant W. Hennessy to be Captain, vice Pennefather, Ensign W. De Vernet, vice J. G. Lines; Ensign J. Purcell, vice J. G. Ensign, Ensign C. H. Bernard, vice E. Holmes. To be Lieutenants—Ensign J. Page, vice Purcell, C. Cornock, vice Bessor. 58th To be Captains without purchase—Lieut. R. Spring, vice Warren. Lieut. W. J. Vesey, vice Sewell. To be Lieutenants without purchase—Ensign Hon. Arthur Hyde Villiers, vice Kennedy, Ensign J. W. Dunning, to have the rank of Lieutenant Ensign W. J. [illegible] vice Kennedy, Ensign A. Johnson, vice Grubbe, E. Cayley, vice Black, Ensign [illegible] vice M'Kenzie 60th Major G. S. Montgomerie, to be Major, vice Astley, Ensign J. M. Kay M'Kenzie to be Lieutenant, vice Bellairs. 70th Lieut. T. Bell to be Adjutant, vice Hodge, Ensign W. Hodge, Ensign F. A. Wills to be Lieutenant, vice Malcolm; C. Hewitt to be Ensign, vice Wills. 74th Ensign W. A. M. Cumming to be Lieutenant, vice Le Grey. 78th Lieut. F. Hamilton to be Captain, vice A. M. Sussan, Lieut. H. Adam to be Captain, vice Duff, Ensign W. B. Gordon to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton, Ensign J. Hamilton to be Ensign, vice Gordon. 79th R. H. Gad to be Ensign vice Johnstone. Lieut. T. E. Lamotor to be Paymaster, vice C. Jenkins. 84th Ensign Bodle to be Lieutenant, vice Wilson, Ensign [illegible] vice Ramsden, vice Bodle.

Memorandum.—The promotion of Ensign W. Du Vernet to be Lieutenant, on the 3rd March, 1846, has been cancelled.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, MAY 8.

Royal Regiment of Artillery—Lieut. to be Second Captain—E. R. R. Dyneley, vice Chandler; F. H. B. Phillips, vice Power. J. Godby, vice Arbuthnot, B. B. Green vice Kenyon, F. P. Nicolay, vice Hingeston, W. W. Knox, vice Bowen, and Hennessy, vice Bennet, Colonels, vice Smythe, G. W. D. Ray, vice Mowbray; T. M. Harding, vice Phillips, P. D. Bennet, vice Knox, Lieut.-Colonel, vice Hennessy, J. M. Laurie, vice Ray.

Corps of Royal Engineers: Major-Gen F. R. Thackeray, C.B., to be Colonel Commandant, vice Cooke. Lieut.-Colonel and Second-in-command, Major J. J. Tatham, Inverness, vice Southwark, lieutenant. J. and F. WHITELAW, Litchfield street, Soho, [illegible] Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, dealers. J. D. ADAMS, York, tailor. S. SHARP, Leeds, stuff merchant. S. GOLDEN, Manchester, woollen and cotton factor W. GILL, Warrington, Lancashire, cotton manufacturer. PARKER, Liverpool, linen-draper. G. CLARKE, Gloucester, grocer. E. POALE, Kings ridge, victualler. S. KNOWLES, Exeter, brewer

SOUTH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. R. FIRNIE, Edinburgh, picture-dealer. J. R. FINLAY, Glasgow, stock and share broker. J. WATSON, Edinburgh, builder. J. G. BANKHEAD, merchant, Rockmount. J. PROVAN, Glasgow, flesher.

BIRTHS.

At Bath, the lady of the Rev. H. M. Scarth, of a son.—At Salcombe Regis, near Sidmouth, the lady of the Rev. R. Crawshay, of a son.—At Ballahane Fleetwire, the lady of Georgiana Balfour, of twins, a son and daughter.—At Kingston House, Notting-hill, the wife of a daughter.—At Rigby Arbour Lodge, near Manchester, the lady of Captain [illegible] of a son.—At Dublin, the wife of Wadden was Sessions, the attorney, Wexford, of a son.—At the Rev F. D. Wood, of a daughter.—At Knowl-hill, Berkshire, the wife of the Rev. S. Bagot, of a daughter

MARRIAGES

At York, the Rev. Henry Wade Hoskins, to Jessie, [illegible] great daughter of Joseph Dacre, Esq.—At Lagwarraine, Monmouthshire, the Rev J. Leigh Hopkyns, M.A., to [illegible] youngest daughter of the late Commodore Sir J. R. Peyton, K.C.B.—At Trinity Church, Marylebone, Charles Harrison, Esq., youngest son of the late Joseph Harrison, to Henrietta, eldest daughter of Henry Stafford Northcote, Esq.—At St. Pancras New church, Henry Bowyer, to Augusta, daughter of Henry Edgeworth Bunbury, Esq.—At Hampstead, Ralph Leycester, Esq. Hyde Hall-gardens, to Harriet Anne Lubbe, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-General [illegible]

DEATHS.

[illegible] Cambridge, Hanwell, Mary, eldest [illegible] of the late Thomas Anderson Hesketh, Esq.—At Cheltenham, aged 78, Margaret, widow of the late Thomas Drinkwater, Esq.—At Aberdeen, Sarah, the wife of Archibald Clarke.—At York, aged 68, Letitia, Lady Cunliffe, relict of Colonel Lawrence.—At Chester, Thomas Le Cost, Esq., in his 73d year.—At Gosport, St. Lawe's Mary, the wife of John Key, Esq.—At Dover, Rev. Wm. Wray, third son of the late W. Wray, of Ormskirke.—At Brockhurst, near Gosport, the Rev. Frederick William [illegible] M.A.—At Brighton, after a few days' illness, Mary, the wife of Sir Martin Shee, President of the Royal Academy.—At St. Aubyns, Canterbury, in her 83rd year, Ann, relict of Mr. Drayton Moor.

CHESTER RACES.

This celebrated Meeting commenced on Tuesday last; and we have taken this opportunity of introducing to our readers a few specimens of the quaint picturesqueness with which the ancient city of Chester abounds. Mrs. Sigourney has commemorated these peculiarities in some very pleasing lines:

Queer, quaint, old Chester—I had heard of thee
From one who, in his boyhood, knew thee well;
And, therefore, did I scan, with earnest eye,
The castled turret where he used to dwell;
And the fair walnut-tree, whose branches bent
Their broad embracing arms around the battlement.
* * * * *
Grotesque and honest-hearted art thou, sure,
And so behind this very changeful day:
So fond of antique fashions, it would seem,
Thou must have slept an age or two away.
Thy very streets are galleries; and, I trow
Thy people were all born some hundred years ago.

This celebrated City is built on the river Dee, near to where it falls into an estuary of the Irish Channel; 182 miles north-west of London, on the great road to Ireland by way of Holyhead.

The name of Chester, (from castrum, Lat. camp, or castra, camps) implies its Roman origin. The distribution of the streets, the two main thoroughfares cutting each other at right angles, is strictly Roman. There is reason to conclude that the fortifications of the city are on a Roman basis. It is the Deva (i.e., the station on the Dee), of the Antonine Itinerary; and it is conjectured to have been one of the fortresses constructed by Ostorius Scapula, for the security of the Roman army, after the discomfiture of Caractacus, A.D. 50; while it is proved by coins to have been the station of the 20th Legion. It is supposed to have been first permanently occupied by the Romans about A.D. 78, when Agricola became Chief-Governor of the Island; and altars, tesselated pavements, and baths, inscribed with his name, have been discovered here; besides coins, fibulæ, inscribed stones, and altars, the usual vestiges of the Romans.

Chester continued to be a place of consequence long after the withdrawal of the Roman forces. The possession of it was a foremost object with the Saxons and the remains of the Britons. The two nations seem to have possessed it by turns; and it was, certainly, one of the last, if not the last, of the places which yielded to the Saxon power. Its situation, as a frontier fortress against Wales, necessarily gave it importance; but it had, also, a consequence as a place of security for the inhabitants of the coast when they were menaced with invasion from the Danes and Northmen.

Chester is one of the very few places in England which have maintained, in a tolerable state of completeness, the walls which were erected for their defence in remote ages: at no place are they so entire as at Chester. These walls and the rows are the most striking objects in the city: and they are thus described by J. G. Kohl, in his very lively Tour through England:

LOWER BRIDGE-STREET, CHESTER. THE CUP DAY.

"Its walls form a parallelogram; and the two main streets intersect each other at right angles, dividing the parallelogram into four equal quarters, and then extend somewhat beyond the walls. From these main streets a number of by-streets run off on both sides. On the walls is a footpath, with room for two or three persons to pass each other; so that one may walk completely round the city. Indeed, these city walls, two miles in circumference, form the chief promenade of the town-people. According to tradition, they were built by Cymbeline, in the century before the birth of Christ. Of course they have undergone many alterations since then; and in later times they have been much reduced in height and converted to their present purpose of a public walk five feet in breadth; and a curious promenade it is; sometimes up hill, and sometimes down; at one point closely wedged in between houses, while at another the narrow path passes under some ancient watch-tower: here it runs under a gateway; and there we must descend a flight of steps, because the wall has been cleared away to make room for a street: now we pass behind the venerable cathedral, and now in front of the spacious old castle, which has been converted into a military barrack. There is only one other town in England that can boast of an equally singular public walk, viz., York, which is surrounded by just such another old wall. To say the truth, Chester is the very town for curious promenades; for it contains walks even more curious than the wall I have endeavoured to describe. These are 'the rows,' as they are called. They are long covered passages, running parallel with the streets, through the first floors of the houses. The thing is not very easy to describe. Let the reader imagine the front wall of the first floor of each house to have been taken away, leaving that part of the house completely open towards the street, the upper part being supported by pillars or beams. Let him then imagine the side-walls also to have been pierced through, to allow a continuous passage along the first floors of all the houses. How the people of Chester came in this way to spoil their best floor in so many of their houses is a matter that was never made perfectly clear to me.

"There are a number of towns in Germany, particularly in Silesia and the Austrian dominions, where covered passages for the accommodation of the public, have been made to run through or round private houses; but then these passages or galleries are always on the ground-floor, and on a level with the street. Some English antiquaries will have it that these rows were intended as a means of defence, Chester being exposed to frequent attacks from the Welsh on one side, and from the Scots on the other, when, after the city walls had been forced, the citizens were able to defend themselves in these rows. In support of this theory it has been asserted that, in all the battles which, during the civil wars in England, occurred in Chester, the party in possession of 'the rows' almost invariably obtained the victory. It must not be imagined that these rows form a very regular or uniform gallery. On the contrary, it varies according to the size or circumstances of each house through which it passes. Sometimes, when passing through a small house, the ceiling is so low that one finds it necessary to doff the hat; while in others one passes through a space as lofty as a saloon. In one house the row lies lower than in the preceding, and one has, in consequence, to go down a step or two; and perhaps a house or two further, one or two steps have to be mounted. In one house, a handsome new-fashioned iron railing fronts the street; in another, only a mean wooden paling. In some stately houses the supporting columns are strong, and adorned with handsome antique ornaments; in others, the wooden piles appear time-worn, and one hurries past them, apprehensive that the whole concern must topple down before long. The ground-floors, over which the rows pass, are inhabited by a humble class of tradesmen; but it is at the back of the rows themselves that the principal shops are to be found. This may give an idea of how lively and varied a scene is generally to be seen there. Indeed, the rows are generally full of people either making their little purchases in the shops, or bounding to these boarded floors, to avoid the disagreeable pavement of the streets. Perhaps these rows may be in some way connected with another singularity pointed out to me at Chester. The streets do not, as in other towns, run along the surface of the ground, but have been cut into it; and that, moreover, into a solid rock. The rows are in reality on a level with the surface of the ground, and the carriages rolling along below them are passing through a kind of artificial ravine. The back wall of the ground-floor is everywhere formed by the solid rock; and the court-yards of the houses, their kitchens and back-buildings, lie generally 10 or 12 feet higher than the street. The English historians and antiquaries have given themselves a great deal of trouble about this matter, without having been able to assign a rational hypothesis as to the motives which could have induced the ancient settlers in Chester to undertake so colossal a work as to hollow out all their streets. For my part, I own myself unable to suggest either a reasonable motive or an unreasonable one.

Chester Races are of great antiquity, and are the remains of the city games celebrated on Roodeye, the present race-course, which affords the singular advantage of the spectators from every point being enabled to see the horses during the whole race. Formerly, the Mayor and Corporation went in state to see the race for the Annual City Plate, which they viewed from a building near the Watergate, now taken down. The Sheriffs, who are still the judges of the race, used to sit with their official wands, one in the Distance, and the other in the Coming-in Chair.

THE RACE FOR THE CUP.

NORTHGATE-STREET, CHESTER.—THE CUP DAY.

We have engraved three specimens of these Rows. In the first of them, Lower Bridge-street, the Rows have nearly disappeared, and the ancient half-timbered house has given way to the less sightly wall with holes in it, as a London house-front has been called. In the second, Northgate-street, the Rows are chiefly formed of wood, and retain much of their antiquity. In the third scene, Bridge-street, the Rows are still, for the most part, entire and continuous; and the galleries and gables are very frequent. In the distance is shown St. Peter's Church, which stands exactly in the centre of the city, where the four principal streets meet.

THE RACES.

On Monday, the good old town was, as usual, "as busy as it could be, everything being on the qui vive." The Liverpool Standard, of Monday evening, says—"Although a better meeting was never anticipated than the coming one, the Cup is the whole talk, and the amount of starters expected to be not less than thirty, some say thirty-five; a good field certain, with more starters than will be pleasant, when each is in search of a good place, and pot-luck is likely to be the dish of the day—every man to his own 'sow's pluck.'

"The town-folks are in high glee about the quantum suff. of engagements, every bed and other restable being bespoke. What will become of the entire strangers? The citizens will no doubt make room, and shift for themselves somehow or other; but not without making the late ones pay the piper.

"The arrivals were this season later than usual. Pitvraagh, only, showed on Friday; Saturday brought in more, and Sunday wonders. A larger or better meeting could not have been anticipated than was then made certain of; and the unusual quantity of strangers, and, to boot, "racers," caused the city to look up. The fashionable world have not yet arrived, although some sprinkling of the Lords came yesterday, to see the sweating this morning. To-morrow will bring the élite, and to night will very nearly disclose the secrets of many stables—what is here, and what is not."

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Five o'Clock.—A list, at the best of slender pretensions was rendered almost to a skeleton by a walk over for the Produce Stakes, and had it not been for the Two Year Old Stakes, would have afforded but an indifferent opening to the meeting. The running did not commence until a quarter before three, the Grosvenor Stakes, as usual, being the first event; the walk over succeeded; and at a quarter before four the Two Years Old were started, the rain descending in torrents at the time.

The Grosvenor Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, with 30 added.

Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque, 3 yrs	.. (Tasker)	1
Mr. Mostyn's c by Phœnix, out of L'Hirondelle, 3 yrs	.. (Evans)	2

Produce Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. F. R. Price's Kismet walked over.

Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each for Two-year olds.

Lord George Bentinck's ch c Glenlilt	(Nat)	1
Mr. Pedley's Foreclosure	(Templeman)	2

A Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each, with 50 added; heats.

Captain Harcourt's The Druid	(Winteringham)	1
Mr. W. Scott's Highfield	(Prince)	2

WEDNESDAY.

The Corinthian Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Lord Chesterfield's New Brighton	(Mr. P. Williams)	1
Mr. H. Johnstone's Blind Hookey	(Owner)	2

THE TRADESMEN'S PLATE OF £200, added to a Handicap of 25 sovs.

Mr. G. H. Moore's Corranna, aged, 8st 9lb ..	(F. Butler)	1
Mr. A. Johnstone's Brother to Sir Henry, 3 yrs, 4st 10lb	(Ryder)	2
Sir C. Monck's Glossy	(Cartwright)	3

Won by half a length. Thirty-one started.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas.

Mr. G. H. Moore's Wolfdog	(Nat)	1
Mr. Mostyn's b c, by Phœnix, out of l'Hirondelle		2

Sixty Guineas, given by the City Members. Heats.

Mr. Meiklam's Diomed	(Duncan)	1
Mr. Arrowsmith's Tractarian		2

CHESTER RACES.

Away! "the Corner" is deserted;
Away to Chester's ancient walls!
A thousand screaming trains have started;
'Tis nook or nothing—Pleasure calls;
From every ingle of our Islands,
From east and west, from north and south,
From Walmer to Glengarry's Highlands,
From Galway to the Bull and Mouth,
Away they stout the poor and peasant,
Age and youth, the frigid and beauty,
Boiling towards the City pleasant,
Every steed will do its duty.

Chesterfield—pink of Corinthians—takes,
As a matter of course, the Corinthian Stakes.
Now Brighton has opened the eyes of Blind Hookey,
All "Walker" with him. Fossin is "all Sukey."
The Handicap (Tradesmen's) Corranna has won,
Well known on the Curragh as up to the fun.
The Shine s out of "Glossy" The Queen of the Tyne.
Her Carbonic Majesty's on the decline.

Oh! who can count—not Pindar's self—
The names now put upon the shelf?
Oh! who can count the trembling hopes
When Epsom all its glories opes?

For Chester is but as a pilot balloon
To sheer monster Derby the way to the moon;
A course which if goats be too warmly pursuing,
The odds are, will end in unqualified ruin.

The rain is pouring—faster, faster—
Unheeded by the steed and master.
"Hope," as saying, told a tale
Too distorting for that to fail.
The Druid yet may gain his Oaks;
Unhappy Felix miss'd his strokes,
The Hetman, and the Charlie grim—
Though fair of form in every limb—
Will still be scored best, if that—
The rest all weary, stale, and flat.

The farmer feels his vacant fob—
'Twas visited by the small mob!
The Chevaliers d'industrie,
Whose trade goes on most patmily.
The day o'er, and Chester race
To Epsom Downs must now give place.
The Derby—name to Cockneys dear—
Will soon—delightful thought!—be here.

BRIDGE-STREET, CHESTER.—THE CUP DAY

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. BROTHERTON, M.P.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

MACE OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

For several years past, there has been a popular notion that the Mace, or Bauble, which forms part of the insignia of the Royal Society, was identical with that which was turned out of the House of Commons by Cromwell, when he uttered the remarkable words, "Take away that fool's bauble." It is hard to conjecture how such a story originated; but to account for its obtaining credence is a matter of less difficulty. There is a general fondness for such coincidences, or identities, in the public mind; their success in "leading men for the nonce" is truly astonishing; and the circumstantiality with which they are usually narrated gives them a resistless air of probability.

We remember the currency given to the above story in a literary journal of repute, some fifteen years since; and we unhesitatingly repeated the version in the notice of the Royal Society, in No. 86 of our Journal. This error, which we are here anxious to correct, has just been explained by Mr. C. R. Weld, assistant-secretary and librarian to the Royal Society, in a paper read by this gentleman, at the Thursday evening meeting, on the 30th of April. The painstaking author has traced the history of "the bauble," which was made expressly for the Commonwealth Parliament a few weeks after the execution of Charles the First, and which was quite different in form from the Royal Mace, being nearly destitute of ornament. This Mace was used in the House of Commons till within a month of the Restoration, when a new Mace was ordered to be made, to be like that formerly used in the time of Charles the First. The Mace in the possession of the Royal Society has, not only a large crown and cross, but also the Royal arms and the letters "C. R.," four times repeated, which makes it evident that it is not identical with the Commonwealth Mace.

But, not satisfied with this evidence, Mr. Weld instituted a rigid search among the archives in the Lord Chamberlain's office for the warrant which, he supposed, might be in existence for the making of a Mace for the Society; and was so fortunate as to find, in the book of warrants for the year 1663, a warrant under the head of "Jewel House," ordering "one guilt Mace of 150 oz. to be prepared and delivered to Lord Viscount Brouncker, President of the Royal Society of London, for improving of natural knowledge by experiments, being a guift from his Majestie to the said Society." The discovery of this document, dated 1663, (the year in which the Royal Society received the Mace from Charles II.,) entirely destroys the long entertained belief of the identity of the bauble Mace and that in the possession of the Royal Society.

The latter is of silver, about 4 feet in length, and very massive: it was gilded several years ago, at an expense of £20. It bears the following inscription:—

Ex Munificentia
Augustissimi Monarchæ
CAROLI II.,
Dei Gra. Mag. Brit., Franc., et Hib., Regis &c.
Societatis Regalis ad Scient-am Naturalem promovendam
Instituta
Fundatoris et Patroni,
An. Dni. 1663.

MACE OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

THE MIDDLESEX HOUSE OF DETENTION.

On Monday last, a very important step was taken in the improvement of the system of Prison Discipline in this country, by the laying of the first stone of a Prison, or "House of Detention," for the reception of prisoners before trial. Hitherto, no such provision has been made in this country; although it has existed in New York for many years past.

"The New Prison," Clerkenwell, was, heretofore, the general receiving Prison of Middlesex for offenders committed, either for re-examination before the police magistrates, for trial at the Sessions, for want of bail, and even on summary conviction. This prison was termed "New" from having been built so lately as 1820, nearly on the site of a Prison erected in 1616, in consequance of the insufficient accommodation in Bridewell at that period. It was a place of some notoriety, and figures in the veritable History of Jack Sheppard, the fetters used in confining whom were of double the usual weight, and were preserved here as a "sight."

THE MIDDLESEX HOUSE OF DETENTION.

The "New Prison" presented a most anomalous appearance. Some degree of classification was, indeed, attempted; but, as the limits of the Prison compelled thirty, forty, or more prisoners to remain together in a small room, this division was more nominal than real: the attempt was, at one time, limited to marking divisions on the floor, within which certain classes were desired to remain. The daily average number in custody here in 1845, was 134; upon which it is observed, in the Tenth Report of the Inspectors of Prisons (just printed) "the moral contamination resulting from the congregation of these large numbers in the daycoms and dormitories, must, indeed, have been fearful." Again, the Inspectors' Reports were invariably condemnatory of the economy of the Prison; according to, at a late Quarter Sessions of the County Magistracies, it was resolved that this Prison should be taken down, and an enlarged county gaol adapted for the separate system erected on its site. The prisoners then in the gaol were sent to the Westminster Bridewell, and a commencement was forthwith made in the erection of the New Prison, and, although the "first stone" was laid on Monday last, the basement, and one of the wings for officers' residences, were already completed

The Committee of Magistrates appointed by the Court to superintend the erection of New Prison, invited their fellow Magistrates to attend several days, to witness the ceremony of laying the stone, by the Marquis of Salisbury, the Custos Rotulorum of the County. The hour appointed was two o'clock, by which time the party had assembled at the Session House, at Clerkenwell, whence they proceeded across "the Green" to the prison site, in the following order:—

High Constable
Mr. Manley, the Architect
Mr. Grindell, Builder
Mr. Mault, Deputy Clerk of the Peace
Mr Welch, Clerk of Committees.
Sessions Beadle.

Mr Talk, Chairman of the Hanwell Asylum Committee
The Rev. G. JEPSON, Chaplain.
Mr Pryor, Chairman of the House of Correction

Mr. Allen, the County Treasurer
The Assistant Judge, with Noble Visitors
The Sessions' Attorney, with Trowel, Mallet, &
Mr Pownall, Chairman of the Court
The MARQUIS OF SALISBURY.
Mr. Rotch, Chairman of the Building Committee

Magistrates and their Friends

On reaching the stone, the authorities being grouped around it, Mr. Rotch, Chairman of the Building Magistrates' Committee, opened the proceedings with a well considered address, emphatically explaining the advantages to be expected from "the erection of a Prison, for the first time in England, adapted for the reception of prisoners before their trial. There were many who might come for the common goals to be of that character, but he would wish them to remember that those goals contained a great many other prisoners of different classes as well as unconvicted. Their object was to have a prison which might do away with that most objectionable practice, the taking of bail, not with reference to the offence, but to the parties committed. It had often happened in his memory that persons in the higher ranks of life were arrested for misdemeanors bail, and then forfeited the amount of the bail, where by justice was defeated. This was a great evil, but all would shudder at the idea that any man, whether he was a noble or a labourer, should be required, on the charge of guilt, to enter the House of Correction. It was the wish of the Committee of Erection, that every man who had been committed on a charge of crime—that the verdict of his peers would clear the innocent man from the gaols of the country—that a separation should take place from the guilty of the land. He trusted that the example which had been set by the great country of Middlesex would be followed by the magistracy of others; and, whatever the opinion as to solitary confinement might be, he trusted he should be borne in mind that that system would be carried out only in its widest form. He hoped that the effect would be to check youth in the first step of vice.

Three cheers were then given for the Marquis of Salisbury; and the ceremony being thus concluded, the company returned in procession to the Sessions House, where they partook of an elegant cold collation, which had been prepared and laid out by Messrs. Nelson, of the Albion Tavern.

Mr. Pownall, the Chairman of the Court of Magistrates, presided, and was supported by the Marquis of Salisbury on his right, and the Earl of Chichester on his left hand. There were also, at the cross table, Mr. Serjeant Adams, the Assistant Judge; Colonel Wood, M.P.; Colonel Thos. Wood, M.P.; Mr. Buckley, M.P.; Mr Sheriff Laurie, &c.

Mr. Pownall, after proposing the health of the Marquis of Salisbury, adverted to some very interesting criminal statistics, shewing the decrease of crime, in proof of the importance of the movement that had taken place with respect to the treatment and reformation of prisoners.

The Marquis of Salisbury having returned thanks, "the Building Committee of Magistrates" was the next toast, for which Mr. Rotch, the chairman, returned thanks, observing, with regard to the separate system, they had at present that, under the superintendence of an active and intelligent magistracy, the system in that county would ever be attended with injurious effects. (Cheers.) They had that day set an example which he trusted soon to see followed by every county in England. (Cheers.)

Mr Serjt. Adams proposed "The health of the Earl of Chichester, and the other Commissioners of the Model Prison, coupled with the name of Mr. Joshua Jebb, Surveyor-General and Russell." The learned gentleman expressed his opinion that the experiment at Pentonville of the solitary system has been very successful, notwithstanding all that they had heard to the contrary. He (the learned Serjeant) chose to how great an extent the juvenile offender yet remained in this country uncared for; and alluded to an experiment made at Warwick, in which, by the mode of treatment pursued with young criminals, a reformation of 75 per cent. was effected.

The Earl of Chichester returned thanks, and in doing so quoted the authority of Dr. Paley, president of the Board and Dunn Institution in Scotland, to prove that the solitary system as practised at Pentonville was not liable to the objections of the American plan.

The next toasts were "The Members of Parliament for the County of Middlesex" (acknowledged by Colonel Wood), and "The Lord Mayor and Magistrates of the City of London" acknowledged by Sheriff Laurie)

The health of the Assistant Judge, and of the Rev Mr. Field and Mr. Merry, were then proposed and duly responded to; and shortly after five o'clock the company separated.

We have engraved the front elevation of the New Prison, from the Architect's drawing. On a future occasion, we shall present to our readers the ground-plan.

MR. BROTHERTON, M.P.

Many members of Parliament have, by long application to peculiar measures and motions, acquired a kind of vested interest in them. Mr. Hume has been, time out of mind, the inspector general of accounts—the "old grub" of Treasury balance sheets the detector of stray hundreds, and totals made up by an imaginative process rather than an arithmetical one. Mr. Ewart has the punishment of death as his theme, and, in sly, has acquired a parliamentary property in the Act-Unions, which seem to be his death by law. Mr. Villiers will go down to posterity as the annual repealer of the Corn-laws, with a motion for which he every year has kicked at the door of Parliament and the heart of Minister Mr Mackinnon has set his mind on compelling the sailor-lad not to be smoked, and on prohibiting the burial of lie dead in our crowded cities The first is pronounced to be difficult.—the last, Sir J. Graham says, is impossible. In France and Spain the punishment and abolition of practice was abolished a century ago but what a Secretary of State says must be true, and the living subject still to daily contrapuses on the most sacred feelings of humanity, and can only wish Mr. Mackinnon success, and a speedy triumph. Other peculiar and motions there are scattered about the House of Commons, which various members take to themselves, and annually make a display the proper seldom with much result, save the chance of type in the next morning's paper.

But Mr Brotherton hath a bobby, to which those of all others are but poor stalking horses: chairs are trotted out but once a session or so—Mr. Brotherton mounteth his nightly; he it is who, from the back bench on the left hand of the Chair—(contrary to classic usage, by the way; the auspicious omen came not in the sinistral way, but dexterously on the slightly more, as early possible, that "this House do now adjourn." It may sir, rise those Parliamentary mysteries, that the Speaker cannot adjourn himself, by the ordinary formula of getting up and walking out of the House common men might do this, but the Speaker is no common man Unless some Member pronounce the spell, there the Speaker must sit, through the night and on till next day, fast bound as the Fairy in "Comus," or any other enchanted Sabrina. There is a tradition that the calamity once actually happened, or was about to happen; and that a messenger caught two Members and brought them back, and the imprisoned Speaker released. But the incident is noted in remote times, and be.ief in it is not executed.

Mr. Brotherton confines from choice a practice he first took up on principle, and for his perseverance in it we cannot help thinking the House is much indebted to him. The hours hon gentlemen will sit when they are in a business humour have no limit from weariness. There is nothing like a snug party of half-a-dozen or so for passing bills or clauses, or getting rid of any other sonde that were done the better; there was less risk of "a confounded distraction" about them. Imagine the delight of an Admiralty Secretary or Ordnance Clerk getting through the estimates with the clock pointing to half-past two, and Mr. Hume in bed and asleep, assured that nothing was done on his way "at that hour of the evening." The opportunity seldom occurred, but the luxury of it was the more appreciated, and when it did, the chance was never thrown away. How the hundreds of thousands went!

But this mode and time of doing business not being universally approved, some check was attempted to be placed on the inordinate love of work, and Mr. Brotherton, for Session after Session, always opposed entering upon any fresh business after midnight. A pending debate, it appears, must be finished, this was the axiom of his rule, but to say how much question after that hour he opposed the motion of adjournment. To a great extent he succeeded, and, doubtless, had his reward in the approval of his own conscience, and the thanks of his constituents, with whom the hon. gentleman is deservedly popular. The only fault that can be found with him is an occasional want of sternness; he is sometimes prevailed on by an imploring look from the Treasury bench, and "only this next vote," or "just this bill through Committee." At such times he has not always enough of the Roman in him; he relents, shakes his head deprecatingly, and looks at the clock; but as it is "only just one," allows the infraction of his rule. It is a necessary consequence of his self-devotion that Mr Brotherton is the last man to be seen on the benches; he and the mace generally par together. The hon. gentleman represents Salford; he not unfrequently joins in the debates, but never at much length, or obtrusively. He is extremely liberal in all his opinions. He has sat for the borough since 1841.

ADVERTISEMENTS

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty THE QUEEN, PRINCE ALBERT, and the PRINCESS ROYAL. Unprecedented success of Mr. Batty's Company for Aerial Spectacle, while is nightly hailed with the most enthusiastic applause. On MONDAY, MAY 11th, and each evening during the Week, THE AERIAL DUKE HUBBARD, or the Feast of Flowers; introducing the Double Slide and Treble Ascent. New and popular SCENES, Decorations, Dresses, and Appointments. First appearance of Mr. Batty's Company in the new and splendid BALLET, in which the principal Pantomimists of the establishment will appear.—Doors open at six, to commence at Seven.—Stage Director, Mr. T. Thomas.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY, May 15, 1846, will be repeated HAYDN'S ORATORIO, THE CREATION. Principal Vocal Performers, Miss Sparkes and Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. Phillips. The Band of 1 Chorus will consist of more than 500 Performers. Tickets, 5s. each, Reserved Seats, in the Gallery, 3s. In the Area, 10s. 6d. may be obtained of the principal Music Sellers; of Mr. BOWLEY, 83, Charing-cross, Mr. HIME, 124, Strand, or of Mr. MITCHELL, 33, Charing-cross.

JOHN GOSS, Hon. Sec.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY.—THE EXHIBITIONS OF PLANTS, FLOWERS, and FRUIT, in the GARDENS of the SOCIETY, in REGENT'S PARK will be held on Wednesdays, May 20, June 3rd, July 15th. Tickets may be obtained at the Gardens, by presenting an order from a Fellow or Member. Price Half-a-Crown each.

COLOSSEUM.—LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE.—In consequence of many persons having been disappointed in not witnessing the splendid, atmospheric effects at the marvellous Panorama of London by Night, they will be repeated every half-hour instead of every hour. Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five, and Half past Ten. Holiday Prices contained.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—Panorama of London.—Illustrated Descriptive Lecture every Evening at Seven. Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, &c., &c

GUN-MAKER AND AIR CANES.—An entirely New and further improved Assortment of those portable and silently-destructive weapons now on sale, adapted by RIGLEY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea-fowl, &c., with ball, small shot, with small fish with harpoons, &c. &c., from 30s. each.—RIGLEY, Gun-Maker, 316, Holborn.

PAPER HANGINGS.—A Stock of 50,000 Pieces always Ready in Satins, Flocks, Gold, Damasks Oaks, Granite, Hard Marbles, &c. &c., at extraordinary prices Terms, Cash.—Paper Stainers supplied with long Elephant at Mill Prices.—Cash.—ROSCHALLAS, 32, Rudge-row, City, corner of Moo-lane.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which persons are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.
HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

BEDFEATHERS.
Mixed .. .. 1s. 6d. per lb. | Best Foreign Grey Goose .. 2s. 6d. per lb.
Grey Goose .. .. 1s. 9d. | Best Irish White ditto .. 2s. 6d.
Foreign .. .. 1s. 6d. | Best Dantzic ditto .. .. 3s. 0d.
HEAL and SON, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

NICOLL'S PALETOT of LLAMA CLOTH, registered 6 and 7 Vic., cap. 65, Patronised by the Nobility, the Universities of Cambridge, &c. This Overcoat recommends itself to the public generally, by its peculiar elasticity and lightness, moderate price, and safe defence against the almost constant humidity of the climate of Great Britain. To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, Regent-street.

THE CORAZZA SHIRT.—Directions for Gentlemen to take their own measures for the CORAZZA, and every other style of Shirt, are sent by post, on application to T. MASKELL and WATERS, Hosiers and Glovers, 232, Regent-street, London. If a set be ordered, a sample will be first made, and sent, carriage-free.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very low prices, for cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warerooms, 86, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above 20s. sent throughout England carriage paid.
John Capper and Son's General Linendrapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change

OUTFITS for INDIA, by Ship and Overland, including every article of Clothing, Bedding, and Portmanteaus, are SUPPLIED, with every necessary, by THRESHER and GLENNY, 152, Strand, where lists of outfits necessary for every purpose and appointment, with prices and particulars, may be had on application M.B. The only house in London for Thresher's India gauze waistcoats and the new overland trunk.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street. Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully established by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted Millinery Rooms.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to [illegible] Patentees of the Sylphide Parasol, which they have much pleasure in recommending to the Public as the most elegant and convenient Parasol ever introduced, and can be procured at J. SANGSTER'S Manufactory, 140, Regent-street; 94, Fleet-street; and 10, Royal Exchange.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—G. B SANDER, [illegible], 328, Holborn, corner of Southampton-buildings has now on view a splendid [illegible] of Dinner Services, Dessert Services, Tea and Toilet Services, and Table GLASS &c., and of the very first quality, to which he respectfully solicits attention That portion of the Stock which he has purchased of the late firm is also at a large reduction, for cash It includes a great number of rich Tabl and Dessert Services, and to parties who may be likely to require these articles, will be found particularly worthy of notice.

BURTON BREWERY COMPANY (late Wilders and Co.), Burton-upon-Trent. INDIA PALE ALE, and every variety of BURTON ALES.—The choice and qualities of these much-admired Ales can now be forwarded direct from the Brewery to all parts of the Kingdom or may be obtained of the following Agents already appointed for the Company:—R. Shearing, 10, Pudding-lane, London; T. Lack, 24, Mount-street, Birmingham; T. Clint, Warwick-street, Leamington; G. Whitehead and Sons, Oxford-street, Liverpool; S. Best, Marsh lane, Leeds.—April, 1846.

PERRY AND CO'S PATENT PAPER HOLDERS, or PIPER PILES, with Elastic Bands The advantages of these Paper Holders, with Patent Elastic Bands, over ordinary Letter Files, are very important Letters or papers are kept in perfect order, without perforating them, or they may be instantly entered or referred to, removed, or replaced, and the number may be increased or diminished without affecting their security. Manufactured of the following sizes, foolscap, cash, and upwards, 18s.; 8vo., 14s.; royal 4to, and foolscap folio. Other sizes made to order.
* * 5 per Cent discount allowed for cash articles. Wholesale and for Exportation, by PERRY and Co., 37, Red Lion-square, London.

ANCIENT ROMAN BRASS COINS, 1s. each; Silver, 2s. 6d. and 5s. with good Portraits of the Ancie t Roman Emperors from Cæsar—Augustus, Caligula, Trajan, Nero, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Claudius, Hadrian, Antoninus, Julius Tetricus, Carausius, Constantine the Great, &c. 7s., 5s., 3s. each Silver Portraits of Edward the Confessor and Canute, 7s., 5s. each; Silver English Pennies, 2s. 6d.; Groats, 1s. each; Half-Groats, 6d. each; Edwards and Henrys, 2s. each; Groats and Half Dies of the Edwards and Henrys, 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.; very fine Groats of Henry VIII., 2s. 6d. to 5s. Sovereign, 30s.; Crowns, Guineas the Great in cash Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s. each.—Any of the above sent by post on receipt of cash. A Week's Gratis Numismatic News. T. PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London.

TO CONNOISSEURS.—A Delicious Novelty for Table.—BECKETHORN'S BISCUIT, Patronised by Her Majesty the Queen, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Her Royal Highness Duchess of Gloucester, composed of the most exquisite ingredients, and such must be used by those who are desirous to approve all others, for Wine, Liqueurs, Punch, and Dessert.—Manufactured by the Inventor, for GEORGE BECKETHORN, 111, Fleet-street, London, Factory Bread and Biscuit Baker In Packages, 1s.; Boxes, 1s. 6d., 2s., 3s. 6d., and 5s. each; or 2 Biscuits, 1s. Sold by most of all the leading Wine and Biscuit Bakers Grocers, and Biscuit Bakers Town and Country Agents Wanted.

THOUSANDS of SHIRTS for INSPECTION.—RODGERS and SON, 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Tailors to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and patentees.—From the construction of the Patent Flexible Habit, no unusual pressure on the forehead is entirely removed and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves freely to the shape of the head, the wearer will possess, moreover, being wool and, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat are additional advantages. An entire Riding Habit may be had ready made, and will display their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent-street; and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly appreciated appendage of the British Toilet has, for nearly a century past, maintained unrivalled repute as a fragrant and refreshing Lotion for the skin, together with the valuable properties of a preserver and sustainer of the complexion of the most delicate texture, removing every trace of sallowness and discoloration, and promoting that transparency and brightness of the skin, which constitute the greatest charm of beauty. Prepared only by HARVEY BRADLEY SHAW, LONDON, in the White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d.; Quarts, 18s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

LADIES TRAVELLING during the HEAT and DUST of SUMMER, will find ROWLAND'S KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying irritation, and immediately restoring the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sun-burn, Freckles, Tan, and other discolorations are pleasingly eradicated by the KALYDOR, and the Skin rendered delicately clear and blooming. The following highly esteemed properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain as well as the Continental Sovereigns, and the Elite of Europe, for the Nursery and Haute Volée.
* * * Observe the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," are on the Wrapper of each genuine Bottle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle. All others are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS!

BUTLER'S TASTELESS SEIDLITZ POWDER.—The whole of the ingredients of this delicious Saline are usually combined in the powders offered to the public in two separate portions, are here combined in one compound powder. Being reduced in a portable, yet elegant form, it is admirably adapted during the longest sea voyage or land journey. The solution, besides being more palatable, is made in much less time, and will be infinitely less trouble than that produced with the two powders prepared in the usual way. In 8s. 6d. bottles—The Genuine, and sold by BUTLER and HARDING Chemists, &c. (Chemist-in-Ordinary to the Queen's Household), 4, ST. PAUL'S, London; and may be obtained of J. BANNER, 150, Oxford-street; DAVENPORT and STEWART, 39, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and also of their Agents in every part of the Kingdom.

NEGLECTED COUGHS and COLDS oftimes terminate in CONSUMPTION. Of the dreadful deaths in 1845 (2,295 more than in 1844), while many, when even in its latter stages, have, by taking MANN'S APPROVED MEDICINE, been restored to health. Sold by the Proprietor, 2, Wellington-street, Strand, and all Medicine Vendors, in the following sizes, according to the accompanying directions, with which the infinitely less trouble than that produced with the two powders prepared in the usual way. In 8s. 6d. bottles—The Genuine, and sold by BUTLER and HARDING Chemists, &c. (Chemist-in-Ordinary to the Queen's Household), 4, ST. PAUL'S, London; and may be obtained of J. BANNER, 150, Oxford-street; DAVENPORT and STEWART, 39, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and also of their Agents in every part of the Kingdom.

NEGLECTED COUGHS and COLDS oftimes terminate in CONSUMPTION. Of the dreadful deaths in 1845 (2,295 more than in 1844), while many, when even in its latter stages, have, by taking MANN'S APPROVED MEDICINE, been restored to health. Sold by the Proprietor, 2, Wellington-street, Strand, and all Medicine Vendors, in the following sizes, according to the accompanying directions, with which the infinitely less trouble than that produced with the two powders prepared in the usual way. In 8s. 6d. bottles—The Genuine, and sold by BUTLER and HARDING Chemists, &c. (Chemist-in-Ordinary to the Queen's Household), 4, ST. PAUL'S, London; and may be obtained of J. BANNER, 150, Oxford-street; DAVENPORT and STEWART, 39, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and also of their Agents in every part of the Kingdom.

TO THE NERVOUS.—GIVEN AWAY, a PAMPHLET, containing Four Chapters on the History and Physiology of NERVOUS COMPLAINTS, and on the peculiar treatment by which all Disorders of the Nerves however chronic and [illegible] may be completely and permanently removed. Any person kindly presenting a patient of the highest rank or sensibility With an Appendix of Cases, and Testimonials of Cures from the Right Hon. the EARL of SEFTON, 7, Northumberland-street Trafalgar-square, will receive by [illegible] one perfect stamp, in return for which the Pamphlet will be forwarded free to any address, &c. Home daily from 11 to 4, and in the Evening from 7 to 9. No Consultation Fee.
With a concise statement of cases promptly attended to, and the remedies sent to all parts, at ONE-HALF the usual charge, by Mr. ST. JOHN, 7, Northumberland-street Trafalgar-square.

NERVOUSNESS.—A Pamphlet, containing novel Observations on the REV. DR. WILLIS MOSELEY'S great original Discoveries, by which, for thirty years, after curing himself of a deep-rooted nervous complaint, of fourteen years standing, he has had not less than 14,000 applications and knows not twenty-five amongst who have followed his advice. From noblemen to menials, he has, for thirty years, cured persons of all ages and sexes of groundless fear mental depression, wretchedness, confusion, delusions, insomnia, y blushing, despair, indecision, dislike of society, blood to the head, sleeplessness, eccentricity, thoughts of self-destruction, and insanity and. This pamphlet is sent free, with a concise address free of charge, and unlinked home, if but one stamp is enclosed. The original secrets of cure are sent in a pure and effective state to all parts. At Home from Eleven to three.—15, Bloomsbury-street, Bedford-square.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Lessee of the Epsom Grand Stand hereby gives notice that no person guilty of any mal-practices, or notoriously in default in respect of stakes, fo feits, or bets lost upon horse-racing, will be admitted into the Grand Stand or its enclosure during any race-meeting at Epsom; and if any such person should gain admittance thereby or thereupon, he will be expelled upon his misconduct being pointed out to the Stewards for the time being, or to HENRY DORLING, Clerk of the Course.
Epsom, May 1, 1846.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed that the Horses to run for the Derby, the Oaks, and the Great Metropolitan, will be saddled in front of the Grand Stand. The Lawn is now raised to the level of the principal floor of the building, similar to, but much larger than, Ascot. The whole Building has been thoroughly cleaned, and superbly decorated. The spacious Retiring Rooms are on the principal floor, and on the first floor two new and elegantly furnished Rooms are reserved exclusively for Ladies, where respectable female domestics will be always in attendance. [illegible] Dinners and Refreshments of all kinds can be ordered from the well-known Caterer, Cochran, for the occasion or company. Ticket for the week, a Sovereign, or for Tuesday 5s. Wednesday, 10s., Thursday, 5s., Friday, 7s. 6d., which can be obtained at DORLING'S Printing-office, High-street, Epsom, or at the New Grand Entrance at the back of the Stand, only.

PINS.—The "REGINA" PATENT.—The many reasonable objections to the Pins generally in use are entirely removed by this novel and singularly ingenious invention. The recommendations of the "Regina" Pin are very many, but the fact that every person possesses the greatest delicacy of finish, combined with extraordinary hardness of material, will be fully appreciated, as must be that of their heads being of the same piece as the rest of the pin The extreme beauty and complete by which they are drawn also tends to the paper by machinery, render their arrangement both neat and pleasing The "Regina" Pin may now be had in any quantity, at No. 1, KIRBY, 31, 32, Newgate-street. Also, of all the fashionable haberdashers and Silk Mercers throughout the three kingdoms.

NEEDLES.—The "REGINA" PATENT.—The exquisite temper of these Needles causes them to be of the utmost importance to Ladies Their extreme polish renders them exceedingly pleasant, as they glide through the work, a desirable description of fabric without friction The eye of the "Regina" Needle is finished by a completely new process the subject of a patent, and one of the causes of the general and scientific requirements of an engineer of high celebrity. A packet of these Needles will last longer than a thousand of even the best of any other description, besides the additional safety ensured to the user, and the ease of their passage through the material upon which they operate. To be had of Mr. KIRBY, 31, Newgate-street; and also at all the fifth Emporiums of Silk Mercery and Haberdashery throughout the United Kingdom.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel-Keepers, and Large Consumers, supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Price, for Cash.
Black ..... 3s. 4d. .. 3s. 8d. .. 4s. 0d. .. 4s. 4d. .. 4s. 8d. .. 5s.
Green ..... 3s. 4d. .. 3s. 8d. .. 4s. 0d. .. 4s. 4d. .. 4s. 8d. .. 5s. 0d.
Coffee ..... 9d. .. 10d. .. 1s. 0d. .. 1s. 2d. .. 1s. 4d. .. 1s. 6d. .. 1s. 8d.
One pound and upwards sent to any part of town
Carriage free.—Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Bucklersbury, Cheapside.
Country orders for 6lbs of Tea and upwards delivered free of carriage to any part of the kingdom.

GREY HAIR.—The nourishing properties of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL are eminently successful in the Prevention of Grey Hair, and in the Restoration of it to its original colour It is the only article that ever by possesses nutritious virtues in promoting the luxuriant growth of the human Hair, preventing it from falling off, or turning grey, and for cleansing it from all impurity
CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the wrapper of each genuine bottle.
* * * All others are Fraudulent Imitations!

A GOSSIP ABOUT THE WATER-COLOUR SOCIETIES.

(Continued from page 297.)

THE NEW SOCIETY.

But give us David Cox to swear by. We never remember to have seen his peculiar merits more strikingly made apparent than this year. Here is a Canterbury's vigour without any of his self-destructive mellow and material. Every drawing by Cox is a proof of what may be done in Water-Colour to attain depth and strength without violating a single condition of the art. Look at his "Vale of Llangollen" (75), in which the heavy clouds come so mightily rolling in over the peak on the right, and the range of mountain stretches away to the left, cold and stormy. Again look at his "Mill" (87), so careless, but so masterly; or his "Aberdovey Sands" (96), in which he imitates the magnificent Lowther Moor land, not unsuccessfully His "Vale of Clwyd" (178), is a masterpiece. How simple the subject, but how a transcript of even such humble nature delights us! The broad green lane leaving all those wide-plain colors of Prout and others, and yet these skies especially offend us. They are spongy and lumb-ring; and contrast most disagreeably with those of Copley Fielding, or Harding.

Copley Fielding's most striking and successful drawings are, we think, (17) "Filey Brigg Yorkshire" -a mass of storm-cloud, a chill, driving sea-spray and a fragment of rock; and his "Old Watch-house on the Steyne, Brighton" an effort of the same class, in which his mastery of air and water is very strongly triumphantly. He has, also, his usual stock of misty downs, and several rather treacly and exaggerated Claudesish attempts.

George Fripp, a younger member, bids fair to push some old favourites from their stools. He has made a great advance this year. His style combines something of Cox's vigour with the breadth and simplicity of De Wint, but without his literal nakedness. His "View near Corpusty, Norfolk" (14), is a charming picture, and true to the reality; while his "Glen Scene near Bolton Abbey" pr vokes a comparison with De Wint, not at all in favour of the older hand His "Saltwood Castle" is rather cold and heavy; in the Hardingesque style of execution, which the kindred defects, which disappear in his smaller View of the same place (215) This, with the pictures above and below it—216, by D. Cox, "Cottages in North Wales;" and 217, "Almshouse at Ewelme," by J. Nash—are a group which may triumphantly. He has, also, his usual stock of misty downs, and several rather treacly and exaggerated Claudesish attempts.

A Fred Tripp returns his visit to Ireland to excellent account. His large drawing (180), "Irish Reapers Meeting their Friends after Harvesting in England," is worthy of the highest commendation for the vigour of the attitudes, the careful finish of the figures, and the nature of their physiognomies. Indeed, the head of a boy seated in the foreground quite Murillo-like in picturesqueness, and one of those bewitching, blue-eyed, half-mirthful, half-melancholy Irish girls in the right-hand corner, whose fame extends from Cork to Connemara, are original studies, which are connected nelt. or by the arts of the painter nor any neutralising story It is too much like the real scene, and not subordinated to the laws of pictorial treatment. But all the parts are excellent. His "Irish Courtship" (98), has another charming face, accompanied with some serious faults of drawing, and a very Irish head, set oddly on its shoulders, bending over it. His smaller drawings of Galway fishermen are remarkable for their careful finish and dramatic play of colour, with a relish for the peculiar, and, so to speak, national picturesqueness of the scene. He is the Topham of the Old Society, and the two maintain a most creditable rivalry.

Harding's single contribution (118), "Range of the High Alps," is a masterpiece of water-colour drawing, with a foreground singularly solid, and a distance moulded over by snowy summits; the quantity of this one drawing reconciles us to the quantity of its painter's contributions.

Frederick Tayler is an hero among the figure painters, as David Cox among the landscape painters of the Old Society. Here, if you will, is a man whose art is confined within the proper limits and working their well calculated effect. His "Rondelde Travellers" (222), gives us a soldier with his wife and children, a-dust and thirsty, with the heads of sweat upon face and brow, the boy drinking greedily from a pitcher, and the baby sprawling, charmingly, over the mother's shoulder, painted in broad washes with sparing use of body colour. (223) "A Scene from Waverley," Mr. Fergusson and Waverley meeting Davie Gellatley and Edie Ochiltree and Bucsar, is a gem for brilliancy, with the ease and spirit of a Wouvermans and the grace of a Watteau His "Poultry Yard" shows a mastery over hens and turkeys that rivals Hondius, and the little ground to his picture of "Lady Rede thro' the Forest," is the most masterly bit of landscape painting in either Exhibition.

Wright has several refined and graceful female heads, failing a little into small annual prettiness.

W. Evans exhibits (102) a very powerful landscape, "Old Post Road, Caernarvonshire," the foreground and distance very gloom, and of which the chief feature is rocks, and the snow over all: only wanting a little more colour in the sky to make a perfect drawing.

Among the Associate Members, Barthelomew's flowers are as dewy-bright as ever. George Harrison has several very masterly landscapes, amongst them the "Fontaine des Calures," in the gardens of St. Cloud, with graceful figures in the costume of Louis XIV., which equal anything on our Old Walls.

Rayner distinguishes himself by a daring and successful imitation of Cattermole. His "Gallery at Knowle" is quite worthy of Cattermole himself. The same may be said of "In Sherborne." We are sorry to see so powerful a hand following such a dangerous and seducing style of work.

T. H. Richardson, jun., sustains the honour of the North, in several faithful, and vigorous Northumbrian landscapes.

We have now enumerated the principal ornaments of the Old Society's room. It has been a task of pleasure. There is so much to praise, and so little comparatively of disagreeable. But we feel ourselves justified in omitting all mention of that which is only to be mentioned with condemnation.

THE NEW SOCIETY

We proceed to fulfil our last week's promise of making the amende honorable to the ladies whom we then en assa lantly postponed to their brethren

We do not remember to have seen the name of either Lady Fanny Steers or Miss Egerton in any previous list of the New Society. They must be new members, for we can hardly have passed over works of either one or the other.

Miss F. Steers's is a drawing of that name, unpretending, but with beautiful little landscapes in the room, most of them, evidently, out-door studies, and with the charm of the open air fresh upon them. Her "Rustic Common, Tunbridge Wells," is one of these pleasant renderings of nature—literal, but with enough of the artistic selection and impress upon it to be welcome to cultivated tastes. 112. A little sketch, modestly and fitly entitled "Trees, with Cows," is a pasture scene, one of those spots which the eye trained to perceive them is greeted with in almost every acre of England, but which, familiar and homely as they are, we are always glad to encounter in a drawing. Several Irish views by Miss Steers are marked by the same simple truth and obedience to nature. She seems to finish her drawings on the spot, and in this respect her work is contrasted with the numbered repetitions of twilight or sunrise, passing through a regular y graduated scale, from blue grey to intensest yellow, principally distinguished by a skill in floating liquid colour smoothly over a large spread of paper, with which Penny and Maplestone inundate us so remorselessly.

Miss Egerton is a figure painter. Her "Arabella Stuart" is sweetly conceived and dexterously drawn; the stonework of the back-ground admirable in texture, and the expression of the head and attitude intense, without theatrical exaggeration. Her little head, "The Nun," is less important, but honourably distinguished by awareness of expression and roundness; the latter quality appearing dainty and more remarkably, in her "Return from the Masquerade, a sleeping girl in Venetian costume, with the moonlight lighting her dreams of the night's concerts, and her mind dropping from her relaxed hand. We are pleased to see these two ladies keeping up the reputation of their sex in the New Society now that we have to lament the absence of Miss Setchell from the Exhibition.

Mrs. Margaret and Mrs. Harrison show an equal mastery of fruit and flowers; the former is little inferior to Hunt, and manages the blushing downy bloom of her plums and peaches with a skill that puts her on a level with Van Huysum, saving the difference of air and water. We have said that the New Society do not show the same disposition to remain within humble limits of subject as the Old. Wehnert and Corbould are both ambitious of elevating water into a vehicle for "light, art," while Hache attempts at once the rich splendour of Rubens, and the sunlight and air of Steenwyk or De Hooghe. Of the two, Water-Colour art goes farther in genre than in history.

Mr. Wehnert is most dramatic and most successful in the modelling of his figures, but his knowledge of anatomy provokes him into a forced strain of attitude, and an exaggeration both in his heads and limbs, which defeats itself. A little of the power shown in his "Deathbed of Wickliffe" would produce infinitely more effect, both in the minds of those who look for true expression as the first requisite of a picture, and the thousands who only wish to be pleased, if the uniform intensity and pervading violence of every muscle of every limb of every figure were broken and relieved by occasional calm. We deslcrate what Sidney Smith asked for in Macaulay, "Some brilliant flashes of repose" Even the most agitating moments have their quietude, however partial; and it is impossible that so many figures, all in such a whirlwind of passion, could ever be assembled round a deathbed, though the dying man were an heretical leader, and vilain fieffe persons were looking in every where. In his "Escape of Henry IV." every muscle is in full tension, alike in living and dead man. It is muscle that strikes you, instead of mind; the picture is all thews and sinews; and this, although Mr. Wehnert has every indication of the power and habit of seeing through to his choice of subjects. His "George Fox" is his best work. The exalted fanaticism of the first Quaker admits of, and, indeed, requires, a certain exaggeration of treatment.

L Haghe has an "Interior of the Brewers' Corporation Room at Antwerp, remarkable for the brilliancy of its tapestry, the flush of its carved oak furniture the metallic lustre of its scones, and the utter flimsiness of its figures. His best work is "A Staircase," in the same Hall, full of air and light, and true in local colour to a marvel. It is, though of lower pretensions, a more perfect work than is "Erasmus," which certainly does not please us. The head is fine, although a very brilliant piece of colour, surprising when the material is considered.

(To be continued.)

A GOSSIP ABOUT THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

The weekly critic of art is happy in comparison with his daily brother. He has not to struggle with the crowd that is rubbing shoulders before the Landseers and Leslies, that he may hand a dictatorial opinion on the strength of a half-minute survey, fiercely disputed. He can secure a second thought. He can let the nfluences of a fine picture work upon him before he presumes to pronounce upon it.

It is our intention to avail ourselves of these privileges, and to devote this week's space rather to general than to that specific and minute criticism of the details upon which may very well be deferred until the fire of the daily critics has slackened. The general impression this year seems to be that the Exhibition rises much above the averag e of excellence

The Academicians have been unusually active. There are few outrageously ambitious failures. On the whole, perhaps, this opinion is well-founded. With four fine Landseers, as many Etty's, as many Stanfields, three Leslies, a Mulready, a Maclise, and numerous others, the Academy has been certainly nourished richly to the Exhibition. The Associates, also, have done their part. Webster, Cope, Elmore, and Frith have all pictures; Creswick contributes his landscapes; S. C. Cooper his cattle; Grant and Watts, Gordon Phillips, Lee, Herbert, however, sends nothing; while Dyce has taken his place as a resuscitator of the dead forms of early Christian art.

What principally strikes the visitor on the opening day of the Exhibition as he looks round the walls is the extraordinary manual dexterity of our painters, and their mastery over the mechanical resources of their art Compared with the finish of details, the initiation of nature, the palette-knowledge of our English school as shown in our Academy Exhibition, the yearly displays of Munich and Dusseldorf, and the expositions of the Louvre present anything but a sound support of the pretensions to superiority which is constantly asserted in print and art. uch artists. Please the co d and stony pinkiness of Scott or Hesse, the leaden livid colour of Schaffer, or even De la Roche, by the side of Etty's pulpy and tomato fleshiness, as claims to the possession of a sense of colour, and even Frenchman must strike to perfidious Albion. In landscape our superiority in truth and feeling for nature is as unquestionable. Sct., Germany and France can fish up their sorry ore claim to the possession of a school of landscape, among the bygone pretensions, and Wilkie and Haxman among the more modern, are the only names which they are widing to inscribe in the Libro d'Oro of modern painting.

There is a reason for this. Our artists sin in one point—France and Germany in others. We have too much neglected the spiritual for the sensual elements of art-education. Our Continental rivals have sacrificed the pleasure of the eye to what they concieve higher ends.

While we admit that the mission of art is a lofty one—that she has had in charge the embodiment of the visions of faith—the realisation of pure and beautiful imaginations of things heavenly and things intensely human that her functions are as wide as a t of human intel igence which is cognizable by the senses—and that she is unfaithful to the noble trust when she turns aside to sacrifice intellect to what appeals solely to the eye, and wakes no comment but the one we hear so often at our Exhibition "How wonderfully like the thing!" we must guard our admissions, so that they shall not be construed into an acknowledgment that Munich and Paris are further advanced in the right way than London. On the contrary, we would maintain that the French and German artists are in a more dangerous error than our own.

Germany has fallen into the most deadly of all art-heresies. She is wasting her rising energies in desperate efforts to reanimate dead forms. What vitality is shown in her schools is the sickness monkery of life which the galvanised corpse exhibits under the operation of the battery. The eyes may be open, but there is no speculation in them, and the appalling dead glare, in which no light "draws from the depths of the soul," is the result of the exhaustion of the nerves of true nerve, in which no will is apparent, is more hopeless, spasms more terribly of death, than the rigid limbs decently composed and marble-like.

The mystical attributes, repetate, under the pressure of a presumed law, the constrained attitude attributable part y to this and partly to ignorance of drawing, the confused grouping, the defective chiaro scuro of Gootio or Benozzo Gozzoli, may be laudable in the frescos of Hesse, or the pictures of Overbeck; but, until the child-like faith, and the profound conviction, which beams like a glory round these imperfect creations, can be evoked from the past, and the strength and purity of the Catholic religion, which gave them birth, return, the art, a recurrence to departed forms is the most hopeless of all retrocessions. What faith is left in the nineteenth century may be disputed. But, be it much or little, it is not in the mechanical forms of the past that it can be manifested. The Puseyism of art is the compeument of the Puseyism of theology, but it is the more utterly lifeless thing of the two. To the young Oxonian, a Virgin or Pieta hanging over the Altar, or an Angel or Pre Bartolomeo, may be a healthy and revolting symbol, quickening his faith into a keener activity. The outward sign may raise the inward feeling; but, for the inward feeling to shape itself into the outward sign, is a false and peculiar power is requisite. From the type, we work up to the thing typified, but from the thing typified, we descend to the type, by a gradation impossible to any but what Kenelm Digby called "ages of faith," but which might more properly be called "ages of symbolism," which is a less perfect, and very disgusting the outward sign into test upon.

The consequences of this attempt in Germany is what might have been expected. We have everywhere the formes types of purity and innocence and belief, but nothing while awakens the corresponding feelings, except in a few exceptions, which are referable to art almost reseeding that which flowed from the republican pseudo-classicism of David and his followers in the French school. It is a poor reassurements of Pinturicchio or Francia. We particularly regret this in an artist like the unfortunate Ezkelbert," exhibited in Westminster Hall, showed such power in historical art, while history presents his almost unbroken record of subject to his hand and mind. (Next week we propose to resume the consideration of some other points indicated in this paper. We have, on the next page, engraved an exquisite landscape, from the Exhibition, by W. J. Leitch.)

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

In our Journal of the 25th ult., we detailed the new toilettes for Longchamps. We now present our readers with a sc.p of high fashion at this unusually gay season. The following gossip from our Correspondent will, doubtless, be an acceptable pendent:

Madame de Stael, when she was at her seat, at Coppet, or in any other beautiful spot, would sigh, and exclaim, "Where is my dear rivulet in the Rue du Bac." Those who have this fancy for the flow of the Paris gutters have had ample indulgence. These Sunday Rubicons of the neatly shod grisettes have overflowed for the last six weeks. Rain has been the accompaniment of all recreations. The foreign visitors, however, have appeared totally indifferent to it; some have braved it in a manner most amusing to our Parisians; for example, that Titan of the turf, Sir William Don, who ran his race at the Champ de Mars, dressed in white jean, on a very little horse—so that his form appeared dilated, and the contrast was extraordinary, the rider appeared to come from Brobdignag and the horse from Lilliput. Rain however violently it might, daily the crowds of strangers increased, and hourly they were beheld in the streets and in the promenades. The dealers in Parisian luxuries have exerted their utmost ingenuity to avail themselves of the opportunity. Ladies Powerscourt, Londonderry, Aylesbury, and Alice Peel, &c., were purchasers of all the finest articles of dress. The sums they gave were enormous. Lady L. bought a simple dress I saw, 40f. a yard; Lady A. paid 1,800f. for a mantelet; Lady P. gave 7,000f. for a veil; Lord Castlereagh purchased, for £1,200 (30,000f.), a lace dress for his bride to be, Lady Powerscourt. The news of these preparations for the season soon reached noble ladies and leaders of fashion in London, and, not to be eclipsed, they ordered enormous purchases to be made in Paris. The London House of Vanillon and Lauré, alone, to satisfy their customers under these circumstances, bought to the amount of four hundred thousand francs, of the most expensive commodities. The immense profits here made by the marchandes de modes and fashionable milliners is very clearly proved by the style in which they live. At the Champs Elysées, the Bois de Boulogne, the Steeple-chase at Berny, and at the races of the Champ de Mars, they have appeared in the most elegant and sumptuous equipages. Their band-boxes are carried to their customers by footmen in splendid liveries; their apartments are magnificent beyond expression—you behold nothing but gilding and velvet on all sides; their tables of marble or mosaic are laden with sevres and bronzes. At the Opera, they have the best boxes, and appear always in front, as if only seeking to eclipse their customers. What a difference of habits betwixt the two capitals, although they will soon be but twelve hours' distance from each other.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—"THE VILLA FOUNTAIN."—PAINTED BY W. L. LEITCH.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, May 9, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 211.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE POST-OFFICE.

PARLIAMENT has no sooner disposed of the question of Post-Office management than it is taken up by the authorities of the Establishment itself. Without impugning the little less than awful power of the Legislature, we confess we have more hopes of amendment, where amendment is wanted, from efforts made from within the walls of St. Martin than without. Public opinion compels great changes, like the postal revolution of Rowland Hill, but points of detail and practical working can be best arranged and perfected by the body itself. And, notwithstanding all the censure that has been cast on the establishment, we incline to think, that, for the sake of making out a case, its defects have been more strongly dwelt on than its merits. The Englishman's privilege of grumbling at everything, has never been more plentifully indulged than with respect to the Post-Office; yet, considering what it does, the enormous amount of business it transacts daily and nightly, and at what a trifling cost to the public, we believe it has no equal in any other country of the world, and may be justly considered one of the wonders of our own. While we are eternally abusing it, foreigners are urging their Governments to adopt the principle on which it now proceeds: we underrate it because the experience of its benefit is so constant and unceasing, that we lose our perception of it, and become alive only to the interruptions and irregularities that are the exception, rather than the rule. Foreigners, on the other hand, see only the great principle of cheapness of communication successfully carried out, and, envious of this, suppose there are no faults of management connected with it; hence they praise and extol what we assail with censure, deepening occasionally into positive abuse. There are other things besides the Post-Office in the same predicament, undervalued most by those who are most familiar with them. Nearly half the Legislature, and about half the public press of England, are firmly persuaded that Sir Robert Peel is a madman, or a traitor, or both; that he is anything but a great statesman. Take the opinion of foreign journals—especially the organs of the German commercial community, tied and bound in every direction by tolls and frontiers, and custom-houses without end—and the enfranchisement of commerce is lauded as a work little less than sacred, and the statesman who effects it is the greatest of all rulers present and past; while the invocations to their own Governments to "do likewise" are as loud and earnest as the censorship will permit. The inference to be drawn in both cases, is, that we are inclined to find too much fault with too little reason, both with men and establishments; that neither are perfect is readily granted, but both may be abused beyond their actual demerits.

The Post-Office, as the great channel of the correspondence of the nation, must keep pace with the development of its internal means of communication. There is a tendency in all great public establishments to go on in the beaten path of routine, and an impulse from without is often necessary to move them out of it. It is scarcely credible that the accounts of the Exchequer were, down to a comparatively recent date, kept in the cumbrous Roman numerals, though all the traders and merchants of the kingdom had abandoned them for the Arabic figures, for centuries. The "tallies," too, were in use in the same department long after the system became an absurdity and laughing-stock to all men; and, as if even an absurdity could not be got rid of without doing as much mischief as possible, it is said that it was the burning of an accumulation of these respected relics of ignorance in the stoves of the House of Lords that caused the destruction of both Houses of Parliament. Old forms and fashions and practices are the most inveterate of nuisances, and, somehow, are singularly tenacious of life. There is no respect for antiquity in the matter, as may well be supposed; but things get mixed up with persons, old practices necessitate old offices, probably held by old persons, and, though the process is very absurd, the salary that pays for the obstruction of something better is not; and hence comes the tenacity with which these old things are clung to. Much has been done to rid the public service of some of these official antiquities; and the country decidedly gains by paying the holders of these relics of the dignity of the middle ages quite as much as their salaries, to do nothing at all for the term of their natural lives, instead of allowing them to sit on their stools and block up the path of business, with the staid and respectable formality of our forefathers. But in most of our public offices there are a good many remains of this sort of thing left, and some backwardness in adapting itself to the new wants and new facilities of the age, may be alleged against the Post-Office; still as it is the department with which the public comes most immediately in contact, the deficiencies have been most felt, and most loudly complained of. But we believe it is improving, and that the defects alleged against it spring more from the details of its internal management than want of will or means to make it all that can be desired.

NEW SORTING-ROOM, AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

An inquiry has been going on in the establishment itself, which is, doubtless, the result of the recent discussion in the House of Commons. It was there stated that the "subordinate" officials were in a decided state of "insubordination," and that discontent pervaded the whole mass of Letter Sorters and Carriers. The statement seems confirmed by so much of the inquiry as has yet been made public. Secret meetings have been held, for the discussion of grievances, principally inefficient and uncertain salaries, and the compulsory task of collecting information for the "Post-Office Directory," "and a vast increase of work, not met by an adequate ratio of pay;" the effect of all this is thus described in the Report:—"Anonymous placards, of a violent character, were stuck up in the Newspaper-Office, and so unwilling were the men to work upon several occasions, that it was with the greatest difficulty the business was got through; and, as the whole of the delivering force belonging to the General Post-Office is employed in various offices, both morning and evening, in preparing the letters for delivery, and the newspapers for despatch, the unwilling men managed seriously to retard the duty."

This is a state of things that cannot be allowed to continue; and, as the remedy is easy, it should be immediately applied. The Post-Office should not be regarded as a source of revenue; if it supports itself so much the better; but, if there is a surplus, it should be devoted to increasing its efficiency in every way, the first step being to put an end to this degrading squabble about wages between a public department and its servants. They should be well paid for their work, for it requires many good qualities, strength, some intelligence, and honesty. To leave them dependant on the public by the fees for early delivery is an abuse; the necessity all men of business are under of receiving their letters at the earliest moment converts the seeming gratuity into an actual extortion. What the Office is bound to do for all, it should do for all alike. For keeping private boxes for large establishments, which send for their letters, as it is an extra accommodation, extra payment may fairly be asked. But delivery of letters is a duty on the part of the Office, and should be discharged impartially and without exceptions.

As for the publishing the "Post-Office Directory," some clearer understanding might be come to. Some such stock of information the Post-Office must have at command for its own purposes, that is evident. The publication of it is extremely useful to the public; and, we believe, except by the Post-Office it could not be published at all—certainly not so cheaply, or in so complete a form. We think if a good use to make of "official information;" but if the men feel the detailed information a grievance, because such a use is made of it, let them be paid something extra for their work as an acknowledgment; though if no such work were published we do not think they could demand it. That they are generally underpaid, considering the nature of their work, we believe, and this admits of a remedy that we are sure the public would not grudge.

The irregularities and imperfections in the management of the Post-Office, except those that can be traced to the bad spirit above described, are practical matters, that, from the nature of things, cannot entirely be avoided. The amount of business, that is always great, at times becomes overwhelming. Steam has multiplied newspapers in as great a ratio as it has increased the means of conveying them. Now that all the world can write, and nobody bestows a thought upon postage, letters pass by millions; and where such immense numbers have to be dealt with, each single packet requiring manipulation and arrangement, it is often a physical impossibility to insure at once accuracy and quickness. Considering what has to be done, it is wonderful that it is done so well. Increased means of despatching the business have been recently provided within the establishment; but while this is being done, there is another point which is strangely neglected by the public, and which does not come within the functions of the Post-Office at all, though it must have great influence upon it. We mean the naming and numbering of squares, streets, and other localities. In both these respects there is neither plan nor method. Scores of streets in different and widely-separated parts of this vast City bear the same name, and the numbering of houses is sometimes past all comprehension. The slightest imperfection in the address of a letter sends it on a voyage of discovery to all the squares and terraces of the same name, till it finds the right one. This must add much to the labour of the establishment, while the defect is out of its power to remove.

NEW SORTING ROOM. AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE.

This vast apartment has just been added to the Inland Department of the General Post-Office, in St Martin's-le-Grand, under the superintendence of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B., architect of the truly noble official edifice. The roof supports are of cast-iron, and along its centre is a glazed sky-light: but, in our Illustration, the Artist has shown the office as it appears during the evening duty, when it is lit throughout by gas, with strong reflects.

A speedy communication with the lower rooms is effected by two machines, one at each end of the adjoining room (seen on the right of our engraving). Each machine consists of a row of shelves, about eight or nine feet apart. During the hours of business it is kept, by steam power, constantly descending and ascending, so that the fatigue and delay of going up or down stairs with bags of papers or letters is, by this arrangement, dispensed with, the person wishing to descend to the lower room merely having to step on one of the shelves with his papers, &c., when he is steadily lowered to the apartment beneath, and vice versâ.

As the business of the Inland Office has already been minutely described in our Journal (Nos. 112 and 113) we need not repeat them; but, add a few of the leading details, to show the vast amount of the business of this gigantic establishment:

Number of officers and men employed in the Inland and Foreign Departments:

Clerks	.. ..	173
Messengers	.. ..	11
Sub-Sorters	.. ..	21
Letter-Carriers	.. ..	337

The number of letters and newspapers sent weekly throughout the United Kingdom:

Letters	.. ..	4,000,000
Newspapers	.. ..	329,047

The number of bags received and sent DAILY is about 3000

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Few persons appear to have thought of the immense advantages—commercial, and, above all, political—of that volatility of habits, and cultivation of pleasure, justly attributed to the Parisians. This pecul ar idiosyncrasy, which belonged to the Athenians, amongst the ancients, renders Paris the capital of pleasure of the whole universe. At this moment, when its native society is flagging, Paris is filled with strangers from every part of the globe, at the moment expending lavishly their money, and who will carry home to their several countries the taste for French manufactures. As regards politics, all the political characters of the most distant states repair to Paris, for change of scene and diversion, as Ibrahim Pacha does at this moment. The inconsistency of our Government here is strangely displayed in his case. The Ministers of France unceasingly bear towards England a real entente cordiale; still, it is openly said on all sides, by Ministerial men, that the unprecedented cajolery and honours of wh ch the violent Egyptian is the object, are directed towards making him a partisan of France against the views of England—a work of silly supererogation, since we have no greater concernment in Egypt than any other Powers; whilst England's interest is paramount, and as possessing immense means by which it is the high road, it is legitimate; and the opening of a free and rapid access to the East, by the isthmus of Suez, must lead to the civilization of mankind, and to the increase of the general commerce of Europe. Hence the enchantments employed appear to do their spirit ng most triumphantly on Ibrahim. At the dinner just taken place at the Hotel de Ville, placed by the side of the King's son, the young Duke de Montpensier, since his guest in Egypt, I saw h m make such demonstrations of affection to his neighbour as can only occur to a Mussulman who does not consider champagne one of the drinks forbidden by the Prophet. At the same table, the Count de Mars, on Sunday, he said, through his interpreter, to a friend of mine, "that no nation could excel in such spe.. except one, in which the taste and talent for it is innate and ancient. The good Ibrahim imagines the French the first sportsmen in Europe and will, may be imagine it, for now the lowest artizans have their whole souls wrapped up in these amusements, and bet like Grands Seigneurs. On Sunday, although the rain poured most unmercifully on the Champ de Mars

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

RELIGIOUS OPINIONS BILL.—The Bishop of EXETER brought on the motion of which he had given notice, respecting the Religious Opinions Relief Bill, and in a speech of considerable length deprecated the dangerous experiment of repealing those portions of the acts of Elizabeth which asserted the supremacy of the Sovereign in opposition to that of the Pope. The Right Rev. Prelate also drew the attention of the House to the power claimed by the Roman See, of absolving subjects from their oaths of allegiance, and otherwise interfering in the internal affairs of foreign countries, and concluded by proposing two questions to the Chancellor and the Judges, as to the probable effect of the proposed bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he should have no objection to submit the questions to the learned Judges, but he did not consider it necessary to do so, because it was clear that by the common law any bull or writing which had a tendency to excite sedition, or any act or word which would interfere with the supremacy of the Crown, in spiritual as well as temporal matters, would be punishable. Lord Brougham, Lord Denman, and Lord Campbell, concurred in this opinion.—The Bishop of EXETER again solemnly warned the House of the dangerous breach they were about to make in the constitution of the empire, but ended by withdrawing his motion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

On the question that this bill be read a third time.

The Marquis of GRANBY opposed the bill, contending that protection was absolutely necessary for the prosperity of the agricultural interest. The noble Marquis went over the whole of the arguments generally urged in favour of Protection, and, in conclusion, moved as an amendment that the bill be read a third time that day six months.

Mr. M. GASKELL seconded the amendment

After some discussion, in which Mr. SHERIDAN, Mr. FLOYER, and Sir J. EASTHOPE took part,

Mr. MILES argued that it was impossible, comparing the taxation of this country with that of others, that we could enter into competition with either Russia or the United States in the production of grain, and he was, therefore, confident that the House of Lords would never pass the bill then under the consideration of the House. The hon. member severely censured the Government for their want of constancy and firmness, and for their tergiversation on this great question.

Sir J. GRAHAM gave his opinion that the House was weary of the protracted debate, and said the country was anxiously looking for the decision, so far as the House of Commons was concerned, of the question. He felt deeply the change of temperature which prevailed against him by Mr. Miles, and admitted that it was the part of a great statesman to be firm and constant, still he could not have done otherwise than he had under the responsibility which rested on him. The question had upon all hands been narrowed into one as to whether the removal of Protection would or would not be prejudicial to the tillers of the soil; and if it should be apparent that the existing Corn-law would be injurious to the latter interests, he, for one, would not advocate it; but he was satisfied in his conscience that the change of the law would be as beneficial to the agricultural as to the commercial portion of the community. He wished, however, that it should be understood, that he had never advocated the repeal of protecting duties because of the distress in Ireland; for, in his opinion, that occurrence had only precipitated that which was in the long run inevitable.

Mr. GLADSTONE contended that the abolition of Protection must be equally injurious to the small farmer and the agricultural labourer, as well as pernicious to the general interests of the community.

Mr. NEWDEGATE then moved the adjournment of the debate, which was immediately seconded to.

The House sat till one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS TUESDAY.

The sitting to-day was a short one, and the business entirely unimportant.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE.

On the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on the third reading of the Corn Importation Bill, Mr. HILDYARD retracted the charge which he had made against the Nottingham Free Trade Committee, as having been guilty of bribery during the recent contest for South Nottinghamshire. The Earl of LINCOLN said a few words upon the subject, and the debate was resumed.

The attendance of members during a considerable portion of the evening was very scanty; and at one time, notice having been taken that forty members were not present, the galleries were cleared, when it was found that there were a sufficient number to constitute a House.

The speaking during the evening were nearly all against the bill, following each other in almost unbroken continuity. They were Mr. Newdegate, Mr. George Palmer, Mr. Plumptre, Captain Polhill, Mr. Bernal, Sir John Walsh, Mr. Francis Scott, Lord Brooke, Captain Vyse, and Mr. Seymer. In favour of the bill, there were only Mr. Hastie and Mr. Sharman Crawford, the Opposition side of the House maintaining a marked silence.

Mr. Cheetham moved the adjournment of the debate till Thursday, to which day the debate was accordingly adjourned.—The House sat till half-past twelve.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. WEDNESDAY.

THE FACTORIES BILL.—The House met to-day at twelve o'clock. The Factories Bill formed the chief subject of discussion. The order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on the second reading of the bill having been moved, Mr. CROMPTON addressed the House at some length in favour of the bill. He said he could not see that any evil would arise from a restriction of the hours of labour in factories; but, on the contrary, that it would be attended with many advantages. He would have opposed the bill if he thought that it would be injurious to the British manufacturer, but he did not think such would be the result.—Mr. LABOUCHERE said, if he thought the operatives would be benefited by the provisions of this bill, nothing should prevent him from giving it his support; but he thought the House ought well to consider what the effect would be before it gave its sanction to such an important measure. After several hon. Members had spoken, Sir GRAHAM, in reply, contended that in 1844 the ten hours' proposition had only been raised once substantially, and then it had been rejected by the House. After speeches from Mr. S Crawford, Mr. Duncan, Sir G. Grey, and Mr. Brotherton, Mr. CHARLES PELL rose, and opposed the bill, on the ground that it would be deeply injurious to 800,000 hard-working manufacturers, whose subsistence was directly dependent upon the wages which they received for their labour. He called upon the House not to curtail the amount of wages on the one hand, whilst it was diminishing the price of the necessaries of life on the other. This measure, if passed into law, would bring about first a contention between masters and men on the subject of wages, and afterwards a period of common suffering to both.—Mr. WARD then moved the adjournment of the debate till Monday, which was agreed to, and the House broke up.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT. The Royal Assent was given by commission to the following bills:—The Bishop of Sodor and Man Bill, the Annuity Tax Abolition Bill, the Burgh Land Bill, the Removal Orders Act Continuation Bill, the Great Western Canal Junction Bill, the Sunderland Docks Bill, the Birmingham Cemetery Bill, and the Certificate Bill. The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, and the Earl of Haddington.

MANY petitions were presented against the Charitable Trusts Bill.

THE Dying Places in Ireland Bill was read a second time, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. THURSDAY.

The proceedings this evening were unimportant. The adjourned debate on the Corn Importation Bill did not come on, as was expected, as the members who had notices of motions would not give way to the Government.

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.

LORDS' COMMITTEES.

The Committee appointed to consider the batch of bills in which the London and York is included, met on Wednesday, for the first time, in one of the rooms in the New Houses of Parliament, appropriated to committee-rooms for the House of Lords. Besides an innumerable number of agents, engineers, and witnesses, there were no less than six-and-twenty barristers in attendance at the opening of the proceedings. The Earl of Lovelace was in the chair.

COMMONS' COMMITTEES

The Railway Groups have got through some business this week.

In Group IV. a dense crowd was drawn together on Tuesday to hear the decision on the Perth and Inverness and Perth and Forfar lines. Both were thrown overboard; the Perth and Inverness on the ground of its gradients. The official form of decision was that the preamble of the Perth and Inverness, and the Inverness and Elgin bills were not proved. The Great North of Scotland's preamble passed unopposed.

The preamble of the Somersetshire Midland, or semi-Great Western scheme, has been found not proved in Group XVIII.

The North-Eastern Extension of the Leeds and Thirsk, 20 miles, had its preamble in Group XLIII.

In Group XXV., the clauses of the Ambergate, Nottingham and Boston Bill have been taken into consideration, and the Committee adopted them with slight amendments.

The preamble of the Edinburgh and Leith Atmospheric, and Edinburgh, Leith, and Granton lines, are declared not proved.

PRESENTATION OF PLATE.—The friends of Mr. Chesterton have just presented to him a costly silver tea-service and salver, by token of his valuable services to the parish of St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, during twenty-six years past.

ACCIDENT TO MR. GREEN, AT IPSWICH.—Last week Mr. Green made an ascent in his balloon at Ipswich. After remaining in the air for about an hour, Mr. Green accomplished his descent in a barley-field at Otley, about nine miles distant, and, with the aid of some villagers, quickly packed up the balloon, intending to return direct to Ipswich. However, on setting off, he being a fair day here, there was not a convenient vehicle to be got, so that he was obliged to make shift with a small spring cart, into which the apparatus was thrown. He then got into it himself on the top. About half-way home, the seat-board, which had been lying loosely on the package, gradually slipped off, and, getting between the spokes of the wheel, upset the cart, and threw Mr. Green out, the balloon, a mass of silk and cordage, weighing upwards of a cwt., falling upon him. In this condition he lay for some time, the driver being unable, without great difficulty, to remove the machine alone. As soon as the unfortunate gentleman was extricated from his painful position, he was brought to the Coach and Horses, Ipswich, and a surgeon was called in, but, happily, it was found he had sustained no material injury, beyond some severe bruises. He was immediately bled, and put to bed, and in the morning had so far recovered, as to be able to get up and walk down to the school-yard, to superintend the packing up the balloon.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

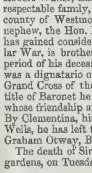
ADMIRAL SIR ROBERT WALLER OTWAY, BART., G.C.B.

This lamented naval officer, who is stated to have been upwards of a hundred times in action, entered the service in 1778, and obtained his Lieutenant's commission in 1793, became Commander in 1795, was promoted to Post rank the same year, and finally reached the degree of Admiral of the White in 1841. On the memorable 1st of June, he distinguished himself as Lieutenant of the Impregnable; and when commanding the Thorn sloop, captured, after a brilliant action (in which he was wounded), the Courier French corvette of superior force. In 1798, in the Mermaid, 32, he twice beat off the French frigate, Vengeance, 52, near Guadaloupe; and in 1797, when Captain of the Ceres, cut out, in his ship's boats, the Mutine, privateer of 18 guns and 90 men near Porto Rico. Subsequently, he served at the sieges of Morne Fortunée and Fort Matilda, in the West Indies, and, in command of the Royal George, rendered essential and gallant aid to the operations against Copenhagen, in 1801.

Sir Robert Otway was the second son of the late Cooke Otway, Esq., of Castle Otway, county Tipperary, by Elizabeth, his wife, sister of Sir Robert Waller, Bart., of Lisbrian, and derived his descent from a highly respectable family, seated in early times at Middleton and Ingmire Hall, county of Westmoreland, whose late representative was Sir Robert's nephew, the Hon. Robert Otway Cave, M.P. Sir Loftus Otway, who has gained considerable reputation as a military officer, in the Peninsular War, is brother of the Admiral, whose death we record. At the period of his decease, Sir Robert had just completed his 74th year. He was a dignitaries of the Imperial Brazilian Order of the Cross, a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, and Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen. His title of Baronet he received at the Coronation of King William IV., whose friendship and personal regard he enjoyed in an especial degree. By Clementina, his wife, daughter and co-heir of Admiral Galloway, of Wells, he has left three surviving sons (the eldest the present Sir George Graham Otway, Bart.), and five daughters.

The death of Sir Robert took place at his residence, in Hyde Parkgardens, on Tuesday, the 12th inst.

THE HON. AND VERY REV. HENRY LEWIS HOBART, D.D.



This venerable Divine, whose decease occurred on Friday, 8th inst., at Nocton Priory, Lincolnshire, was fourth son of George, third Earl of Buckinghamshire, by Albinia, his wife, daughter and co-heir of Lord Vere Bertie. The noble house from which he derived, has held a high position in Norfolk from a very early period. In the reign of Henry VII., Sir James Hobart, Kt., was his Majesty's Attorney-General, and in the time of James I. the family produced another lawyer of eminence, in the person of the Lord Chief Justice Hobart.

Besides the Deanery of Windsor, to which he succeeded upon the elevation of Dr. Legge to the Bishopric of Oxford, in 1816, Dr. Hobart held also that of Wolvercampton, and the Rectories of Nocton and Wantage, with the Vicarage of Hasely, in Oxfordshire. He married 5th Oct., 1824, Charlotte Selina, daughter of Richard Moore, Esq., of Hampton Court Palace, and has left several children.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. May 11.

On Saturday last, Martin Joseph Routh, Esq., M.A., of Pembroke College, having been nominated by the foundress to the newly endowed law fellowship in that college, was admitted to the same.

On Sunday Mr. Brownlow Poulter, scholar of New College, was admitted fellow of that society.

CAMBRIDGE. May 13.

At a Congregation held this day, the following degrees were conferred:—

LL.D.—Symeon Taylor Barlett, Clare Hall.

M.A. William Franks; George Nugée; Frederick Waymouth Gibbs; Charles Sargent; George Chance, Trinity College; Truman Tanqueray, Pembroke College.

B.A.—Wadlow Coleman, Charles Riley, St. John's College; Frederic James Furnival, Trinity Hall; Robert Sibley Baker, Magdalen College; John Poole Hames, Trinity College; Herbert James, King's College, William Philip Snell, Downing College; Edward Manners Dilman Payne, Emmanuel College.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

STEALING LUGGAGE FROM RAILWAYS.

On Tuesday, John Tapson, aged 23, was indicted for stealing a portmanteau containing a quantity of wearing apparel, which was said to be the property of the Great Western Railway Company; and John Beard, a person of respectable appearance, and who had been admitted to bail, was also indicted as an accessory to the commission of the robbery.

Mr. Clarkson, Mr. Bodkin, and Mr. Deane conducted the prosecution on behalf of the Company. Mr. Parry defended Tapson, and Mr. Ballantine appeared for the prisoner Beard

From the evidence of witnesses it appeared that on the 31st March a Mr. David Williams, accompanied by his daughter, came to London by the cheap train upon the Great Western Railway, and a portmanteau which belonged to them was placed in the luggage van, but upon the arrival of the train at Paddington, when the van was examined, it was found that this portmanteau had been taken from it. In order to show the connection which existed between the two in the transaction, it was proved that a few days before the 31st of March, the prisoner Tapson took up his abode at the house of a person named Weatherden, in the New Palace-road, Lambeth, with whom he had some previous acquaintance, and on the morning of the day on which the robbery was committed, he stated that he was about to go to the terminus of the Great Western Railway to meet some of his relations whom he expected from Cornwall; and he at the same time said that he should take the son of Mr. Weatherden, a lad eight years old, along with him, and they left the house together. It appeared that after this he joined the other prisoner, Beard, and that they drank together at several public-houses and beer-shops, and the two prisoners and the little boy eventually proceeded to the Great Western Railway station, where Tapson represented that he had come to meet some persons whom he expected to arrive by the train, and while the prisoners were waiting they treated some of the porters at the station with drink.

Upon the arrival of the cheap train, the prisoner Beard walked past the carriages, calling out the name of "May," while the other prisoner walked up deliberately to the luggage-van, and took out the portmanteau, and walked off with it. He was then joined by the other prisoner, and they got into a cab, and drove to some public-house in the Edgeware road, and from thence to the house of Mr. Weatherden, where both the prisoners alighted, and Tapson went up stairs with the portmanteau, and the other prisoner remained in the kitchen. Shortly afterwards, Tapson came down stairs, and said that he could not find the key of his trunk, and that he must cut it open; and it appeared that he accordingly, he did open it with a knife, and took out the contents, a portion of which he pledged immediately afterwards at different pawnbrokers'. With regard to the other prisoner, Beard, in addition to the circumstance of his being proved to be on the spot at the time the robbery was effected, and subsequently at the house of Mr. Weatherden, where the portmanteau was cut open, it was proved that, when he was taken into custody, he denied all knowledge of Tapson, and also declared that he was not with him at the railway station, and that he could bring witnesses forward to prove what he stated; but it did not appear that he had taken any share in the subsequent appropriation of the property.

The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty against Tapson, and Acquitted Beard.

Evidence was then adduced to show that the prisoner Tapson had been convicted of felony at Bodmin, in 1844.

The Recorder sentenced Tapson to be transported for seven years; and said he trusted that all persons who had been concerned in pillaging railways would understand that in every case of conviction of that offence, a sentence of transportation would invariably follow.

DEATH OF BOLOGNA.—We have to record the death of Bologna, of theatrical celebrity. Lately he was in the company of the Theatre Royal Adelphi, Glasgow, but within the last eight or ten months the decline of years became visible, and he gradually sunk to rest.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty and the Royal Family are still in Town. On Wednesday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace, and remained to luncheon with her Majesty and Prince Albert. His Royal Highness Prince George also visited her Majesty.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—The Queen Dowager will leave Marlborough House for Bushy on Wednesday next; and, according to present arrangements, her Majesty will take her departure from England for Germany a few days afterwards. Cashiobury, the seat of the Earl of Essex, has been refurnished, and is now ready for occupancy; but her Majesty is not expected to take up her residence at that seat until after her return from the Continent.

WINDSOR, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—From instructions which were received at the Castle this morning, from Buckingham Palace, to prepare certain of the apartments for the reception of her Majesty, so that they may be in readiness at a short notice, it would appear that it is not improbable the Court may visit Windsor at a very early period. Indeed, it is now reported that it is not unlikely her Majesty's accouchement may take place at the Castle. It may be mentioned, however, that no official communication on this subject has been received by Mrs. Foster, the housekeeper of the private apartments.

ENTERTAINMENT TO THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CAMBRIDGE.—The Austrian Ambassador and the Countess Dietrichstein gave a sumptuous banquet on Monday evening to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and Prince George of Cambridge. At eight o'clock the guests invited to meet the Royal Guests had all assembled, when the Castle rooms

LEIPZIG FAIR.

LEIPZIG, FROM THE BATTLE-GROUND.

The termination of the great Easter Commercial Fair of Leipzig to-day (May 16), has suggested the annexed Illustrations, drawn and engraved by clever English Artists in Germany. The "Great Fair" still remains an important gathering; for, although our trade with Germany has seriously declined since the Zoll-Verein, or German Customs Union, has been established, the quantity of English manufactured goods sent to the Leipzig annual Commercial Fairs, is still very considerable; and it is to be hoped the passing of Sir Robert Peel's Tariff Reform Measures will materially assist to revive it, by leading the States forming the Zoll-Rand, or Union, to gradually adopt a similar wise and liberal policy in matters of trade.

These fairs are held three times in the year at Easter (Oster Messe), commencing the Second Sunday after Easter, the most important of the three, and the largest held in Germany; at Michaelmas (Michaelis Messe), commencing the Sunday before Michaelmas-day, ranking the next in importance; and the Neue Jahr Messe, commencing on New Year's Day, but of very inconsiderable note. Each fair lasts three weeks, and is frequented by merchants and foreigners from all parts, usually to the number of upwards of 40,000, during the two principal Fairs. The town is, consequently, then well filled; and a more lively and pleasant sight cannot be well imagined than is presented on what are called the Fair Sundays, by the vast medley crowds of country-folks and peasantry, dressed in their gayest garbs, that pour in by the different rail-roads, to purchase their small stocks of goods for home consumption, and to see the sights; intermingled with Turks, Persians, Greeks, Armenians, Tyrolese, Polish Jews, &c., in their various costumes.

The streets of Leipzig, on these occasions, are occupied by temporary booths, in which merchandise of almost every description is exposed for sale; the large and picturesque market-place, with its fine old rathhaus, or town-hall, forms a highly interesting and attractive spot, as it is there the booths are principally congregated, displaying their multifarious contents to captivate the eye; and perhaps it might be safely asserted that within this comparatively confined area, nearly every variety of article adapted to the moderate wants and tastes of man can be readily and cheaply purchased.

Leipzig stands on a plain, a continuation of the great Russian Steppes; its neighbourhood is, therefore, very flat and monotonous, but it is considered to be fertile. Our view of the Town is taken from about the central site of the two great battles fought there, under Gustavus Adolphus and Napoleon. The small farm-house at the left-hand corner, according to tradition, served for the resting and refreshment place of both commanders during the fatigues of those great conflicts, which each, in their separate way, involved the destinies of nations, and the fate of great principles.

The singular concentration of the German book-trade in Leipzig has been a main cause of the celebrity and wealth of the city. The first two booksellers who were also printers, that settled in Leipzig, were Stoeckel and Rosspf, in 1545. The books were sent to Frankfort fair for sale; but, subsequently, the Book Fair at Leipzig was instituted; and, in 1667, it was attended by nineteen booksellers from other places. The first catalogue appeared in the sixteenth century. The number of new works announced has gradually increased. It was in 1811, that above 3,000 works appeared in Germany; in 1828, there were above 6,000; and in 1838, about 6,000. The German booksellers are either publishers (Verlagshandler), who sell only their own publications; or booksellers, who publish nothing themselves (Sortimentshandler), but sell only what they purchase of the publishers. Now, however, these latter are generally publishers also, by which means they are able to make exchanges with other publishers. It is the general custom for the publishers to let the retail booksellers have their publications on sale and return for a certain time, at the expiration of which, payment is made for what has been sold, and the remainder may be returned. The peculiar feature in the German book-trade is, that every publisher has his commissioner at Leipzig, to whom he sends prospectuses and specimens of his new publications, which the commissioner distributes and makes known. A bookseller out of Leipzig, A, sends his orders, not to the publisher, B, but to his own commissioner, C, at Leipzig, who delivers them to the commissioner of the publisher, D; and the latter gives the books to C, and keeps the order to send to B.

THE GREAT FAIR, IN THE MARKET-PLACE, LEIPZIG.

GRAND REVIEW AT VINCENNES, IN HONOUR OF IBRAHIM PACHA.

At the Easter Fair, booksellers from all Germany, Sweden, Denmark, the Russian Baltic Provinces, (where the German language is spoken), from the Netherlands, and even from France and England, meet at Leipzig to settle their accounts, &c.; and this gathering has acquired additional importance by the establishment of a Booksellers' Exchange, a building of handsome design.

GRAND REVIEW AT VINCENNES.

The military spectacle represented in our Engraving, took place on Tuesday week, at Vincennes, near Paris, in honour of Ibrahim Pacha. His Highness arrived at Vincennes at ten o'clock, and immediately mounted his horse, and proceeded, with the Princes, his sons and brothers, to St. Maur, where the Dukes de Nemours, Montpensier, and Augustus of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, in the midst of the troops, waited for his Highness. Nearly 15,000 men belonging to the different regiments forming the garrison of Paris were assembled on the esplanade of St. Maur. Immense crowds, from Puris and the environs, flocked to Vincennes to see the Pacha and to salute him on his passage. Ibrahim wore, over one of his most splendid costumes, the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour; and, mounted on a magnificent Arabian horse, attracted all eyes by his warlike mien.

At the time the sham fight was commencing, the Count of Paris and his brother arrived on the ground, accompanied by Lieutenant-General Baudrand, Colonel de Chabaud Latour, and M. Regnier. The presence of the Royal children gave an additional attraction to the fête. The Egyptian Prince, and Soliman Pacha, placed themselves on an elevated spot, in order to observe minutely the military movements. A brigade, commanded by Major-General Carré, immediately attacked the plateau; but, at the same moment, another troop, in ambush in the wood of Vincennes, made a sudden sortie, and, commanded by Lieutenant-General Sebastiani, vigorously repulsed the attack. A regular combat then ensued, which presented all the characteristics of a real engagement. The enemy, at last, retired, and effected its retreat in squadrons across the village of St. Maur. Ibrahim appeared to take a lively interest in the action, and the spectators often watched the old soldier, to trace the emotion that lit up his countenance during the Review.

The sham fight terminated, the Princes rejoined Ibrahim, and conversed with him on the spectacle that had just been offered to him. The Princes, on their return from St. Maur to Vincennes, were everywhere hailed by the liveliest acclamations. Ibrahim, like their Royal Highnesses, wished to return on horseback. "In your country, as in ours," he gaily exclaimed, "it is on horseback that a General should be seen." At Vincennes, the Pacha visited the new barracks prepared for the artillery, as well as the chapel and dungeon. A magnificent banquet, to which all the officers who had taken a part in the proceedings of the day had been invited, terminated appropriately this splendid Fête, which will long be remembered by all those who had the good fortune to be present at it.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

COLCHESTER CASTLE.

Colchester, supposed to be the Camalodunum of the Romans, appears to have been a place of great importance during the tenure of Britain by that powerful people; perhaps, the best colonists the world ever saw. To use the phrase of one of the historians of Essex, "bushels" of Roman coins have been found at Colchester; and Roman brick is the general material of the ancient buildings—the Castle, for example.

The construction of this stronghold, however, belongs to the Norman times, when, although Colchester had diminished in importance as London increased, it was still a place of considerable note. The remains of the Castle stand upon an eminence northward of the High-street, and form a parallelogram. It was built by Eudo de Rie, Steward of the Household to William Rufus, and in plan it resembled other Anglo-Norman castles. The present southern entrance on the ground-floor is supposed to have been constructed at a later period than the main building. The ancient portal was on the northern side, where, at a considerable height, the vestiges are still to be seen. The large windows now in the walls of the Castle appear to have been opened in places where there were originally only loop-holes. The remains of a gallery within the thickness of the walls may yet be traced, and chimneys, as well as drains, constructed in the usual manner, exist. The keep is still in a good state of preservation, and its walls are twelve feet thick. The building, which is a compound of flint-stone and Roman brick, is so hard that it has frustrated repeated attempts to demolish it for the sake of the materials; and long may it continue to defeat such miscalculating levellers: it is of the same age as the Moot Hall, engraved in No. 144 of our Journal; but which has not been so lasting in its resistance to the hand of "improvement." From the dimensions of the keep, about 168 feet by 127, there must have been, at least, three or four large chambers on every floor.

COLCHESTER CASTLE.

The Castle was formerly Crown property, and the town was feudatory to it; so that it is an interesting relic of early history.

"THE GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP.

This magnificent steam-ship sailed from Liverpool on Monday morning, for New York, carrying out 38 passengers and a large cargo. She passed down the Mersey in splendid style, and at a speed not surpassed by the finest sea-going steamers; thus proving the whole of the alterations made in her since her last voyage, to be decidedly beneficial.

These new fittings are thus described in the Manchester Guardian. They include another screw, and masts and spars of a somewhat different character from those under which the Great Britain has four times crossed the Atlantic, and which are decidedly more in accordance with nautical notions. Her propeller, which is of immense strength, and weighs seven tons, has four vanes, each of great width; her former one had six, but of less width. The diameter of the propeller, from tip to tip of the opposite vanes, is the same as before—15 feet 6 inches. Her masts are now five in number, the whole of which are stepped upon the kelson, and fitted with rope rigging. In her previous voyages, the Great Britain had six masts, fitted with wire rigging; and all, with the exception of the mainmast, were stepped upon deck; and, therefore, admitted of her being lowered at the pleasure of her commander. This it was thought might have proved an advantage when steaming a succession of contrary gales; but, experience soon proved that such an advantage was more than counterbalanced by attendant evils, which it is not necessary now to enlarge upon. Having five masts, her style of rig does not admit a nautical cognomen; but we will attempt a description of it by comparison: 15 yards, or thereabouts, forward of the funnel (which is itself 20 feet forward of the centre of the vessel) stands the mainmast; which, instead of bearing aloft a single topmast, as formerly, carries a maintopmast and topgallant mast, with their respective spars similar in every respect, only of greater bulk, to those of the mainmast of one of the largest Atlantic liners. Abaft the funnel, about 20 yards, stands a similar mast, less bulky, perhaps, but of the same height, and fitted just as the one previously described. Her foremast and fourth and fifth masts, with the exception of being stepped upon the kelson, present the same outward characteristics as the old ones, and carry the same description of sails—spencers. With her old style of rig, the Great Britain behaved well under the canvass; she made part of her last homeward passage entirely without the aid of steam, in consequence of her propeller having been shattered so as to be rendered useless. She even then, under great disadvantages, outsailed two or three liners she fell in with, and frequently accomplished 10 and 11 knots per hour.

In an experimental trip, made on the 30th ult., the Great Britain beat the Cork steamer Nimrod, and the mail steamer Prince, about an hour: and she held way for about half an hour with the fast new run steamer Sea-Kang.

There are other improved points in the Great Britain's new fittings; her boilers give ample steam without any difficulty, with easy firing, and the consumption of coals is much lessened. The alterations in the pumps, valves, &c., have answered every expectation, and the screw is beyond doubt better than the old one. The highest speed in the above trip (steam alone) was 11¼ nautical, or about 13¾ statute miles per hour, the engines at the time making 16½ revolutions.

Our Engraving of the newly-rigged vessel is from a clever sketch by Mr. J. Walter, the marine artist, of Bristol.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP, NEWLY RIGGED.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, MAY 17.—Rogation Sunday Fifth Sunday after Easter.
MONDAY, 18.—Trial by Jury first instituted in England, 970.
TUESDAY, 19 St Dunstan.
WEDNESDAY, 20.—La Fayette died, 1834—Columbus died, 1506.
THURSDAY, 21.—Ascension Day Holy Thursday.
FRIDAY, 22.—Alexander Pope born, 1688
SATURDAY, 23.—Francis shot at Queen Victoria, 1842.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending May 23.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
7 14	7 47	8 23	9 1	9 38	10 9	10 45	11 18	11 46	0 0	0 16	0 42

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"An Ozonian."—A View of the Metropolitan Church named will shortly appear.
"A. L.," Liverpool.—The Views from Monte Video did not reach us in time, or they would have been very acceptable.
"S. C. F.," Islington, has a Literary and Scientific Institution in the parish whence he dates; or, a subscription to the London Mechanics' Institution, Southampton-buildings, Holborn, might answer the purpose.
"Civilian."—The pickets of an army are certain numbers of troops, infantry or cavalry, who are always ready to march on the first order. A staff, in the army, consists of a quarter-master-general, adjutant-general, and majors of brigade.
"J. F.," Belfast should forward his coin, or a cast, to Mr. Webster, Medallist, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.
"A Subscriber" is thanked, but the Sketch of the Tower will not suit.
"Et Cetera."—The average height of Englishmen is placed by Mr. W. B. Brent at 5 feet 7½ inches. Mr. Brent's paper, read to the British Association in 1844, doubtless, gives the average weight; but we have not the entire document for reference
"A Subscriber."—The annual income of the Lord Mayor of London from the City revenue is about £11,000; but the expenditure of a hospitable Mayor usually exceeds this allowance, and tranches upon his private fortune. A Country Subscriber will be entitled to our forthcoming Large View of Dublin.
"An Old Subscriber." Cheltenham.—"Hill's System of Logic" is a work of high character. Our Subscriber will find two excellent papers on Logic in "The Westminster Review," Jan. 1828; and 'The Edinburgh Review," Apr. 1832.
"N. R."—A small Treatise on Angling will give the Fishing Stations in and near London.
"J. A. J." hints that good Protestants should raise a fund for Queen Pomare, who is stated to be in great want of cash for her own use.
"Mater," Hendon, should apply to the police for protection.
"A Constant Subscriber," Bridgewater.—Coals are little membranes found on some children encompassing the head when born. This is thought a good omen to the child itself, and the midwife expects that whoever possesses a caul will be fortunate, and accept danger. Hence, credulous persons going to sea sometimes purchase caule.
"Lilian" may obtain, by order, of any bookseller, a pamphlet describing Mr. Ward's air-tight glazed cases for growing plants. (Van Voorst, 1, Paternoster-row.)
"Hero's Consolatory Epistle" will not suit.
"Hydro-Chloric" may recover goods illegally distrained for lodger's rent, if he apply to a magistrate.
"E. S.," Kensington.—We have not room for the Engraving.
"E. W. L.s" letter has been forwarded to a Lithographic Establishement.
"A Subscriber," Bewley.—The cost of the Thames Tunnel is correctly stated at £346,000. Its History has been illustrated in No. 48 of our Journal.
"M. C.," Wills. Sheet Lightning is caused by the electric discharge permeating generally the surrounding masses of weakly electrized vapour: it is harmless, and even beneficial, as indicating the restoration again of atmospheric and electric equilibrium after it has been destroyed by the rapid succession of cold to heat. Forked Lightning, on the other hand, shows, in its aberrations, that it is near terrestrial objects, and is, therefore, justly regarded as dangerous. Sir Humphry Davy says: "in a violent thunder-storm, when the sound instantly succeeds the flash, the persons who witness the circumstances, are in some danger; when the interval is a quarter of a minute, they are secure."
"Pisc ator," Truro.—We have to consult, in our Illustrations, various tastes. If we may judge by our Correspondent's nom supposé, he has his predilection as well as the lovers of horse-racing.
"Timothy Tablet."—The Sketches shall appear shortly.
"C. C. C."—The solution is correct.
"Gianonetta."—Clement Isaure, (a native of whom it is proposed to place in the Luxembourg Gardens), was a French poetess, stated to have lived in the latter half of the fifteenth century. She instituted the Floral Games which were held on May 1, at Toulouse, until the Revolution.
"An Old Subscriber," Bradford The Kent, Sussex, or Hampshire papers.
"Mentor" should apply to a Patents' Agent, as Messrs. Robertson, Fleet-street.
"A Subscriber," Louth, should address a letter to the Secretary to the Institution in question.
"An Admirer of Native Talent."—We are glad to receive, inter alia, our Correspondent's approval of Mr. Harvey's highly poetic designs for our Journal.
"E. S." We regret that we have not room for the Lines.
"J. K."—We would recommend that inquiries be made of the Music Publishers as to the best town in the South of England for teaching.
"A. D." The periodical in question is piratical, and is by no means to be depended upon
"Zeus." There was but one competing candidate with Mr. Parry, and it was decided therefore by the Committee that the Second Prize should not be awarded.
"M. W."—Apply to any Music Publisher, but Hamilton's Catechisms would answer the purpose
"I. G." A cavatina has words attached to it, and is of a serious character.
"A Subscriber."—We are not aware what is the exact pay of a Captain and Lieutenant in the French army.
"S. M. R." —We do not remember an instance in the Peerage of England, of a title limited to any given number of lives. Walter Scott, of Highchester, the husband of Mary, Countess of Monmouth, was created Earl of Tarras for his own life only, and at his death the title, of course, expired.
"Myrrha."—The Royal Horse Guards are called the "Blues," from the colour of their uniform Deglans is married.
"Expectations."—The length of time a name may be on the list before a commission is obtained depends on the amount of interest which seconds the application. Without some kind of influential assistance, great delay is sure to intervene.
"Corporal B."—The Gazette from the War Office depends on circumstances. Generally, military promotions are announced about once a week.
"Henri," and 'Arma Virumque Cano."—A written application to the Heralds' College would be attended to "S. E. U. C.," Beaminster, should apply to Mr. Cruchley, Publisher, Fleet-street.
"Pre York Guide," and "Inglis's Channel Islands," may be consulted with advantage.
"Art-Union." A List of the Art-Union Prizes may be had at the Society's Office, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross.
"W. G. C." Hoxton.—Yes
"Necessitas" should apply to a Law Stationer, or advertise.
"The Lass by Y." was left out.
"W. B.," co Cork, should apply to the Clerk to the Government School of Design, Somerset House.
"Izaak Walton" had better pay about one guinea for his rod.
"Yankee" will be entitled to the free use of the Drawing.
"A Practical Fisher's" Letter has been referred to "X. Y."
"A Subscriber," Penzance-street.—The Office of the Provident Clerks' Association is at 49, Moorgate-street. A letter addressed to Dr. Mullander, the Secretary, will receive a courteous reply.
"Bachelor Rhah" is a way.
"Auto-Safs."—We believe not.
"W. H. B."—See "Loudon's Arboretum" for the best methods of measuring the height of trees, &c.
"W. T.," Attleborough, is thanked for the Sketch; but we have not room to engrave it
"F. G. K."—We cannot enter into the comparative merits of actors.
"J. S.," Hitchin.—Apply to Parker and Co., Military Booksellers, 30, Charing-cross.
"A. M.," Stafford-row, is guessing
"Inquirer."—We shall specially take occasion to illustrate Van Deman's Land,
"A Constant Reader," Lambeth.—"Taylor's System of Short Hand," improved by Harding
"E. L. C." is thanked for the Sketch, for which we had not room. A set of Wood Engravers' tools may be purchased for about 30*s. at Mr. Penn, Newgate-street.*
"Nimrod," Twyford. The distance from the Kingston Railway to Epsom Downs is about seven miles, and on the race-days, conveyances are in attendance.
"T. F." Hoxton. The report of the New Musical Invention has been received, and will, most probably, appear.
"A. M. K." will find some excellent information on Diving Bells under the article "Submarine Descent," in the 'Penny Cyclopædia."
"T. N. B.," Ludlow.—A Set of Tools for Wood Engraving may be purchased of Mr. Penn, Newgate-street.
"Zeus," and "Perthensis."—Taylor's "Linear Perspective," new edition, improved by Jopling; or, Jopling's "Isometrical Perspective," which is preferable to the common Perspective, on many accounts. Both works are published by Taylor, Walsingham-street, Strand.
"Speranza."—We do not recommend hair-dyes.
"A Mate's Mate" should apply at 157, Leadenhall-street.
"J. L.," Whitehaven, is thanked; but, we have not room.
"Dacoit." We are anxious to return the Sketches of Dacoit, &c., but cannot decipher our Correspondent's signature.
"A. T."—We do not understand the question.
"M. S. F."—Dr. Buckland's "Bridgewater Treatise" was written with the above names by our Correspondent. We are not in possession of a reply to the first question.
"Duncan" should apply to any Music-seller.

 We have received a copy of a Series of Drawings at the Experimental Squadron, lithographed by Haghe, from Paintings by Gilbert. They are beautifully executed, and are appropriate Illustrations of her Majesty's Visit to Spithead, July 15, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1846.

THE military revolutions, or rather revolts of Spain, are almost incomprehensible: some principle there must be involved in them, but what it is we cannot discover. They succeed each other so rapidly, that the blood of one batch of victims is scarcely dry on the ground before we hear of a score of others undergoing the same fate as the close of a similar career. The history of any one of these attempts is the history of all. Officers of different ranks and various degrees of reputation, stationed in some town distant from the capital, hear of a change of Ministry or the break-up of a Cabinet. They immediately meet and "pronounce," as it is called, for whom or for what never distinctly appears. They seize a fort or strong position, and one of them assumes the command of the place, proclaiming martial law, and shooting a few citizens, by way of intimidating the others into non-resistance. Intelligence reaches the capital, and a General somebody, or somebody who wants to be General, is despatched with a few regiments to the locality. Allowing for Spanish delays and procrastination, which pervade everything, the force in due time arrives; and then, provided the repressive body does not "pronounce" too, a fight takes place between these brothers in arms; the insurgents are generally defeated, and then a court-martial is held. Every prisoner brought before it is found guilty, as a matter of course; and the moment the sentence is pronounced, they are marched out to the first convenient spot that offers, and are there shot, with as little ceremony as so many dogs. If the insurgents beat the troops sent against them, the case is reversed -the commanders of the invading regiments being shot instead of shooting; the bloody termination of the scene being the only thing certain and invariable: the revolters then receive commissions and promotions instead of those sent to repress the revolt—and thus the game goes on. As to the people of Spain, it does not appear that they ever interfere in the matter in the slightest degree: whoever holds the fort, or garrison, or citadel, as the case may be, is the ruler; and as, in all these cases, the people and their dwellings are fired upon and battered down by both parties with perfect impartiality, it really is no matter to them who has the upper hand: they have no voice in the matter; in other countries, the Army is paid by the people for the defence of the State, and the protection of life and property. Not so in Spain—there the State belongs to the Army: we firmly believe that three foreign invasions would not have inflicted half the injury on the people of Spain that they have suffered during the last ten years from their own Army alone. If its turbulent and faithless force murdered and slaughtered each other only, they might be left to an internecine war between themselves; but their quarrels shake the whole of society, and render it impossible for trade, commerce, arts, religion, or anything that distinguishes civil life from that of the savage, to take root and prosper.

One of these purposeless insurrections has just terminated: many officers taken in arms against the (at present) Queen's troops, were shot immediately. It is said they died with a "courage and firmness worthy a better cause." Why cannot that better cause be found? Why are Spanish soldiers, of all others here in Europe, so faithless to their allegiance, while the national character is that of a people possessing a keen sense of personal honour? For the slightest reason, or no reason at all, officers revolt. In France and England, Ministers are changed without military insurrections; yet Soult and Wellington have been more celebrated as military leaders than any name in the Spanish service. They have both been in and out of office, without the troops thinking of "pronouncing" in their favour; they remember they have another duty to their Sovereign and country, which is the sentiment the Spanish army seems totally deficient in. The disgust we feel at the brutal ferocity of the victors in these struggles, is increased by knowing that the avengers of to-day are quite ready to be traitors and rebels to-morrow, if they could gain by it a year's pay, or a grade of promotion. This is the source of the evil. Treachery and revolt have so often been rewarded by place and power, that it seems almost legitimate to trade in them.

THE debate on the Ten Hours Bill is again adjourned; the House was prepared for a division on Wednesday afternoon, but six o'clock overtook the Legislators who had made "no note of time," and rendered it impossible. This imperative necessity of breaking up at a certain hour, by "standing order," will prove sometimes an inconvenience, as on the present occasion.

It is confidently asserted that had a division been taken the Ministry would have been in a minority, and that they purposely prolonged the discussion, or rather permitted it to prolong itself, as all discussions have a tendency to do, in order to escape the adverse decision.

Had the Government been left in a minority on the Factory Bill, while the Corn Bill and the Tariff are still pending, it would have been most embarrassing to it, and serious in its consequences to the country. We think it is an error to make the Limitation of Labour a question in which any decision should affect the Government. All the interference hitherto has worked well, and disproved the predictions of ruin that were made upon them; and it seems the general conviction that we may go farther on the principle with perfect safety.

The Protectionist party is quite consistent in supporting the Ten Hours Bill; they recognise the necessity of such interference; but, whether some wish to avenge themselves on Peel for his desertion does not give edge to their zeal, may be doubted. Had he kept to them, they would have carried the Ten Hours Bill, not on principle, but in order not to involve the Government in difficulty. Now, their object is to create that embarrassment, and the passing of the Factory Bill is highly probable. If it does, another "revoke" will be impossible. The day in which the Premier could make the House "rescind" a vote is gone. His own party is divided; and all now depends on which section of that party is joined by the Opposition, which is certainly not bound to repress its opinions to keep him in office. This is the penalty of abandoning old political ties—and no one is more aware of it than the Premier himself.

THE Caledonia steamer arrived on Thursday morning, from New York; the intelligence she brings is pacific, and we hope the uncertainty in which the commercial community on both sides the Atlantic has been involved, is almost at an end. The question begins to get wearying, and, to the well disposed, somewhat of a nuisance; war itself might be a not much greater evil than so much talk about it. The House of Representatives has accepted the "peace amendments" of the Committee of the Senate, and it is decided that the notice terminating the joint occupancy of Oregon is given as a means of "amicable settlement." The New York Herald states,—

That negociations have been resumed between the Secretary of State and the British Minister; that the Caledonia brought out a new offer from the British Government, of a character so favourable that there was very little doubt but that it would be accepted: that a treaty in relation to Oregon was in the course of preparation, and would no.n be sent to the Senate for ratification; and a dozen other things connected with this matter—all of which require confirmation. One thing in relation to this question we do know, and that is, that it is losing its interest on this side of the Atlantic; all fears of a collision between the two countries upon the matter in dispute have disappeared, and there is not that anxiety manifested for a speedy settlement heretofore experienced."

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

RELIGIOUS OPINIONS RELIEF BILL.—On the motion for going into Committee on this bill, the Bishop of EXETER objected that it was contrary to the oath of supremacy and the law of the land.—The LORD CHANCELLOR and the Bishop of ST. DAVID'S supported the bill. After some discussion, the clauses of the bill were sent through Committee, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

IMPRISONMENT OF MEMBERS.—Mr. P. BUTLER gave notice, that on Thursday next he sh uld move for a Select Committee to inquire whether the House had the power to compel recusant members to attend upon committees, and whether the exercise of the power of imprisoning members for not attending was sanctioned by the law of the land.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON THE CORN-BILL.

The order of the day having been read for the adjourned debate on the third reading of this bill, Mr. COLQUHOUN addressed the House against the bill. He was his opinion that if the measure was carried it would hold out false hopes to many, and in the end be destructive to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. C. WOOD supported the bill.

Mr. P BENETT opposed it.

Mr. HINDON said he should oppose the measure, as he considered that large importations of foreign corn would be most detrimental to the British farmer.

The debate was continued by MR. LAWSON and MR. VERNON SMITH.

MR. DISRAELI, in a speech of extreme causticity, opposed the third reading, and concluded by terming Sir R. Peel a blacksmith of other people's opinions, from the time of Mr. Horner to that of Mr. Canning.

Lord J. RUSSELL defended the change of opinion made by Sir R. Peel as a most judicious proceeding, and one which the wants of the country imperatively demanded

SIR R. PEEL, at some length, defended his proceedings in bringing forward the present bill, and urged an immediate and permanent settlement of this great question.

After a few words in explanation from MR. DISRAELI,

Lord G. BENTINCK rose and condemned the measure as being uncalled for by any state of distress at present existing.

After a few words from Mr. C. VILLIERS, the House divided:—

FOR THE THIRD READING	...	...	327
AGAINST IT ...	...	...	229
MAJORITY FOR THE GOVERNMENT	...	...	—98

The House adjourned at four o'clock.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—On Thursday an address was presented to Mr. Smith O'Brien from some members of the '82 Club, at Dublin. In the course of his reply the hon member said, he could not but think that the constitutional question at issue were of the highest moment, not alone to the Irish people, but also to each Member of the Legislature, and to every Parliamentary elector in the United Kingdom. Upon the present occasion, however, he was content to waive al reference to collateral issues, and to justify his conduct upon the simple ground upon which it had received their approval; namely, that until a domestic legislature should be obtained for Ireland, his own country demanded his undivided attention. Let them rest assured that those exertions would not be withheld as long as life and liberty remained to him, until Ireland should again "sit the declaration of 1782 "that no body of men was entitled to make laws to bind the Irish nation, save only the Monarch, the Lords, and the Commons of Ireland."

THE DEANERY OF WINDSOR. This valuable Church preferment, just rendered vacant by the decease of the Hon and Very Rev. Dr. Hobart, who expired at Nocton Rectory, Lincolnshire, on Friday last, is worth between £2000 and £4000 per annum. Amongst the Clergy who have been mentioned as likely to succeed the late Dean, are the Hon. and Rev. Charles Leslie Courtenay, her Majesty's Domestic Chaplain; the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, the Head Master of Eton College; and Lord Wriothesley Russell, who was appointed to a Canonry at Windsor about five years ago. The name of Lord John Thynne, one of the Prebendaries of Westminster, has likewise been mentioned.

DEATH OF SIR WM. MILLER, BART.—We have to record the death of Sir Wm. Miller, Bart., better known as Lord Glenmiler, who expired last Saturday morning, at Barskimming, Ayrshire. The deceased baronet was in his 90th. year. He is succeeded by his eldest son, now Sir Thomas Miller, Bart.

THE LATE MURDER AT BATTERSEA. Yesterday, Mary Clark was tried at the Central Criminal Court, charged with the wilful murder of her daughter, Ann Clark, by throwing her into the Thames, and was acquitted on the ground of insanity.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

SPAIN.—Letters from Madrid received yesterday state, that accounts had been received there from Malaga, announcing an attempt to assassinate some of the principal officers of the latter city. On the 2nd instant the Political Chief was walking in the street, accompanied by several officers of distinction, when a volley was fired upon them by a band of assassins, which mortally wounded the Colonel of the Provincial Regiment of Granada. The Expectador has been sentenced to pay a fine of 50,000 reals (£500) for an article on the Navarre Ministry. A slight emeute had broken out at Seville, but had been immediately suppressed.

COUNTRY NEWS.

DEATH OF PROFESSOR MEIKLEHAM.—William Meikleham, Esq., LL.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, died on Thursday (last week), at his house in the College, Glasgow. This removal strikes off the last link, except one or two, of those who remained to connect the present Professors with the distinguished men, Millar, Jardine, Wilson, Young, Richardson, and others, who, about the close of the last and the commencement of the present century, shed lustre on the Univer-ity, and conferred signal benefits on education.

STATE OF TRADE IN BIRMINGHAM.—The manufacturers of the high prices which the Iron masters still insist on, the manufacturers of Birmingham and Wolverhampton find themselves unable to compete with Belgium and other continental countries, and are, in consequence, fully on the home market, which is in a state of great depression. It is a fact which ought to be instructive to the great combination of British iron masters to obtain prices, that Belgium has actually imported iron from the United States, manufactured it, and sent the manufactured article to England, where it has been sold to a profit at less money than the British manufacturer could dispose of his goods for.

ROBBERY TO A LARGE AMOUNT AT LIVERPOOL.—On Saturday last property to a large amount was stolen in Liverpool. It has been a custom of long standing amongst the commercial firms of Liverpool to send their cash, bills of exchange, railway scrip, and other valuable documents in tin boxes, to the banks and other places, there to be kept in strong iron safes until the following morning. Upon the afternoon of Saturday last, a highly-respectable firm sent their box by one of their clerks to be deposited, as usual, until Monday morning, in the Royal Bank. The box contained, at the time it was despatched from the office, bill s of exchg ge to the large amount of £22,000. Most of the bills will become due in the months of June, July, August, and September. The largest of them seems to be the one drawn by Livingston, Syare, and Co., on James Akin, which was for £2186, payable on the 5th of October. It is gratifying to know that the particulars of all the bills had been kept, and this payment of them has been stopped. The box also contained the manifest of the ship Passenger, cash to the amount of £47, and scrip in several railways. The clerk stated that he took the box from the Royal Bank, laid it upon the counter, and returned to the office. The clerk at the bank states, upon the other hand, that the box, if left upon the counter, was not seen by him, and that, upon the arrival of the other boxes which had been sent in upon Saturday evening, and missing this identical one from the number, he reported the circumstance. Nothing further was heard of the matter for some hours afterwards, when the box was found entirely emptied of the whole of its contents, was found in one of the streets of the town. It was immediately conveyed by the policeman on duty to the central police station, where a report of the robbery was subsequently made. Therefore, giving that they have stated (they are men in business—he one that he delivered the box at the counter, the other that he never received it in charge

SEIZURE OF STOLEN GOODS AT NORWICH.—A most extensive seizure has just been made by the police in Norwich, consisting of various kinds of manufactures, of which the materials had been systematically purloined by the persons employed in working them. The property taken was of such a variety that it is almost impossible to enumerate it, such a large quantity that it had to be conveyed to the Guildhall in carts. The whole of it was deposited in the Council Chamber, which bore the appearance of a great mart. There were shawls and dresses of every description handkerchiefs of all colours, manufactured and ready for sale—all kinds of silks and yarn, both in a raw and manufactured state —besides reels and bobbins of every size. The total value of the property taken was estimated to be worth very nearly one thousand pounds.

DEMISE OF THE SON OF OLD MORTALITY.—Mr. Robert Paterson, a worthy, quiet character of the olden school, who remembered much of the early history of Scotch boyhood, and the agricultural changes which have so conspicuously improved the appearance of the country during the present and preceding centuries, died at his place of residence, Balmaclellan Village (Scotland), on the 30th ultimo, at the ripe age of ninety-one years. His own parent the hero of Sir Walter Scott in "The Tales of My Landlord"—he of course remembered well; but from innate modesty was shy of speaking of him in the company of strangers. Latter-y "Old Mortality," familiar from his youth upward with the chisel and mallet, devoted himself entirely to monumental masonry some grave-yard for the most part his workshop; and hence the sobriques by which he was known by all the parish boys wherever he wandered.

SUDDEN DEATH IN A CHAPEL.—On Sunday afternoon, about seven o'clock, during the performance of the evening service at the Wesleyan Chapel, in the Back-road, St. George's-in-the-East, Mr. John Moffatt, a retired servant of the East India Company, residing at 44, John-street, St. George's, who formed one of the congregation, was observed to fall suddenly, as if he had been shot. Mr. Luke Farrow, who also formed one of the congregation, rendered immediate assistance, in which he was assisted by Mr. Rees, a surgeon, residing in the neighbourhood, but their efforts were of no avail, as life was utterly extinct.

POLICE.

THE FORGED SCRIP OF THE BUCKINGHAMSHIRE RAILWAY.

On Tuesday, at the MANSION-HOUSE, John Bannister Faulkner and Bentham Fabian, who were on Saturday last charged with having disposed of forged scrip of the above-mentioned Company, were put to the bar, and Mr. Wilde appeared as counsel for them.

In the evidence given by Mr. Solomons, that gentleman mentioned the name of Mr Richards, through whose hands the forged scrip shares had passed. It is proper here to state, that Daniel Forrester, the officer, having received instructions as to parties who were supposed to have been mixed up in the transactions alluded to, handed in the following letter from Mr. Richards, and said that gentleman would, he had no doubt, be in attendance.

"Understanding that you wish to see me respecting the evidence necessary in the alleged forgery of the Buckinghamshire Railway scrip, I beg to say that I am [illegible] attend at present, but shall be quite prepared, before the next examination, to give you every information in my power respecting the transactions in which I have been concerned.

Yours obediently, EDWARD RICHARDS.

50, Moorgate street, 9th May, 1846.
Mr. D. Forrester, Mansion House."

Mr. Huddlestone, barrister, said he appeared on the part of Mr. Clarke, the gentleman who was charged at Guildhall, on Saturday last, by Mr. Edwards, clerk to Mr. Robins, a stock and sharebroker, with having been concerned in the fraud, although (as Mr. Clarke) had attended at the Mansion-house on Friday, to give all the aid in his power to bring the guilty parties to justice. Mr. Clarke was a person of well-known respectability, and he felt an anxiety to state all that he knew of the transactions, of which, as far as he was concerned, there was never the most distant idea of concealing anything.

Mr Baldwin, for the prosecutor, wished the cases to be adjourned, as there had not been time to procure the necessary witnesses.

Mr. Huddlestone submitted, that such a course would be extremely unjust to his client, who, it was manifest, knew nothing at all about the dishonourable part of any one of the transactions which had taken place.

Alderman Gibbs: Let Mr. Clarke come forward.

Mr. John Clarke then entered the justice-room, and took his station not at the bar but at the bottom of the table.

Mr. Doane, the barrister, attended on the part of Mr. Richards, who was ready to state all he knew as a witness

Mr. Huddlestone said he was desirous to have Mr. Richards examined as to the connection which Mr. Clarke had with the transactions. Mr Clarke had been in communication with Daniel Forrester on Friday, and attended voluntarily, as that officer knew, to give evidence on the subject of the forgeries.

Alderman Gibbs: Does any one now charge Mr. Clarke?—Mr. Baldwin (for the prosecution) could not say that he was prepared to lay before the Alderman any evidence affecting Mr. Clarke.

Mr. Teague (the chief clerk of Guildhall Police Court) then, at the desire of Alderman Gibbs, read the evidence of Mr Edwards, who had sold for Mr. Clarke fifty shares in the Buckinghamshire, &c., Railroad Company

Mr. Huddlestone: You had your commission? Mr. Edwards: Yes. Mr. Robins, my employer, had his commission as the usual course of business. Here the witness expressed an anxious wish to show how he became connected with Mr. Clarke, and then explained the nature and circumstances of their acquaintance. Mr. Richards, who was known to the witness as a witness in the Stock Exchange, the person to whom he had sold Mr. Clarke's shares returned them to him as forgeries, and he, of course, procured bond fide scrip shares for them, and gave them to that person. The occurrence put witness to considerable expense, and he went to see whether he could find Mr. Richards, and then he and his brother called at the Hall of Commerce, where Mr. Clarke, upon hearing his name called, appeared, and at once said he was the person for whom he had sold the scrip shares. Mr. Clarke, upon being told the scrip shares were forgeries, and being asked of whom he had them, at once replied, of Mr. Richards. Under such circumstances, seeing that Mr. Clarke was mixed up with the affair, he considered it to be his duty to give that gentleman into custody

Mr. Edward Richards was next called to give evidence, as regarded Mr. Clarke, although he was given to the witness to examine him

The witness said he was a member of the Hall of Commerce

Alderman Gibbs: From whom did Mr. Clarke get those fifty shares?—Witness: From me. I refused to give him them. He then made a friend. It would be of advantage to him. Half the commission was 7*s*. I gave them to Mr. Clarke to sell to realize for me.

Alderman Gibbs: From whom did you get the forged scrip?—Witness from Messrs. Faulkner and Fabian.

Mr. Doane: Had you the slightest suspicion that they were forged scrip shares?—Witness: Not the most remote suspicion of such a thing. The transaction between me and Mr. Clarke and Mr. Edwards was a bond fide transaction

Mr. Doane: And are you ready at any time to make the most full statement in your power relative to the transactions in which you were engaged?

It was here stated, that if the matter had been explained, Mr. Clarke would not have been put to the very disagreeable inconvenience to which he had been subjected.

Mr. Edwards said, that he had acted for his own protection, and he considered himself perfectly justified, under all the circumstances.

Mr. Doane: Mr. Clarke and Mr. Richards, said it was quite impossible that any dealing could have been more open and exposed to examination than the course pursued by their clients.

The prisoners, Faulkner and Fabian, were then remanded, and Mr. Clarke, Mr Richards, and several others were requested to attend Inspector Walker, into whose custody the prisoners were given at the station-house, took bank notes and bills which he had received from the two prisoners when they were charged with the forgery by Mr. Solomons. Faulkner had in his pockets when apprehended £1025 in Bank of England notes, and Fabian was in possession of bills coming due to the amount of £2693 12*s*. 10*d*. Scrip shares on the Madras Railway Company; the Madras, Nellore, and Arcot Railway Company: and the Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's Railway Company, of considerable value, were also in the possession of the prisoners.

Lists of all the documents were made out by the direction of Alderman Gibbs.

THE OUTRAGE UPON A FEMALE IN WESTMINSTER.

Since the apprehension of William Luff, alias William Mansfield, on the charge of brutally assaulting and throwing a female out of window, the magistrate of WESTMINSTER Police-Office (Mr Burrell) has, from time to time, inquired after her condition, with a view of ascertaining whether she was in a fit state to give any account of the transaction, and on its being reported to him that she was competent to give a coherent account, although labouring under erysipelas, Mr Burrell, sitting for the express purpose of this disorderly, determined to enter her examination, and on Tuesday, accompanied by Mr. W. Taylor, the chief clerk at the Westminster Police Court, he proceeded to the Westminster Hospital, whither the prisoner was conveyed, in order that her evidence might be taken in his presence.

On the previous investigations, three witnesses spoke to the outrageous conduct of the prisoner, towards the woman, one of whom found the accused holding her by the hair, and striking her on the head with a poker; and another witness heard him say, with an oath, "I'll throw you out of the window," and immediately afterwards saw the female hurled into the yard.

The magistrate and clerk having taken their seats by the witness's bed, with the prisoner in front, the proceedings commenced:—

Jane Fallen, examined by Mr. W. Taylor: I lived with the man who now stands before me, whom I know by the name of William Luff. I have lived with him for about a twelvemonth. About eight o'clock in the evening of this day week, I came home and found the prisoner in the room. He began to quarrel with me for not being at home, and said, "This is fine goings on for a man to come home from work, and no fire." One of the lodgers called me out, and the prisoner persuaded me not to go. I said, if he would not let me go out of the room, I would get out of the window. He said, "you had better sit down," and went to the cupboard and got something to eat. While he was at the cupboard I jumped out of the window—which I had attempted before, but he pulled me back.

Mr. Taylor: Do you recollect anything more?—Witness: Yes, I recollect a young woman coming up in the yard

Mr. Burrell: Did he not push you from the window?—Witness: No, sir, he did not.

Mr Taylor: Had you been drinking?—Witness: I had had a little drop to drink.

Mr. Burrell. Was the man sober?—Witness: Yes, quite.

Mr. Taylor: The prisoner offer on any violence?—Witness: No, he did not.

Mr Taylor: Did he not strike you with a poker?—Witness: No, sir, I had the poker in my own hand.

Mr. [illegible]: Did you strike him with the poker —Witness: I was going to, [illegible] from me.

Mr. Taylor: Was there any blood about you?—Witness: Yes, a little.

Mr. Taylor: How came blood about you?—Witness: I fell down and struck my nose, which caused it to bleed. There was no other blood on me before I jumped out of the window.

Mr Burrell: Did he not strike you?—Witness: He only gave me a shove on the side of the head.

Mr. Burrell: Did he not say he would throw you out of the window?—Witness: No, sir, he did not.

Mr. Burrell: Are you quite sure of that?—Witness: I am.

This being the conclusion of her evidence, the prisoner was asked whether he wished to put any question to her. He replied "No," what she had stated was the whole truth.

The female still carries marks of brutal violence; but her condition is much improved, and unless some unfavourable change should take place, her ultimate recovery is not despaired of.

AN IRISH INSULT TO A SCOTCH PEER.

A young man, Alexander Reed, who had the appearance of a sailor, was charged on Wednesday, at BOW-STREET, with being found, under suspicious circumstances, in the garden of Buckingham Palace. Police-constable A 119, who detected the accused, stated that he was on duty in the Royal Garden, and about one o'clock that morning he found him lying asleep on a sofa in a tent there. Upon asking him how he came there, he replied that he had no money to pay for a bed, and that he got over the wall of the Park, thinking he should find a place to have a nap unobserved, and got into the tent without being observed by the sentinel. In answer to a question from Mr. Henry, the prisoner said he went into the garden to have a peep at the Queen, and, being very sleepy, he took the liberty of laying down on her Majesty's sofa. Mr. Henry, not being satisfied with this statement, remanded him.

THE ASSASSINATION IN DRURY-LANE.—In consequence of a medical certificate having been sent to Mr. Henry, stating that one of the witnesses, LOUISA COOK, was too ill to attend the Court, Mr. Henry, on Wednesday, sent for the medical attendant, and told Mr. Humphreys that he could not think of sending the boy Graham to trial at the present sessions. Mr. Humphreys said he should not throw any obstacle in the way of any course Mr. Henry might think requisite for the ends of justice. Mr. Henry said that a person had called upon him, and stated he could give important evidence, as he saw the whole transaction; but he (Mr. Henry) should not call him now; he only mentioned it for Mr. Humphrey's information. Mr. Henry remanded Graham for a fortnight.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Augsburg Gazette contains a letter from Constantinople, stating that Sir Stratford Canning and Baron de Bourqueney had called for the dismissal of Selim Pacha, on account of his having inflicted torture upon the Christians of Albania; and it adds that the Armenian patriarch who had launched an anathema against such of his flock as had attended the sermons of foreign missionaries, had received from the Emperor of Russia, by way of mark of approbation, a magnificent diamond cross.

The Brighton and Chichester railroad will be opened in its whole extent on Monday, the 25th instant, the anniversary of her Majesty's birthday. The conductors say they shall drive an engine through it on 6 miles per hour.

A letter from Vienna states that the marriage between the Prince Royal of Wurtemburg and the Grand Duchess of Russia will be solemnized at St. Petersburg on the 6th of July, the day of the anniversary of the birth of the Empress. The writer adds that it is considered as certain that the Emperor will meet the Empress at Ratisbon.

We have advices from Tahiti up to the end of December; the face of things has not changed. The natives entrenched in their camps remained in a passive state of hostility, and Pomaré, who is with her husband at Raiatea, refused all intercourse with the French. A report was abroad that Pomaré was inclined to relinquish the Protectorate over the Islands of Raiatea, Huahine, and Borabora, which, with some others, were to be left to the natives, on condition that they were not to be put under the protection of any other power. The English and French Admirals had met once to an agreement on the Pritchard Indemnity, and thus matters stood.

A rumour is afloat to the effect that there is to be an immediate consolidation of the Board of Excise and the Board of Stamps and Taxes, so as to leave only one revenue board for customs or foreign duties, and one for inland duties. It is even said that Sir R. Peel intends to make this arrangement part of his forthcoming budget.

The Journal de l'Yonne announces that on Thursday morning (last week), the Count de la Bourdonnaye, on getting out of his bed to dress himself, was struck with apoplexy, and died almost instantaneously.

It is said that the Emperor of Russia has advised the King of Naples to oppose the marriage of Count Trapani with Queen Isabella II. On the 16th ultimo the Pope held a consistorium at Rome, at which different Bishops were consecrated. The Holy Father is said to have spoken in very bitter terms of the conduct of the French clergy during the late insurrection in Poland, and it is probable he will address an evangelical letter to the French Bishops.

According to letters from Constantinople, another conspiracy, having for its object the instigation of the inhabitants of Thessaly to revolt, and originating with the philanthropic societies of Greece, has just been detected on the Greek frontier. So far as it may seem, this plot was announced to the Porte by the Russian Minister.

Letters from Vienna of the 3rd instant, state that the Arch-Duke John had been ordered by the Emperor to proceed to Venice, in order to compliment the Empress of Russia, and accompany her to Saltzburg. Grand Prince were being prepared for her Imperial Majesty at Venice.

The States of the Grand Duchy of Baden were re-opened on the 4th, with all the usual ceremonies. The Minister of the Interior, as Commissioner of the Grand Duke, delivered the speech in the name of his Highness, which directed the attention of the Chamber particularly to the question of railroads.

A letter from Marseilles, after announcing that the Duke of Parma had, on Good Friday, granted pardons to the companions of the unfortunate Bandiera, and that they had arrived at Marseilles, mentions a report that others of the political convicts in the affair of Calabria had obtained commutations of their sentences, and that some of them had been set at liberty.

Miss Huguina Leslie, the last representative of the no less ancient than distinguished house of Leslie of Lindores, died on Sunday last, at Edinburgh, at the advanced age of one hundred years, five weeks, and three days, having been born on March 15, 1746. In the rebellion of '45 her father took a very prominent part in the army of the Stuart pretender under William, Duke of Cumberland, and long survived that eventful period.

A letter from Constantinople, dated April 27th, says:—"Admiral Sir William Parker, since his arrival in her Majesty's ship Virago, on the 19th inst., has been engaged in a daily succession of fêtes and dinners. On the 23rd, which was St. George's Day, all the English residents of Constantinople were invited to dine with him at the ambassadorial residence. On the 24th he was entertained by the Austrian Internuncio, and on the 26th he dined with the Turkish Ministers and the whole corps diplomatique at the British embassy. On the same day he and his suite were presented to the Sultan by Sir Stratford Canning."

The Augsburg Gazette, in letters from Lemberg, April 30, states that much agitation still prevailed in that part of the country. Many of the peasants refused to perform the duties they are bound to do for their landlords, and even go so far as to openly declare that they will proceed to be shared amongst all the inhabitants. Much distress was occasioned for want of food. The authorities were doing all in their power to procure a supply of provisions, but scarcity was a most difficult one.

The Council of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, has fixed the period of the next meeting to be held at Southampton, for the week commencing Thursday, 10th September. The President, appointed at the last meeting at Cambridge, is Sir Roderick Impey Murchison.

Intelligence from the frontiers of Servia, dated April 25, announces that Prince Alexander had left Belgrade for Ratschuk, where the Vizier was expected to arrive on the 19th of May. The Prince was accompanied by Petronievich and the Senator Garaschanes, and intended to make presents to the Sultan to the value of upwards of 100,000 ducats. The Hospodars of Moldavia and Wallachia were also to offer magnificent presents to his Highness.

The Constitutionnel publishes intelligence from Madagascar, down to the 7th of February last. The Hovas, encouraged by impunity, continued to maintain in force the edict of Queen Ranavala Manjaka, which obliged the English and French to send an expedition to Tamatave. Several vessels engaged by the Governor of Bourbon for the purpose of procuring provisions from Madagascar had been refused admission into Tamatave. The natives, augmented in numbers on the beach, threatened to fire on the crews, and prevented them from landing. An English vessel, which arrived there at the same time, was also delayed sundown, and compelled to put to sea.

The session of the two Chambers of the Netherlands was closed on the 11th inst., by the Minister of the Interior in the name of the King. The review of the affairs of the kingdom, both external and internal, was of a satisfactory nature.

Letters from Neisse, in Prussian Silesia, dated May 2, state that the Chief Tyssowski had succeeded in making his escape, as likewise several emigrant officers, amongst whom was Alois Starawski, a brother of the general of that name. Three of them left behind their red schakoes, and they were even seen to get off in a coach. On the 3rd inst. seven of the insurgents were to be transported to Cracow, to appear before the criminal commission.

On the 1st instant the church of St. Philip Neri, at Barcelona, was inaugurated with a grand mass in music. It replaces an ancient chapel of St. Agnes in the church of the Jesuits, specially appropriated in early days to the use of the French residents at Barcelona.

In the sitting of the Canadian Parliament of the 17th ult., on a division upon the Trade Bill, sent out by Sir Robert Peel, the Government was defeated by a majority of seven.

A Trieste letter of the 30th ult. states, from Romelia, that the Turks have attacked the Catholics of that country, torn them from their houses, and dragged them through the streets, because they would not abjure their religion. The Greeks were obliged to interfere to save the victims of fanaticism from being massacred. From this time the bitterness between the Turks and Christians had become so great, that it had been found necessary to send detachments to keep peace between them. According to accounts from Damascus, dated March 31, the Catholic Melchites have also suffered severely from the Turks, who are encouraged by the authorities, and even by the Pacha himself.

The French Government having charged the chief engineer of the department of the Rhône to assemble a commission, and proceed to an inquiry into the causes of the accident when happened on March 1, on the St. Etienne and Lyons railroad, the engineer, who acted as president, has transmitted a report, from which it appears that the engine which broke down had been long in use that the rails to a considerable extent were in a bad condition—that the curves were too sharp and that the diligences were upon the old structure, without springs, and consequently unfit to sustain shocks.

It is stated from Turin, that the Austrian Government had taken offence at some liberal measures lately adopted by the King of Sardinia, and addressed several angry notes to his Majesty. An impression prevails that the Liberals of Italy looked to King Charles Albert for support, notwithstanding the former defeat of their revolutionary views by the accession of the same Sovereign from "the cause."

The Berlin Zeitung contains a correspondence from Posen, under date May 4th, in which it is stated that a collision between a squadron of Hussars and the populace had taken place at Kosten, and that many of the latter (report says the eighteen) had been severely wounded. It appears that the inhabitants of the town had been informed that the head clergyman was to be arrested on political grounds, and that they had assembled in a tumultuous manner in order to prevent his removal. The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung also mentions the occurrence, but does not state that any persons were wounded.

A GLITTERING DELUSION.

To the Editor or the "Times."

Sir—About a twelvemonth ago, or less, a certain weekly paper issued a prospectus, inviting attention to a plan by which some thousands of pounds would annually be obtained for the small outlay of £1 0*s*. per annum—the distribution of the money pocketed on the prizes and numbers of the Art-Union. That institution disapproved of this lottery; and I think too much praise cannot be given to it for preventing a more extensive system of gambling than must even necessarily accompany all societies of the like kind. They announced, about six weeks since, that they should draw their prizes in such a way as to baffle the attempts of the newspaper in question. That journal, on the following Saturday, announced that, whatever the Art-Union might do, they would adhere to the terms of their advertisement; and that, no matter how the Art-Union drew its prizes, their distribution should be regulated by it. The Art-Union, I understand, drew by names, and not by numbers, thus effectively disconcerting this thousand pound scheme. The advertisements respecting it are now withdrawn, the boards at the office are taken down, and all has resumed its wonted quiet. Nor a word is now said of the thousands of pounds annually: the victims of the "day" who have subscribed in the hopes of becoming a thousand pounds richer, have now only to lament with ONE WHO DID NOT GET £1000.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

We resume this subject from last week.

Our introductory remarks have indicated the radical errors of the Continental Schools of Art. The defects of detail and execution follow so immediately from these fundamental mistakes, that it is hardly worth while to trace their growth step by step, or to point them out one by one.

The English School if we may use the expression when there is no school, but many skilful mannerists and a crowd of imitators—has, with few exceptions, avoided the vain attempt at resuscitating dead forms. But, in revenge, it has in many instances run into the equally fatal error of regarding imitation as one of the great, if not the great end of art. The obvious straining towards this end on the part of the artist has led to an exaggerated value of a successful attainment of it on the part of the spectator.

We find a majority of the pictures in an English Exhibition challenging admiration on the score of dexterous representation of draperies, clothes, furniture, and accessories of all kinds, "even to" the "texture" of "porcelain" and we find a majority of Exhibition-haunters confining their praise to the skill displayed in these points, and learnedly minute in finding out and condemning whatever is "unlike nature." They are not aware that this, as one sense, is the highest praise that can be bestowed upon a picture.

The object of imitation is to deceive. The pleasure it produces arises from an amazement for a moment the thing to be that which we know it is not.

To produce this, is the intention of a wax-work; and it is only by placing waxworks and pictures on a level, that we can admit "imitation" to be a proper end of art.

Besides aiming in their mistaken efforts at literal imitation of textures and surfaces, our artists show a sad lack of cultivation in their choice of subjects; and, when next to nothing is done in the treatment of them. This weakness arises from the preceding error. If imitation be the artist's aim, the choice of subjects is a matter of no importance. Nay, as only the trivial can be imitated, subjects abounding in trivialities are those which, according to this theory of art, most naturally suggest themselves to the artist.

We have already intimated that the present Exhibition is above the average of excellence. The works of the Academicians naturally claim earliest notice.

Landseer, in popular appreciation, stands highest of present English painters. He has no living rival, few dead ones. Snyders has more motion and more jaggedness, but has not yet shown the inner nature of the brute as Landseer was the first to do. He has four pictures this year; all remarkable for his peculiar mastery of hand in giving texture, his clean and pleasing colour, and his well-defined unmistakeable line of intention, when there is any intention, in the work.

His "Time of Peace" is a scene on the Downs near Ramsgate. It is a bright summer day: below the cliff the blue sea is rippling, cheerfully, under the warm sunshine; a family are amusing themselves at Cave Cradle, surrounded by sheep. Rusty howitzers lie at intervals along the cliff, dismounted from their carriages. Round one of them, in the foreground, the sheep are gathered—a lamb is sucking the teat, a fresh swarm grazes from the very muzzle of the gun. Here is a sentiment which elevates the picture above the literal class; yet the overpowering sublimities of the handling, the wonderful way in which the short curly texture of the coats is distinguished from the fleece of the sheep, the painting of the grass, and the rusty cannon, almost quenches the sentiment, or at least does much to overlay it. The companion picture, "Time of War," is restored from literalness by some fine touches of more delicate sentiment, when we might have looked for the higher and broader play of imagination. Two chargers, a white and a black one, with their dead riders, are lying in a confused heap among the ruins of a farmyard. The head only of the white horse is visible,—the eye glazed, the nostril stiffened in death. The black horse is mortally wounded, rolling his haunches in an impotent effort to rise, and the breath projected from his nostrils in the recoil. The touch of fancy is in the broken flower-pots, with the rose and geranium still fresh and sweet, and living amidst the sooty smoke and ruin. They tell of peacefulness and innocence, and women's hands; and in the grim associations which they give to, enforces a contrast, and carry away the mind to the quiet and happier time. It is in such a work as this that we recognise a true conception of the purposes of art. This is sedirect wanting in the nature called "Refreshment"—a white horse munching carrots, two resting dogs, and a pair of peasants watching all. Perhaps, however, the sentiment of contented enjoyment which breathes from the picture, may elevate it into with triumphing in this low-lying, but prettily-flowered field, will Mr. Corbould venture into the awful mountain range of the high Heroic, Historic, Religious, or whatever name belongs to the domain in which rule Raphael and the Italians? The "Christ Restoring the Daughter of Jairus" is perfect in manipulation—clean to an abomination. The dead child has none of the emaciation of lingering illness—no damps of the death-chill on limb or brow. She is a trim, plump, well-conditioned maiden—much such a one as his "Eggseller" would be cut of her petticoats. The Christ has no speck or soil upon him; no dust upon his lowly feet, no stamp of sorrow or suffering on his smooth face. His hair is fresh from brush and comb, and by no means innocent of Macassar: so with everything. The qualities which would be meritorious in an humbler class of painters, are utterly and unqualifiedly abominable in the treatment of grave and elevated themes, which the artist seems to take a pleasure in selecting. His "Entrance of the Boy King" is less objectionable, though, even here, everything wears an air of theatrical pageantry. Still, this suits the subject; and, by a lavish use of gum and body colour, a rich and imposing effect is attained in the foreground. In one place we saw a dash of colour fixed on the glass, instead of the paper underneath—a trick, and a peculiarly unworthy one, because glass and picture are not one and indivisible.

FINE ARTS.

We could not have believed that Penley could have condescended to anything so life-like and unpretending as "The Head of a Country Girl," a masterpiece of colour and fidelity to nature, snatched from any cottage door in Kent or Suffolk, and transferred to paper before the wonderment has quite left her round eyes, or the flush faded from her apple-cheek. We like the little dashes of the great men best. We should prefer one little bit of H. Warren, like (277) "On Wimbledon Common," a simple transcript of green heath-land, with a tree or two breaking the level, to all the "Dried-up Wells" and "Dying Camels" and "Desert Scenes," he paints, however cleverly, without having seen them.

Kearney comes out with a certain sober solidity of colour, and an intention in his heads, which promise well. His "Nonconient" is a real Ironside; his Bible on one side counterpoising his standing tuck on the other. His "Cromwell and Wildrake" has the same merits of meaning in the faces, and careful modelling, with a sobriety of tone which subordinates the background and accessories as they ought to be subordinated.

D'Egville follows Varley with a bold hand, and with a success which induces regret that he should not follow nature instead.

Hardwicke has several forest scenes from nature, and looking like it—coarse, but real, and telling of the open air—wholesome pictures, which make one breathe freely as one looks at them: and Youngman has a "View on the Tees," remarkable for its air and the local truth of colour.

But how comes it we have omitted Topham all this while? His "Mavourneen" is the gem of the exhibition; a young Irish mother watching her baby, and the grandmother cowering by her side, in all the picturesque squalor of a Galway cabin, but hallowed and heightened by a sentiment the more deep and tender for its homeliness. This is a drawing which will touch many hearts and awaken womanly sympathies towards poor Ireland. We are sorry it is the only picture of this charming artist, who knows his art, and what his art can do, so well.

Jutsum has some green and sunny landscapes; and Dodgson, a number of those charming little combinations of wood and architecture, which he composes with such a fine feeling for tone and line. His "Avenue" has very high merit; it stretches along cool, and calm, and stately. And his old-world uninhabited castle (340), with its gardens weed-grown and tangled, and its nightingale-haunted brakes, is a work of real and chastened imagination.

Lindsay, also, has several small landscapes, of harmonious and agreeable colour.

G. Howse, however, may share the landscape honours of the New Society with Duncan. His "Frankfort-on-the-Maine" is a most elaborate river view, with a mass of shipping grouped skilfully, and the old tower of the Cathedral coming out in grey and airy tones above the houses of the quay. His "Abbeville" is one of those picturesque squares of timbered houses which seem to have been built for artists to copy; and he has half-a-dozen rich little bottings of still-life and architecture, which are equally facile and agreeable.

Boys has several large and elaborate views, chiefly in France—one especially of the Seine and the Quays of Paris—rather cold in tone, but very skilful in the management of the perspective.

Callow's seas are hard and formal: his ships are stuck on the top of waves like haycocks, and give up the attempt to float in despair of success with such ridgy unyielding water.

Chase deserves notice for his "Interior of the Hall of Justice at Bruges," though it wants the solidity and daylight of Nash's view of the same room.

We have engraved Jenkins's fine picture, "Le Récit d'Une Grande Bataille," attached to which in the catalogue are the following lines from one of Béranger's songs:

"Puissance et gloire
Cris de Victoire
Rien n'approche de mon pays
De tout quitter mon cœur me prie
Je reviens pauvre, mais content."

The accompanying Illustration is from the Old Water-Colour Society—Alfred Fripp's "Irish Courtship," noticed in our "Gossip" of last week. We have appended a few characteristic lines:—

IRISH COURTSHIP.

DERMOT.

Arrah! Kathleen asthore! 'tis my own heart is breaking,
From the cruel disdain which now laughs in your eyes;
Sure, 'tis a full week since the drink I'm forsaking,
And I join in no scrimmidges now with the b(o)ys.
Then turn round, my darling! your coldness will wither
The heart-flow'rs I tenderly cherish for you—
I have taken the pledge, dear: Ah! Kathleen, look hither!
This medal proves Dermot is sober and true.

KATHLEEN

Ah! thin, Dermot, I'm glad that you 've taken to water;
'Twill cool all the flames that your love fans for me—
Perhaps you mistake me for Mahony's daughter,
You danced with all day, at the fair of Tralee;
While there sat poor me, like Ste. Charity's statue,
With two little children I danced on my knee
Don't talk to me, Dermot, about Father Mathew
Go! marry Miss Mahony; I will be free.

DERMOT.

Then, here—take this medal! My lone heart is sinking;
The hopes that I lived on are lost in despair;
No comfort now left to poor Dermot, but drinking—
No joy but the wild one—a fight at the fair.

KATHLEEN.

Oh! say not so, Dermot, you make my breast flutter
With fear; but you'll never see that cray'thure again!

DERMOT.

Your smile to my heart is a hot knife through butter!
To you, dear, for ever I'll constant remain.

L'ENVOI.

E'en so he did: achievement rare!
And Erin seldom hail'd a pair
So fond, through every scene of life,
As Dermot and his faithful wife.
Joy, when it came, was doubly joy;
And sorrow's self held mirth's alloy.
Oh! thus may every pair be seen,
Happy as Dermot and Kathleen!

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—"IRISH COURTSHIP."—BY ALFRED FRIPP.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—"LE RÉCIT D'UNE GRANDE BATAILLE."—BY JOS. J. JENKINS.

CHURCH FOR THE SEAMEN OF THE PORT OF LONDON.

On Monday, the foundation-stone of a Church expressly for the accommodation of the Seamen of the Port of London, was laid by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in the presence of a large and distinguished assemblage of ladies, noblemen, and gentlemen, subscribers to this new spiritual provision for our seamen. The site has been judiciously chosen, in Dock-street, very near the London and St. Katherine's Docks, the Sailors' Home, and the Seamen's Asylum.

The preparations for the ceremony were well planned. From the walls of the new Church, which have already been raised to the height of about 16 feet, a blue and white canvass awning was stretched and carried up to a lofty ridge, from which the Union Jack floated outside. On a platform, erected in the centre of the area, and covered with Turkey carpeting, three chairs were placed, one a chair of state for the Prince; that on the one side for the Bishop of London, and that on the other for the Lord Mayor. Immediately to their right, over an opening in the floor, was suspended from pulleys the foundation-stone, which, being lowered by the ropes attached, fitted to one of corresponding dimensions, and enclosed a bottle containing the plan of the building and the inscription. The whole of the remaining space was occupied by crimson-covered seats in ascending rows, which were filled by ladies and gentlemen. The Clergy, who attended in considerable numbers, occupied three benches immediately behind the Prince; the seats in front were occupied by the Lords of the Admiralty, the Committee, and their ladies. The upper and back benches were occupied by seamen and their apprentices, who acted as an excellent choir.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Abercorn, arrived on the the ground in Dock-street, at about a quarter to three o'clock, and shortly after was surrounded by the following official and distinguished personages:—Lords Commissioners and officers of the Admiralty, Earl of Ellenborough, Vice Admiral Sir W. H. Gage, Rear Admiral Bowles, Captain W. A. Baillie Hamilton, the Lord Mayor, Admiral Lord Radstock, Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm, Admiral the Earl of Cadogan, Admiral Sir R. W. Otway, Admiral Sir George Mundy; Captains, Royal Navy, George Hope, Codrington, Bazalgette, Pierce; Aldermen Sir Claudius Hunter, Sir John Pelly (of the Trinity Board); and the following reverend gentlemen—the Bishop of London, Mr. Chapness (rector of the parish), C. I. Smith, chaplain of the floating chapel, &c.

Previous to the interesting ceremony taking place, the Prince, accompanied by the Marquis of Abercorn, the Bishop of London, the Lords of the Admiralty, Capt. Pierce, secretary to the institution, H. Labouchere, Esq., treasurer, &c., proceeded to the Sailors' Home, immediately at the back of the new building, and, after going through that establishment, the Prince expressed himself highly gratified with his visit, and returned to the site of the Church, where, as on his first arrival, his Royal Highness was warmly cheered.

The ceremony was then commenced by the Treasurer, Mr. Labouchere, reading the following address:—"May it please your Royal Highness, On behalf of the Directors of the Church for Seamen and myself I beg to express our most grateful thanks to your Royal Highness for your kindness in coming among us this day, to lay the foundation-stone of the first Church which has ever been erected in this metropolis for the use of seamen, all the sittings in which, 800 in number, are to be perfectly free. I cannot refrain from availing myself of the present opportunity, also, to express our most grateful thanks to her Majesty, for her liberal support in favour of this national undertaking; and I sincerely trust that the countenance it has received both from her Majesty and yourself will induce others to come forward, and supply the remaining funds necessary to the completion of the Church."

A band of choristers, placed in one of the galleries, then sang an appropriate hymn, followed by the reading of the 84th psalm, the Lord's Prayer, and the dedication.

All things being ready, the stone was lowered into its place, and his Royal Highness, adjusting it, repeated the following:—"We place this foundation-stone in faith and hope to the glory of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." The usual number of coins had been previously deposited in a cavity prepared for them, and the following inscription was then read aloud by the Architect:—

This foundation-stone of the Church for Seamen of the port of London was laid on Monday, 11th day of May, 1846, in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, K.G., her Majesty's consort, the Right Hon. and Right Rev. Charles James Bishop of London, J. H. Labouchere, Esq., Treasurer, Henry Roberts, F.S.A., Architect: William Cubitt and Co., Builders.

The choristers then chanted the 122nd Psalm—"I was glad when they said unto me, we will go into the house of the Lord;" the Bishop offered three prayers, and then dismissed the people with the Apostle's benediction.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert, who looked remarkably well, was dressed in plain clothes, and wore the blue riband with the star of the Order of the Garter. The Marquis of Abercorn also wore his star and riband.

Before leaving, his Royal Highness desired that three cheers should be given for the success of the work; which were given by the sailors, and three more for her Majesty and the Prince. His Royal Highness on re-entering his carriage, was most enthusiastically cheered by the assembled crowds outside the building. A liberal collection was made at the Church door in aid of the building fund, which, we understand, is still between £2,000 and £3,000 short of the estimated sum required—£9,000.

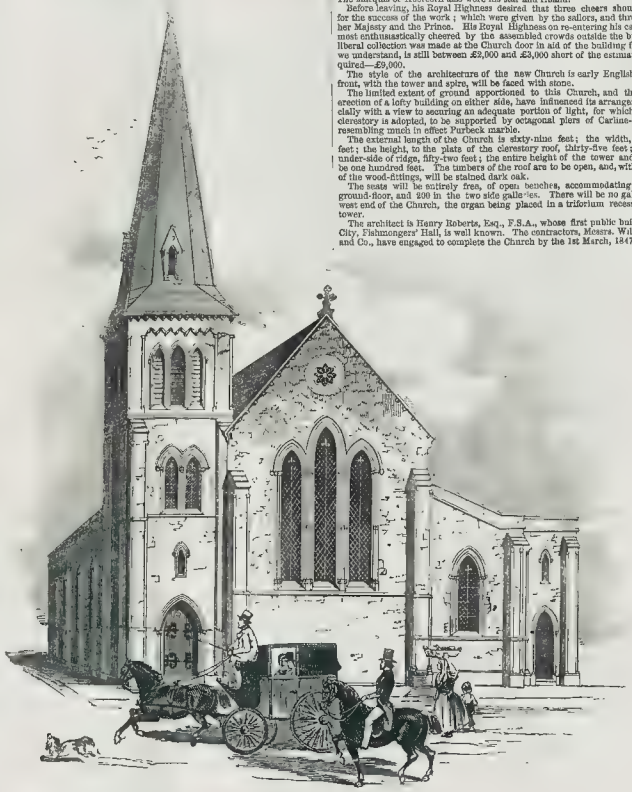
The style of the architecture of the new Church is early English; the west front, with the tower and spire, will be faced with stone.

The limited extent of ground apportioned to this Church, and the probable erection of a lofty building on either side, have influenced its arrangement, especially with a view to securing an adequate portion of light, for which purpose a clerestory is adopted, to be supported by octagonal piers of Carline-nose stone resembling much in effect Purbeck marble.

The external length of the Church is sixty-nine feet; the width, fifty-three feet; the height, to the plate of the clerestory roof, thirty-five feet; and to the under-side of ridge, fifty-two feet; the entire height of the tower and spire will be one hundred feet. The timbers of the roof are to be open, and, with the whole of the wood-fittings, will be stained dark oak.

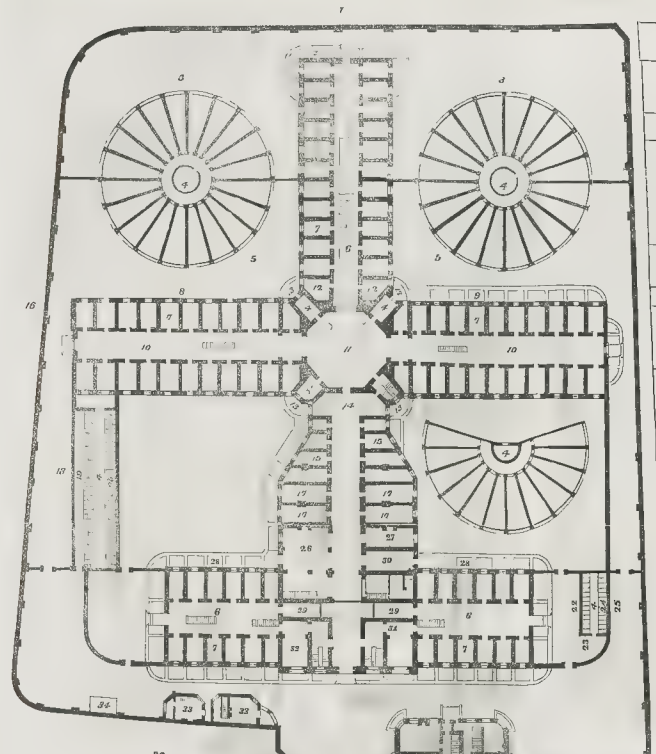
The seats will be entirely free, of open benches, accommodating 600 on the ground-floor, and 200 in the two side galleries. There will be no gallery at the west end of the Church, the organ being placed in a triforium recess within the tower.

The architect is Henry Roberts, Esq., F.S.A., whose first public building in the City, Fishmongers' Hall, is well known. The contractors, Messrs. William Cubitt and Co., have engaged to complete the Church by the 1st March, 1847.



CHURCH FOR SEAMEN OF THE PORT OF LONDON, DOCK-STREET.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE SEAMEN'S CHURCH, ON MONDAY LAST.



GROUND PLAN OF THE MIDDLESEX HOUSE OF DETENTION.

THE MIDDLESEX HOUSE OF DETENTION.

We are now enabled to present to our readers the Ground-plan of the Middlesex House of Detention, the laying the foundation-stone of which was detailed in our Journal of last week. By reference to the plan of the model prison at Pentonville, engraved in No. 37 of our Journal, and comparing it with the annexed plan, the reader will perceive the plan of the House of Detention to be modified in some of its details, from the "Separate System" pursued at Pentonville.

REFERENCES TO THE ENGRAVING.

1. Corporation Row.
2. Wing for Males.
3. Exercising yard for Males.
4. Officers
5. Exercising yard for Juveniles.
6. Corridor
7. Cells
8. Wing for Males.
9. Wing for Juveniles.
10. Corridor
11. Central Hall.
12. Store
13. Area
14. Hall
15. Reception Cells.
16. Bridewell Walk
17. Solicitors Rooms
18. Visiting Places
19. Passage for Friends
20. Male Prisoners.
21. Friends.
22. Visiting Places.
23. Prisoners
24. Friends
25. Female Prisoners.
26. Officers Mess
27. Governor's Office
28. Wing for Females
29. Passage to Females Wing.
30. Surgeon's Room.
31. Clerk's Office
32. Reception Room for Females.
33. Lodges
34. Dead House.
35. Governor's Residence.
36. Short's Buildings.

MUSIC.

CONCERT OF ANCIENT MUSIC.

Earl Howe was the Director of the Sixth Scheme, and although it contained only one novelty, it was interesting and judicious. The Queen Dowager, the Archbishop of York, and a very fashionable assemblage, attended Monday's rehearsal, and at Wednesday's performance there were present Prince Albert, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duchess of Kent, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Wellington, Archbishop of Armagh, the Bishops of London and Oxford, Earl and Countess Howe, Earl and Countess Cawdor, Earl and Countess of Powis, Earl of Devon, the Speaker of the House of Commons, Lord Templetown, Sirs W. Curtis, A. Barnard, J. Campbell, T. Phillips, S. Glynne, Miss Burdett Coutts, &c. Handel's "Coronation Anthem" opened the concert, and, by the same master-mind, there were choruses from the "Messiah," and "Solomon," and his "Serenico" overture. A chorus from Beethoven's fir t mass in C, "Glory to God," the English words by Mr. Gardiner, of Leicester, who deserves the credit of having first introduced Beethoven's works into this country, for which act of high intelligence he was declared by the professors of those days to be a madman! A Motett, by Zanoni, "Veni Sancta Spiritus," was a puerile work; the conclusion was evidently borrowed from Locke's music in "Macbeth."

Stevens' lovely Glee, "Te spotted snakes," was nicely sung by Madame Caradori Allan, Messrs. Hawkins, Lockey, and Machin. The lady singer's delicate and finished style and excellent enunciation were the admiration of the room. Greatorex's arrangement of Dr. Clarke's Melody, "Bird of the wilderness," was given by Miss Bassano, Hawkins, Lockey, and Machin. The leading item of this programme was Pischek's wonderful interpretation of Glück's Scena, from "Iphigenia in Tauride"—the celebrated Orestes' air. Forte and pianissimo declamation, this was a truly magnificent display of vocal genius. He also sang Hummel's Prayer, "Vater, ich rufe dich," most impressively, and with Caradori the well-known Duet from Paer's "Agnese."

Herr Hoelzel, from Vienna, gave, in German, Haydn's song from "The Seasons," "With joy the impatient husbandman," in which is the skilful under-current of the movement; "The Surprise," correctly, but without style and feeling. Madlle. Rummel, in Mozart's air from the "Seraglio," "Lontan da quel," displayed an extraordinary compass of voice, singing up to D in alt, but the effect was not agreeable. Mozart must have written this air for his "Queen of Night" soprano, who went up to F. Miss Bassano, who was a Royal Academy pupil, made a very favourable impression in Mozart's "Non più di fiori." She has been studying and acting in Italy, and has acquired energy in her style. She bids fair to occupy a high position here. Her voice is a beautiful mezzo-soprano, and she has considerable powers of execution. The Archbishop of York directs next Wednesday's concert, on behalf of the King of Hanover.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

THE HULLAH TESTIMONIAL FUND.—The Fourth Choral Meeting at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday night, was well attended. The performances was much as usual; sometimes good, more often unsteady, and ever and anon the singers were alarmed. The simplest works fared best; and it is a pity that complicated pieces should be selected, only to prove, apparently, that the system of Wilhelm can never make finished vocalists.

VOCAL CONCERTS.—The glee-singing at the Second Scheme was admirable. Miss Hawes's execution of the counter-tenor song in Galbraith's "Queen of the Valley" was perfection itself. Stafford Smith's "Blest Pair of Sirens," one of the most difficult glees ever written, was smoothly done by Miss Birch, Miss R. Dickson, Miss Hawes, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. Weoble's glee, "Discord, Dire Sister;" W. Knyvett's arrangement of Reeve's melody, "The Rose of the Valley;" Gluck's solo, quintet, and chorus, "Invano alcun desir;" and Miss Hawes's charming singing of Arne's "Water parted from the Sea," were encored. Purcell's "Frost Scene," from "King Arthur," required orchestral accompaniments. Arne's arrangement of Mandane's song in "Artaxerxes," "If o'er the cruel tyrant, Love," was well interpreted by Miss Birch, Miss Hawes, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. Bradbury; as also Wilbye's madrigal, "Sweet honey-sucking Bees," by the full choir. Steven's glee, "It was a Lover and his Lass;" Handel's chorus, "The Many rend the Skies;" Haydn's song, "O Tuneful Voice," sung by Mr. Hobbs; and Handel's air, "He layeth the Beams," given by Mr Phillips, were included in this judicious selection.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF FEMALE MUSICIANS.—This admirable institution was established in 1839, through the active exertions of Miss Masson. The Annual Concert was well patronized. All the performers gave their gratuitous services; and we are happy to record the names of Sivori, Cioffi, the great trombone player, Pischek, Hoelzel, F. Labiache, Misses Bassano, Duval, Ley, Rainforth, Cubitt, Lincoln; Mrs. A. Toulmin, Mrs. A Shaw, Mrs. W. H. Seguin, Miss Steele, Mrs Severn; Mr. Rafter, Mr. Seguin, Mr. Keech, Mr. Howe, &c. Mr. Lucas conducted, and Mr. T. Cooke led the band, in which were Howell, Harper and sons, Platt, Anderson, Willy, Card, Phillips, Patey, Paton, G. Cooke, Smithies, Baumann, &c., &c.

MISS STEELE.—This clever and much respected vocalist gave her Annual Concert on Monday night, which was well attended. Mdlle Horrenberger played a pianoforte caprice by Dohler very creditably. Sivori and Madame Dulcken performed a duo on violin and piano with eclat. The vocalists were Madame F. Labache, Madame Fastol, Misses Birch, Steele, Williams, Rainforth; Messrs. Bodda, Machin, Lockey, Calkin, and Signor F. Labiache. There was a band led by Mr. Cooke, and Messrs. Dorrell, Lavenu, and Brinley Richards officiated as accompanyists.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.—No. 5 of Op. 18, No. 3 Op. 59, and Op. 132 (posthumous), were executed at the fifth meeting on Monday, by Sivori, Sainton, Hill, and Rousselot. The quatuors of Beethoven having now been gone through, the Haydn and Mozart gems will be given at the future concerts, but carrying out the principle of a complete illustration of quartet composition, one by Beethoven will be inserted as a climax at the close of each programme.

MR. LOVER.—This popular illustrator of Irish life and manners commenced his season in London at the Princess' Room, on Monday last, and was heartily greeted in a new entertainment called "The Queen's Visit to Ireland" not our most gracious Majesty, as the title indicated, but Queen Mab. Lover's stories and jokes were inexhaustible in fancy, feeling, and fun; and his singing, although he has no voice, is full of character and expression

MR. WILSON'S SCOTTISH SONGS.—These entertainments continue to be well patronised, at the Music Hall, in Store-street.

THE CHORAL HARMONISTS had their seventh Concert on Monday last, but we were unable to be present. Yesterday (Friday) morning that much respected and intellectual vocalist, Madame Caradori Allan gave her annual Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms. We are compelled, from want of space, to omit our notice, as also of the performance of Haydn's "Creation," last night, at Exeter Hall; and of Mr. Gantter's interesting Musical Lectures. The Ethiopian Serenaders continue to attract at the St. James's Theatre

MDLLE. COLETTI'S CONCERT.—This lady's name is Collins, and she is a promising pianiste, who does not require a foreign name to advance her interests. She gave a good concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, with Sivori and Goffredoni as the instrumental lions, and Madame Albertazzi, Miss Birch, Madame Knespel (a clever German vocalist), Mr. Bodda, Mr. John Parry, and Herr Pischek, as the vocal stars. M. Julien de Gunes was the pianoforte accompanyist. There was no orchestra, and the announced pieces were changed most unceremoniously.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

M. Onslow, the great French composer, who is the son of an Englishman, left town yesterday for his seat in Clermont (Puy de Dome). He was much fêted, during his stay here, by the leading amateurs and artists. He speaks in the highest terms of the state of music in this country, and was delighted beyond measure at the performances of the Philharmonic Society, Beethoven Quartet Society, Musical Union, &c. He declared to many friends that England was now the first of musical nations, as every school was represented, and each speciality was unrivalled of its kind. This is a great compliment from such a high authority His admiration of Costa, as a Conductor, was unbounded. "I would rather," said he to the writer of this article, "that he should conduct my compositions than myself. His power over a band has no parallel within my recollection." M. Onslow was much struck by the fact that our lady-amateurs of rank and distinction followed the classical performances with scores,]

The reception of Persiani, Salvi, and Ronconi, in Madrid, has been most triumphant.

A WEEK'S MUSIC.—This morning, rehearsal of Fifth Philharmonic programme, for Monday's Concert. On Monday morning, rehearsal of Ancient Concert; and Madame Pleyel's First Pianoforte Recital On Tuesday morning, Fourth Meeting of "Musical Union," and in the evening, Concert of Mr. Kialbrark and Mr. Gratian Cooke. And Wednesday, Madame Puzzi's Morning Concert; and in the evening, Seventh Ancient Concert. On Thursday, Soirée Musicale of Regondi and Mr. G. Case. On Friday morning, Mrs. Anderson's Concert; and in the evening, Mr. H. B. Richards's Concert. On Saturday morning, the Third Royal Academy Concert. Opera every night at Drury Lane Theatre; and Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Her Maje-ty's Theatre.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

Mr. Smith O'Brien still defies the Saxon, and submits to the durance vile of the cellar and his regimen of tea and toast. He sternly refuses to pay the fees, (which amount there we are not informed) to £20 a-day. He rejects wine and spirits. We hope that his friends are searched when they visit him, and that no drop of the "crater" finds its way into the cellar, to enliven the prisoned hours of the martyr. By the way, why should not an Irish martyrology be written, after the fashion of "Fox's Acts and Monuments," with illustrations representing the dreadful sufferings of O'Connell and his companions in the Richmond Penitentiary, and O'Brien over his tea and toast in the cellar? The severest tortures they underwent were probably those of indigestion, consequent upon liberal feeding and limited exercise. "O'Connell at the steak" would be a noble subject for Repeal pencils: the member for Limerick solaces his captivity with verse. The following effusion, suggested by the well-known lines of Lovelace to Althea, is a favourable specimen of the martyr's muse:—

When John from Bellamy's the things
Bears to the cellar gate,
And my small steak and murphies brings
Upon a well-warmed plate;
When martyrdom to humble fare
Gives zest no sauce can buy,
I would not call the Great Lord Mayor
My uncle—no not I!

When Irish members flock around,
And Saxons leave their manes,
Despite the fees of many a pound,
And Gossett's monstrous claims;
While Saxon tyrants, undismayed,
I slang o'er my Bohea,
No scandal-mongering old maid
Doth more enjoy her tea.

Tho', starling-like, confined, I
"I can't get out" may sing,
Lord George himself cannot deny
Of Ireland's heart I'm King!
While Dillon Browne, fain, if he could,
Would be shut up like me,
Ould Dan himself was not so good
A martyr—no, not he!

Vile Gossett sha'n't a penny make
Of me, that I'll engage,
No wine nor "spirits" will I take
While I am in the cage.
While letters I can write, to prove
To my consistency,
That I'm a hero, I'd not move,
Not for a barony!

Not content with monodies of this pensive, but yet determined, character, the honourable member for Limerick keeps up an animated correspondence. Here is an epistle to the great original martyr, Daniel O'Connell, which borrows the cadence and flow from Pope's well known epistle of Eloisa to Abelard.

O'BRIEN TO O'CONNELL.

In this which some may call "an awful cell,"
Where Gossett's deputy and I do dwell,
Where a teetotal regimen obtains;
What means this tumult in O'Brien's veins?
Why rore my thoughts beyond this calm retreat,
Why ain't martyrdom more short and sweet?
To see you to the Richmond oft I came,
Why, now I'm locked up do not you the same?
Relentless walls, whose granite round contains
An Irish martyr doomed to Saxon chains,
Thou ragged waiter, by whose hand each morn
My tea and toast from Bellamy's are borne:
Ye foes, which still accumulating keep,
But which to pay O'Brien is too deep!
Think not (though martyrdom's a bore, I own)
O'Brien's pluck to cowardice hath grown.
All is not Gossett's while Repeal has part,
And I, from Limerick, reign in Ire.and's heart.
I am a hero still, and see with pain,
O, Dan, thy envy thou canst scarce restrain.
Soon as the papers eager I enclose,
I light on Saxon jests at martyrs' woes.
In leading articles my name appears
Still plied with puns, still ushered in with jeers.
I tremble, too, whene'er thy name I find,
For mine is certain to come close behind.
How, in the Richmond, you tucked in, they know,
And fancy that all martyrs do it so.
How little do they guess my different doom!
Pent, where by swing a cat there scarce is room;
Were, how'er hard I live (infornal shame!)
That Gossett swears he'll charge me just the same.
Write Steele a letter, that my name may shine
In Conciliation Hall, along with thine.
Swear that I'll never yield a step till they Command me to submit, then p'r'aps they may.

IMITATIVE PUBLICATIONS.

The withering ridicule bestowed by Horace upon literary imitators in his one emphatic appellative, "servile herd," has been repeated times without number, and the veriest tyro is now aware that theirs is, of all the sins of composition, the greatest. But since Horace's time, an entirely new kind of literary imitation has come upon the field, one in which publishers are primarily, and in general authors only secondarily, concerned. It consists in the presentment of works in direct imitation of others which, whether from their originality and merit, or from their aptly subserving some public need, have met with success. The writings of Swift and Pope tell us of a branch of "the trade" devoted to this business early in the last century, with Edward Curl for its most eminent professor. But it has, in our times, reached a magnitude, compared with which its early history is as mewling infancy to a Hercules's manhood. It is now absolutely impossible for the slightest originality to be shown in any of the forms of paper and print, but it is immediately set upon by scores of the bibliopolic pecus, and tossed and gored into a thousand deformations.

* * * * * * *

Thus is the public imposed upon in literature. To every favourite work which it makes its way through an entangling brushwood of similative works, al. pretending to be the true work in the first place; and in the second, if the first trick fail, to be better. Every now and then its attention is attracted by a spectacle which will not be overlooked; for, go where the public will, there is the portentous announcement. Well, the public reads the advertisement, and (we shall suppose the thing referred to is a newspaper), on finding nothing remarkable in such matters, it yields a kind of credence to the tale which it is told—as to interests of its own to be advanced, and so forth. It purchases; it reads; half recollecting all the time that there were very tolerable publications of the kind before, even to the minutest speciality of character; rather hazy, however, about the fact; always looking for the outcome of the great promise—when is the fun to begin? Why, after all, the old work has not as good. Where is the meaning of all this? Only, dear public, that a certain worthy person, who could not start an idea of his own, got up behind another man's idea, and tried all he could to oust him from the possession of his property, nothing else in the whole matter. But only thou, silly public that thou art, couldst never see it. It is melancholy, too, this desperate struggle to get bread reft from each other's mouths. It is not all shekah treasure of soul. Often there is unequally of no inconsiderable amount expended in getting up a passable imitative work. Often wonderful sacrifices of capital and labour are made to thrust the secondary work into the saddle of its primary. It was lately stated that an imitative weekly newspaper had caused an outlay of twenty thousand pounds, the return of which was one of the remotest of contingencies. What heroisms these are in their way!—perverted, misapplied, yet still heroisms—elements in what might, associated with purer elements than acquisitiveness for self and partners, constitute great characters. One could almost weep over human nature thrown in o positions so wretched, false, and the redemption from which seems, for the present, at least, so hopeless.—From Chambers's Edinburgh Journal.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—The anniversary dinner of this important and valuable Society, which was established in 1827, for the purpose of granting pensions and affording relief to aged and infirm printers and their widows, is announced to take place at the London Tavern, on Monday next, the 18th instant. The Right Honourable Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart will preside on the occasion, supported by Mr. Sheriff Pilgrim, Mr. Sheriff Duncombe, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, Albert Smith, Esq., Charles Dickens, Esq., Gilbert à Beckett, Esq., Douglas Jerrold, Esq., Luke J. Hansard, Esq., and a host of highly influential gentlemen. From the last report it appears that since the formation of the Society 130 pensioners have been elected, 58 of whom are, at the present time, receiving its benefits, and the amount of property of the Society is £4170 19s. invested with the Commissioners for reducing the National Debt, in addition to a large balance of cash in the hands of the treasurer.

RATHER NEW.—A few days ago a lady visited one of the most extensive shopping establishments in Glasgow, and made purchases to the extent of £20. On examining the contents of her purse, she found she had only £10, and suggested that one of the shop-boys should just step into the carriage along with her, and receive payment at her mansion. Instead, however, of arriving at a fine mansion, judge of his surprise when the officials of a lunatic asylum seized him and held him fast. The lady had, of course, specially prepared a warrant for his committal. Before he could procure liberation, the fair one and goods had disappeared, and have not since been heard of.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

His active practice,
His May of youth and bloom of lustihood SHAKESPEARE

Right fair and beautiful has come upon us the merry month—the May o. active practice, wherein the bloom of lustihood clothes the bright water with the quick oar, or pokes the bat against the hissing ball or, in the spirit of a boon chivalry, sets out in search of pleasant adventures by flood and field. It is less the season of sport than of pastime, indeed, but it is produgal of amusements of a healthful and a manly character. It is the transition from the time of rust and chill and dreariness to the epoch of light hearts and heavens

"O Spring, of hope and love, and youth and gladness,
Wind-winged emblem! brightest, best, and fleetest,
Whence comest thou, when, with dark winter's sadness,
The tears that fade in sunny smiles thou shakest."

Come whence thou will, thou art welcome, and everywhere a seemly reception is awarded thee, and a characteristic. In Paris, they dedicate a festival of new fashions, and all who officiate at Longchamps put on their best clothes: in London, after the manner of the national taste, the citizen sets about enjoying himself at Ivree. In the threepenny steam excursion to Gravesend and back, ye have a type of the propensity that has sent our yachtsmen circumnavigating the globe; and the donkey compellers of Greenwich and Hampstead Heath are of the same kidney with those beneath whose coursing hoofs the sod flies back at Bibury or Ascot

The chief passage in our popular sports enacted during the current week was the little three-day meeting at Newmarket. Gorhambury races being discontinued, it forms the only racing occasion of any account between Chester and Epsom. These peaceful fêtes have commenced on Tuesday, and ended yesterday. The "features" are the Rowley Mile Plate for three-year olds, that, in a few instances, has furnished a hint anent the Derby and the Suffolk Stakes handicap—to keep the ribs on the legs. The field for the former was an unusually bad one; for though the winner, Mr. Gurney's colt by Emilius out of Messene, since called Cantley, is in the great Epsom event, he is hardly likely to mase any sensation for it. The Suffolk Stakes fell to the lot of Sir Joseph Hawley's A-la-Mode, the stable companion and tutor of Humdrum. This has given the horse with the stupid name a considerable relish in the market, and it would not astonish us to see him third favourite for the Derby before the day, if not even better esteemed.

The sport at the Newmarket Second Spring was about the average, which means very far from first-rate meetings, even at head-quarters, cannot be expected to make éclat, now that monster meetings are so prevalent at other places.

And now, to look forward, we find, early in the coming week, the opening of the yachting season—the first match of the Royal Thames Club being fixed for Wednesday next.

These cups are to be sailed for by craft the property of members of the Club, the course from Erith, round the buoy at Chapman's Head, and back to Greenwich. The day following is that on which the process of "comparing books" takes place at Tattersall's—at which occasion, from which all good men desire a safe deliverance: the bad minister to themselves.

In short, we are on the eve of busy times in the sporting world as we have entered on pleasant times in the natural. The historian of merry-making will have a grateful task: it will not only be permitted him to tell good tidings to his reader, but when narrating the sunny passages of life, to add to the record—

quæque ipse miserrima vidi
Et quorum pars magna fui.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—A very good settling on the Chester Cup was succeeded by a little speculation on the Derby, in which, nevertheless, the fluctuations were few, and of little importance. It is only needful, for the purpose of guiding our readers, to state that 50sg. Humdrum, Crown Prince, the Peri colt, and Blackee, were ready in favour, and that, although backed, several parties were, apparently, very anxious to lay against Sir Tatton Sykes, Fancy Boy, Tom Tulloch, and Brocardo. Nothing of moment was done in the Oaks.

JULY.

3 to 1 agst Sibig (t)	20 to 1 agst Traverser (5)	40 to 1 agst West Countryman
6 to 1 ——— Sir Tatton Sykes.	25 to 1 ——— Crown Prince	(Bartholomew)
11 to 1 ——— Fancy Boy	25 to 1 ——— Brocardo (5)	50 to 1 ——— Maid of Hampton
14 to 1 ——— Tom Tulloch	30 to 1 ——— Pioneering (t)	colt
20 to 1 ——— Humdrum (t)	40 to 1 ——— Nutleaf	66 to 1 ——— Blackie (t)
	40 to 1 agst Polly Dog's 1st (t)

NEWMARKET SECOND SPRING MEETING.—TUESDAY.

Match –50.—Mr. Watson's f by Stockport, out of Ganymede (W. Abdale), beat Lord Exeter's Brainless (Mann).

Match—50, h ft.—Mr. Greville's hdlle Krank e (Kitchener) beat the Duke of Bedford's Captain Pinfold (Robinson).

Fifty Pounds, for Three-year-olds.

Mr. Gurney's c by Emilius, out of Messene	.. .. (Pettit)	1
Lord Exeter's Lebanon	.. .. (Mann)	2

Fifty Pounds. The winner to be sold for 200 sovs. if demanded.

Mr. Watson's f by Stockport	.. .. (J Sharpe)	1
Mr. Stephenson's f by Montreal	.. .. (Kitchener)	2

Match 200, h ft. Duke of Bedford's Black Cat received forfeit from Lord Glasgow's c by Retriever, dam by St Patrick.

Match 200, h ft. D.M.—Duke of Bedford's Taurina received forfeit from Lord Milton's Formidable.

R. M. Betting: 7 to 4 on Blackie, 4 to 1 agst Lebanon, 4 to 1 agst Ignis Fatuus, and 5 to 1 agst Messene colt. The running was made by the Emilius colt to the bushes, where Ignis Fatuus, who had been waiting on him, went in front, and cut out the work from the country, having then had enough of it, he retired altogether, and the Emilius colt, regaining the lead, won very easy by two lengths. Lebanon second, beating the favourite by the length. Run in two minutes and a second.

Arrivals.—The Duke of Rutland, Marquis of Exeter, Earl and Countess of Albemarle, Earl Spencer, Earl of Suffield, Lord Godolphin, Lord W. Powlett, Lord Howth, Honourables Col. Anson, S. Lyttleton, G. Fitzroy, H. Forester, F. Villiers, Col. Peel, Messrs. C. Greville, Payne, Wigram, Tower, Tyrwhitt, S. Stanley, S. Graham, G. H. Moore, Shelley, Campbell, Neville, Higgins, Cromwellin, Magenis, Drinkald, Lowther.

WEDNESDAY.

Match—80, h ft. Mr. Greville's Motilla (Nat) beat the Duke of Bedford's Black Cat (Robinson).

The Suffolk Stakes of 16 sovs. each, 100 added.

Sir J. Hawley's A-la-Mode	.. .. (Nat)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Marquis of Conyngham	.. .. (Robinson)	2

Handicap Plate of £50, for three-year-olds and upwards. A.I

Lord Albemarle's Beaumont, 4 yrs, 8st 10lb	.. .. (Robinson)	1
Duke of Rutland's Sister to Pantaloon, 3 yrs, 7st	.. .. (Pettit)	2

The Jockey Club Plate of £100.

Mr. Shelley's Maynooth, 4 yrs	.. .. (S. Mann)	1
Mr. Wigram's Kesheug, 4 yrs	.. .. (Pettit)	2

THURSDAY

Match, £200, T.Y.C.

Mr. Greville's Killie Krankie	.. ..	1
Mr. Shelley's Hawkesbury	.. ..	2

Handicap of 20 sovs each, 5 ft, &c. T.Y.C.

Mr. Lowther's Scots	.. ..	1
Sir J. Hawley's Fugitive	.. ..	2
Lord Exeter's Sister to Pergularia	.. ..	0

A deal heat for second

Match, 100 sovs, T.Y.C.

Mr. W. S. Stanley's Faultless	.. ..	1
Sir J. Hawley's Bishop of Romford's Cob	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added. T.Y.C

Mr. Newton's Reminiscence	.. ..	1
Lord George Bentinck's Blackcock	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Lord Albermarle's Nel. Cook	.. ..	1
Mr. Watson's Libation	.. ..	2

GLINTON PARK RACES.—TUESDAY

Match, 100, p. p.—Mr. Mytton's Volney gelding (Capt. Williams) beat Mr. Robertson's Saladin.

The Trial Stakes of 8 sovs each, and 20 added.

Mr. H. Johnstone's Khorassan, 6 yrs	.. .. (Owner)	1
Mr. W. Crawford na the Era, 6 yrs	.. ..	2

The Irvine Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 15 added.

Lord Saltoun nd The Cure, 5 yrs	.. .. (Mr. W. Johnstone)	1
Mr. Melkam's Godfrey, 5 yrs	.. ..	2

The Hall-Brat Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, with 60 added.

Mr. H. Johnstone's Tom Touch, 6 yrs	.. .. (Owner)	1
Lord Waterford's The Roper, 5 yrs	.. ..	2

The Wymeray Stakes of 20 sovs each, with 50 added

Captain Boyce's Dog Billy (h. m. by Priam)	.. .. (M. P. Williams)	1
Lord Eglinton's Britannia, 4 yrs	.. ..	2

PARIS SPRING MEETING MAY 10.

Handicap of 2000f., for horses and mares of three yrs old and upwards

Prince M. de Beauvesan's b c Job, 3 yrs	.. .. (Spreaty)	1
Baron N. de Rothschild's b f Bonne Chance, 4 yrs	.. ..	2

The Special Minister of Commerce Plate of 4000f.

Count A. de Morny's br f Predestinée, 4 yrs	.. .. (Fantai)	1
M. A. Aumont's br h Ecoville, 5 yrs	.. ..	2

The Produce Stakes of 800f each, with 3000f added

Baron M de Rothschild's b f Flesi	.. .. (Flatman)	1
M. A. Lupin's b c Ultimus	.. ..	2

Second Plate of 1000f, with 50f entries.

Duke de Nemours's bl c Scamper, 4 yrs	.. .. (Bartholomew)	1
Baron N. de Rothschild's br c Lightfoot, 3 yrs	.. ..	2

Hurdle Race of 1 000 f.

Comte de Jun.'s Diggory Diddle	.. .. (Buckingham)	1
Elle Bepne	.. .. (Fisher)	2

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON INTELLIGENCE.

The season of the Royal Yacht Squadron may be said to have commenced with the first annual general meeting of its members, which took place on Friday (last week), at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's, at which there was a numerous attendance of the members. The Earl of Yarborough was, from indisposition, unavoidably absent. The following gentlemen were elected members of the squadron:—

George Miles, Esq., schooner,	Flower of Yarrow,	141 tons;
Viscount Canbam., cutter,	Wave,	94 tons;
The Earl of Hardwicke, cutter,		40 tons;
William Moore, Esq., schooner,	Hawk,	33 tons;

And Commanders F. W. Horton, R.N., and C. J. Postle, R.N., were elected honorary members.

The Royal Yacht Squadron's brigantine, Kestrel, 202 tons, Commodore the Earl of Yarborough, went out of harbour on Tuesday. His Lordship proceeded to town on Monday, and returns on Wednesday (this day), when he will resume his life in the yacht, and proceed to accompany the Squadron of Evolution to sea. His Lordship is never in better health than when at sea; and we trust the forthcoming cruise will be the means of completely re-establishing his Lordship's health.

There are already several yachts cruising about the Solent, and a great number of others fitting out in the harbour and adjacent ports.

The new schooners building by Mr. Joseph White, at East Cowes, for the Earl of Cardigan, and for his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, are in a very forward state, and will be shortly launched.

The cutter Aparm, the Earl of Orkney, was launched from the patent slip of Mr. Ratsey, on Monday, and has since sailed.

The Gondola cutter, building by Ratsey, will be launched in a few days: she is for Mr. Wodehouse. There are also two schooners building at Gosport, and will be launched shortly one for Mr. Delafield, and the other for the Marquis of Blandford, both members of the Royal Yacht Squadron.

IRELAND.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—The following is the reply of Mr. Smith O'Brien to an address from the town of Ennis:—

[illegible] Prison House of Commons, May 8, 1846.
[illegible] The resolution and address of the inhabitants of Ennis, accompanied by your letter of the 5th, have reached me this morning. They breathe the same spirit [illegible] generous welcome I want no consolation. The loss of personal [illegible] position to compromise the principle for which I am now enduring [illegible] In seeking to achieve our national freedom, the representatives of Ireland must not [illegible] shake off the trammels of English faction, but must also give their undivided energies to [illegible] measures of their own country. Their exertions must not be diverted from the great object [illegible] by the petty details of the local business of England. I have the honour to be, yours [illegible] faithfully

Cornelius Hackey, Esq. W. S. O'BRIEN

DISTRESS OF THE IRISH PEOPLE.—In a few districts, where the potato disease had been less destructive in its operation, there is, of course, much less of suffering; but, generally, extreme destitution still prevails, especially in those places where the Relief Committees have been tardy in their proceedings. Even in those towns—Cork, for instance—where large sums have been contributed by private individuals, as well as by the Government, and where Indian meal has been supplied to the poor at a cheap rate, potatoes are still at an enormously high price, and the laboring classes are clamouring for employment, as a means of procuring the necessaries of life.—Dublin Evening Post.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat—[illegible] and sample—have been on a fair average scale, and the stands to [illegible] very well supplied. The show of foreign grain is but moderate, [illegible] all kinds are in nothing was doing. The show of foreign wheat [illegible] sale for it was very heavy, and Monday's quotations were with [illegible] In the middle and back rows of the sales, [illegible] nevertheless prices were maintained. Malt came slowly to hand, yet the demand was in a sluggish state at previous quotations. The oat trade was dull, yet a little clearance was effected, at full prices. Beans, peas, and flour were unaltered in value.

ENGLISH.—Wheat, 4230 qrs.; barley, 2360; oats, 2360; beans, 240; wheat, barley, [illegible] Foreign: wheat, 5090; barley, 1070; oats, 1360. Flour, 5880 sacks, malt, [illegible]

[illegible] Essex and Kent, red, 48s to 52s; ditto white, 50s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, [illegible] ditto white, 50s to 56s.; rye, —s to —s, grinding barley [illegible] —s to —s; beans, [illegible] —s to —s; grinding ditto, —s to —s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, —s to —s; brown ditto, [illegible] Scotch and Ware, —s to —s; Chevalier, —s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible] to 28s; potato ditto, 27s to 30s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 22s; ditto, [illegible] to 25s; ditto, new, 19s to 21s; Sligo, new, 18s to 20s; grey peas, 22s to 24s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 41s to 43s. per quarter. Barley, 27s to 28s; malt, 47s to 53s; Suffolk, 38s to 44s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 39s, per 320 lbs. Foreign—Wheat, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; rye, 33s to 34s; beans, 35s to 36s; peas, 34s to [illegible]

Flour, American, 27s to 28s.; Baltic, 25s to —s, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—For all kinds of seeds, the supplies of which continue moderately extensive, [illegible] rates have, at rather an improved demand.

[illegible] English, sowing, 54s to 57s.; [illegible] 42s to 44s. Mustard, fine, [illegible] Ditto, fair to good, 7s to 8s. per bushel. Rapeseed, English, £16 to £17 per last. Canary, 42s to 44s. per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 42s to 56s; extra, 57s to 64s; white, 52s to 60s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 42s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 68s extra, 70s per cwt.

Bread and Flour.—Wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d to 8d; of household ditto, 6d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 50s 6d; barley [illegible] to 31s 9d; rye, 33s 3d; beans, 35s 9d; peas, 34s 1d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 50s 9d; barley, 30s 9d; oats, 23s 1d; rye, 33s 7d; beans, 35s 9d; peas, 34s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 16s 0d; barley, 8s; oats, 5s; rye, 8s 6d, beans, 7s 6d; peas, 8s 6d.

Tea.—Although the arrivals continue large a full average amount of business is doing in this article, and prices are well supported.

Sugar.—West India sugar has been in good request, at fully previous quotations. All kinds of foreign are in good demand, at full prices. The imports continue to be moderate [illegible] of which a small—more off freely, at 42s 3d to 46s for brown, and 46s 6d for standard lumps.

Coffee.—The market has been in a very inactive state since our last, and the quotations have been with difficulty supported. The imports continue to be moderate [illegible]

Rice.—Bengal has moved off freely, at an advance of 6d per cwt. In other kinds of rice we have no alteration to notice.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 3s to £4 5s.; clover ditto, £4 6s to £5 18s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 1s., wheat straw, £1 18s to £1 17s per load.

Oils.—Olive oil, owing to large arrivals is selling on somewhat easier terms. Rape is also lower, but the value of other articles is well supported.

Provisions.—A few arrivals of new Irish butter have taken place this week, and which have sold on the following terms:—Waterford, 90s to 92s; Limerick, 91s; and fourth Cork, 89s per cwt. In old qualities, only a moderate business is doing, at late rates. Dutch butter is in good request, at a further decline in value of 6s per cwt. Fine Friesland, 92s; Holstein, 90s; and Rotterdam, 88s to 90s per cwt. Bacon, both Eastern and Leur, 48s to 48s, and Grendon, 50s to 52s per cwt. Hams, new, 52s to 56s; of lowly, at 52s to 54s for small meat, landed, and 48s to 52s for fancy. On board, some sales have been effected for this and next month, at 48s to 50s per cwt. Lard dull, and the turn lower. Waterford is offered, 48s to 50s; and Irish, landed, at 46s to 48s per cwt. Pork in good demand, at 56s to 58s, according to quality.

In cheese, rather more doing, at late rates.

Tallow.—This article is firm, at 42s 3d to 42s 6d for P.Y.C. on the spot. Town tallow steady, at 41s net cash.

Wool.—Owing to the approaching public sales, exceedingly little is doing by private contract, at barely late rates.

Potatoes.—Selected parcels of potatoes are in good request, at from 90s to 160s per ton. In all other kinds—the supply of which is good—next to nothing is doing, though offered on low terms.

Hops (Friday). Although [illegible] in nearly the whole of the plantations in Kent and Sussex has made considerable progress during the present week, the fly has almost everywhere made its appearance. The demand here to be tolerably steady, and prices are well supported. The supply of hops on offer is small. New Kent bags, 25 12s to £7 15s. New Kent pockets, £5 0s to £8 8s; New Sussex pockets, £5 5s to £6 10s.

Coals (Friday.)—Carr's Hartley, 15s 3d; Holywell Main, 14s 9d; Pontop Windsor, 14s; [illegible] with 15s 3d; Hartley's Hartley, 14s 3d; and Lambton, 15s 9d net.

Smithfield. (Friday.)—The supply of beasts on offer from to-day being very extensive—viz., 1,700 head—the demand for that description of stock was in a sluggish state, yet Monday's quotations were well supported. From Scotland we received 300 beasts and 280 sheep, from Friesia, 34 oxen, from Germany, 29 do.; and from Holland, 130 oxen and cows, together with 50 sheep, in comparatively speaking, middling condition. Although the numbers of sheep penned were on the increase, the mutton trade was dull, at full prices. From the Isle of Wight, [illegible] came fresh to hand per railway; while, from other quarters, the receipts were [illegible] Calves, the demand was brisk, at extreme currencies. Pigs were in moderate supply, and heavy demand, at late rates. As per cwt., by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime large ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime ditto, 4s to 4s 4d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 4s 6d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 6d to 6s 6d.

ROBT. HERBERT

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The continued pressure on the Money Market, which rather increased towards the close of the week, by the addition to the demands of all those who have to pay, has contributed to render prices flat. Until the Corn question is finally disposed of, the public seem disinclined to invest. The hindrances offered to legislation by the protracted debates, has also prevented the "flow" for the dissolution of railway Companies from yet coming into operation, and thus retarded in numberless cases, the circulation of that capital now locked up in the Bank of England, so much needed in commercial transactions. Consequently, the Consol Market has been inactive, and prices scarcely varied from Monday's quotation of 85¾ for money, and 86¼ for time, until Thursday, when a shade of improvement was visible. The last quotations are 86¾ for money, and 86⅞ for account. Exchequer Bills continue, of course, very flat under the money pressure, closing at 24 to 21 ; Bank Stock at 204½ to 203½, but having varied. India Stock has receded to 264½; India Bonds 39-39. Reduced, 98¾ to ¾. New Three and a Quarter per Cents, 97¾; and Long Annuities 19 3-16.

The only subject of interest in the Foreign Market during the week has been the communication of Messrs Schneider and Co., agents to the Republic of Mexico, in reference to the present and future position of the Mexican debt. It will be remembered that the interest on the active portion of the debt arises from a Spanish hypothecation of 30 per cent. of the Customs' duties receivable at Vera Cruz and Tampico. The amount of this, it is anticipated, may be much increased by additional vigilance on the part of Government against contraband introductions; and it is, therefore, estimated for the future at 1,200,000 dollars. It is proposed to increase this by setting aside the whole of the duties upon silver exported from the ports of Mexico in the Pacific, estimated at 300,000 dollars. Now the interest upon the existing Active Stock is 1,400,000 dollars, thus a surplus of 160,000 dollars is applicable to the reduction of the debt. According to the existing state of things, the "Deferred Bonds," now issued about 16 or 17 in the market, should become Active Stock in 1847; and the inability of the Mexican Government to meet this large addition to their burdens prompts the following offer:—That a new debt be created, of £4,500,000, bearing five per cent. interest, and specially hypothecated on the tobacco revenues: £40 of such debt to be granted for every £100 of the "Deferred Stock" and "Debentures"—the interest commencing from the 1st of January next. Three of the overdue dividends upon the existing Active Stock will be paid in new bonds, and the fourth in cash when due. To this offer the objection is urged, that as in 1847 the Deferred Bonds will become Active Stock, no necessity exists for the creation of a new Stock, the present bonds being provided with coupons commencing in April 1848. To resign them, and take 40 per cent. New Active Stock is therefore regarded as an absurdity. The existing Active bondholders, on the contrary, say that the peculiar guarantee of the existing Active Stock, viz., the fifth part of the Customs revenue, is not applicable to any Active Stock that may arise from the present Deferred becoming Active. If this be the case, the Deferred bond-holders will do well to accept the terms, as, at present, no revenue is assigned for meeting their dividends due on and after April, 1847, while the proposition is definitive upon that point. The existing bonds are the only ones which are advertised for quick sale, and their views will, doubtless, influence the majority of holders. It appears clearly impracticable for the Mexican Government, in the distracted state of the country, to meet its present, much less its future claims. The holders, therefore, of Mexican Stock have the alternative of a reduction, with at least early payment of a dividend; or a prospect of not receiving any payment at all. The price of the Active Stock has gradually advanced to 32¾ for Money, and 33 for Account; the Deferred Stock is a trifle lower, at nominally 15¾, but no bargains have been really done. All the other securities have been very inactive. Spanish Stock has scarcely varied a turn, and closes at 24¾ for the Five per Cents.; Three per Cents., 36¾. Portuguese Four per Cents. are 57¾, Buenos Ayres 46, Belgian 97. Dutch Two and a Half per Cents., 59¾; Four per Cent. Certificates, 92¾

Business has been very limited in the Share Market, but prices continue to be tolerably well maintained. No trace of the activity of last account is, however, perceptible. The present account is in process of settlement, both Shares and Scrips quoting somewhat lower, as the subjoined List will show:—Aberdeen, 6; Birmingham and Gloucester, 124½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 92; Bristol and Exeter, New, 10½; Bristol and Gloucester, 90; Buckinghamshire, 9½; Caledonian, 12½; Do., Half Shares, 2; Do., Extension, 1½; Cheltenham and Oxford, 1½; Direct Main, (Resrick's), 2½; Direct North, 2; Dublin & Belfast Junc., 7½ sellers; Dublin, 24½; Ditto, New, 7½; Ditto, York Extension, 1½; Eastern Union, Cambridge and Ely, 1½; Edinburgh and Glasgow New Quarter Shares, 18½; Great North of England, 217; Great Western, Half Shares, 83; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 17½; Ditto, Fifths, 3½; Lancaster and Carlisle, 97; Ditto, New, 10; Leicester & Bedford, ½ dis.; Liverpool, Manchester, & Newcastle Junct., 2½; London and Birmingham, 239½; Ditto, Quarters, 29½; Ditto, Fifths, —; London and Blackwall, —; Ditto, New, —; London and Brighton, 63½; Ditto Fifths, 41½; London and Croydon, 22½; Ditto, Guaranteed Five per Cent, —; London, Hounslow, and Western, ½; London and South-Western, 79½; Ditto, New Consol. Eighths, 52½; Ditto, New, 20½; London and York, 22½; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, —; Londonderry and Coleraine, —; Lynn and Dereham, —; Manchester and Leeds, Quarters, 104; Ditto Fifths, 14½; Ditto Extension, 9½; Ditto Extension, 5 pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 80½; Do, Quarter Shares (A), 13½; Do, Quarter Shares (D) 13; Do, Quarter Shares (C), 9½; Scottish Centra., 16½; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3½; South Devon, 3¾; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1¼ pm; Manchester and Southampton, 2; Midland, 153½; Ditto, New, 32¾; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 44½; Ditto, New, 9½; Ditto, New, Brandling, 4¼; Newcastle and Berwick, 20½; Norfolk, Twenty Per Cent., 18½; British, 30½; Do, Deferred, 12; Do, Canada Bds., 4; N. Staff., 4¼ pm; Oxfd, Worcr, and Wolverhampton, 8¼; Preston and Wyre, 31; South Midland, 1¼ p.; South and Midlands Junction, 1 dis.; South Eastern and Dover, 49; Ditto, New (ns. at £20), 10½; Ditto, New (ns. £23 6s. 8d.), 13½; Ditto, New (ns. £15), 2½; South Wales, 2½; Welsh Midland, 1½; West Riding Union, 3¾ p.; York and Carlisle, 1½; York and North Midland, Half Shares, 60½; Ditto, Extension, 2; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 1½; Boulogne and Amiens, 12; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette (Espeleie), 2; Dutch Rhenish, 7; East Indian, ½; Great North of France, Constituted, 14½; Namur and Liege, 4; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10½; Paris and Lyons, Constituted, 7½; Paris and Strasbourg Constituted, 9½; Rouen and Havre, 2¼.

SATURDAY MORNING. The Consol Market was dull yesterday at a slight decline. The final quotations were 86¾ to ⅞ for money, and 86¾ ⅞ for time. The Share Market was rather heavy, but the Settlement was tolerably satisfactory; money, however, proved scarce. Mexican was 32¾, which is the only price worth quoting in the Foreign Market.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 12.

WHITEHALL, May 9.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal of Ireland, granting the dignity of a Baronet unto Robert Shapland Carew, late Member for the county of Wexford, and his heirs male.

WHITEHALL, May 11.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Rev. Augustus William Hamilton to be Chaplain of her Majesty's Forts and Settlements on the Gold Coast.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint William Wesley Hillyard, Esq., to be Chairman of Quarter sessions and Judge of the Civil Court for the colony of North Australia.

BANKRUPTS.—R. T. Aldridge, Bristol, draper. J. Spode to be Corset, vice Roberts.

Royal Flintshire Militia.—R. P. Puleston, Esq., to be Captain, vice [illegible] pothecate to the Surgeon.

[illegible] Militia.—E. L. Ostacre, Esq., to be Major. [illegible] Lieutenant Charlton [illegible] Cavalry.—J. [illegible] Lieutenant Marshall [illegible] Lieutenant Vivian to be Captain, vice [illegible]

BANKRUPTS.—J. W. CHAMBERLAIN, East Dereham, grocer.

BANKRUPTS.—J. Widnes-terrace, City-road, worsted-stuff-manufacturer. [illegible] Ashgate, carcase-butcher. J. GIBSON, Yarmouth, coal-merchant. C. HALLEY, Watmouth Street, Goswell-road, grocer. B. H. BULLOCK, Nicholas-lane, City, wine-merchant. G. M'KINNELL, Fenchurch-street, wine-merchant. R. HEARD, Wood street, Cheapside, commission-agent. W. WELLS and J. CLAYTON, Welton-wharf, Barnsley, coal-merchants. F. SAVERY, Hillingdon, baker. C. F. CARNE, and M. I. G. [illegible] Gloucestershire. G. WHITFIELD, Nottingham, lemonade-manufacturer. R. LEES, Wolverhampton, ironmonger. J. ANDREWS, Hill-house, [illegible] S. B. SOWDEN, Leeds, shawlmaker. J. BACON, Norwich, [illegible] W. BADGER, Birkenhead, Yorkshire, boot-maker. E. LINLEY and A. LINLEY, Sheffield, [illegible] T. HALSLEY and H. INGLE, Wine-street, Farringdon-street. F. HODGES, Guisford, Yorkshire, surgeon dentist. J. WILMOT, London, North Audley-street. J. PAUL, Walsall, Staffordshire, iron-dealer. W. FOX and J. FOX, Manchester, [illegible]

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—A. COUPER, Glasgow, salesman. G. SANDERSON, Colinton, baker

FRIDAY, MAY 15.

WAR OFFICE, MAY 15.

Further List of Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of the Queen's Army, on the Staff, or with the Militia, or who have subsequently died at home or abroad.

THIRD LIGHT DRAGOONS.—Serjeant-Major, W. Eldridge; 4 Baker, P. Franklin. Private—[illegible] West, H. Wright, W. Wall, W. Bell, F. Layman, J. Marshall, W. Driver, P. Blake, W. [illegible] W. Alexander, D. Rowland, J. Mahoney, J. Mills, —. Baldwin, W. Robson, Y. Steel, R. [illegible]

SIXTH LANCERS.—Private—T. Cook, R. Bond, S. Day, T. Stead

NINTH FOOT.—Sergeant, W. Blevins. Private—R. Maklem, G. Grimes, D. Horrigan [illegible] W. Bowden, W. Wyatt, J. Jones, J. Wilson, J. Jones, J. Jones, J. Jones, J. Jones, [illegible] Private W. Watkins, R. Williams, J. Garey, J. Hartley, S. Bishop, F. Kilty, H. Ryles, J. Ford, J. Thomas, S. Sims, W. Campion, T. Massey.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, MAY 14.

Royal Regiment of Artillery.—Captain and Brevet Major Al. H. Freer to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Macdonlan: Second Captain G. Maclean to be Captain, vice Freer: First Lieutenant R. V. Allen to be second Captain, vice G. Maclean: Second Lieutenant H. F. Black to be First Lieutenant, vice Allen.

BANKRUPTS.—W. B. LEMON, Croydon, ironmonger. L. WHITBY, Poultry, builder. R. SMITH, Sussex-street, Tottenham-court-road, cabinet-maker. T. SHOWELL, Leicester-square, [illegible] W. SIMCOX, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, coach-master-street, Farringdon-[illegible] W. ASBURNOW, Lamb's Conduit-street, [illegible] E. MILES and R. PLAMER, Gracechurch-street, [illegible] C. M. WILLIAMS [illegible] [illegible] J. WOOD, Birmingham, [illegible] receiver. S. HILL, Bolton-le-Moors, [illegible] J. BALDWYCH, Stourbridge, staffordshire, [illegible]

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. GORDON, jun., Aberdeen, ship-broker.

BIRTHS.

In Eaton-place, the Hon. Mrs. G. E. Anson, of a son, still born.—At Hill-street, Berkeley-square, the wife of C. Rakely Brown, Esq., M.D., of a son.—At Peterborough, the wife of Samuel C. W. Buckle, Esq., of a son and heir.

MARRIAGES

At the Hon. John Stourton, third son of the Right Hon. Lord Stourton, to Caroline Emma Mee Nolty, daughter of the late Patrick Mac Nolty, Esq.—At Higgeston, the Rev. T. E. Abraham, to Helen, second daughter of Richard Bethell, Esq., Q.C.—At St. George's Church, Hanover-square, William Bowles James, Esq., to Julia, third daughter of Admiral Sir Thomas Hyde Pakenham, K.C.B.—At Bath, Lieut.-Colonel Wilson, of Eden Lodge, to Mary Anne Reid.—At Walton Church, Edward T. Caulfield, Esq., to Alicia Almeria, youngest daughter of General Sir David Leander Fleming Wedderburn, K.C.B. &c.—At Cox' Lodge Chapel, St. John's-wood, Sir George Hayter, Knight, K.S.L., to Helena Cecilia Hayley, daughter of the late Mozart Parker, Esq.—At St. George's, Bloomsbury, Henry Latham, Esq., to Mary Frances, eldest daughter of Thomas Leach, Esq.

DEATHS

At Fort William, Inverness-shire, Miss Cameron Colchoman, sister of the late Sir John Cameron, K.C.B.—At Ryde, the Rev. F. Fawcett Bastard, youngest son of the late Edmund Bastard, Esq., M.P.—In the Strand, Mr. De Wilde, sage manufacturer and phrenologist, in his 76th year.—At Penzance, Sarah Anna, the wife of Captain T. Vernon Anson, R.N., and second daughter of the late Richard Pennefather, formerly M.P. for Wexford.—At [illegible] Major Archibald Lamont, of Castle-toward, in the 86th year.—At Gore Lodge, Chelsea, William Hobson, Esq.—At Malta, in the 80th year of his age, the Rev. Armitage Brown.—At Chelsea, Richard Hetyer, Esq., in the 86th year of his age.—On the 19th instant, Charles Brooke Bidwell, Esq.—At Paignton, Devonshire, Captain Thomas Barker Devon, R.M., K.C.H.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—LOPPING TIMBER.

LOPPING TIMBER TREES IN SPRING.

Come to the woods and the forest hear—
Come where the Timber Trees are waving
Their proud arms the streamiest o'er
Which their gnarled roots is laving.
Come where the Spring in verdant sheen
Brings sap from earth and dews from heaven,
Where towers the monarch oak serene,
That 'gainst a century hath striven.

Here be the leafy sons of earth,
And need, like man, a true preceptor;
Man hews the branch t' enlarge the girth,
But Nature waves o'er all her sceptre.
Hark! 'tis the woodman's stalwart stroke,
And flee the fallow deer affrighted;
The Dryads mourn their native oak,
Whose boughs have to the sward alighted.

Oh! 'tis a soul-absorbing theme
Upon an acorn's fate to ponder;
The more we think the deeper seem
Our thoughts entranced in voiceless wonder.

To think that little tiny thing
Should prove the bulwark of our nation,
Bearing abroad, on Triumph's wing,
Our name, our fame, and destination.

"Who plants a tree"—the sage hath said,
Becomes a greater benefactor
To man than he who armies led,
In Moloch's farce a laurell'd actor.
And hence 'twas through no idle rite,
The oak was hallowed by the Druid;
'Tis truly British, and our might
Was nurtured by its vital fluid.

Come to the woods and forests green,
Come where the woodman's axe is sounding,
While through the flow'ry glades are seen,
The dappled deer in freedom bounding.

The branches fall—but coming years
Will soon replace each sylvan brother,
And thus our tree of life appears,
Whose branches—men—succeed each other.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD—(FROM THE BRIDGE).

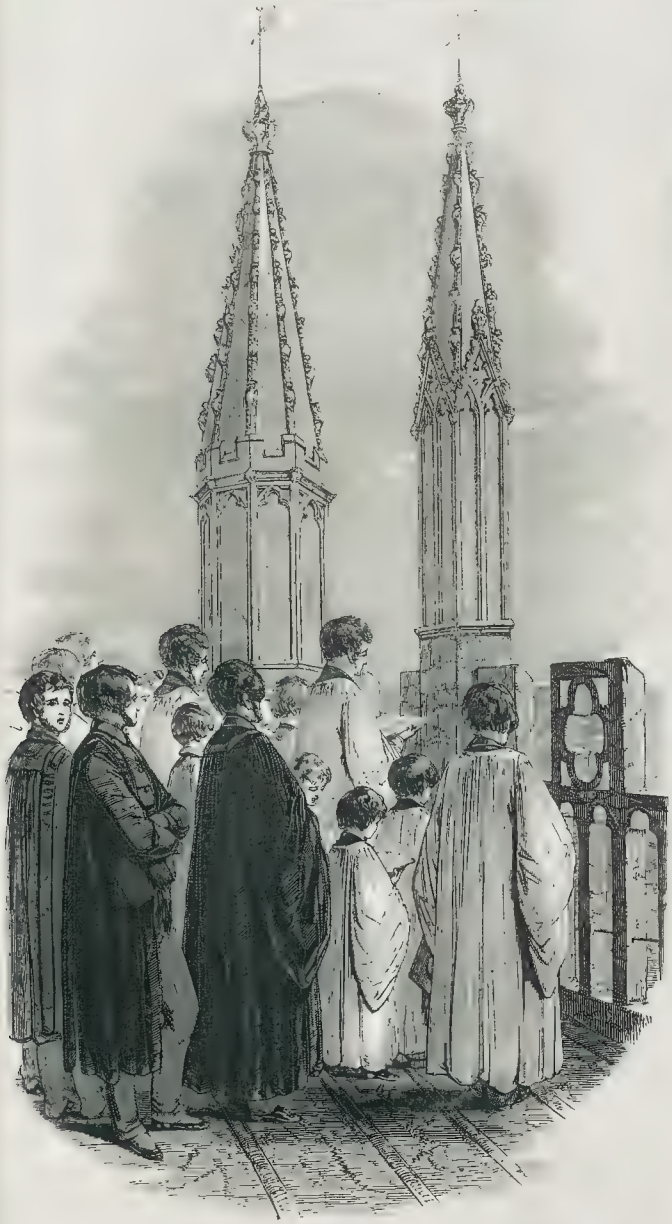
MAY-DAY MUSICAL SERVICE, ON THE TOWER OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Every visitor to Oxford must have been struck with the fine entrance into the City by Magdalen Bridge, at the meeting of the Henley and Wycombe roads from the Metropolis. "From noise, and glare, and brilliancy," says a writer in the Quarterly Review, of eight years since, "the traveller comes upon a very different scene—a mass of towers, pinnacles, and spires, rising in the bosom of a valley, from groves which hide all buildings but such as are consecrated to some wise and holy purpose." True it is that since the above was written, a railway has been extended to Oxford, and you lose the picturesque approach we have glanced at. Still, the majestic "Perpendicular" Tower of Magdalen College is seen from every point, delighting the eye with its stately form, fine proportions, and admirable simplicity, and by its superior architectural character, doing honour to the original intention of its founder—that it should stand alone, detached from the other buildings on the east and west of it. Wolsey, afterwards the celebrated Cardinal, who was bursar of the College in 1498, has had the credit ascribed to him of designing this Tower; but, Dr. Chandler, in his Life of Bishop Waynflete, assures us that Wolsey had no share whatever in the erection of the structure.

With the history of this Tower there is associated a May-day custom of surpassing interest, which we have been at some pains to illustrate and describe to our readers. For three centuries and a half it has been customary for the Choristers of Magdalen College to assemble on the top of its Tower, and there, with harmonious service, "to usher in Spring," as one writer states; but, on better informed authority, Mr. Chalmers, in his History of the University, refers the origin of the custom to a mass, or requiem, which, before the Reformation, used to be annually performed on the top of the Tower, for the repose of the soul of Henry VII., who had honoured the College with a visit in 1488. "This was afterwards consumed," Mr. Chalmers adds, "for a few pieces of music, which are executed by the Choristers, and for which the Rectory of Slimbridge, in Gloucestershire, pays annually the sum of £10."

Thither we dispatched one of our artists on Thursday, the 30th ult., and we subjoin the results of his visit, graphic as well as narrative, the latter with only a few variations.

"Friday morning was very unpropitious, and, by no means, a poetical May morning; for, though the air was mild and clear, it was cloudy, and, soon after four o'clock, a slight shower of rain tended to cast a gloom over the scene. On emerging into the High-street, from the archway of the Mitre Hotel, it was evident that boys and girls were on the qui vive, even if the older inhabitants of Oxford were not, as many of the former were on their way down the street towards the bridge. On reaching the very pretty and recently erected gate to Magdalen College, the Choristers were assembling; and, on presenting the ticket with which I was provided, I was admitted, and proceeded to the entrance of the [illegible] Tower. About [illegible] past four o'clock, the portal looked [illegible] Tower, and I [illegible] the singing boys, in their [illegible], with their task-[illegible] [illegible] of surplices over their cloaks, to attire themselves in the [illegible] the summit of the Tower, as did also the singing men. A [illegible] of the [illegible] Magdalen and the different Colleges, fellows, scholars, &c., in their academic dresses, wended their way to the top, and a tedious ascent they must have found it, their long dresses incommoding them in the narrow, newel staircase. The summit gained, the prospect was very pleasing through the pierced battlements, and between the pinnacles of grey time-stained stone; for, being so early in the morning, no smoke impeded the view of every house, tower, or church in Oxford, and the fields and trees looked bright and fresh in their new spring livery and foliage. The Choristers, men and boys, put on their surplices, and ranged themselves in order on the slightly gabled roof of the Tower, standing with their faces towards the east, the visitors looking in the same direction. The music-books were given to the Choristers, and this [illegible] the silence of expectation, slightly interrupted by the whispers of some of the more eager of the listeners, who were consulting their watches. Soon the College clocks sounded five; Magdalen bell told the same tale, and, in an instant, all were uncovered.



CHORISTERS SINGING THE "HYMNUS EUCHARISTICUS," ON MAGDALEN TOWER.

"As the fifth sound died away in the air, the Choristers began their hymn, and a very beautiful effect it had. The novelty of the situation, the early hour, the surplised singers, and the black academic robes of the lookers on, with the notes of the hymn vibrating in the air, all tended to produce a most imposing and thrilling effect. On a bright sunshiny morning, it must be exquisite; but it was marred on Friday by the rain which was falling in a slight shower all the time. Whilst the hymn was going on, a solitary rook flew up, and hovered round the pinnacle, as though he could not conceive why all those strange faces and strange sounds were so near his leafy eyry.

"The hymn ended, all heads were covered; and the singing-boys made haste to the belfry, and amused themselves with ringing the bells, or at least assisting in the task.

"A great number of the townspeople, and boys and girls, were congregated on the bridge, listening with all possible quiet to the music, as it floated in the air; and, as soon as it was all over, they dispersed in various directions; the boys making a most disagreeable din with tin horns, the blowing of which seems to be an ancient custom of welcoming in sweet May. Boys and girls also rambled away into the fields to gather cowslips and field-flowers, with which I saw many parties returning tolerably laden, in the course of the morning.

"I was told that the best place to hear the singing on Magdalen Tower is to go into the fields away from the people, and that there the effect is particularly fine. The keeper of the Ashmolean Museum assured me he had been informed the singing had been heard in the fields two miles off, when the wind was in that direction.

"The 1st of May is a "gaudy-day" for the Choristers, who have a dinner of lamb and plum-pudding, at two o'clock in the day. The attendance of Choristers at the Tower was very good, and, including some of the fellows of Magdalen, who joined in the singing, could not be less than 25 or 30 persons, so that the choir was tolerably full.

"I may as well observe that neither the author nor composer of the hymn are known, though the music is undoubtedly of great antiquity. I rather think, also, it is a puzzling question to antiquaries as to the connection Henry VII. had with the College, so that there should be a requiem performed to his memory.

"I enclose a copy of the hymn in Latin, in which language it is sung, and a translation of it also."

HYMNUS EUCHARISTICUS.

Te Deum Patrem colimus,
Te laudibus prosequimur,
Qui corpus effe voluit,
Celesti munere gratis

Te adoramus, O Jesu,
Tu Fili magnifice,
Te qui non dedignatus es
Rubire claustra Virginis

Actus in crucem, factus es
Irati in ictibus,
Per te salutis gloriæ
Vitæ spes in Jacrata

Tibi, eterne Spiritus,
Cujus afflatu pepcrit
Infantem Deipa Maria,
Assertum benedicimus.

Trinus Deus, hominum
Salutis auctor optime,
Immensum hoc mysterium
Ovante lingua canimus.

TRANSLATION.

Father and Lord we worship Thee,
And praise and glorify Thy name,
Who, God Thou art to our bodies kind,
With heavenly grace dost cheer the mind.

O Jesus only-begotten!
Thee we adore, and praise, and laud:
Thy love did not disdain the gloom
Of a pure Virgin's holy womb

Nail'd to the cross, a victim made,
On Thee the wrath of God was laid.
Our true Saviour, now by Thee
Immortal Life we hope to see.

To Thee, Eternal Spirit, rise
Unceasing praise, from earth and skies:
Thy breath awoke the heavenly Child,
And gave Him to His mother mild

To Thee, the Triune God, be paid—
To Thee, who our redemption made—
All honour, thanks, and praise divine,
For this great mystery of Thine!

We have appended a view of the very handsome Entrance-Gate to Magdalen College, just completed from the designs of Mr. Pugin. It consists of a centre gateway, and a small doorway to the Porter's Lodge. The style of architecture is that of the period of Henry VI.; and the details are copied from examples to be found in the original portions of the College buildings. The doorway is highly enriched, having shields in the quatrefoils of the spandrils, on which are emblazoned the lilies of the College Arms, and the Badge of Henry VI., painted upon copper. In a string-course of lilies is sculptured in Old English character—William of Waynflete's motto, "Fecit mihi magna qui potens est." Over the gateway, within a beautifully decorated niche, is an elegant figure of St. Mary Magdalen; and in niches in the buttresses on each side of the Gateway are figures of St. John the Baptist, and William of Waynflete; the former holding a lamb in his arms, and the latter in his pontificals, holding the model of a church in his right hand, and his crosier in his left.

In sunken panels on each side of the central niche are shields supported by angels; that on the south bearing England and France quarterly; that on the north, the arms of the College. These shields are, like those in the quatrefoils, emblazoned upon copper. The Gateway is surmounted by an elegant stone cross, and on the eastern side of the Gate, over the arch, and within a niche, is a figure of the Virgin holding the infant Saviour in her arms.

There is one sad defect in the figures, and that is—they are all of them too large for their respective niches; so that the Baptist seems as if he were cut down to fit his little habitation, and William of Waynflete appears as though he were afraid of knocking his mitre from his head

NEW GATEWAY OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE.

The doors of the Gateway are of oak, and ornamented. It should be added that all the sculptures are exceedingly well executed, and not in the formal style so often seen in attempts to carry out the old character in additions to old buildings.

HERR PISCHEK, THE GREAT GERMAN SINGER.

The portrait that we are enabled to publish this day in our columns, of this celebrated artist, is copied from a lithograph given to the world by Mr. Schloss, who is in possession of the Daguerréotype from which the drawing was taken on stone.

The career of the most eminent baritone, who is pronounced by the oldest pressers never to have been rivalled, is interesting

John Baptiste Pischek was born the 14th of October, 1814, at Mscheno, a small town in Bohemia, about six miles (German) from Prague. His father, a gentleman farmer in Mscheno, and afterwards Mayor of the place, was a great amateur of music, especially of the sacred school. He was much amused one day at finding his little son (then only four years old) trying to make out, on the piano, the air of a national Bohemian song, and was with one finger, quite by himself, composing a bass to it. The father and his musical friends at once saw the talent of the young Pischek, and in his sixth year he was properly instructed on the piano by a master residing in the town, and he soon made extraordinary progress

When ten years old he began to sing, and assisted at the Catholic Church services. His powerful and fine alto voice made him, of course, soon the favourite of his native town. At eleven years he learned German, as at Mscheno, which is an entirely Bohemian place and nothing else is spoken, or generally taught than the native language. Having reached his twelfth year, and his father wishing him to study, he brought him to the College at Loupa; and he afterwards went to Prague, where he acquired at the Gymnasium, Philosophy and Jurisprudence. Young Pischek, however, did not neglect music, and continued, as an amateur, to sing in Churches, and to keep up on other occasions his brilliant talent; for four years he played the organ and sang in Churches parts written for the alto voice. From his seventeenth to his eighteenth year his voice changed, and he was so careful at this event, not having had any idea of studying the art of Singing, nor the slightest wish to dedicate himself to the stage, that for two years he scarcely sang at all, but during this period remained quiescent.

At the age of twenty years he completely regained his voice, which was at first full, strong, and deep bass; but, in two years more, he acquired the higher notes, and was possessed of a beautiful baritone voice. The director of the theatre, Tribensee (the master of Sontag), was informed of Pischek's talent, and he immediately invited him, and tried to persuade him to give up the study of the law, and to exchange it for that of the stage.

Pischek soon consented to this suggestion, and made his first appearance with Sabina Heinefetter on the stage of Prague, in Oroveso, the priest, in "Norma." The house, which was crowded to excess, received the young artiste with the greatest enthusiasm. But Pischek was so much overpowered (at this first performance) that he was scarcely able to sing, and his friends advised him to leave the stage, not thinking he had voice or talent sufficient for it. His parents frequently reproached him, and entreated him to commence his career again. Thus passed two years and a half, during which time sad misfortunes fell upon his family, in the loss of a tender mother, &c.

HERR PISCHEK.

These circumstances made him undecided whether it would be better to follow his former studies, or to remain on the stage; but, in 1838, he had an opportunity of singing for the first time at Brünn, in "I Puritani," and was so successful as to be encored five times, and was called before the curtain amid the enthusiastic cheers of the audience. Since that time, Pischek has performed in many operas with the greatest success. In 1839, he went to Vienna; and the following year proceeded to Frankfort on the Maine, where he remained four years, and was always a favourite with the public; he afterwards accepted (in 1844) an engagement at Stuttgardt, the capital of Wurtemberg, for life, with the permission of four months' leave of absence in each year. The first year he went to Prague, where he had very great success. In 1845, he came the first time to England, where he remained the season; and afterwards spent that year at Munich and Vienna, in which last place he passed three months, and the reception he met with everywhere was most enthusiastic. He arrived in London the first week in May, and his engagements for concerts, public and private, are more extensive than was ever before known, of any artist, although he is unacquainted with English

French, or Italian. It is to be hoped that he will not sing in any other language than his adopted German, for his fine energy would be lost in a great degree.

If we were called upon to classify the greatest artists of different voices, we should name Pasta as a Prima Donna, Duprez as a Tenor, Staudigl and Lablache as Bassi, between whom it is indeed difficult to choose, and Fischek as a Baritone. But it is not only in the quality of the voice that the latter excels, but in impressiveness and impassioned feeling. His style is perfect, whether heard in the fervent sacred prayer, or in the florid dramatic school. He has complete command over his organ, and can diminish its force to the pianissimo of wire-drawn elastic artist, who never flags in his duty, but conscientiously and ardently realises as all times the conceptions of the composer he interprets.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Automaton."—Your position is a mere réchauffé of the Indian Problem on the wrapper of the "Chess Magazine."

"An Old Subscriber, &c."—We have looked attentively at the situation to which you refer, and believe the author has omitted to place a Pawn for White on his K Kt 4th. Without this, it appears impossible to effect mate within the prescribed number of moves.

"Jack Huston."—"The Chess-Player's Chronicle" gives monthly an assortment of beautiful problems, adapted for every capacity. It may be obtained of any bookseller in town or country, or by post at a trifling extra cost. Apply to Hurst, Publisher, King William-street, Strand.

"F. P.," "Sinbad," and "Q. P."—Get Lewis's last Treatise, published by Bohn, of Cornhill, if you are very well advanced in the game; if only a beginner, we should recommend "Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess."

"Palamedes."—We were perfectly conscious of the source from whence the problem you mention was derived.

"H. C. M."—It shall be duly noticed.

"F. J. B."—In placing the Chess-board for play, it is a rule that each party should have a White square on his right hand.

"Sea Weed."—Your solution in two moves is nought, because you make your adversary play badly. In every problem, mate must be given in despite of the best possible defence on the part of Black.

"H. S. L."—We were favoured with the whole of Messrs Stanley and Rousseau's games in manuscript, but refrained from publishing them all, fearing to injure the sale of their collection. The power to which you allude, although professing to have "all" the games, in reality was possessed only of those which had presently appeared in the American papers, as we have the best authority for knowing that not a single manuscript game was sent to it.

"J. B."—6*s. 6d. per quarter.*

"F. V. D."—It is generally understood that both Mr. Kieseritzki and Mr. Horwitz will visit England shortly; and we are gratified to learn that Chess here is likely to receive an extraordinary impulse from the presence of M. Von Deydebrant, who has signified his intention of being in London in the course of the summer.

"J. C." and "W. H. C."—Your Problem shall be looked at, and reported on immediately.

"Edgecumbe."—To lose a piece so early in the Game without equivalent of any kind, was a glaring error on the part of Black, and, of course, must cost him the game.

"R. P. G."—Thanks; but the position is too well known, being no other than the celebrated Indian one, so slightly modified.

"De W." and "G. O."—Much too easy for publication.

"W. M.,"Hull.—We are unacquainted with the game.

"Veteran."—We regret to say that, at the date of our last intelligence from Paris, the state of M. des Chappelles, from his advanced age, was considered by his friends and physicians to be quite hopeless

"Uxmensis."—We are unable at the moment to refer to the position; but the next week's paper to that in which it appeared, contains the solution. If you cannot obtain that Number, and will copy the diagram, we shall have much pleasure in forwarding a key to it.

"Mono."—If A. and B. engage in a game of Chess by correspondence, neither party is justified in obtaining the assistance of another player. With respect to the other question, we agree with you that there is something very objectionable in the rule which admits of a plurality of Queens.

"Young Chess Player."—The crying "check" does not oblige you to play the piece to the square you first intended, provided you have not left go of it.

Solutions by "A B.," "Chester," "R. W. B.," "A Subscriber," "F. W. M.," "B. S. F.," "C. P.," "Jonas," "G. R. M" "S. G." "Sigma," "G. H.," "Liverpool," "F. M.," "Inchmagrabet," "A. C." "G. A. S.," and "C. G." are correct. Those by "C. S.," Blackheath; "W. N. E.," "B. B.," "Omega," "Sinb," "W. F.," "Mignon," "G. H.," and "Melicus," are all wrong.

 Mr. G. Waller, one of the finest players of the Dublin Chess Club, is willing to play the attack in the Evans's gambit, by Correspondence, against any Amateur who has faith in the acknowledged defences to that beautiful début. Address to Mr. G. Waller, Dublin Chess Club, Leinster Chambers, Dame-street, Dublin.

☞ If "Amateur," who advertised his wish to play a Game of Chess by Correspondence, has not yet met with an opponent, he may hear of one by directing to "C. R.," Parsonage, Coal-pit Heath, near Bristol.

 Any player in the rank of what is technically called "Knight Players"—that is, one to whom the first move would not give the odds of a Knight—desirous of engaging in a Match by Correspondence, will find an antagonist by addressing (p. paid), to "M. P.," care of Mr. Hurst, Office of the "Chess Player's Chronicle," King William-street, Strand, enclosing real name and address.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 120.

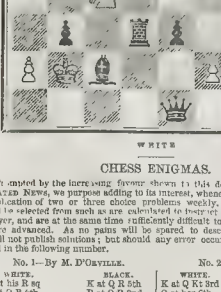
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to B 6th (ch)	Kt takes Kt	5. Q to K 6th	Q R takes B
2. Kt takes Kt (ch)	K to R's sq	6. Kt to B 5th	K B P two
3. Q to K R's 4th	R to K Kt sq	7. Kt to K B 6th (dis. ch)	R to K R 2nd
4. B to K B 8th	R to K Kt 2nd (best)	8. Q takes R—mate

PROBLEM NO. 121.

By M. BREDE, of Altona.

White playing first mates in seven moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

CHESS ENIGMAS.

Prompted by the increasing favour shown to this department of THE ILLUSTRATED NEWS, we purpose adding to its interest, whenever space permits, by the publication of two or three choice problems weekly. For the most part they will be selected from such as are considered to merge and entertain the rising player, and are at the same time sufficiently difficult to afford amusement to the more advanced. As no pains will be spared to describe them accurately, we shall not publish solutions; but should any error occur, it will always be rectified in the following number.

No. 1.—By M. D'ORVILLE.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R sq	K at Q R 6th	K at Q K 3rd	K at Q R 4th
B at Q B 5th	P at Q R 2nd	Q at her 6th	Q at R 7th
B at Q R 6th		B at Q 4th	Kts at Q 4th and 6th
Kt at Q B 2nd		P at Q R 3rd	P's at K Bl, Q Kt 2d
P's at Q Kt 4th and Q R 2nd			and 4th, and Q R 3rd

White mates in three moves.

White mates in three moves.

No. 3.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his 8th	K at Q B's 2nd	K at Q's 6th	R at Q Kt's sq
Q at K 5th	Q at K B's 8th	P at Q Kt's 4th
B at Q B 8th	R at K R's 2nd

White mates in three moves.

MATCH AT CHESS

BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND MR. HORWITZ.

GAME THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. K P two	Q B P two	25. Q R to Q 2nd	B to Q Kt 5th
2. K B to Q B 4th	K P one	26. B to Q 4th	B takes Kt
3. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	27. B takes B	Q R P one
4. K B P two	Q R P one	28. R to Q 6th (b)	Kt takes R
5. Q R P two	K Kt P one	29. P takes Kt	B to Q Kt 2nd (l)
6. K Kt to B 3rd	K B P to K R 3rd	30. P takes B	P takes P
7. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	31. K B takes P	Q takes Q B
8. Q P one	K B P two	32. B takes P	B to K B 6th
9. Q to K sq	Castles (c)	33. R to Q 3rd	B takes Q
10. Q B to K 3d	Q Kt P one	34. R takes Q	K R to Q sq
11. K R P one	Q Kt to K 2nd (b)	35. B takes P (ch)	K to B sq
12. K P one	Q B to Kt 3rd	36. Q P one	B to Q Kt 4th
13. Q P one	P takes P	37. K R P one	B takes P
14. Kt takes P	Q to her B 2nd	38. B to Q B 4th	B to Q Kt 4th
15. Q Kt P one	Kt B to K 3rd	39. B takes B	B takes B
16. Q to K B 2nd	Q R to Q Kt sq (c)	40. K to R 3rd	K R P two
17. Q R to Sq(d)	Kt takes Kt	41. R to Q B 6th	R to Kt 2nd
18. B takes Kt	B to Q R 4th (e)	42. R to Q B 7th	R to K 2nd
19. Q to K 2nd	Q to her Kt 2nd (c)	43. R to Q B 4th	R to Q 8th
		44. Q Kt P one	Q R to Q 6th
20. B to K B 2nd (g)	Kt to K B 2nd	45. K R to Kt 3rd	Q R to Q 7th (ch)
21. R to Q B sq	K R to K sq	46. K to R 3rd	Q R to Q 5th
22. K R to Q sq	B to K R 3rd (h)	47. R to Q B 8th	Q R takes P
23. K Kt P one	B to K B 5th	48. K to his 3rd	R to K 6th
24. K to R 2nd	Q to B 3rd (i)

And after a few more moves White surrendered.

(a) This game is opened with remarkable care and prudence on both sides.
(b) Threatening to take a disposable Pawn, by advancing the Q's Pawn two squares.
(c) Imperative for preserving the Kt's Pawn
(d) He might have gained three Pawns for a piece by taking the King's Pawn with his Kt.
(e) The only move to save the Kt, for if he take the B it would have been untenable.
(f) Black is driven to this abject defence for a time to preserve his Pawns.
(g) Well played. To understand the merit of this move the student should observe that during the whole of the attack and defence on the Q's side, Black has been looking for that moment to throw forward his Q's Pawn, for by taking it, his Q would have been untenable, and to pass an unprotected piece to the range of the Black King's Bishop. Hitherto White has very cleverly drawn off his attention, but prevented his advance by the present move; but now, having his Q's Rook bearing on the file, he changes his tactics, and seemingly affords his adversary the very opportunity of which he was in quest when he took the Q's Pawn. White cannot take it in passing without losing his Kt. Upon looking into the position, however, it will be seen that Black cannot forward his Q's Pawn, White's Knight instead of taking it en passant, would simply take it with his Kt, and if the Kt were taken, would win the advance Queen, by the check of the Bishop.
(h) An important move, in thus playing the Bishop to his sq at once, because it compels his adversary to make a move in [illegible] prejudicial to his game.
(i) Black has now an irresistible position for the attack, and soon wins by pushing on the Q's Pawn, and also to play Lis B to Q's sq 2
(k) An important move, as others "the Exchange," for the purpose, if possible, of playing his Queen to R's 5th
(l) He would evidently have lost the game by taking the Bishop. The present move not only gives White no time to plant his Queen at the King's 5th, but prevents another very dangerous move, viz., R to Q's 6th.

[This partie, which makes the 21st of those actually lost and won, and gives 14 to Mr. Staunton and 7 to his opponent, terminates the match. The result was not unexpected: with some differences of opinion as to the probable numerical majority on the English side, the Chess community at large concurred in thinking Mr. Staunton unconquerable, and many eminent judges with whom we have spoken, confess they looked for it still more strikingly manifestation of his inequality between the combatants. We had ourselves done so, and believe it must be admitted that the play of the winner in this occasion is not at all times up to the standard of his former exploits; but for this some allowance may be reasonably claimed on the score of want of motive and strong incitement: upon the whole, too, we see no grounds for dissatisfaction among the twenty-four games played, there are many of remarkable interest and ability, and the defeated Knight of the Sable Plume has compensated by the pleasure every lover of Chess must feel at the advent of so accomplished a master as Mr. Horwitz has shown himself. The departure of Mr. Cochrane, unquestionably the second player of the day in England, left a void in our Chess ranks which we long despaired of seeing adequately filled; but the talents of the winner in this encounter are recognised in Mr. Horwitz a worthy occupant of his high place. Educated in the very best modern school of Chess play, a comparison and contemporary of Mantenfel, Mendheim, Bilguer, Bledow, Heydebrand, &c. he has acquired a knowledge of the game that rarely met with. If less original and brilliant than Mr. Cochrane, of whom he is more than any player, reminds us, he has certainly the advantage of greater learning and steadiness, so that while his inspirations are fewer, his faults likewise are less frequent. Both are players of undoubted genius, both remarkable for the energy and daring of their attack, as well as for the rapidity of their conceptions, and both somewhat apt in their eager application of the sword to throw away the shield. Those who would pursue the parallel, will find abundant scope in comparing the games of Mr. Horwitz in the present match with those to be found in the "Chess Player's Chronicle," which were played by Mr. Cochrane against the same opponent; and, having done so, few, if any, we think, will be disposed to question the right of the former to the position we have ventured to assign to him.]

IRON MARKET-HOUSE.—A large public market-house, destined for Hawkers, entirely constructed of iron, has just been built at Messrs. Edington's, Phœnix Iron Works, Glasgow. It is 108 feet long, 60 wide, and is surrounded by a verandah 12 feet high, supported by handsome columns. It contains numerous stalls in the interior for the display of commodities; and is surrounded by shutters of the Venetian blind description, which, when raised, form awnings for defents of fresh air to play in all directions; and the coolness of the interior is also promoted by a large ventilator at the top. It is to occupy the centre of a large square in Hamilton, and has been constructed with every regard to architectural beauty of detail and proportion.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that an EXTRA NIGHT will take place on THURSDAY next, MAY the 21st, 1846, when will be performed, Verdi's Celebrated Opera, entitled I LOMBARDI. Alla Prima Crociata. With New Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations. The Scenery by Mr. Grieve, Messrs. Gordon, Marinari, Roberts, and Absolon. Costumes by Mr. Smith. Machinery by Mr. Hemings. Gas by Mr. Bowsey. The Ballets by Mr. Lanza. Chief Assistant Mons. Desplaces. The Overture and Chorus by Mr. Balfe. Conductor, Mr. Costa. The Solos by Madame Grisi, Signor Salvi, Signor Ronconi, and Signor Lablache. The Choruses by the Full Strength of the Establishment. The Band by Mr. Willman. The Whole to conclude with the Divertissement of UN BAL SOUS LOUIS XIV., in which Mdlle Lucile Grahn will appear as a Courier of the Court of Louis XIV., and will dance the Pas de Quatre, consisting of the same Court, the celebrated Minuet de la Cour and Gavotte. Pas de Deux, Mdlle. L. Taglioni and M. Perrot. Pas de Quatre, Mdlle Lucile Grahn (composed by herself), supported by Mesdlles. Mercandotti, Dumilatre and Cassan. La Mazolin, Mdlle. Gerlo and M. M. Leon. To be followed by (for this occasion only) Donizetti's Opera entitled L'ELISIR D'AMORE (Concerniente che ora sera), Adina, Madle Castellan; Gianetto, Sig. Corelli, Belcore, Sig. F. Labbache, Dr Dulcamara, Sig. Labbache. To conclude with the admired Ballet Divertissement, composed by Mdlle. Cerito, entitled LA VIVANDIÈRE, introducing the Cellars, or Original Polka of Bohemia, by Mdlle Cerito and M. St. Leon. Postillon, M. St. Leon. Ruth (Hostess), Mons. Cupere, the Mayor of the Village, M. Bertrand, Travellers, Mdlle. Adeline and La Vivandiere, Mdlle Cerito.—Applications for Boxes, Stalls and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at 7; the Opera to commence at Half-7 o'clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the Patronage of Her Majesty THE QUEEN, and their Royal Highnesses PRINCE OF WALES and the PRINCESS ALICE.—Grand Triumph.—Thirty-first night of the present attractive novelties. Splendid equestrian additions. First week of the celebrated Horsemen Mr. BELLEW BRIDGES. Second week of the popular artist Mons. LEONARD HORTON. On MONDAY, MAY 18th, and every Evening, the Grand Divertisement of THE ARAB AND HIS STEED. Mr. Bellew Bridges Now and magnificent effects. Double Stud, &c. &c. The Scenery will also be of the most varied and pleasing description, introducing the whole Equestrian Troops. The Entertainment will conclude with a laughable AFTERPIECE to open from Eleven to Five.—Equestrian Director, Mr. T. Thompson

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the FIRST CONCERT will take place on MONDAY Evening, when will be performed Mendelssohn's Symphony in C minor; Beethoven's, in B flat, Weber's Overture to Euryanthe, and Cherubini's Allemagne. Principal Performers Mr. H. Field; Viola, K. Dolcffke, Violoncello, H. Pilet. Vocalists, Mdlle. Rudersdorff and Miss Dolby. Conductor, Mr. Costa. Single Tickets, for Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. Tickets, £1 10s., to be had at the Music Warehouse of Messrs. Addison and Hodson 210, Regent-street.

GREAT CONCERT ROOM, HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE Mrs. ANDERSON has the honour to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place on MONDAY, May 22nd 1846, to commence at Half-past One o'Clock precisely. Mesdlle. Amelie Cesarini, Rosina Bertolotti, and Miss Hawes. Miss Bassano, Mdme. Goberti, Mdlle. Rupphin, and Mdme. Anna Thillon; Signor Marras, Signor M. Costa, Herr Pischek, Herr Reichardt, and Signor Lablache, (by the particular artist Mons. LEONARD HORTON. On MONDAY, MAY 18th; and every Evening, the Grand Divertisement of THE ARAB AND HIS STEED. Mr. Bellew Bridges Now and magnificent effects. Double Stud, &c. &c. The Scenery will also be of the most varied and pleasing description, introducing the whole Equestrian Troops. The Entertainment will conclude with a laughable AFTERPIECE to open from Eleven to Five.—Equestrian Director, Mr. T. Thompson

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the FIRST CONCERT will take place on MONDAY Evening, when will be performed Mendelssohn's Symphony in C minor; Beethoven's, in B flat, Weber's Overture to Euryanthe, and Cherubini's Allemagne. Principal Performers Mr. H. Field; Viola, K. Dolcffke, Violoncello, H. Pilet. Vocalists, Mdlle. Rudersdorff and Miss Dolby. Conductor, Mr. Costa. Single Tickets, for Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. Tickets, £1 10s., to be had at the Music Warehouse of Messrs. Addison and Hodson 210, Regent-street.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI and Mr. GEO. CASE, beg to announce that they intend giving a SOIREE MUSICALE, at the QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER-SQUARE, on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, MAY 21st; on which occasion several Eminent Professors will assist. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of the Performers. TICKETS. Vocal Performers.—Madame Anna Thillon, Miss Dolby, Miss A. Williams, Miss M. Williams, Mrs. A. Newton, Mr. F. Lablache, Signor Ferrari, and Mr. John Parry. Instrumental Performers.—Pianoforte, Mr. C. Salaman. Guitar, Signor Gio. Regondi. Violin, Mr. Geo. Case; Concertinas, Messrs. Giulio Regondi, A. Sedgwick, R. Blagrove, and Case. Conductors.—Messrs. C. Salaman and G. Case. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of Signor Giulio Regondi, Gt. Margaret-street, Cavendish square. Mr. Geo. Case, 51, Great Gorms-street, and of all the principal Music Sellers.

LOVE'S POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENTS. VENTRILOQUISM EXTRAORDINARY. CROSBY HALL, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHOUT. EVERY DAY at 3 and 8. Mr. LOVE will present his Entertainment, entitled LOVE'S LUCUBRATIONS. Roberts, the Welsh Harpist, who has recently had the distinguished honour of performing before her Majesty. LOVE'S LABOUR LOST. Solo on the Violin, Master Thirlwall. Begin at a Quarter past Eight. Tickets, 2s.; Second Class 1s.

On MONDAY, MAY 18, at the ROOMS, HILL-STREET, PECKHAM.
On TUESDAY, MAY 19, at the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, HAMMERSMITH.
On WEDNESDAY, MAY 20, at the INSTITUTION, BLACKHEATH.
On MONDAY, MAY 25, at the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, WANDSWORTH.
On TUESDAY MAY 26, at the CASTLE HOTEL, RICHMOND.
On THURSDAY, MAY 28, at the ROOMS, WOODFORD.
On FRIDAY, MAY 29, at the SARACEN'S HEAD, CHELMSFORD.
On TUESDAY JUNE 2, at the INSTITUTION, READING.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY.—The FIRST EXHIBITION in the late Season in the Gardens of the Society in the Regent's Park, will be held partly in the new Conservatory, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, MAY 20. Tickets can be obtained in the Gardens by presenting an order signed by a Member; price to non-members and days of Exhibition, when they will be 7s. 6d. Carriages to enter either at the Front Gate, or at the Gate in North Gate, which is connected with the Conservatory.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS'S CONCERT on FRIDAY, MAY 22nd, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the immediate patronage of H R H the Duke of Cambridge, on which occasion he will perform selections from Heller, Liest, and Thalberg (the last a new composition by himself) expressly for the concert. The vocalists comprise Mesdames Birch, Poole, Steele, W. H. Seguin, A. and M. Williams Macfarren, Lavey, and M. B. Hawes; Messrs. Harrison, W. H. Seguin, and John Parry, Signor F. Lablache and Herr Pischek. Herr Mr Brinley Richards Conductor—Messrs Benedict and Alexander Tickets, 7s. each. Family Tickets, to admit Four, 30s. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. To be had of all the principal music-sellers, and of Mr. H. B. Richards, 59, Albermarle-street, Piccadilly.

COLOSSEUM. LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE. In consequence of many persons having been disappointed in not witnessing the additional and splendid effects in the marvellous Panorama of London by Night, they will in future be repeated every half hour instead of every hour Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five, and Half-past till Half-past Ten Holiday Prices continued

DAY EXHIBITION Panorama of London.—Museum of Sculpture.—Conservatories.—Aviary —Classic Ruins Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, &c. &c.

EVENING EXHIBITION :—London by Night.—Museum of Sculpture.—Conservatories, brilliantly illuminated.—Swiss Cottages, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight.—Open from Ten till Half-past Five, and Half past Seven till Half-past Ten.

The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. BRADWELL.

POSITIVELY THE LAST WEEK BUT FOUR OF GENERAL TOM THUMB'S LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL, previous to his final departure to America.—All Tickets that have been issued will be admitted on presenting their Tickets at the Doors. The little General will appear every Day and Evening in all the Costumes and Performances in which he had the honour of appearing before all the Courts of Europe, and in all the principal Courts of Europe. Hours of exhibition, from Half-past Twelve to Two; Half-past Three to Five; and Half-past Seven to Nine o'Clock. Admission, Children under Ten years of age, Half-price Carriages at Clock each evening, the General appears in his New Play at the City of London Theatre Bishopsgate-street.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Dr. RYAN'S New and Interesting LECTURE on the CHEMISTRY and PHILOSOPHY of DIVING at Half-past Three Daily; and on the Evenings of Monday, Wednesday, and Fridays. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURE on the ELECTRIC LIGHT, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S ROTARY ENGINE COLOURS & PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE, Model of the Caledonian Railway, with Mr. ROBERT STEPHENSON'S ARCHIMEDIAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, an ANVIL-ONE CUTTING MACHINE, and WIDNELL'S NEW PATENT CHAIN CABLE. Chemical Laboratory, all in action. SCENES in the OREGON TERRITORY are among the NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS. PORTRAITS of distinguished men in the ARMY of LAHORE magnified by the OXYHYDROGEN MICROSCOPE. The OXY HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects, &c. &c. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price

Just Published, the First and Second Numbers of MULTUM IN PARVO,—Sent free by post, on the receipt of Thirty-two Postage Stamps per Quarter, or Four Dozen per Year Apply A. A. A., Post-Office, Holt, Norfolk.

This Day, price 5d.,
UNITY OF THE IRON NETWORK; showing how the last argument for the Bank of Gold will be settled. Competition, is at variance with the true interests of the public by THORNTON HUNT—London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill

REQUESTED on RAILWAY SURVEYING and LEVELLING. This day is published, in One Vol. 8vo. illustrated with several Plans and Diagrams, Price 9s. 6d. cloth, A TREATISE ON RAILWAY SURVEYING and LEVELLING: by which the Author has endeavoured to simplify the most approved methods now adopted by surveyors. By JOHN GRESLEY, Author of "A Treatise on the Art of Land Surveying" KELPH and FLETCHER, 19, Cloak-lane

This Day, the Third Edition, now ready, illustrated with 40 Woodcuts, price 6s., in cloth, THE BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL; or, Practical Hints on the Management and Comparative Preservation of the Honey Bee. By HENRY TAYLOR "Written in a plain and easy style, and containing many valuable observations on the various kinds of Hives. It is also a very cheap work, and we recommend it to those who wish to obtain a knowledge of the habits of the Bee."—Gardeners' Chronicle. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Stationers'-hall-court.

HOW TO LIVE—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d., WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID; addressed to the Invalid, Valetudinarian, and Dyspeptic. By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c. SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; HOULSTON and WRIGHT, 65, Paternoster-row, HATCHARD, 187, Piccadilly; and 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill, and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

Third Edition, price 5s. 6d., with numerous Cases and Plates, DISEASES of the GLANDULAR PASSAGES, and HEART. SUCCESSFULLY TREATED By ALFRED B MADDOCK, M.D —"The treatment is the most bold and novel, and its efficacy is incontrovertible."—Hamiltonian Telegraph "Dr. Maddock's Treatise on Consumption, &c., may be obtained through any Bookseller.

THE CROWN JEWELS (now playing at Drury-Lane Theatre), DON GIOVANNI NINO, SONNAMBULA, FRA DIAVOLO. These Operas, beautifully printed in folio, with their respective overtures, are given in THE PIANISTA. No. 68, for June, made from Prospect Pieces, now Playing at the Theatres. Pianists-elect, 67, Paternoster-row, where is published Miss Cossin's song, third edition, "Bird Divine," and Miss Cossin's new song, "How Sad Seems the Sunrise," "Love Not." The New Opera of LOMBARDI and STRADELLA, in Nos. 70 and 71 PIANISTA.

PORTRAIT of HENRY RUSSELL.—This day ready, THE MUSICAL TREASURY, Vol IV, containing above Sixty of the Copyright Songs of this popular Composer, with his best Cremaille and descriptive Scenas, Songs, and Negro Melodies, all with Pianoforte Accompaniments, embellished with a splendid Portrait of Mr. Russell, taken at sittings granted for this, the only Portrait of him ever published. Price only 16s., printed in music folio, elegantly bound, with ornamental Title-page, Mendez, &c. A Proof Impressions of the Portrait on India paper, 5s.; and All Mr. Russell's Songs separately, in Transposing Sheets, and above 300 other Pianoforte Pieces in Thrapsony Sheets (464 Gems), Instructions, &c. Vols. I. to IV. Songs, Parts I. and II., in two or Nos. Leader's last new song, Robin Hood is lying Dead, 3d.; the Curfew Glee, by Attwood, 6d.; the Crown Diamonds Quadrille, 2s.; Overture to Crown Diamonds, 6d.

DAVISON, Water-street, leading from Blackfriars-bridge towards the Temple.

ELEGANT PRESENT.
Now ready, price 21s., elegantly bound,
THE BOOK OF COSTUME; OR, ANNALS OF FASHION
WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS, BY THE FIRST ARTISTS

"A book which one would have thought no ordinary attraction for readers of both sexes in the production of a lady of rank, and we have reason to believe it to be the first general history of costume in all nations ever published. From the beauty of the numerous engravings and the great care which has been taken in the arrangement of being richest by the first authority of the day in such matters—there can be little doubt that the volume will become a standard book of reference on all questions connected with fashion in dress."—Globe

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS. NOW READY

TRAVELS of FATY HESTER EMERSON, Comprising Incidents in Europe, Asia, and Africa. 3 vols., with Portrait of the Author.

CAPTAIN O'SULLIVAN; or, Adventures, Naval, Military, and Matrimonial, of a Lieutenant on Half Pay. By W. H. MAXWELL, Esq., Author of "Stories of Waterloo," &c., 3 vols.

MABSTON; or, The Soldier and Statesman. By the Rev. G. CROLY, LL.D., Author of "Salathiel," &c. 3 vols.

LEANDER, a Novel. By Mrs HARNETT, 3 vols. (Just ready.)

LETTERS OF THE KINGS OF ENGLAND, now first collected from Royal Archives and other Authentic Sources, private as well as public. Edited, with Notes, by J. O HALLIWELL, Esq., F.R.S., &c. 2 vols., with Portraits. (Just ready.)

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

PATERNOSTER-ROW.—TO WHOLESALE BOOKSELLERS, PUBLISHERS, and OTHERS To be DISPOSED OF, with immediate possession, a [illegible] situated in the best part of the Row. Capital [illegible] £2000. Health, and a moderate [illegible] to relinquish the trade, is the sole [illegible] with the above concern; since it presents an unusually favourable opportunity for two gentlemen commencing business in the above [illegible] Friends of known respectability can only be treated with. Address F. W., care of E. HODGSON, Esq., Printer, Fleet-street.

DYEING, &c.—GEORGE SMITH, 98, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, silk, cotton, and woollen dyer, and furniture-cleaner, in returning thanks to the nobility, gentry, and public, for their liberal patronage during the last 26 years he has been in business, begs respectfully to inform them that he continues to clean, dye water, or cashmere, all kinds of silks, satins velvets, damasks, moreens, tabarets &c., with the greatest despatch and economy. Blonds, laces, &c., cleaned or dyed. N.B. Orders punctually attended to in Town and Country.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Lessee of the Epsom Grand Stand hereby gives notice that no person guilty of any mal-practices or notoriously in bad character, will be admitted into the Grand Stand upon Derby and Oaks days; and that if any such person should gain admittance thereon he will be expelled, upon his presence being pointed out to the Stewards for the time being, or to HENRY DORLING, Clerk of the Course.
Epsom, May 1, 1846.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed that the Horses to run for the Derby, the Oaks, and every other Race at Epsom, will be saddled in front of the Grand Stand. The Town is now raised to the level of the principal Entrance to the Stand, which renders it much larger than ever. The whole Building has been thoroughly cleaned, and superbly decorated. The spacious Betting Rooms have been re-arranged, and are now fitted up with every comfort and elegance. Turf and Avenue are reserved exclusively for Lottes, whose respectable female connexions will, on every attendance, be admitted into the Grand Stand. The Box of the Building, with a spacious courtyard, enclosed, for use respectively. Tickets for the week, a Sovereign; or, for Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, 7s. 6d., which can be obtained at DORLING'S Printing-office, High-street, Epsom, or at the New Grand Entrance as the back of the Stand, only.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES GRAND REGATTA.—The REGATTA will take place on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, the 25th and 26th Days of JUNE, when the following Prizes will be contended for:—
The GRAND CHALLENGE CUP, for eight-oared Boats. Entrance, £5 5s.
The LADIES' CHALLENGE CUP, for eight-oared Boats. Entrance, £5 5s.
The STEWARDS' CHALLENGE CUP, for four-oared Boats. Entrance, £4 4s
The DISTRICT CHALLENGE CUP, for four-oared Boats. Entrance £3 3s.
The TOWN CHALLENGE CUP, for four-oared Boats. Entrance, £2 2s.
The SILVER WHERRIES (Presentation Prize), for Amateurs in pair-oared Boats. Entrance, £2 2s.
The DIAMOND SCULLS (Presentation Prize), for Amateur Scullers Entrance £1 1s
Silver Medals will be presented to the Winners of the Races.
Entrance must be duly made with the Secretary, at Mrs. Williams's, Catherine Wheel Inn, Henley, on or before the 20th of June next. JAMES NASH, Secretary
Subscriptions received by P. B COOPER, Esq., Treasurer; the Secretary; and Messrs. HICKMAN and KINCH, Post-office, Henley

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A PAMPHLET, explaining the [illegible] Prices [illegible] forwarded [illegible] Goldsmiths' Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

SILVER PLATE for the DINNER and TEA TABLE.—A Pamphlet is published containing Drawings and Lists of Prices of Silver Spoons and Forks, Tea and Coffee Services, and all the articles of silver required in family use. It may be had gratis, or will be sent postage free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank)

ANCIENT ROMAN BRASS COINS is., SILVER 2s. 6d.* each; with good Portraits of the ancient Roman Emperors, from Cæsar (Augustus Claudius, Constantine the Great, &c., included) Coins of Alexander the Great, Pyrrhus, Cæsar, Antony, &c., 6d. each. T. PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals 46, Strand, London, Fronies of Edward Confessor, Canute, &c., each; Silio of The Conqueror, 2s 6d.; Groats of the Henrys and Edwards, 2s. 6d. and 3s each Coins sent by Post.

SPAGNIOLETTI.—A CABINET PICTURE by this celebrated [illegible] and rare master, in fine state, TO BE SOLD for 60 guineas. To be seen from 12 till 4 at T. PETER WHELAN'S, dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London.

T. P. W. has lately purchased a few Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s.—one of which he will send by post, on the receipt of 1s., or stamps.—N.B. Coins sent by post.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to solicit an inspection of their PARASOLS for this Season, including the most Elegant Patterns yet offered to the Public in Silk-cases, Muslin, and Brocaded Silks. The SYLPHIDE is universally admired, is manufactured in every variety of style, without additional cost and can be procured of all respectable Mercers and Drapers. W. and J. SANGSTER, Patentees, 140, Regent-street; 94, Fleet-street; and 10, Royal Exchange.

OUTFITS for INDIA, by Ship and Overland, including every requisite, both for ladies and gentlemen, are SUPPLIED, at the lowest wholesale prices, by THRESHER and GLENNY, 152, Strand, where lists of outfits necessary for every journey may be had on application, with prices and particulars, may be had on application. N.B. The only house in London for Thresher's India gauze waistcoats and the new overland trunk.

LADIES' NIGHTCAPS, Riding Habit-Shirts, Peleriues, Collars, Sleeves, Laces, &c., in every conceivable style of novelty that Paris has produced for the season, at prices strictly moderate. The usual novelties in Children's and Infants' Caps, Bonnets, Pelisses (Pulks and Jackets), Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c. The House where the Juvenile Depôt is remarkable. Also, Baby Linen. MARTIN NUNN, 329, Regent-street.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the most ordinary knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—G. B SANDER, late Sander and Co., 319, Holborn, corner of Southampton-buildings has now on view a splendid choice of patterns in DINNER, DESSERT, and TEA SERVICES, TABLE GLASS &c. and of the very first quality, to which he respectfully solicits attention That portion of the Stock which he has purchased of the late firm is on sale on a large reduction for cash. It includes a great number of rich Cabin and Dessert Services, and to parties who may be likely to require those articles, will be found particularly worthy of notice

BURTON BROWERY COMPANY (late Widders and Co.) Burton-upon-Trent.—INDIA PALE ALE, and every variety of BURTON ALES. The oldest equalities of these much-admired Ales can now be forwarded direct from the Brewery to all parts of the Kingdom, or may be obtained on the following Agents above appointed to the Company:—R. Shearing, 16, Laurence Pountney-lane, London; T. Lund, 42, Mount-street Birmingham; T. Giles, Warwick-street, Leamington; A. Walsworight and Son, Oxford-street, Liverpool; G. Heart, Marsh-lane, Leeds.—April, 1846.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained. R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers Maker and Tailor, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to say that he can produce, without fear of contradiction, that no can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gracefulness of style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. Graves, 313, High Holborn

ASHLEY'S ANTI-DEPILATORY EXTRACT, warranted to STOP the HAIR from FALLING OFF; also to FREE the HEAD immediately from SCURF Sold by ASHLEY, Post-office, Brixton, in bottles, half-pints, [illegible] pints, 4s 6d quarts, 7s. 6d.; and may be had from all respectable Perfumers and Chemists throughout the Kingdom. Wholesale, by ASHLEY, Brixton; RARCLAY Farringdon street; KNAPP, 81, Paul's Churchyard; SANGER, 150, Oxford-street. PRICE, Strand, near Temple-bar; PIESSE and LUBIN, Perfumer, Bond-street; and at HOVENDEN'S, Crown-street, Finsbury. Numerous Testimonials with each bottle. A quarter to any part of the Kingdom on receipt of a post-office order.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR. An Eastern Botanical Discovery of surprising efficacy for rendering the skin soft, clear, and fair, producing a healthy freshness and transparency of complexion; and for cooling and allaying all Cutaneous Eruptions, Discolorations, and Roughness, and for the Prevention and Removal of Freckles, Pimples, &c., and under the title of "KALYDOR," containing odorous, astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repugnant action endangering health. The genuine article bears the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" on the Wrapper. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the Proprietors, and by Chemists and Perfumers.—All other "KALYDORS" are PRESUMPTUOUS IMITATIONS

EXTRAORDINARY SUMMER NOVELTIES.—SEWELL and CO. respectfully solicit the notice of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, to the ample stock of new Manufacture Rooms, in Fifth-street and Compting-house, which, with the former range of premises, gives them an unquestionable superiority in extent and convenience to any establishment of the kind in London or Paris SEWELL and CO. have appointed it also to announce that Mr. Evans one of the partners, has just returned from making very extensive purchases at the Parisian other and Continental Markets, at a time when little is to be obtained. The Brandes are now in the Summer variety of Light Materials for Morning, Evening, and Promenade Dresses, including the Rich Glacieres, Reliées de Chine, and Fancy Brandes that constituted the principal feature of dress at the Longchamps, and are now universally worn in France. A beautiful assortment of Ribbons, Gloves, and Valenciennes Lace, and all the Newest Productions in Haberdashery

SILKS.—GEORGE SMITH'S SYSTEM.—Royalty, Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, the experienced and the inexperienced, purchase with equal advantage at this House, which only Textile is devoted to exclusive Silk trade. He presents not but on no pretence importuned to part with his ready-money principles for the customer from these principles of extra profit re-fitted to pay the difficulty of other people. Patterns are exchanged as a right, not as a favour, and their prices marked in plain figures. Thirteen years in the Trade of Examining perfected the knowledge of these Fabrics which has led to a new system of business so effectually reduces in price. India, Chinese, French, and British shawls silks satins, velvets, crapes, fancy goods, laces, &c.—[illegible] Smith 22, Ludgate-hill, the six premises of Blundell and Ridge

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme darkness by power of cleansing, and the economy, and delicacy of this Article, see the Tooth-Brush purchased performs the highly-important office of scouring thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extreme manner, hairs never come loose. The Smyrna Sponges, and Metcalfe's Hair brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles which will not soften like common hair. Improved Shaving Brushes, that cleans hardensly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponges, at METCALFE'S only Establishment, 130 B, Fabric-street, one door from Hatton-garden.

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's, adopted by some houses

SARDINIAN PASTE for Restoring the Hair in cases of Baldness, and preventing its Falling Off or Turning Grey. The Proprietor of this invaluable Paste the Signor, by use of it, restored in eighteen his own hair, after trying many advertised remedies, shaving the head, &c., and having seen its same effects produced on several friends he has presented it to, it is now the public, with the greatest confidence of success. The expense of a trial is very trifling, as two or three of the small pots are sufficient to prove its merits. Sold, Wholesale and Retail, by the Agents, Mr. T. Lush, Chemist, &c., 67, Aldersgate-street, London; also by Mr. T. White, Chemist, &c., 34, Cornhill; H. [illegible] Chemist, &c., 180, Strand; Sibley, Surgeon, &c., 10, Cranwell-street Hadford, Surgeon, &c., Tithy-road, Bayswater; Gumley, Grimsby, Chemist, &c., 315, Tottenham-court-road; Patent Medicine Warehouse, 84, High Holborn; H. Hogg, Chemist, &c., 164, Borough; Goss, by a Fancy Repository, Lisle-street, and most respectable Perfumers and Chemists in Paris, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. each

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN

THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL SERVICE SOCIETY, 13, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON.

LIST OF OFFICERS.

Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., Secretary.
Chairman.
Col. Sir William Gossett, G.B., K.C.H., Major-Gen Edward Wynyard, C.B.
Major-Gen Arnold, K.H., R.E.
Major-Gen Shadwell, E.I.C.S.
Deputy Chairman.
Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.H. M.P., Lord of the Admiralty.
Major-Gen. Sir Cockburn, R.C.H.
Gen Sir Thos Brisbane, G.C.B., G.C.H.
Major-Gen. Sir Colquhoun, G.C.H., K.C.H.
Major-Gen Sir John Gardiner, K.C.H.
Major-Gen. Sir H. D. Ross, K.C.B.
Capt. Sir George Back, R.N.
Major-Gen. Taylor, C.B., E.I.C.S.

ACTUARY—JOHN FINLAISON, Esq., the Government Calculator

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of Persons in EVERY station of Life, and for every part of the World, upon particularly favourable terms.

Persons assured in this Office may change from one country to another, without forfeiting their Policies.

A Bonus, amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the Policies, was apportioned to the Assured at the First Septennial Meeting, held in the month of May, 1845.

JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Secretary

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES

The extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business, and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements of which it has originated. Gentlemen customers have now been devoted to them a spacious range of Show-Rooms entirely on a Private Scale, fitted with Gas, Lights, and Fires, and replete with comfort, and meaning, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Hall Room is likewise set apart, and E. MOSES and SON have appointed to attend it a lady of experience and address. The part of the "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, and its business will, consequently, be despatched with much greater facility. The department occupies 85 and 86, Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the most approved Fashion. The Naval and Military Outfitting Establishment is distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most [illegible] classes are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154 and [illegible] have recommendations, and is an important feature in the New Houses [illegible] be remembered that "Economy Economy, Economy" is the motto of the [illegible] establishment, as it was at the old, and he is also particularly desirous that the Proprietors to the working of the articles in plain figured prices, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be borne in mind, too, that any articles may be exchanged, or their [illegible] of the settings may be returned, without the least hesitation. For [illegible] of Measurement, and other essential information, see the new Book of Prices, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis and post-free of the Proprietors, E. [illegible] and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Outfitters, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public age not imposition, but having learned that the unprincipled—like falsehood "of being connected with them," or it is the same [illegible] a church, City, London

NOTICE.—The entrance to the bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock

PAPER HANGINGS.—A Stock of 50,000 Pieces always Ready, in Satins, Flocks, Gold, Damasks, Oaks, Granite Hand Marbles, &c. &c.; extraordinary prices Terms, Cash.—Paper Stainers supplied with long Elephant at Mill rates.—Cash.—LEGALLAIS, 23, Budge-row, City, corner of Size-lane.

THE EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY are selling Teas cheaper and better than ever, particularly those fine descriptions from the new ports in Line Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, City

PEOPLE mindful of economy should recollect that, during The present season of the market, 5lb. lbs. of excellent TEA may be had for either 10s., 21s., or 32s. 6lbs of good COFFEE for 5s., and fine aerie on equally [illegible] terms.—East India Tea Company's Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate.

BED FEATHERS.

Mixed	1s. 6d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose ..	2s. 8d. per lb
Grey Goose	1s. 8d.	Best Irish White Goose ..	2s. 8d.
Foreign	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto	2s. 6d.

101 41, and 103, 36, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by MR. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius, and Valse à Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Academy on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Academy on Wednesday and Saturday Terms may be had on application as above.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 388, Strand opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. A very large collection of prize at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufactures or [illegible] Jones' Silver Lever Watches, 388, Strand, opposite Somerset House.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea. By Special Appointment to HER MAJESTY and H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT all, Silver, and Golden Pheasants, Ornamental Waterfowl, and Rare Poultry, for the domestic Poultry, including Spanish, Poland, Malay, Dorking, and Surrey Fowl, Pea-Fowl, &c. and at Messrs. BAKER'S, Halfmoon-passage, Gracechurch-street. Just arrived some pure Java Fowl

NICOLL'S PALETOT of LLAMA CLOTH, registered 6 and 7 Vic., cap. 65 Patronised by the Prince Consort, Prince George of Cambridge, &c.—This Overcoat is recommended itself to the public generally by its peculiar elasticity and lightness, moderate price, and able defence against the almost constant humidity of the climate of Great Britain.—To be had in London only of the Patentees, 114, Regent-street.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very low prices, for cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warerooms, 56, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England, Scotland, and Wales carriage free.

John Capper and Son's General Linendrapery Business, established for nearly Seventy years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

CHUBB'S LOCKS. Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and [illegible] immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, [illegible] Cash Boxes, strong Japan Deed Boxes, and Dog Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PARKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN DEPOT, 376, Euston-road, and 3, Seymour-terrace, Kingsland-road, Hackney, Iron Bedsteads, Cradles, Iron-frame Screens, furnishing Ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, [illegible] plated plate and table cutlery, japanned trays, and an extensive general iron and wire work. For verandas, lawns, &c.; flower stands Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices Illustrated Lists free on application.—Adjoining the Royal Botanic Society, 376, Euston-road.

GILDING.—Wonder and Admiration carried to the utmost Limit.—One 8s. 6d Bottle of PUTSON'S PARISIAN GOLD DETERGENT will restore the original lustre and beauty of more old gilt frames, however fly-spotted or blackened, that they will look re-gilding No trouble or risk in the application, and it is equally useful on [illegible] &c. sole proprietors, 34, Portsoville Hill, London, opposite Fenton-street; and of or through bookstores in general. A liberal allowance to the trade.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel-Keepers, and Large Consumers, supplied with Teas at the Wholesale Price, for Cash.

Black.....	2s. 6d. .. 3s. 6d. ..	3s. 6d. .. 4s. 0d. ..	4s. 6d. .. 5s. 8d.
Green.....	3s. 6d. .. 3s. 8d. ..	4s. 0d. .. 4s. 6d. ..	5s. 0d. .. 6s. 0d.
Coffee.....	9d. .. 10d. ..	1s. 0d. .. 1s. 2d. ..	1s. 4d. .. 1s. 8d.

MANSELL and Co., 8, Bucklersbury, Cheapside.

Country orders for 40lbs. of Tea and upwards delivered free of carriage to any part of the kingdom.

FURTHER REDUCTION IN TEAS AT No. 2, SKINNER STREET, CITY (two doors from Farringdon-street) The great patronage which the Proprietors have received has enabled them to carry out their system, viz. small profits and quick returns, consequently, they now offer the public very good Sou. [illegible] to be the Finest Congou Imported, at, per lb. Fine Congou, new crop .. .. 2s. 10d. to 3s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 3s. 2d. to 3s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 3s. 10d. to 4s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 4s. 2d. to 4s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 4s. 6d. to 4s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 4s. 10d. to 5s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 5s. 6d. to 5s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 5s. 10d. to 6s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 6s. 2d. to 6s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 6s. 6d. to 6s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 6s. 10d. to 7s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 7s. 2d. to 7s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 7s. 6d. to 7s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 7s. 10d. to 8s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 8s. 2d. to 8s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 8s. 6d. to 8s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 8s. 10d. to 9s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 9s. 2d. to 9s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 9s. 6d. to 9s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 9s. 10d. to 10s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 10s. 2d. to 10s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 10s. 6d. to 10s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 10s. 10d. to 11s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 11s. 2d. to 11s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 11s. 6d. to 11s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 11s. 10d. to 12s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 12s. 2d. to 12s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 12s. 6d. to 12s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 12s. 10d. to 13s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 13s. 2d. to 13s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 13s. 6d. to 13s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 13s. 10d. to 14s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 14s. 2d. to 14s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 14s. 6d. to 14s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 14s. 10d. to 15s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 15s. 2d. to 15s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 15s. 6d. to 15s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 15s. 10d. to 16s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 16s. 2d. to 16s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 16s. 6d. to 16s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 16s. 10d. to 17s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 17s. 2d. to 17s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 17s. 6d. to 17s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 17s. 10d. to 18s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 18s. 2d. to 18s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 18s. 6d. to 18s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 18s. 10d. to 19s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 19s. 2d. to 19s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 19s. 6d. to 19s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 19s. 10d. to 20s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 20s. 2d. to 20s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 20s. 6d. to 20s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 20s. 10d. to 21s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 21s. 2d. to 21s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 21s. 6d. to 21s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 21s. 10d. to 22s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 22s. 2d. to 22s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 22s. 6d. to 22s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 22s. 10d. to 23s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 23s. 2d. to 23s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 23s. 6d. to 23s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 23s. 10d. to 24s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 24s. 2d. to 24s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 24s. 6d. to 24s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 24s. 10d. to 25s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 25s. 2d. to 25s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 25s. 6d. to 25s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 25s. 10d. to 26s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 26s. 2d. to 26s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 26s. 6d. to 26s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 26s. 10d. to 27s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 27s. 2d. to 27s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 27s. 6d. to 27s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 27s. 10d. to 28s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 28s. 2d. to 28s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 28s. 6d. to 28s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 28s. 10d. to 29s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 29s. 2d. to 29s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 29s. 6d. to 29s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 29s. 10d. to 30s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 30s. 2d. to 30s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 30s. 6d. to 30s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 30s. 10d. to 31s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 31s. 2d. to 31s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 31s. 6d. to 31s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 31s. 10d. to 32s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 32s. 2d. to 32s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 32s. 6d. to 32s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 32s. 10d. to 33s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 33s. 2d. to 33s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 33s. 6d. to 33s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 33s. 10d. to 34s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 34s. 2d. to 34s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 34s. 6d. to 34s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 34s. 10d. to 35s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 35s. 2d. to 35s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 35s. 6d. to 35s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 35s. 10d. to 36s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 36s. 2d. to 36s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 36s. 6d. to 36s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 36s. 10d. to 37s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 37s. 2d. to 37s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 37s. 6d. to 37s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 37s. 10d. to 38s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 38s. 2d. to 38s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 38s. 6d. to 38s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 38s. 10d. to 39s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 39s. 2d. to 39s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 39s. 6d. to 39s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 39s. 10d. to 40s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 40s. 2d. to 40s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 40s. 6d. to 40s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 40s. 10d. to 41s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 41s. 2d. to 41s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 41s. 6d. to 41s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 41s. 10d. to 42s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 42s. 2d. to 42s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 42s. 6d. to 42s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 42s. 10d. to 43s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 43s. 2d. to 43s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 43s. 6d. to 43s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 43s. 10d. to 44s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 44s. 2d. to 44s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 44s. 6d. to 44s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 44s. 10d. to 45s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 45s. 2d. to 45s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 45s. 6d. to 45s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 45s. 10d. to 46s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 46s. 2d. to 46s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 46s. 6d. to 46s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 46s. 10d. to 47s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 47s. 2d. to 47s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 47s. 6d. to 47s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 47s. 10d. to 48s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 48s. 2d. to 48s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 48s. 6d. to 48s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 48s. 10d. to 49s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 49s. 2d. to 49s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 49s. 6d. to 49s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 49s. 10d. to 50s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 50s. 2d. to 50s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 50s. 6d. to 50s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 50s. 10d. to 51s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 51s. 2d. to 51s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 51s. 6d. to 51s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 51s. 10d. to 52s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 52s. 2d. to 52s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 52s. 6d. to 52s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 52s. 10d. to 53s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 53s. 2d. to 53s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 53s. 6d. to 53s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 53s. 10d. to 54s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 54s. 2d. to 54s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 54s. 6d. to 54s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 54s. 10d. to 55s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 55s. 2d. to 55s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 55s. 6d. to 55s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 55s. 10d. to 56s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 56s. 2d. to 56s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 56s. 6d. to 56s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 56s. 10d. to 57s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 57s. 2d. to 57s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 57s. 6d. to 57s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 57s. 10d. to 58s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 58s. 2d. to 58s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 58s. 6d. to 58s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 58s. 10d. to 59s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 59s. 2d. to 59s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 59s. 6d. to 59s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 59s. 10d. to 60s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 60s. 2d. to 60s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 60s. 6d. to 60s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 60s. 10d. to 61s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 61s. 2d. to 61s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 61s. 6d. to 61s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 61s. 10d. to 62s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 62s. 2d. to 62s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 62s. 6d. to 62s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 62s. 10d. to 63s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 63s. 2d. to 63s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 63s. 6d. to 63s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 63s. 10d. to 64s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 64s. 2d. to 64s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 64s. 6d. to 64s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 64s. 10d. to 65s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 65s. 2d. to 65s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 65s. 6d. to 65s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 65s. 10d. to 66s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 66s. 2d. to 66s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 66s. 6d. to 66s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 66s. 10d. to 67s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 67s. 2d. to 67s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 67s. 6d. to 67s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 67s. 10d. to 68s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 68s. 2d. to 68s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 68s. 6d. to 68s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 68s. 10d. to 69s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 69s. 2d. to 69s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 69s. 6d. to 69s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 69s. 10d. to 70s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 70s. 2d. to 70s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 70s. 6d. to 70s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 70s. 10d. to 71s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 71s. 2d. to 71s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 71s. 6d. to 71s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 71s. 10d. to 72s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 72s. 2d. to 72s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 72s. 6d. to 72s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 72s. 10d. to 73s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 73s. 2d. to 73s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 73s. 6d. to 73s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 73s. 10d. to 74s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 74s. 2d. to 74s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 74s. 6d. to 74s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 74s. 10d. to 75s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 75s. 2d. to 75s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 75s. 6d. to 75s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 75s. 10d. to 76s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 76s. 2d. to 76s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 76s. 6d. to 76s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 76s. 10d. to 77s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 77s. 2d. to 77s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 77s. 6d. to 77s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 77s. 10d. to 78s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 78s. 2d. to 78s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 78s. 6d. to 78s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 78s. 10d. to 79s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 79s. 2d. to 79s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 79s. 6d. to 79s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 79s. 10d. to 80s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 80s. 2d. to 80s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 80s. 6d. to 80s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 80s. 10d. to 81s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 81s. 2d. to 81s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 81s. 6d. to 81s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 81s. 10d. to 82s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 82s. 2d. to 82s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 82s. 6d. to 82s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 82s. 10d. to 83s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 83s. 2d. to 83s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 83s. 6d. to 83s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 83s. 10d. to 84s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 84s. 2d. to 84s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 84s. 6d. to 84s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 84s. 10d. to 85s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 85s. 2d. to 85s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 85s. 6d. to 85s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 85s. 10d. to 86s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 86s. 2d. to 86s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 86s. 6d. to 86s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 86s. 10d. to 87s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 87s. 2d. to 87s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 87s. 6d. to 87s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 87s. 10d. to 88s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 88s. 2d. to 88s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 88s. 6d. to 88s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 88s. 10d. to 89s. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 89s. 2d. to 89s. 4d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 89s. 6d. to 89s. 8d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 89s. 10d. to 90s. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 90s. 2d. to 90s. 4d. Finest Congou, ditto .. .. 90s. 6d. to 90s. 8d. Finest Congou, new crop .. .. 90s. 10d. to 91s.

NAPLES AND VESUVIUS, AT THE SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

weather leads the general audience to seek other recreations. The Surrey Zoological Gardens—a serious rival to the theatres on the other side of the river—have opened; and Vauxhall is advertised to commence its season on the 1st of June.

At DRURY-LANE the Viennese dancers have been re-engaged, but their performance has not attracted as we expected it would do. Nothing can exceed the enthusiasm of applause on the part of the audience, but still the little artistes do not "draw." Miss Romer has been indisposed, as also have been Madame Thillon, Miss Poole, and Miss Rainforth, their voices most probably suffering from relaxation induced by the present weather. The ballet of "Paquita," in which Carlotta Grisi will appear, is already in rehearsal. Madame Sall does not progress in public favour. She is an admirable dancer, but her face lacks pleasing expression; at times her expression is actually cross, even in scenes intended to be joyous and festive.

The HAYMARKET has been falling back upon stock comedies and farces, with Mr. Planché's "Birds" each evening as a finish. A new comic drama is announced for production this evening; but we believe that Mr. Jerrold's comedy will be the first important piece brought out. It is reported in the coulisses that Madame Anna Thillon is engaged at this theatre for vaudevilles, on the termination of her appearances at Drury-lane, at a salary of £40 per night.

At the ADELPHI, on Monday evening, a new farce was produced, called, "Who did it?" The action was entirely supported by Mr. Wright and Miss Woolgar; but it was not so successful as it really deserved to be—a result we may attribute chiefly to the gentleman's love of his own speeches instead of those of the author. In dramas of this kind, technically called "touch and go" pieces, the success is, unless the actors are perfect to the letter, always jeopardized. The applause at the conclusion, we must add, was perfectly unqualified, and the piece has been performed every evening since. The drama, adopted from Mr. Rodwell's "Memoirs of an Umbrella," is announced for production on Monday.

The new five-act play, "The King of the Commons," will be produced at the PRINCESS' Theatre early next week. It is said that Mr. Macready has a very fine part in it. On Thursday evening, a new and original comedietta was produced, called "The Colonel's Bella," and with entire success. The plot is somewhat slight; turning on the adventures of three officers, personated by Messrs. James Vining, Leigh Murray, and Robert Roxby, who, setting their faces against matrimony, are at last lured into the fatal (or blessed) noose. The principal female character was nicely played by Miss Emma Stanley, who was warmly encored in a very catching song, composed by Mr. Edward Loder. The first act wants a little compression; and if this is effected, the piece will have a very fair run. After this was brought out a new ballet called "Les Conscrits du Village" one of those pleasant affairs, partaking more of the divertissement, which always form an agreeable finish to the entertainments at this theatre. The story may be guessed from the title; and so we may make sure of a lover torn away from his mistress, and an extra gallant recruiting officer who waits a little behind. The principal characters were capitally played, or rather danced, by Mr. Gilbert and Miss Rallin: the lady was loudly applauded in a difficult solo à cinq temps. Mr. and Miss Marshall were also encored in a striking "Pas Villageois;" and Mr. Fiexmore's extraordinary performance, as Nando (a Simpkin), is beyond all praise. He is, without exception, the first comic pantomimist now upon the stage. A word for the music, by Mr. Corri, which is excellently and appropriately arranged.

At the LYCEUM, "Robin Hood" is drawing very fair half prices, and increases in public favour; but some popular first piece is sadly wanted, as the appearance of the house, at first price, testifies. The "Cricket on the Hearth" was played on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights, as the bills stated, "by Desire"!

Mademoiselle Rose Chéri is rapidly gaining ground in the favour of the audience at the French plays, and the attendance, on the nights of her performing, has been fashionable and numerous. It is to be regretted that the close occupation of our own performers will not allow them to study the consummate knowledge of stage business, and the manner of producing an effect, as well as the uniformity of excellence, which distinguishes the troupe at this theatre. We do not say this, with any wish to depreciate our native actors; but there are very few who might not take some useful hints in bye-play and deportment, from the members of Mr. Mitchell's company. The ars celare artem is carried to the highest degree of excellence amongst them.

The corps de ballet has certainly been doing great things for the OLYMPIC—much more than the lessee's notions of "legitimacy." The short season is, however, approaching its termination; but we believe that there are two or three speculators ready to enter into a fresh campaign. It is to be hoped that whoever takes the theatre will endeavour to raise the character of the performances, and collect together, if possible, a respectable and efficient company. From the present performers at this theatre many useful ones could be selected.

NEW PICTURE AT THE SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

On Monday, this very popular resort was opened for the season, and was thronged throughout the day and evening with visitors.

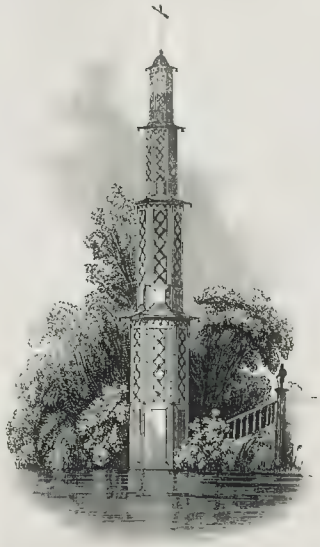
The novel attraction is a gigantic picture of Naples, with a distant view of Vesuvius, painted by Mr. Danson, who is unrivalled in this branch of art. It is on a much larger scale than the picture of the same subject painted for the Gardens several years since by Mr. Danson: now, as then, advantage has been taken of the lake, which forms a "real water" Bay of Naples; and the scenic display on the banks is marvellously illusive. The artificial mountain, with the surrounding scenery, the City of Naples, and various points to be seen from the Gulf, are faithfully painted as to locality; while, in execution, the picture blends so well with the surrounding realities of sky, water, trees, and shrubs, that, at the distance of three hundred yards, it is difficult to point out where art ends and nature begins. It is the largest picture ever painted; and, unquestionably, an advance on all Mr. Danson's previous productions.

Since the close of last season, many alterations have been made in the laying out of the grounds, and these are in good taste. Some of the faded buildings have been replaced by new and appropriate erections. A bridge of Gothic design has been thrown across a branch of the lake, giving access to a part of the grounds hitherto scarcely known to the public: upon the parapet of the bridge are placed some statues of the English Kings. Near the lake, too, has been constructed a Pagoda: and there is a fountain of somewhat unusual pretensions. The menagerie has, likewise, been increased very considerably.

On Monday, the band, under the direction of Mr. Godfrey, played some well-chosen selections from the compositions of Beethoven, Jullien, Benedict, Barrett, Mendelssohn, Wallace, Rossini, and Auber, and contributed to the pleasure of the promenade, keeping the company in good humour till dusk, when all hastened to get the best places to see as advantageously as possible the great feature of the evening—the Eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

The mimic eruption commenced with clouds of smoke and sheets of lurid flame issuing from the crater of the mount; the rumbling of subterranean thunder was heard, and then succeeded jets of fire and all the horrors of an eruption, which took a considerable time, showing the various and destructive effects of showers of burning matter and streams of lava: these were made to overwhelm the towns of Herculaneum and Pompeii (as in the year 79) even unto the margin of the water. This pyrotechnic display was by Mr. Southby, whose skill in such matters is well known.

At night, too, the Gothic Bridge was also illuminated with good effect; and M. Farinelli representing Phœbus in his chariot, descended in a display of fireworks from the new Pagoda, to the great delight of the spectators, who numbered between 3000 and 4000. Indeed, the whole of the amusements are on a scale which is highly creditable to the taste and enterprise of Mr. Tyler, the proprietor of the Gardens: and the weather will, doubtless, insure him a liberal return for his large outlay in providing so many novelties.



CHINESE PAGODA.

NEW FOUNTAIN.

GOTHIC BRIDGE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 212.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1846. [Sixpence.

CHARITY AND CHANCERY.

AMONG the political incidents of the week, is the rejection of the Lord Chancellor's Charitable Bequests Bill by a majority of one in the House of Peers. Lord Lyndhurst is not fortunate in his attempts at legislation; he furnishes another proof that the ablest administrators of the law do not always possess the qualities necessary to the Statesman; the wide and enlarged views, the calculation of every part of a measure so that a good object may not be defeated by the nature of the machinery employed to effect it, are not always, indeed rarely, found among men who stand at the very head of the legal profession. Even where the disposition to make improvements exists, and they have much more frequently been forced upon the profession from without, than originated from within its pale, it has not been so successful as might be wished. Lord Lyndhurst is no exception to the rule; he was wont in former days to give a sessional exposition of the short comings and misdoings of the Whig Ministry, and to give a catalogue of its Legislative failures and delays, enriched with all the illustrations he could draw from his apparently inexhaustible powers of memory and combination; these displays were as rich in their way as his reading of the bill of fare of the Visiting Dinner of the Mercers' Company at Greenwich, which he gave as an instance, and, probably, not the worst of many like it, of the abuses he seeks to correct. But it is one thing to point out errors, to expose failures, to ridicule the delays and embarrassments of a Government, held in check and thwarted by a hundred different hostile influences, and quite another matter when placed in the same responsible position, to avoid the errors and defects so keenly detected and exposed when others commit them. We do not know any more striking instances of this than could be drawn from the history of those measures the Lord Chancellor has introduced himself. The Charitable Bequests Act is another added to the number.

No one denies that the abuse of funds left for charitable and pious purposes is a great evil. But the absolute embezzlement or misappropriation of such funds are perhaps less frequently met with than the difficulties arising from the inevitable changes caused by the lapse of time and the vicissitudes of social life. These are the powers that make a mockery of that pride, or better motives than pride, which seek to establish forms and institutions that shall survive men and give their names to perpetuity. No man can bind all future generations, not even to works of religion and charity—at least not to one particular form of them. How many "charitable bequests," made before the Reformation, did that great change utterly sweep away, though they were meant to be "perpetual?" It is a marvel that so many survive. Religious bequests are still more exposed to extinction from such changes; how many a "pious" endowment, made for prayers "for the soul" of the founder, has disappeared, the prayers and masses heard no more! Mankind will not be bound by wills and bequests, when the spirit of the age becomes opposed to them. The "piety" of one century ceases to be honoured or observed in another, and such bequests perish by a natural extinction, unless remodelled and applied in a manner kindred in spirit but different in form from the purpose of the bequeather. Other causes are constantly at work to make the revision and control of charitable funds a matter of imperative necessity. Property changes, rises in value or sinks, trustees die off or remove, and every alteration must have a legal sanction, or the whole thing falls, as in many cases it has fallen, into inextricable confusion. The regulation of all these affairs is given to the great Court of Equity of the kingdom: the Court of Chancery is the undying guardian of the endowments of Charity. The theory is good, but, as exhibited in practice, cannot be praised. The Court of Chancery is one of those awful powers whose greatness cannot handle small matters without crushing them; in dissipating and diminishing enormous masses of wealth, its machinery is unrivalled; for ruining properties, and wrecking hearts, hopes, and fortunes, there is nothing like it in the world. Those to whom time and expense are of no importance may invoke its aid without much injury; but, of all the things from which men of moderate properties should pray to be delivered, is a suit in Chancery. It must be encountered sometimes, like other great evils of life, that come in the shape of suffering or disaster, shipwreck, conflagration, and disease; but to invoke it, is little less than certain ruin. Nothing is more fatal than its embrace of "protection"—particularly to Charities: the machinery of the Court is so heavy and intricate, that, before it can be put in motion on behalf of a moderate endowment, the whole source of income, the entire capital in question, is absorbed in oiling the wheels: without that process, they never move at all.

It is not so much litigation as to the objects and purposes of Charitable Bequests, that exhibits the blighting effects of the Court of Chancery upon them—though cases like that of Lady Hewley's Charity stand out in disastrous prominence; it is the necessary and unavoidable superintendence that time and change make necessary for security. The former calamity Charities may escape—the last they cannot. And it is precisely from the frequent necessity of applications to the Court that the enormity of the evil is perceived. The most ordinary motion in that mysterious region (from which a whole band of Clerks, who did nothing, have been bought out with ten thousand a year each, for doing the same all the rest of their lives, with a reversion of the same duties, and the same payment, to their heirs) is attended with extraordinary expense. If the proceedings are not contested, a small endowment will be absorbed. How was this evil to be avoided?

The Lord Chancellor's bill was an attempt to provide a remedy. But, in avoiding one evil, it was generally considered he created another. There was a strange combination of parties against the bill. Large endowments and influential Corporations took offence and kicked at the idea of supervision, as if their management could not be called in question. Smaller Charities disliked being taxed at a per centage for the support of a Commission; if they did not require the help of the Board, why should they pay for those who did? The powers, too, that were given to the Commissioners, excited much clamour; and all these objections being united, have proved too powerful for the Chancellor and his bill; it is defeated after having been two years or more in suspense. But the great question itself still remains undisposed of, and must recur again as forcibly as ever.

It is useless to consider what the Chancellor's measure might have been made; it is questionable, after the decision, whether it will be renewed. Parliament has not been favourably impressed by Lord Lyndhurst's Law Reforms. The enormous compensation given by his bill that abolished the Six Clerks' office is so astounding to all ordinary notions of value and purchase, that the Legislature, scared at its own act in that case, fears carelessness, if nothing worse, as likely to be mixed up with reform from that quarter. The creation of his new offices might turn out as astonishing a feat as his abolition of old ones. And to this misgiving, some influence in the failure of the measure may be attributed. But, could not something be done without creating a new tribunal? Could not cases in which Charity Property is concerned be made exceptions to the usual scale of fees? The chief objection to the Court of Chancery is its enormous expense; otherwise, its decisions—when they are made—are viewed with confidence, as impartial.

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB.—THE FIRST MATCH FOR THE SEASON, ON WEDNESDAY LAST—"THE FINISH OFF GREENWICH."—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Why not adopt in the Law Courts a principle recognised by the State? The Exchequer remits the duties payable on the building materials used in the erection of churches: could not the Court of Chancery emulate this forbearance, and do as much for almsgiving as the Custom-house does for religion? "'Twere good it did so much for Charity." It could well spare the amount from its revenues, and the remitting of what is "in the bond" might cover a multitude of defects—we will not call them sins—in other directions. The devouring of widows' houses, now charged against the Court, and not unjustly, would then cease, and the mere forbearance to exact a right might obviate the necessity of creating a new power, from whose operation all the great Charities of the kingdom would be exempted, but whose taxation few of the small ones could escape, thus creating inequalities both ways.

THE ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH.

"Fly! Fly!
You and your crafts."—Coriolanus.

What a goodly thing is a goodly theme! Thus we soliloquised in the spirit, as, setting our paper before us, we essayed to sketch the recollections of a most pleasant occasion: some hours of Wednesday last spent upon the waters of Old Thames—the haven of the world.

The sailing season on the metropolitan river is in keeping with the habits of our citizens, compared with those which prevail on the time-tables of St. James's. Late hours just now seem to constitute a social barometer. Your artisan rises as your aristocrat goes to bed. Our natives dine at noon—professional people, in the evening—the beau monde, at night. Upon this principle, probably, it is that the Londonder begins to affect aquatics in spring—the Westminster, in Autumn. From this we might draw certain deductions, but we won't: comparisons are "odorous."

The Royal Thames Yacht Club is three months in advance of the Royal Yacht Squadron, in the matter of its matches. The first of the Metropolitan Club's water-parties was fixed, this year, for the 25th instant May, and it was characteristically celebrated! The forenoon of Wednesday last heavily with clouds brought on the more mature day—but cared sailors ever for foul weather?

At ten A.M. a steamer, which according to custom was provided to accompany the Regatta, took a considerable complement of pleasure passengers aboard at London-bridge; and having, with some difficulty, accomplished the voyage through "the Pool," received reinforcements at Blackwall, and set steam forthwith for its destination the picturesque bay of Erith. This, it must be confessed, was not performed quite in ship-shape style, for she did not display the colours of the Club, as became her, inasmuch as they were not to be come at—in consequence, probably, as it was suggested, of the laundress not having sent them home. The wind, which was at south-west, and blowing fresh, drove the showers which were in operation in that quarter athwart the course we were steering: and sad it was to see the pitcous parasols called on to perform a double duty. Thus, some getting wet on deck, and some getting wet below, we reached the spot where the wager fleet was moored. This consisted of the following yachts, all the property of members of the Club:—

	Vessels.	Tons.	Owners.
1.	Prince Dunnot	36	Mr. G. Harvey.
2.	Vivex	25	Messrs. Pedrington.
3.	Vanguard	25	Lord A. Paget.
4.	Ino	26	Mr. H. Gibers.
5.	Fling de Marie	25	Mr. Twisden Hodges.
6.	Jilt	18	Mr. R. J. Meade.
7.	Secret	20	Mr. J. W. Smith.

SECOND CLASS.

1.	Enchantress	10	Mr. R. Atkinson.
2.	Ranger	12	Mr E. W. Roberts.

Whatever it might have been for spring fashions and pink parasols, it was a day eminently favourable for yacht-racking. How are we to test the merits of sailing vessels in a stark calm; and think of the morals of the crews? There is a proverb about swearing "like a dragoon;" that is because the style of execration common to horsemen, when drifting a march without steerage way on, was unknown when it was invented. At Erith we shipped our Commodore, Lord Alfred Paget, and a respectable piece of bunting, in lieu of the Star Company's burgee; and with the Pearl, the Secret, and other craft, and their "fair hands," awaited the commencement of operations

At a quarter to one the signa. gun "boomed" away, and it was up canvass with toe clippers This evolution never performed, it might have been done more steadily; but the nerves, my friends; remember the glory and the gain at stake. Never mind why or wherefore, but the Secret had the best of it start; either she gathered way the soonest, or was the best, or was best as things served. With wings outstretched, the wind on the beam, and the tide astern, away they went, at a spanking but the Secret some three or four cables lengths ahead—and "up gaff-topsails" was quickly followed by the whole squadron. The rate of sailing past Gravesend, and down to the buoy at Chapman's Head the point of return was undoubtedly excellent. The five-and-twenty tun cutters of the Royal Thames Club are probably the best vessels of their class that swim. We have tried them in all sorts of weather: up to a hurricane, and can speak from experience. The first round the buoy was the Secret she had never been headed—followed in 45 seconds by the Vivex, that from being last off Greenhithe, had contrived to creep close up with the "crack." We call the Secret by this racing term, because she was backed very freely to win before leaving her moorings. The rest of the first-class division were soon round the Jilt last; and now comes the tug of skill and seamanship, the beating up for home. Soon after the buoy was rounded, and the boats were beating over the tide—for there was still a considerable ebb to run down with the wind broad on—when, and the weather to get thick. In this state of the atmosphere they had gained Gravesend Reach, when snapped short the bowsprit of the Belvidere, and ended the hopes and fears of her rabble owner, who certainly entered into the spirit of his craft's career with strong interest. It was now all "steer small and cunning." All the art of river navigation was resorted to that counter currents, shore, slacks, and the like might be taken advantage of, as they were, with alternate success, till half past one, half-past six when the Prince Donna passed the flag-boat off Greenwich Hospital first, last but not least. The winner of the prize for the second heat by three minutes the Secret, incurred great sacrifices for the maintenance of our Colonies. Were we to retain expensive settlements for the benefit of every one save ourselves? He (Lord Ashburton) much doubted if the manufacturers would redeem the promise that had been made in their name. He believed their magnanimity to be of the kind that would have free trade for every commodity but that which they themselves applied.

"A gust that all descriptive power transcends

After a few words from Earl Dalhousie, the Duke of Richmond, and the Earl of Hardwicke, the bill was read a first time

Lord STANLEY suggested that the two measures should be proceeded with simultaneously, and that the second reading of the bill then before the House should be fixed pro formâ for the 28th of May, and be further postponed, should the discussion on the Corn Bill not have been brought to a termination by that day.

This arrangement was assented to.

At seven o'clock the House adjourned till Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY.

THE CUSTOMS DUTIES BILL.—This Bill was read a third time and passed, with very little observation, and without opposition.

THE QUARANTINE LAWS.—Dr BOWRING moved for an humble address to her Majesty that she would be graciously pleased to direct such correspondence, or papers, on the subject of the Quarantine Laws, as has taken place with Foreign Governments since the last returns to Parliament, to be laid on the table of the House.—After a short discussion, the motion was agreed to

THE BRIDPORT ELECTION.—Mr. BANKES moved that William Rockett have leave to state his case at the bar with reference to the Bridport election.—Mr. CHRISTIE moved, as an amendment, that the petition of Mr Rockett should be referred to a select committee, with a view to an impartial inquiry into the whole of the circumstances connected with the recent election for Bridport. After some discussion, Mr. Bankes withdrew his motion.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL then moved an amendment to Mr Christie's motion, upon which a division took place. The numbers were equal, and the Speaker gave the casting vote in favour of the Government.—The Speaker then put the question that the Committee be agreed to, but, upon this question, an adjournment till Thursday was carried.

The house sat till twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE LACE FACTORIES BILL. The House met to-day at twelve o'clock, and shortly afterwards, Mr. THOMAS DUNCOMBE moved the second reading of his Lace Factories Bill, the proposed object of which was to limit the duration of the hours of labour of children and adults in the lace manufactures, and to place it under the factory inspectorship. He urged that he had the unanimous assent of the operatives and of four-fifths of the employers to his measure, the necessity for which was evident from the numerous instances of decrepitude, disease, and premature death resulting from the excessive length of the hours of labour SIR J. GRAHAM said that the information which he had received led him to conclude that the majority of the master manufacturers were opposed to the measure. As for the working classes, it was not surprising nor unnatural that they should wish to have their hours of labour restricted by legislative interference, their belief being that it would lead to an improvement in their physical condition. But any benefit that might arise from shorter hours would be far more than counterbalanced by diminished wages, and their wishes would result. He moved an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—

Upon a division, the numbers were—

For the second reading	.. ..	68
Against it	.. ..	151
Majority against the bill	.. .. ..	—85

The bill was, consequently, lost.

THE WHITSUNTIDE RECESS. In reply to a question from Mr. R. YORKE, Sir R. PEEL said he proposed to move the adjournment of the House, for the Whitsuntide holidays, from Friday, the 29th inst., to the Thursday following, unless hon. members should be desirous that the House should sit on the Wednesday after Whit Sunday. He believed that there was at present no business fixed for that day

LORD HARDINGE AND LORD GOUGH. Viscount Hardinge's Annuity Bill and Viscount Hardinge's Annuity (No. 2) Bill were each read a third time and passed. Lord Gough's Annuity Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Roman Catholic Relief Bill, and several other bills, were postponed.

The House adjourned at five o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. THURSDAY.

MR. W. SMITH O'BRIEN,—Mr. SHAW gave notice, that when the Committee on Group 11 had closed its labours, and given in its final report, he should move that Mr Smith O'Brien be discharged from custody. (Hear, hear.)

THE HINGLEY POOR HOUSE.—Mr. FERRAND put some questions relative to the Hingley Workhouse, stating that seventy persons were confined there, although the building was only intended to accommodate twelve individuals; and asking whether the Government had the power to compel the Poor-law Commissioners to visit the establishment, and afford them some relief.—Sir R. PEEL said the Government had ordered an inquiry to be made, and had given directions that the requisite relief should be afforded. The right hon. Baronet then made a general defence of the Poor-law Commissioners.

Lord MARCUS CLARE rose to bring forward a motion respecting the Real Property Commissioners, when a motion was made to count the House; and, there not being forty members present, an adjournment necessarily took place.

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.

There have been some interesting decisions in the Railway Groups during the week. One of the most important struggles of the session—that between the North Kent and South-Eastern Companies—has been concluded in Group XIV. While the North Kent is defeated, the South-Eastern does not pass in its integrity. The matter stands as follows:—The Committee have come to the decision that the North Kent proposal to [illegible] the Greenwich and Deptford line, and to [illegible] the Dartford line, Maidstone to [illegible] South Eastern Company in toto. And the Committee will amend the South-Eastern bill, so as to enable the latter to carry the line from London to Greenwich, and no further, omitting the branches or lines from Lewisham to Dartford, known as the South and the Angerstein loops

The Committee have pronounced on the preamble of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, in Group XVI. It was proved; the Committee refusing the South-Eastern permission to make the section to Dorking, and enforcing the concession in its integrity of the entire line by the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate

The Committee in Group XX. have put what is tantamount to an extinguisher on the hopes of the Windsor, Slough, and Staines Atmospheric, by asserting that the merits of the line are not sufficient to warrant any further proceedings. This decision is also probably grounded on the interference of the line with Crown property.

An entire group of northern mineral lines has been annihilated by the Committee in Group XXXVIII.

The difficulty arising from the multiplicity of committees sitting at the same time, was pointedly alluded to on Wednesday, by Mr. Protheroe, the Chairman of Group XIV, after waiting for more than half an hour, till Mr. Cockburn could be spared from another committee; and when the learned gentleman did arrive he was evidently quite exhausted. The number now must have reached its maximum, and any attempt to dispose of the business by bringing a greater amount of committee force to bear on it must defeat its object, as not only the same counsel are engaged, but the principal engineering witnesses are generally the same.

The preamble of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Midland Junction, has been passed in Group XLV.

A decision which excited considerable interest was given in Group XXVII., on Thursday. The Committee decided that the South Midland Railway was not proved, and that the preamble of the Leicester and Bedford Railway was proved.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE POISONING OF FOUR CHILDREN, NEAR NORWICH.

The discovery of the poisoning of four children at Happisburgh, near Norwich, has created some sensation in that part of the country. Mr. Pilgrim, one of the Norfolk Coroners, held an adjourned inquest on the bodies on Tuesday, at the Hare's-borough Hill House. The following are the particulars of the case:—

The village of Happisburgh is situated on a cliff overhanging the sea, thirty miles from Yarmouth, and 15 miles south of Cromer, the population amounting to not more than 200 or 300. In the parish lived an old couple, named Jonathan and Ann Elizabeth Balls—the former 77, and the latter 82. They were supported by parochial relief, the woman having for several years been bedridden. They had three daughters married, who had a number of children, and it is the sudden and [illegible] death of several of them that gave rise to the rumours of their being poisoned, and hence arose the Coroner's inquiry. Three years ago, an infant, nine weeks old, named Ann Elizabeth Postle, a grandchild of Balls, died, and was buried within a few hours. The next was a boy, Samuel, of the same parents, whose death took place under similar circumstances, in last September. Three months afterwards two more deaths in the family occurred, viz., Balls's wife, and another of the grandchildren, Elizabeth Ann Postle, and were buried on one day. Although the sudden character of the deaths excited much sensation in the parish, yet nothing of a suspicious feeling seemed to exist. The death of Balls, however, occurring on the 30th ultimo, after being attacked in a similar way as the other deceased members of the family, many inquiries out about in the neighbourhood that his death was the result of poison; but with that exception, the corpse was buried; but communications having been sent to the Coroner, three gentlemen at length took the matter up, and issued a summons to the authorities for the disinterment of Jonathan Balls and Anne Elizabeth Postle, and the impannelling of a jury to inquire into the cause of their death.

William Postle, a labouring man, the son-in-law of Jonathan Balls, identified the bodies of Elizabeth Balls, and of Ann Elizabeth and Samuel Postle, his children

A surgeon, who had examined the bodies, deposed that traces of poison had been found in the [illegible]

[illegible] sons of Mrs. Postle, Mrs. Green, and Mrs. Pegge were then examined by the Coroner, who very willingness to further the investigation.

After the witnesses had been heard, the Coroner said, he thought the facts did not [illegible] any party so as to warrant them in sending the case to another tribunal, if any one was implicated. The danger of suspicion most certainly pointed to the deceased Jonathan Balls, and he was now beyond the reach of the law. He recommended them to return such a verdict as would enable the officer to have [illegible] matter further inquired into, should such circumstances arise as required it. It was a case of great suspicion.

The Jury then found, after half an hour's consultation, "That the deceased, Jonathan Balls, Elizabeth Balls, Samuel Postle, and Ann Elizabeth Postle, died from the effects of poison, but how administered there was no evidence to show."

SERIOUS AFFRAY ON THE RIVER TYNE

Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Sunday night, a serious affray occurred at the mouth of the Tyne, between two crews of Italian seamen and a body of the river police. It appears that three Neapolitan sailors, belonging to the barque La Francesco, now in Shields Harbour, were on shore at North Shields, [illegible] with a man named Field and two of his [illegible] and [illegible] fighting, a fight took place, in the course of which one of the Neapolitans attacked Field, immediately afterwards running away. Being joined by his countrymen, they jumped into their boat and rowed to their vessel. Field's companions removed him to a neighbouring surgery, when it was found that a very serious wound had been inflicted. On the meantime, a report of the occurrence reached a crew of the river police, who were rowing about the harbour, and they then proceeded on board the barque, to apprehend the parties. Two of the three Neapolitans were identified, and just as they were being transferred to the police-boat, the whole crew suddenly mustered, and with loud cries assailed the police. The crew of seven Italian tars, it would appear, came to the rescue, and increased the serious affray. The Neapolitans armed themselves with handspikes and other dangerous weapons, and the police, in self-defence, drew their cutlasses. Wounds were inflicted on both sides. Eventually, the police, finding themselves unequally matched, prepared to retire from the struggle, not, however, before one of the officers had received an extensive wound on the head, and was knocked overboard into the vessels. The latter being reinforced by a body from the town, returned and captured twelve of the Neapolitans, who were brought before one of the resident magistrates on Monday morning, by whom they were remanded. Field remains in a precarious state. The wounded policeman is, however, not considered in danger.

POLICE.

A SELF-ACCUSED MURDERER AND THIEF.

A young man, named Henry Norman, was taken into custody, a few days ago, at Liverpool, under extraordinary circumstances. He was examined at HAMILL, Police-office, on Thursday, in order to explain the circumstances which should be stated, that a report was spread, a short time ago, that this individual, who was clerk to Mr. W. Hoof, builder and railway contractor, at Kensington, had absconded, and taken with him the sum of £87, in gold and silver, the money of his employer; also, of his having sent a letter to Mr. Hoof; to Dr Pullen, of Barnes, Surrey, at whose school he was educated; and to another gentleman, to whom he was known, acquainting them of having "sailed in the Customs at Jamaica, before he was twenty-one years of age, robbed the revenue of thousands of pounds sterling; and afterwards, while in the United States of America, having, at New York, robbed a pawnbroking and silversmith's store of medles and property to the value of upwards of £1000; and committed numerous other crimes, not even hesitating at murder."

In another part of his letter, he distinctly stated, that "he had committed more than 1800 distinct robberies, and had been concerned in five murders, besides many other atrocities"

At first, the confession was considered as the emanation of a fevered brain; but, from the inquiries which have since been instituted, it has been found that Norman did, at the time stated, fill an important situation in the Customs, at Kingston, Jamaica, which he eventually resigned, being at the time in charge of some amount. On his return to England, he offered, as a remuneration, to lay open the proceedings of others connected with the same department, and was for several days under examination by the Custom-House authorities, but, as his statements being submitted to the law officers of the Crown, it was found that they were so loose that no reliance could be placed on them, and he was suffered to go at large, his defalcations being paid by those whose duty it was to have more strictly overlooked him. It has also been discovered that his statement respecting the robbery of a jeweller's store at New York is correct, such a robbery having taken place at the time stated by him, and a true bill has been returned against him at the New York sessions. Suspicions have also arisen that he was concerned in the murder and robbery contained about eight years ago under the premises of Mr. Gibson Westwood, the watchmaker, in Princes-street, Soho, which has ever since been enveloped in mystery. It is known that he was in England at that time, and it is believed that he was staying at the house of his father, who was at that time a respectable pawnbroker and silversmith, in Princes-street, a few doors from Mr. Westwood's house.

The offence of which the prisoner was first accused on Monday was the robbery of Mr. Hoof, his builder.

The prisoner is about five feet six inches high, dark hair and eyes, pale thin face, and took his station quite unconcerned at the serious situation in which he was placed.

Some evidence was given in support of the charge, after which, Mr. Clive asked the prisoner if he wished to say anything at that stage of the inquiry.

The prisoner answered that he had nothing at present to say on the subject.

Mr. Clive then said, sufficient evidence had been taken to warrant him in remanding the prisoner for a week.

The prisoner was then removed from the bar, and accompanied the gaoler with a smile playing on his countenance.

SLIGHTING TO THE ADVANTAGE OF JOSEPH ADY.—At the THAMES Office, on Thursday, Joseph Ady was committed for trial on the charge of having obtained five shillings from a Mr. Hill, upon the false pretence that he could inform "Mr. Hill of something to his advantage."

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Prussian Government has decreed that no Prussian subject can enjoy at the same time the Polish nationality. Madame de Kalergi has again been exiled. It is supposed she will accompany to Dresden her father, M. de Nesselrode, the Chancellor's brother.

A Frankfort paper of the 15th speaks of a collision at Ulm between some cavalry soldiers and the people, in which many were wounded. The motive has not been assigned.

The Empress of Russia and the Princess Olga, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Crown Prince of Wurtemberg, have arrived at Venice, where they will make a sojourn of a few days, and then proceed en route for Salzburg. The day for the solemnization of the marriage of the Crown Prince of Wurtemberg and Princess Olga is now fixed for the 13th of July, being the 48th anniversary of the Empress of Russia's birth day.

A letter from Bayonne, dated May 13 says:—"The Infante Don Enrique will leave Bayonne in a few days on a visit to the Princess Isabel, his sister, who is married to a Polish nobleman, and lives at Brussels. The Infante has likewise received permission from the Spanish Government to make a tour in England, should he desire it."

The German journals assert that imprisonment for debt is about to be abolished in Prussia. The State had long given it up for the recovery of fines and the expense of law prosecutions, and it exists only in case of private proceedings.

An extensive fall of earth and rocks took place a few days since on the eastern slope of Mount Salbne, near Chambery, by which a fine forest of old oak trees has been destroyed. A band of smugglers returning from the neighbouring country were quietly reposing themselves on their bags of gunpowder, when they were alarmed by the noise of the moving mass, and took to flight. The clashing of the rocks together in their fall caused some sparks to ignite the powder which they had left behind them, which produced a fearful explosion. Several of the smugglers escaped unhurt, but others were severely injured.

The Universal German Gazette contains the following:—"Travellers arrived from Circassia announce that war has not yet commenced, but Schamil Bey is making extensive preparations in the Daghestan, and the approaching campaign it is expected will be as advantageous for him as that of last year. Soliman Effendi, the agent of Schamil, has enrolled for his service 200 horsemen in the provinces of Nad Kotch and Chepsos, and 800 at Abasoth, and the enrolments it is said would have been more numerous but for the indifference of the Uleuas and the Cadis."

A meeting of German booksellers takes place yearly at the grand fair of Leipsic. At the last meeting it was decided that a memorial should be addressed to the Saxon Government, representing that if its conduct, with regard to the liberty of the press, should be persevered in, it would have the effect of reducing Leipsic from its present prosperous condition, and, in time, the whole of the booksellers to seek another place for holding their fair. It was also resolved at the last meeting to establish in New York an extensive commission firm for German books. The cost of establishing such a concern is estimated at 50,000 dollars, which will be shortly raised amongst the booksellers.

The following paragraph appears in a recent number of one of the Hanoverian papers:—"The greatest importance is attached by the commercial houses of East Friesland to the conclusion of a navigation treaty with Denmark, similar to the one with England in 1844. By the former our ships will not only save considerable ship dues, but also two-thirds of those duties which at present many privileged vessels pay. They will, moreover, have the use of Elsinore. The navigation treaty with England has not only been useful in past years to our shipping, but justly excites greater hopes for the future. To that treaty may be ascribed the increase in our shipping when compared with Hamburg. In 1845 the town of Emden alone possessed 133 sea vessels, averaging 61 tons each."

A letter of the 7th, from Posen, says:—"The excitement not only continues in the Grand Duchy, but is assuming ever a more grave and alarming character. Hitherto, the nobles and clergy alone have taken part in the revolutionary proceedings, but now accidents of rebellion appear among the [illegible]. The people have been much excited by the arrest of several of their priests, and in some places sanguinary conflicts have ensued. At Wreschen, the Archbishop has assembled, and demanded a partition of the land. Gnesen is said to have been a theatre of great disasters, and a battalion is about to be marched to the environs of this town."

A letter from Lille, of the 15th inst., states there was no foundation for the report which had been circulated, that the potato crop of this year would not be better than the past one. The early white potatoes showed well, and were, in some parts, already very forward. As to the other sorts, destined for the winter supplies, nothing can, at present, be advanced on their not succeeding, as they have been planted too lately.

A letter from Turin states that on the 28th ult., the Bey sent off an Ambassador with the presents intended for Queen Victoria. They consist of eight horses, three richly ornamented saddles, two carriages, and two female Moorish dresses.

The example of commercial relaxation set by England seems to have had its influence already abroad. The Turin Royal Gazette of the 2nd of May, publishes a decree from the Sardinian Government, by which a great reduction is made in the import duties on several important articles of commerce, and, among others, on brandies, refined sugars of al. kinds, dried fruits, porcelain, and fancy art cles of dress, &c. This, it is to be hoped, is but the first step towards further and more extensive reforms in other parts of Italy, where the Governments of the smaller States have recently shown a praiseworthy anxiety to abandon the ruinous system of prohibition which has hitherto prevailed.

The Courrier Français states that the French Government has in contemplation the establishment of a line of steamers between Senegal and Algiers, by means of which intelligence might be received in France from Senegal in 25 days.

The opening of the line of rail from Paris to Amiens, which was announced for the 15th of May, is deferred until the completion of the whole line from Brussels to Paris, which is positively fixed for the end of this month. The inauguration of this grand system of communication is to be celebrated by splendid fêtes, on which the company intend to spend 100,000 francs (£4000). There will be a banquet of 300 or 400 covers, and a bal masqué at Lods.

Sydney papers to Feb. 1, mention that the colony was occupied with discussions respecting the proposed construction of a railway. There is little river communication, and the surface of the country being favourable for a line, the project was highly popular

The expenses of the Empress of Russia during her sojourn at Italy are estimated at £40,000 per month.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T. J."—In the position sent, White mates at his first move.

"D. C." The error consisted in sending a diagram to which the stipulation, "without Queening a Pawn," was omitted. Thanks for the others.

"Marmaron." You are quite right. By taking the King's Pawn with his Kt, Black may delay the mate.

"Rufus." Certainly.

"J. C——H."—Our solution of Problem No. 119 is perfectly correct, and the only mode of forcing mate in three moves. Your objection to it, on the plea that when 1. Q to Q 6th is played to Z. Kt 5th, the Bishop may take her, is futile since, in that case, White would give mate next move

"Ferule." We should think them uncalculable.

"A Sub."—Many thanks for the positions: similar contributions will be at all times acceptable.

"One who Knows, &c." We have not room for the account of the Meeting. On looking it over, we quite agree with you that it is to be hoped, on future occasions, when the Committee are disappointed of their promised Chairman they will find some efficient person, of local standing and respectability, to take his place

"Adelphi." Mr. Horwitz will be delighted to play a match for any amount of stake, with any player in England except his late opponent. The party you mention may talk Chess stronger; but, rely on it, he will never risk the toss of a war with an opponent so unanswerably his superior.

"Stud-ius." Staunton's Type Foundry. Price, we suppose, about a guinea.

"Senex." Quite true. Kt takes P at the third move, and puts it out of White's power to mate in the given number of moves.

"G. H.," Boston, U.S. The games, &c., have reached us safely; and we are much pleased to observe the progress which Chess is making in the United States.

"Gowanus." The required solution is this—

1. K to Q Kt 7th	K P one
2 Kt takes K P	K takes P
3. K to Kt 6th	K to R 8th
4 Kt to Q 7th	K to Kt 8th (best)

5. Kt to Q Kt 8th	K to R 8th
6. Kt to Q R 6th	P one
7. Kt mates.

"Ludmanjator."—It is quite optional to take or not a Pawn en passant, if you have any other move on the board.

"G. H.," Boston, U.S. According to the strict rules of the game, Black must abide by his move

"Hamilton," "J. W. D." and "G. A. H."—Play as Black can, in M. D'Orville's Enigma No. 1, White forces mate in three moves. Look again attentively.

"T. S. R.," Guernsey.—You have quite mistaken the operation technically called "taking en passing." To make it clear to you, suppose A. (Black) to have advanced his King's Pawn to King's 4th square, B.'s (White) Queen's Pawn being at the time unmoved; if, then, B. attempt to play the Queen's Pawn two squares, he must of course go past Black's Pawn, upon which Black may, if he chooses, take the Pawn in passing in the same manner as if it had only been moved one square

"A Member of the Chester Chess Club."—The Problems shall be duly examined. We cannot decipher your initials.

"C. S. L." In the Problem you forwarded, it is absolutely necessary to expel the two Pawns, as the White King cannot prevent their queening, place him where you will. You have not quite hit upon the solution of Enigma No. 1.

"A. and B."—A. was the game. The misplacing of a piece, if not discovered before other moves are made, cannot be rectified

We have to acknowledge our obligations to many Amateurs who have favoured us with Problems during the last week, and to solicit indulgence if we do not report upon their merits immediately. To do justice to them already in hand necessarily must occupy some weeks.

Solutions by "C. S. L." "G. A. H. and R. H.," "Ludmanjator," "Calverpus," "J. W. D." "Chapel Road," "Amateur," "Andrew," "St. George," "H. H. B." "D. S." "G. P." "J. G." Dublin; "B. W. P." "C. K." "F. S." "Automaton." "Shakebolt." "C. O." "Marcus." "F. H." "Maracion," "A Sub," "Alpha," "Subscriber," and "L. H." are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 121.

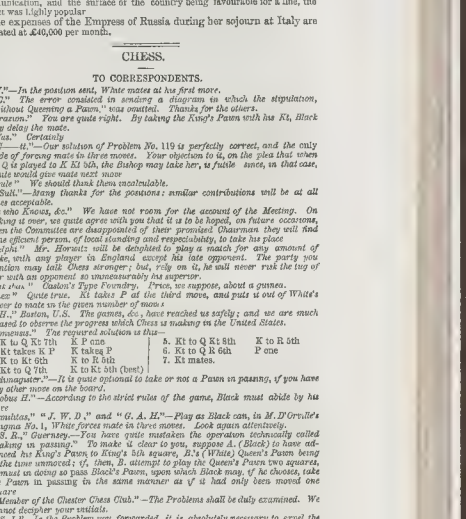
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q takes Kt P (ch)	P takes Q (best)	5. Kt to Q 7th (ch)	K to his 4th
2. K to B 4th (ch)	K to Q 2nd	6. B P one (ch)	K to Q 4th
3. Kt takes P (ch)	K to his 3rd	7. R to K B 4th mate
4. R to B 6th (ch)	K takes B

PROBLEM NO. 122.

By MR. HORWITZ.

White plays first and mates in seven moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 4.—By Mr. Charles Stanley, of the Brighton Chess Club.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q Kt 8th	K at Q B 3rd
Q at K sq	Q at her Kt 7th
B at Q B 7th	Kt at Q's 5th and Q Kt 5th
K's at Q Kt 5th and P's at Q's 6th and Q R 7th	Q Kt 6th
P's at Kt's 4th and Q's 5th

White to play first and mate in four moves.

No. 5.—By M. Brede.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q Kt's 2nd	K at Q Kt's 3rd
Q at Q B's 4th	K at Q Kt's 2nd
R at Q Kt sq	K at K R 8th
B at Q Kt 2nd	Kt at Q B's 3rd
P's at K R's 2nd and K Kt 2nd	P's at K R 2nd and Q B's 3rd
K B's 4th Q B's 3rd and Q R's 5th

White plays and mates in three moves.

No. 6.—By M. Brede.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B's 2nd	K at her K's sq
Q at K R's 5th	B at K Kt's sq
Kt at K B's 8th	P at K R's 4th
	P at K Kt 5th

White plays and mates in three moves.

CROSSING OF THE ARMY OF THE UPPER SUTLEJ.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

THE LATE CAMPAIGN IN INDIA.

(We have been favoured by two esteemed Correspondents with the sketches of the annexed Engravings, and the appended communications.)

FORT PHILLOOR.

Extract of a private letter from an Officer of the Bengal Infantry: –

Punjaub Camp, Sooltanpoor, 30 miles from Amritsir, 26th Feb., 1846.

. . . . . On the morning of the 14th, Brigadier Wheeler's force broke ground, and proceeded to take up its position a couple of miles or so from Philloor, to induce the enemy to believe we were about to cross the Sutlej at the ford a mile below it. Runjore Singh, son of the Seikh Sirdars, commanded the fort at the time, with 5000 or 6000 men. I galloped down in the afternoon with a few of our youngsters to the bank opposite the fort, and minutely reconnoitred them. There was a large body of them working away, making entrenchments. I could see them as plainly as possible with the telescope. They did not attempt to molest us by firing at us, as usual.

Feb 15. and 16. The force kept moving about, as if uncertain which ford to take, when suddenly, on the night of the 17th, I was roused from my comfortable couch with orders to "get the regiment quietly under arms," and "as expeditiously as possible," "baggage to be left behind," "no tent to be struck till day-break," &c. Well, here we are in for a night attack, thought I; but it was not so. In an hour the whole force was under arms, and away we went. All the cavalry were sent off at the same time to Philloor, while we marched steadily towards Alleewal and Talwun Ghaut. This was also a manœuvre to distract the enemy. Day was just breaking when our columns entered the scene of our late action -Alleewal. It was a damp, cold, and cheerless morning, and everything looked gloomy and sad in the grey mist. There were still some vestiges of the late fight, which added to the dismal appearance of the morning. I turned and looked on the ford, where our bullets had rung the death-knell of many a brave fellow, and it seemed to partake of the same sad colouring. But the word "Ha-sit" put an end to my cogitations.

Forty large flat-bottomed boats were ready to convey the force in detachments over the river. The 9th and 48th Native Infantry were the first sent across, whilst a battery on one side of the river covered their landing. The sight, I assure you, was now perfectly beautiful. The sun had broken partly through the cloudy mists of the morning, and while some of the boats (which, from their quaint forms, added still more to the picturesque beauty of the scene) were rendered dim by their distance up the river, the more immediate ones, as well as the high bank, hill, village, and town on the opposite side caught brightly the rays of the morning sun. All would have made a study for any painter, and in water-colours would have made a lovely drawing.

As the boats moved away from the bank, the bands struck up "Rule Britannia," &c. They touched almost simultaneously the opposite side; one tremendous cheer burst forth—hurrah! hurrah! hurrah! We were now at last in the Punjaub. The bands then struck up "The British Grenadiers;" and as each regiment landed, it formed "columns of sections," and marched on.

Our heavy train was not, however, so easy to transport; as the low sand flat which it had to pass over, had, from the tread of so many feet, become quite a quicksand, so that when the guns were brought upon it, in they went up to the axletrees. As for the eighteen-pounders, fifty bullocks and three elephants could not move them an inch; the whole day was consumed in extricating them.

The next morning (18th) we marched for Philloor. The Brigadier's intentions were to march half way, and then to attack the fort the next morning: but the keys of the fort having been sent to him, he altered his intention, and marched right in.

I send you a Sketch of the Fort: it is a very correct one, I can tell you.

In the afternoon we all went into the fort, and hoisted the Union Jack on the Cavalier; and gave three cheers for Old England Old England for ever. It is a very strongly fortified fort, although methinks it would not have stood very long against our artillery. The chief strength lay in a large ditch, which had been apparently lately constructed, and which was in such a position that no battering down of the walls could have filled it, unless perfectly riddled through and through. I am certain the fort could not have been stormed by us under a loss of 500 killed and wounded; so it was for the best, as it turned out. Now I must bid adieu, as I have not five minutes to spare before the dak goes out. . . .

Foremost in the Sketch is shown—the Guard-House, the Outer Gate, protected by a new ditch and fausse-braye recently constructed. The Entrance to the Enceinte, which is on the Royal Serai, is between the two Towers. The Outer Gate is a sort of Barbican outside the main ditch; after passing which you have to turn to the right and go under the Round Barbican, which is seen behind the Watch Tower; then turning to your left you are brought to the opposite gate. The Enceinte is quadrangular, with four Bastions; and there is a double fausse-braye all round, with several angles, producing cross and flanking fires. Beyond the Outer Ditch is a covered way, which would contain 3000 men. The Outer Ditch is solid masonry; 30 feet broad, 25 feet deep, and at bottom 4 feet.

THE CROSSING OF THE ARMY OF THE UPPER SUTLEJ, ON THE 17TH. FEBRUARY, 1846.

The first boats which reached the opposite bank of the river contained the 9th Regiment N.I., which is seen forming in quarter distance column, on the flat, some distance from the boats. Some of the 48th N.I. are landing higher up the river, more to the right in the picture; the 30th N.I. is in the boats on this side the river, immediately under the bank; and the 36th N.I. lower down to the left: beyond which the cavalry are seen in a long string winding along the ford, and forming on the opposite flat. The Rifle and Light Companies of the formed Infantry are in advance, extended towards the high bank, and moving up upon the village (named Luddur). It was over the rising ground, to the left of this village, when the enemy attempted to rally behind it, after being beaten from their position and entrenched camp at Alleewal, on the 28th of January, that the shells from our howitzers played such execution among their masses that it drove them into headlong flight. Our howitzers were then nearly on the spot which forms the foreground of this sketch, which was covered with dead bodies. We commenced crossing about sunrise, and a more splendid sight could seldom be witnessed. The near bank was crowded with elephants, camels, horse artillery, and heavy trains; and about 2000 cavalry, consisting of two regiments Bengal Light Cavalry and Forster's Shekawatees Brigade. The bands of the four regiments of native Infantry struck up "Rule Britannia," "God Save the Queen," &c., as each quitted the near bank, and their regimental marches as they marched on, after forming on the opposite side. The sun shone in purple splendour over a bank of clouds resting on the Himalehi Mountains to the right. Everything was auspicious, and everything—heavy guns and all—reached the camp that night. The willing labour of all the troops achieved what nothing else could have done, and the moral effect of this bloodless achievement on the enemy was much greater than our four bloody victories of Moodkee, Ferozeshuhur, Aleewal, and Sobraon, in which we destroyed nearly 50,000 of the enemy, and took 250 of their guns. On the 18th, we marched thirteen miles; but the moral effect of our splendid crossing was, that we found the strong fortress of Philloor had been evacuated by the enemy during the night, and the British ensign waved proudly over its battlements that morning.

FORT PHILLOOR.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JOHN COLLETT, M.P.

Mr. Collett, the member for Athlone, is, we believe, the first English, or rather Saxon, representative who has joined the Repeal movement. Whether the fact of his sitting for an Irish constituency may not have had much influence in his conversion, it would, perhaps, be impertinent to inquire. But the honourable gentleman rather belongs to the eccentric class of legislators, and this is only one of several singularities. Among them may be reckoned his penchant for paying the fines of persons convicted by country magistrates for offences against the Game-laws, or who suffer from other kinds of legal injustice; be it said, in passing, that they are not so infrequent as we could wish them; and if the relieving men from harsh proceedings, implies an unwillingness to intimidate them and a dislike of those who do, the world would be much the better if more of those who occupy the position of Mr. Collett, shared his sentiments also.

MR. JOHN COLLETT, M.P.

The hon. gentleman is the eldest son of E. J. Collett, Esq., of Locher's House, Herts: his father represented the borough of Cashel for many years. Mr. Collett is extremely liberal in his political opinions, and very often expresses them with far more candour, and less reserve, than are generally to be met with in St. Stephen's. He is a very constant questioner; and the Home Secretary has frequently to acknowledge the diligence with which the hon. Member must have made himself acquainted with the contents of the day's newspaper—most commonly the ground of his interrogatives. He brought forward a case on Monday evening, for the second time, in which a woman was alleged to have been trapped into buying game, for the purpose of informing against her. He declared "it was a disgusting case, amounting to an offer of blood-money." Sir J. Graham said the story was altogether unfounded; and that the only authority for it, was that of a man who had been convicted for horse-stealing. There was some discussion on the affair, the Game-Law being involved in it; after which, as usual, "the subject dropped." Mr. Collett was returned for Athlone in 1843. His brother, Mr. W. R. Collett, sits for Lincoln.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.—A public discussion upon the question of the abolition of capital punishment took place on Tuesday evening at the City of London Literary Institution, Aldersgate-street. The theatre of the institution was crowded. The chair was taken by Mr. Wrightson. The discussion was opened by Mr. George Thompson, who addressed the meeting at considerable length. Mr. Roulton read some interesting statistical details, to show that where the punishment of death was most used, the crime of murder was most prevalent.

NEWSVENDERS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.—The seventh annual general meeting of the above institution, established for the granting pensions and affording temporary relief to decayed members of the newspaper publishing trade was held on Wednesday evening, at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, James Harmer, Esq., President, in the chair. The report showed that the Society was steadily advancing, that the subscriptions of the past year were four times greater than the preceding, and that the funded property was now upwards of £800. Thanks were unanimously awarded to the press, and Mr. Terry stated that no less than £200 of the subscriptions had been contributed by the proprietors of different journals. The officers for the ensuing year having been elected, the cordial thanks of the meeting were awarded to the President and other officers

THE ROYAL KINGSTOWN YACHT CLUB HOUSE.—PRINCIPAL FRONT.

THE ROYAL KINGSTOWN YACHT CLUB.

Oh, bright the scene in Dublin Bay,
When the glad summer sun is glancing
On Kingstown Yacht Flotilla gay,
Over the blue waves wildly dancing
The fleetest boats the canvas fill,
Their stems cut the second breeze,
While Workin's high-mettled hulls
Look down upon th' exulting seas.

Ay! 'tis a glorious sight I ween,
To view from Howth that gay flotilla—
The brave sons of the Island Queen
Love the wild joys of ocean's billow.
The town pours out its gallant folk,
To view the Derby of the waves:
From peer to peasant, all are present—
Age—youth—the beautiful—the brave.

AT the commencement of the Yachting Season, we present our readers with two views of the splendid Club-House, lately erected for the Royal Kingstown Yacht Club, from designs by Mr. G. Papworth. It is much admired for the elegance of its exterior, as well as for the completeness of its interior arrangement.

The Royal Kingstown Yacht Club, we learn from The Yachtsman's Annual, was established at Kingstown, Dublin, in the commencement of last year; and, one of the first resolutions of the Club was the building of the above Club-House. The Beautiful Bay of Dublin is well calculated for the sailing contests of the yachts; and the members, in about four months, exceeded 500, being the most numerous Yacht Club in existence.

GRAND CENTRAL RAILWAY TERMINUS.

THE advantage of a General Railway Terminus, by which means the leading lines should be brought into the heart of the metropolis, has been too often insisted upon in prospectus and speech, to render it necessary for us to enlarge upon the interest of the means by which this consummation of a grand national improvement is proposed to be effected. The benefits have been pretty generally conceded in argument; but the cost, we fear, will be by far the greater obstacle.

Still, this great desideratum, Mr. Charles Pearson, the City Solicitor, proposes to effect by comparatively easy means, by the erection of a gigantic general Terminus, of which a model has been constructed, and exhibited in the Council Chamber at Guildhall. As the plan is not only interesting to the inhabitants of the metropolis, but to every visitor, we have engraved a portion of Mr. Pearson's design, to show the character of the proposed superstructure, and a ground-plan of its site. The district of the City represented by the model, or rather the tract of ground which this work would cover, is that bounded on the north by some vacant fields near Battle-bridge; on the south by Ludgate-hill and Fleet-street; on the east by the Old Bailey, and on the west by Shoe-lane.

PROPOSED CENTRAL RAILWAY TERMINUS FOR THE CITY OF LONDON.

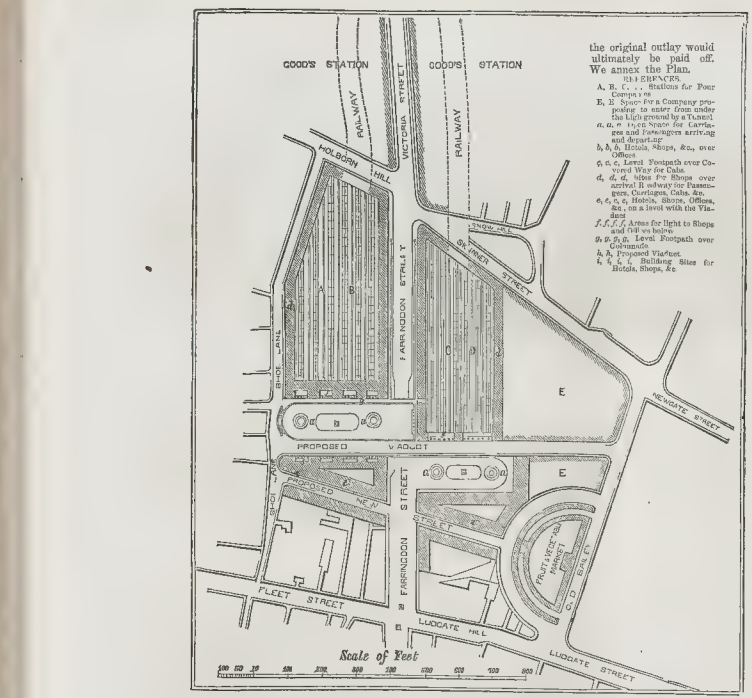
Mr. Pearson's explanation of the scheme, a few evenings since, occupied fully two hours and a half; but the substance of it (says the Times) may be gathered from the following summary:—"Mr. Pearson proposed to enter London by Battle-bridge, where there were about eighty acres of land not built upon, and part of which was admirably adapted for a goods' station, and presents a means of communication with all railroads running north-east and north-west. From Battle-bridge his line would cross the New-road near King's-cross, proceed in a somewhat parallel direction with Gray's-inn-road, hugging the wall of Coldbath-fields Prison, and thence on by Field-lane to Farringdon-street, where would be the passenger station. The difficulties in effecting this he described as small indeed; for those that did present themselves he had overcome by making the same site serve the double purpose of a trunk railway, with three double lines of rails on the basement, and a carriage road eighty feet wide on its super-surface, intersecting London north and south, and presenting an uninterrupted communication from Battle-bridge to Farringdon-street. He likewise proposes giving cross streets from Clerkenwell and St. John's-street to Hatton-garden, Gray's-inn-lane, King's-cross, and the western parts of the metropolis. He would also raise Holborn valley 16 feet, so as to render the roadway from Holborn-hill to Newgate-street, as level as Fleet-street. He further contemplates keeping all the goods-traffic to the north, and the passenger-traffic to the south, of Holborn: and, by the opening of new-streets to relieve the City of its present over-crowded state, and to make it more free of passage, with the increased railroad traffic, than it is now without it. On striking a balance of the cost, &c., he was bold enough to say that the balance was in favour of the undertaking by at least £1,000,000 sterling. The necessary funds for constructing this Terminus he would have raised by means of a stock, under the management of the Corporation of the City, bearing 4 to 5 per cent interest. There should, at the same time, be a sinking-fund of from 2 to 2½ per cent, by which means

THE ROYAL KINGSTOWN YACHT CLUB HOUSE.



GOODS STATION
GOODS STATION
RAILWAY
VICTORIA STREET
RAILWAY
HOLBORN HILL
SNOW HILL
SKINNER STREET
FARRINGDON STREET
NEWGATE STREET
PROPOSED VIADUCT
PROPOSED CENTRAL CITY TERMINUS
FARRINGDON STREET
FLEET STREET
LUDGATE HILL
PRINCE WALES MARKET
OLD BAILEY
LUDGATE STREET
Scale of Feet
the original outlay would ultimately be paid off.
We annex the Plan.
REFERENCES.
A, B, C . . . Stations for Four Companies
E, E Space for a Company proposing to enter from under the High ground by a Tunnel a, a, a Open Space for Carriages and Passengers arriving and departing
b, b, b, Hotels, Shops, &c., over Offices
c, c, c, Level Footpath over Covered Way for Cabs
d, d, d, Shops &c. over arrival & railway for Passengers, Carriages, Cabs, &c. e, e, e, e, Hotels, Shops, Offices, &c., on a level with the Viaduct
f, f, f, f, Areas for light to Shops and Cellars below
g, g, g, g, Level Footpath over Colonnade
h, h, Proposed Viaduct
i, i, i, i, Building Sites for Hotels, Shops, &c.

PROPOSED CENTRAL CITY TERMINUS, IN FARRINGDON-STREET,—PLAN SHOWING THE STATIONS, VIADUCT, AND STREET, ON THE UPPER LEVEL.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 24.—Sunday after Ascension—Birth of Queen Victoria.
MONDAY, 25 Mercury rises at 3h. 18m. a.m.
TUESDAY, 26.—St. Augustin.
WEDNESDAY, 27.—Dante born, 1265.
THURSDAY, 28 Jupiter rises at 3h. 33m. a.m.
FRIDAY, 29.—Restoration of King Charles II.
SATURDAY, 30. Fitz born, 1759—Pope died, 1744.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending May 30.

Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A. M.	M. A. M.	M. A. M.	M. A. M.	M. A. M.	M. A. M.
h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.
1 55 2 17	2 36 2 57	3 17 3 37	3 57 4 18	4 39 5 1	5 21 5 43

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Izaak Walton," Maidstone. The Dulwich Picture Gallery is open every day in the week, except Fridays and Sundays, throughout the year.

"Squasmad."—The difference of distance can only be accurately ascertained by a pedometer.

"P. S. J's" letter is a hoax.

"Frederic S. T." Rome must await the reorganization of the militia.

"Miranda" should have prepaid.

"An Impudent Creature."—The affair is "a debt of honour."

"Two of Gower." The Illustrations will appear next week.

"E. C." Wandsworth-road.—The Engraving of Goodall's "Fête de Mariage" appeared in Vol. V of our Journal. See also Nos. 110, 114, 115, 116.

"La Bibliothe." That is an Elzevir imp.

"A Friend and Old Subscriber."—The Lady Mary S. S. S. is recommended to avoid the means hinted at.

"A. J." Doncaster, should beware of letters, Foreign as well as English.

"J. T." Glasgow, may address a letter to 198, Strand

"Alpha," Canterbury.—Upwards of £10,000 has been subscribed as a testimonial to Mr. Rowland Hill, but we only remember his having received the sum above specified

"T. P." Jedburgh, is thanked for the suggestion, but the truthful illustrations of the late Campaign in India will not be published elsewhere than in our Journal.

"W. J. M., Hull" We cannot interfere in Card disputes.

"N. W." Torquay.—Vol. 8 of our Journal will be completed at Midsummer. The usual charge for binding each Volume in covers to be obtained at our Office, 198, Strand, is 2*s.*

"G. W." Rugby.—It is inconvenient to give the private addresses of Authors; but, as a general rule, letters for them may be addressed to the Publishers of their works

"Orion."—Leigh's Picture of London

We have not room for Lines by "J. T. L." ("Summer is Coming"); by "A. M." ("My own Native Isle"); by "A. H." ("To ——").

"Barrym Newberrie." It is altogether a popular error to imagine that a man (?) has any right to sell his wife. It is true that this vile custom among the most profligate of the lower orders, has been magnified into law; whereas, it does not constitute a divorce, but is directly punishable by law.

"W. W. W." The Box Tunnel, on the Great Western Railway, is 9,680 ft. (or nearly 1¾ mile, long.

"Capsicum."—We do not know the present "whereabout" of Mr. Robert Owen.

"W. H. L." of Liverpool.—If a Commission were granted by the Commander-in-Chief "without purchase," the recipient would have nothing whatever to pay.

"Y. L. S." The late Rector John Graham Toler, Earl of Norbury, was murdered in the demesne of his seat, Durrow Abbey, King's County, in January, 1830. He left two surviving sons, and eight daughters. His Arms were—Quarterly, 1st and 4th, argent, a cross fleury, gules, charged with a plain cross, couped, of the field, between four leaves, vert, a crescent for cadency, for Toler: 2nd and 3rd, argent, a trefoil slipped, vert, on a chief, sable, three scallop shells, or, for Graham. Crest, a fleur-de-lis, or. His Lordship was never Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

"A Clergyman's Churchwarden." —The questions asked by our Correspondent involve such nice points of Ecclesiastical Law, that reference had better be made to some Counsel practising in Doctors' Commons.

"B. B." Dent.—No one is liable to be charged for bearing armorial ensigns, unless the emblems he uses is an heraldic device

"O. E. R. S."—An Application to the Heralds' College will be the best means of ascertaining the information required.

"An Ignorant Fellow." No family is entitled to a Crest unless it can show a desent from some one whose right is recorded in the Herald's Visitations, or has had a grant of such a device

"Isabel Bear."—The address of a Foreign Minister or Ambassador is "Your Excellency."

"Etna." Lord Paget, eldest son of the Earl of Uxbridge, married, on the 7*th of last June, Sophia, daughter of the late C Beresford, Esq., of Bessie Park. Lord Dunsandle is a new Peer of Ireland, so created the* 6*th of June,* 1845. His name is James Daly; and his residence, Dunsandle, in the county of Galway. He is elder brother of the Bishop of Cashel, and son and heir of the late Right Hon. Dennis Daly, for many years M.P. for the county of Galway, described by Henry Grattan as "one of the best and brightest characters that Ireland ever produced."

"J. L. L." Bristol "The Great St. Leger Stakes" are run for by colts and fillies then three years old.

"W. C." Dean-street, is thanked for his intention, though we cannot avail ourselves of his suggestion.

"E. C."—The application at Heralds' College must be personal.

"X. Y. Z."—Boodler's edition of Shakspeare is freed from the objectionable passages: it is published by Longman and Co.

"R. J. C." Lethury.—The large View of Dublin will be issued this day fortnight.

"A Subscriber."—The Female Portraits by Grant and Lee are very popular.

"D. J. D." Turvington.—We consider the "London and Edinburgh Philosophical Magazine" to report most fully Astronomical Discoveries, Proceedings of Astronomical Societies, &c

"Quisp" should apply to a Seal Engraver.

"Curzon."—"The Derby Stakes" will be run for next Wednesday.

"O Mar."—The Views of the Experimental Squadron, noticed last week, are published at 12*s.* 6*d.*

"W. J." Tipton.—Removal will be illegal.

"Moses" Waterloo, the eminent Dutch painter, lived early in the 17*th century, and excelled in landscapes.*

"A. S."—Shakspeare is believed to have died at Stratford, where he was buried April 25, 1616.

"Venator."—Next week we shall copiously illustrate the Race for the Derby Stakes at Epsom, on Wednesday, in a Series of picturesque and highly characteristic Engravings, by first-rate Artists.

"Rosencrux" has been misinformed.

"Jamesh."—"Taylor's Short-Hand," improved by Harding.

"A. D." Echer. We cannot assist our Correspondent

"Sam Snap" may hear of a work on Rigg'd Vessels at Norie and Co.'s, 157, Leadenhall-street.

"A. W." The scenery of Derbyshire and parts of Yorkshire is romantic; that of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex is picturesque.

"W. S. M." Isleworth's "Heart of Christ" is engraved in No. 144 of our Journal. See our next No.

"P. O. H."—A Letter for Sydney, if to be sent by India, should be specially addressed via Marseilles.

"A. Z."—"Richard is himself again" is not Shakspeare, but an interpolation by Cibber

"A. L. Z." We are not aware of any Loan Society exclusively for Clerks.

"Autograph."—The late Mr. Upcott's Collection, if we mistake not, will shortly be sold by Sotheby

"M. M."—See "Flaxman's Lectures on Sculpture."

"An Ab Initio Subscriber." Apply to Richardsons, Booksellers, 172, Fleet-street. The Star Chamber was named from its roof being decorated with gut stars.

 THE LARGE VIEW OF DUBLIN will be issued, free of charge, as a Supplement to the Number of our Journal for this day fortnight.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1846.

THE great business of the Session begins in the House of Lords on Monday next, on the second reading of the Corn Bill. There have been a few indications of a stormy week; lowering skies and muttered thunder, heard at intervals and not easily suppressed, are but the heralds of the tempest. Lord Stanley is to be the "ruler of the spirits" of discontent which Peel has invoked against himself; and it will be well if the circle of the large majority he has drawn around him in the Lower House, defends him against some attempt to annihilate him as a Minister. Sir Robert Peel could not have a more formidable opponent than Lord Stanley; his sarcasm is more powerful than Disraeli's, and more effective, because less studied and epigrammatic: he will speak also as the rival of the Premier; the member for Shrewsbury frequently appears only the clever and malicious traducer, who has applied himself to sarcasm against a greater than himself, as to a task.

We do not think the presence of Lord Stanley in the Lower House would have much affected the numbers by which the question was there decided; but he would have been a greater opponent than any the Premier has had to meet. His rivals and competitors for office have supported him, a large number of his own party have followed him: from those he left only has the active opposition come. The efforts of Lord George Bentinck have been rather admired for the "pluck" and perseverance he exhibited, than feared for the damage he could do. Lord Stanley, from his rank, reputation, influence with the House, and official knowledge, would have produced more effect in a single speech, than all the Protectionists have done in three months; hence his course in the Upper Chamber will be watched with the greatest anxiety. We give the organisation of the Protectionist Peers up to the present time, as rumour states it:—"The number of Peers actually pledged against the Corn Bill is said to be 170; these, it is confidently expected, will be reinforced to about 210. The number believed to be committed to the Minister is stated at 156: ten of the Bishops are included in this number. A greater number of the right reverend Lords, however, will certainly oppose the Bill. The opinions, or rather the probable votes, of five or six prelates are still unknown."

The Earl of Malmesbury and the Earl of Eglintoun are said to have undertaken the task of marshalling the array of Peers hostile to the bill. From the above calculation we should think it probable that the Ministry may have proxies enough at command to carry the second reading. But, if the policy of the Protectionists is not absolute rejection, so much as modification to a fixed duty, or some step of that nature, it is not at all improbable they may carry some amendment in Committee, where we believe proxies cannot be given. The debate is expected to last several nights.

LORD BROUGHAM confesses that the University of London has been a failure. He attributes that failure to the "vulgarity" of the citizens of London, for whom, as for everybody else when he is abusing them, he entertains "the greatest respect." How he can respect those he in the same breath declares unworthy of the sentiments is one of those things that Lord Brougham alone can explain. The "vulgarity" of which he accuses the merchants and citizens of London is shown, he says, in their preferring to send one son to Oxford or Cambridge "to be corrupted,"—(a remark that drew expressions of dissent from the meeting at which he was presiding),—instead of availing themselves of the cheaper system of education provided in Gower-street; the ground of that preference is said to be a desire on their part that their sons should associate with the sons of Dukes and Lords.

That some such unworthy motive may influence a few foolish men, we have no doubt; a slavish adulation of rank is common enough among those who have not perception enough to see that such a perverted ambition commonly brings its own punishment with it. The plebeian "tuft-hunter" generally returns from College less encumbered with learning than debts, and "cut" by the Lord Georges and Lord Williams, who have condescended to countenance his expensive follies as the price of their society; he acquires all the affectations and vices of a rank that he will never attain.

For such vicsims there is very little pity and no respect—not even that of Lord Brougham, who has a great veneration for everything, if we may take his own word for it. But the real cause of the failure of the University of London as a place of education, is not the "vulgarity" of London merchants. They are not all England, and cannot hold in their hands the success or failure of a great institution. A slight intimation of the cause of the "effect defective" was given by Lord Brougham himself in the scoffing and indecent spirit in which he spoke of the religious instruction and the provisions for religious worship given at King's College. He denies that at such an institution religion can be taught; where and when is religious instruction to be sought if not in the places where the minds of men are formed?

In after life, and in the struggles in which men engage, the principles and practice of the Christian faith are too often forgotten if they have been imbibed, and will rarely be gained if not previously implanted. A man may wear the robes of office, and sit on the Woolsack itself, without possessing them. To say men cannot be trained religiously is a deplorable error; and it is because no attempt is made to do it, that Lord Brougham's pet establishment has been a signal failure. As men are, so are their works. The ex-Chancellor sneers at the students who would attend worship at King's College as "an ass:" the sneer was ill-placed, thoroughly "vulgar," and in every way disgusting. What is his Lordship's estimate of the "wisdom of the world" we know not; but he can hardly be ignorant of the authority that names one "in whose sight" it is "foolishness."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY AND THE ROYAL FAMILY. The Queen held a Court and Privy Council on Tuesday afternoon at Buckingham Palace. The Privy Council was attended by Prince Albert and the Ministers. At the Court the Earl of Erroll had an audience of her Majesty to present the ribbon and badge of the most ancient and noble order of the Thistle, worn by his father the late Earl of Erroll. The Royal dinner party in the evening at Buckingham Palace included Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Prince and Princess Nicholas Esterhazy, the Earl and Countess Delawarr and Lady Mary Sackville West, the Earl of Liverpool, Lady Augusta Bruce, Baroness de Speth, Lady Catherine Buckley, and the Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay. The Queen afterwards gave a concert Her Majesty's private band was in attendance at the Palace.

The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing on We nesday, in an open carriage and four. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took their usual walks and rides in the grounds of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Hon. Captain Gordon, and Major Bowater, Groom of the Bedchamber, accompanied by the Princess Mary, honoured the Floral Exhibition, in the Regent's Park, with a visit. The royal dinner party at Buckingham Palace included the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lorn, Lord George Lennox, and Captain Frances Seymour.

The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing on Thursday morning as early as half-past nine o'clock in an open carriage and four. The Royal carriage was preceded by outriders in undress liveries, but there was no escort. Her Majesty appeared in excellent health and spirits.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.—Her Majesty's birthday this year, in consequence of the near approach of an interesting event, will be celebrated on Tuesday, the 9th of June, instead of the 24th of May. Messengers from the Home-Office are now in daily attendance at Buckingham Palace.

On Monday last, his Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured Mr. Ottley with a visit, at his house in York-terrace, Regent's-park, to inspect his valuable collection of Paintings by the Old Masters. The Prince remained about three quarters of an hour; and, upon his departure, was pleased to express himself much gratified.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. May 20.

In a Congregation holden at the same time, the following degrees were conferred:

M.A.—Revs. Cadwallader, Coker, Adams, Merton.

B.A.—John Bridge, Charles Henry Trinity; Thomas Hext Bushnell, Pembroke; Thomas Hill Bakewell, Magdalen Hall.

Examinatio Publica in Disciplinis Mathematicis et Physicis die octavo mensis Junii habenda est.

R. WALKER, N. POCOCK, S. J. RIGAUD. } Examinatores in Disciplinis Mathematicis et Physicis.

May, 19, 1846.

CAMBRIDGE. May 16.

GONVILLE AND CAIUS COLLEGE.—On Monday, the 11th instant, the Thurlow Prize Essay, adjudged to C. J. Hare, LL.M., was by him recited in Chapel, at the commemoration of Dr. Wendy. The subject was "The History of the Plague since Dr. Caius's time."

THE NEW POTATO CROP. We regret to learn that the disease has manifested itself in several instances among the new potatoes, in Hants and Chorlton. One curious circumstance has been mentioned to us. Potatoes of the same kind were planted in the autumn, some apparently sound, and the others diseased. On an examination of the crops, it was found that though the disease existed in both, it was most developed in those grown from apparently sound tubercles. —Manchester Guardian.

ANOTHER MURDER.—On Monday (last week), a respectable farmer, aged 70 years, named Daniel Delany, who resided at Oldcourt, near Rathdowney, Queen's County, was inhumanly murdered under the following circumstances:—The deceased, who held a large tract of land from Mr. Robert Brought, of Cappagelan, King's County, was employed in measuring the premises on a tenant who owed large arrears of rent, and for which act he was followed from the market and murdered on the road not far from his residence. The person upon whom the ejectment was most served, and a stranger in that locality, are in custody, fully charged with the commission of this fearful crime.

HOLY THURSDAY. Thursday being Ascension day, or Holy Thursday, the usual parochial ceremonies observed in the metropolitan parishes in beating the bounds" of their respective boundaries, were gone through. The thoroughfares through the Inns of Court were stopped, and the entrances thereto guarded within and without with the usual degree of acute watchfulness—that any adjoining parish might not on bound-beating day paint its foot on non-parochial ground.

DOUGLAS JERROLD. An authentic Portrait of this very popular Writer, engraved on Steel by Henry Robinson, from a Drawing by Kenny Meadows, will shortly be issued

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—In answer to Lord BROUGHAM, Lord CANNING said that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into and report on the difference between Mr. Barry and Dr. Reid, and the best means of ventilating the new houses, had not yet given in their report, because the inquiry had been found of a more intricate nature than was at first supposed.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said that he would, on Thursday next, move that, at the rising of the House, it should adjourn till the following Thursday.

Lord Hardwicke and Lord Gough's Annuity Bills were read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

The Marquis of NORMANBY moved for some returns relative to murder and attempts to murder in Ireland, and condemned the illegality conduct of the Government.—The Earl Sir GRAHAM defended the Government.—The Marquis of NORMANBY did not press his motion, and the House adjourned at seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

Mr SMITH O'BRIEN.—Mr. O'CONNELL moved the consideration of a letter addressed by Mr Smith O'Brien to the Speaker. In this letter the hon. member stated that the Committee of Selection had been appointed according to the standing orders, and that it had no right to compel his attendance, and that his imprisonment was thus illegal, and claiming his discharge upon this ground. The Clerk then read the minutes of the proceedings which had led to the hon. member's imprisonment.—Mr. O'CONNELL then rose and said he should briefly state the circumstances of the case, and then move that the order of the 27th of April be discharged. The Chairman of the Committee of Selection (Mr. Estcourt) had made a statement which was not founded in fact. He meant not of course to impute wilful misstatement, but the order of the House had been obtained under a mistake. He contended that the Committee of Selection had not been properly formed, and therefore that it had not power to compel the attendance of Mr Smith O'Brien. Mr. O'Connell concluded by moving that the order of the 27th of April be discharged, and said, if he succeeded in that, he should move that Mr. S. O'Brien be discharged, which would follow as a matter of course.—Mr. ESTCOURT (Chairman of the Committee of Selection), said he should endeavour to prove that the Committee was duly appointed, and that they had properly discharged their duty to the House.—Mr. WARBURTON contended that the Committee of Selection had not been properly appointed, and that, therefore, its acts were nugatory.—Sir G. GREY contended that Mr Smith O'Brien had been committed for not obeying an order of the House, and not for refusing compliance with the orders of the Committee of Selection.—Mr. STAFFORD opposed the motion.—Mr. O'CONNELL shortly replied, and stated that whatever might be the fate of the question now before the House, he should move that Mr. Smith O'Brien be discharged.—Mr. WAKLEY denied that there were any precedents for the course that had been adopted. It was plain that a mistake had been committed, and, under such circumstances, he thought it would be best for the House to tell Mr. Smith O'Brien that he had not acted very wisely. But there had been mistakes on both sides, but that all parties were willing to shake hands, make up the matter, and let Mr Smith O'Brien go free. Upon a division, the numbers were:

For Mr. O'Connell's motion	.. ..	36
Against it	.. ..	180
Majority against the motion	.. ..	144

THE FACTORIES BILL.—The adjourned debate on this bill was resumed by Mr. BANKES, who spoke in support of the bill.

MEETINGS OF TENANT-FARMERS IN FAVOUR OF PROTECTION.

Two very numerous meetings were held at Wilde's Rooms, on Thursday, to take steps in favour of Protection. At one meeting, the Duke of Richmond presided; and at the other, the Duke of Buckingham. There were deputations present from upwards of two hundred country societies. The Morning Post devotes many columns to the speeches, and says that more than two thousand farmers were present, because they could not obtain admission; and that "a call adjourning the meeting" was raised as soon as the Duke of Richmond had taken the chair. "A storm in Hyde Park, and we'll fill it," was shouted by sundry sturdy agriculturists. In these circumstances, the Duke of Buckingham consented to take the chair in another room; and, in that, the same resolutions were carried with as much enthusiasm as in the room where the Duke of Richmond presided."

Lord Ingestre and Mr Disraeli spoke strongly against Free-Trade, and resolutions in favour of Protection were agreed to.

A resolution expressive of confidence that the House of Lords would reject the Corn Bill was also agreed to. Lord D'Eyncourt moved a resolution that the House of Lords would not mutilate the bill as to render a dissolution inevitable.

SHIPWRECK AT HARWICH. The Alert, Eskdale, of Whitby, from Oporto for Leudon, at ten o'clock on Tuesday night, got on the Long Sand, Harwich, and at six next morning she upset, when the master and four seamen took to the boat, and were, with one passenger, who was picked up on a spar, brought in to Ipswich by the smack Williams and Elizabeth, of Dartmouth. One seamen and eight passengers were drowned. When the master and crew left the Alert, she was about on her broadside, riding at anchor. The following is a list of persons drowned:—Mr. Robert Anderson, seaman; Hannah Ness, blacksmith, wife, and three children—Mr. Hardgrave and two children—passengers.

THE LATE ASSASSINATION IN DUBLIN.—On Tuesday night, Mr. Bedford resumed, at Lambeth, Carey-street, the adjourned inquest on the body of the unfortunate Blewitt, when, Louisa Cooke having been heard, the Jury, after considerable deliberation, returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against John Grallon, the young man who shot the deceased.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

THE UNITED STATES. The Great Western has arrived at Liverpool with New York papers to the 7th inst. Nothing important has occurred, but it is believed that the Oregon notice has been officially sent by this vessel to the American Minister in London, with instructions to convey it to the British Government. Advices reach us from Mexico to the 28th ult. The latest accounts from Rio Grande state that Matamoras was blockaded by General Taylor.

METROPOLITAN NEWS

PRINTERS PENSION SOCIETY.

On Monday afternoon, the annual dinner of this society was held at the London Tavern, when nearly one hundred gentlemen assembled; Lord Dudley Stuart in the chair, supported by Mr. Bannatyne, Esq., B. Taylor, Esq; Rev. Mr. Laing; Y. Fuggles, Esq., &c. The musical arrangements were under the management of Mr. Barsby, assisted by Master Norman, and Messrs. Howe, Coward, and Hudson, who gave the "Benedictus" in very fine style. After the usual loyal toasts,

Lord D Stuart said that now that the usual toasts had been drunk, he felt himself called upon to propose, as the first of the particular attention of the gentlemen then assembled, the healths of two distinguished patrons of the society, whose progress they were then met to assist, namely, "The Duke of Cambridge and the Duke of Northumberland." They formed two Royal Dukes who were known for his benevolent and charitable disposition, and the latter, as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, was one who promoted learning in every sense; and he, therefore, felt great pleasure in drinking the healths of these two distinguished noblemen, patrons of the Printers' Pension Society.

The Rev. Mr. Laing gave the toast of "The Company of Stationers," for their liberality to the society.

B. Taylor, Esq., responded to the toast.

Lord Dudley Stuart then said that they had now come to what must be considered the most interesting toast of the evening—the health of "The Printers' Pension Society." To promote the object of that society was the end of their meeting on that occasion, which was a good and worthy end—that end was charity, and the relief of distress, and he trusted he was addressing those who could not provide for themselves—to bring consolation to the aged and infirm, who were deserving of assistance, and who, after a life of toil and honourable industry, found themselves reduced to a state of destitution. He considered that this society was worthy of support because its object was charity to the aged, the infirm, and the bereaved (hear), who were deserving of the sympathy and the assistance of all Christian persons. The objects of this society were peculiarly dear to the printer? The diving, the poisoner, the man of business, the man of pleasure, the grave, the gay, the old, the young, the rich, the poor—all, in their turn, and almost every day, they were all in want of, and required, the services of the printer. (Hear.) Nothing could be carried on without his aid; and even while they were sitting in that room enjoying themselves, hundreds and thousands of printers were engaged in their and was employed for their instruction, amusement, and benefit. And would they be indifferent to the claims of persons so occupied, when this occupation had, through circumstances over which they had no control, failed to provide for them a provision in their declining years? Was it possible that, after having devoted so much advantage from their labours, they could be content merely to pay what had been necessary, and what they could not help paying them? (Hear.) "The Printers' Pension Society" was then drunk with considerable applause.

R. Taylor, Esq., then proposed the health of the Chairman, who shortly responded; and afterwards gave, "The Press—the fountain of knowledge, and the high work of freedom!" "the Authors of Great Britain!" "the Public Press!" "the Master Printers" and may they zealously unite in aiding the objects of the Society!" "the Treasurer and Trustees!" "the stewards!" and "the Ladies!" which, the secretary of the evening were then read, announcing to the amount of £83, among which was that of £50 from Lake James Bansard, Esq.

THE ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.

The annual dinner of the friends and supporters of this Society took place on Friday evening, at the London Tavern, under the auspices of Mr. Baron Platt, who presided, and was supported, right and left, by Sir George Largpent, Bart., Mr. Sergeant Jones, Montagu Gore, Esq., M.P., B. B. Cabbell, Esq., Fred Somes, Esq., the Rev. W. H. Jones, H. F. Richardson, Esq., Luke James Hansard, Esq., William Tonkes, Esq., Richard Bethell, Esq., Q.C., S. J. Aldrich, Esq., &c. The handsome room in which the entertainment was served were an unusually brilliant appearance. The presence of "the ladies" contributed much to the evening's enjoyment. Immediately under the gallery was stationed a military band, which played during dinner-time; and there was an effective corps of glee singers, under the leadership of Mr Braham.

The Chairman commenced the duties by proposing the usual loyal toasts, which were received as they always ought to be. He then rose to give the toast which related to the more immediate object of their meeting—"Prosperity to the Royal General Annuity Society." He said that the Society was established in 1827, for the purpose of allowing permanent annuities to deceased merchants and others, to their widows, and to the daughters of persons belonging to such class of society. The annuity proposed at that period was granted at £2 5s. per month to the man, and £1 10s per month to the woman. The scale of contribution was fixed at £5 5s. for life, or 15s. annually—the donor of £100 to enjoy certain privileges at elections. The learned Baron, after detailing the progress of the Society both in misfortune and prosperous circumstances, attributed its progress to the exertions of the secretary, Mr. Secretan, aided as he was by several highly influential individuals; and he had no doubt that, under its present management, it would continue to exercise the good in a greater degree than it had hitherto been able to effect. The Chairman then adverted to the present while had attended the efforts of the Committee at the last meeting, and concluded by expressing a hope that the present occasion might be even more beneficial to them than the preceding one. Mr. Baron Platt then finished a long and eloquent address, by proposing "Prosperity to the Royal General Annuity Society, and may it flourish for ever." This toast was responded to with the most enthusiastic cheers.

The health of the Chairman was then given, and drank with equal zeal, and

Mr. Baron Platt eloquently returned thanks.

Various other toasts were then proposed, amongst which were those of the "Stewards" and the "Secretary." Several songs were beautifully given by Mr. George

Mr. Richardson, Esq., ably responded to the toast of the Stewards, whilst S. J. Aldrich, Esq., returned thanks for that of the Secretary. Each of these gentlemen made a forcible appeal in favour of the society, and contributed to the realisation of a handsome subscription in favour of the fund. The contributions, during the evening, amounted to upwards of £500, amongst the lady subscribers was Mrs. F. N. Richardson, £10 10s.; and amongst the rewards' lists, was that of J. H. Thompson, Esq., amounting to £37 3s. During the evening, the Chairman spoke of the condescension of her Majesty, who, through the solicitation of Mr. Aldrich, the secretary, had not only consented to become a patroness of the society, but also sent a donation of thirty guineas, as an earnest of good-will. The founder of the society was the father of F. N. Richardson, Esq., formerly the secretary, but now one of the directors. The Chairman's last toast was "The Ladies," but the festivity was kept up later by a part of the company.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE NORTH WING OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—On Wednesday the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the north wing of University College Hospital was performed by the President of the Council of the College, Lord Brougham, in the presence of a large assemblage of spectators. The noble Lord arrived about half-past four o'clock, and was ushered into the Council-room of the College, where a procession was formed, and immediately proceeded to the northern side of the hospital, in Gower-street, over which a marquee had been erected. His Lordship was accompanied by the Marquis of Northampton and the Bishop of Norwich, and followed by the Earl of Auckland, Vice-President; Sir George Grey, M.P.; Mr. Cheriton, M.P.; Mr. J. A. Goldsmid, the treasurer; Sir George Ryan, the other members of the Council, the professors in their gowns, Mr. Alfred Aingor, the architect, &c. The band of the Coldstream Guards, who were stationed at the steps leading to the portico of the College, playing the National Anthem. On the arrival of the procession within the marquee, Lord Brougham deposited the coins contained in a tin box, handed to him by Mr. Atkinson, the secretary, in the cavity in the stone, and proceeded with the ceremony of laying it. This having been completed, the Lord Bishop of Norwich offered a prayer for the success of the institution, and the procession returned to the College, much to the disappointment of those assembled, who had anticipated an address from Lord Brougham. This additional wing will cost £3485, and will, when finished, provide fifty more beds.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—On Wednesday afternoon, the annual "appointment," as it is called, of St. Paul's School, was held in the school-room of that institution, which was filled by a select audience (chiefly the parents and friends of the pupils), amongst whom there was, as usual, a large concourse of ladies. After the recitation of the prize compositions, the head-master, Mr. Kynaston, addressed the successful candidates, Messrs. Clay and Prescott, in a speech of some length, warmly congratulating the merits of their compositions, and congratulating them upon the triumphs which they had so deservedly obtained. Mr. Kynaston then delivered some more substantial testimonials of his satisfaction, in the shape of some elegantly bound works in the learned languages. The prize poem, in the whole, successful, and elicited loud applause from the "gallery." Some were but tamely, and others very dramatically delivered.

FALL IN THE PRICE OF BREAD.—On Tuesday, in the neighbourhood of Whitechapel, Blackfriars-road, and other poor districts, large posters were exhibited, announcing "Glorious News," "Tremendous Fall in the Price of Bread," "Repeal of the Corn Laws," "Success to Free Trade," &c. &c., the cause of which statement appeared to be that the price of bread had fallen to the extent of 1½d. namely, from 7½d. to 6d., and from 7d. to 5½d. per loaf.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS. The deaths registered in the metropolis during the week ending 16th May, amounted to 838, births 1399

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles
Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles. L'ALLEGRO.

We were about to say that this, being the week preceding the eventful Derby, was

Life a phantasma, or a blessed dream,

And so we should have said, but such is not the fact. That is the merry month—May—laughing May—and, with the sword of Damocles hanging over their heads, men metropolitan men (which means the whole human race, mankind rush into cities when Nature is passing her ambrosial life in woods and fields), at such a time, would fling care and anxiety to the winds. Why, it was but Tuesday last, that we saw the Omnibus Box at the Opera in a roar; albeit, there must have been a little history of despair appertaining to its occupants. What had broke, during this earnest season, the chivalry of England have had cause to peruse? Yet did the magna pars of that aristocratic recruit seem as suffering from a Sting of any kind? So far from it, they went out of the way to express a marvellous delight at matter but could scarce have moved the mirth of a school-boy. Some how a row began because the ballet had been altered, and Perrot the magician of entre-chats the enfant chers—with a face like the knob of a Dutch cheese—came on to remonstrate. Then rose from pit to gallery a dreadful yell, and Perrot, en ville as a grim bandit, flew before it, tearing his hair as he vanished indignant at the wing! Yet should have seen the Omnibus people

Bow more peep through their coats
And bellow like parrots at a bagpipe

In many of the minor sports, there have been pleasant passages during the last few days. The Ariel Rowing Club had a "scratch match," as it is termed, from Vauxhall to Putney, on Tuesday, between three of its boats; and the river was well studded with craft to witness the umpire. It blew a whole gale of wind, and, during the voyage, the little fleet was all but swamped. However, it surmounted all its hazards—the victory eventually being an easy one for light blue—the colours of Messrs. Gill, Feversham, and C. Cooper

In Cricket there was a little doing, and the pedestrians were not idle; but the all-engrossing affair of the week is to say nothing of the great Sailing Match on the river, elsewhere dealt with according to notice of these columns—was the Derby panic—a consternation in locomotion equal to that of the rabbits of a Scotch or autumn last. It is scarce necessary here to observe that the first-rate form of an animal called Sting—name of comet!—at two years old, elevated him at once to the penultimate of the market for the Epsom contest, to the decided exclusion of Mundig next. During the summer, he was stated to have been in part purchased by a gentleman of the name of Gill—and, as his property, he ran and won. Subsequently, he was announced to have passed into the hands of Lord Edward Russell; and, during the whole winter and spring, he has stood in the odds at an almost unprecedented price.

The public have backed him for enormous sums: the public is now told by the official organ at Tattersall's, that it is not at all probable he will even start for the Derby. "His backers are not in the sanguine even of having a start for their money." In the horse here-to-fore some twenty natural causes have let actually paid the debt of nature? His creditors those who believed in the honour, as well as the honesty, of his representatives have a peremptory claim for satisfaction on his head. At present, as they themselves permit the matter to stand, a grave public wrong appears to be perpetrated. Surely, an English Nobleman one of a stock which has furnished the very mirror of her gentles—will not allow his name for an instant to be mixed up with a transaction to which attaches the shadow of doubt, the possibility of dishonour. At present the Sting mystery is all of unpleasant reflection

THE DERBY.

The Field on Wednesday next will probably be formed out of the following h

Bonnacle	.. ..	..	Kent	Izzo	.. ..
Bonnacle	.. ..	..	J. Scott	King Charles	.. ..
Brother to Sir Henry	.. ..	..	Dawson	Little Wonder Boy	.. ..
Brother to Valentine	.. ..	..	Sherwood	Malakim	.. ..
Cantley	.. ..	..	Pettit	Port cork	.. ..
Capuce	.. ..	..	Dawson	Pot-luck	.. ..
Collingwood	.. ..	..	Dilly	Pyrenie	.. ..
Crown Prince	.. ..	..	L. Day	Pyrrhus the First	.. ..
Dandy	.. ..	..	Filbert	Ratalpha	.. ..
Duke of Richmond	.. ..	..	Peck	Sir Tatton Sykes	.. ..
Fancy Boy	.. ..	..	Dawson	Sting	.. ..
Free Lance	.. ..	..	Taylor	Tom Tulloch	.. ..
Hebrus	.. ..	..	Herbert	Twig	.. ..
Holloway	.. ..	..	Chifney	West Countryman	.. ..
Ironwitch	.. ..	..	Beresford

			VERY DOUBTFUL.
Ackwright	.. ..	..	Taylor	Prospect	.. ..
Confidence	.. ..	..	Sadler	Sharpshooter	.. ..
Fortune	.. ..	..	Beresford	Standee	.. ..
Hamlet	.. ..	..	Horsley	Spikehead	.. ..
[illegible] Ham	.. ..	..	L. Day

Beresford	.. ..	..	Hildesley	.. ..	..
Hildesley	.. ..	..	Robert	.. ..	..
Robert	.. ..	..	Lord	.. ..	..

THE AQUATIC SEASON.—EVENTS FIXED. No less than twenty-seven regattas, including various club races and matches are fixed, and the season promises to be one of the most brilliant on record. The Eton regatta will take place on the 4th of June. The Royal Thames Yacht Club Challenge Cup match will come off on the 5th of the same month. The Royal Mersey Yacht Club will open their season on the same day. The 25th and 26th of June and the 1st of July are the days fixed for the Thames Grand Regatta. The Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta will open at Ryde on the 11th of August, and will be continued on the two following days.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The retrogression of Sting was the most remarkable feature of the betting this afternoon: 8 to 1 was had freely against him, notwithstanding the enormous sums that have been sent into the market in the course of the last fortnight for the purpose of keeping him in place. Like Brocardo, he will carry too much money to have any chance of winning the Derby. Of the other horses returned below, Sir Tatton Sykes, Tom Tulloch, Hamdrum, Fancy Boy, Peri colt, Poynton, and The Conqueror were most in demand; in fact, no others were really in favour. Last prices:—

DERBY

12 to 1 agst J. Day's ist	25 to 1 agst Crown Prince	66 to 1 agst The Traverser
5 to 1 — Sir Tatton Sykes	25 to 1 — Poynton (t)	66 to 1 — Annie colt
take 11 to 2	25 to 1 — Pyrrhus the First, t	66 to 1 — Maid of Hampton
7 to 1 — Tom Tulloch (t)	40 to 1 — Nutfield (t)	colt
8 to 1 — Sting	40 to 1 — The Premier	66 to 1 — Malcolm (t)
10 to 1 — Hamdrum (t)	40 to 1 — The Conqueror	66 to 1 — L'Hirondelle colt
11 to 1 — Fancy Boy (t)	50 to 1 — Twig (t)	66 to 1 — Holl-way
22 to 1 — Peri colt	50 to 1 — Cantley (t)	70 to 1 — Cymbyne
25 to 1 — Brocardo	50 to 1 — Izzo (t)	100 to 1 — Draco

OAKS.

6 to 1 agst Vanish	10 to 1 agst Slate to Ballikaele (Perdita filly)
8 to 1 — Mundicant	1 18 to 1 — Lady Coelia

THURSDAY.—There was no material change in the positions of the leading horses, but Sting showed a little improvement in Pyrrhus the First, the Peri colt, and the Conqueror. Sting was nominally at 20 to 1, but twice those odds have been laid, and would be laid again if anybody was really disposed to back him: his chance is quite gone, and it is doubtful whether his backers will have a start for their money.

DERBY

4 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes	20 to 1 agst Peri colt	40 to 1 agst Cantley
13 to 2 — Tom Tulloch	20 to 1 — Pyrrhus the First	40 to 1 — Gingor
10 to 1 — Fancy Boy	25 to 1 — The Conqueror	40 to 1 — Twig
13 to 1 — Hamdrum	25 to 1 — Crown Prince	50 to 1 — Malcolm
20 to 1 — Sting	33 to 1 — The Premier	50 to 1 — Wilfred

OAKS.

6 to 1 agst Vanish	14 to 1 agst Osprey	25 to 1 agst Ukraine
6 to 1 — Mundicant	10 to 1 — Perdita filly (t)	36 to 1 — Holl Cook

ROWING MATCH.

The Ariel scratch four-cared race, for silver medals, from Vauxhall to Putney, was rowed on Tuesday, at half-past six o'clock. The following were the crews:—

LIGHT BLUE.	PINK.	RED.
1. Gill	1. Frisby	1. H. Cooper
2. Feversham	2. Williams	2. Dajlan
3. C. Cooper	3. Dodd	3. T. Groves
Allen (stroke)	J. Cooper (stroke)	Hansell (stroke)
Churchill (steerer)	P. Groves (steerer)	Yeo (steerer)

The start was well effected by the Royal Academy, who officiated as umpire. For some distance the crews kept beautifully together, Red slightly leading to the Belcrave Dock, but off the Red House Light Blue drew gradually ahead, and went through Battersea-bridge six lengths in advance. In crossing from Battersea Church the boats were all filled, the wind blowing a perfect hurricane down the river. Light Blue still kept the lead, and came in a winner by about twenty lengths, Pink beating the other by about as much. The winners rowed in a beautiful cutter, built for the Trident Club by Noulton and Wyld.

CHANTILLY SPRING RACES.

There's not, for pas-sang colt or filly,
A corner in France like fair Chantilly.
Twice here Xenocrat Orleans trod
Established Gallita's "Godswood"—burst
From side to side of prejudices made
Two English sporting-turf, and paid
A princely courtesy to all
Who loved the sport—both great and small

Away! before the proud chateau
Wait lightning speed, the racers go,
And, wave upon towards the tranquil stream,
Their nerves now strained to bursting seem
Over they go, bright! The course there
Shall prove or has a superstar.

Has often caused the steed's despair
How to the win-ing-post they fly,
While shouts resound white and black,
And France's fair—her proud dames
The victor steed with plaudits greet

'Tis a sound policy of France
Her triumphs on the turf's advance.
For then, in the clever head
The bottle's gained by jhuck of steed
Has scarcy ever shall be found
A match for those of British ground.
The steed on lane—on hack on see—
Shall prove or has a superstar.

The Chantilly Spring Races commenced on Thursday (last week), and there was abundance of sport. The races lasted three days: but the first day was the least important, and the second day, the running was very good, but there were few visitors to witness it. The Queen Blanche Plate did not fill, and consequently was not run for. In a handicap, for which thirteen horses were entered, Waggs Filis was the speedy winner. For a match between Tiger, Sauvage, and Discord (without hurdles), a good race took place, and the horses came in in the order in which we have named them. A hack race took place between Waggs Filis, ridden by M. Dillot, 137 lbs.; Terme, M. de Normanville, 140 lbs.; and Polisson-d'Avril, M. Ricardo, 833 lbs.; in which the last-named horse was the winner. The prize for it is rare was a group in bronze, of monkeys riding a hurdle-race, and the race was the most picturesque, designated La Course de Singes. After the race for a hunter's Plate was won by M. Fauquet's Diplomatist, beating seven others easily. The weather was dry all day, but heavy.

The Annual Stakes of 1200f; with 200f entrance, for horses, mares, and geldings, of all ages, bred in France.

Prince M. de Beauvesan's br m Error, 5 yrs, 117 lbs	(Chifney)	1
Prince M. de Beauvesan's ch c Job, 3 yrs, 84 lbs	..	2
Mr. Carter's b f Boune-Chance, 4 yrs, 110 lbs	..	3

Error took the lead, and kept it, winning without any difficulty. The winner was claimed.

The Haras Plate of 5000f, for thorough-bred horses and mares foaled in France.

M A Aumont's br c Flixmill, as walked over.

The Felonse Plate of 1800f; 100f entries; half forfeit.

M. C. de Versalha's br c Clubstick	(Hall)	1
Baron N. de Rothschild's br c Ulm	..	2
M. A. Fould's br f Mariquita	..	3

Sir Gerald Clubstick ran together to the stables, when the filly gave way, and appeared to be beaten: she came again, however, at the finish, making a race of it with Clubstick, and came in first. A complaint, however, was made against the jockey of having crossed the second horse, which was allowed by the judge, and she was declared to be distanced. The filly did certainly swerve, and went against Clubstick, but no blame can be attached to the jockey

The Sache Subscription Plate of 1400f; 100f entries; half forfeit.

M de Pontalba's br f Tronquette	(Hall)	1
Prince M. de Beauvesan's br f Mi Carême	..	2
Duke de Nemours' br f Whitecraft	..	3
Duke de Nemours' b f Girandole	..	4

Tronquette won this race with great ease. She is a likely two year old, and may prove a customer for next year's Derby.

THIRD AND LAST DAY.—MAY 17.

So much carriage company was never before assembled at any day's running at Chantilly. The fineness of the morning had induced a number of fashionables to post down from Paris, and the stands presented an exceedingly gay and animated appearance. The Duke de Nemours, the Prince de Salerno, the Duke de Montpensier, and Ibrahim Pacha, with a large suite, were present, and remained to the close. Unfortunately just before the running commenced, the sky darkened, and the rain fell for the greater part of the day. It will be seen by the account given below, that both the favourites were defeated by an outsider, on whom nobody seemed to have cast a thought. Exceedingly large sums of money and, therefore, change hands on the great benefit of the riders. The Hurdle Race was not contended for, Hack, ridden by Mr. Ricardo, having cantered over alone, the other horse entered, Grey Hercules, being drawn.

The Nemours' Plate of 3000f, for thorough-bred horses and mares of all ages, bred in France and Belgium. Heats

Baron A. de Rothschild's br h Drummer, 6 yrs, 126 lbs	(Flatman)	1
Duke de Nemours' bl c Seamper, 4 yrs, 116 lbs	..	2
Prince M. de Beauvesan's br f Confiance, 4 yrs, 116 lbs	..	3

First Heat.—A capital race. Snavita, Missy, and Scamper, went off together, the latter leading. Going round the second turn, Vanité took the first place for a second, but, immediately after, Scamper all of a sudden passed the other horses, and ran head and head with Snavita to the turn home, where he turned wide, and lost ground. Snavita, Vanité, and Drummer all kept together, and by the only three in the race, but the Duke's jockey, when half way up, brought his horse on a line with the rest, and the four, nearly abreast, had a regular set-to with whip and spur to the finish, Scamper winning cleverly by half a length; Vanité beating Confiance by about the same distance. Drummer did not try for the heat

Second Heat—Scamper made the running, but at the first turn Vanité passed him, and kept the lead to the hollow. When the horses again appeared in sight, Scamper was leading, Vanité and Drummer at his heels. At the turn home Drummer went in front, and won easily by three or four lengths, Snavita being second.

Third heat. Missy jumped off in front, closely followed by Drummer, who at the turn home took first place, and won easily by two lengths. The others were altogether out of the race.

The Omse Plate of 2000f, given by the Council-General; entrance 250f; 100f forfeit.

Count A. de Morny's b f Predestinée . . walked over.

The Derby or Jockey Club Plate of 7000f, with 600f entrance; half forfeit:

Baron N. de Rothschild's br c Mendon (Flatman)	..	1
M A. Aumont's br c Premier-Août (Pantal)	..	2

Betting before the race: Liverpool even against the field, 3 to 1 agst Philipshall; 4 to 1 agst Premier-Août; 12 to 1 agst Cubstick; 14 to 1 agst Meudon; 20 to 1 agst any other.

The weather cleared up just as the horses came out to take their preparatory gallop, and continued fine to the end of the day's sport. In drawing lots for places, Philipshall had the advantage of the card, Mariquita being next, and Liverpool third. The race itself was of a most exciting description. After one false start, they went off at a slashing pace, Mariquita in front, Premier Août second, St. Nitouche third, Liverpool and Meudon lying together close up. As they neared the stand the first time Flatman was holding in Meudon as hard as he could. By the time they had got to the other side of the course, near the stables, the talking was awful. Here Mariquita had enough of it, and Premier Août went in front, followed by Liverpool, St. Nitouche running a good third. Meudon was still held back patiently by Flatman, and kept the fourth place. On mounting the little hill out of the dip, Liverpool was first, Premier Août next, and then Meudon. At the turn, however, Premier Août again took first place, running very strong, Liverpool being second. The victory now appeared to be certain to M. Aumont, as both his horses were leading. Meudon, however, kept gradually creeping up, and, at the very post, Flatman made his effort, and, lifting forward the horse, brought him in so much on a line with Premier-Août that it was impossible for the lookers-on to say who had won. The stands were in a second emptied, and the demand of "Who is the winner?" was universal. At length the judge's decision was known, and Mendon was declared to have passed the winning-post first. This result caused the greatest excitement, and many insisted that Premier-Août had won. Premier-Août's jockey, it appeared to us, wishing to make way for Liverpool, which, of the two, was the horse intended by the stable to win, and whose jockey was using both whip and spur as liberally as he could to bring about that end, pulled his horse to the near-side, and the animal swerving just at the finish, gave the victory to Mendon. Flatman waited throughout the race most patiently, and by his riding contributed greatly to the fortunate result. Had Premier-Août's jockey gone straight on, without thinking of Liverpool, the probability is that the termination would have been different. Fitzpellah, and the Duke's filly, came in together fourth, the latter having run well, though a little lame at starting, and, we heard, without much training. Made Rothschild's horses had at various times carried off all the other great prizes, but this is the first time that one of them has been a Derby winner. Value of the stakes about 20,000f.

THE CHANTILLY SPRING MEETING.

THE ROAD.

THE RACE.

F I N E A R T S.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—"EVENING."—PAINTED BY MR. DODGSON.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

We have engraved from this [illegible] is one of Mr. Dod[illegible] upon this beau[illegible] [illegible]ms costume of the [illegible]rseless, set off by the archite[illegible]ural composition of the w[illegible]er-gate, make up a [illegible]lightful scene of artistic excellence.

[illegible]ANS.

[illegible]

The second Illu[illegible] M[illegible]W
Denying the Mendicant F[illegible]
We add the action of the p[illegible]

[illegible]ff was assailed by severe sickness, and reports were circu[illegible]d of

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

(Continued from last week.)

The power of colour has not deserted the [illegible]glish school. It has distinguished our painters since the time of Re[illegible] [illegible] in the thraldom of the rigid [illegible]ooms this year. The first of the three may appeal to us on [illegible] media of pictorial representation—colour—[illegible] from carelessness or thankfulness, and never even att[illegible] harmonious and beautiful combinations of hues and tones [illegible] analogous to beauty of form and propriety of [illegible] tures, the "Grape-gatherer" and the "Seek-be[illegible] [illegible] by the same or other hands, in the Exhi[illegible] [illegible] in the morning, when you can take your stand and g[illegible] terrupted by the stream of visitors [illegible] leaves a sense [illegible] that communicated by the very highest works of art.

[illegible]rous one of giant-[illegible]s power of brush, such as Rubens always produces, but [illegible]nder, mellow, and almost dr[illegible]y, such as flows from a symphony [illegible], heard in the dim light of a cathedral. [illegible]n with the "Bathing Venus" of Titian, [illegible]glishman stands nobly by the side of [illegible]

[illegible] pretentious pictures, although all criticism of them [illegible]d from any other central point than that of colour, [illegible] in the other qualities—of drawing and imagi[illegible] [illegible]r do not aim at expression, we have [illegible] [illegible]s, masterly colouring of the "Judgment [illegible]arity; and the work provokes most [illegible] [illegible]allery. "Circe" and the flowery[illegible]r, it seems to us, to either of the two

[illegible] position among our artists, in [illegible] There [illegible]ife of the man, which [illegible] both in quantity and in style of treatment. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]rd Douw. So judged, it may be classed [illegible] of honour among the cabinet works of [illegible] [illegible]mbination of only the richest [illegible]d these are so [illegible]ly managed, as to leave no [illegible] In this point, the [illegible] is a study for all younger,

[illegible]ure any criticism. We feel something, in looking at his pictures, which, amidst [illegible]ous temptations to ridicule and fun held out by their apparent extrava[illegible] [illegible] to a respectful, silent shake o[illegible] the head. We do not understand the pictorial oracle: to those, perhaps, who can rightly question it, it will give answers full of eloquent meaning.

EXHIBITION OF THE [illegible]ER COLOUR SOCIETY.—"WICKLIFF DENYING THE MENDICANT FRIARS."—PAINTED BY H. WELSELL.

In landscape, again, the schools of England have long held the highest ground. It seems as if the painter's loving appreciation of the nature round him was peculiarly akin to the homeliness of the English imagination. In reading the life of Constable, for example, one is struck by the intense and deep love which to him hallowed the flat meadows and misty river banks of our midland counties, and which would have languished for the cool greys and greens among the sun-lit hills and vivid skies of Italy

Lee, among the Academicians, has an English sympathy with the tender green of spring, and the play of light among leaves, which is apparent through the somewhat feeble handling and imperfect arrangement of his transcripts of nature. He has the real feeling, but it does not inform hand and eye in him as it did in Constable

Creswick may be classed with Lee. We cannot deny the careful, almost finikin fidelity of his workmanship, but there is something small about it—something which creates an impression of feebleness, and throws him afar off from the Flemish Ruysdael or Hobbima, or our own Morland and Constable Had poor W. Müller lived, he would have been crowned king of English landscape painters. Had his artistic tastes been less discursive, he might, even in his lifetime, have grasped the sceptre. There is nothing we have ever seen in Wilder-Colour art like his Welsh and Devonshire sketches: and he was one of the few who understood the difference between studies and pictures. Collins, again, with his unquestionable feeling for nature, and his striving after a true representation of her effects, falls into a sentimental style that offends us; it may be very energy. We cannot praise him with the heartiness we could have felt in former years. We have heard that he is a sufferer from ill-health: if so, this is a sufficient reason for some short-coming, and a valuable defence against any harsh criticism.

Danby stands alone as a landscape painter, as distinct from a painter of views from nature. He has three pictures in the Exhibition; two of them, "Sunset," and "The Dawn of Day," spread unconsciously and powerfully to the imagination The second is full of the mysterious solemnity of the time when light creeps over darkness. A long, cold, yellow streak on the watery horizon announces the coming day, which has no dominion over the shadowed foreground. In the "Sunrise," the twilight, "streamed through many a golden bar," has already melted into morn, and the red sun thats the ripple that rolls murmuring in upon the shore of the lake. The painting of the skies in both pictures is the very triumph of art. We have never, in painting, seen anything so lustrous, so liquid, and so ample a pale; and this is the more remarkable, as there is a certain vigorous hardness in the foreground genius usually introduced, to present contrast.

Stanfield has several of his cleanly painted landscapes. There is a consciousness about the arrangement of everyth ng in his pictures which produces a pain ful remote because of the unacknowledge fraud by that the style does not affect our imagination in any way whatever. We confess the skill, and there's an end

So with David Roberts, and his Eastern views, with their hot lights and cool shadows, worked under the same system, and prepared in aid of the same fraud. Such pictures as these do not impress us as realities. Probably, they are admirable representations, as far as form and colour, taken separately, can go: but there is a want of the nameless power, which gives the blister unity of significance to forms and colours, and rivets an impression on heart and brain. Fill the original and the picture with the intelligence manifested both in choice and treatment of subject, and for a certain disdain of petty trickery, which might be more common, with advantage to our artists.

Mr. Ridgeon delights us by showing us what a morning critic calls "the milk and water of human kindness." The water predominates. We should not have suggested this of Mr Redgrave as years ago.

Mr. Eddis's simple picture of "Romeo and Juliet" is unfavourably hung, and produced upon us the impression of a coldness of tone, no doubt intended to mark the morning (for the lovers are struggling to part), but not judiciously counterbalanced

Of Mr. Dyce's unfortunate piece of "Dead Alive Germanism" we have already expressed an unqualified opinion, and our real regret that so powerful a man should have fallen into so false a style.

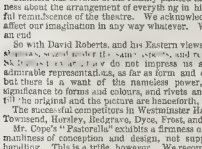
Mr. Frost's "Actæon and Diana" only wants richness and gradation in the flesh tones, to add its beauty of form and the sweetness of its heads, to have made it a masterly picture instead of a remarkable effort for a young man, which it is, even with this important drawback

We cannot say anything in favour of Mr. Zephaniah Bell's "Scene from the Gospel of St. Luke."

(To be continued.)

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD RODNEY.



The Right Hon. and Rev. Spencer, Lord Rodney, died on the 15th inst., aged 61. The mortality in the noble family of Rodney is most remarkable: since the year 1842, there have been no less than four inheritors of the title. The Nobleman whose death we record, was third son of George, second Lord Rodney, by Anne, his wife, daughter and co-heir of the Right Hon. Thomas Harley; and grandson of the famous Admiral, George Brydges Rodney, whose Memorials victory over the Comte de Grasse achieved for him a Coronet. The late Lord succeeded to the honours at the decease of his brother, Thomas-James, fourth Baron, 30th October, 1843; and, as he was never married, the Peerage now devolves on his nephew, Robert Dennet Rodney, an Officer in the Scots Fusilier Guards, who is only son of the late Captain the Hon. Robert Rodney, by Anne, his wife, youngest daughter and co-heir of Thomas Dennet, Esq., of Lock Ashurst, Sussex.

MAJOR-GENERAL FYERS, C.B.

Peter Fyers, Esq., Major-General in the Army, Colonel-Commandant of the 7th Battalion, Royal Regiment of Artillery, and a Companion of the Bath, died at Charlton, near Woolwich, on the 17th instant, aged 76.

This gallant officer, who entered the Royal Artillery in 1793, and attained the rank of Major-General in 1837, served the campaigns of 1794 and 1795, in Holland, and was employed, in mortar ships, on the French coast, during the years 1796, 1797, and 1798. He subsequently accompanied Nelson to Naval in Russia, and shortly after received a wound in the attack on the flotilla at Boulogne in 1801. In 1807 he participated in the operations against Copenhagen, and was at the siege of Flushing; and in 1813-14, served in the campaigns in the Netherlands, including the attack on Bergen-op-Zoom.

SAFE UP A CHURCH.—On Tuesday Mr. Pullen sold by public auction the church of St. Benet Fink, Threadneedle-street, the interior fittings of which were sometime since similarly disposed of. The church was erected by Sir Christopher Wren, in 1674, and in the year 1842 for the purpose of forming the new premises to the Royal Exchange. The six stone columns with carved capitals supporting the sides of the building and supporting the roof realised £11 18s. 6d.; the stained windows at the east end having been purchased a short time ago by the Rev. Mr. Williamson, for the sum of £95, brought £2. No other lot was worthy of notice.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—The Rev. Henry George Liddell, M.A., student of Christ Church, Oxford, and senior proctor of the University, has been appointed to the head mastership of Westminster School, rendered vacant by the retirement of the Rev. Dr. Williamson.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—We regret exceedingly to learn that his Grace the Duke of Wellington has been placed in considerable danger through the reckless misconduct of the driver of a private Brougham carriage. His Grace was returning from the residence of the Marquis of Douro, in Upper Belgrave-street, whither he had previously accompanied the noble daughter-in-law, the Marchioness of Douro, when the occurrence took place The noble Duke had reached the top of Grosvenor-place, and was in the act of crossing Piccadilly, when the carriage alluded to, which was proceeding at a very rapid rate, drove directly against him, and, but for the presence of mind of a gentleman who was following closely behind his Grace, and fortunately pulled him suddenly back, the noble Duke would in all probability have been knocked down and run over. The circumstance was observed by only one or two individuals, neither of whom appear to have taken the precaution of stopping the driver, who is described to have been greatly to blame. His Grace acknowledged the kindness of the gentleman in assisting him, and proceeded to Apsley House, apparently unconcerned. The staff of the carriage appeared to an eye-witness to have slightly touched the noble Duke's chest. The gentleman in question is stated to be Lieut. Robert Thomas, of the Royal Navy.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The programme at the fifth Concert on Monday last was executed with remarkable precision and éclat, before a crowded audience, and again were the Directors called to refuse the offer of extra tickets. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's Sinfonia, in C minor, No 1—by no means equal to his No. 3. Indeed, he was so dissatisfied with the original third movement, that he substituted a Scherzo expressly for the Society, and this was played. Beethoven's B Flat, No. 4, was the other Symphony, and beautifully it went. The colouring of the voluptuous Adagio, and the ardour of this finale were equally remarkable. The overtures were Weber's "Euryanthe" and Spohr's "Jessonda." The former was demanded a second time with fervour, such was the impetuosity of the executor under Costa's direction. The second work is full of vigour, albeit not equal to Cherubini's and Mozart's. Of Weber, Spohr, and Mozart, he was one of the truest of writers. The solo instrumentalists were Mr. H. Field (of Bath), who played Hummel's "Rondeau Brillant" for the pianoforte, in a John Cramer style, worthy of all praise; and M Dorette and M. Pilet, who executed a concertante for flute and violoncello effectively. The vocalisation was confined to Miss Bassano's clever reading of Mozart's "Non più di fiorir." Mdlle. Rummel's over-ambitious attempt in Mozart's "Non mi dir," and a duet by those artistes, from Meyerbeer's "Crociato" ("Il tenero affetto"). Mr. Williams's playing of the corno di bassetto obligato, to Miss Bassano's air, is also entitled to eulogium. The band was in splendid trim, and the furore at their unrivalled display of skill and energy was unbounded. Madame Pasyel will play at the next concert, on the 1st of June.

CONCERT OF ANCIENT MUSIC.

The seventh programme was under the direction of the Archbishop of York for the King of Hanover, but the break down of a new foreign vocalist at the morning rehearsal, and the illness of Pischek, on the night of rehearsal, caused some changes. For Graun's quartet and chorus—"Ach preis ich sie"—a German hymn sung in Italian, was substituted; Mozart's "Deve sono" was omitted, and Her. Hoelzel sang all the music allotted to Pischek, comprising Mozart's aria, "Per questa bella mano" "Zingarella's aria," Dal piacer lo stigno," and, with Caro dor., the duo, "No, crude.," from Paer's "Camilla." Hoelzel has a fine voice, but he is quite destitute of feeling and style. Madame Thillon, who is heard more advantageously on the stage than in a concert-room, sang Mozart's recitat. accompanied on the piano by Mr. Lucas, "Ch' io mi scordi di te," better known as "Non temer;" and Piccini's air, "Quel briccone d'amore." Her recitative in the former work was extremely well delivered. Madame Caradori Allan's skill was displayed in a tedious scena by Piccini (the rival of Gluck and Sacchini), from the opera of "Didone." Her share in old Ford's harmonised air, "Since first I saw your face" (1599), was charmingly performed. Mr. Hawkins, Mr. J. Sidlis, and Mr. Machin being her associates, who certainly should have been ashamed that a foreigner pronounced their language with more distinctness than themselves. Miss Bassano sang Mozart's "Per pieta," from the Clemenza, effectively. Handel's overtures to "Esther," and "Ariadne," and his choruses, "Glory to God," from "Joshua," and "Let their celestial concerts." from "Samson;" Haydn's hymn, "God save the Emperor," with English national words; a selection from Cherubini's master-piece his Requiem in C minor; Mozart's Chorus from "Joseph," "With the harp!" Perpolesi's "Stabat Mater," and Beethoven's "Ecclesia!" and Cherubini's trio, "Perfida Clori," with Mr. Wright's harp obligato, nicely sung by Madame Caradori, Madame Thillon, and Madame Bassano, were the other items of this excellent selection.

Prince Albert, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Cambridge, the Archbishop of Armagh, Earl and Countess Howe, Earl and Countess of Cawdor, the Earl of Liverpool, the Archbishop of Armagh, the Earl of Devon, the Speaker and family, and a numerous assemblage of rank and fashion were present.

The eighth and last concert, next Wednesday, will be under the direction of the Earl of Westmorland, who has arrived from Berlin; and, on the 3rd of June, Handel's "Messiah" will be given for the Royal Society of Musicians, the rehearsal taking place on the 1st of June.

MADAME PLEYEL'S DEBUT.

The sensation created at the first morning recital of this distinguished pianiste, was without parallel. Never, perhaps, had Willis's Rooms contained such an immense assemblage of rank and fashion. We do not think there were more than half a dozen absentees of note out of the mass of talent, native and foreign, now in the Metropolis. Madame Pleyel came here with a French, Belgian, and German fame; she will leave this country with an English fame in her favour. It is extremely difficult, in writing of the efforts of genius, to find terms out of the conventional order to describe one's sensations. The homage paid by such an intelligent auditory was a genuine improvement. There was evident interest when Madame Pleyel first approached the instrument, and, throwing away a bouquet and her gloves with the air of a gladiator who enters a circle for combat, plunged at once into the Adagio of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat. Her fingers were at once to admiration, at her exquisite touch, so delicately feminine, and yet so impressive within. After singing this Adagio—it was not a musical exercise—the new Belgian came down to the footlights, and, like Willmann, played "Il Pastasta, her sure mechanism convinced the auditory that she was not dismayed by any digital difficulties. In a terribly lurid-as morceau called "L'Inquiétude," she proved that the cold north-light had not chilled her genius, and wielded power. In Emile Prudent's Quatuor from "Don Pasquale," the furore became intense, and it was cruelly encored. Nothing could be more entraînant than her style; the manner with which she made her fingers and feet keep time was as if an orchestra was accompanying the voices, and we could almost fancy Lablache's portentous tones soaring above the whole. Her command of arpeggios and octaves was quite astounding, and completely overwhelming.

Then followed Thalberg's "Sonnambula" fantasia, with a delicious observance of the manners. But, for pathos and sentiment, her interpretation of Schubert's song of "Marguerite" was the most perfect exhibition of the morning. The sustaining of the spinning-wheel accompaniment, whilst the melody of woe was breathed forth, was beyond all praise—the colouring was superb. As a climax came Liszt's "Tarantella," which, though, unnecessarily lengthened out by the Emperor of Pianists. But Madame Pleyel is, as the Chronicle called her, the Empress of Pianistes. The railroad speed and perfect precision with which this fiery dance was hit off electrified the company, and again was there an unreasonable demand made for its repetition.

Her second recital will take place in a few days; and she is engaged to perform at the last Philharmonic Concert.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The programme of the fourth scheme on Tuesday consisted of Mozart's Quartet in D No 7, Onslow's Quintet in A minor No. 23, and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat No. 6. The executants were Sivori, Deloffre, Hill, Piatti, and Casalani. The execution was perfect. Piatti's violoncello playing so conspicuously developed in Mozart's Quartet, was the admiration of all the professors and amateurs. The Earl of Falmouth lent Piatti a celebrated instrument in his Lordship's possession, and he also kindly lent Deloffre the violin that formerly belonged to Kiesewetter. Viscount Ingestre will lead the next meeting. Mr. Ella has announced his soirée for the 23rd of June. The indefatigable director deserves every support for the risk of his fortune in the formation of the "Union."

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

MR. HARRISON'S BENEFIT. This singer had a bumper on Monday last, for the house was crammed to suffocation in every part, and the pit was full as early as 5 o'clock. The "Beggar's Opera," were performed, Miss Rainforth taking the part of Rosina, in the former, as well as Polly, in the latter, in consequence of Miss Romer's indisposition. Harrison was the Grand Signiora of the Captain Macheath, excelling more in the ballad school apperta ning to the latter work than in the lofty strain of Rossini. Miss Poole was the Lucy Locket, Mrs. Selby Mrs. Peachum, Harley Peto, and W. Bennett Peachum. Miss Poole was the Fogey, Weiss the Bard, and Mr. H. Horncastle Dr. Bartolo. There was a Concert between the two operas in which Miss Birch, Madame Knispel, Madame Talbin, Herr Pischek, Miss Rainforth, and Mr. Harrison sang nearly all original pieces But the great vocal treat was afforded by Pischek's singing in Spohr's "Faust," in charac. He looked remarkably well, and acted finely. He was encored in one scena rapturously. There were also instrumentalists of note in the Concert. There was the Distin Family; Herr Kellermann, the violoncellist; M. Lavigne, a flute player; and a quartet for four pianofortes, executed by Madame Dulcken, Benedict, Wallace, and Richards.

TRURO CHORAL SOCIETY.

(From a Correspondent.)

THE first Concert was given at Truro Hall, on Thursday, the 14th instant, before a full audience, under the able direction of Mr. C. F. Hempel, organist of St. Mary's.

The first part consisted of selections from the "Creation:" and the solos were well sung by Miss White (treb e), Mr. Sinc k (tenor), and Mr. Hempel (bass). Miss White's beautiful solo, "With verdu nt clad," met with well-merited applause The choir of seventy voices sang the choruses in a way to please the most fastidious.

The second part of the Concert was a selection from the works of Handel and Mendelssohn. Here, the choir displayed their powers to more advantage, and exceeding good taste attracted universal admiration; and great credit is due to Mr. Hempel, for having so effectually brought her out.

The chorus, also, were sung with great precision; and, had there been the accompaniment of the organ, would have been worthy of an Exeter Hall audience Miss Clemence and Mr. Silcock also gave great satisfaction, although they require much more training

We may hope that in a short time the Choral Society may become worthy of notice will be given. The Society has been but lately formed, and time is required to bring out many of the beautiful voices this town possesses. The bass voices of Cornwall are well known, and those of Truro are certainly remarkable for their good quality.

The Music Hall is well suited to the purposes of this Society; and Mr. Braham, who sang in it, while his tour in the West of England lasted, declared it to be the best room for music he had met with in the province

The President of this Society is the Earl of Falmouth, whose musical taste is well known.

CONCERTS.

MADAME PIZZI'S MORNING CONCERT.—The refusal of Marlo and Grisi to sing at morning entertainments, has seriously affected the concerts held at the Opera House. Madame Pizzi has fortunately a large connection, but the attendance on Wednesday morning exhibited a vast falling off from former years, and to add to the contrarities, Pischek was ill and was unable to sing. The weight of the programme fell, therefore, on Madame Castellan, who is more at home in a concert-room than on the stage, Madame Thillon, who is just the reverse, Miss Birch, Miss Rainforth, and Madame F Lablache, Signor Marras, an excellent tenor, and Lablache, sen. and jun. John Parry's comic ditties, "Fayre Rosamonde," and the "Accomplished Young Lady," delighted the auditory of course. The pieces assigned to Signora Sanchioli, Mdlle. G. Bramble, (not the Bramble,) Mdlle. Corbari, and Signor Benedeti, had better have been entered. Madame Balfe and Mrs. A. Shaw are both accomplished artistes, but their intonation was so bad as to destroy the impression produced by their artistical finish. The opera-glass was not advantageously heard without orchestral accompaniment. The vocal treat of this concert was Rosahn's trio "Frocean suvi di," sung by Signor Marras and the two Lablaches. The instrumental attractions were particularly excellent, comprising Piatti's charming violoncello fantasia, on themes from the "Somnambula," and an elegant movement from a Quintet by Reicha, superbly executed by Rosa (viola), Barnard Dalby, Signor Marras, Graziani Cooke, and Mr. Boddie. Mr. John Parry sang "The Melancholy Maiden; or, the Bride! the Bridge! and the Battle Axe!!!! and, on the encore, gave "Old and Young England." Parish Alvars played on the harp, and Kiallmark, and one of his fair pupils, on the harp.

MADAME CARADORI ALLAN.—The performance of a full band, conducted by Costa, was one of the most remarkable attractions of this Morning Concert, at the Queen's-concert-room Rooms. The fair bénéficiaire was in excellent voice, and sang pieces of every school with great éclat She was supported by Thillon, Madame F. Lablache, Herr Pischek, Herr Hoelzel, Signor Brizzi, and Signor F. Lablache. The solo players were Madame Dulcken, piano; Sivori, violin; Goodrich, harp, Lindemann and Hausmann, violoncelli.

RICHMOND.—The COLLINS FAMILY gave a concert here on Tuesday last, at the Wesleyan Institution, which was well attended, and must have amply repaid these talented artistes — Mr. W. Ware, formerly of the Haymarket Theatre, also gave an entertainment at the Castle New Lecture-hall, à la Beverley. The entertainments consisted of the presence of most of the nobility and gentry of the surrounding neighbourhood. The novelty of the performance and songs gave universal satisfaction.

CHIT CHAT.

Signor Giulio Regondi, the concertina player and guitarist, and Mr. George Case, the violinist and also a concertinaist, gave their Concert on Thursday evening, and Madame Pleyel's morning, Mrs. Anderson, the pianiste to her Majesty, and the teacher of the Princess Royal, gave her Annual Concert; and, in the evening, Mr. Richards, the clever composer and pianist, had his Concert, both at Her Majesty having returned from Paris with copies of the scenery, costumes, &c. Mr. Parsons, the polite and obliging Treasurer of Drury Lane, takes his benefit on Monday next. He has provided ample entertainments for the occasion.

Mr. John Parry advertises his Concert for Friday evening, the 29th inst. He has engaged a host of talent for the occasion, including Madame Anna Thillon, the fascinating heroine of "The Crown Jewels;" Herr Pischek, the renowned Bavarian vocalist; and the Dublin Family, whose performances on the Sax Horns have everywhere been so enthusiastically received. Mr. John Parry will introduce two new Buffo Scenas on the occasion, both expressly written for him by Mr. Planché, one of which is a burlesque on Sonnambula;" and the other, "Foreign Affairs," is a domestic discussion on the French language, between a young gent and her mamma, who has not been to Paris since the Peace, but is now going to the French plays.

NORMA VIRIUM, OR MUSICAL ACCENTUATOR.—A beautiful little instrument, under this title, has just been patented by Mr. Thomas Simpson, of the Sea Lion, Hackney, and Mr. Simpson has already made much ingenious and ornamental bracket time-piece, but its uses are of a very different character. Its mechanism is so contrived that it correctly marks the first note in every bar loud, and its remaining notes in the same bar in beats more subdued, the intermediate parts of the bars, it can be regulated to suit any style of music, giving the accents of each piece with undeviating accuracy With juveniles, after the relative values which they have to each other to express the harmony, the fingers having to come down upon the keys with the beats, any music may be accomplished by them, beginning at a slow speed, and increasing ad lib., to suit the degree of execution attained The full particulars of the principles upon which the invention is based, it would be impossible to detail in a paragraph, but they are fully set forth in the treatise which Mr. Simpson has now in the press, and which is intended for the use of professors and pupils, and cannot fail to be a most desirable aid in the art of tuition. Through its agency, time—the greatest obstacles to learners—will be easily and readily acquired, with scarcely any mental exertion. Nor is it to learners only, that the instrument holds out important and hitherto unattained advantages. The professor, almost from the first movements of the instrument, would soon find an additional force imparted to his execution; members of bands might profitably practice it, the retirement of their homes, and by always ensuring a metre absolutely correct time, and true accentuation would be enabled to attain in concert that admirable precision which is now the distinguishing mark between foreign bands and those of our own country. This is not merely the expectation of Mr. Simpson, who might naturally be supposed to look with favour upon his own production, but it is the unanimous opinion of some of the first instrumentalists, to whom he has exhibited the invention. The week before last, Mr. Simpson had the honour of submitting the Norma Virium, and displaying its capabilities, to her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, at Trentham. Her Grace expressed the greatest pleasure, and most unqualified approbation, at the examination, and suggested the propriety of Mr. Simpson's calling the attention of the highest musical authorities to the subject; the invention being, in her Grace's opinion, worthy of the greatest encouragement and support. Staffordshire Mercury

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 19.

BANKRUPTS.—S. WHEATLEY, William-street, Lisson-grove, Regent's Park, Bricklayer. H. ELKINGTON, Maude-hall-chambers, 8, Percy-street, Brighton, draper. C. W. C. STEVENS, Hampton Gardeners, hackney-minister. J. GORDON, Bedford-row, India Chambers, London-street, Greenwich, Surgeon. J. BLANCH, Liverpool, broker. T. HARTLEY and H. INGHAM, Leeds, stockbrokers. J. SILLOW-GREEN, Manchester, draper. J. COOKE, Cheetham, salesman. W. ARNCOTT, bath, grocer. G. D. FRENCH, Strood, cabinet-maker. T. BOTHAMS, Nottingham, dyer. J. and J. RUSSELL, Manchester, calico-printers. J. DORSET Worcester, surveyor. J. R. HAYWARD, Manchester, bookseller. S. DETHICK and T. H. DEWSON, Sheffield, Lancaster, common brewers.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—J. ELLIOTT, Bristol, coal-merchant

DIVIDEND.—J. BUCHANAN, Glasgow, merchant, and late J. Buchanan and Co.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.—M. ROBERTSON, J. THOMPSON, and I. STEELE, Dundee, Linseed, Oil, Cake.

FRIDAY, MAY 22.

WAR OFFICE, MAY 22.

1st Dragoon Guards Major J S Smith to be Major, vice Schonswar. 3d Dragoon Guards Lieut. and Capt. Second Class A. G. Rooke, M.D., to be Surgeon, vice W Shone.

1st Foot—P. H. Quin to be Ensign, vice Bligh. 3d Foot—Ensign F. Rimmington to be Major, vice Smith. 8th Assist.-Surg C. F. Stephenson, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Isaac Bell. 11th Foot—Lieut. J. Baldwin to be Lieutenant, vice Hall. Ensign J. Bailey to be Ensign, vice Baldwin. 26th Capt. W. S. Nicholson, to be Captain, vice Gregg. 29th Ensign F. Kinchcomb to be Lieutenant, vice H Donnell; Ensign A. E. Mowbray to be Ensign, vice Mitchell; Ensign E. H. G. Percy to be Ensign, vice Rosebone, Lieut. C. M'Donnell, to be Adjutant, vice Jones. 34th Captain John A. Randall to be Captain, vice Grant. 49th Capt. J. Grant to be Captain, vice Randall. 52nd Lieut. J. Bischamber to be Lieutenant, vice Clerke. 59th Lieut. W. F. Milne to be Ensign, vice Fuller 60th Second Lieut. J. T. Haines to be Ensign, vice Rosebone, Lieut. C. M'Donnell, to be Adjutant, vice Jones. 84th Captain John A. Randall to be Captain, vice Grant. 49th: Capt. J. Grant to be Captain, vice Randall. 52nd: Lieut. J. Bischamber to be Lieutenant, vice Clerke. 59th:

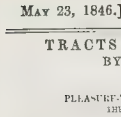
TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. V.

PLEASURE-TRIPS FOR THE PEOPLE.—No. III.

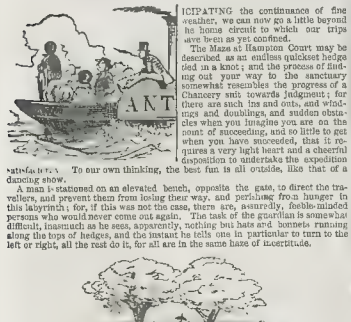
THE MAZE AT HAMPTON COURT.



SCRIPTATING the continuance of fine weather, we can now go a little beyond the home circuit to which our trips have been as yet confined.

The Maze at Hampton Court may be described as an endless quicksset hedge tied in a knot; and the process of finding out your way to the sanctuary somewhat resembles the progress of a Chancery suit towards judgment; for there are such ins and outs, and windings and doublings, and sudden obstacles when you imagine you are on the point of proceeding, and so little to get when you have succeeded, that it requires a very light heart and a cheerful disposition to undertake the expedition satisfactorily. To our own thinking, the best fun is all outside, like that of a dancing show.

A man is stationed on an elevated bench, opposite the gate, to direct the travellers, and prevent them from losing their way, and perishing from hunger in this labyrinth; for, if this was not the case, there are, assuredly, feeble-minded persons who would never come out again. The task of the guardian is somewhat difficult, inasmuch as he sees, apparently, nothing but hats and bonnets running along the tops of hedges, and the instant he tells one in particular to turn to the left or right, all the rest do it, for all are in the same haze of uncertitude.



Possibly, the surest way of arriving at the centre, is to creep through the hedge, when nobody is looking, and then the goal is arrived at "comparatively in no time." The sanctuary the I is not an exciting place. It consists of fifteen or twenty square feet of shuffled ground and two benches. Indeed, we may question the advantage—as we might do in the ascent of Mont Blanc, in the perusal of received notions of freemasonry, in the acting out a modern five-act play, or in the reading of one of the present long debates—of going through so much to learn so little.

"How to get to Hampton Court" might form a paper by itself; and to this subject we may return: for the transit is not so easy. There are railway carriages, which drop you two miles off; and steamboats which get there the day after the morrow of starting—and some which never get there at all; and vans which get there and never come back. But, as we think the more of anything in proportion as the trouble of possessing it increases, so these little diversions tend to make us regard the Maze as a marvellous attraction.

If you wish to pass off for an experienced traveller, we will tell you, as a great secret, a simple method of proceeding at once to the centre of the labyrinth. On entering the gate, turn to the left; then, touching the hedge on your right hand, never take your hand away from it; even go to the end of a cul de sac, and double round the mark; but, all joking apart, if you do this carefully, it will conduct you to the centre. The left hand must be similarly used to come out again.

Sir Robert's last tariff has not affected this favourite resort: you will find, from the gardener, that the "duty on maze" is still in force.

CON. FOUND ON THE RIVER

When does a steam-boat captain affirm that he is not himself?—When he says he's a bacon stopper (Esse her, back her, stop her.) A reward will be given for a worse one.

STEAM BOAT MARTYRDOM.

Martyrs, thanks to Mr Smith O'Brien, are coming into fashion again. Indeed, we might soon look for fires in Smithfield, but the stews and pig sties have now security for their dearest friends, and asked to put their names to bills. But although this has been comparatively unacknowledged. Martyrdom is, however, assuming a more desperate form, and most especially on the river steamers, where the old tortures are being revived, as follows:—

1. The Rack.

The fearful punishment is mostly in use at the Vauxhall terminus of the South-Western Railway, and is put in practice whenever the traveller refuses to say which boat he has made up his mind to go by; for the struggle is as great between the Citizens and the Bridgewoms for every passenger. Last, what between the former tugging him one way, and the latter tugging him another, he leaves the place several inches longer than when he came. At the same time, his carpet-bag, torn by taken from him, goes to Battersea, the boat not stopping at some place that he wishes to land at.

2. The Water Question.

This punishment somewhat resembles that adopted by pirates towards their prisoners. The sufferer is put upon the gangway by intimidation and false assurances, and then, when half way along it, the boat gives a turn a-head, and lets him into the water unexpectedly. Having thus deposed of him, the next diversion is to fish him up with drags, which are curiously large hooks, made to hitch, if they have a preference, into the eye or mouth.

3. The Nopastes.

This horrible invention for drowning five or six hundred people at once, surpasses that, of the same name, in use during the French Revolution. The executioner, or captain, sees how many he has boat will fit in when it is crammed. To this number he adds another hundred, and it immediately goes down with all on board. The question, however, allowed a Nantilus Life Preserver to save himself. The subject has occupied a great deal of the attention of Emigration Committees, and even of Cab contractors.

CON. PICKED UP IN THE TRAIN.

How long have young ladies been accustomed to thieve?—Since they have taken to steel bonkles.

ANSWER TO LAST CHARADE.

1. Green. 2. Witch. 3. Greenwich.

LITERATURE.

PICTURES FROM ITALY. By CHARLES DICKENS. Published for the Author, by Bradbury and Evans, Whitefriars.

A portion of these "Pictures" has already appeared in print; but, the entire collection will not, on that account, be less acceptable in its present form—a handsome pocket volume. It is scarcely necessary to explain that it is the result of Mr. Dickens's late visit to Italy, and his twelve months' occupation of a house at Genoa; where, by his own account, he must have passed a life of literary leisure, yet, as this work proves, not unobservant of those finer points which go far towards marking the broad distinctions of national character. The greater part was written on the spot, and sent home, from time to time, in private letters; and hence, "penned in the fulness of the subject, and with the liveliest impressions of novelty and freshness. If they have a fanciful and idle air, perhaps, the reader will suppose them to be written in the shade of a sunny day, in the midst of the objects of which they treat, and will like them none the worse for that mild touch influences of the country upon them."

Leaving the history and associations of the country to works of the guide-book class, Mr. Dickens has given us what he terms, "a series of faint reflections more shadows in the water of places to which the imaginations of most people are attracted in a greater or less degree." Although travelling or sojourning in a land of Art, he is not diffuse on famous Pictures, Statues, or Buildings: his book, however, abounds with exquisite descriptions of celebrated places; and, as a general result, we should say, corrects many popular errors as to the attractions and sources of Italy for the lovers of travel; and presents to the reader many objects in a very different light from that in which tourists have taught them to regard them. Hence, the healthy tone of the book will be one of its most sterling recommendations; whilst, in what way brings into prominence the people as well as places, the "Pictures" have their bright lights and salient points, and all the eloquent touches of this great master in the English school of humour—a rank to which she is other is allegedly entitled.

The volume, as the reader may imagine, is discursive in its interest; and, as the author's route does not call for special detail, we shall dip into his pages at random, in the hope of collecting, to keep to the artistic simile, a few of its lakes:—

THE GENOESE.

"The peasant women, with naked feet and legs, are so constantly washing clothes, in the public tanks, and in every stream and ditch, that one cannot help wondering, in the midst of all this dirt, who wears them when they are clean. The custom is to lay the wet linen which is being operated upon, on a smooth stone, and hammer away at it with a flat wooden mallet. This they do as furiously as if they were revenging themselves on the fibres in general for being connected with the Fall of Mankind. It is not unusual to see, lying on the edge of the tank at these times, or on another flat stone, an unfortunate baby, tightly swaddled up, arms and legs and all, in an enormous quantity of wrapper, so that it is unable to move a toe or finger. This custom (which we often see represented in old pictures) is universal among the common people. A child is left anywhere without the possibility of crawling away, or is accidentally knocked off a shelf, or tumbled out of bed, or is hung up to a hook now and then, and left dangling like a doll at an English rag-shop, without the least inconvenience to anybody. I was sitting, one Sunday noon after my arrival, in the little country church of San Martino, a couple of miles from the city, while a baptism took place. I saw the priest, and an attendant with a large taper, and a man, and a woman, and some others; but I had no more idea, until the ceremony was all over, that it was a baptism, or that the curious little stiff instrument, that was passed from one to another in the course of the ceremony by the handle like a short poker—was a baby, child, than I had that it was my own christening. I borrowed the latter afterwards for a minute or two (it was lying across the font then), and found it very rad in the face, but perfectly quiet, and not to be beat on any terms. The number of cripples in the streets soon ceased to surprise me."

POINTS OF WONDER.

"I wonder why the head coppersmith in an Italian town, always lives right next door to the hotel, or opposite: making the visitor feel as if he were hearing hammers wore his own heart, palpitating with a deadly anxiety. I wonder why jealous corridors surround the bedroom on all sides, and fill it with unnecessary doors that can't be shut, and will not open, and shut on pitchy darkness? I wonder why it is not enough that these distrustful genii stand agape at one's dreams all night, but there must also be round open port-holes, high in the wall, sequestered from the piazza or rat's head behind the wainscot, of a second-floor sitting-room, through which to direct his eyes in his endeavours to reach one of these port-holes and look in! I wonder why the faggots are so constructed as to know of no effect but an agony of heat when they are lighted and replenished, and an agony of cold and nothingness at all other times! I wonder, above all, why it is the great feature of domestic architecture in Italian inns, that all the fire goes up the chimney, except the smoke! But answer matters little. Coppersmiths, doors, port-holes, smoke, and faggots are welcome to me. Give me the smiling face of the attendant, man or woman; the courteous manner; the amiable desire to please and to be pleased: the lighthearted, pleasant, simple air—so many jewels set in dirt—and I am theirs again to-morrow."

THE LEANING TOWER OF PISA.

"The moon was shining when we approached Pisa, and for a long time we could see, behind the wall, the leaning Tower, all awry in the uncertain light: the shadowy original of the old pictures in school-books, setting forth the 'Wonders of the World.' Like most things connected in their first associations with school-books and school times, it was too small. I felt it keenly. It was nothing like so high above the wall as I had hoped. It was another of the many deceptions practised by Mr. Harris, bookseller, at the corner of St. Paul's Churchyard, London. His Tower was a fiction, but this was really and, by comparison, a short reality. Still, it looked very well, and very strange, and was quite as much out of the perpendicular as Harris had represented it to be. The quiet air of Pisa too; the big guardhouse at the gate, with only two little soldiers in it: the streets, with scarcely any show of people in them; and the Arno, flowing quietly through the centre of the town; were excellent. So, I here no malice in my heart against Mr. Harris (remembering his good intentions), but forgave him before dinner, and went out, full of confidence, to see the Tower next morning.

"I might have known better: but, somehow, I had expected to see it, casting its long shadow on a public street where people came and went all day. It was a surprise to me to find it in a grave, retired place, apart from the general resort, and carpeted with smooth green turf. But, the group of buildings, clustered there, and about this verdant carpet: comprising the Tower, the Baptistery, the Cathedral, and the Church of the Campo Santo: is, perhaps, the most remarkable and beautiful in the world, and, from being chiefcast, the most lonely, away from the ordinary transactions and details of the town, they have a singularly venerable and impressive character. It is the architectural essence of a rich old city, with all its common life, and common habitations, pressed out from it, and away.

"Samuel compares the Tower to the usual pictorial representations in children's books of the Tower of Babel. It is a happy simile, and conveys a better idea of the building than chapters of laboured description. Nothing can exceed the grace and lightness of the structure; nothing can be more remarkable than its general appearance. In the course of the ascent to the top (which is by an easy staircase), the inclination is not very apparent; but, at the summit, it becomes so, and gives one the sensation of being in a ship that has heeled over, through the action of an ebb-tide. The effect upon the last ade, so to speak, looking over from the gallery, and seeing the shaft recede to its base—is very startling, and I saw almost every traveller held on to the Tower involuntarily, after glancing down, as if he had some idea of propping it up. The view within, from the ground—looking up, as through a slanted tube—is also very curious. It certainly ladders as much as the most sanguine tourist could desire. The natural impulse of ninety-nine people out of a hundred, who were about to recline upon the grass below it, to read, and contemplate the adjacent buildings, would probably be, not to take up their position under the leaning side; it is so very much askant."

IDLES OF ART.

"I unreservedly confess, for myself, that I cannot leave my natural perception of what is natural and true, at a palace door, in Italy or elsewhere, as I should leave my shoes if I were travelling in the East. I cannot forget that there are certain expressions of face, natural to certain passions, paid as unchangeable as their nature as the gait of a lion, or the flight of an eagle. I cannot dismiss from my certain knowledge such common place facts as the ordinary proportions of men's arms and legs, and heads; and when I meet with performances that so violence to these experiences and recollections, no matter where they may be, I cannot honestly admire them, and should think it best to say so; in spite of high critical advice that we should sometimes feign an admiration, though we have it not.

"Therefore, I freely acknowledge that, when I see a jolly young Waterman representing a Cherubim, or a Barclay and Perkins's Dragoman depicted as an Evangelist, I see nothing to commend or admire in the performance, however it may rejoice the painter. Neither am I partial to Bacchus angels, who play on lutes and basoons, for the edification of sprawling monks, apparently in liquor. Nor to those Monsieur Tonsons of galleries, Saint Francis and Saint Sebastian; both of whom, I submit, should have very uncommon and rare merits, as works of art, to justify their consonant multiplication by Italian painters."

The following extract from the prefatory "Reader's Passport" will be read with much interest:—

"I have likened these Pictures to shadows in the water, and would faith have been more correct if I could have stirred the water so roughly as to mar the shadows. I could wish that I could do better terms with all my friends than now, when distant ever desire to be on better terms with all my friends than now, when distant and all that rise once more in my path. For I need not hesitate to avow that, bent on correcting a brief mistake I made not long ago, in disturbing the old relations between myself and my readers, and departing for a moment from my old pursuits, I am about to resume them joyfully in Switzerland; where, during another year of absence, I can at once work out the themes I have now in my mind without interruption; and, while I keep my English audience within speaking distance, extend my knowledge of a noble country, inexpressibly attractive to me."

A BOOK OF HIGHLAND MINSTRELSY. By MRS. D. GOLDYT. With Illustrations by R. R. M'Ian. Nicklason.

To the minstrelsy of Scotland, already rich in impressive rehearsals of valorous deeds or seasonal misfortunes, in marvellous tales and wild adventures, this volume must be regarded as a graceful addition. Its several poems are of two classes, embodying historical legend, or narrating the sad tale of domestic superstition, in strains of touching truth and beauty drawn from "the traditions, the sentiments, and the customs of a romantic people." To the former class belong "the Exile at Culloden," "the Lady of Lovat," and "Dunfallanzy" and of the latter class, "the Impression by the Cradle," "the Spinning of the Shroud," and "the Old House of Urrard," are the finest specimens.

We quote the latter; the scene is the House of Urrard, which, from a high wooded bank, overlooks the northern outlet of the pass of Killecrankie, around which raged, most hotly, the conflict in 1689, wherein the Hanoverian army sustained a bloody defeat from the Highlanders under Viscount Dundee. A green mound, darkened by overhanging branches, stands out the spot where its gallant Claverhouse fell; and enough remains of the old House of Urrard, to keep alive the memory of its traditions; whilst its tales of spiritual intrusion have been nourished by the finding of skeletons, rusted swords, and mouldered garments; and gossip of ghostly company straying themselves in brocaded robes and sweeping trains; and of the grotesque horror of silken dresses trailing along the floor, &c. These "strange fancies that haunted the sleep of the poorest" childhood, her muse has sung in this touching strain:—

THE OLD HOUSE OF URRARD

Dost fear the grim brown twilight?
Dost care to walk alone
When the fire upon the hearth-stone
With human voices moan?
When the river in each restless
Through deep and jagged lines,
Like one who cannot sleep o' nights
For evil thoughts within?
What has he long owls grow silent
The ghastly sound to earth,
In the ancient house of Urrard,
When no night is cold and dark?

There are graves about old Urrard,
Huge mounds by rock and tree,
And they who lie beneath them
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
But the dead is now the trees.
And the wind through the spires,
In the woods about old Urrard,
On the gale-day winds sighs.

In the garden of old Urrard,
Among hollyhocks,
A furies is
Refresh'd by fainting flowers
Here sank the warrior stranger
By sheeted silver dell,
And all the night of victory
Dropped ourselves in his fall
Last hope of exiled Stuart,
Last heir of chivalry—
In the garden of old Urrard
He fell, the brave Dundee!

In the ancient house of Urrard
There is many a hiding den,
The very wall is hollow
To cover dying men
For not even lady's chamber
Barred on the flies allray,

And scars and damask curtain
Were stained with blood that day
And the [illegible]'s secret passage,
Whence sword and scull and bone
Were brought to light in Urrard,
When years had passed and gone.

If thou sleep alone in Urrard,
Perchance in midnight gloom
There'll hear behind the wainscot
Of that old haunted room
A footless hand that knocketh,
A wail that cries on the
And rattling bones that struggle
To break out and be free—
It is in the spirit of horror—
I would not sleep alone
In the bunk-ed rooms of Urrard,
Where evil deeds were done

Amid the dust of garrets
That stretch along the roof,
Stand chests of ancient garments
Of good and silken woof,
Where moths are locked in slumber
The rustling sounds are heard
Of dainty ladies' dresses—
A whispered word,
And steps of satellite feet,
In the garrets of old Urrard,
Where the wives of vent [illegible] seat.

In the ancient house of Urrard
Is a garden mountain gate,
Where the [illegible] from
His steady brow he knits
For he the feast remembers—
Remembers also the [illegible]
And to him for the spectres
At breaking of the day
There under mossy [illegible]
They couch with hare and fox,
Near the ancient house of Urrard,
Along Ben-y-Vrackie's rocks.

We have only space to quote this specimen. The poems are some thirty in number; to each is prefixed a brief prose introduction or story; and the whole is graced by a characteristic illustration from the very characteristic pencil of Mr. M'Ian. The work is, altogether, produced in elegant taste.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

The week has seen defeats of the Government, and an émeute at the Opera. The star of Peel and Lumley seems suddenly to have waned for a moment, under a passing cloud of unpopularity. It was "the Lords who did it," in both cases. The Peers in St. Stephen's threw out the Charitable Trusts Bill, on the second reading; the Peers in their stalls and boxes at the Opera Buffo disregarded the clasped hands and tearful eyes of Lucile Grahn, and the energetic pantomime of Perrot, and amused themselves with hissing, and hooting, and yelling like a Surrey gallery; but on much worse grounds than a Surrey gallery would have required to rouse them to such a demonstration.

The Charitable Trusts Bill proposed to establish a new machinery for doing Charitable Societies' business, and overhauling Charitable Corporation accounts: the former set of functions we hold to be dangerous; the latter, positively unconstitutional. It touches the great question—the real "knife-and-fork" question—the essentially English question—of Annual Dinners. As the Brahminical universe was supported by an elephant, the elephant by a tortoise, and the tortoise by nothing—the great edifice of British charity, which we point out to foreigners with so much complacency, is supported by Dinners—the Dinners by the funds of the charity, and the funds of the charity—not by nothing, but by a process of reaction by the Dinners. Englishmen subscribe that they may dine, and dine that they may subscribe. Gastronomy and Almsgiving go hand in hand: Charity should be represented among us, not by the conventional woman with a large family of undressed babies, but as wearing a cook's cap and apron, and enclosing in her capacious embrace a dish of whitebait and a tureen of turtle.

This holy alliance of alms and dinners the Lord Chancellor would have severed. "What Englishmen have joined, let not legislators put asunder." The attempt has failed signally, despite the Chancellor's exhibition of, and comment upon, a Greenwich tavern bill of the Mercers' Company, which drove half the Lords, with mouths watering, to dinner, so glorious were the gastronomic visions it conjured up, even to their unimaginative minds.

The Lord Chancellor spoke of the tens of thousands of small charities. He should have remembered that of many of these, the annual dinner is the essential and vital part. An estate in land is left to provide flannel petticoats for twelve aged widows, and the remainder to be spent in a dinner. It brings in £8 per annum. The land, in time, is build upon, or becomes the site of a dock: it brings in a rental of £1000, instead of the original £8. Of course, donors' wills must be complied with; so the twelve flannel petticoats are religiously provided, and the £984 remaining over and above, are spent in eating and drinking. The object of the Charity has the blessings of the twelve old ladies, and the grateful thanks of all the diners over and above.

Think of the good fellowship that grows out of such a system—the glorious days and nights, slightly marred by indigestion and headache, that attend Greenwich and Richmond dinners. It is true, people may say that more selfishness than charity enters into the festivities, and that the donor, if he had had the £1000 rental to leave, instead of the £8, might have made a different use of it.

We will turn laureate of our glorious system of charities, and sing it in strains as glowing as those with which Campbell sang the "Mariners of England."

The Charities of England,
That keep our poor in ease;
Whose funds have dined a hundred years
Your guardians, the Trustees!
Right gloriously to lunch again,
And dine on you, we'd go;
And our gains keep up the same,
Though the Chancellor says "No."
Though Brougham rages loud and long,
And the Chancellor says "No."

The stirlits of our father's,
They earned exposure to save—
For, if we lunch, they did the same,
And dinners, too, they gave.
Where [illegible] and glorious Lovegrove
dwell,
Though they weren't used to go;
Still every year their souls they'd bless:
For Donor's sake, you know
With a feast topped up by something strong,
For the Donor's will said so.

Our trusts need no inspection,
Our own accounts we'll keep,
The Chancellor has breath may save,
For chaff we're far too deep.
We'll drink and dine, and sing and smoke,
Though 'neath the board we go,
And shall roar "one cheer more"
For the Donor to whom we owe.
The port that circles so hot and strong,
And the "cold without" also.

The stout Trustees of England
Their dinners still shall earn;
Still gay to Greenwich shall they start,
And player still remain.
Then, then, ye City Companies,
As home in the 'bus you go,
Sound the fame of his Lordship,
Who the casting vote did throw,
Which decides the Bill should be read no more
"Pro Lono publico."

REPRESENTATION OF MONMOUTHSHIRE.—Captain Somerset having announced his intention of standing for the county of Monmouth, in opposition to Lord Granville Somerset, a member of her Majesty's Government, and a Cabinet Minister, the gallant captain has resigned his appointment as Equerry in the Household of her Majesty the Queen Dowager.

EXHIBITION OF LIVING ARTISTS AT PARIS.

'HAMLET."—PAINTED BY LEHMANN.

"OPHELIA."—PAINTED BY LEHMANN.

EXHIBITION OF LIVING ARTISTS AT THE LOUVRE.

We have engraved three of the finest Pictures from this large Collection, which numbers no fewer than 1883 productions.

First is a pair of Portrait Illustrations of Shakspeare, by Lehmann, a young and rising artist, "who," a critic in "the Athenæum" justly observes, "has already a European reputation, but this does not always include England, for England, æsthetically, often seems part of the Arctic Continent."

We must leave our readers to form their own opinion of this new attempt to delineate Hamlet, a questio vexata with artists as well as authors. Of the colouring of the Portraits, however, we can scarcely speak too highly, for in this branch of art has Lehmann's chief merit

'CALABRIAN BRIGANDS." PAINTED BY LE POITEVIN.

SCENE FROM THE NEW OPERA "I LOMBARDI," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The third Illustration is a group of Calabrian Brigands, beautifully painted by Le Poitevin. The composition is admirably characteristic, and the colouring is vivid and sparkling. The spirited works of this clever artist are already popular in England.

BEQUEST TO THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

THE British Museum has just received an interesting addition to its Memorials, by the late Lady Holland's bequest of a Box given to her by Napoleon. The form of the bequest is to the following effect:—

BOX PRESENTED BY NAPOLEON TO THE LATE LADY HOLLAND, BEQUEATHED BY HER LADYSHIP TO THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

"Amongst the things which I chiefly value is the box bequeathed to me by the Emperor Napoleon, and a card originally enclosed in it, bearing on one side a memorandum, from which it appears that the cameo which forms the lid of the box was presented to Napoleon by Pope Pius VI., at Talentino, in 1797, and on the other side are these words in the Emperor's own handwriting, 'L'Empereur Napoleon à Lady Holland, temoignage de satisfaction et d'estime.' These relics I bequeath to the British Museum, and desire that the box and card may be enclosed in a glass case and kept locked up, so that they may not be handled, and to be deposited in a room of the library of the Museum in which the autographs of distinguished persons and curiosities are kept."

HANDWRITING OF NAPOLEON.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Tuesday, in the recherché atmosphere of her Majesty's Theatre, the head-quarters of fashion and courteous observance, where the manners and toilet of Courts are kept up, not only because it is the Temple of Art in her most exalted forms, but on account of the habitual presence of their Majesties and the Royal Family—a "row" took place.

The substitution of "Catarina" for "Ondine," on account of the sudden illness of Cerito, had, it appears, affronted a portion of the audience, who, instead of venting their spleen where alone it was due—namely, on the weather—gave utterance to expressions of discontent, so loud as seriously to disturb the quiet enjoyment of the remaining portion of the spectators, who returned volleys of applause equally vociferous. Yet did the malcontents, with a zeal and perseverance worthy of a better cause, keep up their stunning clamour. How the most inborn love of mischief could have prevailed over the sympathy created by the beseeching looks of Lucile Grahn, her gentle and sensible demeanour, and the admiration excited by her pas (more surprising, more aerial than ever), we know not; and the substitution of one first-rate artist for another—the leader of the "Idealists" for that of the "Realists" was surely not fair ground of quarrel; how even, these peace-disturbing individuals kept up their cries and hisses, until they drove poor Perrot—tearing his hair, like one distraught from the stage, and until they brought forward first the stage-manager, and then M. St. Leon, to state what every one must have known from the placard affixed to the walls namely, that Mdlle. Cerito had been taken suddenly ill, and that two medical gentlemen had declared her performance on that evening impossible. Quiet was at length restored—thanks principally to the strenuous exertions of the larger portion of the audience—but not, however, before the theatre had been made a scene of indecorous confusion. On that evening, not only that amiable and august lady, the Queen Dowager, and their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Prince George, and the Duchess of Gloucester were present, but the opera was attended by the first of the nobility.

The influenza has been most active in the artist world. On the same evening, Gosselin, who was taken ill, gave up his part in "Catarina" to St. Leon; while, also, on the same evening, written apologies were posted about the theatre for Mario, who, being also attacked, had yet resolved to go through his part as far as he could. The real matter of surprise in all this is, that, though Cerito and her countrymen come from the genial south, and have arrived in England in the most sickly of seasons, this is the first time there has been a change of performance at this theatre.

The performances of the first portion of the evening passed off brilliantly, despite Mario's indisposition. He exerted himself valiantly; and, though compelled to omit many of his morceaux, executed the remainder with a care and taste that fully compensated for occasional huskiness of tone. Castellan, in more brilliant voice than ever, displayed all its resources; her forte, embracing the highest and the lowest notes of her marvellously extensive register. The "Ah! non guinge," was a real triumph of vocalisation, and was most vociferously applauded and encored.

We wish that we could spare time or space to detail our impressions of the "Lombardi," after the repetitions of this fine work which we have witnessed during the past week. Those portions of this opera which at first struck us less forcibly, have, since then, wonderfully gained ground in our opinion; we allude especially to the concerted pieces, some of which are marvels of imagination, and of scientific construction. The music of the first act differs considerably from the remaining portion of the opera. It is wild and eccentric, but full of imaginative power and dramatic effect; and now that we have heard Fornasari's aria, and seen him display all his tragic power in the splendid scena at the finale, we consider this act at least equal, if not superior to the others. Verdi's music is admirably suited to Fornasari, who appears more at home in it than Grisi, whose impersonation of Gualda, magnificent as it is, occasionally wants completeness, as though she could not immediately accustom herself to so complete a change from the music of her old repertoire; yet is Grisi's Gualda a triumph, as the applause, the encores, and calls before the curtain she obtains, demonstrate.

The benefit of the great Neapolitan, Lablache, will take place next Thursday, and will be a most brilliant night. There are promised—one opera, and the greater part of another; a ballet, and a divertissement. In the first—besides Labiache—Grisi, Sanchioli, Castellan, Mario, Fornasari, &c., will appear: and in the latter, Lucile Grahn, Cerito, L. Taglioni, Perrot, St. Leon, &c. But the great attraction is Cimarosa's exquisite opera, "Il Matrimonio Segreto," which will be revived on that occasion. The part of Geronimo is that in which Labiache first made his appearance in this country, and is one of his most inimitable characters. As to the opera itself, it is needless to speak in its praise: that the lapse of time has not diminished the effect of its charming music, is proved by its extraordinary success lately in Paris, where, though, as here, Mario and Labiache performed in it, they had neither Grisi, Castellan, Sanchioli, nor Fornasari—all of whom are included in the caste for Thursday.

PRINCESS'.

We confess we have some difficulty at the present time—albeit the subject is being constantly presented to us in various bearings -to define what species of dramatic production is legitimate, and what is not. Judging from the most popularly-received notion, it appears that, if a two or three act drama, in prose, be stretched out into five, and its prose turned into blank verse, that it at once becomes legitimate, and that in spite of its weakened interest, and the haziness which here and there obscures the purposes of its characters, it is that instant, most conventionally, ranked as a first-class production. The mass of the audience fall into this false conclusion from listening to the measured verse, the scanning of which oftentimes plates the most worthless ideas, and makes them pass current for real poetry. Than this standard of excellence nothing can be more deceptive. It was once wagered, by an author of high repute, that he would, in the course of a play in blank verse, introduce half a dozen speeches for the principal performers to deliver, artfully constructed after such a clap-trap fashion, that they should each be loudly applauded by the house, only appealing to the ear; but that upon a calm consideration of their connexion with the character or entire plot—nay, of their abstract meaning altogether—should be found to be entire nonsense. Whether this might or might not have proved to be the case, if the scheme had been carried out, we cannot decidedly tell; but we believe it might have been attempted with success.

In the framing, construction, and writing of five-act plays, wherein literary excellence is supported by powerful interest, we have, at present, no author who can approach the leading French dramatists, Delavigne, Hugo, and Dumas.

MR MACREADY AS "JAMES V. OF SCOTLAND," IN THE NEW PLAY OF "THE KING OF THE COMMONS," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

By many it will be considered something more criminal than high treason to say so, but we have the strongest desire to see dramas of their school taking the lead in England—divested, at the same time, of objectionable interest. Poetry is all very well, but poetry by itself never yet carried a play to a triumphant termination, that was deficient in construction. Let the two be united, and a brilliant success is the result: where one of these elements only is available, construction is the safest card to play.

In another style, called Legitimate Drama -Comedy by way of example, had the story of Mr. Sullivan's "Beggar on Horseback" been worked out with the dialogue of Mr. Jerrold's "Bubbles of the Day," one of the greatest triumphs of the Modern Drama would have been achieved; whereas, as it was, each appeared as a firework—the first as a rocket—the second as a carefully-arranged wheel-piece dazzled for a time, went out, and was thought of no more. But this by the way.

The last play that gave us hopes of a new school was "The Lady of Lyons." We were in hopes that it would have been followed up by pieces of a similar class. But such has not been the case.

We have been led into these remarks by the production of "The King of the Commons," a five act play, performed, for the first time, on Wednesday evening, at the Princess' Theatre; and, we are happy to add, as far as its public reception went, with eminent success. The plot may be briefly told. James the Fyth of Scotland (Mr. Macready), the hero of so many romantic stories, is surrounded by a Court of treacherous nobles; and, having been informed by a rough fellow—a kind of outlaw—Buckie of Drumsleehan (Mr. Cooper), that one Sir Adam Weir (Mr. Ryder) of Lauchmont, is on the way to England, to tender the Scottish lords to treason, the King determines to get into his house in disguise. This he effects, and receives from Sir Adam certain letters to take to the guilty nobles, as well as an account of the entire plot. By this means he discovers it, and, on returning to his Court, after reading a terrible lesson to them, in the presence of the headsman, forgives them.

This is the main action of the plot; but there is an under-current of interest relating to Sir Adam's daughter, Madeline (Mrs. Stirling), who loves and is betrothed by Malcolm Young (Mr. Leigh Murray). Malcolm, who is a relative of Sir Adam, has been destined by him to the throne, the old man having a design to wed his daughter to Mungo (Mr. Oxberry), son of the Laird Small (Mr. Compton), but the King takes the part of the young lovers; obtains permission from the church for Malcolm to change his profession of priest to that of soldier; brings about his union with Madeline; and, finding that Buckie had been unjustly deprived of some estates by Sir Adam Weir, restores upon their being restored to him.

It will be seen, from this outline, that the interest of the play was not very absorbing: and, at the same time, it was too diffuse. Had the action been compressed into three acts, all that weariness would have been avoided which waited upon the progress of many of the scenes, giving rise to that slight cough, and restless, almost inaudible murmur, which characterises an audience beginning to get among, and is usually so dangerous. As it was, in the third act, wherein Mungo had to deliver a long spiritless account of some tournament, there was a most unmistakeable shower of hisses; but one or two powerfully acted scenes that followed, brought the public back to a state of high good humour and satisfaction. There are not many great parts in the play. That of the King is the all-important one: next to him, Malcolm Young appears most prominently; and then Lord Small, whose position, however, was almost paralysed by the constant association with Mungo. The language is, throughout, graceful and polished: never reaching any high poetical standard, but always elegant and musical.

Of the acting of Mr Macready as James, it is impossible to speak too highly. The entire impersonation was magnificent, and every phase of the character was represented with the most consummate skill. We believe it is not going too far to state that his scene in the fourth act, with Seton, in which on the first suspicion of nobleman's disgrace, and afterwards discovers that he is still true, was one of the finest pieces of acting we ever witnessed. The whole house was hushed with long and breathless attention, only quieted by the interest taken by the audience in the progress of the piece. Mr Leigh Murray appeared, as Malcolm, to great advantage, and his efforts were greeted with the warmest encouragement. Little tendency to over-emphasis may be repressed with advantage. He is still young, and we doubt not that an enviable career is before him. Mr. Compton's performance of Laird Small was perfect: the forgetfulness and imbecility of the character being admirably portrayed; and his perpetual "Gadso!" was quaint and effective. Mr. Oxberry was not so happy as Mungo Small. He did all that he could, but the part was not in his line; and, perhaps, the chief fault was in having cast him for it. It struck us it would have been better to have made Mungo a braggart, shy and put Mr. James Vining into it. The other performers call for no especial notice, but may be generally commended.

There was tremendous applause when the curtain fell; and Mr. Macready being called for, was greeted with the most enthusiastic cheering, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs. A loud cry was then made for the author, upon which a head was rapidly protruded from one of the pit boxes, and as quickly withdrawn But this did not satisfy the house, and another shout of "On the stage! on the stage!" was raised; when Mr. Maddox came forward, and, pointing to the box, said that the author—A Mr White, we believe—was there, and would, without doubt, again present himself. Upon this, the outcry was redoubled, and the author was again drawn from his concealment, and compelled to acknowledge the applause; but he was still evidently averse to appearing in public. He must, however, have been high in favour, gratified by the enthusiastic manner in which both his play and himself were received. Mr Maddox then came forward, and announced "The King of the Commons" for representation on every evening of Mr. Macready's engagement

The play has been beautifully mounted. All the costumes and appointments are in the best possible taste; and it has the advantage of some of Mr W. Beverley's excellent scenery. We expect that its present run will benefit author, actor, and manager—and what more can be desired?

HAYMARKET

What is comedy? Johnson avowed that its most legitimate object was the creation of laughter. If so, the gentleman who, behind the ragged green baize of Punch, keeps the mob in a roar by his grotesque antics, is as much a comedian of "The Taming of the Shrew" But in what does comedy consist? Is it in the presence of wit? Colman never penned a line of wit. Is it in humour? Sheridan had not a grain of it. Must it be acted by gentlemen? Where are they in "Midsummer Night's Dream?" Must the story be pu ba Can anything be less so than the "Comedy of Errors?" As we feel compelled, therefore, to confess that we do not clearly know exactly what comedy is, we will scarcely attempt to pronounce that "Mr Peter Piper, or Found Out at Home," produced at the Haymarket on Saturday evening, may not fulfil all the requisites for that title. Proceed we, therefore, to say, that this drama in two acts is a good sound piece of immorality; there is no mincing the matter at all.

The characters come out boldly with improprieties of every description; there is not a blush amongst them. The scene is laid in Paris, and the temperance era at war upon this point, whether vice should be exposed or not. We feel induced to coincide with the opinion of the sagacious critic in The Times. The stage is, undoubtedly, a pillory where vice should be exposed and punished; it is not a pulpit for orations and declamations We dislike a character like that of Peregrine, in "John Bull," a sort of moral chorus, who stands at the corner of the stage and capers about, like Punch, aimed at everybody and hitting nobody; whilst at the same time we strongly repud ate the extreme and unnecessary license of the elder dramatists, who frequently discussed vices only to expose them. But to attempt to reform society by the stage, is to attempt, or to make all sins virtuous, as some critics seem to demand, would be as absurd as to ask Tom Sayers to cork his eyebrows heavily, or to give Charles Surface a dagger to finger during the screen scene. Peter Piper, or Found Out at Home, Peter Piper is a husband, a guardian, and a retired stockbroker. In retirement he is idle, and as idleness he finds a root of evil which root he cultivates, and it becomes a passion. His ward, a young lady strongly attached to an Irish Major of Dragoons. This young lady betrays to Peter's wife his impudent pr tensions: and the gentle pair conspire to drag the unhappy husband from one false position to another, by keeping him in perpetual dread of his wife's discovering a secret which is already known to her, and which he is at last driven to own. He delivers up a guilty correspondence, and confesses to midnight assignations only to find that he has been intriguing with his own wife. The author seems to consider this awful discovery a sufficient punishment for Peter's delinquency. Pacaa, a bailiff, passing himself off for an Indian officer, is full of fun, and a banal humour, quite colonial, who pursues him with what he calls "worrudity," gives rise to many laughable scenes

There are other incidents and characters in this piece, but we have detailed its purport. Let us proceed to observe in what material points the object of the author or authors—for we believe it is the joint production of two gent emen—is not accomplished. The episodical matter is too prominent: space has not been allowed for the more masterly development of the work to expand. The broad and laughable parts interfered with, rather than assisted, the main object. Indeed, so much do they engage the attention, that either the plot is confused, or inadequately conveyed to the audience. The first act drags, from want of proper and more to the point dialogue. An audience always feel where the author means them to laugh; and, if they can't, they feel called upon to do something, and so they hem—hollo at the only thing they can hear. The first act dragged heavily; a few hands faintly applauded—about as many as support the scene-shifters, when the scenes stick, and the gallery begins to object The second ended brilliantly; I deed, this act went off triumphantly, but the candle of the audience burnt to the end. In vain, during the third act, we listened for the platoon of epigrams that kept us alive during the first two. The authors seemed to depend on their situations and pot-pourri; but the audience, hastily, had caught the secret, and the moment see the fun of the situations, their own situation being the only one they seemed to understand, a fact which they briefly communicated to the stalls, who felt themselves fast becoming an audience. The curtain fell with a difference of opinion, but the "Ayes" had it by a majority. A curious fact attended the second representation of this piece. The first and second acts were all shrieked received, whilst the third act, which was condemned on the first night, was received with vociferous applause, and every line seemed to be hailed, rushed, to the great astonishment of the performers. Such sudden changes in public opinion are, however, not unusual. Messrs. Farren, Howe, Richard Blanchard, Backstone, and Mesdames Glover, Seymour, W. Clifford, and Humby, supported the principal characters. Need we add that they we re admirably acted?

ADELPHI

Mr. Rodwell is well known to the public, as a composer of no ordinary popularity, and a writer of several highly successful farces. He has lately aspired to the position of a vocalist; and, in the first piece of his production in this class of writing, "The Memoirs of an Umbrella," which, as most of our readers know, appeared last year in numbers, has been dramatised the piece produced at this house on Monday evening. Mr. Charles Dance, of Olympic memory, being entrusted with the adaptation.

In all pieces of this kind the author pro-supposes that the audience have read the book from which he plays; and hence the necessary incontinuity of the plot, and want of purpose in the action, must, in a great measure, militate against the success of the piece; but this fault, in the present case, was overcome by the poignancy of the characters, and the rapid movement of the incidents. We must refer our readers to the work itself for the plot of the drama, as it would be a task of no little difficulty to describe it. the situations being too numerous and complicated for description. A rough, but detailed sketch, however, may be given of as a rich man: a spendthrift widow, in search of an eligible match; a rival vessel from India, concealing, like Sir Oliver Surface, his real position; and the bearer of the great umbrella—which is seldom off the scene, but with which it has nothing to do form the principal characters in whose varied fortunes the interest of the drama lies

This kind of piece defies criticism, which may be said to end, in a measure, with the fat of the audience; and, on this occasion, their verdict was expressed in a lusty uproar of approbation, placing the success of the piece beyond all question. We must not forget to mention several popular sketches most humor ously hit off amongst the dramatis personæ. A "human glow-worm" one of those doorstep chamberlains who light our feet from the cab to the hall, on the occasion of an evening party—was ludicrously rendered by Mr. Paul Bedford. His pupil, by Mr. Munyard, was eq ually characteristic. Nor must we omit to mention the character of an Irish servant, played by a Mr. Ryan, who debuted on this occasion, with more than ordinary success. But we would give this gentleman a little advice. He smacks too much of the provinces, and lacks that ease so essentia. to the proper impersonation of the Irish character. The intriguing fellow, above-mentioned, was played to the life by Miss Woolgar—indeed, to mu ch reality—Mr Wright, as the attorney, on Mr. Slatters, was, mutatis mutandis, perfect in the words the author intended him to say, and succeeded in drawing a tear or two from the eyes of all his acquainted free thirds on his own brain. But we think that the best assumption in the whole piece was that of the Honourable Mr. Spuff, by Mr Selby. There was not a particle of staginess about it. The character had stepped from May Fair to the Adelphi, without the least adulteration on the way. His every utterance was greeted with shouts of laughter, and he was followed by hearty applause at every exit.

The mise en scène is excellent, especially the scene representing a masquerade in the house of the widow. A series of tableaux, representing the progress of a gamester from Crockford's to Waterloo-bridge, figuratively speaking, w re unfolded. The last scene was the Surrey Zoological Gardens, exhibiting Vesuvius, which did not go off, however, to the great disappointment of the gallery.

The "Memoirs of an Umbrella" bids fair to keep its place at the Adelphi for some time.

NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY.—Colonel Pasley has inspected this line of railway He traversed the entire line from Berwick to Edinburgh, with the exception of the tunnel at Penmanshiel, near Cockburnspath, which is not yet in a sufficiently forward state to admit of the rails being laid. He made a most minute inspection of the line and spoke of it in favorable terms; so that there is every probability that the Board of Trade will sanction its being opened as far as Cockburnspath on the 1st of June.

THE MARKETS.

The present week's arrivals of wheat of home produce have been on a very limited scale, nevertheless the show of samples of that article to-day was fully adequate to the wants of the dealers, and trade being a very slow sale, at barely Monday's reduced figures. In foreign wheat—both free and in bond—next to nothing was doing, and prices as the turn with difficulty supported. Considerable sales were held at the last quarter. There was very little flour in sale, yet prices were mostly nominal. Malt ready for delivery went off at previous rates, but other parcels were a slow inquiry The oat trade was dull, and prices had a drooping tendency. Beans, peas, and flour heavy, and not cheaper Upwards of 10,000 barrels of the latter have arrived from the United States this week.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1726; barley, 560; oats, 80 Irish: wheat, ——; barley, none; oats, 6790 Foreign: wheat, 3,320; barley, ——; oats, 320; flour, 1749 sacks, 2,730 quarters

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 42s to 53s. ditto white, 58s to 62s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 46s to 57s; rye, —s to —s; grinding barley, 24s to 26s; malting ditto, —s to —s; Ingate and Chevalier, 34s to —s; Scotch feeding, 24s to —s; brewing ditto, —s to —s; Kingston and Ware, —s to —s, Clovesler, —s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 23s; potato ditto, 27s to 30s, Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 23s, ditto, white, 24s to 28s, Sligo, Limerick, and Londonderry, 22s to 23s; ditto ditto, 24s to 26s; maple, 32s to 35s; waite, 26s to 30s; bolcer, 44s to 42s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 47s to 50s per sack. Irish, 40s to 42s. Norfolk and Suffolk, 40s to 42s. Stockton, 40s to 42s. Scotch, 40s to 42s. Dantzic red, 54s to 56s, white, 58s to 62s; Marianopoli, 56s to 58s; Rostock, 54s to 56s; Pomeranian, 52s to 54s; and Baltic red, 52s to 54

MISS DOLBY and MISS ORGER'S ANNUAL CONCERT will take place on MONDAY Evening, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, to commence at Eight o'Clock precisely. Vocalists—Mme. Albertazzi, Misses Birch, Bamforth, Messent, Lincoln, and Dolby; Sig. Marras, Messrs. Lockey, Baddeley, and John Parry. Pianiste, Miss Orger. Harp, Mr Godfrey. The Orchestra will be complete and numerous Leader, Mr Willcox. Conductors Messrs Benedict and W. S. Bennett. Tickets, 7s. each, to be had of Miss Dolby, 61, Berners-street, Oxford-street; Miss Orger, 28, York-street, Portman-square; and at the principal Music-shops. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. each, to be obtained only of Miss Dolby and Miss Orger.

THE LAST WEEK BUT THREE OF GENERAL TOM THUMB'S LIVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL, previous to his departure to America.—All Tickets that have been issued will be received, notwithstanding their dates. The little General will appear every Day and Evening in all the Costumes and Performances in which he had the honour of appearing three times before her Majesty, and all the principal Courts of Europe. Hours of exhibition from Half-past Twelve to Five; and Half-past Seven to Nine o'Clock. Admission, 1s. Children under ten years of age, Half-price. After Nine o'Clock each evening, the General appears in his New Play at the City of London Theatre, Bishopsgate-street.

In one volume, foolscap 8vo. beautifully illustrated, price 8s.

RICHMOND AND OTHER POEMS.
MADDEN and MALCOLM, 8, London-street.

Just Published, 4th edition, price 1s.

THE MINERAL WATERS OF KREUZNACH.
By J. E. P. PRIEGER, M.D., Principal Physician of the Royal Hospital at Kreuznach.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Prince-street, Soho.

Just Published, price 1s.

KISSENGEN; a Short Account of its Locality and Waters.
By N. ALLEN TRAVIS, M.D.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Prince-street, Soho.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 12s. 6d.,

THE STRUCTURE and FUNCTIONS of the FEMALE BREAST, as they relate to its Health, Derangement or Disease. By E. W. TUSON, F.R.S. Member of the Medical Societies of London and Edinburgh. Publish'd by JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

DR FORBES ON CONSUMPTION.
Just published, price 5s. 6d.,

ILLUSTRATIONS of MODERN MESMERISM, from Personal Investigation; with the Additional Illustration of Mademoiselle Julia. By JOHN FORBES, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to her Majesty's Household.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Fourth Edition, in 12mo., 6s.

UNIFORMITY of GUIDE, Stated in a Letter to I. K. BRUNEL, Esq. JOSEPH CUNDALL, 12, Old Bond-street.

Now ready, Second Edition, price 8d.

NARROW GAUGE PUBLIC RAILWAYS BETTER THAN BROAD GAUGE RAILWAYS, AS WELL AS CHEAPER. By HERBERT S. MELVILLE, ESQ.
London. W. STEPHENSON, 12, and 13, Parliament-street, and all Booksellers.

Just Published, price 6d.

FALLACIES of the BROKEN GAUGE: MR. LUSHINGTON'S ARGUMENTS in favour of the Broad Gauge and Results of Gauge refuted; being a Reply to the Remarks of a late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, on the Returning Board of the Gauge Commissioners. By a FELLOW of the ROYAL SOCIETY.
London: JOHN OLLIVIER, 59, Pall-mall.

Price 1s. 6d. in cloth,

THE JEWISH MANUAL; or practical instructions in Jewish and Modern Cookery, with a collection of valuable Recipes and Hints relating to the Toilette. Edited by a LADY. T. and W. BOOSEY, 29, New Bond-street; GLINES and BOYD, Edinburgh; CUMMING and FERGUSON, Dublin.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,
WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S.
Sherwood, 23, Paternoster-row. Carvalho, 147, Fleet-street. Hay, 9, Leicester-square. Mann, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

In Weekly Nos., 2d.; Monthly Parts, 9d.; Quarterly Volumes, 3s. 6d. cloth, 4s. 6d.
MOORE'S PICTORIAL PUBLICATIONS. I. SHAKSPEARE: COMEDIES. 39 Illustrations, all the known Portraits of Shakspeare, and Two Views of the House in which he was born, 3s. cloth gilt. II. POEMS. 9 Illustrations and the Portraits, 1s. 6d. cloth, gilt. No. 26, May 30. Easy Lessons in Spanish. III. BALLADS. A Collection of Ballads of various Ages and Countries with Glees, Songs, and Rounds. No. 32, May 23.—Sir Roland and the Moss, and Gay Tu Have.
J. C. MOORE, 37 Strand; Agent for Ireland, Milliken, Dublin.

NEW PRACTICAL WORK ON GARDENING
Now ready, price 1s. 6d.
THE ANNALS OF HORTICULTURE, AND YEAR BOOK OF PRACTICAL GARDENING.—This Work, Illustrated with 136 Engravings and Coloured Frontispiece, contains 48 pages of plain and practical Management of Greenhouses and Frames; a most ample and Calendar of Operations for every Month in the Year; plain instructions in the Culture and Forcing of Flower Fruit, and vegetables, with descriptions of the most select of all popular kinds, with their Names of the Colours, similar to many nurserymen's Catalogues, &c.; a complete Index, &c. &c.—London: WILLIAM SMITH, 113, Fleet-street; and all Booksellers. Orders received by all Booksellers, and STONEMAN, 60, Paternoster-row.

In One thick Volume, Eighth Edition, much Enlarged, price 16s.,
MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; a Popular Treatise on the Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases; with a copious Collection of Approved Prescriptions, Medical Management of Children, Duties of Mothers, &c. Including a comprehensive Treatise on Midwifery, and Diseases of Females and Infants. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D., &c. &c. We shall preserve it as the advice of an valuable friend, for reference in the hour of need, without any doubt of being benefited by its wisdom.—Literary Chronicle.—It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity.—Literary Gazette.—We feel bound to recommend it to the friends of health.—Modern times.—Monthly Olio.—Published by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Paternoster-row. Hamilton, 33, Society-street, Portman-square. Longman, Orme, and all Booksellers.

LUCY NEAL, as sung by the Ethiopian Serenaders, with Symphonies and Accompaniments, by Henry Russell, 3d. The May Queen, Parts I and II., the two complete, as sung by the Hutchinsons, 3d.; Lodge's last new song, Robin Hood in Sherwood, 3d.; Wright's last new song, Ballad to Beauty, 3d.; Mrs. Macfarren's Harold's two best songs in the "Crown Jewels," 3d.; the celebrated Duet in Ditto, 3d.; The Operatic entire PIANO Duets, Jewels Quadrille, 3s.; being recent numbers of THE MUSICAL TREASURY, results made for the Family Pianoforte, elegantly printed on music folio.
DAVISON and CO., Musical Publishers, 244, High Holborn, and 76, Strand, of whom may be had, gratis, Lists of 300 Pianoforte Pieces, Vocal and Instrumental, in Threepenny, since, including above 60 songs by Henry Russell.

Now Ready, Price 6d.
COMING HOME, A COMIC PANORAMA. Drawn by CLECH [illegible] which the readers of sport are subjected "COMING HOME" from the Races with the laughter-moving effects of this talented artist's comic pencil, presented to the Public in a manner most amusing and unique style of elegance, suitable for the drawing-room, and in price adapted to the cottage.
EXTRACTS OPINIONS OF THE PRESS. "It is contrary to our usual course to notice ominations of this kin from the trade artistical, but the manner in which this Panorama is 'presented,' to the public is evidently a new departure in that style line, and a matter field—in the art of 'getting up' which we have no doubt will be appreciated."—Probably the Times. "A stream of elegance runs through this unique production, softening the vulgar portions of the scene [illegible] to the artist who wishes to depict with truth the reality of the scene [illegible] Perhaps the Post. "We congratulate the publishers on the manner [illegible] the Sale, which we hope will be immediate."—The Sun. "Most likely the Herald [illegible] If the saying of laugh and get fat' is true, we would advise all our friends who are anxious to decrease their bulk as [illegible] expense, to purchase this panorama of 'Misses and Masters' [illegible] observations, which we have no doubt will have the effect of exciting their risible faculties to [illegible]—Sunday Times.
[illegible] BENHAM and KINNAIRD [illegible] Strand; DON, 90, [illegible] and S. HOOKHAM, 32, Old Bond-street.

SMITH, ELDER, AND CO.'S LIST OF NEW WORKS
THE ONE AND ONLY GRADUATE ON PAPER.
A SECOND VOLUME of "MODERN PAINTERS;" containing of the Imaginative and Theoretic Faculties. By a GRADUATE OF OXFORD. In One Volume, 8vo., price 6s. 6d. cloth, or 12s. 6d., in which also two large editions have been sold. In Foolscap 8vo., price 6s., cloth.
 A New Edition of the First Volume, revised by the Author, is in the Press, uniform in size with Vol II.
DIE STEP-MOTHER. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq. In Three Volumes, Post 8vo., price £1 11s. 6d.
LLEWELLYN HEIR. OR, NORTH WALES: its Manners, Customs, and Superstitions, during the Last Century. Illustrated by a Story founded on Facts. In Three Volumes, Post 8vo., price £1 11s. 6d. (Now Ready.)
THE NOVITIATE; OR, A YEAR AMONG THE ENGLISH JESUITS. A Personal Narrative. With an Introduction, on the Confessional Morality, and History of the Society. By JAMES BURNESIDE, late Novice of the Order. In Foolscap 8vo., price 6s. cloth.
GLENDARA—COTTAGE. A Tale concerning CHURCH PRINCIPLES. By Miss CHRISTMAS. With a Preface by the Rev HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S., F.S.A. In Foolscap 8vo., price 5s. cloth.
TALES OF THE COLONIES, OR, THE ADVENTURES OF AN EMIGRANT. By CHARLES ROWCROFT, Esq., late Colonial Magistrate. The Fourth Edition. This Work is original; published in 3 vols., post 8vo., at £1 11s. 6d., in which also two large editions have been sold. In Foolscap 8vo., price 6s., cloth.
[illegible] SECOND SERIES OF TALES OF THE COLONIES.
THE [illegible] OF VAN HEEMSKERK LAND. By C. ROWCROFT, Esq., Author of "Tales of the Colonies," &c. In 2 vols., Post 8vo., price 21s. 6d.
THE WORKS OF G. P. R. JAMES [illegible] publishing in Quarterly Volumes, neatly bound in cloth, with [illegible] containing a complete Volume, and forming a handsome Series of his Works has been established. The Novelty, Interest, and [illegible] and agreeable size of type, which renders it fit for every age and every station.
I. THE GIPSY. Vol. V. PHILIP AUGUSTUS.
II. MARY OF BURGUNDY. " VI. HEIGHT OF CRIME.
III. THE HUGUENOTS. " VII. MORLEY ASHTON.
IV. ONE IS A THOUSAND. " VIII. THE ROBBER.
IMAGINATION AND FANCY; or, Selections from [illegible] Prose Writers of their Art, with Marginal Notes, and an Essay in Answer to the Question, "What is Poetry?" By LEIGH HUNT. In Post 8vo., price 10s. 6d. cloth, uniform with any kind of cloth after bound by the Author. and SON 154, Ab 156, 157, Minories; and 65 St. Paul's Churchyard.
E. MOSES and SON, To the Wool and Drapery, Cordiers, Ladies' Tailors, Habit Makers, and Others. Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to grant the public against imposition, but having earned that the above-named [illegible] as Foreman of [illegible] coming connected with them, or in the same manner, has been reserved to in many instances, and for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who destroy genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call and see that the Entrance to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the church, City, London.
NOTICE.—The entrance to the bespoke department is at 84, Aldgate. [illegible] business transacted at this establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed as usual every week.
The public are especially directed to notice [illegible] at the Establishment of E. MOSES and SON [illegible] not be opened on Saturday Evening, May 30th, nor Monday, June 1st, but will reopen for business, as usual, on Tuesday Morning, June 2nd.

AUBER'S OPERA of THE CROWN JEWELS, as performed at the Lyceum Theatre, is now ready in the PIANISTA, No. 98, price 2s. Also DON GIOVANNI, NOZZE DI FIGARO, SONNAMBULA, and PRA DIAVOLO, each 2s. Lodon in Focus, from engraved [illegible] Post Typed. I LOMBARDI, and STRADELLA, in preparation.
Office, 192, Piccadilly.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for JUNE, price 1s., Post-free, 1s. 6d., contains a superb Extra Plate and Summer Fashions extraordinary and unprecedented variety, amounting to double the number given in any other work—Extra Plates 79 figures, Patterns of 36 Walking Dresses, 30 Bonnets, Pelisses, Children's [illegible] and endless Novelties; Descriptions, Tales, Poetry.
D. Hallaway, 59, Fleet-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

QUESTED on RAILWAY SURVEYING and LEVELLING. This day is published, One Vol. 8vo., illustrated with several Plans and Diagrams, price 8s. 6d. in cloth, A TREATISE ON RAILWAY SURVEYING and LEVELLING; in which it is simplify the most approved methods now adopted by Engineers. By JOHN QUESTED, Surveyor, Author of A Treatise on the Art of Land Surveying.
HENRY AND FLETCHER, 15, Cloak-lane.

CIRCULATING LIBRARY.—Five Hundred Volumes of Selected Novels and Romances to be disposed of for only Two-thirds of the subscription, comprising many of the principal works of Sir Walter Scott, Dickens, James, Ainsworth, Marryat, Cooper, &c., and some very recently published; adapted for any person commencing a Circulating Library. The books may be seen, and a list obtained, at J. GARMISON'S Agricultural Warehouse, 9, [illegible] Museum of Bouverie street, Fleet-street. Also, 120 Vols. of Sabers Voyages, Travels, Manners, &c., for only Ten Pounds.

WOOD-ENGRAVINGS.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, a quantity of Wood-cuts (public buildings or views), or stereotype cases of the same. Apply, stating particulars and lowest prices affixed, to Mr. A. Northcroft, 96, Chancery-lane. Engravers and Printers for an English publication.

FEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full [illegible] of their [illegible] sizes and prices, by which persons are enabled to judge the [illegible] of their Bedding, which can be sent to any part [illegible] other Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers [illegible] Established nearly Seventy Years.

AIR-GUNS and AIR CANES.—An entirely New and further Assortment of Improved Guns, Rifles, and Canes, for Sporting and Self-defence, [illegible] adapted by REILLY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, [illegible] &c., with ball, small birds with shot, 50s. 60s. 70s. 80s. 90s. &c. &c., from 30s. each. REILLY, Gun-Maker to the Queen, 2, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at [illegible] APPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, [illegible] Family Linen Warehouse, 76, Tottenham-court-street, two doors below Piccadilly. [illegible] Fine Linen and Long Cambric Handkerchiefs, [illegible] Established for nearly Seventy [illegible] John Lee and Son's celebrated Linen [illegible]

ASSIGNATS of the FRENCH REVOLUTION of 1790.—I PETER WHELAN, Dealer in ANCIENT and MODERN COINS and MEDALS, Bernard-street, London, has just [illegible] a large number of these highly curious Documents, drawn [illegible] Thaler, for from 5 to 50 Francs, price 1s. each. One will be sent by return on receipt of 1s. and a stamp. Ancient Roman Brass Coins, with good Portraits of the Antonines Emperors, 1s. each. [illegible] 2s. 6d. per [illegible]

EDMUND SPILLER'S SELF-ACTING BACHELORS' KETTLES. They will [illegible] Two Pints of Water [illegible] without any preparation. They [illegible] [illegible] soaker, no bellows, no grate, no ashes, no attention, price 5s. 6d. [illegible] JOHN SPILLER, Manufacturer of Improved Self-acting Kettles, 3, Featherstone-buildings, and 45, Holborn.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, Kingsroad, Chelsea. By Special Appointment to HER MAJESTY and H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT. Lord [illegible] Derby, and numerous Patrons. A great variety of ornamental Water [illegible] Swans, Cygnets, Pheasants, Mallay Ducks, and Rare [illegible] Fowls, for Ornamenting Parks, &c. And at MR. BAKER'S, Hall [illegible] Gracechurch-street. Just arrived some pure Silver Pheasants.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to [illegible] an inspection of their PARASOLS for the Season, including the most [illegible] Silk ever manufactured, in every variety of shape, size, and colour. The SYLPHIDE, [illegible] manufactured in every variety of shape, size, and colour. The SYLPHIDE, and can be procured of all respectable Mercers and Drapers. W. and J. SANGSTER, Patentees and Manufacturers, 94 Fleet-street; and 20, St. Jame's-street.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES GRAND REGATTA.—[illegible] to take place on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, the 28th and 29th days of [illegible] Day with Music Stand, Dancing Platform, &c. Illuminations on the 29th day of June next. JAMES NASH, Secretary.
All Subscriptions received by F. S. COOPER, Esq., Treasurer; the Secretary; and Messrs. HUGHAN and KINCE, Post-office, Henley.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Lessee of the Epsom Grand Stand [illegible] that no person guilty of any mal-practices, or notoriously in default in their Betting Transactions, will be admitted on the Premises. The Lessee will also be enabled to state, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit persons with this garment better than any other House in London. The extensive Stock of his fitting is a good, comfy style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from. 9, Grosvenor, 343, High Holborn.

EPSOM GRAND STAND.—The Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed that the Horses to run for the Derby the Oaks, and every other Race at Epsom, will be exhibited in front of the Grand Stand. The Lawn is now raised to its full height, and the Course, from the Starting Post to the Distance, is in most perfect order. The Building has been thoroughly cleaned and superbly decorating. The spacious Betting Rooms are on the ground floor, and the Dining Rooms, Ball Room, and Refreshment Rooms are in the first floor, reserved exclusively for Ladies, where respectable male domestics will be always in attendance. The New Grand Entrance has been made at the back of the Building, from the Stable yard, [illegible] and, for the reception of company. Ticket for the week, a Sovereign, or, for Saturday, 5s. Tuesday, 7s. 6d. Wednesday, 5s. Thursday, 7s. 6d. Friday, 10s. 6d. Applications for Tickets, Letters, Printing-office, High-street, Epsom, or at the New Grand Entrance at the back of the Stables.

ROYAL ASYLUM OF ST. ANN'S SOCIETY.
BY VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS
And Educating, Children of those once in Prosperity Orphans or Destitute.
NOMINATIONS of NEW CANDIDATES for the next HALF YEARLY ELECTION should be [illegible] before THURSDAY, the 28th day of JUNE.
Forms may be had at the Offices where Subscriptions will be gratefully received. A Donation of 50 guineas entitles the Donor to a Presentation in Perpetuity, of 25 guineas entitles the Donor to a Presentation for Life, and a Donation of 750 guineas to a Presentation in Perpetuity.
By Order, EDWD. FRED. LEES, Secretary.
Mansion-House, [illegible]

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel Keepers, and Large Consumers, supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Price, Per Cash.

[illegible]	2s. 6d.	3s. 0d.	3s. 8d.	4s. 0d.	4s. 4d.	4s. 8d.	5s. 0d.
[illegible]	5s. 4d.	5s. 8d.	6s. 0d.	6s. 4d.	6s. 8d.	7s. 0d.	8s. 0d.
[illegible]	9d.	10d.	1s. 0d.	1s. 2d.	1s. 4d.	1s. 6d.	1s. 8d.

One pound and upwards sent to any part of the Town.
MANSELL and Co., 3, Bucklersbury, Cheapside
Country orders for 40lbs of Tea and upwards delivered free of carriage to any part of the [illegible]

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention purchasers to their new stock of London made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves, at their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are £7 7s. each; and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, ten, twelve, fourteen, and sixteen guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers and the public generally, that they have a handsome assortment of the most improved tea pots, and that they are sold at reduced prices from those current.

Thread Pattern		Thread Pattern
Tea Pot	£10 18 0	Strong Silver Tea Pot	£13 0 0
Cream jug	0 14 0	Ditto Sugar Basin	1 1 0
Ditto Cream jug	0 10 6	Ditto Cream jug	0 15 0
Ditto Coffee pot	14 10 0	Ditto Coffee pot	16 15 0

Complete [illegible] Complete £42 7s. 6d.
Any of the above articles may be had separately. Services made to any pattern. Crests and on application at the Establishment. Plate [illegible] obtaining drawings, with the weights and prices of the articles, free of charge. Any part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the Colonies, Tea Services packed in a box for carriage.

DIAMOND DUST, DIRECT FROM THE MINES.—Genuine DIAMOND DUST [illegible] originally instantaneously the lessee edge to the blackest razor or Knife, is now supplied, imported direct from the mines of Golconda, the Brazils, and the Ural Mountains and may be had at the wholesale depot, 1, Angel-court, Strand. London, in rosewood boxes, with cover and [illegible] 2s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s. 6d., each; and at the Diamond Dust, it is well known, has been used [illegible] the Russian Court as an indispensable adjunct to the comfort of the [illegible] the late Majesty George IV., and his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex were [illegible] with the peculiar properties and application of the diamond dust, having used it for sharpening their razors for upwards of twenty years. Further notice of Diamond Dust will never require to have their razors set or ground, the use of the hone being rendered entirely unnecessary. Strops and paste are supplied on liberal terms. Either of the Boxes will be transmitted free to any part of the country. Wholesale Depot, 1, Angel-court, opposite Somerset House, Strand.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.
(A BRIEF OUTLINE.)
The extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of the business; and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements upon which it has opened. Bespoke Department is now devoted to them a spacious range of show-Rooms, situate at No. 84, Aldgate, Watling-street, 84, Aldgate. There are also alterations or cutting and sewing and a select Practical Tailor, Ladies and Habit Maker [illegible] and that a private Hand Business—centre set apart, at MOSES and SON have no other additions too numerous to name at present. The Ready Made Department is at least four times its former extent, and is [illegible] consequently, be dispatched with much greater facility. This department is [illegible] Aldgate. The 1st Depot is at 81, Aldgate, where a fashionable assortment of every description and Caps of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery, Mart, 155, Minories, is [illegible] for low worth and variety of its articles, from which [illegible] Hosiery bases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department [illegible] recommended, as one of the important features in the New Houses [illegible] remembered that economy [illegible] is the maxim at the Establishment, as it was at the old [illegible] be also remembered, that the Proprietors still [illegible] the marking of the articles is plain figures, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be [illegible] also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the [illegible] of the article may be refunded, without the least hesitation, and that [illegible] Self-Measure system and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which [illegible] any kind of cloth after bought by the Author. [illegible] and SON 154, Ab 156, 157, Minories; and 65 St. Paul's Churchyard.
E. MOSES and SON, To the Wool and Drapery, Cordiers, Ladies' Tailors, Habit Makers, and Others. Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to grant the public against imposition, but having earned that the above-named [illegible] as Foreman of [illegible] coming connected with them, or in the same manner, has been reserved to in many instances, and for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who destroy genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call and see that the Entrance to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the church, City, London.
NOTICE.—The entrance to the bespoke department is at 84, Aldgate. [illegible] business transacted at this establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed as usual every week.
The public are especially directed to notice [illegible] at the Establishment of E. MOSES and SON [illegible] not be opened on Saturday Evening, May 30th, nor Monday, June 1st, but will reopen for business, as usual, on Tuesday Morning, June 2nd.

THE EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY are SELLING TEAS [illegible] per and Recent d particularly these fine descriptions fit [illegible] the New Tea [illegible] Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's [illegible]

DRESSING-CASES.—FISHER, 188, Strand.—A large stock of CASES, with the new and improved Mortised Partitions, which cannot possibly break loose, warranted to stand the Continental Climate. A good Dressing-case, either Ladies or Gentlemen's, may be purchased from £3 to £20. Also, Writing-desks, Work-boxes, Ladies' Travelling-desks, &c.—188, Strand.

PIANOFORTES.—The Cheapest House in England to buy these instruments is H. TOLKIEN'S, 36, King William-street, London-bridge, near the statue. He has made-admired pianos, for equality of tone, beauty of case, and lone, unequalled by any maker. Cash price, £35. Also a large assortment of elegant cottages and cabinets, at a small advance on prime cost, being 30 per cent under the charges of other makers.

PIANOFORTE.—To be SOLD immediately, a Splendid Six-Octave Rosewood Cabinet Pianoforte, brilliant tone, the property of an Officer going to India, cost Eighty Guineas a short time back, to be sold for Twenty-five Guineas.—To be seen at 81, London-road, Southwark. Elephant and Castle end. N.B.—By Moore and Co. from Co larde and Collards.

OUTFITS for INDIA, by Ship and Overland, including every requisite, ready-made, for Ladies and Gentlemen, at the lowest wholesale prices, by THRIGHER and GLENNY, 152, Strand, where lists of outfits necessary for every purpose and age-statement, with prices and particulars, may be had on application. N.B. The only house in London for Ladies' Habits and Riding Dresses and the new Over-and-Under Skirt.

LADIES' NIGHTCAPS, Riding Habit-Shirts, Pelerines, Collars Sleeves, Laces, &c., in every conceivable style of novelty that Paris has produced, at the lowest prices strictly consistent with genuine material and [illegible] Hats, Bonnets, Pelisses (Polka and Jacket), Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c., for which the Juvenile Depôt is [illegible] Mrs. Baby Linen.—MARIN MUNN, 229, Regent street

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 201, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing to the most perfect style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by [illegible] returns to Pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Mourning Rooms.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius Waltz, and Valse à Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Assembly Academy, limited to forty members, during the last Month, on Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application as above.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's Patent Detector Locker Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Bankers, Chests, &c.; strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks. C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, Kitchen ranges, fenders [illegible] fire-irons, guards, and bedding in general. Every article warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 59, Baker-st. et, Portman-square.

DYEING, &c.—GEORGE SMITH, 98, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, silk, cotton, and woollen dyer, and furniture-cleaner, in returning thanks for the liberal patronage with which he has been favoured during the last 16 years, begs to inform them that he continues to clean [illegible] Carpets, or otherwise, all kinds of silks, woollen velvets, curtains, &c., in the most expeditious and economy. India and other shawls blown, mixed, &c., clean [illegible] equal to new. N.B. Orders punctually attended to in Town or Country.

SMITH'S GOLD REVIVER, 2s. 6d. per Bottle, gives, in one minute, the splendour of new gilding to the most tarnished and [illegible] frames. GOLD VARNISH, 1s. 6d., repairs defects. They may be applied with the utmost facility to any gilded surface. ELECTROPLATING LIQUID SILVER, in 2s. 6d. Bottles, re-silvers the copper parts of worn plated articles instantly restoring their original beauty and durability. Cost and trouble less than cleaning.—Sole Manufacturer, SMITH, 281, Strand (opposite Northumberland House). Note—own the address.

DROUT'S TOOTH BRUSHES.—These celebrated Brushes are [illegible] known in most parts of the world, and esteemed for their durability and beauty of [illegible]. They retain the half the [illegible] worn out, and from every degree of hardness and variety of shape to the extent of nearly 100 sorts, including those recommended by the late Abernethy, Sir Astley Cooper, &c., may be sold at the [illegible] of 18s. each, or by post for thirteen stamps.—Drout's Brush and Comb Manufactory, 229, Strand, London, seven doors west of Somerset House. Established 40 years.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit at this [illegible] can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trousers Maker and Draper, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit persons with this garment better than any other House in London. The extensive Stock of his fitting is a good, comfy style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from. R. Graves, 313, High Holborn.

DENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO. (late Dent), Patent-street, corner of Hyde-street, hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, inventors and patentees.—From the construction of the Patent Flexible hats, the ungenuine character of the genuine is easily discovered, and purchasers will become cautious in the purchase. Recommending themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being [illegible] and [illegible] the perspiration passes off through the crown of the hat, are considerations. As Ladies' Riding Hats, they are light and elastic, and will not [illegible] JOHNSON and CO., 185, Regent-street, and [illegible] and JOHNSON, [illegible]

THOUSANDS of SHIRTS for INSPECTION.—RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, Hosiers, and Outfitters, 59 St. Martin's-lane, and 22, Newstreet, Covent-garden, beg to call the attention of gentlemen to their large and [illegible] section and make, an assortment of several [illegible] shirts, including every description, [illegible] a shilling to the finest linen and the richest [illegible] Also a large assortment of [illegible] work at very moderate prices. Boys' Shirts in all sizes, and Ladies Ready-made Linen of every description. Merino Vests and Pants, Hosiery, Gloves, Ties, Scarfs, Braces, and other articles of Gentlemen's Dress, on orders preserved for the Establishment [illegible] The trade is recommended to apply to Address. Country Agents Wanted.

TEBBETT'S NEW LIGHT WATERPROOF OVER-COATS.—The reputation of these well-known Garments for quality, style, superior fancy and neat tailoring, has been so long established that they now carry their own recommendation, and need no other [illegible] than to say that the Proprietor is now [illegible] the Manufacture of the Garments, notwithstanding the numerous competitors their [illegible] known extensive sale to [illegible] Gentlemen and the Public generally, to the highest rank and list of the [illegible] Trade, have adopted them, and for the convenience of such, and of the increasing [illegible] Gentlemen of the First Respectability, the Price will be 42s. [illegible] Coat, as a [illegible] Establishment at No. 9 and 10, Exeter, [illegible] time for which will be duly announced. [illegible] BRIDGE, Tailor and Over-Coat Maker 69, Cornhill, North side.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA, POTASS, & MAGNESIA WATERS, and AERATED LEMONADE, continue to maintain their supremacy over all others; and are manufactured upon the largest scale at their several Establishments in London and Hampstead. Barley and may be obtained of the principal Chemists in the United Kingdom. As a great deal of spurious water is sold under their name, the Public are requested to observe that each SCHWEPPE'S Bottle, Label, and Cork, has their name in the device, with which every Bottle is protected to prevent imposition. Bermuda Soltera Water, recommended by the Surgeons, as for the last twenty years the first parcel of this year's [illegible] just arrived from Bahia.

DEWAR'S PURE BROWN DURHAM MUSTARD.—In consequence of the numerous and increasing applications for this pure preparation of BROWN MUSTARD SEED, the Proprietor begs to announce that he has appointed Messrs. BUTLER and HARDING Chemists, Chemists (corner of St. Paul's Churchyard) his agents for London. This article will be found more superior to that prepared from the [illegible] Mustard, as it is made in London for Durham Mustard. It is warranted free from every species of adulteration, and, by possessing more of the pungent volatile properties than [illegible] other articles, more effectually promoting digestion and more agreeable as a condiment. On account of its pure and delicate quality it is highly prized for [illegible] purposes. Sold in Glass Jars, at 1s. 6d. and 3s. each. [illegible]

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S DRESSING CASES.—[illegible] Leadenhall-street, London, invites [illegible] attention of His ELOCK. which [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

EPSOM IN 'FORTY-SIX.

Obscurity seems to be the badge of matters of mark. If ever there was such a person at all as Homer, nobody knows his breed, seed, or generation; and, in like manner, if ever there was a beginning of Epsom Races, it may have been contemporary with the establishment of the Olympic Games, for anything we know to the contrary. In a History of Epsom, published some twenty years ago, the historian states that when the races in that vicinity first commenced he had been unable to trace. "Few writers," he continues, "who mention the district, do more than simply narrate the fact that horse-races are held there annually." Whether they were, at first, periodical or occasional, we will not presume to determine, though the latter is, we think, the most probable. There can be no doubt that Epsom Downs (or, as they are frequently, though erroneously, written in old writings, Banstead Downs) early became the spot upon which the lovers of racing indulged their fancy. And, perhaps, the known partiality of James I. for this species of diversion will justify us in ascribing their commencement to the period when he resided at the palace of Nonsuch. King James had imbibed a predilection for horse-races before he ascended the English throne: they were in high estimation in Scotland during his minority. When the races on Epsom Downs were first held periodically, we have not been able to trace with accuracy; but we find that, from the year 1730, they have been annually held in the months of May or June, and about six weeks previously to which, the Hunters' Stakes are occasionally run for on the Epsom Race Course. The Races were, for a long period, held twice in every year—Spring and Autumn. It was then customary to commence at eleven o'clock in the forenoon; and, after the first or second heat, the company usually returned to the town to dinner. In the afternoon they again assembled on the Downs, and the Races for the day were then finished." These doings were coeval with the time when Epsom was a type of the water-drinking places of a later date.

In the reign of his predecessor, Elizabeth, it was a Spa of high degree, to which the fashion of the Continent, as well as that of home, resorted. It had its ball-rooms, and long walks, and bands of minstrels, and its Salts—for purging the vapours of people of quality, at the low charge of five shillings an ounce. The spring whence this precious alkali was obtained was situated on a common, about half-a-mile from the town, and was the first mineral water of the kind discovered in England, with the exception of the Hot Well, at Bath.

To establish the fact of horse-racing having been a recognised sport in the neighbourhood of Epsom in the middle of the seventeenth century, it will be sufficient to quote a passage from "Clarendon's History of the Rebellion":—"Soon after the meeting, which was held at Guildford, May 18, 1648, to address the two Houses of Parliament, that the King, their only lawful Sovereign, might be restored to his due honours, and come to his Parliament for a personal treaty, &c., a meeting of the Royalists was held on Banstead (Epsom) Downs under the pretence of a horse race." A century later, we have the classic name of Eclipse conspicuous in its annals, that extraordinary animal having taken his first professional degrees on its course, under the auspices—according to the on dits—of a celebrated poacher, who rode him night and day to bring down his unruly spirit. From this we beg to dissent, but give it, to show our research on the subject. A few years more bring us to the era whence the glories of Epsom date—the establishment of two of the greatest stakes in the world, the Derby and Oaks. These, all the world knows, derive their titles from the name and residence of their sporting founder, the Earl of Derby of that ilk, who dwelt, when in Surrey, at his seat called The Oaks; and, wherever he was, upheld woodcraft, and the boon pastimes of flood and field.

The latter race he originated in the year 1779, and he was himself the winner with Bridget; the latter in the following season of 1780, when it was won by Sir Charles Bunbury's Diomed. Under the sunshine of general popularity, and the influence of a very middling system of cultivation, the great Metropolitan Meeting reached the year 1830, when a Grand Stand, built by means of shares, and at a cost of some £14,000, was opened for public accommodation. It was a fine capacious building, with a principal saloon, upwards of 100 feet in length, with room enough for 5,000 persons inside, and half as many on the roof. It was, however, for a long time, no very profitable investment.

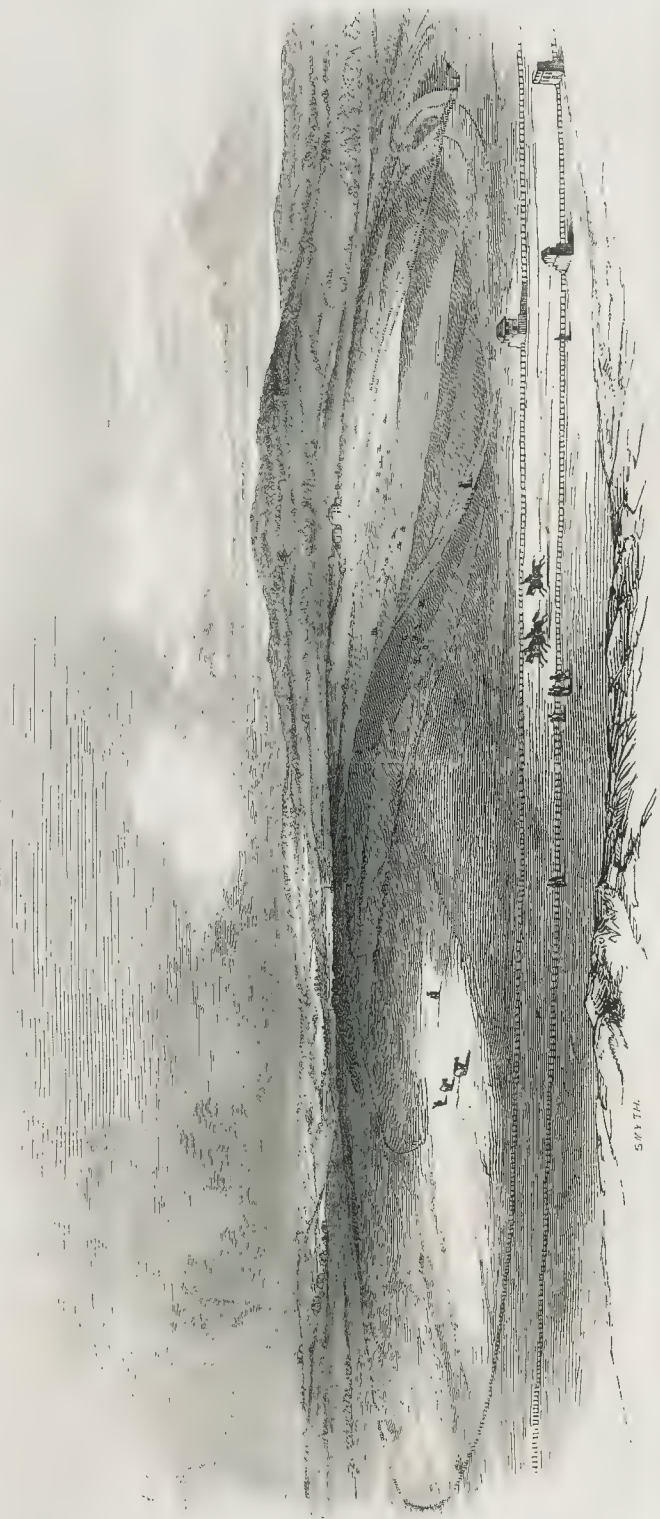
Not long after the erection of the Grand Stand, the Warren, whilom one of the most picturesque appliances of the meeting—a shady retreat, wherein the Derby horses were wont to parade and saddle for the field—and to which the public were admitted at a shilling a head, was closed at the instance of the proprietor, on a point of conscience, as it was said. This was succeeded by a row between the landlord of the course, Mr. Briscoe, also the lord of the manor, and the Racing Committee, which at one time assumed a most fatal aspect. While the feud was going on, somebody set all the parish paupers to grub up the Downs in search of flints for road-repairing; and unless a stop had been put to it, the place would have been as little suited for holiday equipages and horse exercise, as the beach at Bognor. A lawsuit was the consequence of the disagreement, the upshot of which was, that henceforth the lord of the manor should be entitled to claim five pounds for "breaking the ground"—that is, for granting the privilege of tent-pitching; and certain allowances to his steward for preparing such authority. At this period, one Mr. Langlands held the Downs by tender for a sum of £700—and as this was in the good days, when gambling-booths were erected during the meetings, regardless of expense, the yearly rent must have produced a considerable return. Presently, however, the Home Secretary stepped in and strangled gaming; and once more the star of Epsom was in the opaque.

From St. Giles's year inclusive, things were not in a satisfactory condition; but, without going into particulars, we may come to 1844 and 1845, in which, upon the principle that when matters come to the worst they begin to mend, the prospects of Epsom assumed a look upwards. It was quite impossible they could continue as they were. All the leading meetings in the country advanced their rates of premium for race-horses some hundreds per cent., while the great metropolitan course, which received the greatest amount of public money, gave the least towards the purposes of racing of any in the kingdom. In 1844, the money given from the fund was £325—which, considering that the receipts were probably £1800, was not liberal.

Towards the end of last autumn it became known in racing circles that Mr. Henry Dorling, formerly the steward's clerk, had taken the Grand Stand on a twenty-one years' lease, and entered upon the reform of the turf system so long pursued in his neighbourhood, with a spirit which boded well for his success. In the first place, he set about those improvements in the Stand, whereof our Engraving will afford the best idea. To the present season it yields to no building of its class, either in its useful or ornamental character. Every convenience is provided for the professional purposes; and if the pleasure-seeker be not satisfied, he must be hard to please indeed. Next, the new lessee addressed his care to centralize the business of the course. Foremost of these efforts is that which will in 1848 secure for the company a view of all the great races from start to finish.

Then came the regulation requiring the process of saddling to be performed adjacent to the Grand Stand. To this some trainers and very particular proprietors are opposed; because, as they insist, horses of nervous temperaments will suffer by it. As a principle it is good—for many reasons—and therefore it must prevail. The betting is in future to be done within the precincts of the Stand, whence all poor and suspicious characters are to be sternly excluded. Towards the great meeting, Mr. Dorling contributes certain sums, which will tend to promote sport, beyond that formerly looked for, which was confined to two days of the four, while there can be little doubt but that he has succeeded in establishing a second meeting, to come off on the threshold of the racing season.

The Great Metropolitan Stakes was the key-stone of this undertaking. This will certainly be the greatest handicap in England next year, and will, probably, go far to establish in the Epsom Spring Meeting, a formidable rival for Chester, with its great Cup race. Thus following, fortunately not too late, the example set at Goodwood, Ascot, Doncaster, and many another place, Epsom has been put on a footing suitable to its position, its popularity, and its patronage. Its annual races have long stood among the most celebrated popular festivals of modern times. They are the amazement of the foreigner, the pride and familiar pastime of the citizen of our own land. For this reason, we cannot but regard with satisfaction the improved circumstances, so soon to be exhibited, of "Epsom in 'Forty-Six."



EPSOM DOWNS, AND THE NEW COURSE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, May 23, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 213.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1846. [SIXPENCE.

THE DEBATE IN THE PEERS

CONSIDERING the interest with which Lord Stanley's speech on the Corn Bill was looked forward to, it must have been difficult, even for him, not to have disappointed expectation. Men are disposed to exact much from those who occupy exalted positions, especially from the individuals whose conduct may affect the fate of measures and parties. Such men, too, never gain their position without having exhibited great intellectual powers in many a past conflict, and must mingle in subsequent battles somewhat oppressed by their own reputation, which it is as dangerous to fall below as difficult to surpass. Lord Stanley had all these difficulties to encounter; his past career and present position alike demanded an extraordinary effort, and that effort was made. His speech of Monday evening was a revival of those powers which once shook the Legislature, in the conflicts of the better days of the Whig Ministry, and when O'Connell had not separated himself from the English Parliament. The discussions of late years have been tame and unexciting, compared with those debates in which such "mighty opposites" were wont to contend with such energy and earnestness. This arises from no degeneracy or decay in the abilities of those who now occupy the scene, but from the different nature of the subjects to which the advance of time has compelled us to turn attention. Social questions take the lead of political controversy. How men shall be governed, or who shall govern them; who shall have the franchise, and how they shall use it, have become less important problems than how the myriads of our teeming isle shall be employed and fed. These problems of commercial policy do not of themselves admit of that fierceness of controversy that has often made points of principle and political theories appear inextricably interwoven with personal hatreds. Taken by themselves, such matters as import and export, tariffs, duties, rates of produce and consumption, do not excite strong emotions. To talk of them at all requires calculation, passion and the language of passion may be introduced into the controversy, but they must be aroused by things extraneous to the facts and figures. Analyse the long discussions on the whole of Sir Robert Peel's policy, and it will be found that all the personalities, all the fierce reproaches and denunciations, have been concentrated on men, not things: the Premier, on the one hand, and the League on the other, have pointed many an elaborate period, with the sting of sarcasm more or less effective: in one case, a change of opinion is denounced; in the other, the manner in which an opinion has been disseminated; but the question itself still remains unaffected by these considerations, and must be treated on its own merits; and, as the laws of trade, and the causes that operate in the social existence of nations and people, are as certain, though not so clearly understood, as the laws of nature, they may be treated as dispassionately as problems from Euclid. It would be very difficult to form a mathematical faction: the time may come when points now strongly contested will admit of quite as little dispute as a demonstration, and men will wonder they could ever have been disputed at all.

Time has made familiar to us, as things of every day, what, one generation since, were not only held to be doubtful, but impossible. How would the Parliament of 1780 have debated a railway bill, with its tables of traffic, rates of speed, engineering calculations, and startling amount of capital? What strong opposition there would have been! What witticisms and small jokes about kettles on wheels and iron Utopias! What figures and statistics would have proved that honourable gentlemen, the Cobdens and Peels of "the movement," were all in the wrong, to an extent verging upon insanity! Fifty years after that date, the first railway bill was treated in a manner not greatly dissimilar. Yet now, we smile alike at fears and predictions of failure, as we fly through hills and over valleys at more than racehorse speed. We should guard ourselves against allowing the smile to become one of contempt; for we are yet wandering in the twilight that precedes the rising of many a new star upon the social horizon, and we cannot yet clearly define either the new sciences or new policies that are becoming developed among us.

The easiest to meet of all the charges that can be made against a statesman is that of change of opinion upon subjects which are not in their principles fixed and eternal. To-day is not as yesterday nor the present as the past. To appeal to the "wisdom of our ancestors" is useless, unless our state and theirs is exactly identical. They did their best amid the difficulties of their age and time, and we must do the same.

EPSOM RACES, 1846.—"THE SPREAD EAGLE."—(SEE PAGE 332.)

Lord Stanley seems to have seen how little personal and individual changes of opinion have to do with this great question; and by the brief treatment and dignified dismissal of what the smaller minds of the party have called apostacy, he alone appears to have disappointed any expectation as to the nature of his speech. To all but those inferior spirits, the disappointment must be an agreeable one: Lord Stanley might have revelled in sarcasm, had he reverted to the past, and descended to that charnel-house of defunct opinions—the pages of Hansard; to a man of impetuous feeling, the politician of impulse, the opportunity was tempting—but he renounced it: regretting the change in others, and his own inability to follow them in it, he proceeded at once to argue—not to denounce or accuse; and from that miserable imputation of mean and sordid motives to the leading Statesman of our time, which others have indulged in, his speech was wholly free. Nothing could exceed it in point of tact, in the avoidance of an appearance of preparation; but, once plunged into the subject, there was no symptom of effort or restraint—the stream of his eloquence "knew no returning ebb:" it never flagged, and was listened to without a symptom of fatigue. It is to his matter alone that exception can be taken; and we cannot help thinking that in his argument may be traced the qualities which have kept him in a secondary position as a Statesman notwithstanding his unquestioned abilities. He reverts rather to the past than the present, and the theories around which he throws the charm of his brilliant declamation, have ceased to be relied on. We do not think any of the opponents of the measure have fully appreciated the little actual root that the Corn-Law ever took in our social system, or the long and gradual accumulation of the power of public opinion against it. It is remarkable that the very man who proposed the first effectual Corn-Law, that passed after the peace, should, thirty years afterwards, have to propose its abolition, almost every five years of the interval having witnessed a change in it: it was passed amid bloodshed and riots: two persons, we believe, were shot in front of the Earl of Ripon's house, the denouncers of the League cannot charge them with having, in any single case, produced the slightest disturbance of the peace. There is some deeply seated reason for this great difference: it is into these causes that lie at the root of the question that Lord Stanley does not go. He is proud above most of his class, and he do his himself also from the men who give its stamp and character to the age; Peel is wholly the man of the time, keenly alive to every influence that operates upon society. We well remember the effect with which he pointed out, in one of his latest speeches, the future consequences of making time-honoured abuses a subject of political warfare; they were consequences his opponents had not only overlooked—they had never dreamed of the existence. It is this clear, comprehensive estimate of the present, and a prudent, if not perfect anticipation of the future, that gives Peel the superiority over Lord Stanley as a statesman, a superiority which the nation has recognised, though in many qualities Stanley has a quicker, warmer, and more earnest intelligence. Thus, amid all our admiration of his display of power, we feel that something is wanted; mere rejection and negation are not enough to govern with; suppose the bill defeated, what does Lord Stanley propose for the future? All is blank and silence. But nations do not wait either the wills or the convenience of statesmen, and there is some great power behind compelling us to advance in a course which may bring temporary disadvantages, but which will also reveal compensations of a higher order. We are in no way grounds to concur with the following estimate of the speech of Lord Stanley, given by the ablest journalist of the day:

> Lord Stanley's was unquestionably a splendid and powerful harangue. We would rather not be the man who sees offices, or whose fortune it may be, to receive point blank the discharge of that battery. The orator had worked himself up to a pitch of self-confidence that might easily overthrow the more quiet convictions of ordinary opponents. Genius has a certain creative and vivifying power. It makes what it believes, and propagates what it has received. It irresistibly captivates the intellects that it influences. There is a triumph, however, which, after all, it cannot achieve. Nature is still inexpugnable. The laws of this material universe cannot be eluded or reversed; they defy alike the subtle craft of Machiavel, the burning eloquence of Demosthenes, the arbitrary nod of an Asiatic despot, and the ruthless sword of his European conqueror . . . your teeth on steel, before you grasp the power of words against physical facts. Lord Stanley, we fear, is not great a genius to bow to the supremacy of nature. He makes a tremendous onslaught; he creates a new kind of assurance for its creed; but, after all, the fact remains. A brilliant declamation assists how much may be said for the Protestant system, and how lofty a place it has held in the intellect or imagination of man; but, nevertheless, the sun does not go round the earth, but the earth round the sun.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Considerable sensation has been created in Paris by the news of the escape of Prince Louis Napoleon from the Castle of Ham. The Government received an intimation of the fact on Tuesday morning. The escape was effected on Monday. It appears that for some days previously workmen were employed in repairing the doors of the apartment in which the Prince was confined, with whom he was in the habit of entering into occasional conversation. With one of these men he appears to have arranged his escape. At all events it is now ascertained that he contrived to get possession of the clothes of one of them, and that in that costume he passed the guard without being observed. It is said that he left a figure dressed up in his ordinary costume lying in his bed, which led his keepers to suppose he was reposing. The escape was not discovered till the evening, when an active pursuit was commenced, but up to the last accounts the start of his pursuers, it is thought, that he will contrive to get clear out of the country. It was not known whether the Prince had directed his flight towards Belgium or towards England. The French government has given orders for the arrest of the commandant of the castle, and that a strict inquiry shall be instituted into the affair.

The Paris papers give an account of a grand military review which took place on Monday, in the Champs de Mars, before the Duc de Nemours, his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, &c. The crowd of people who flocked to so favorite a spectacle was immense, but no accident occurred. The Cuirassiers, Carabineers, and cavalry regiments re sed since 1840, were marched off from Beauvais, Compiegne, and, in fact, from all parts within twenty leagues of Paris, to give the Egyptian Warrior an idea of the military power of that country which he so lately toasted as "La protectrice d'Egypte." The whole force must have exceeded 30,000 men of all arms.

In the Chamber of Deputies, on Monday, the bill demanding 200 000f. for the expenses of the fêtes of July, was adopted by 230 votes to 11. The President announced to the Chamber the death of Count de Sade, one of the members.

The Constitutionnel has an account of some rather serious riots at Elbeuf, a town on the Seine, celebrated for the number of its woollen factories, and the excellence of the cloths they produce. The pretext for those disorders (which commenced yesterday week) was the establishment of a carding-machine in a factory belonging to M. Arroux. In the course of the disturbances nearly the whole of the National Guards and gendarmerie employed to suppress them, and who amounted to 700 men, were more or less grievously wounded by stones and other missiles thrown by the rioters, and it was not until a reinforcement of 400 or 500 troops of the line had arrived from Rouen that order was restored.

THE UNITED STATES

DECLARATION OF WAR BY THE UNITED STATES AGAINST MEXICO.

The Caledonia has arrived at Liverpool, and brings full particulars of the declaration of war between the United States and Mexico. Hostilities had actually commenced. In the first action now recorded only a small number of troops were engaged, but the Americans suffered a defeat. It seems that a body of 2000 men, consisting partly of United States soldiers approached the Mexican camp, and were suddenly surprised by the Mexican advanced guard. Some thirteen or fifteen of the Americans were killed, six wounded, and about fifty taken prisoners. This has produced a War Message from the President, and a War Proclamation.

Congress has backed the President, and passed bills for an increase of 7000 men to the regular army and volunteers to be enrolled to a number not exceeding 50,000 effective men. A sum of ten millions of dollars has also been appropriated. The vote for these bills was almost unanimous in the Senate, there being only two dissentients; and the majority in the House of Representatives was also great.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

To-day, being fixed for the second reading of the Corn Bill, the House presented an animated appearance, and there was a very full attendance of Peers. The anxiety to obtain admission to the strangers' gallery was very great.

ADDRESS OF CONGRATULATION TO HER MAJESTY.—The Duke of WELLINGTON moved, and Lord MELBOURNE seconded, an address of congratulation to her Majesty, on the birth of a Princess, which was, of course, agreed to unanimously.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

The Earl of RIPON then moved the second reading of this bill. The introductory portion of his speech consisted of an explanation of his conduct when introducing the Corn Bill in 1828, and he then proceeded to argue that the Corn laws originated out of fiscal rather than constitutional principles. The noble Earl said:

"When I introduced the Corn Bill in 1815 it is now so long since, my Lords, that I can hardly feel anxious about any inference that may be deduced from my course upon that occasion; when I introduced that bill in 1828, I did so, my Lords, with the greatest reluctance. (Hear.) I was not then a member of the Government—at least, I held only a subordinate situation in it; but when the late Lord Liverpool sent for me to propose that measure to the other House of Parliament, I took the liberty of stating to him that I had a strong objection, founded on principle, to any Corn-Law whatever. I thought then, my Lords, as I have thought since, and as I think now, that a Corn Law was an evil to be justified solely and exclusively on the establishment of a great and paramount necessity, and that only the existence of such a necessity could warrant the imposition of a tax which in itself was an evil. (Hear.) And, my Lords, in the address which I made to the other House of Parliament, in introducing that bill, I so stated it as my own opinion. I stated upon that occasion, my Lords, that a Corn-Law was not a choice of difficulties, but a choice of evils; and I pointed out to the House the grounds on which only I thought the Legislature would be justified in overruling the principle, and adopting, as a necessity alone, that choice."

The noble Earl proceeded to argue that the changes which had been made in the Corn-Law from 1791 to 1842, to show that it had never been reasoned as a permanent system, and that Protection was the least stable of principles. As if did not bear with it the element of permanency. It was only palpable at one time, and therefore the question of principle was gone. The noble Earl alluded to the state of Ireland for the purpose of admitting that he did not lay much stress upon the deficiency of the present harvest as an argument for the passing of this measure. The most specious plea that had been urged against the bill was that of its throwing the land out of cultivation. But, in the prices obtained for farms since the introduction of this measure, he could see no indication of alarm amongst the purchasers of land. He justified his change of opinion, and advocated the present bill in these terms.

"I have no doubt it will be found by an extract from the records of our proceedings long ago and sentiments inconsistent with the reasoning which I have uttered to night. But I take no shame to myself, because, my Lords, the only time to regret any change of opinion is when that change is made. I am not conscious of being influenced by any bad motive in this change. It is a solemn conviction upon my mind, founded upon mature reflection—reflection stimulated by the necessity of taking the matter duly into consideration: it is a solemn conviction, I repeat, upon my own mind, that I am not proposing to you a principle to adopt a measure calculated to injure any interests in this country, but, on the contrary, calculated to ameliorate those interests. It is a measure, and I may have forgotten by this change the good opinions of those who have thought well of me before. I may be supposed to have abandoned unnecessarily the cause which I have hitherto espoused, and which my friends have honoured me by saying I supported well. But, my Lords, when I supported them, I did it because I thought it right to do so—because my conscientious conviction went with it; and now, when those reasons upon which I acted no longer exist, I hope I may stand fair in the eyes of your Lordships, when I tell you that I re-commend this bill as one in the progress of which we are all deeply interested." (Hear.)

The Duke of RICHMOND moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months. A measure so likely to inflict a deadly blow upon British agriculture, and, therefore, on our national greatness, never before was proposed by any Minister. Their lordships had just cause of complaints against the Government, for not having fairly stated what the average price of corn would be under the bill. If they had considered its effect it was impracticable in them to withhold such important information from the House; and Sir Robert Peel was the first Minister who had dared to propose so great a change without imparting those calculations upon which it should be based, and which calculations were not to be found out of doors, after the Government were pledged to the country. The noble Earl (Ripon) had gone through all the acts from 1791 down to 1842, but had not said a word against the act of 1842; yet it was this act only which their lordships were called upon to legislate. The Duke of Richmond then commented on the speeches of the Marquis of Lansdowne and the Lord Chancellor on the 7th of March, in 1841, with the Lord Keeper, at the present day, and argued that land would be thrown out of cultivation, and that the country would be placed at the mercy of foreign nations—that the most disastrous consequences would result if ever Protection should be reduced to an insignificant duty, and that, if the bill of 1842 was not proposed as a final measure, it was proposed in the most unlikely of the houses to find favour, and of the most ingenious folly. The noble Duke, having shown the amount of capital employed in the cultivation of the land, and the improvements that had been effected since the passing of the act of 1842, asked, would their Lordships sanction a retrospective measure for the confiscation of all this capital, to please a section of Manchester men, who wante to work the land on political economical principles? He hoped that their Lordships would not be induced to be carried away by such bait; but he trusted that the Government would remember that it was the Government who had de-rerted them, and that Sir Robert Peel had no more chance of gaining the confidence of the people than he had of gaining the confidence of Ireland, and the former, too, that he had was only accepted as an instalment, and that future changes, which would shake the foundation of the Throne, which would cripple the Church, and uproot the great institutions of the country, entailing endless confusion and anarchy, would inevitably follow.

Earl FITZWILLIAM, although he disliked the bill exceedingly, should vote for it, lest it should be said that their Lordships had thrown out a measure which the member right nor decent of the Government to bring it before their Lordships in a shape that admitted of neither alteration nor amendment.

The Duke of CLEVELAND supported the bill on the second reading. He had voted in the majority of one which overthrew the Whig Government on the 8th fixed duty: and having, therefore, the right to assume that his vote turned the scale, it it should now declare that, had he opposed the present Ministers would not have abandoned the cause of Protection as they had done on the subject of duty. The noble Lord then commented upon the arguments by which the bill had been supported. This measure had been rested mainly upon two arguments, namely, the apprehended famine in Ireland, and the sufferings of the people under the tariff of 1842. (Hear, hear.) But, my Lords, this does not relieve my difficulty. These arguments may both be invalid, as I will endeavour to show by-and by that they are; but supposing them to be unfortunately true, they would not be the one of the other. If the repeal of the Corn Laws, in any mode or by any possibility, be calculated to relieve the famine in Ireland, supposing always the case to exist, then I must be bound in conscience to support the measure upon that single ground. The noble Lord then commented upon the arguments by which the bill had been supported. His and, believing it to be a measure from which benefit might arise, whilst great evil would result from its rejection, he should vote for the second reading of the bill.

The Earl of CARDIGAN warmly supported the amendment. For more than a quarter of a century he had given an undeviating adherence to the Government and to those of their predecessors who had professed sim lar principles, but he felt constrained, for a sense of what was due to himself and to his country, to withdraw that confidence and vote against them. He had given one inconsistent vote before on the Roman Catholic Relief question, out of respect for what he considered the unfeeling judgment of the Duke of Wellington; but he would never give another contrary to his own convictions. He found the Government without any fixed opinion of their own, but borrowing from or assuming, one after the other, the principles of their late opponents; and for such a government he should decidedly refuse to stultify his former opinions and reverse his former votes. The alternative left to those who had heretofore placed confidence in the Government was either to desert them or to act in a manner derogatory to the character of gentlemen and men of honour. He, for one, preferred to desert the vacillating Minister rather than to act a part unbecoming a Peer and a gentleman.

The Earl of WINCHILSEA gave the bill his uncompromising opposition. He warned their Lordships against blindly following the changes of the Minister, as they had done on the Catholic question. He knew several noble Lords who supported the Government of '29 in opposition to their own principles, their own feelings, their own convictions. Let them pause before they did so on the present occasion: let them rest assured that from the moment they forfeited their independence their Lordships' house ceased virtually to exist.

The Earl of CLARENDON made a forcible appeal in favour of the bill. He said he could never, con ider that this was a party question. It was one that appeared to him to rest more upon experience and fact than the considerations of party; for, of all questions, this was one with respect to which opinion had undergone more modifications than any other during the last thirty years, as knowledge and science advanced, and the number and waste of the people increased. There was scarcely any one whose opinion was had not, during that time, undergone some change with respect to it. All the opposition had been raised against the Minister more than against the measure; but, all the investives poured upon Sir R. Peel proved that he was influenced by higher views than those of party, and that, if he forfeited the good-will and support of his political friends, he did it for that which was of higher importance—his country's good. (Hear, hear.) The noble Earl then vindicated the principle of Free Trade, and said there was not an instance in which they had withdrawn the protective system, in which they had produced a disadvantage to the good cer or the consumer. The noble Earl entered into some statistics to prove that a relaxation of duties increased our exports.

The Earl of CARNARVON opposed the bill, which he contended would produce extraordinary fluctuations of price, at times extravagantly high when most wanted, and time by low at other periods. The Government were pledged, on language in and out of office, and by their banner at the hustings to opposition to the cry of "cheap bread," to the principle of Protection. The noble Earl enforced the necessity of maintaining the character and consistency of public men, and emphatically reminded their Lordships that, in voting for the amendment, they would not be voting irrevocably against the measure, but merely voting for a little breathing time, in order to ascertain the opinion of the country upon the panic-struck counsels of the Minister. Unblemished honour should be the distinguishing characteristic of the Peers of England; and if their L rdships allowed their love of country to be tainted by any inconsistency towards the Government, then the reputation of the House of Peers would have passed away.

The Earl of MALMESBURY, with sorrow and deep pain, was compelled to sever from these gallant, ardent, and high-minded friends, with whom he had heretofore followed with confidence. In stead of voting for this measure from conviction and a sense of its advantage to the country, their Lordships were called upon to support it either on the ground of unbounded confidence in the Minister, or because it was demanded by the general voice of the people. On neither of these grounds could he vote for it, and they who should vote against their consciences might be "converted," but they could not be "convinced." The majority of the House of Commons, by which this bill was carried there, might have been a clear majority, but it was not a clean one; and, until a majority of the House of Commons, both clear and clean, should express their decided opinion in its favour, he should give it his unqualified opposition.

The Earl of HADDINGTON vindicated his change of opinion with respect to the Repeal of the Corn Laws, in which change in which personal interest could have no share, for the greater portion of his rentals were governed by the price of corn. He repudiated the idea that the Government was called upon to appeal to the people before adopting the principles of Free Trade in corn. A great measure had arisen, and the Ministry had no other course open than that which they had adopted. They had been taunted with not having appealed to the country, but he firmly believed were this bill to be thrown out, and were a general election to take place the result would be the return of an overwhelming majority in favour of the principles of Free Trade. The noble Earl then passed a high eulogium on the integrity and sincerity of Sir R. Peel, and expressed a belief that by the present measure the interests of the House I e right hon Baronet would prove himself to be a real benefactor to his country. For his own part he would say that he never gave a vote in his life with more satisfaction or greater satisfaction than that which he should give in favour of the bi l upon the table.

The Earl of HARDWICKE regretted to be obliged to oppose those whom he had long followed upon public questions, and his reasons from doing so had not a intention of imputing to them anything inconsistent with the conduct of worthy and honourable men.

Some conversation then took place relative to the further progress of the debate, and, ultimately, it was adjourned till Thursday, and the House rose at a quarter past two.

HOUSE OF COMMONS TUESDAY.

The sitting to-day was brief, and nothi ng of importance occurred.

Mr EWART attempted to introduce his motion respecting Van Diemen's Land and the convict system, when the House was counted out.

The House had previously adjourned from its rising to Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS. THURSDAY.

THE DIVISION ON THE CORN BILL.

The adjourned debate was commenced by Earl GREY, who presented two petitions in favour of the bill, and then pro ceeded to address their Lordships. He said he had listened with great delight to the remarks made the other night by his noble friend the late Secretary for the Colonies (Lord Stanley), but he could not help saying of his own friend his noble friend's reasoning unsound, and his conclusions erroneous. Some parts of that speech I ad already s een answered, but there were some other points which called for a few remarks. D.rlin, the wi de course he (Earl Grey) and those noble lords who support the bill, had avoided exploiting avowing and defending t..e main object of the existing corn laws, and the other laws on the same subject which had preceded it. The object of the corn law was to secure a remunerating price for corn, or in other words, to raise the price of the food of the people by artificially restricting t e supp y. The principal ground put forward in favour of the corn law was this, that its object was to secure a certa n supply and render the country independent of foreign nations for a supply of food. Now he considered that nothing but a calculable ary ument.

The noble Earl proceeded at considerable length to argue in favour of the bill.

The House was then addressed by the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Beaumont, Lord Dalhousie, and the Duke of Beaufort. The Duke of Wellington closed the debate, and the House divided. The numbers were

THE DIVISION.

FOR THE SECOND READING —
PRESENT	138
PROXIES	73
TOTAL	— 211
FOR THE AMENDMENT—
PRESENT	126
PROXIES	38
TOTAL	— 164
MAJORITY FOR THE SECOND READING	—47

The House adjourned till Thursday next, the 4th of June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS THURSDAY.

Lord LINCOLN introduced a bill for the amendment of the Irish Grand Jury Act, and said he should move the second reading of the bill on the 5th of June.

ANDOVER UNION. Lord COURTENAY moved that the committee on the Andover Union have power to report the minutes of evidence taken before them from time to time.

This motion elicited a discussion, but on a division, it was rejected by 81 to 16. Some unimportant orders of the day were then disposed of, and the House adjourned soon after seven o'clock

CHESS

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"S W. D." The notation you suggest is a very good one, and has long been adopted by the Continental Chess writers. We doubt, however, whether it will ever become popular here.

"J. W."—The makers of the Economic Chess Board are Messrs. De la Rue and Co., the well-known card makers

"R F R." Durham.—"Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess" is a cheap and very useful little manual

"G. H." We believe the work you name is a reprint of Problems already published

"B C." Huntley. Many thanks.

"J W. G" The prize, we believe, is 4s 6d

"John Perpbynde."—You may have a Queen for every Pawn you advance to the adverse Regal line, and have the Queens so obtained on the board at the same time with your original Queen. See the Laws of Chess, to the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"M. P." requests us to state that he has obtained a competitor to play a match by correspondence.

"An Old Stager"—The present queer promise of being one of the most brilliant Chess seasons in London which we ever remember. At the moment, there are no less than four distinguished foreign players—Messrs. St. Amand from Paris, Horwitz from Hamburg, Harrwitz from Breslau, and Schulten from the United States—all in full play at our metropolitan clubs.

"T. S. R." Guernsey.—You remark, "Suppose I move my King two squares," &c. We suppose in the cases where you use the words "King" and "Queen," you had intended to say, "King's Pawn," and "Queen's Pawn." If so, your question is easily answered: When you play K P two, and your adversary Q P two, you may, of course, on the next move, play K P one, irrespective of his Queen's Pawn, as he, seeing it has move might play on his Queen's Pawn again

"F. H." Pranksgham. Do not pervex a question of only three moves to bothe you. Try it again, but be especially mindful that the men are correctly placed. The other questions we have not got at hand.

"A German." In the meantime and, we fe ar to the game should be drawn.

"A. D P."—"J. G."—"E W. S."—The "Chess Player's Chronicle" for June, we are told, will contain an unrivalled collection of fi st-rate Games and Problems

"H." Hamburgh.—Your valued communication was replied to almost by return of post. We enxiously await the promised intelligence.

"Jos." Dublin.—We are not acquainted with the game.

Solutions by "Mish." "H. C. M." "G. H." "A G." "E. C." Blackheath; "Ludmagister," "O A. F." "H S." "J. G." Dublin; "Marasion," "O. C." "F. B. M." "Automaton," "Sigma," "A German," "J. T. G." "W. P.," "Amateur," and "Philip," are correct.

 We are compelled to defer our replies to many Correspondents until next week.

☞ Amateurs desirous of possessing the whole of the instructive and entertaining Games played between Messrs. Stanley and Rousseau, are informed that the pamphlet containing them can now be had, price 2s. only, of Mr. Hurst, Office of the "Chess Player's Chronicle," 27, King William street, Strand.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 122

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt from Kt 3rd to		4. Kt to K B 4th (ch)	K takes P
B 5th (ch)	K to Kt 6th	5. Kt to K B 7th (ch)	K to B 4th
2. Kt to Q 3rd (ch)	K to B 5th (best)	6. P takes P	Anything
3. Kt to Q 5th (ch)	K to Q 4th	7. K's Kt P	mates

PROBLEM, No. 123.

By M. BREDE.

White playing first mates in five moves.

BLACK.

WHITE.

The subjoined amusing *pa*rtie was played this week by Mr Schulten, of the New York Chess Club, against a leading amateur of our Metropolitan Chess circle

BLACK (Mr.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. —)	WHITE (Mr. S.)
1 K P two	K P two	19. B to Q R 3rd	B takes B
2 Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	20. Kt takes B	Q R to K Kt 3rd (c)
3 Q B P one	Q P two	21. K to R 2nd	Kt to K Kt 6th
4 K B to Q Kt 5th	Q B to K Kt 5th	22. K R to K sq	Kt to K B 4th
5 Q to Q R 4th	P takes K P	23. Kt to Q B 4th	R to K Kt 6th
6. K Kt takes K P	Q B to Q 2nd	24. K R to K 6th	Kt to K R 5th (d)
7. Kt takes Q Kt	P takes Kt	25. Kt to K 5th	Q to her B sq
8 B takes P	Q R to Kt sq (a)	26 Q R to K Kt sq	K Kt P two (e)
9. B takes B (ch)	K takes B	27. Q to R 3rd.	K R P two
10. Q takes K P (ch)	K B to K 2nd	28. Q to her B 4 h (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
11. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	29. Q to her B 6th (f)	K to Q sq
12. Q to K B 3rd	Castles	30. Kt to K Kt 4th (g)	K to Q 3rd
13 Q P two	Kt to K Kt 5th	31. It to K 7th (ch)	K to B sq
14. Q to K Kt 3rd	K B P two	32. Q to K 4th	P takes K t
15. K R P one	Kt to R 6 3rd	33. Q to K B 7th (h)	K takes K Kt P (ch) (i)
16. K B P one (b)	K B P one
17. Q to K B 2nd	Q R to Q Kt 3rd	34 B takes R	P one (ch)
18. Q Kt P one	Q to K B 4th	35. K to R sq. (k)
	And white mated in two moves

(a) A very ess precaution, as Black could not take the Rook without losing his Queen. He should rather have played K Kt to R 3d, to preserve his K's P

(b) To prevent the Kt being played to K 5 h

(c) Threatening to take the K R P with his Queen This part of the game is extremely well played by Mr Schulten.

(d) With the view to take K B P with the Kt, and, if Pawn took Kt, to mate with his Q at K R 8 th. He, then, threatens to win the Queen by taking K Kt's P, with it check.

(e) This was necessary, because Black threatened to take the K B P with his Rook, and thus have the adverse Rook unprotected

(f) Intends go to chase Q here.

(g) Almost the only move to save the game

(h) Promising mate at either K Kt 7 h or K B 7 th.

(i) This move ought to have lost White the game, which he might have drawn by force tragically enough, thus:—

31 P takes K	33 R takes K R P (ch)
32 Kt ket P (the only move)	34 Q to K's 8th (ch)
33 K to R's sq because if K takes P, White	35 P takes R (ch)
wins with Kt at B 7th, and wins	36 Kt takes B P (ch) easily)
37 K to K's 8d (to B sq, White chews with	37 Kt to R's 5th. ch) (And drawnely perpetual his Q at Q R's 5d, and wins)	check.

(k) K. Kt's sq would have won the game.

CHESS IN AMERICA.

The following is one of the concluding games of a match lately contested between Messrs. Stanley and Schulten, the best players of the New York Chess Club. The match in question consisted in all of twenty-two games, of which

Mr. Schulten won	..	..	..	..	..	..	11
Mr. Stanley	..	..	..	..	..	..	7
Drawn	..	..	..	..	..	..	4—22

WHITE (Stanley)	BLACK (Schulten)	WHITE (Stanley)	BLACK (Schulten)
1 K P two	K P two	15. K Kt to K Kt 4th	B takes Q Kt P
2 K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	17. Q R to Kt sq	K B to Q B 6th
3. K Kt to Q Kt 5th	K B to Q 3rd	18. K R P one (b)	Q P two
4. Q Kt to Q B 3rd	K Kt to K 2nd	19. K B P one	K P two
5 Q P one	Q R P one	20. K Kt to K B 2nd	K Kt P one
6. B to K 4th	Q Kt P two	21. Q to her B sq (c)	P takes Kt
7. B to Kt 3rd	Q Kt to Q R 4th	22 Q takes P	K B P takes P
8. Castles	B takes B	23 Q to K Kt 5th (ch)	K to K 2nd
9. R P takes Kt	Q B to K t 2nd	24 K B P takes P	B to Q 5th
10 Q Kt to K 2nd	Castles	25. P takes P	Q to K B 2nd
11. Q Kt to K Kt 3rd	K B P two	26. Q R to K sq	B takes Kt (ch)
12 Q B to K Kt 5th	K B P one (a)	27 K to R sq	Q Kt to K sq
13 Q Kt to K B 5th	Q to K sq	28. R takes R	Q takes R
14. B takes Kt	B takes B		And White resigns.
15. K Kt takes P	R B to K B 3rd

(a) White has unquestionably allowed the advance of this Pawn, with the idea of destroying its effect by the capture of Q P

(b) The dangerous position of both Knights is very apparent: the object of this move is to secure a retreat for one of them

(c) The aim of White's Q is now inevitable; and, as no equivalent can be obtained, his game is quite hopeless

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 7.—By CECIO.

WHITE.

K at his R sq
R at Q R sq
B at K Kt 2nd
Kt at Q 4th
P at K R 2nd
K B 4th, and Q Kt 4th

BLACK.

K at Q R sq
R at K Kt sq
R at Q Kt sq
B at K B 7th
Kt at K R 6th
P at K R 2nd
Q B 3rd, Q Kt 2nd, and Q R 2nd

White plays, and mates in three moves.

No. 8.—By EUCOLE DEL RIO

WHITE.

K at his R sq
Q at Q Kt 2nd
B at K B 5th
Kt at Q 6th
Kt at Q Kt 4th
P at K R 2nd

BLACK.

K at Q sq
Q at Q 8 th
B at Q 3rd
Kt at Q Kt 2nd
Kt at Q B sq
P at Q R 2nd, Q Kt 3rd, and Q R 2n

White mates in four moves.

By GIANUTIO

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q 8 6th	K at Q K 2nd
Q at Q Kt 5th	Q at Q K 8th
B at K R 2nd	B at Q R 7th

WHITE.

B at K B 8th
R at K B 5th
Kt at K B 6th

BLACK.

R at Q K 8th
R at Q R 6th
B at Q Kt 8th

White mates in four moves.

POLICE.

COMMITTAL OF THE SELF-ACCUSED MURDERER AND THIEF.

On Monday, Henry Norman, the self-accused convict, who stands charged with having stolen £293 from Mr William Hood, builder, &c., of Kensington, was re-examined at HAMMERSMITH Police-Office

The former depositions in the case of the robbery of Mr. Hood having been entered into, the following letter from the prisoner, addressing the crime, was read in Court:—

SIR: I have to inform you that I am not what I appear to be to you when I came to your office, and give you a slight hint of myself that you may understand that it was quite impossible that I could remain a clerk to you. At seventeen years of age I entered the Queen's service in the "Carnatic" to Jamaica, and continued to defraud them of many thousands of pounds, before I was twenty-one years of age. I afterwards went to the United States of America, where I committed numerous crimes, and even boasted of "murder," and finished off by robbing a pawn broker's shop of about a thousand pounds worth of money and property. Since my return to this country I have committed many robberies in different places, and so many people know my renown, that you must have discovered it. Circumstances over which human beings can have no control have caused me what I am. The printing, engraving had the misfortune to have the most dreadful, drunken monster for a father that ever a poor devil had. What I might have been, had not the Almighty made me the sort of a despicable wretch, I dare not think of, or I should drive myself mad. Cease, in his account of his future ways, was he took 1800 miles by assault, and slew a million of men. I have committed more than 1000 distinct robberies, and have been answered in five murders besides many other attempts, which, on a small scale, entitles me to consider myself as great as Cæsar. Forgive me this digression into the world—only born to fortune times to make his fortune. Excuse me this as not in the world, the rest of a low pawnbroker, and that no-shirt took care that I should not have any money to make anything higher in the social scale. Mr. ——'s address is No 47, ——, Bishopsgate, at Mr. ——, potato-Cake-maker. If you are lucky enough to catch me asleep, he will inform you of the truth of what I tell you, or you can ascertain it by casting at the Custom-house, Thames-street. Ask to see the Searchers. The present gentlemen, John, of all murderers, wears her, and secondly in the world. Bids you farewell for ever.

HENRY NORMAN

The latter bore the postmark of "Judd-street, New road."

Mr. Clive asked Inspector Harvill if he intended to enter into evidence as to any other case?

The Inspector said he did not at present. Inspector Rogers, of the L division, who had had the prisoner in custody subsequent to his return from Jamaica, on a charge of stealing a gold watch from his lodgings in the Haymarket, was in attendance, if he was required.

Mr. Clive then asked the prisoner if he wished to say anything in answer to the charge?

The prisoner very coolly replied: No, I shall say nothi g at present.

Mr. Clive told him he was then fully committed to Newgate for trial.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is stated from Brussels that there are good grounds for believing that the commercial treaty between Belgium and Holland had been already signed at the Hague, and, consequently, that the important commercial dis ues, which during some months' past had disturbed the relations of the two countries, had been amicably settled. The Belgian papers announce the death of Viscount Bailey, the extensive manufacturer of Verviers.

Letters from Iceland of the beginning of April, state that the eruption of Mount Hecla had ceased for about a fortnight. The fishery was so productive, that it had been necessary to send ships to England for salt.

A letter from Weimar (Germany) states that the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar is restoring and embellishing the famous chateau of the Wartburg, situate in Thuringia, and to which so many interesting reminiscences are attached of the private life of the great Luther. In the searches which have been made to repair the foundations of this ancient edifice, the labourers have discovered a row of 18 columns in the Byzantian style, and a great number of other objects whose origin ascends to the middle ages.

By the last accounts from New Zealand we learn that the troops in the north were encamped about eight miles from the pah of Kawiti, Heke's principal ally, and had cut a road towards the pah for about five miles. The force consisted of 600 of the 58th Regiment, 100 of the 99th Regiment, 80 Marines 50 Artillery, 50 volunteers, and 220 sailors, with 6 guns and six-inch ad pequets. They were supplied with two 32-pounders, one long 18-pounder, two 12-pound carriage guns, two brass 6-pounders, seven mortars, besides ten 32-pounders that were expected in the Elphinstone which arrived at the Bay of Islands the day before the last accounts left, having the governor on board.

The Bordeaux papers mention the death of Lafont, the great actor, who was by some thought to rival Talma himself. He had been for some years reading in that city.

We learn from Rome that the Pontifical Government has just entered into a contract for lighting that city by gas.

The house No. 9, on the Quai de Napoléon, Paris, which, according to tradition, was the residence of Abelard and Heloise, is now being pulled down, and swept away from among the ancient monuments of that city

In consequence of the recent treaty with China, which secures protection to Chinese missionaries, several French priests are about to embark for different parts of that empire

A Madrid journal gives an account of a horrible discovery in that city. Some persons having been struck with a dreadful smell from a well, notice was given to the authorities, who had it examined. There was found floating on the surface of the water a box, containing the body of a female cut into pieces. Nothing had transpired at the date of the last accounts to give a trace to the author of this crime, or to lead to the recognition of the victim

The Universal German Gazette states that since the Pope addressed an apostolic letter to the Sovereigns of Christendom, inviting them to assist, or soften the rigours of the slave-trade, some time and gone to Cairo to procure freedom, by purchase, of Ethiopian women. Forty of these women embarked from Alexandria, and recently arrived at Rome. They are to proceed to Caserta, in Savoy, where they will receive a Christian education.

Accounts from St. Petersburgh state that a great number of vessels, laden with corn and rye, had caught fire, and that, in consequence, a large quantity was destroyed. This mi fortune took place at Shlusa, a village on the Oka, near Nishnei-nauk. The quantity destroyed is said to amount to 200,000 chetwerts.

Letters from Vienna state that the Emperor of Russia had arrived at Trent and was to proceed to Cracow by way of Prague, thus avoiding Berlin and Dresden.

Mercantile accounts from Monte Video, to the 6th March, received via Pernambuco, announce the important intelligence that the Buenos Ayrean forces under Urquiza had been compelled to retreat in disorder from the province of Corrientes, with the loss of their guns and baggage, before the combined and victorious troops of Paraguay under General Paz The official despatches received from that chief express an indignation that the defeated force was not more severely chastised. Paz's army was estimated at 12,000 men—overwhelming force for that country—and, if the estimate be correct, he must soon drive the adventurous Rosas out of Entre Rios, and render General Oribe's position in the Monte Video territory hazardous in the extre e.

A Brussels journal of Saturday says that the accounts of the potato crop in Belgium are generally good There are large districts in which not the slightest symptoms of disease have been discovered.

The German papers mention that the celebrated place of pilgrimage, Maria Petrowitsch, in Silesia, has been destroyed by fire. The beautiful church, founded in 850 by Lulprach, Archbishop of Salzburg, was saved by the exertions of the inhabitants of the neighbouring town from the fire.

The Konigsberg Gazette affirms that the population of Russian-Poland, bordering on Eastern Prussia, is in a state of the greatest misery, from the want of provisions, and the means of purchasing them. The Russian Government, it is added, had promised to send assistance, but none had arrived. To complete the calamity, a fever has broken out, which in most cases ends in death.

Accounts from Lisbon, of the 14th instant, by way of Madrid, state that the insurrection in Portugal has not been entirely suppressed. As a measure of precaution, the Government has ordered the University of Coimbra to be closed. Little doubt is entertained of the present King's being able to crush the revolt.

The Spener Gazette states that John Ronge, the celebrated reformer, has been acquitted by the tribunal of Breslau at his trial for the publication of the well known "New and Old Testament."

A private letter from Admiral Ocello, dated the 20th January last, states that the French Rear-Admiral Ocello had advanced as far as Mascara, and the central regions of the kingdom of Siam. Rear-Admiral Cecille found the Bonin, already established in Siam, and in regular traffic with the natives. He is of the opinion that commercial relations are carried on with less difficulty between Europeans and the natives in the kingdom of Siam than in any other part of the Celestial Empire. The Admiral spoke in high terms of the King, remarked that with him the Governor of Bangkok, with whom he exchanged presents.

Some new plans, says the Paris Presse, have been recently submitted to the Board of Finance for succouring the people of the Basse Ville of Alexandria, and ensuring the superiority of that route over the one by Trieste.

According to letters dated from the frontiers of Italy, the Duke de Bordeaux, and his mother the Duchess de Berry, have paid separate visits of the Royal Family, by Wurtemberg, Bavaria, and Austria, have been received with pomp announced. The Duchess de Berry was to give a grand fete, which the Empress was to attend.

For some time past preparations have been making in the ancient city of Liege, in Belgium, for the celebration of the feast of Corpus Christi. A procession of solemn pomp and magnificent proceedings will take place. The jubilee will commence on the 14th instant, on the feast of Jubilee, and as it occurs only every hundred years, it will be one of unusual pomp of and great interest. Several Archbishops and Bishops from France and our country, as well as the Nuncio of Belgium, will be present, and six of the most distinguished preachers in Europe will attend.

On Monday afternoon a whale was secured by Henry Hickson, a waterman at Upnor, who found it floating, dead, in the river midway between Upnor and Castle. Having secured it, he towed it to Upnor. The fish measures seven feet round the body, and thirteen feet in length: the jaw, which of the tail is two feet six inches. The cause of its death is supposed to be the difficulty it had water to its natural element in the North Sea.

We learn from Brussels that the Minister of the Interior laid before the Chambers last Tuesday, a project of law authorising the free importation of corn and other articles of food, from the 1st of October next, until the Government to extend, if necessary, the provisions of that bill, from the 1st of December, in the present year.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

T. B. MACAULAY, M.P.

THERE is no little difficulty in classing such men as Mr. Macaulay; at the present moment, we cannot say whether we should consider him poet, historian, politician, orator, or lawyer; perhaps he is less of the first and last than of either of the three others, though when we remember his spirit stirring "Battle of Ivry," "the Armada," and many a strain in the "Lays of Ancient Rome," we cannot deny his claim to the laurel: no laureate since Ben has had a better title to it. We are scrupulous, too, about estimating his legal acquirements, remembering that he was a prominent member of the Supreme Council of India. Had he practised at the English bar, what rank in the profession can be affirmed to have been out of his reach? But leaving these two points out of sight, there still remain the historian, the statesman, and the orator! What an affluence of talent and concentration of rarely bestowed powers in one individual!

MR. MACAULAY, M.P.

He has the acquirements of the bookish scholar, with all the readiness in applying them in public life of a man of business. He is several men in one: he does not attempt universality, like Lord Brougham; but we do not believe that the voluble Peer excels on any one topic so decidedly as Mr. Macaulay has done in all he has yet attempted. Take up any one of Macaulay's "Essays," and read it; then turn to a volume of Brougham's: compare them, and the style of the Peer is clumsy, careless, and ungraceful, while, as to matter, three-fourths of it belongs to other men, taken, errors and all, as it came easiest to hand. As an orator, we prefer Macaulay, because he speaks only when he has something to say. Brougham is "like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling"—pouring out endless circular sentences, stuffed with three fold re-petition of phrase and epithet.

Macaulay's speeches are like himself, massive, compact, put together with more strength than elegance. He does not merely strike an opponent; he smites and crushes; he tears and tramples through a mass of flimsy sophistries like an elephant amid tropical underwood, seemingly unconscious of the effect of his bulk and tread. Reading has made him "a full man;" most truly may it be said of him that—

> He hath strange places crammed with observation,

And he imparts it freely, at most unexpected times, and on the most unlikely questions. He will drag you out an old act of the Edwards, to illustrate some modern doctrine, or adduce an anecdote of the Court of the Grand Monarque. No period of history escapes him if he wants a fact or an illustration. We believe he never speaks without making the House acquainted with some queer out-of-the-way piece of knowledge it never would hear of from any one else.

In the last debate on the Factory Bill, he quoted the laws of the Puritans abolishing the festivals of the English Church, and the decrees of the French Republicans (who were not Puritans), establishing the Feasts of Reason, of Genius, and of Good Works, as compensations for the exploded Sabbaths of the Christianity they renounced. He seldom speaks, not because he always requires preparation, for we have heard him reply with great effect; but because he prefers to treat questions in which some principle of importance is involved. The little discussions, he leaves to smaller men, of whom there are enough and more than enough. But, when he does address the House, no one produces such an impression, with the exception, perhaps, of Shell.

Macaulay's denunciation is always most powerful; the conclusion of one of his speeches last session, on the Scotch University Tests, in which he exposed the vacillation of the Government on that subject, was absolutely terrific. Upon almost every question his opinions are decided, and what he thinks he declares in the most direct and unmistakeable language. Always attached to the Whig party, he never compromised an opinion for party purposes: on many points he was in advance of them, and now they have gradually approached him. He is one of the "great names" of the Liberal side of the House.

The right hon. Thomas Babington Macaulay is the son of Zachary Macaulay, Esq.: he was born in 1800, was educated at Cambridge, and adopted the law as a profession; but politics and literature have withdrawn him from it. He was returned for Calne in 1830, and, under the Whig Ministry, has filled the offices of Secretary at War and Secretary of the Board of Control. If a Liberal Government is among the possibilities of the future he will hold a prominent position in it. He represents the City of Edinburgh.

NEW LABORATORY, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

THE Council of this excellent foundation having wisely determined upon forming a School of Practical Chemistry, a new building was designed for its purposes, by the Professor of Architecture, Thomas L. Donaldson, Esq.; and its erection being completed towards the end of last year, it was first occupied in January of the present year, by 18 students, the class being under the superintendence of Professor Graham, with Professor Fownes as director.

Our view shows the general Laboratory, a noble apartment, 69 feet 6 inches long, by 29 feet wide, and 23 feet high, to the apex of the roof, at the extreme end is a door, opening into the Professors' Private Laboratory, 20 feet by 15 feet, attached to which is the Professors' Private Room, 15 feet by 11 feet. Connected with the principal Laboratory, also, are the Furnace Room, Washing and Coat Room, Store and Steward's Room, Instruments' Room, &c.

The arrangement of the Principal Laboratory is very complete. A double range of desks for the students occupies the centre of the room, and there is, also, a range against each side wall, so as to afford ample accommodation for 24 students, each having a width of 6 feet: on an emergency, two might work at each division; and thus, if requisite, double the number of students might be accommodated. Each desk has beneath it, drawers, sink, inclosed closet for experiments with noxious gases, and an air-shaft carries off the vapour direct to the furnaces, which are supplied by it with the air requisite for the combustion of the fuel. Gas and water are laid on to each desk, whichis, likewise, supplied with the requisite bottles, apparatus, and shelves. At the further end are the Sand Bath and Boiler, with glazed iron frames; admirably fitted by the Messrs. Coales and Son, of Gray's Inn-lane, who have had much experience in work of this kind, for King's College, the Pharmaceutical Society, and other Laboratories.

The roof of the University College Laboratory is upheld by principals of cast iron, of graceful form and decorative character, and the light is thrown directly down upon the desks by a double range of skylights. The ceiling is boarded, and stained in imitation of oak; and the whole of the floor throughout, except immediately in front of the furnaces and stoves, is of wood. The Professor's Laboratory has, also, its sand-bath, sink, and other conveniences. The Furnace Room is fitted with furnaces calculated for melting metals: the flues of these, as at well of all the other fire-places, are constructed with Moon's patent bricks, which produce so ready a draft as to carry off the vapour at once with great energy, although neither of the flues rise to any considerable height. The ventilation of the Laboratories and adjoining rooms is maintained and regulated by means of sashes in the upper part of the walls, and large circular windows and skylights, all of which can be opened at any part, so as to carry off the vapours, or produce a modified temperature.

Throughout the construction, the utmost care has been taken to bring into operation all the recent improvements of our own schools, as well as that of Professor Liebig, at Giessen. In fact, Professor Fownes, who is acquainted with the German arrangements no less than with those of this country, has suggested to the architect, Professor Donaldson, all the appliances and modifications, which render this Establishment the most perfect of its class in the kingdom.

KINGSLAND CHAPEL.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHAPEL, KINGSLAND.

THIS old Chapel has, within the last week, excited considerable attention at the Society of Antiquaries, at whose meeting, on the 21st instant, its threatened destruction was mentioned by Mr. Windus. The Chapel is remarkable for being the smallest place of worship in the neighbourhood of London; or even, it is believed, in the entire county of Middlesex. Its interior accommodation was so small that fifty persons would fill it; but it latterly had a considerably lesser number of occupants. It stood close to the Kingsland toll-gate, and was an exceedingly picturesque object. Its walls were formed of flint and rubble, the window-frames of stone in the latest perpendicular style, with a porch considerably more modern, a deep tiled roof, and wooden bell-turret. Lysons, in his "Environs of London," thus gives its history:—"At Kingsland stood an ancient hospital, or house of lepers, called 'Le Lokes,' to the Master and Governors of which, in the year 1437, John Pupe, citizen of London, left a rent-charge of 6s. 8d., issuing out of certain houses in London. This hospital has long been an appendage to St. Bartholomew's, in London; but how or when it became annexed to it does not appear upon record. It was used as a kind of outer ward till the year 1761, when all patients were removed from Kingsland, and the site of the hospital let on a building lease. The neighbouring inhabitants having petitioned that the Chapel might continue, and that service might be performed there, it was repaired, and is still used as such, the chaplain being appointed by the Governors of St. Bartholomew's. The building is very small, and of Gothic architecture." The Chapel was called St. Bartholomew's, and that was the name painted over the eastern window. It was a small living of £50 per annum, and under the control of the hospital above-named. As one of the few picturesque remnants of old times, which the march of bricks and mortar had spared to us, it was peculiarly interesting; although this simple way-side Chapel looked sadly out of place among the rows of new houses, squares, and streets which took the ground of the orchards and fields once in its immediate vicinity; till, having really ceased to be useful to so large a neighbourhood, the hand of modern improvement has been fatally raised against it. A record of the appearance of so quaint a relic is, however, well worth preservation, and will, no doubt, be acceptable to our readers.

THE NEW LABORATORY, AT UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

NEWSPAPER

F I N E A R T S.

"KING ALFRED IN THE SWINEHERD'S COTTA[illegible]AIN[illegible]D BY H. WARREN.

A GOSSIP ABOUT THE WATER-COLOUR SOCIETIES.

(Concluded from page 320.)

THE NEW SOCIETY.

Another drawing of considerable pretension, is the "Wat Tyler and Sir W. Walworth," of Weigall; an engraving of which we present in this number of our Journal. It is of the Corbould school, though with less of effeminate regularity in the faces, and inferior in manipulation. The figure of the young King is easy and spirited.

We must also notice Mr. Warren's "Alfred in the Swineherd's Hut," of which we furnish an Engraving. There is much expression in the attitude and head of the scolding crone, and of dignity in the Royal Saxon, who is calmly letting her volley of angry words fly over him.

We have now concluded our notice of this very pleasing and creditable Exhibition, in which we feel that a decided improvement may be said to be observable, though it does not yet attain to the level excellence of the Old Society.

"RICHARD II.—APPEAL TO THE MOB AFTER THE DEATH OF WAT TYLER."—PAINTED BY C. H. WEIGALL.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

With the next Number of this Journal, to be published on Saturday, June 6th, will be presented to our Subscribers, Gratis,

A SPLENDID PANORAMIC VIEW OF THE

CITY OF DUBLIN;

Being the first of a Series of Magnificent Presents to the Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

With this Large Print will, also, be given,

A BRIEF HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF DUBLIN;

With an Outline Reference Key to the Print; and a very interesting Descriptive Sketch of the Present Aspect of the City, its splendid Public Buildings, and principal Objects of Attraction: extending to Eight Large Pages, or Twenty-four Columns.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 31.—Pentecost, or Whit Sunday.
MONDAY, June 1.—Whit Monday—Oxford Trinity Term begins.
TUESDAY, 2.—The Lord George Gordon Riots commenced, 1780.
WEDNESDAY, 3.—William Harvey died, 1657.
THURSDAY, 4.—Saturn rises at 0h. 20m. a.m. in S.E.
FRIDAY, 5.—Boniface
SATURDAY, 6.—Jeremy Bentham died, 1832.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending June 6.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
6 26	6 50	7 12	7 39	8 8	8 42	9 15	9 46	10 16	10 46	11 16	11 48

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"An Englishman's" Subscription from New York has been received.
"A Subscriber in Ireland."—The untrals R. S. V. P. indicate Reprobez s'il vous plait. Reply if you please
"R. Y."—We are not in possession of the information requested.
"Quin."—The long promised work on Cookery, by M. Soyer, the chef de cuisine of the Reform Club, will be published in a few days.
"T. G."—Oxford, is thanked; but we have a sketch of the building in question.
"W. R. S."—The address may probably be obtained at Messrs. Fisher and Co., Pa-ternoster-Row, St. Martin-le-Grand
"D. B., an Old Subscriber."—Lady Sale was in India at the time of the death of her lamented husband.
"P. W." Liverpool. The Journal of the Statistical Society, or the Reports of the British Association, will afford the Returns as to Suicide
"E. J. H. Bromley, is thanked for the hint: a copy of the Programme will add to the elucidation
"P. G." Wrexham.—Mrs. Mary Somerville is a Fellow of the Royal Society, but is not of the Society of Friends
"A. D. G." may hear of Works on Numismatics at Mr. Hearne's, Bookseller, Strand. We are not in possession of the surname, nor is it given in the published Memoirs of the Royal Personage
"X. X." The best method of replacing is by electric agency Inquire of Messrs. Elkington and Co., the patentees, Regent-street
"An Old Westminster" favourite School has been often engraved; besides, we aim at illustrating news.
"J. L." is thanked but the Sketch is too slight to insure accuracy.
"A Frequenter of the Theatres" had better attend to the performances, and leave critiques to other hands
"W. H. P. O." Ratis-green, is recommended to consult a Solicitor
"The Wife-work on the Church steeple" is facetious, as well as critical; but has not its use, in the main, just
"L. L." Lord Granville Somerset is brother to the present Duke of Beaufort.
"Irish." Lord Lyndhurst is a member of the Church of England.
"Juvenis Templi. We will inquire as to the expenses of Jesus College
"Publicola."—Either of the parties marrying again, under the circumstances stated by our Correspondent, would be liable to be tried for bigamy.
"L." The Earl of Erroll.
"A Constant Subscriber." Cambridge.—On Wednesday, the 10th of June.
"Louise" will excuse our reference to any School History of France: we are too pressed for room to insert the reprint
"Tres. Coll. Cah."—Mr. Tennant of Flach-lane, Cornhill, supplies French newspapers
"Marston" is by the Rev. Dr. Croly
"An Old Subscriber," Lanwick, is thanked for the hint
"A. M. D." Dublin. We do not know to whom the mansion is the picture named.
"M. Berth" shall be replied to by post, if he will forward his address
"John" Huddersfield. Should state the poor man's case at the War Office.
"X. Y. Z." Applications for permission to view the Pavilion at Brighton should be made to the Lord Chamberlain
"An Old and Present Subscriber," Inverness. We cannot, with propriety, reply to our Correspondent's questions
"W. B." Leamington Spa. "W. B." is an error.
"A Subscriber," Swansea.—To answer our Correspondent's question would subject the reply to advertisement duty.
"E. Reynolds."—Newspapers, to go post free abroad, must be forwarded within seven days after the date of publication.
"M. H. B."—Miss Birch lives at 16, Baker-street, Portman-square. She did sing in Edinburgh about the time mentioned. We do not know her Christian name nor whether she is a native of London. Miss Rosa Birch is her sister, and both give lessons in singing
"Is the L. E. "Guerrina" is an adopted English word, and is not pronounced Cancherina."
"J. W. L." Romberg's book is the best, but we do not know whether there is an English edition. Inquire at Cocks and Co., or Wessel and Co.
"Lambert."—We have never measured Short's height, and, as he is a Genoese, we should not dare to ask him. Although about half the height of his master, Paganini, Short is very little short of his teacher.
"Enlarge."—We do not know the Song, but a Publisher might be acquainted with it
"A Constant Reader." Apply for "Hamilton's Catechisms," or to Whittaker and Co.
"A Lover of Ancient Art," who has been so highly gratified with the paper on the Parthenon, in No. 194 of our Journal, will find the complete account of that wonderful work in Stuart and Revett's "Antiquities of Athens"; or, Mr. Lucas's volume, (published at Salisbury,) may be consulted with advantage. The Comte de la Borde, and M. Quatremère de Quincy, have also, published works on the Parthenon. The magnificent "Musée Français," 4 vols. folio, contains superb engravings of the finest ancient sculptures.
"W. P.," South Molton.—The first of our Large Views of Cities will be presented next week
"P. O." Hastings.—The Linen in question have not been set to music.
"M. D.," Edinburgh.—The Union Club-house is situated on, and entered from, the west side of Trafalgar square
"Grip." Exon. There are a few trees within the railings of St. Paul's Churchyard, but none outside.
"H. H." Liverpool, may appoint whom she pleases as guardian of the property.
"A. Y. Z." Unmarried women are called Spinsters from women in England being formerly prohibited by statute, from marrying until they had spun a regular set of bed furniture; and, though the custom has passed away, the term continues to this day in all legal proceedings
"Charles Carpal" may obtain Tickets to view the State Apartments at Windsor Castle, by application to Colnaghi and Co., Cockspur-street.
"A Subscriber."—"Hints on Etiquette," revised by a Lady of Rank. (Longman and Co.)
"A Constant Subscriber." New Bond-street, is recommended to apply to a Police Magistrate: she is certainly entitled to the return of the property.
"Amelia." See an admirable little work entitled "Moral Strength," published by Hatchard.
"Another who did not get £1000" is facete about his loss. We have received several letters on the affair, written "in good set terms."

THE WINNER OF THE DERBY.—In consequence of the new arrangements in Saddlers' Hall-gate, Starling, &c., at Epsom, on Wednesday, Mr. J. F. HERRING, Sen., the Artist whom we had commissioned to sketch the Winner, was unable to get to see him. The Horse, directly after the Race, was sent back to Danebury, which quite precluded our Artist making such a Drawing as he should like to see bear his name. Next week, however, he trusts to make up for a disappointment over which he had no control

BOOKS RECEIVED. French Domestic Cookery, in 1200 Receipts: with Engravings. Knight's Weekly Volume, C. and Cl.—Village Tales from the Black Forest, translated from the German of Auerbach, by Meta Taylor.—History of the Punjab, and Sees and Medina of the Sikhs, 2 vols. North British Review, No. IX.—Road Reform, by William Pagan, Writer. History and Description of the Great Western Railway, with Lithographs, by John C. Bourne, large folio.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1846.

THE Epsom week always abates the labour and the interest of politics. The "Derby Day," if not quite a "national holiday," in the idea of the term entertained by Lord John Manners, is a very general jubilee in London, which is quite as populous as many nations can boast of being. On that day, as everybody takes to the road, of course the business that everybody is about must be suspended. This year, both branches of the Legislature have afforded their members an opportunity of seeing what and who was "done" upon the Downs. The Peers, with a very lordly aversion to excessive labour, never sit on Wednesdays; and the Commons, having just got through the great debate of the session, think it as well to relax a little, and they made a blank day on Wednesday also, besides "counting out" early on Tuesday. Everything of political importance is confined to the debates of Monday and Thursday in the Upper House.

It appears, by the latest intelligence from the seat of the disturbances in Gallicia, that Szela, the captain of the bands of peasantry which have ravaged the whole country, and not only declared, but carried on, "War to the Chateau," has been arrested by the authorities he for a long time superseded and set at defiance. The barbarities perpetrated by the half-emancipated serfs, who, by the policy of the Austrian Government, were taught to regard their landlords as their tyrants—they, indeed, being forced to be unpopular, by the Executive compelling them to carry out all the system of taxation and recruiting to which the peasants were exposed—have been frightful. And there is too much reason to believe that they were, at first, winked at by the Imperial officials. The nobles (a term that has very little of what we express by it) were the favourers of the revolt for nationality. The peasants, who have been divided in interest from their Lords by the cunning rather than wise policy of Austria, not only took little share in the insurrection, but rose against the nobles in defence of the "Kaiser," they burnt, plundered, and massacred, in the name of their Royal master; making no distinction of rank, age, or sex; and served for awhile as the irregular troops of the empire. But it is one thing to rouse the blind and savage spirit of a servile class, and another to calm it again when the purpose has been served.

When the proprietors were once murdered or expelled, the peasants, armed, and disciplined with successful violence, refused to return to their peaceful labours. After wielding the pike and torch, and enjoying free quarters in the mansions of their masters, the spade and plough could not but be distasteful. So they kept banded together, skirmishing with the Austrian troops, retreating to strongholds when pursued, defying the authorities, and continuing for their own profit and pleasure the work they began in aid of the Government. They sent a Deputation to Vienna formally demanding from the Emperor the abolition of various relics of the old system of bondage—forced labour, liability to the conscription, and relief from other grievances. But the Government was not prepared for anything of the kind; they had full and free permission to cut the throats of their masters, but asking for privileges that might cost the army a man, or the treasury a thaler, was quite a different affair. So the Executive besirred itself, and did at last what it evidently might have done at first had it suited its purpose; and the result is, that the sway of the peasant chief is cut short; Szela is a prisoner in the hands of the Austrian officials, who will, doubtless, make him pay dearly for overacting his part, and elevating himself from an instrument of their purposes to a power choosing to work out its own. Some account of this Sclavonian Wat Tyler may not be without interest; we extract the details from a German authority.

Jacob Szela was born in 1796, in the village of Smarzowa, in the circle of Tarnow, and seems from his earliest years to have had a bad reputation, in which a savage temper, dishonesty, and drunkenness were not the only or the worst of his evil qualities. He had been several times punished for theft before he was drawn in the conscription in 1818: to avoid service he maimed himself by cutting off a finger of his left hand. He was not released from the service, but he insinuated on his discharge up to him the whole management of the peasant-farm he occupied. The father refused, and Szela revenged himself by setting fire to the house, taking flight immediately, to escape the consequences of his crime. He did not appear again in his native village for three years; his father had died in the interval, and, in conjunction with his younger brother and stepmother, he for a short time attended to the business. But his conduct compelled them to get rid of him, and Szela then became a "Komornik," or day-labourer—paid, not in money, but in maintenance, with a house and piece of land. He contrived, by cunning and adroitness, to work his way into the favour of his employer, by whose interest he obtained the occupation of a small estate from Baguesz, the proprietor of Smarzowa.

When the Polish Revolution of 1830 broke out, he seized it as an opportunity of ingratiating himself with the authorities; he became an active and clever spy, denouncing landed proprietors, priests, officers in civil employments, and men of all ranks, especially those against whom he had a dislike; he was, in short, one of the most hateful tools of a hateful system, and, no doubt, did his work to the satisfaction of his employers. In 1833, he was condemned to three years' imprisonment, for the murder of his wife; at the end of that time he returned to Smarzowa. In 1844, he was again brought to justice, for a scandalous outrage, and imprisoned at Rzeszow. From hence he suddenly and unaccountably appeared upon the scene again just as the bloodthirsty peasants of Gallicia were beginning their horrible massacres. He collected a band of them, placed himself at its head, and one of his first deeds was the seizure of the village of Siedlisko, and the murder of Baguse (the benefactor by whom he had been granted a farm) and his whole family! With an excess of barbarity that can scarcely be conceived, he compelled the mother of his victim, who was seventy years of age, to give an account of the whole proceeding, he himself not being able to write, which he duly transmitted as a report to the Austrian official of that district!

The rest of his career equalled its commencement in atrocity; he murdered and plundered without check, and the revolt of the gentry was prevented; but at what a frightful price! Of what use, one may ask, is all the array of a "paternal Government"—its omnipresent police, its rigid surveillance of every movement, its enormous army, when, in a single province of its dominions, it is unable to check an ill-planned revolt of a section of the people without dissolving the whole framework of society? Let those who think that the State can be the "be all and the end all" of daily life, and can undertake to act as the soul of the vast social body, remember that it is only in absolute States in which rebellions can be attempted, that it is where the State permits no discussion, the people are inoculated with the most dangerous opinions, and that despotism is always trembling on the verge of anarchy. The servile war that has been raging in Gallicia, might teach the Continental Governments a lesson, if they were capable of receiving it. The King of Prussia is at this moment terrified at the demand of his people for some share in their own Government: will the spectacle of the impotence of the all-watchful, all-powerful empire of Austria, defied by a peasant, while the blood of hundreds of honest and enlightened subjects was sinking into the earth—will that inspire the German people with greater confidence in the despotic "system"? When Emperors cannot protect their subjects, and will not allow them to protect them selves, what can come of it? It is one of the compensations to be found in human things, that, generally, the deeds of despotism itself, work its overthrow.

GRAND DINNER AT THE EGYPTIAN HALL.—The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress have issued cards to the foreign Ambassadors and their ladies, and a great number of the nobility, to dine with them on Friday, the 19th of June. It is supposed that about 160 will sit down in the Egyptian Hall, and his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, and Prince George, are expected to honour the Mansion House on the occasion with their presence.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

BIRTH OF ANOTHER PRINCESS.

We have the pleasure to announce that her Majesty's accouchement took place on Monday afternoon, and that the Queen was safely delivered of a Princess. The happy event took place at five minutes to three o'clock.

In the room with her Majesty were his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Dr. Locock, and Mrs. Lilly, the monthly nurse; and in the rooms adjoining were the other medical attendants, Sir James Clark and Dr. Ferguson, and also her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Lady in Waiting on the Queen, and the Ministers and Officers of State summoned on the occasion. The Privy Councillors present were the Duke of Buccleuch, Sir Robert Peel, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Bishop of London, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Jersey, Mr Secretary Gladstone, the Earl of Haddington, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and the Duke of Wellington.

During the afternoon, numbers of the nobility and gentry called at Buckingham Palace, and entered their names in the visiting book of his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

The following is the official announcement made in the London Gazette Extraordinary on Monday afternoon:

"At five minutes before three o'clock this afternoon the Queen was happily delivered of a Princess; his Royal Highness Prince Albert, several Lords of her Majesty's Most Hon. Privy Council, and the Ladies of her Majesty's Bedchamber being present.

"This great and important news was immediately made known to the town by the firing of the Park and Tower guns; and the Privy Council being assembled as soon as possible thereupon, at the Council-Chamber, Whitehall, it was ordered that a form of thanksgiving, for the Queen's safe delivery of a Princess, be prepared by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, to be used in all churches and chapels throughout England and Wales, and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, on Sunday, the 31st of May, or the Sunday after the respective ministers shall receive the same.

"Her Majesty and the infant Princess are, God be praised, both doing well."

The Chief Rabbi, of the members of the Jewish persuasion in Great Britain, the Rev. Dr. Adler, has issued a form of thanksgiving for the safe delivery of her Majesty and birth of a Princess, to be read in all synagogues throughout the United Kingdom, on "Sabbath the 5th day of Sivan, a.m., 5606" this day, (Saturday, May 30.)

The following Bulletin was issued yesterday (Friday).

"Buckingham Palace, May 29, 1846, Nine o'clock, A.M.

"Her Majesty's recovery goes on without interruption. The infant Princess is well.

(Signed) "JAMES CLARK, M.D.
"CHARLES LOCOCK, M.D.
"ROBERT FERGUSON, M.D.

"No Bulletin will be issued till Monday next."

The inquiries of the nobility and gentry at the Palace were again exceedingly numerous. The members of the Royal Family called early to inquire after Majesty's health.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTH DAY.—On Friday was the anniversary of the Queen's natal day. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at Buckingham Palace, and remained to breakfast with her Majesty and her Royal Consort. The Queen also received visits of congratulation in the course of the day from her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary, and their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge and Prince George. The Queen and Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine service in the private chapel, Buckingham Palace. The Hon and Rev C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

PRINCE ALBERT AND THE BENCHERS OF LINCOLN'S INN.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert having become a bencher of Lincoln's Inn, will henceforth be entitled to dine with the Benchers in their hall on Wednesday, the 10th of June next.

RESIGNATION OF EARL DELAWARR. Earl Delawarr, having declared his intention to oppose the second reading of the Corn Bill in the House of Lords, has resigned the situation of Lord Chamberlain of the Queen's Household.

THE BANQUET AT SIR R. PEEL'S.—Sir Robert and Lady Peel intend to give a magnificent entertainment on the 9th of June. Lady Peel, the same evening, will hold an assembly in honour of her Majesty's birth-day. It is to be a full dress party.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM'S DAUGHTER.—The marriage of the Lady ANNE GRENVILLE with Mr. GEORGE LEGRON, will be solemnized in the course of the ensuing month, everything in connection with the interesting event having been arranged to the perfect satisfaction of both families.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF DUNMORE.—We have to announce the decease of the Dowager Countess of Dunmore, who expired on Sunday last, at her residence at Richmond, after a protracted illness. The late Countess was third and only surviving daughter of the late Duke of Hamilton, by Lady Harriet Stewart, fifth daughter of Alexander, sixth Earl of Galloway. Her Ladyship was born on the 3rd of August, 1774, and married the 4th of August, 1803, George, fifth Earl of Dunmore, father of the late Earl, who died in November, 1836.

DEATH OF VISCOUNT DOWNE.—We have to record the decease of Viscount Downe. His Lordship expired on Sunday last, at Beningborough Hall, Yorkshire. The deceased nobleman was in holy orders.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

REGISTRATION OF THE PRINCESS. On Tuesday morning, Mr. Le Breton, Clerk to the Guardians of St. Martin-le-Grand-fields, and Mr. Leonard, the Registrar of that parish, repaired to Buckingham Palace for the purpose of registering the birth of the infant Prince. Hitherto, the Royal progeny of her Majesty have been registered by the St. George's officials, and young, registered, as the gentlemen divide at the Palace the above portion of the Palace, including the Royal apartments, being in St. Martin's parish, whilst the grounds are in that of St. George, Hanover-square.

THE NEW PALACE OF WESTMINSTER. The second report has just been issued by the Lords' Select Committee to inquire into the process of the building of the Houses of Parliament. This report is to the following effect: "That the Committees have again met, and having examined Mr Goldsworthy Gurney as to the best system of ventilation for the new Houses of Parliament, are of opinion, that further inquiries and experiments should be made, under the direction of her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods and Forests, before the final adoption of any plan hitherto proposed for that purpose." (This evidence is decidedly against the practicability of Dr. Reid's plans.)

NEW ROMAN STREET.—This important thoroughfare, from Oxford-street to Holborn, near Little Queen-street, has been re-opened, with the exception of a very small portion, avoided by going round Hart-street, Bloomsbury

MR. W. S. O'BRIEN AND THE LONDON RADICALS. On Monday morning, a Deputation of the Repealers of London waited upon Mr. W. S. O'Brien, to present him an address and likewise to obtain a promise to attend a public meeting of the London Repealers at Drury-lane Theatre, to be held immediately after his liberation, to which the hon. gentleman agreed.

FESTIVAL PROCESSION.—The tradesmen of the metropolis intend to go in procession through some of the principal streets on Whit Monday: the route will be from the general meeting place, St. George's-fields, along Westminster Bridge-road, over Westminster Bridge, up Parliament-street, Whitehall, Piccadilly, Regent's Circus, the Quadrant, Regent-street, Portland-place, down the New-road, Goswell-street, Old-street, Old street-road, Shoreditch, Church-street, Bethnal-green-road, Cambridge-road, the Dog-row, to the Mile-end-road, where the procession will break up.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number of deaths in the week ending Saturday, May 23, was 860, the average number of deaths in five springs was 892, and in five years 893, including, at present, about the continual increase of the population is considered, a favourable state of the public health. The number of births in the week was 1207.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MERTHYR TYDFIL.—(From a Correspondent.)—This town, on Thursday (last week), was the scene of great rejoicings, to welcome Robert Thompson Crawshay, Esq., and his bride. Previous to the appointed day the place was thoroughly alive with preparations of various kinds, and, on the morning, there was hardly a house without its emblem of congratulation floating in the breeze. In many parts of the town triumphal arches had been formed. When the day of his arrival became known the gentry and tradesmen lost no time in forming a Committee, for the purpose of arranging matters. The order of the procession was as follows:—Band of music; gentlemen on horseback, two and two, wearing white rosettes; band of music; the different benefit societies, two and two; officers with white wands and white rosettes; workmen, four abreast. In this order the horsemen (about three hundred) proceeded about three miles; the procession on foot about two miles; to meet Mr. Crawshay and his bride. The procession returned in the same order, amidst the firing of cannon and the Luzzas of the assembled multitude, and afterwards proceeded through the principal streets towards Cyfarthfa Castle, the residence of Mr. Crawshay. On entering the town the horses were taken from his carriage, the workmen taking their places. Mr. Crawshay and his youthful bride seemed considerably affected by the tokens of respect which met their sight in every direction, repeatedly acknowledging them. When the procession reached its destination an address of congratulation was read, on the behalf of the general public, by Wm. Lewis, Esq., coroner for the county. Mr. Crawshay returned thanks. The workmen were then regaled with several barrels of beer, and the gentlemen, to the number of ninety, returned to the Castle Inn, where conviviality and harmony reigned supreme.

CURIOUS CASE.—On Sunday week, as Mr. Joseph Dutton, of Heywood, near Manchester was playing with his child, about fourteen months old, he felt something sharp in its side, just above the hip. On examination, he found it was about an inch and a half in length. He took a small pair of nippers, with which he got hold of the substance, and, on drawing it out, found it to be a black needle. The point of the needle was towards the skin. There was no inflammation about the part. It has been remembered, that some time previous to the child's birth, its mother accidentally swallowed a similar needle.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS FRIDAY.

STEAMES AND RICHMOND RAILWAY.—Colonel T. Wood moved that the Steames and Richmond Railway Bill be re-committed to the former committee, which was agreed to.

THE NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN CONNECTING RAILWAY.—Col. T. Wood moved the second reading of the Northern and Southern Connecting Railway Bill—Mr. WAKLEY opposed the second reading, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months. The hon. member said the scheme was a monstrous one, and he trusted the House would relieve the shareholders.—Colonel T. Wood denied that this was a theoretical scheme, and said that, on the contrary, it was a very practicable one, and would be very advantageous to the public. Mr. T. DUNCOMBE said he believed there was no one in favour of this line, except the managing committee. Four-fifths of the shareholders were against it, and the landholders were against it.—The amendment was then carried without a division, so the bill was lost.

PROGRESS OF PUBLIC BUSINESS.—Sir R. PEEL then rose to move that the House, at its rising, should adjourn till Friday, the 5th June. On the Monday following he should move the second reading of the Protection of Life and Property (Ireland), and on Friday, the 12th of June, he should bring on the Sugar Duties. On the 11th of June he should move that orders of the day should have precedence of notices of motion, but he did not propose that this should take effect till the 18th of June. The motion for adjournment to Friday next was agreed to.

PRICE OF POTATOES.—On the question for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. LAWSON moved for some returns showing the highest price of potatoes in Yorkshire to May 3, 1846, and the highest price in London. This motion led to a conversation, in the course of which Mr. Alderman HUMPHERY said that a much smaller quantity of potatoes had been sent to London this year than for many years past. The returns were agreed to

THE BUDGET.

The House having resolved into Committee of Ways and Means

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that, in laying the Budget before the House, he could not anticipate making it so interesting as former statements, in consequence of the explorations which had taken place at an earlier period of the Session, in the course of the debate on the measure that had so lately passed through that House, and was now warmly the question of the other House. The Revenue for 1846 had been estimated at £49,760,000. It had yielded £51,250,000. There had been an increase in the Customs, the Excise, and the Post-Office. On the Property Tax there had been a slight falling off. The sum received from China was £750,000. The expenditure had been estimated at £48,760,000 but had only reached £50,000,000. Although there had been a considerable fall off in consequence of the new Tariff, there had been an increase of revenue, and at the present moment in the last six weeks, compared with last year at the same period, there was a considerable revenue. He estimated the Revenue for the year at £51,000,000; and the Expenditure, £49,360,000; for Services, £7,460,000; for the Property Tax, £1,100,000; and for the Post Office, in consequence of some proposed alterations, the sum of £850,000, which would be an increase of £50,000. The Grand Funds he would put at £120,000, which, with other minor articles, would make a total revenue for 1847 of £50,980,000. The expenditure would contain certain increases that were rendered necessary by the alteration that steam had given rise to in our dockyards, and a general improvement in our naval force. The sum he proposed for the army was £6,090,000, and for the navy, £7,521 000. The miscellaneous estimates would amount to £3,435,000. The whole of these sums were an increase on the last year, but he asserted that the state of the country demanded it. But with this necessary increase, the right hon gentleman said he astonished them would be a surplus of £771,000 on the year. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then congratulated the House on the gradual reduction of the Funded Debt, which this year afforded a relief to the public of £1,500,000, the capital of the debt having been reduced £27,000,000. It had been stated that the Chinese ransom had added largely to the Revenue, but the war expenditure and the opium indemnity had together amounted to £3,300,000, which only left a balance in the hands of the Government of £300 (Cheers and laughter.) Since the year 1842, taxes had been imposed to the amount of £5,624,000; but, in the same period, reductions had been made to the amount of £5,926,000, leaving a balance in favour of the public of £3,262,000. It had been asserted that this increase was due to a series of good harvests; but, although he could not deny that the late good harvests did something towards the increase, he was prepared to be strictly tied to the solution of a liberal commercial policy. (Hear.) One of the greatest proofs of the improved condition of the people under the course pursued by the Government was the gradual falling off in crime, which, by the last year's returns, showed a diminution of 7 per cent. The religious wants and instruction of the poor had been attended to; and, instead of erecting fifty churches in a century, how more than that number had been built during the last year? And schools for infants, as well as for those of larger growth, have been largely erected.

WINDSOR, FRIDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.) Instructions have been received at the Castle, from Buckingham Palace, for the Royal Stand at Ascot to be prepared for the reception of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, if being his Royal Highness' intention to honour the coming races, accompanied by several Royal and distinguished visitors, with his presence. Too short a time will have elapsed since her Majesty's accouchement to justify the Sovereign making a visit to Windsor at so early a period. The exterior of the Royal Stand will be entirely repainted, and several internal decorations are in progress, under the superintendence of Mr. Whitman, an officer in the department of the Woods and Forests. The course will be admirably kept with the visits of the Prince Consort on the two principal days Tuesday, and Thursday, the "Cup Day." His Royal Highness will leave Paddington, by a special train, on the morning of each day, for the Castle; returning to London, by the same conveyance, at the conclusion of the sport. The Court is not expected to return to the Castle until quite the end of the autumn.

DEATH OF SIR JOHN TREVELYAN.—The venerable Baronet died at his seat, Nettlecombe Court, Somerset, on Saturday last, at the age of 86.

ACCIDENTS AT EPSOM.—Several collisions of a frightful character—one of which was attended with fatal consequences—occurred on Wednesday evening, during the return from the Derby. A four-wheel chaise, which was driven by Mr. John Winter, came in contact with a carriage in descending a hill about a mile from Epsom when Mr. Winter was thrown off the box and so severely injured, that he died two hours after having been taken to St. Thomas's Hospital.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—The latest PARIS papers announce the death of the Duke de Montmorency, Peer of France. He was one of the minority of the Court of Peers on the trial of Marshal Ney. On Wednesday the French Chamber of Peers, constituted as a court of justice, met to hear read the report of M. Franck Carré, in the name of the commission charged with the prosecution of LECOMTE. The Chamber met with closed doors, and consequently the public were excluded. The Procureur General's report extended to fifty-two pages, but does not impeach any other person than LECOMTE, who does not appear to have had accomplices. After giving a minute detail of all the circumstances attending the attempt upon the KING, with a sort of history of LECOMTE's previous life, the report refers to a document found at LECOMTE's lodgings, in his own handwriting, of a very curious character. It is as follows:—"He who has done the deed has as much heart as those who shall calumniate him. In his resolve, he only sought for success without thinking of danger. If he chose this place, he did so by Divine inspiration. The conclusion of his holy work will follow him even to the grave." The report having been read, the Procureur-General, M. HEBERT, presented his requisitoire, and the Court, in conformity therewith, issued its decree, according to which LECOMTE was ordered before it to stand his trial for an attempt against the life of the KING. The trial cannot take place for ten days at least.

PRAYER FOR HER MAJESTY'S SAFE ACCOUCHEMENT.—The following is the prayer composed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, which will be read in the churches to-morrow: "O merciful Lord and Heavenly Father, by whose gracious gift mankind is increased, we most humbly offer unto thee our hearty thanks for thine goodness, manifested by peculiar favour in delivering thy servant our Sovereign Lady the Queen, from the perils of childbirth, and giving her the blessing of a daughter. Continue, we beseech thee, thy fatherly care over her; support and comfort her in the hours of weakness, and day by day renew her strength. Preserve the infant Princess from whatever is hurtful either to body or to soul, and adorn her as she advances in years with every Christian virtue. Grant, finally, that under your especial favour and the Royal Consort, that they may long live together in the enjoyment of all earthly happiness, and may finally be made partakers of everlasting glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. And to thee, O Lord, with thy Son and Holy Ghost, three persons in one God, be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen."

THE GRAND POLISH BALL, at Willis's Rooms, on Monday, June 16th, will be patronised by the élite of the most fashionable and influential world, and will be given on the usual scale of magnificence, which will this time derive a further splendour from the testimonial, lately presented by the ladies of Poland to Lord Dudley, being exhibited in the room on the occasion of the ball.

PIGEON EXPRESS.—On Wednesday, immediately the Derby was run at Epsom, flights of pigeons from all parts of the downs were classed up to convey the result of the race to the metropolis and other parts, and in several instances the name of the Derby winner was known in London, through the medium of pigeon expresses, in less than 35 minutes after the race. A pigeon belonging to Mr. KEMP, of Stamford-street (of the beard species), was despatched from Epsom, with the name of the winning horse on a card appended to it, and arrived home and was captured in 19 minutes. Many pigeons that were thrown up fell victims to the disgraceful practice resorted to by many persons, who were stationed in the fields with guns, and shooting the "winged messengers" in their transit to their domicile, and many valuable pigeon-fell to the poacher's gun, while their owners were anxiously awaiting their arrival with the tidings of their gain or loss on the Derby. The fine for shooting a stray pigeon is 20s., or imprisonment.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FATAL COLLISION ON THE RIVER MERSEY.

An alarming collision took place on the river Mersey, on Monday night, which was unfortunately attended with the most lamentable consequence—both to Life and property.

The Sea Nymph, which trades between Liverpool and New Ross, was proceeding on her customary passage to the latter port, when, about eleven o'clock, just as she was off New Brighton, a steamer was seen coming up, which afterwards proved to be the Rambler steamer, coming into Liverpool from Sligo. Both vessels pursued their regular course, in conformity, we believe, with the requirement of the bye law; but before the vessels got fully swung round, they came into collision.

Captain Thompson was on the scaffolding over the engines, and had then stepped fully two minutes before the accident occurred. The mate, Mr. Samuel Easter, was forward. The starboard bow of the Sea Nymph struck the larboard bow of the Rambler, and scraping on towards the paddle carried away her stem. The Rambler was run on shore near the Rock, and Captain Thompson having ascertained that she was there safe from sinking, brought his vessel into the Clarence Dock, and discharged his cargo, which has not suffered any material injury, though the damage to the vessel is great

[The sketch, by a Liverpool artist, gives a good idea of the injured part of the Rambler, as she lay on the sands on Tuesday, when thousands flocked to witness the wreck.]

The following additional particulars are given in a third edition of the Liverpool Standard of Tuesday. The pilot says that, at about half-past ten, the Rambler passed the Rock Light, went westerly and very light, and the weather particularly fine. Saw the Sea Nymph coming right across the river, towards the Rock. Ordered the helm to be put hard apart, and stopped the engines; the Sea Nymph, with her helm, in his opinion, starboard, came steam on into our larboard bow, cutting her completely down to the water's edge, carrying away momentarily the top-gallant forecastle, smashing to pieces a heavy patent windlass, and severing the deck half way across, and so shaking the whole frame of the vessel, that every water-tight compartment was rendered perfectly useless, and it was evident she must have sunk, had not the engines been started, and the vessel run ashore, as she immediately filled.

Two principal officers of the Rambler were at the wheel, the second mate and the river pilot (a person acted as case a pilot cannot be obtained). There was no difficulty in starting the engines, and they were kept going for some time in order to harden her on as the tide attained its height.

After the vessel grounded, some of the passengers, despite the persuasion of Captain M'Allister, who, we learn, exhibited great presence of mind, took possession of the starboard boat for the purpose of getting ashore. They let go the fore-davit fall, and, at that moment, some one cut away the stern fall. The weight of persons in the quarter-boat, some say seven, some eleven) caused her to upset, previous to her reaching the water, and the actual result it is impossible to ascertain; but, as we state below, at all events five were saved.

On going on board the Rambler, which we did by entering through the chasm made through her larboard side into the steerage, a most extraordinary sight presented itself. Part of the flooring of the quarter-deck was smashed through, and the remainder, a confused mass of smashed tables, forms, &c. &c., and everything in the water which had filled this part of the vessel. The scene on deck was still more horrifying, the whole, both fore and abaft the funnel, being covered with dead bodies, part crushed to death, and another portion of which seemed to have been stabbed, the whole saturated in the blood. The most awful sight, however, was the bows of the vessel, which were completely bedabbled with human blood, and strewed with crushed salmon, broken boxes, crockery, &c. &c., and the fragments of the windlass. From this part of the vessel thirteen human beings had been extricated, some with broken arms, or dislocated legs, a dead, and so shocked as to be almost beyond recognition. One poor woman, with her infant child, was taken up from underneath the broken windlass, the iron spindle of which had fallen upon her head, and smashed it completely. A portion of her brains were to be seen adhering to the iron spindle. When taken up, her infant had fast hold of the nipple of the poor mother's breast.

We were informed that, on the bodies being searched by the constable of Wallasey, Mr. Scambler, not a coin of any kind was found upon the whole.

We believe that nearly all the persons on board the Rambler were persons intending to emigrate to America. We could not ascertain precisely the quantity of cattle on board of her. About 120 pigs, however, as near as we can compute (for the sickening sight precluded the possibility of counting them) were laid dead on the deck. The captain thinks there were 700 pigs and 20 bullocks. Many of the former were washed overboard in addition to those killed. On 3 ons of the bullocks was killed, the remainder were on board when we left the steamer.

The loss of life from this astounding calamity, as far as we can at present ascertain, is as follows:

Dead, and lying at the Magazine Boat-house	.. ..	13
Dead at Northern Hospital.. ..	.. ..	3
		—16

Lost from the capsizing of boat, unknown.

The Master of the Magazine life-boat states, that at the time the accident occurred he was seated in his house, and, on hearing the crash, he went out and procured one or two men—the first he could find, and that with these he manned the smaller life boat, and proceeded on his way to the Rambler. Before he reached her, however, he found a boat, bottom up, with a man clinging to her keel; the other man was holding to an oar, and both of these were floating on the water. These the life-boat saved. They then proceeded to the Rambler, but the moment a board was such that the men in the life-boat, unaccustomed to such a sight as presented itself, turned faint, and the commander then manned the larger life-boat with his usual hands, and succeeded in bringing 99 persons from the Rambler. He states that, though he has been eighteen years on the station, he never knew such a disastrous night before. Of course it is impossible to say how many were in the boat, which was found bottom up. A Liverpool paper of Wednesday says—

At the Northern Hospital the sufferers are going on as well as can be expected, with the exception of John Roach, who has since died. The following are the additional persons who are at present lying in the Northern Hospital:—Hannah [illegible], Fergus Brown, Patrick Williams, and Patrick Geoghan.

The Rambler was, almost immediately after the collision, run on shore at the Magazines; and since, large crowds of persons have visited her for the purpose of seeing the extent of damage she had received. Had she not been run ashore, she would have gone down in the course of five minutes, for the water had rushed in at the hole made in her side, and was running over the cabin deck at the time she grounded.

The report of the dead and wounded at the Northern Hospital is as follows:—

Mary Rowland, aged Dowley, is still crazy, but seriously safe.

John M'Gore, an infant three months old, died before it reached the hospital, supposed to be smothered

Patrick Finney and Michael Finney (brothers). Patrick not much injured, and Michael so much recovered as to be treated as an out-door patient.

John Roche died. He breathed his last a few minutes after he was admitted. Both his legs had been broken and his ankle lacerated.

Bridget O'Malley, 21 years of age, not dangerously wounded

Catherine Gillon, 50 years of age; Mary Kearney, 20; Margaret M'Candry, 23; Mary Barry, 30; Bridget Lally, 45; Michael Finney, 20; Ann Geoghan, 20; Feargus Brown, 30; and Patrick Williams, 21; all wounded, but not dangerously.

William Connolly, 45, is in a very dangerous state, with a broken leg and a dangerous wound in the scalp.

Mary Connolly, his wife, 45, and Eliza Connolly, their child, 14, both badly injured.

Patrick Geoghan, 45, very badly injured, and quite insensible.

In all probability, others of the wounded will die

There are at present 14 dead; 16 others were drowned by the swamping of the boat; and several besides, we fear, were lost by jumping over the side of the vessel. The numbers who met a watery grave cannot at present be ascertained.

On Wednesday afternoon, a jury of fifteen gentlemen were empanelled at the Magazines, before Mr. Charlton, Coroner, of Chester, for the purpose of holding an inquest on the bodies. After having viewed them at the dead-house, the Coroner said he understood that sixteen or seventeen persons were drowned shortly after the collision, and that probably some of the bodies of those persons would be washed ashore in the course of two or three days. It was a matter of great importance that every little of evidence should be brought before the jury in so important a case. He thought, therefore, that they had better adjourn for a week, in order to afford time for Mr. Scrambler, the constable, to summon all the necessary witnesses.

The inquest was then adjourned until Tuesday morning next, at ten o'clock. In the meantime, of course, the bodies will be buried.

Mr. Curry, the borough Coroner, will hold an inquest on those who have died in the Northern Hospital.

About 200 of the pigs died or were washed overboard, and one of the cows was saved. The rest of the cattle were conveyed ashore.

ACCIDENT ON THE STAMFORD AND PETERBOROUGH RAILWAY.—As a number of navigators and other workmen were leaving their employment on Saturday evening last, between six and seven o'clock, when near the village of Ramton the ballast waggons, on which they were riding, were suddenly thrown off the rails, by which twelve of the men were thrown out and severely injured; six of the sufferers were severely hurt, one having both his legs broken. The five others, some with their arms broken, others with their shoulders dislocated, &c. It is not expected that three of the six can recover. The accident, it is stated, arose from some carelessness on the part of the men.

A WOMAN CHOKED BY A PIECE OF BEEF.—On Saturday an inquest was held at the William the Fourth, Wandsworth-road, before Mr Carter, on the body of Mary Ann Cook, the wife of a sweep, living in Howard-street. A few days previously the deceased was at tea, when a piece of a crust of bread lodged in her throat, and before a surgeon could be procured, she was dead. Verdict, "Died from Soft cation."

ALARMING COAL PIT EXPLOSION AT SWANSEA.—On Tuesday morning (last week) a dreadful explosion took place at Mynddnewidd Colliery, the property of the Swansea Coal Company, situate at a distance of three miles from the town, resulting in a melancholy loss of life. On examination before-made, five of the miners were discovered to have met with an instantaneous death. The first body found was that of a man of the name of David J oes. His body presented an awful sight, the whole of his intestines having fallen out, showing the force with which he had been driven against parts of the colliery by the violent concussion. The remainder were likewise shockingly disfigured, and were blown some 200 or 300 yards from this spot where the foul air ignited. A Coroner's Inquest has been holden on the bodies of the sufferers, and a verdict of "Accidental death" was recorded. The pit, which has been in working order for a considerable time, is about 63 fathoms deep, and extends for about 600 yards from the shaft, through which the sufferers descend. There are a great number of stalls, while between 900 and 300 workmen are usually employed. Two other fatal explosions have since occurred, one at Pwllgwiig Colliery, and the other at the Mountain Engine, in which the last event all, four persons lost their lives. The accumulation of fire-damp was the cause of the catastrophe.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—On Saturday morning a melancholy occurrence took place at Kensington, which terminated fatally. A gentleman of the name of George Robert Ward, a barrister, about 40 years of age, had been on a visit at the house of his brother, Dr. Ogier Ward, No. 9, Leonard-place, Kensington, and during the last day or two, had been much worse than ever. At about half-past seven o'clock the unfortunate gentleman threw himself out of the bed-room window on the third floor, and fell on the area railings beneath. In such force, that he was completely impaled on the heads of the rails, one of which passed through his thigh, and another entered his body. He was extricated with much difficulty, and was immediately attended by Messrs. Pollock and Turner, surgeons, who did their utmost to alleviate his sufferings, but the injuries he had sustained were of so extensive a character, that death ensued in about an hour afterwards. It is supposed that the deceased, in his descent, must have struck against the balcony of the first floor, and have rebounded from that upon the area below. An inquest was held on Tuesday, at the house of Dr. Ogier Ward, where the occurrence took place, and the above statement having been confirmed, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased died from the effects of the injuries he received by falling from a window, being at the time of unsound mind

FATAL STABBING.—On Monday evening, Mr. Payne, City Coroner, held an inquest, at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of John Ody, aged 32, boot maker, whose death was occasioned by being stabbed by James Carter, who was, on Saturday last, fully committed for trial upon the charge of murder. The circumstances, as deposed to by the several witnesses, were, that the deceased and some men of the same trade were, about ten o'clock in the evening of Tuesday, (last week), drinking together at the Crow public-house, Moor-lane, Cripplegate, when Carter attempted to drink out of deceased's pot of beer. The latter repulsed him, and called him "a sponge." Carter then left the house, muttering that he would get something "to settle him," and in a few minutes returned with a knife, which it seemed he had been home to procure. The deceased was, under the

EPSOM RACES 1846.

THE GRAND STAND.

THE Turf—as it exists in Great Britain—is an institution altogether peculiar to this country. It is the most popular of all our National Sports the occasion with which we are about to deal is its characteristic essence Every foreigner who has written his experience of a pilgrimage to Epsom on the Derby Day, describes it as one of the most marvellous displays of popular wealth and condition to be witnessed in the world. None have spoken of it as that which it is beside—a true type of the national idiosyncracy

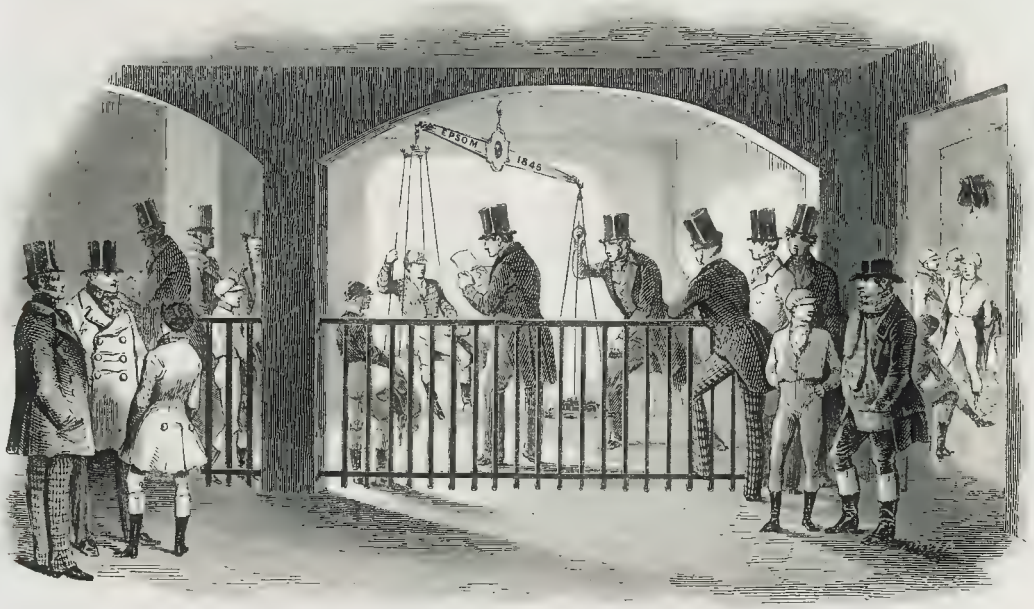
John Bull is by no means the mere mass of living lead that gentlemen with no more brains than bladders have thought fit to pronounce him. He is, indeed, in the habit of exercising those properties which distinguish his species from that of the brute, but he can be merry, as well as wise. Of the account he has turned the latter quality to, "the great globe itself" is the monument, you cannot contemplate him making the most of the former more favourably than by accompanying him to Epsom Races. Thither he has gone annually for more than half a century, and thither ye found him going—if ye were in luck, on Wednesday last, with as keen a relish as ever.

"I have observed," says Lord Bolingbroke, "that in comedy the best actor plays the part of the droll, whilst some scrub rogue is made the hero or fine gentleman. So, in this farce of life wise men pass their time in mirth, whilst fools only are serious." There is a gem of philosophy for you! A moral jewel, cheap at four times the cost of the volume in which it is contained. "No Epsom this this year I am resolved," says a lord of the creation, "I'll not be let bleed to the tune of five-and-twenty guineas for a sixteen-mile trip by a villanous post-horse vampire—no Epsom, I'm resolved." But that blue-eyed girl, whose tears trickle forth like dew dropped from a violet, brings St. John to the rescue. His aphorism does the business, and, lo! his pretty page is the bearer of a note to Newman, of Regent-street, ordering his best team of greys—coute qui coute—for the Derby and Oaks.

Even the great national festival has not escaped the predictions of the family of 'somethingus,' who see life through a smoked glass. They foretold that the rail would rifle the Derby Day of its glories—they were false prophets. . . . "Good wine needs no bush," says the axiom: upon the same principle, little preface is needed for a good subject. Therefore, we begin our notice of the journey when the traveller has already gone forth rejoicing. The region known as Banstead Downs was born to good luck. It has orthine thrust upon it to repletion. The best company near the sun or moon flock to enliven it with the light of their countenances, and to endow it with the weight of their purses; the best horses in the world are sent to exhibit for its benefit—and thus it comes to pass that a barren waste is let at the rate of a thousand pounds an acre—per week! No wonder it is attractive, and draws towards it pilgrims from every part of the compass. A right goodly sight is that pilgrimage. It extends for miles—in double files are ranged the travellers bedight in miles of silks and satins. Look on them and say how it comes that the weavers of Spitalfields do not sit down regularly to their haunch and claret.

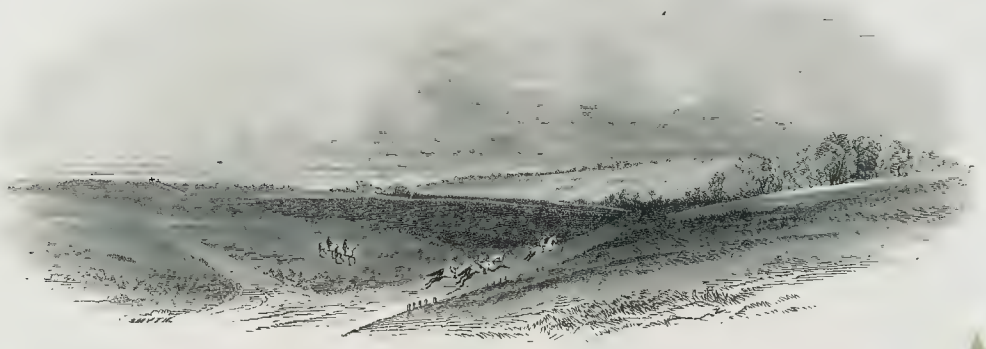
Peradventure, ye have heard that there is a difficulty in money—that something has baulked the circulation—that there is a lack of prosperity abroad. Make the best of your way to Epsom Downs, before the operation of luncheon-eating is over: mark a hundred thousand persons, up to the nose in lobster-salads and champagne—and form your own opinion. But you are not there yet: to accomplish your purpose you either débouche by Sutton over Banstead, or, following the more popular route, pass the picturesque spa of Ewell, and through the town of Epsom, up to the course. Pause awhile in the latter, and hear what they are doing in the odds, at the Spread Eagle. You are astonished to see so many men in good apparel and villanous countenances.

It is a mystery to you how fellows, evidently born and bred in the gutter, can bandy about offers to invest their thousands on issues of chance. Know, then, that there is such a thing as play upon a principle which never loses. In the Ring only is that game played. It is thus performed:—Some one, who has begged, borrowed, or stolen a couple of thousand pounds, lays str-ight tway a favourite for a good betting race. Against that horse he lays to the amount of the uttermost farthing he can obtain custom or credit for. The day of the race arrives;



THE WEIGHING-ROOM.

EPSOM RACES 1846.



THE LONG GALLOP OR EXERCISING GROUND.

he takes care that his horse is in the stable, and the key in his own pocket. By those means he prevents the favourite's winning. He daily attends the settling at Tattersall's; receives, with the air of one who has demeaned himself like a proper cavalier, takes Cooke for his tailor, and rooms in the Albany. Here is a fortune made "as easy as lying." . . . . . Noon has placed you on the Surrey Hills Would we could make known the beauty, rank, style, wealth, and bravery which engrossed their velvet surface. This must be left to the imagination of those who know what England is, and what manner of men and women are her sons and daughters.

Epsom has begun to add to her character of a mighty sporting rendezvous much of the pageant style of Ascot. When both are perfectly blended together she will be peerless as a holyday festival. The Grand Stand is now certainly the grandest edifice of its kind in the country. The entrance is from the rear, where carriages drive into a spacious enclosure, and set down at a noble flight of double steps, surmounted by an awning. The interior arrangements are complete; uniting elegance and comfort in a remarkable degree. In front, slopes a turf-covered lawn down to the course, from which a light iron railing separates it. This lawn is divided into two compartments; that on the right for the betting people; that on the left for the pleasure folk. Beneath the building itself are ranges of rooms for weighing and lodging the jockeys; for printing the cards and return lists; and for the general accommodation of all engaged in the business of the racing.

Far off, in front, ye see the classic "hill," studded with equipages—where more champagne is drunk in four hours than in any other spot of the globe in as many years—where unheard-of feats in gastronomy are achieved and some of the briskest sweethearting carried on to be met with anywhere.

Two o'clock sounds—and simultaneously a bell—the Derby field is called to saddle before the Stand. Admirable exhibition! Lo! there stands Sting, on whom thousands staked, to lose their hopes and their money, for, of a surety, he is out of his "form." Have they "nobbled him," or has disease come of its own accord? It is well done, however, that the public should see how they are done. Seven-and-twenty coursers of fame good, indifferent, and bad have sadled, and can trend away for the start. Here, matters were not upon velvet. A horse of Lord Eglinton kicked the favourite, Fancy Boy, and cutting his hind leg to the muscles, thereby putting out his prospects. Then there were some interminences unlawful between the jockeys, which are better left unnamed. At the second attempt the start was accomplished by the field subjoined, at the prices also set forth at foot.

THE GRAND STAND.—NEW ENTRANCE.

So soon as the horses had settled into their places, The Conjurer, Iago, The Traverser, Johnville, and Spithead, took the foremost rank: Sting, Tom Tulloch, and Fancy Boy next; and then the body of the field, among the worst placed being Sir Tatton Sykes. This animal lost a great deal of ground at Tattenham Corner, and must have had his chance played ducks and drakes with, by the hauling necessary to have got him into his final berth—next the rails. At the distance he was in front, looking very like a winner; but old Sam Day had by this time brought Pyrrhus the First well forward and, at the Stand, challenging Sir Tatton, he went by him, and won cleverly by a length.—Brocardo a length from the second—and Johnville fourth, though not placed by the judge. There was nothing to stem off whence it is clear that the lot was a middling one.

After the race there was a scene in the weighing House anything but creditable to the principal actor in it. Mr. Hibburd, the starter, declared his intention of bringing the matter before the Stewards. Mr. Hibburd is a most re-pectable man, and one who discharges his official duties connected with the turf in a most satisfactory manner. He will add much to his good opinion he has already won by abating the nuisance to which this notice refers.

EPSOM RACES. TUESDAY.

The commencement of the meeting, in respect to sport and weather, was high y favourable, but the attendance in number and rank fell short of our anticipations; in fact, it was confined chiefly to the sporting classes, who, having adjourned from an unprofitable rendezvous in the town, reassembled in the privileged enclosure, in which they found ample space for betting.

The racing commenced, or should have commenced, at two o'clock; but, from a want of punctuality, was not begun till a clock until nearly half past six. Much dis-atisfaction was expressed on this head; and, we have no doubt, care will be taken to prevent a similar ground of complaint. We subjoin partic lars of the day's sport:—

The Craven Stakes, of 10 sovs. each.

Mr. E Peel's Spithead ..	..	..	(Kitchener) 1
Mr S. R Clarke's The Baron ..	..	..	(E. Edwards) 2
Mr. Bainbridge's Sir Peter Laurie ..	..	..	(A. Day) 3

The Woodcote Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 100 sovs added by the Lessee of the Grand Stand.

Mr E. R Clarke's Miles's Boy ..	..	..	(E. Edwards) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Blackcock ..	..	..	.. (Nat) 2
Lord E. Russell's Eldon ..	..	..	(H. Bell) 3

The Manor Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 40 added by the Lord of the Manor. Heats.

Sir G. Heathcote's Campanile, 3 yrs ..	..	..	(Chapple) 1
Mr. Ramsbottom's Pine Apple, 6 yrs ..	..	..	(H. Bell) 2
Mr J. Day's Miss Slick, 3 yrs ..	..	..	(A. Day) 3

The Horton Stakes of 3 sovs each, with 30 added by the Lord of the Manor. Heats.

Mr Shelley's Tit-bit, 3 yrs ..	..	..	(J. Sharpe) 1
Mr Farr's Slipshod, 4 yrs ..	..	..	(Whitehouse) 2
Mr. Wall's Zeta, 4 yrs ..	..	..	(Wakefield) 3

WEDNESDAY.

THE DERBY SWEEPSTAKES OF 50 SOVS. EACH,

Mr Gully's Pyrrhus the First, by Epirus, out of Fortress (S. Day) 1
Mr W Scott's Sir Tatton Sykes, by Melborne .. (W. Scott) 2
General Shubrick's Brocardo, by Touchstone .. (Holmes) 3

The following started but were not placed:—

Lord Maidstone's Tom Tulloch ..	..	..	(Nat) 0
Sir G Heathcote's Nannette c ..	..	..	(Chapple) 0
Mr. A. Johnstone's Grimston ..	..	..	(Lye) 0
Mr J Drake's Red Archer ..	..	..	(G. Edwards) 0
Lord Chesterfield's Ginger ..	..	..	(Duffin) 0
Sir J Hawley's Hamdr im ..	..	..	(H. Sly) 0
Mr Meldrum's Fancy Boy ..	..	..	(Templeman) 0
Colonel Anson's Iago ..	..	..	(P Butler) 0
Mr. O'Brien's The Traverser ..	..	..	(Cartwright) 0
Mr. Drake's Ned Archer ..	..	..	(Mann) 0
Mr. E Peel's Spithead ..	..	..	(Francis) 0
Lord E. Russell's Sting ..	..	..	(H. Bell) 0
Sir H W Bulke-y's Johnville ..	..	..	(Bumby) 0
Mr. Merry's Peri colt ..	..	..	(Robinson) 0
Mr Mostyn's c by Plasmix—L'Hirondelle ..	..	..	(Marlow) 0
Mr. E. R. Clarke's the Conjuror ..	..	..	(E. Edwards) 0
Mr. Wall's Crown Prince ..	..	..	(Wakefield) 0
Mr. Gurney's Cantley ..	..	..	(R. Pettit) 0
Mr. Ramsay's Malcolm ..	..	..	(Robertson) 0
Lord Orford's Backey ..	..	..	(Whitehouse) 0
Lord Eglinton's Scarlet ..	..	..	(Marson) 0
Count Batthyany's Tugboat ..	..	..	(Crouch) 0
Mr. Balchin's Sir Edmund ..	..	..	(W. Balchin) 0
Mr. T. Powell's Holloway ..	..	..	(Chiffney) 0

Betting at Starting:—8 to 1 agst Fancy Boy, 8 to 1 agst L'Hirondelle colt, 10 to 1 agst Tom Tulloch, 10 to 1 agst Sting, 10 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes, 10 to 1 agst Conjuror, 11 to 1 agst Hamdr im, 15 to 1 agst Peri colt, 25 to 1 agst Brocardo, 25 to 1 agst Iago, 40 to 1 agst Nannette colt, 50 to 1 agst Johnville, 50 to 1 agst Scarlet, 50 to 1 agst The Traverser, and 1000 to 1 agst Grimston.

Previous to starting, The C njuror was objected to on the score of age, and a counter-objection was made by Mr. E. R. Clarke against Tom Tulloch.

The Carew Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 30 added.

Mr Mostyn's by Heiman Faudon, out of Miss Tomasina (Whitehouse) 1
Mr. Ramsbottom's c by Mus, out of Belvidera ..			(H. Bell) 2

The Burgh Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 30 added.

Mr. Cooper's Caen. 6 yrs ..	..	..	(Nat) 1
Mr Ford's br c The Attorney, 4 yrs ..	..	..	(J. Hewitt) 2
Mr. T Walker's The Nobbler, 5 yrs ..	..	..	(T. Lye) 3

The racing was not finished until after six o'clock.

THURSDAY.

The Epsom Four Year-old Stakes.

Mr. R. W Walker's Fuzbos ..	..	..	.. 1
Duke of Bedford's Leopard ..	..	..	.. 2

The Durdons Stakes of 10 sovs. each, &c.

Mr. Johnstone's Grimston ..	..	..	.. 1
Sir G. Heathcote's Campanile ..	..	..	.. 2

The Grand Stand Plate of 200 sovs., &c.

Mr. Merry's Peri colt ..	..	..	.. 1
Sir J. Hawley's Alamode ..	..	..	.. 2

FRIDAY.

THE OAKS STAKES OF 50 SOVS. EACH.

Mr. Gully's Mendicant ..	..	..	(S. Day) 1
Mr Gratwicke's Laundry Maid ..	..	..	(F. Bell) 2
Lord Glasgow's Emilia filly ..	..	..	(Holmes) 3

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY. The Derby having now become a matter of history, it will be useless to dwell upon the changes that arose out of the betting this afternoon. It will be enough to state that Sir Tatton Sykes was sent to the right about, and that, of the many horses backed, no one was backed with anything like confidence.

7 to 1 agst Tom Tulloch (t)	12 to 1 agst The Conjuror (t)	50 to 1 agst Malcolm (t)
8 to 1 —— Fancy Boy	25 to 1 —— Sting	50 to 1 —— Hamdrum (t)
9 to 1 —— Peri (t)	25 to 1 —— Iago	50 to 1 —— Holloway (t)
10 to 1 —— Hirondelle	25 to 1 —— Brocardo	50 to 1 —— Backey
10 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First	33 to 1 —— Cantley (t)	50 to 1 —— Y. Herschel (t)
17 to 1 —— Crown Prince	40 to 1 —— L'Hirondelle colt	1000 to 10 —— Traverser (t)
20 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes.	50 to 1 —— Ginger (t)	5000 to 20 —— King Charles

PLACES.

4 to 1 agst Mendicant (t)	13 to 1 agst Sister to Ballin-	14 to 1 agst Osprey
6 to 1 —— Vanish	laste	25 to 1 —— Prussic Acid
8 to 1 —— Mowerina (t)	13 to 1 —— Princess Alice

CRICKET.

The match at cricket between the University and Town of Cambridge was played on Monday and Tuesday, to the d-mcntitude of the former. The number scored by the University at two innings was 184; that by the Town at the first innings, 209. The townsmen had, therefore, only 7 to score at the second innings, which they played pro formâ on Wednesday.

THE BELGRAVE CLUB V. THE ECLIPSE CLUB.—This match, which commenced on Monday, was resumed on Tuesday morning. The Surrey lost the day by 48 runs, but they are not, although it is their first match as a club, in the least disheartened. On each day the ground was crowded with the élite of the cricket world.

LONDON YACHT CLUB.—At the monthly meeting, held at Wright's Hotel, on Tuesday evening, T. Brassey, Esq., in the chair, the following yachts were entered for the ensuing match of the 19th of June, the first Club Match of the season:

No.	Vessel.	Owner.	Colour.
1	Mystic	J. T Helms, Esq.	Blue, White, and Red.
2	Fire Fly	Sir J. Boswell	Blue with Red Cross.
3	Cygnet	Messrs Ayce sburn and Charles	Red, with White Cross
4	Fox	T Brassey, Esq.	Blue.

The above yachts will start from opposite East Lodge, Greenwich (the residence of the Commodore), and sail round a flag-boat in Gravesend-reach, returning to Greenwich, where a handsome silver cup will be presented to the winner. A steamer will accompany the match, being for the first time since the establishment of this club of minor yachts, the same size as those of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, when first established in 1821, under the name of the Coronation Fleet. Several members were elected, and others proposed for ballot at the ensuing meeting in June.

THE DERBY—1846.

Come away! come away! 'tis the Derby day,
The morn smiles bright on the sporting array.
Up with Joy's banner,
Our ethian and wave!
Not a soul with a "tanner" to moisten his clay
But collars his "browns,"
And is off to the Downs,
Where prices and clowns, and our senators pray,
Forgetting Sr. Stephen's,
Roll in, odds and evens,
In four-in-hand, broughams, and spanking pot-shay.
See! over the bridges,
They're swarming like midges,
Great Babylon's progeny, reckless and gay;
Oh! bright panorama!
From Perth to Panama,
No town upon earth can do equal display.

Deserted now is Carel Court,
Where Bulls and Bears and Stags resort,
The Minories have shut up shop,
And rush to Epsom neck and crop!
Crowded is stage-coach, train, and 'bus,
Jerusalem Buzzphairs,
The Costermonger's donkey trots
In fifteen hours some fourteen knots,
London chalks up its gains as "ente"
The Clubs themselves have cut their sticks;
So would the Shades their Styx below,
Could they, like Smith O'Brien, go
I' enjoy the gay and glorious show!
Up to the Downs the ring-tarks come—
On Carter's Mammoth see Tom Thumb!
Up to the Downs, from thousand plains
Around—Dum hamlet, verdant lane—
King ton and Croydon — Hampton — Staines—
Where'er its sight your optic strains,
Pours in the multitude. The Stand
—(Well worthy of its title, "GRAND")—
Shines with the fashionables' throng,
Who to the "sw l!" who ventures there!
The Stand is "tabooed" to Legs to free
And easy Knights of Industry:
Darling deserves immortal fame
For smoking out that sin and shame.
But now the note of preparation
Is rung. The steeds take up their station
And now, the last and fatal sound!
On! on! with lightning's speed they bound!

Away! the turf beneath them flinging,
While o'er the plain glad shouts are ringing.

Away! Sir Edmund, Humdrum, Blackie,
The Conjurer is on your track. He
Shortly will fall back in the rick.
Grimston, Jack, Brocardo, show more pluck!
Go it, De Johnville! On this scene,
Brave steed, thou art no horse martine.
Where is Tom Tulloch? Spurs and snaffle!
Gone is his chance in Fortune's raffle.
Where is Sting? Iago, Fancy Boy?
Has he become a hobdehoy?
Where is Sir Tatton? Lost his ground!
Where are ὁι πολλοὶ? In Job's pound.
Where is Pyrrhus the First is first—a wonder:
20 to 1 against, and under.
Oh, sporting Jem! oh, far-famed Derby!
Whose character no taint can sully!
We greet thee well, and thy stanch herd, He
Has nobly won the glorious Derby!

Oh Craven, Pegasus, and Vates,
All ye whose guess as true as fate is,
Where now are your valicinations?
Not worth a rush in market's ebb and flow—
Home! home! with mugs most elongated,
And others with full glee elated,
Return to t'wn the motley crowd,
Hail'd by the urchins cheering loud.
Cover'd with clouds of dust they come;
Some talking loud, while others glum,
Seem study ing what D——l to pay,
At Tattersall's on Settling Day.

Thus is the Derby's famed career,
Through clouds and sunshine, hope and fear.

MUSIC.

CONCERT OF ANCIENT MUSIC.

The eighth and last Concert of the season was given on Wednesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of the Earl of Westmoreland, an accomplished amateur and a clever composer. Although there was no novelty in the programme, it was admirable in every respect—an well balanced as to styles, and so well adapted to display the talents of the vocalists.

There was a selection from Haydn's "Creation," in which Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Machin did good service. Then there were the choral thunders of Handel, in the "Judisrra," and "Fixed in his everlasting seat." Beethoven came in, also, with overwhelming force, in the "Hallelujah," from the "Mount of Olives." Then there was a motetto, by Marcello, "I stidi immensi," the solo sung by Madame Caradori Allan; Hummel's "Gloria in excelsis," with its fine fugue; Graun's quartet and chorus, from the "Passione," "Qui freddo sta;" a beautiful quintet, from Mehul's "Joseph," "Ah lascior i" and a solo and semichorus, by twelve lady-pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, from Winter's "Oracle"

Paschek sung Beethoven's "Adelaide," and the Scena of "Agamemnon," in which the father deplores the sacrifice he had to impose on the lamented "Diana," by the sacrifice of his daughter, "Iphegenia." The superb voice, impas-ioned style, and perfect execution of Pischek, created a sensation rarely met with at these Concerts. Madame Tulloh sang the cavatina from Rossini, and Mozart, her witcheries are better adapted for the stage than a concert-room; but her smiles and ringlets did immense execution. Miss Bassano sang the air of Beethoven, "In questa tomba oscura," from the opera of the Mount; Madame Caradori sang Paisiello's "Idol mio," with Mr Williams's nice clarionet obligato, in excellent style. She executed the florid divisions in a manner that could not be rivalled by any other concert-singer. Sterling Hague, who played and executed in Viner's air, "Vo solcando," from "Artaxerx," from which Mr. Arne "borrowed" so freely, were well developed. One of the greatest treats was the lovely duo of Mayer, from "Lodoiska," charmingly sung by Madame Caradori Allan and Mis Bassano.

Amongst the company were the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Wellington, the Archbishop of Armagh, the Earl of Westmoreland, the Marchioness of Downe, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of C wdor, Lord and Lady C Wellesley, the Speaker of the House of Commons and family, Mrs W. Curtis, A Barnard, J. Campbell, C. Wetherall, T. Phillips, &c.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.

After having illustrated Beethoven's career in Quartet writing by five programmes, each containing a specimen of his youth, his maturity, and his climax of glory, this admirable Society commenced on Monday last, at the Sixth Meeting, with a series of schemes, to show the progress of the Quartet field, the origin of which is thus explained in a very interesting prospectus, prepared, we believe, by Mr. Hill, the tenor player.—

Haydn a first Quartet for two Violins, Tenor, and Violoncello—a real parts for each instrument, his Op. 1 in B flat, 8/8 time, was written in 1760, when he was eighteen years of age and under the following circumstances:—One of his friends, Baron Furenberg, who had an estate a few miles from Vienna, was in the habit of entertaining, with the part it pleased his friend to take, a number of the celebrated contrapuntists, who played the Viennese, to his house to perform small pieces of music. Haydn's talent having already manifested itself, the Baron urged him to compose some music adapted for these four performers in the origin of his first Quartet, which from its first appearance, obtained the warm approbation of musicians. This success encouraged Haydn to continue the practice of composition, upon which he was occupied at intervals during a period of fifty-three years, i.e., from 1750 to 1803. Mozart's first Quartets were published in 1781, when he was thirty-three years old. Mozart had then attained his thirtieth year, and he died 1791. Haydn lived seventeen years after his great pupil and contemporary, having died in 1809

The programme, to carry out the principle of action laid down by the Society, opened with Haydn's Quartet in C, No. 2, Op. 16. (Paris edition, No. 32.) This was followed by Mozart's D major, No. 5 of the six Quartets dedicated to Haydn. Then came the founder of the school again, in his B flat No. 4, Op. 76; and, as a wind up, Beethoven's C sharp minor, Op. 131. The executants were Sivori, Sainton, Hill, and Piatti—the first leading in the Mozart and Beethoven, and Sainton in the two Haydn Quintets. It is needless to add that the performance was perfection, and that the rapture of the audience, comprising the élite of our most enlightened amateurs and connoisseurs, was unbounded.

The next Meeting will be on the 8th of June, the selection being Mozart's Quartet in B flat, Op. 18, and his first Quartet in G, dedicated to Haydn; Haydn's in D minor, Op. 76, and Beethoven's Posthumous in A minor.

QUARTET CONCERTS.

At the Sixth Quartet Concert, given in the Thorne Room, Crosby Hall, on Monday last, Beethoven's Grand Septette in E Flat Major, Op. 20, was admirably executed by Dando (violin), W. Thomas (tenor), Williams (clarionet), Jarrett (horn), Baumann (bassoon), Lucas (violoncello) and C. Severn (double-bass); but it would have been better to have gone through with the work, in-tead of dividing the Septette in it two parts. Mendelssohn's Quartet in D Major (No. 1, Op. 44), and Mozart's in D Minor (No. 3, of Op. 10), were excellently rendered by Messrs. Dando, Gatti (first and second violins), W. Thomas (tenor), and Lucas (violoncello). A great treat was also afforded by Sterndale Bennett's Trio in A Major, Op. 26, for piano (Mr. Sterndale Bennett), violin (Mr. Dando), and violoncello (Mr Lucas). The elegant Serenade which forms the second movement is always heard with delight. The vocal selection was confined to Miss Bassano—who sang very nicely Spohr's "Rose of the Desert," from "Zaor and Zemira," and Weber's "Fair Araby," from "Oberon"—and Mr. A. Novello, a sound musician, who gave Haydn's "I penaler," from the "Orfeo ed Eurydice." The room was quite full.

VOCAL CONCERTS.

Whatever may be the result of the present undertaking—and we believe that the spirited Directors are secure from loss—the way has been prepared for a future season, for a "Society" well worthy of patronage. Generally, the performance of the best specimens of the vocal school; but we think it will be more expedient to confine them to English illustrations, as the latter are now so much in fashion to neglect. Madrigals, glees, operatic airs, and concerted pieces, may be found out of number to make interesting programmes. There has not been sufficient variety in the schemes of the present season and perhaps the introduction of some popular catches would tell. Nothing could be finer than the execution of Horsley's Glee, "By Cotta's arbour," and J. S Smith's "Return, boat days," sung by Miss Hawes, Messrs. H bbs, Lockey, and Phillips, and both were rapturously encored at the Third Concert, on Tuesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The two Madrigals, "All creatures now are merry minded," by Benet, and "Flora gave me fair-st flowers," by Wilbye, did not go so well, owing to the harshness of the treble and the time being dragged. Indeed, the tendency to slowness was perceptible throughout the concert; our artists will make such a "monitiful" of every word. For impassioned feeling, Miss Hawes's song, "In infancy our hopes and fears" which was demanded a second time was particularly distinguished. Mr. Hobbs sang an air by Beethoven, "O beauteous daughter," with feeling, but it was too slow, and it lacked flowing style. Mozart's "Qui sdegno," known by the German name of "In diesen heiligen Hallen," is now too low for Phillips's register, but it was artistically rendered. Miss Birch being indisposed, her share in the scheme was assigned to Miss Rolle Dickson and Miss Ley. Lord Mornington's Glee, "O bird of eve," and Dandy's "When Sappho tun'd," were included in the programme, as also a selection from Purcell's music in the "Tempest." There was a mistake, by the way, in ascribing to Purcell the "Full fathom five," which was sung as it was composed by Smith, and introduced into Purcell's version at the Ancient Concerts. Mr. Turle's organ style unfits him for a pianoforte accompanyist.

CONCERTS

MRS. ANDERSON.—We mentioned the Annual Concert of this distinguished pianist in our last Number, but we were unable to supply details, owing to the hour of our going to press. The much respected bénéficiaire performed the first movement of one of Hummel's Concertos, and, with Sivori, Dohler's tarantelle for piano and violin; in the former, she displayed her classical style, and, in the latter, executive facility. Maurer's celebrated concertante for four violins was finely played by Sivori, Sainton, Blagrove, and Deloffre. Parish Alvars performed a harp fantasia; the Distin family, on the Sax Horns; and Sivori and Piatti, a violin and violoncello duo. There was also an excel ent orchestra, conducted by Costa. Of the opera singers, the charming Castellan and Labache and Mrs. were selected; but Madame Thillon, Miss Bassano, Miss Hawes, Signor Marras, and facetious John Parry amongst the vocal celebrities. It was altogether a good Concert.

MR. BENEDICT RICHARDS.—The Annual Evening Concert of this accomplished pianist and fast-rising composer, was well attended. He performed a MS. "Allegretto Capriccioi" of his own writing, with much ability, and proved his acquaintance with the classical and showy schools, by executing works of Mendelssohn, Chopin, Liszt, and Heller. A MS. Duett Concertante for two pianofortes, composed by Benedict, and performed by him and Mr. Richards, was much applauded. It is a well written piece, on themes from Schubert. Parish Alvars was the other solo instrumentalist who delighted the audience. The vocal selection comprised the ballad of "Oh! whisper what thou feelest," sung by Mr. Harrison, and enthusiastically encored; the song of "The haven of the heart," given by Miss Steele; and the graceful air, "Oh! remember," assigned to Miss Birch. These three ballads were composed by Mr. Richards: the two former were introduced in the "Crown Jewels," at Drury Lane Theatre. A pretty duet by Miss Hawes, "I would not if I could forget," sung by Miss Birch and the fair composer; Wallace's elegant trio, "Turn on, old Time," sung by Miss Steele, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. W. H. Seguin; and Sterne's duo of the "Wood Birds," sung by the Misses Williams, illustrated the English school of composition. Mr. Macfarren's song, "Allan-a-dale," to Sir W. Scott's poetry, sung by Mrs. Macfarren, was certainly most eccentric, and evinced the absurdity of writing in the impossible keys. Plaskell was the star of the Concert; and, in the comic school, John Parry's fun, as usual, was in the ascendant. Signor F. Lablache, Mr W. H. Seguin, and a Madame Lecoy, were the other vocalists. Benedict and Charles Horsley were the conductors: we would suggest to the latter to try over the pieces he has to accompany, as Miss Birch nearly broke down through his want of preparation.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—At the third Concert the founder of the Institution, the Earl of Westmoreland, was present, and was much cheered on his return from Berlin, at which he is the English Minister. The selection included the introduction to Spohr's "Jessonda," the finale to his "Azor and Zamira," Cherubin.'s overture to "Lodoiska," Weslrent's madrigal "Hard by a Fountain' (encored), Marcello's Tenth Psalm, Costa's quartette "Ecco quel fiero istante," and Mendelssohn's Two Part Song and Chorus, "The Spotted Snakes," from "Midsummer Night's Dream," the soli nicely sung by Miss Ransford and Miss Duval. A M.S. canzonet, "I Think of Thee," by E. B. Harper, a son of the celebrated organ-builder, was so prettily warbled by Miss Ransford that it was encored. Miss Stewart afforded indications of considerable promise in Rossini's "Alma invitta" and Donizetti's duo between Anna Bolena and Lady Jane Seymour was charmingly sung by Miss Ransford and Miss Romer. The latter, however, made her greatest hit by her splendid reading of the recitative in Mozart's "Non più di fiori," with Mr Wilson's clarionet obligato. Miss A. Romer (a cousin of the Miss Romer, and Sister of Mrs Romer, who has been so successful in Italy) bids fair to be a great vocalist. The solo instrumental displays were Master Simmons' clever execution of one of Mayseder's violin compositions, and Mr. F. Palmer's delicate performance of a movement from Hummel's concerto in A minor, and a neat flute solo from Mr. Wells. The Duke of Cambridge, the Earl of Wilton, the Earl and Countess of Lucan, Lord Saltoun; Sirs Charles Lemon, Bard, W. Curtis, J. Campbell, Lady Clerk, &c., were present at this interesting Concert.

MISS DOLBY AND MISS ORGER.—The Annual Concert of these clever artistes took place on Monday at the Hanover-square Rooms, the first part conducted by Benedict, and the second by Sterndale Bennett. There was an excellent band. Miss Orger performed one of Leopold de Meyer's "thunder" fantasies, but she is much more lucid in those movements out of well-constructed quatuor for piano, violin (Mr. Willy), tenor (Mr. Weslake), and violoncello (Herr Hausmann), composed by herself, and in Mendelssohn's songs without words. Miss Dolby proved her considerable every style of vocalisation, from the classical Mozart down to the florid Persiani. Mr Godefroid played a harp solo, and was encored. John Parry sang two of his droll scenes. The remaining vocalists were Madame Alexandre, Miss Rainforth, Miss Lincoln, Miss E. Birch, Miss Messent, Signor Marras, Mr. Bodda, and Mr Lockey. The room was quite crowded.

MRS. ARTHUR STONE. This vocalist, formerly Miss Galbraith, gave her Concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, and was assisted by Herr Pischeck, Herr Goldberg, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Arthur, Madame Alexandre, Mrs. Weiss, Miss Child, Mellc. Goldberg, and Mr. John Parry, as vocalists: and Miss Collins and Herr Ries, as pianists; Herr Hausmann, violoncello. Richardson, flute, and Gratton Cooke, oboe. Mr. Lavenu officiated as accompanyist. There was a large attendance, and gratification was the order of the evening at the attractions in the programme, as the concerts at such seasons may be stereotyped.

MR. WILSON'S ENTERTAINMENTS. The Music Hall, in Store-street, was crowded on Monday last, and the songs were rapturously applauded, many of them being encored. A meeting had been held at the London Tavern, to raise a sub-cription, to present a testimonial to Mr. Wilson, for the material labours in making known the beautiful melodies of his country, and rescuing many airs from oblivion.

CHIT-CHAT.

MR. Lover's Irish Entertainment and the Ethiopian Serenaders have been amongst the attractive musical items in the week.

The Morning Chronicle of Tuesday announced that the arrangements for a Second English Opera House, for the season 1847, had been definitively concluded, and that Persiani, the composer, and husband of the celebrated vocalist of that name, is to be the Director, under the control of some large capita ists. We learn, in confirmation of the above, that the agreement with the Covent-Garden proprietors has been ready to sign.

MR COSTA.—The reports in circulation of the large offers made to Costa by a foreign potentate are true, but we have reason to believe that the Philharmonic conductor has not as yet accepted them. He was offered the conductorship of the new Italian Opera, and of Drury Lane Theatre, but declined both appointments. It is to be hoped that the invaluable services of Mr. Costa will be secured for this country. By long residence and naturalisation, he is now an Englishman, and, after creating two of the greatest orchestras in the world, it would, indeed, be a loss to art in this country, if he were to leave his adopted land.

The return of Benedict Jewitt to the stage has been the talk of musical circles this week. Sontag is married and in Mount Rosal, the diplomatist and his financial embarrassments, it is rumoured, have induced Sontag to sing again. Malibran Devrient was to retire on a pension, but, by Royal desire, she will remain on the stage for another year.

Amongst the engagements made by Jullien, for his Promenade Concerts, in June, is that of Persiani.

MLLE. Fanny (Miss Edwards), formerly of Her Majesty's Theatre, is now singing at Marseilles, in the Italian Company She made her début in La Cenerentola, and her extensive compass was admired, although nothing is mentioned about her style and intonation. Bessa, the buffo, is there, and Duprez, a tenor, have made a successful début at the Parisian Académie Royale. Mermet's "Roi David," was to be performed immediately after Carlotta Grisi's departure for Drury Lane Theatre, and Flotow's "Forestier" was in rehearsal. On the violinist, Thalberg, and Emile Prudent, were the "latest lions," of the French provinces. The writer of William Fry, an American composer in Paris, is much puffed in the speculative organ which patronised Dwight.

We must postpone, until next week, our notice of Mr. John Parry's annual concert, given last night at the Hanover-square Rooms. Mr. L. Gamitter's last lecture on Ecclesiastical Music, was delivered on Thursday evening. This morning is the Philharmonic rehearsal. On Monday morning, Brizz.'s concert and rehearsal of Handel's "Messiah," for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians. In the evening, the sixth Philharmonic concert. On Tuesday afternoon, the fifth meeting of the Musical Union; and in the evening Miss Hawes's annual concert. On Wednesday evening the "Messiah," at the Hanover square Rooms, and Herr Hausman's soirée at Mortimer-street. On Thursday morning, Madame Pleyell's second pianoforte recital, at the Hanover-square Rooms; and in the evening, Miss Birch's concert, and that of Ellis Roberts, the Welsh harpist. On Friday morning, Madame Dulcken's grand concert, and in the evening, "Judas Maccabeus," at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society. On Saturday morning, Mrs. A. Shaw's farewell concert

THE COLOSSEUM.

This fascinating resort, with fine weather, and reduced prices of admission, continues to be well attended; a circumstance which will, doubtless, be extended to this Establishment during the Whitsun Holidays. The effects of the Day Exhibition, both natural and artificial, are peculiarly heightened by bright weather; and the Illumination at Midnight receives undiminished admiration, as the most perfect illusion of its cause.

PHOTOGRAPHY. The recent improvements made by Mr Beard in his magical department of science, certainly place it beyond comparison with other methods of taking portraits. The glaring effect which many complained of is now entirely obviated, and the grenade of Mr. Beard's portraits now presents, in colouring, the appearance of a most exquisitely finished miniature painting, with an expression and effect which art can never hope to attain

RAPID INCREASE OF MANCHESTER. From a report read by Alderman Ivay, at a recent meeting of the Manchester Town Council, it appears that since the census was taken in 1841, there has been a clear addition of 59,770 souls to the population of the borough, being more than the increase from 1831 to 1841, which was 53,373. The entire population is now reckoned at 295,277.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

The musical event of the week at this theatre has been the revival of "Il Matrimonio Segreto." For upwards of fifty years this opera has held its ground in the repertoire of every great lyrical stage of the first rank, and as an opera buffa, and since the days of Rossini has had but one competitor, "Il Barbiere." It would be the task of all points to determine which is best. Let us, however, see what "Il Matrimonio Segreto" is.

It is well known that Cimarosa held the opinion that one of the best tests of a good opera was when, after a few rehearsals, the mechanics and assemblers-in-general about the theatre were heard humming snatches of its melodies. The great master thus showed a true comprehension of the scope and essential qualifications of dramatic music, and its benefit to mankind at large; and he thought, justly, by the power of delicious melody, and involved, that it could not reach the feelings through the ears of the ordinary spectator, was to disregard the kind dispensation which made becomes so powerful a diversion to the sorrows and cares of existence. Cimarosa felt at the same time that it should be the object of all recreation to exalt our feelings or raise our intellectuality, and thus we find that in the "Matrimonio Segreto," with the assistance of sparkling airs of sportive and joyous character, he combined passages of the grandest character. For example, all idea of mere pettiness disappears, and the depth and breadth of the composer's genius shows itself, in the "Udite tutti che splancichi," or whatever the words may be, by the power of the Orchestra, Recitativo, or whether he begins stuttering with a few, and then hurls forth the threat in a passage which the "se fiato in corpo avete," and then hurls forth his threat in a passage which rises and falls with the impetuosity of a torrent. There is even a certain grandeur in the celebrated laughing and mocking of the two women; the "Ve" gocena, Vergenes!" of the Anni has an electrical effect. So much for the scene, the singers who execute it, it is well nigh impossible to do justice to their merits. Their names alone form an eulogy of the most laudable kind. Grisi, as Carolina, with Castellan and Sanchioli—three prime donne, each, in their peculiar styles, unsurpassed.

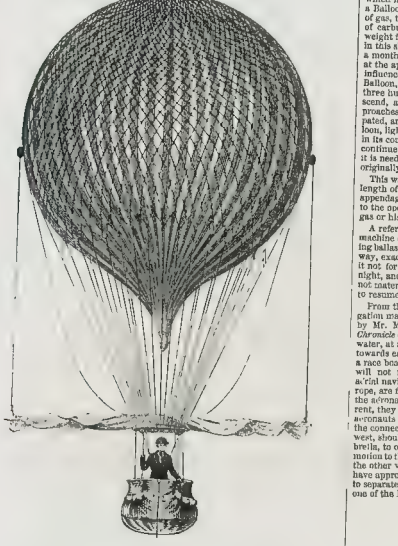
Costa, renowned from her independent, has, during the past week, successfully charmed the ballet votaries in the "Le Tyrandrie," and "Alcina," whilst her fair composer, Lucile Grahn, is it to compensate for the inevitable disturbance that took place last week in her grand pas de deux, has been the subject of more enthusiastic ovations than ever, as if the more fully to serve them, her pas have been marked by more than ordinary variety and she has conquered difficulties in the laws of gravitation which might well puzzle a savant.

The week before Whitsuntide is not often remarkable for any novelty in the theatrical world, and, this year, it is all encroaching topic of the Derby has not allowed the public to think much on dramatic affairs.

The only subject calling for remark has been a one act farce by Mr. Mildenhall, produced at the Lyceum on Monday evening, and entitled "Mister and I." The plot is exceedingly slender, but the author has supplied bustle and espièglerie in it to keep the audience in high good humour and laughter during its progress, and, in consequence, it was entirely successful. The scene is laid in Ireland, but the cast of characters comprises four of all nations. There is an Englishman (Mr. F. Mathews), an Irishman (Mr. Wigan), a German (Mr. Tilmer), an Italian (Mr. Leigh Murray), and three women also—a somnambulist-seller and some Kinloch), a Frenchwoman (Miss Forster), and a Yankee (Mrs. Wigan, an. Mr. Meadows, assuming the characters of the Italian, German, and French women—the two latter, however, being disguised as men—and while these carry who have come to be teachers and governess in the family, and while these carry long on the deception, mostly in their original, and talking them actually down The idea is something like that of "The Irish Tutor," out in this farce is more elaborately carried out. The piece has evidently been written for the cast of the sequence, it was entirely successful. The piece

IMPROVEMENTS IN AEROSTATION.

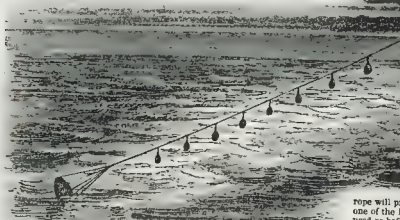
Now that the season for making Aërial Ascents has commenced, the following details of some ingenious improvements in this interesting art will, doubtless, be acceptable to our readers.



BALLOON, WITH SAIL FURLED.

The Engravings represent a series of apparatus by which Mr. Charles Green, the aëronaut—the conductor of upwards of 300 excursions through the realms of air—calculates on making some advance towards the steering of a Balloon, and which he designates his "Compensating and Deviating Appendages." For crossing the sea or exploring unknown regions or countries, they offer great advantages.

In the first place, Mr. Green proposes to adjust a sail to his Balloon, as represented in our Engravings, in which it is shown both furled and unfurled. The difficulty, never yet overcome, of getting a fulcrum for the steersman to work upon, and without which all attempts at steering an aëronaut machine must be failures, Mr Green meets by the adoption of the guide-line, as he calls a rope about 1000 feet long, composed of caoutchouc and hemp, in such proportions as to be specifically lighter than sea-water. This rope passes through a pulley fixed to the hoop from which the car is suspended, and communicates with a windlass in the car. To the lower extremity of the rope is a strong vessel, which, immersed in the water, will operate as a drag, retard the speed of the Balloon, and thus give the power of working the sail. At certain distances along the rope, vessels containing floating ballast are attached. Two short ropes are likewise fixed to the hoop, that branch off to the Guide Rope, by the aid of which, and the windlass, the sail may with the greatest ease be set at any angle to receive the passing wind, and the Balloon will deviate more or less from the course of the wind, in proportion to the deviations of the sail and the resistance offered by the water-drag, which resistance may be in some degree controlled by depositing more or less of the line and ballast on the water. The small check in speed caused by the drag will be more than counterbalanced by the facilities it affords the aëronaut for proceeding in a direct line—for the uncontrolled course of a balloon is not direct, but serpentine—and likewise in availing himself of the strongest current within the range of the guide-rope, in lieu of being compelled to make a series of ascents and descents, as in the ordinary practice of the art. The reason of being obliged so to do is explained in a subsequent part of this article.



GUIDE ROPE AND WATER DRAG.

Hitherto, our remarks have applied only to the navigating of a Balloon across the sea. By substituting a heavy wire rope in lieu of the water-drag and floating ballast, the aëronaut may, with a Balloon of sufficient capacity, sail over the most extensive unexplored regions; and, if accompanied by a military draughtsman, obtain sketches of the most important features with the greatest facility. The more variable the wind for such an expedition, the better. As the Balloon must ever be in advance of the guide-line, a comparison of the two objects by means of the compass, will at all times indicate the direction of its course. To remove the doubts of those who may think the rope liable to get entangled, and fixed in trees or buildings, it is as well to state that it was used with entire success throughout the progress by Balloon from London to Nassau.

When we consider that the aëronaut is incapable of causing his Balloon, in its ordinary state, to deviate even a single yard from the direct course of the wind, and that a deviation of a single yard in the early part of his voyage may make all the difference between his gaining or missing the point at which he wishes to alight, we shall see reason to admit the importance of being able to effect a deviation, however slight. In a long voyage, such as one across the Atlantic, the gain would be strikingly displayed. Assuming the distance from New York to England to be 4000 miles, a deviation of only one degree at the outset would yield a latitude of 80 miles between the points within which the aëronaut would be able to choose his place of descent.

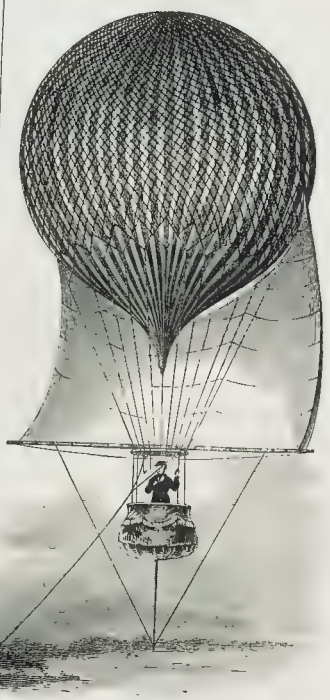
For the information of those who may not have turned their attention to the subject, it may be well to point out the principal obstacles the aëronaut has to contend with, as the doing so may lead to a more accurate judgment of the efficacy of the means proposed to neutralize their influence. These obstacles naturally divide themselves into two classes, namely, those which regard the powers of the Balloon throughout the period for which its services are required, and those which arise from the difficulty of securing the proper direction of its course. The reader is, probably, not unaware that, apart from the leakages of the Balloon, a variety of circumstances attends its progress through the air, by which, in ordinary cases, its power is gradually impaired, and ultimately overcome. One of the most formidable, is the difficulty of retaining the same elevation in the atmosphere, and thereby avoiding those fluctuations in the level of its course by which it is subjected to the alternate loss of gas by expansion, and consequent discharge of ballast in order to obtain an equivalent reduction of weight. The extent to which this condition of the art, exercised in the usual mode, is capable of operating, will be more readily appreciated when we observe that, at an elevation of three thousand feet, the density of the atmosphere is nearly one-tenth less than at the earth's surface. The gas, therefore, expanding as it ascends, occupies, at that altitude, one-tenth more space than under its original pressure. A Balloon, consequently, if fully inflated at the time of its quitting the earth, must, ere it attains that elevation, part with one-tenth of its contents; and this, too, without taking into account any unfavourable change in the temperature, which may probably attend the Balloon's transit into the higher atmosphere. To a Balloon of the capacity of the Nassau, which contains nearly 80,000 cubic feet of gas, this loss would amount to 8000 feet. Now the average sustaining power of carburetted hydrogen (coal gas) which Mr. Green employs, is about 60lbs. weight for every 1000 cubic feet. Consequently, the loss of power experienced in this slight ascent would be equal to 320lbs., much more than would be lost in a month by leakage from a good Balloon kept floating near the earth. Again, at the approach of night, or in its passage through clouds of vapour or under the influence of a shower of rain, a large quantity of moisture is absorbed by the Balloon, the netting and its appendages, frequently to the extent of two or three hundred weight, requiring, as a counterbalance, or the Balloon would descend, a discharge of ballast of corresponding amount. As the morning approaches, or the influence of increasing heat begins to act, this moisture is dissipated, and, there being no means of recovering the discharged ballast, the Balloon, lightened of its temporary incumbrance, rapidly ascends, the gas expanding in its course and rendering its further liberation necessary. These alternations continue to operate more or less frequently, at least once in every 24 hours, and, it is needless to add, must soon put an end to the power of the Balloon, however originally great.

This waste forms the chief obstacle to the continuance of aërial voyages for any length of time; but, by the adoption of the guide-rope, and its compensating appendages, Mr Green has contrived to accommodate the weight of his Balloon to the operations of the weather and atmosphere, without exhausting either his gas or his ballast.

A reference to the Engravings will make the process easily intelligible. As the machine descends, from any of the foregoing causes, a portion of the rope and floating ballast is deposited in the sea, thus lightening the Balloon of its weight in one way, exactly in the proportion in which it would be acquiring it in another, were it not for the expedient. The required elevation is thus preserved during the night, and the change of temperature consequent on the approaching day does not materially alter it, as the Balloon, in its renovated efforts to arise, has again to resume the weight of the rope and its appendages.

From the ease with which the sails may be shifted to any position, aërial navigation may be effected with two Balloons, on the principle of warping proposed by Mr. Mac Sweeny, of Cork, and published by that gentleman in the Cork Chronicle of Sept., 21, 1825, as follows:—"When two boats are floating on the water, at a distance from each other, but connected by a long rope, they move towards each other when the rope is pulled in one of the boats. Now, if one be a race boat, and the other broad, and badly adapted for sailing, this latter one will not move as rapidly as the race boat. Let us apply this principle to aërial navigation, and suppose two balloons, having their cars connected by a long rope, are floating with the wind at the same altitude towards the north, and when the aëronauts wish to deviate in some degree to the west from the line of the current, they may proceed thus:—If one Balloon be at the west side of the other, the aëronauts to the east should endeavour to impel towards the west, by pulling the connecting rope, and by working of oars or fins; while those in the car to the west, should present an extended flat or concave surface of silk, such as an open umbrella, to offer as much resistance as possible to the air,* and thus to check their motion to the east the result will be that one Balloon will move to the west more than the other will move to the east, on their approaching each other. When they have approached within a certain distance, and when it is desirable to cause them to separate as far as the connecting rope will admit, this may be effected by causing one of the Balloons to make a series of ascents and descents, and the connecting rope will prevent the Balloons from being hurried away from each other. When one of the Balloons has got to the west of the other, the connecting rope can be used as before, to fix the eastern one towards the west. The motion of the quick moving Balloon would be to the west in a calm, but, as a south wind is supposed to blow, motion will be in the diagonal of the parallelogram of the force of the wind and of the force of the warping. The slow Balloon can ascend to avoid the other when it approaches. The quick one will extend the connecting rope to allow warping to be repeated. Thus we make two Balloons approach with unequal velocities, and to pass and change sides, and make each in turn the means of warping the other. The Balloon that ascended can descend to its former level, and warping can be repeated. When the quick or slow moving Balloon is mentioned, it is the lateral motion that is to be understood. Both may be moving rapidly with the current, though in the lateral motion one can be made to move more quickly than the other."

* No apparatus can effect this object so well as the silk sails represented in the Engraving; as, by a turn of the windlass, they may be set at the best angle either to offer resistance, or to glide off in a lateral direction.



BALLOON, WITH SAIL UNFURLED.

PROPOSED VISIT OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE FRENCH TO THIS COUNTRY.—We have reason to believe that their Majesties the King and Queen of the French, attended by some of the junior branches of the Royal family, contemplate paying a visit to her Majesty, in London, about the latter end of June or early in July.

DRAGONETTI'S WILL.—Dragonetti possessed a choice collection of musical instruments, the most valuable of which he has very distinctively bequeathed by his will, made only ten days before his death. He begs the liberty of requesting his Royal Highness Prince Albert to condescend to accept of his large violoncello, on which he played in the presence of his Royal Highness last year at the Concert of Ancient Music: it formerly belonged to the celebrated Signor Bartleman. To the Duke of Leinster a very large double bass, kept at his Lordship's mansion. His double bass, by Amati, he has left to Mr. Appleby. His celebrated double bass, being the instrument on which he played to him at public concerts and at some Church of St. Mark, at Venice. The violin used by Paganini he leaves to Miss Teresa Milanollo, the violinist, and a violin to her sister Maria. To the three daughters of Dr. Billing, physician, a guitar each. The double bass in the Italian Opera, Drury-lane Theatre, and all other, his first-rate instruments, consisting of double bass, violoncello, tenor, guitars, bassoons, French horns, and other instruments, to the number of sixty or more, he has bequeathed separately to professors, and others of his friends and colleagues of the Opera orchestra; and such as he may not have specifically disposed of, he leaves to Mrs. Keunedy, of Oxford-street, violoncello and musical instrument maker. To the British Museum he bequeaths all scores of ancient operas, and to the Italian Opera all scores of modern operas and farces since 1800. His instrumental music he leaves to Mr George Pigott; and all his vocal music, and compositions, unbound, to Mr. V. Novello. To the Duke of Leinster he has also bequeathed all the pictures, prints, and engravings, the furniture in his drawing-room, and expresses a wish that his Grace will place them in some one room in his town-house, and will forward twenty-four views in Venice to his seat in Ireland. To the Duchess, a valuable emerald set with brilliants. To Mr. Heath, one of his executors, a gold snuff-box, and to Mrs. Heath, a bracelet of fine chains, and one to her daughter. To Count Carlo Papoli he leaves all the books in his library, and his best paintings, and to make such selection from the pictures as he pleases. To the Philharmonic Academy of Cecilia, at Rome, he leaves an annuity of £20. His property was valued for Government duty at £5,000. The residue he directs to be held in trust for the purpose of inquiring whether there are any of his relations in blood living, to whom the same can be distributed according to law: otherwise he leaves it to the poor of the parishes of St. Mark and St. Simeon the Great, in Venice.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

KENILWORTH PRIORY.

The visitor to Kenilworth, with its romantic Castle full in view, might readily overlook the modest edifice lying a little to the left as he issues from the village, now occupied as an ox-stall: this, together with its ruined gate-house and a few other fragments, is all that remains of the Monastery founded, in the reign of King Henry the First, by Geoffri de Clinton, for canons regular of the Augustine order. Judging by the extensive traces of foundations, the buildings composing this Monastery must have extended over a wide space, and must have been a magnificent appurtenance to the Castle, the feudal and the ecclesiastical edifices being both beholden to the same founder. An interesting portion of the Monastery was brought to light not long since by the sexton while digging a grave; and, being wholly cleared, it was found to be the base of the Chapter House. Its form is octagonal, with buttresses. The burial-place of the Priors was discovered at the same time, containing stone slabs, which exhibit a curious variety of sculptured crosses in low relief. The Gate House is chiefly in the early pointed style, with subsequent additions of about two centuries later, within, is a very primitive arch, leading to a chamber adjoining the Chapel: it is pointed, and, without a key-stone, most unscientifically composed. The Chapel itself has a Norman basement, probably of the original foundation. In the upper part are two double windows of a rare structure: windows of a similar kind were visible in the Monastery of Black Friars—a venerable edifice in Newcastle-on-Tyne, which is said to have witnessed the homage rendered by Baliol of Scotland to King Edward I.

The interior of the Chapel has been utterly ruined by its present destination, the walls being encumbered with rough timber, and the floor concealed by accumulated litter. The roof has been richly decorated with bosses and sculptured heads, but it is partly demolished, and partly concealed by the innovations of the feeder of fat oxen. Some of the details of this roof lie within the Gate House, and are worthy of observation.

KENILWORTH PRIORY.

The Parish Church, adjacent to the Priory, contains a remarkably sweet chime of bells, one of which originally belonged to the Monastery. The ancient custom of duly chiming the matins and curfew is still observed here; and the visitor sojourning at the hostel of worthy Master Miles, mine host of the Castle, may find such an interruption of his slumbers not unpleasant at the dawn of a summer morning; especially if such a reminiscence of the piety of early times should breed within him a train of thought in unison therewith—which, subsiding into reverie, will mingle with the dreams of another indulgence of an hour or so.

HERR KELLERMANN.

Christian Laurentz Kellermann, the celebrated Violoncellist, was born on the 27th January, 1816, in Randers, a small town in Denmark. He did not receive in his youth a musical education, as his father intended him for a merchant. He left Denmark in his eighth year to go to Vienna, where business required the presence of his relations. By mere chance, he was thrown into the musical world. His grandfather, who was a great amateur of the violoncello, had expressed a wish before his death, that one of his grandchildren should learn to play on his favourite instrument. This induced Kellermann's father to buy him a small violoncello for learning; in which he made such rapid progress, that he played in public concerts at Vienna in his thirteenth year; and in the following one he was admitted in the Conservatoire of Music, where he studied during four years, under the direction of Professor Joseph Merk. After he left the Conservatoire, he filled the situation of first violoncellist in different theatres until 1837, when he left Vienna to start on a professional tour. He started at Pesth, where he gave many concerts with the greatest success: from thence he visited the largest cities of the South of Germany. He then returned to Denmark, after an absence of twelve years, where he gave a series of brilliant concerts; he also met with a most flattering reception at Court, and was appointed principal private Violoncellist to his Majesty. On his passage through Sweden and Norway, he was received with such enthusiasm that the tickets for his concerts were all taken many days before hand. He subsequently obtained a permanent lucrative appointment at the Court of Denmark. His last journey through the north of Germany and Holland was a series of the most brilliant receptions.

HERR KELLERMANN.

Herr Kellermann arrived in London last month, and first appeared at Mr. Blewett's Morning Concert, where his performances was received with great enthusiasm. He has since played at several other Concerts, with equal success.

VERDI.

We offer to our readers, in the present number, a portrait of the great star o the musical world at this day—Guiseppe Verdi—on whose productions the fate of lyrical art would now seem to depend, as the great maestro whose works for the last thirty years have had possession of the Italian lyrical stage. Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, are precluded from any longer wielding the pen for our profit -one by advance of years and exhaustion of mind, the other by premature death, and the third, alas! by a still more terrible fate—loss of reason. And amongst the young composers whose works are being daily produced in Italy, there is not one as yet that gives promise of future fame.

SIGNOR VERDI.

The works of Verdi are now well known and duly appreciated in England; for, though we have as yet heard but three operas of this great composer, fragments of most of his other works have found their way hither, and have been admired in the drawing-room or the concert room. Yet is his music eminently dramatic.

Never was a career so plainly marked out for any child of genius as that of Verdi; had he been any other than a lyrical composer, he would indeed have mistaken his vocation.

Verdi was born in an insignificant village of Lombardy, called Busseto. His family was poor, and unable to defray the expenses of a musical education for the young Guiseppe, who derived his first ideas on the subject from the organist of the village church. He soon found, however, friends, and, what is more, appreciators of the extraordinary talent he early manifested; and, by the intervention of these he was at length sent to Milan.

In an unfortunate season, at the "Scala" (1839), he brought out his first opera, "Oberto di San Bonifacio," a work which, though unequal in its parts, and displaying many of the faults of a young composer, nevertheless contained portions of extraordinary merit. But the young, unknown, and almost unfriended composer was not likely to meet a better fate than all the other writers, whose works that year had met with defeat at "La Scala;" for, as we have said, it was one o those seasons of continuous misfortune of which this theatre of late has had so many.

The work was, for a time, buried in oblivion, but at length exhumed by the kindness of a zealous friend of Verdi, named Pasetti in Marini. Mrs. Shaw, Signor Salvi, and the great basso Marini, all appeared in this opera, which created, on this, its second appearance, such a fanatismo as can only be witnessed in Italy. An opera buffa was the next work undertaken by our composer; but, during its composition, he lost his beloved wife, and, certainly, after that, his thoughts tended rather to the serio than the buffo. This work, however, has been reproduced lately at Venice, with a success that would not have been expected, considering the circumstances under which it was written. But Verdi's day of triumph was approaching. "Nabucco," known and admired in this country as "Nino," created a degree of enthusiasm extraordinary even in Italy. It was performed sixty times running, and, on each occasion, the actors had to retrace their steps from twenty to thirty times before the curtain, after the fashion of Italian theatres. "I Lombardi," the next work brought out, perhaps, enjoyed still greater triumph, on account of the brilliant talent of Frezzolini, whose style of singing is admirably adapted to do justice to the works of Verdi's school. "Ernani" is another of his most popular compositions. Then followed "Giovanna d'Arco," also performed in by Frezzolini, a magnificent work, and brilliantly successful, "Alzira," and "I Due Foscari;" the latter hardly equal to those we have named. The last work of the great maestro is "Attila," a highly dramatic and most original composition, with a degree of local colouring and effectiveness quite new to the lyrical stage. This opera, brought out at Venice with Loewe Gusseo Marini and Constantini, enjoys that favour which the works of this master always command amongst his countrymen. The enthusiastic appreciation in Italy of a composer of Verdi's stamp would appear strange to those who have imagined Italian musical taste to be represented by the sickly, sentimental compositions until lately classed as "Italian music," par excellence; but Verdi's works show that the "fatherland of song" has newer and more vigorous resources, and may give brilliant promise for the future.

We have only to add that our composer is thirty years of age, though looking much older. The traces of care and illness, as well as o. deep thought, are visible on his countenance. He lives quiet and retired; his active mind, however, is always employed, and he devotes a large portion of time to his musical and literary studies.

THE HIGHLAND DWARFS.

HIGHLAND DWARFS.

THESE three "wee" personages, accompanied by Mr. Mackenzie, had the honour of performing their national dances and songs, on Thursday evening (the 21st inst.), at Buckingham Palace, in the presence of the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, and a select circle. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to express her approbation of the performances.

The three Highland Dwarfs are named Mackinlay, and are natives of the county of Ross; they were born in the parish of Lochcarron, and their father was a herd upon the hills of the district. The eldest Dwarf, Finlay (the central figure in the Engraving), is 23 years old, 45 inches high, and weighs 5 stone 11 lb. To the left is John, 21 years old, 44 inches high, and 5 stone 3 lb. weight; and, to the right, is Mary, 19 years of age, 44 inches in height, and 5 stone 10 lb. weight. The lads, in their native country, were employed in herding, collecting eggs, &c.; and the girl in knitting, sewing, &c. They wear the full dress of the clan of Ross—a tartan of dark green, and white and red narrow stripes; and the young men bear broadswords and steel targets. They give their very amusing performances daily, at the Cosmorama Rooms, in Regent-street.

PRINCESS' THEATRE.

THE new play of "The King of the Commons," at this theatre, continues to increase in favour at each representation. We have engraved the last scene, in which King James, having brought about the union of Madeleine and Malcolm Young, gives the maiden to the young priest. The scene is the Audience-Room of Holyrood Palace; and the crowd of Spectators are Gentlemen of the Court, Yeomen of the Guard, &c. The plot of the piece was given fully in our Journal of last week.

SCENE FROM THE NEW PLAY OF "THE KING OF THE COMMONS," AT THE [illegible] THEATRE.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY, AND THE YOUNG PRINCESS', MAY 25.

Lov'd Sov'reign of the Sister Isles,
Whose sceptre sways earth's fairest smiles
Whose camp has won true glory's smiles—
Whose first hails freedom at its helm!
Lady! around thy "hearted throne"
Britons their loyal homage pay;
Feeling thy happiness their own,
They greet thy New-born's natal day.

Another rosebud on the tree
Of Royal Brunswick's honour'd line:
Honour's eternally may be
That dynasty, whose path divine
Leads to the fane of public good—
Shunning Ambition's fatal spot,
Too often gain'd through British blood,
And scrfage of a nation's soil!

Una of Reality! who quitest
With love a lion-hearted land!
'Tis not thy rule, although the widest
That ever fell to Queen's command—

"The not so much thy sceptre's splendour
We love and laud as thine own fame—
The wife and mother, fond and tender;
All glad can hallow each dear name.

And welcome to the little stranger,
(Most homely words, but heartful still)
That cometh when no cloud of danger
Hangs o'er Victoria's dearest ill.
The gorgeous East expects our power,
And Justice carbs the lawless
" Kresa :"*

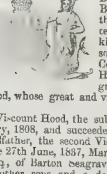
Columbia past her evil hour—
Holds out the olive branch of Peace.

May every year bring forth its blossom,
Most worthy of the parent stem:
Worthy of Britain's patriot bosom,
And of the world's first diadem.
Honoured, beloved (her virtue's meed),
Blest in her heart's fond ties,
May England's Queen with rapture read
Her eulogy in England's eyes.

* The Indian dagger. † "And read a nation's history in its eyes."—Grey.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

VISCOUNT HOOD.



Samuel Hood, Viscount Hood of Whitley, in the county of Warwick, Baron Hood in the Peerage of Great Britain, and a Baronet, was the son of the Hon Francis Wheler Hood, a Lieutenant-Colonel in the army, who was killed on the heights of Aire, in the south of France, on the 2nd March, 1814. Colonel Hood was himself the son of Henry, second Viscount Hood, and grandson of the eminent Admiral, Sir Samuel Hood, whose great and victorious deeds led to his elevation to the peerage.

Samuel, Viscount Hood, the subject of this notice, was born on the 10th January, 1808, and succeeded as third Viscount up on the decease of his grandfather, the second Viscount, the 25th January, 1836. He married, the 27th of June, 1837, Mary Isabella, daughter of the late Rev. Robert Tubitts, Esq., of Barton seagrave, in Northamptonshire, and has left, besi e two other sons and a daughter, an eldest son and successor, Francis Wheler, born the 4th July, 1838, now fourth Viscount Hood. The late Viscount died on the 8th instant, in the thirty-ninth year of his age.

THE DOWAGER LADY ROTHES.

Charlotte Julia, Dowager Countess of Rothes, was the dau ghter of Colonel John Campbell, of Dunoon, and the second wife of George Wi lliam, tenth Earl of Rothes, to whom she was married on the 21st August, 1799. Her Ladyship had one daughter, who is now the widow of Major Augustus Wathen. The Dowager Countess died on the 21st instant.

FRANCIS HILDYARD, ESQ.

This gentleman, whose melancholy death was occasioned by a fall from his horse, on Thursday, the 21st instant, was the seventh son of the Rev. William Hildyard, Rector of Winestead, and was born in 1806. Mr. Hildyard, after passing through a university education, was called to the bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple, the 4th May, 1838. He first practised upon the Home Circuit, but he had lately joined the Northern Bar. His brothers, John Hildyard, Recorder of Stamford, Grantham, and Leicester, and Robert Charles Hildyard, are both distinguished members of the same profession. Mr. Francis Hildyard met his death while riding in St. James's-park, towards Constitution Hill. His horse suddenly shied, and, whilst the unfortunate gentleman was endeavouring to pull up the reins, his foot slipped out of the right stirrup, and, losing his balan e, he hung on for some time by the left leg, and then fell. He received a concussion of the brain, and never rallied afterwards. Being taken to his chambers, in Inner Temple-lane, he died there on the following Friday, at one o'clock. Mr Hildyard, though not a good horseman, was passionately fond of equestrian exercise, and, when in town, was in the daily habit of riding round the parks. He had fallen twice before from the horse which ultimately killed him.

The family of Hildyard, termed by Camden, a Knightly family, is one of the oldest in the realm, and deduces its pedigree through a long line of distinguished ancestors, who, in the reign of Henry VIII., became possessed of the lands of Winestead, in the County of York, and have since been settled there. Mr. William Hildyard, the late father of the gentleman whose death we here relate, married Catherine, third daughter of Isle Grant, Esq., of Ruckland, in Lincolnshire, and by her has had issue ten sons: of the nine now survivi g, six are beneficed clergymen; two, barristers; and one, a merchant at Rio de Janeiro.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT on THURSDAY NEXT, JUNE 4th, 1846, when will be performed, for the last time this season, DON GIOVANNI. Donna Anna, Madame Grisi; Louisa Rivière, Middle Sarabbini; Zerlina, Madame Castellan; Don Giovanni, Mr. Formes; Leporello, Sig. Lablache; Masetto, Sig. F. Lablache; Il Commendatore, Sig. Zoto; Don Ottavio, Sig. Mario. With various Entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, comprising the Talent of Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Julie Taglioni, Mdlles. Mogador, Desplaces, Cesson and Mdlle. Josephine Gosselin. M. Guerra, M. D'Antin, and M. Perrot. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'Clock.

THE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN. M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS D'ETE (FOR ONE MONTH ONLY) M. Jullien has the honor to announce that, under cover of the success of his Winter series of Concerts and flattered by the kind and liberal patronage now so generously extended to him, he has resolved to establish an ORGANISING AND PERMANENT BAND, which will form the nucleus of the Entertainments will be precisely the same as those so recently performed by Her Majesty's Command, and are eulogised by Her Majesty's Journals in terms so flattering as to render such eulogy unnecessary. At Two o'Clock.—Mr. Batty begs to announce that he has entered into an engagement with the celebrated General Tom Thumb, who will appear in the Drama of HOP O MY THUMB, at this Theatre, on MONDAY, June 8th, and during the Week.—Box-office open from Ten o'Clock.

KELLERMAN, BATTU, KUSMAN, and ROUSSELOT. The Last Concert but One of the Season will be given at the Hanover-square Rooms, on MONDAY, JUNE 15, in the GREAT CONCERT ROOM of her MAJESTY'S THEATRE, when all the most distinguished artistes both vocal and instrumental, now in London, will, for the first time, appear together on the same platform. Tickets, to be specially dedicated at all the principal Music and music-sellers, and of M. BENEDICT, 9, Manchester-square.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The Forty Second ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5 PALL-MALL EAST, each day, from Nine till Dusk.—Admission, One Shilling. J. W. WRIGHT, Sec.

WHITSUN HOLIDAYS.

GENERAL TOM THUMB will continue his LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL, previous to his final departure to America.—The little General will appear every day and Evening in all the Costumes and Performances in which he had the honour of appearing three times before her Majesty, and at all the principal Courts of Europe. Hours of exhibition, from Half-past Twelve to Two, Half-past Three to Five, and Half past Seven to Nine o'Clock. Admission, 1s. Children under ten years of age, Half-price.—All Tickets that have been issued will be received, notwithstanding their dates.—After Nine o'clock each evening, the General appears in his New Car by the City of London Theatre, Bishopsgate-street.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the SIXTH CONCERT will take place TOMORROW EVENING, when will be performed, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, Beethoven's in A, Lucas's Overture to The Hypocrite, &c. Both vocal Pieces by Mozart. Sir John M. Gore Booth, Bart., and Lucas. Pantalia, Oboe, Mr. A. Lavigne. Leader—Mr. Blagrove. Conductor—Mr. Costa. Single Tickets, One Guinea; and Double Tickets, £1 10s., to be had at the Music Warehouse of Messrs. Addison and Hodson, 210, Regent-street.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY EVENING NEXT, June 5, will take place a PENTECOSTAL PHANTASIE of Handel's Oratorio, JUDAS MACCABÆUS. Principal Vocal Performers—Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Rainforth, Mr. Sidney, Mr. Machin, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Band and Chorus will consist of above 300 performers. Tickets, 3s. each. Reserved Seats, 5s. each. Gallery 2s., for the Public Rehearsal, on Wednesday next. Tickets may be obtained of Mr. BOWLEY, 55, Charing Cross, Mr. RICE, 102, Strand, or of Mr. MITCHELL, 39 Charing Cross THOMAS BREWER, Hon. Sec.

COLOSSEUM.—LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE.—In consequence of many persons having been disappointed in not witnessing the additional atmospheric effects in the marvellous Panorama of London by Night, they will in future be repeated every half hour instead of every hour. Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five, and Eight till Half-past Ten. Holiday Prices continued

DAY EXHIBITION.—Panorama of London—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories—Aviary —Classic Ruins—Mont Blanc and Mountain Pass, &c. &c.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—London by Night—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories, and Flower Show, brilliantly illuminated—Interior Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Pass, represented by Moonlight.—Open from Ten till Half-past Five, and Half-past Seven till Half-past Ten.

WHITSUN HOLIDAYS.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Dr. RYAN'S NEW and Interesting LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY and PHILOSOPHY of DIVING, at Half-past Three Daily, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Eight o'Clock. Professor HACHENBERG'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments. Daily MACINTOSH'S ENGINE for CONDENSING GOLDEN'S PATENT ELECTRIC ENGINE for exceeding and descending Inclined Planes. FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY. the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, on an EXTRAORDINARY CUTTING MACHINE. In addition SCENES in the OREGON TERRITORY are up on the NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS PORTRA TS (unsurpassed since the GOVERNMENT and ARMY of LAHORE suggested by the OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The DAY HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects, &c. &c. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price

GO TO VAUXHALL ON MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 1ST.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES GRAND REGATTA This REGATTA will take place on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, the 2nd and 3rd days of JUNE, when the following Prize will be awarded for

The GRAND CHALLENGE CUP ..... Entrance £5 5s.
The LADIES' CHALLENGE CUP ..... Entrance £5 5s.
The STEWARDS' CHALLENGE CUP, for Gentlemen's Boats ..... Entrance £3 3s.
The DISTRICT CHALLENGE CUP ..... Entrance £1 1s.
The TOWN CHALLENGE CUP, for one-oared boats ..... Entrance 5s.
The SILVER WHERRIES (Cooper Medals), Presentation Prize, for Amateurs in Pleasure Boats. To cross the DIAMOND SCULLS (Presentation Prize), for Amateur Scullers. Entrance, £1 1s.
A SILVER WHERRY (Presented by Henley Amateur Scullers.
Silver Medals will be presented to the Winners of the Cups.
Entrances must be duly made with the Secretary, at Mrs. Wil bore's, Catherine Wheel Inn, Henley, on or before the 15th day of June next. JAMES NASH, Secretary

Now ready, Third Edition, price 3d., by post 4d

NARROW GAUGE SPEEDIER THAN BROAD GAUGE RAILWAYS, SAFER AND CHEAPER. By ROBERT S. MILLER, ESQ. London: W STEPHENSON, 12, and 13, Parliament-street; and all Booksellers.

TO CHESS PLAYERS.

THE CHESS PLAYERS' CHRONICLE for JUNE contains a Collection of Original Games, unrivalled in their beauty and variety. Any one who will be found the latest Games just published by St. AMANT, HOWITT, HAWKINS, SCHULTZ, &c. &c. Splendidly illustrated by the first Masters of the Day. In the Office of Price 1s. 6d. and of HURST, 37, King William-street, and of all respectable Booksellers in town and country.

EPSOM RACES. THE DERBY JUST OUT, PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE. THE COMING HOME. A COMIC PANORAMA DRAWN BY TIRCH Presented to the Public in a perfectly novel and unique style of elegance, and beautifully coloured Londen: ACKERMANN and Co., Strand. REYNOLDS and KERSHAW, 12, Bedford-row; WESTLEY 163, Strand. DORLING, Lisson, and all Booksellers

Just Published, price 6d.

FALLACIES OF THE BROAD GAUGE. MR. LUSH-INGTON'S ARGUMENTS in favour of the Broad Gauge and Breaks of Gauge refuted; being a Reply to the Remarks of a late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, on the Report of the Gauge Commissioners. A FEW FLOW OF INTO RAILWAY SOCIETIES. London: JOHN OLLIVIER, 59, Pall-mall.

In Weekly Nos. 3d.; Monthly Parts 1s. Quarterly Vols. 2s 6d., cloth, gilt, MOORE'S PICTORIAL LIBRARIANS.—I. SHAKESPEARE No. 20, May 30 Sonnets and Lover's Complaint. Part 3. 3rd Quarterly Volume. Vol. 3, containing Parts 9 to 12, Portraits of Shakespeare, and 2 Views of his Birthplace. 2s., cloth, gilt. Also, POEMS, 10 Double Numbers, 2s. Portraits, 2s 6d. cloth, gilt. II. BALLADIST, a Collection of Ballads. No. 39, May 30. Hermit of Warkworth. Part 9 and Quarterly Volume. Vol. 3. Portraits, 2s. 6d. cloth, gilt. London: HERBERT, Pater-noster-row.

In a few days, in One Vol. Imperial 8vo., Second Edition, Enlarged, 2s., cloth lettered, NATIONAL UNIFORMITY OF GAUGE. HISTORY AND PROPRIETY OF THE BROAD GAUGE SYSTEM ILLUSTRATED By the Evidence of the Railway Witnesses. By SAMUEL SYDNEY, Auth r of "Ireland a Free Port," &c. With a Map.

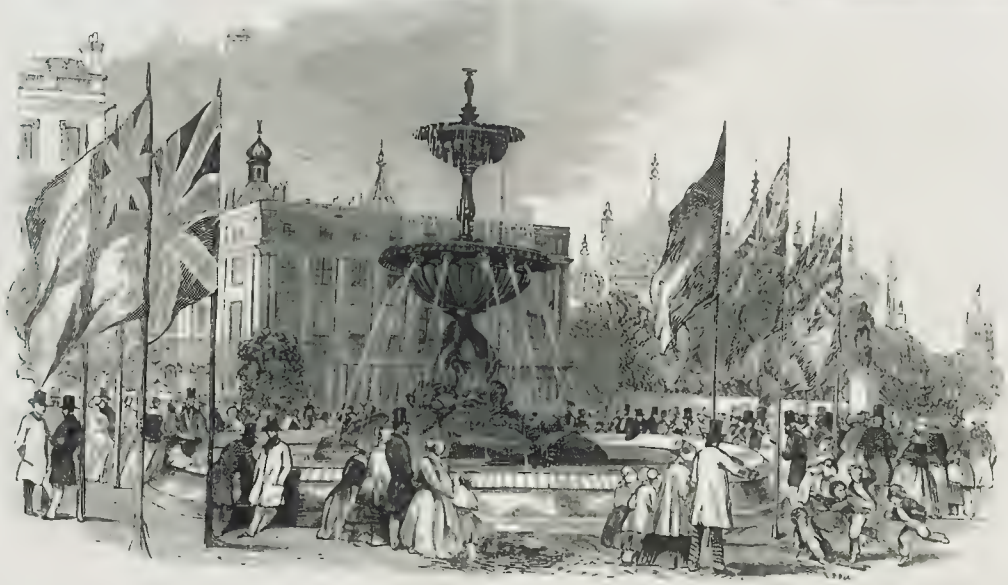
A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE GAUGE QUESTION.—The Modern form of Railways explained, by George Stephenson—Gauge of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway—Gauge from each other) required to render railways as fit as common roads—Quest on, Shall the Gauge be altered to Four Feet Eight Inches?—Gauge of the Great Western Railway—Gauge of Seven Feet Gauge—a Great Western Railway—Is here anything to expects seen it is to direct—Gauge of the Great Western Railway—Gauge of the Great Western Railway—Gauge of the Great Western Railway

PAPER HANGINGS.—30,000 Pieces of the Newest Designs in Paper Hangings to be sold at Twenty per Cent. less than the usual prices, including Satins, Flocks most Delicate and Oak Paper, Imi. Marbles and Granites, Red-room and Attic patterns in great variety.—85, Queen-street, Cheapside.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various construction and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded to any part of the country on application to WM. VOSEY and SON, Goswell-street, Wholesale Watch Manufacturers, 82, 87, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street, London.

PIANOFORTES.—The Cheapest House in England to buy those instruments is H. TOLKIEN'S, 26, King William-street, London-bridge, near the Monument. He manufactures his pianofortes himself, and can therefore warrant every instrument he supplies. A 5½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, for 22 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 28 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 30 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 35 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 40 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 45 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 50 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 55 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 60 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 65 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 70 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 75 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 80 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 85 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 90 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 95 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 100 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 105 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 110 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 115 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 120 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 125 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 130 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 135 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 140 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 145 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 150 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 155 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 160 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 165 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 170 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 175 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 180 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 185 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 190 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 195 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 200 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 205 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 210 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 215 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 220 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 225 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 230 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 235 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 240 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 245 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 250 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 255 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 260 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 265 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 270 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 275 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 280 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 285 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 290 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 295 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 300 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 305 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 310 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 315 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 320 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 325 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 330 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 335 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 340 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 345 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 350 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 355 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 360 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 365 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 370 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 375 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 380 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 385 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 390 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 395 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 400 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 405 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 410 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 415 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 420 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 425 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 430 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 435 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 440 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 445 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 450 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 455 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 460 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 465 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 470 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 475 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 480 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 485 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 490 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 495 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 500 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 505 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 510 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 515 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 520 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 525 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 530 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 535 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 540 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 545 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 550 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 555 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 560 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 565 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 570 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 575 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 580 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 585 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 590 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 595 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 600 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 605 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 610 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 615 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 620 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 625 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 630 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 635 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 640 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 645 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 650 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 655 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 660 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 665 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 670 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 675 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 680 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 685 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 690 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 695 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 700 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 705 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 710 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 715 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 720 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 725 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 730 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 735 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 740 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 745 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 750 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 755 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 760 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 765 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 770 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 775 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 780 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 785 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 790 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 795 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 800 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 805 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 810 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 815 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 820 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 825 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 830 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 835 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 840 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 845 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 850 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 855 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 860 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 865 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 870 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 875 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 880 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 885 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 890 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 895 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 900 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 905 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 910 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 915 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 920 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 925 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 930 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 935 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 940 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 945 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 950 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 955 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 960 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 965 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 970 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 975 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 980 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 985 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 990 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 995 guineas; a 6½ octave piano, in handsome rosewood case, with fine tone, for 1000 guineas.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Street Warehouse contains a large assortment of Fire-proof Safes and Cash Boxes, with Chubb's Detector Locks, Iron Doors and Shutters, Street Door Latches, Cash Boxes, Japanned Deed Boxes, Travelling Bags, Dressing Cases, Writing Desks, Tea Chests, Patent Keys, and Iron Bedsteads. Chubb's Locks, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's Locks, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Street Warehouse contains a large assortment of Fire-proof Safes and Cash Boxes, with Chubb's Detector Locks, Iron Doors and Shutters, Street Door Latches, Cash Boxes, Japanned Deed Boxes, Travelling Bags, Dressing Cases, Writing Desks, Tea Chests, Patent Keys, and Iron Bedsteads.



OPENING OF "THE VICTORIA FOUNTAIN," ON THE STEINE, BRIGHTON.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

painter seems to have a craving as instinctive and unaccountable as a turkey cock's antipathy to scarlet. Lawrence, though he exhibits nothing this year that approaches in unity and rich sobriety of effect to his portrait of Mr. Cunningham (we may be wrong in the name, but the picture was exhibited two years ago), has portraits of the Ven. Archdeacon Berners and his wife a happy, kindly, unpretending couple, who beam benevolently from the canvass, with as little stiffness or constraint as if they had been caught chatting with the painter, without the least notion of sitting for their likenesses. The colour may be a thought smuffy a sin easily fallen into in the effort after truth, richness, and recession combined. But the portrait deserves the highest praise for the highest merits a portrait can have—fidelity to nature, unforced ease of attitude, and reality or vitality of expression

There is a portrait of "Poor Duncan," painted by himself, wild and rather exaggerated, but possessing value as a work of art, independent of the melancholy interest which attaches to it as a memento of great promise unfulfilled, and enthusiasm prematurely nipped by death.

A "Portrait of a Lady," by Sant, strives after a combined effect of moonlight and lamp-light, in a bold, and, considering the difficulty, a tolerably successful attempt. But why choose so unusual a method of illuminating dress and features —half leaden, half lurid—unpleasant in effect however truthfully rendered? The same artist has "An Orphan Child" (273), very charming in attitude, and shewing a feeling for chiaro scuro, more legitimately indulged, or more happily, at least, than in his ambitious full-length.

We must not omit mention of a very sweet and unpretending picture, "Miss Gertrude Calmady," by Stonhouse, in which the artlessness of girlhood is given without any affectation, and with great charm of colour.

There is a production of extraordinary finish every wrinkle reproduced ("Portrait of Samuel Tuter, Esq., aged 84") by P. Corbett, very like in detail and showing an unnecessary expenditure of minute labour. Rossiter has failed in [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 214.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1846. [Sixpence. WITH SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

AMERICA AND MEXICO.

PEACE is again endangered on the other side the Atlantic; but it is one thing to contemplate war as a possibility, or even to talk of it as desirable for the purpose of exhibiting national prowess, and quite another matter to be actually plunged into it. It is one of a large class of human affairs that show brightest at a distance. Then the glitter hides all that is repulsive, all that comes out with such terrible distinctness on a nearer examination. The cost, present and prospective, begins then to take a definite shape; the merest glance into that vortex which draws down million after million of pounds, or dollars—as if gold and silver, the precious things of the earth, were mere "bubbles as the water hath"—is enough to give pause to the most quarrelsome of nations. We hope the examples of France and England will be viewed by younger nations rather as things to avoid than to imitate; both countries have incurred an enormous debt, to pay the interest of which the industry of all future generations is mortgaged, life being made more difficult to each individual; deep-rooted hatreds and jealousies, poorly balanced by memories of what are called national triumphs, remain to both, always active and always perilling that state of peace which the most moderate and enlightened men of each feel to be their truest advantage. One war poisons the hearts of men for ages. Next to lightly engaging in it, lightly to speak of it seems to us not only a national error, but almost a national crime.

Of this deplorable error it is impossible to acquit a large and influential section of the American people. War with England has, for a long time past, been spoken of as if it were a thing of the lightest and most trivial character; that cloud has blown over for the present, yet the mischief it has done in the commercial community can hardly be estimated. But the War party must, it seems, exhibit their disposition to quarrel in some direction, and at this moment the United States are engaged in hostilities with the Republic of Mexico.

If actual experience of how expensive war is, even on a small scale, should indispose the Americans to engage in it on a large one, the pending conflict may not be without its uses. The Northern Republic can gain nothing from it but an accession of Southern territory, which, while Texas is, as yet, unpeopled, would be but a superfluous appendage to her immense possessions. Future ages may see the Anglo-Saxon race ruling the dominions of the once haughty Spaniard; history has furnished events stranger and more improbable than future Jacksons and Polks sitting on the throne of the Montezumas; nay, we believe that the tendency of human events is in a direction that will lead the world to some such result. But the time is scarcely yet come. Degenerated as the Spanish character may be, it has still energy enough to keep its own, if not to make the wisest use of it. All that misgovernment can effect to ruin a state, and render the finest natural resources valueless, has been done in Mexico. Revolutions without number, presenting every phase and degree of change, except change for the better, have made men indifferent to everything; and, with an unsettled Government, a bankrupt treasury, a disorderly army, and not even the shadow of a fleet, a war would seem to present to Mexico the last thing wanted to ensure her ruin.

But the name and forms of state and empire last longer than the more solid qualities of wealth and strength. Mexico has no navy; but she can summon one into existence by a word—one that is always built, armed, and manned, for any purpose, however desperate, and that asks no pay from the state it serves, requiring nothing but license to plunder the enemies of those who employ it. The buccaneering spirit is as active now as in the days when there was no peace between the subjects of European states "beyond the Line." The prospect of gain held out by the great commerce of America to those who may be "let slip" upon it, would cover the Atlantic with legalised pirates, and put in action an amount of desperate ruffianism, the mischievous consequences of which would be felt by every trading nation, though the United States would suffer the most. Reprisals of the same kind could not be made, for Mexico has little or no trade; in fact, the very superiority of the Northern Republic in external wealth would render it liable to the deepest injury. Mexico is in that very happy and independent position enjoyed by those who "have nothing to lose."

On the other hand, an invasion and conquest of any very considerable part of the Mexican territory by a United Sates army is scarcely within the possibilities. The nature of the country on the northern frontier of Mexico renders military operations excessively difficult; large bodies of men cannot be moved, even when unopposed, without many preparations; effective warfare is something more than a hunting excursion; and unless the whole male population of the States is seized with that universal martial enthusiasm which converted the France of the Revolution into a nation of soldiers, we do not see how a great army is to be raised. The despotic states of Europe can compel every man to march forth and fight; they have all, in the unsparing conscription, an instrument unknown to Constitutional Governments. In these last, the national enthusiasm is trusted to resist invasion; but, in ordinary times, or for an aggressive war, the soldier must be hired and paid like other labourers. Let our own annual estimates speak as to the cost of an army, and let the Americans ask themselves if they are prepared to pay the expense of such a body, or to raise money on credit in order to do it. One of the two they must be prepared for: if the nation at large is so smitten with warlike enthusiasm as to be ready to rush southward, rifle in hand, to engage in as many campaigns as may be required in the Terra caliente, as the French army rushed to the frontiers in defence of the Republic in 1794, well and good. The States may then wage war on the strength of that impulse. But if this is not the case, there is nothing for it, save the plan of the "Old Country" —to enlist men and pay them: this costs money, and necessitates either very heavy present taxes, or loans, by which last expedient the burden is not lessened, but distributed over future generations, equally crippling the strength of the nation. With the known temper of large bodies of the American people on the subject of taxation, we apprehend a difficulty in the matter.

"PYRRHUS THE FIRST" AND SIR TATTON SYKES" CONTENDING FOR THE DERBY STAKES AT EPSOM.—DRAWN BY J. F. HERRING, SEN.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

It is an absolute blessing to mankind that the nations of Europe have found out a better investment for capital than gunpowder. England and France will want all their gold for a generation to come, to make their railways; they have none to spare even for loans on the "best security." The most promising of silver mines in Potosi would find its shares at a discount: we doubt if a war loan required by the United States would be proposed with much better prospects. We say nothing here of the chance of "repudiation," which rises dim and doubtful in the distance—an additional element of uncertainty. How America can carry on an external war, is yet a problem: we wish she would leave the solution unattempted, for we have found it on all occasions, and with all results disastrous. Her War of Independence was defensive, even in which we were exposed to the disadvantages arising from distance and local circumstances, which she is going to encounter, in some respects, in an aggravated form, in Mexico. There America had a resource in the sense of patriotism and a stirring cause—worth many armies. In an aggressive war, these fail. Perhaps Mexico may be destined to furnish the Americans one of those dear lessons of which England has had so many—not without salutary effects.

"PYRRHUS THE FIRST," AND "SIR TATTON SYKES."

We are now enabled to fulfil our promise to the reader, and something more—in portraits of the Winner and the Second Horse, at the race for the Derby Stakes on Wednesday week; both from the pencil of Mr. J. F. Herring, sen., Animal Painter to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.

PYRRHUS THE FIRST is a first-class race-horse, of golden chesnut colour, with marks of white on his hind legs, and a blaze on his face; fine blood head and light neck; deep shoulders; muscular thighs, and hocks well let down; height, 15 hands 3 inches. He had only appeared in public once previous to the Derby for the Newmarket Stakes, at the First Spring Meeting, where he won cleverly PYRRHUS is the property of Mr. John Gully.

His contest with "Sir Tatton Sykes," which Mr. Herring has so faithfully depicted upon our front page, shall be narrated in verse of the "quadrupedante" measure:—

> When Pyrrhus the First came the last to the war
> Which rattled so long round the ramparts of Troy,
> They all look'd upon him as though he were far
> Inferior to Paris, or wish Fanny Boy.
> The sequel soon proved they were in the wrong box,
> The lion of the "Hall" footed "it upon their eyes;
> And Priam dis-covered that all his young cocks
> Were imparis grassis to bear off the prize.
>
> When Pyrrhus the Second stood up against Rome
> (The Corso was but in its infancy yet),
> The knowing ones told the young blood to go home,
> For the Roman breed was all Italy's pet.
> The King of Epirus knew what he was at,
> And beat his opponent almost into loathing.
> At last he was second: but what about that?
> 'Twas "Cæsar aut nullus"—a neck or else nothing.
>
> And now at the Derby a Pyrrhus is found
> (Right well may the Gully be proud as the owner),
> Which match'd against prime ones, still beat them all round,
> And flung back "their chaff" on its liberal donor.
> The famous Son Tulloch was blown as a bullock,
> The Fancy Boy, Per. colt flimsy as scarce—
> Brocardo and Hatton (the Royne would add Hatton)
> Escaped from the rack, and gave delat to Pyrrhus.
>
> Then a health to King Pyrrhus, and Sir Tatton Sykes,
> And joy to their owners, wherever they be;
> At Epsom—Newmarket—"mong Doncaster "lukes"—
> Few seeds can excel them for beauty and free
> Action and vigour. Again may they figure,
> Together with 'Cardo, for worthy is he;
> May Stubrick, that true brick, escape Epsom's rue-brick,
> And all worthy sportsmen be brimful of glee.

* Whence his surname. So pedigree in Lempriere. † Achilles.

IRELAND.

MURDER IN GALWAY.—On Thursday evening (last week) a poor man named Mannion, in the employment of Sir M. D. Bellew, was waylaid on his return from the fair of Mount Plough by three ruffians, who beat him so severely that he died the following night. One of the ruffians named M'Gee was arrested by the police after a chase of three hours. The Coroner's Jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the prisoner and his two companions.

THE CROPS.—From every part of Ireland the intelligence of the state of the crops is most cheering.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION. Mr. Smith O'Brien was the subject of prominent discussion at the Repeal Association, on Monday. Mr. O'Connell intimated that he had given notice of a motion for that day, "That the Association should take into its consideration the best method of conveying an expression of nations gratitude to William Smith O'Brien." Mr. O'Brien's conduct was condemned at a public banquet shortly, and that a public procession should escort him into Dublin on his way from Limerick, and mould their adoption, which was passed by acclamation.—Another resolution was then passed, requesting Mr. O'Brien to accept the amount of the fees paid by him to the Sergeant-at Arms of the House of Commons, upon his liberation, out of the funds of the association; after which, Mr. O'Connell praised the Government for what it had done towards Ireland, but said he was sorry that his praise of the Ministry could not extend to all the Government measures for instance, to the odious Coercion Bill, brought in by that scavenger, Lord Lincoln, who wanted to make a present of Mr. O'Brien's opposition to that bill! banquet shortly, and that a public procession should escort him into Dublin on his way from Limerick, and mould their adoption, which was passed by acclamation.—Another resolution was then passed, requesting Mr. O'Brien to accept the amount of the fees paid by him to the Sergeant-at Arms of the House of Commons, upon his liberation, out of the funds of the association; after which, Mr. O'Connell praised the Government for what it had done towards Ireland, but said he was sorry that his praise of the Ministry could not extend to all the Government measures for instance, to the odious Coercion Bill, brought in by that scavenger, Lord Lincoln, who wanted to make a present of Mr. O'Brien's opposition to that bill! He was, however, happy to say that there was no fear of such a calamity falling upon Ireland. The learned gentleman concluded by reading a series of resolutions, to the effect that Mr. O'Brien should be entertained at a public

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS THURSDAY.

The House of Lords resumed its sittings to-day, but the attendance at first was not numerous.

THE CORN BILL.

Lord STANLEY presented some petitions against the Corn Bill; and then gave notice that he should move for a copy of an address from the House of Assembly of Canada upon the subject of the Corn laws.

Earl DALHOUSIE then explained what he had stated on Thursday last in respect to this subject, and assured the House that he had given a faithful answer as far as he could as to the existence of another address. He certainly did not know that there had been another address when he gave the answer in question. He did not know of the existence of another despatch till the next morning. This he stated upon his honour as a Peer.

Lord STANLEY expressed his opinion that there could not be the slightest shadow of an imputation upon the noble Earl. The high character of his noble friend was too well known to have rendered any explanation necessary. As the despatch was to be laid upon the table, however, perhaps he might be excused if he made a few remarks upon the subject. The noble Lord proceeded to make some explanations with regard to his last speech. That was clear, he said, that Canada had expressed apprehensions upon the subject of Free-Trade. This had been denied but within twelve hours an address had arrived from the House of Assembly of Lower Canada, conveying the echo of the opinions and the apprehensions which he (Lord Stanley) had expressed. He deeply regretted that the address did not arrive before the second reading of the bill, but he yet hoped it would not be too late. (Hear, hear.)

Earl GREY maintained that when the subject was first brought before the Assembly of Canada, no such apprehensions had been expressed, but they had passed resolutions expressing a desire to co-operate in the measure. Whatever their apprehensions were, he was convinced that they had no foundation

The Duke of RICHMOND then presented several petitions against the Corn-bill.

RAILWAY BILLS.—Earl FITZWILLIAM gave notice that he would, to-morrow, move a resolution to the effect that this House would not give its sanction to any railway bills until the bills at present before both Houses of Parliament had been disposed of.

THE CUSTOMS DUTIES BILL.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE then moved the second reading of the Customs Duties (Tariff) Bill. The noble Earl entered at considerable length into the duties that at present existed, and those which it was proposed to reduce by the present measure. The Duke of RICHMOND opposed the bill—after some discussion, the bill was read a second time, and the Committee appointed for Monday week. The House then adjourned.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S HEALTH.

It is most gratifying to state that her Majesty's health progresses very favourably. The following bulletin was issued on Monday morning:

"Buckingham Palace, Monday, June 1,
Nine o'Clock, A.M.

"The Queen and the infant Princess continue well.

"JAMES CLARK, M.D.
"CHARLES LOCOCK, M.D.
"ROBERT FERGUSON, M.D.

"Her Majesty's recovery is so far advanced that no further bulletins will be issued."

THE NAME OF THE YOUNG PRINCESS. It is stated that the infant Princess is to be named Elizabeth, after the "Virgin Queen," whose reign was among the most brilliant in the annals of English history.

THE COUNTESS OF NORBURY'S FETE CHAMPETRE. The Countess of Norbury gave a fête champêtre on Monday, at Gordon House, Fulham, which was honoured with the presence of a large number of the aristocracy. The carriages began to set down company shortly after two o'clock. The guests entered the grounds by the wicket-gate, where they were received by the noble hostess, after which they passed through the flower gardens to the lawn on the south front of the mansion, from which spot a beautiful view of the river scenery is obtained. Here sofas and ottomans were placed in every direction, and the younger branches joined the festivities, first within the mansion, and subsequently on the lawn, to the music of Jullien's orchestra. In this manner a most delightful afternoon was passed, and it was nearly seven o'clock before the party began to separate. Refreshments of the most recherché description were served during the afternoon in the dining-room.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE WEATHER. The weather during the week in the metropolis, has been intensely hot. It is stated that in a situation exposed to the direct rays of the sun, the thermometer was actually as high as 126. Upon several occasions during the week, the thermometer has been as high as 98 in the sun, and at 85 in the shade

VICTORIA PARK.—This new popular place of resort at the East end of the metropolis was a great source of attraction during the holidays. It was visited on Whit-Sunday alone by upwards of 20,000 persons, and by about 5,000 each on the three following days. Since Easter it has been twice visited by Royalty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert having made an inspection on his return from the grand consolidation of the Sailors' Church, and the Duke of Cambridge about a week forwards.

WELSH SCHOOL.—The Governors and Subscribers to the Welsh Charity School presented Mr. Parry with an elegant piece of plate, on Thursday, as a testimonial for services rendered gratuitously to this Establishment for a period of forty-three years

THE GRAND POLISH BALL ON MONDAY NEXT. Several distinguished foreigners, among whom is Prince Louis Napoleon, are expected to attend this fashionable and attractive entertainment

IMPROVEMENTS AT THE POST OFFICE.—In consequence of the inquiry instituted at the General Post-office, before Mr. Peacock, it is stated that preparations are being made in the Postmaster-General's Office, for an extensive series of alterations throughout the entire departments of the inland and letter-carriers' offices, both general and metropolitan. As far as can be at present learned, the alterations will consist in a complete classification of the whole of the officers; the substitution of fixed scales of salary; the abolition of the "early delivery" in all walks, and the abandonment of the system of payment by fees. It is also stated that the Directory will be purchased of the present owner, suitable compensation being allowed for the officer's outlay, which that gentleman has given in as follows:—Machinery, £1,500; types, £2,000; lease of premises, 100 guineas per annum for 20 years, expenses of selling, &c., forming a total of nearly £5,000 per annum. It is said to be the determination of his lordship to take off the bells from all the walks, and to compensate the men, so as to give the public the opportunity of posting at the receiving-houses and at the chief offices until the latest moment prior to the despatch, consistent with the necessary regulations for the safety of the duty. It is not decided whether there will be an amalgamation of the General and London district offices at present; but it is most probable that eventually such will the case. The delivery of General Post letters, it is said, will be extended in the afternoon, and other offices opened for the general facilitation of the duty. Some alteration is also to be made in the salaries of the junior clerks, and in those of the messengers of the inland-office. The district letter carriers and stampers have also, within the last few days, received the command of the Postmaster-General to prepare and send forward an exact detail of their duties and emoluments.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

IMPORTANT DECISION IN REGARD TO RAILWAY LIABILITY.

In the Court of EXCHEQUER, on Wednesday, in the case of Henry v Goldney, a decision of some importance was given in reference to the liability of Provisional Committeemen.

The case was brought before the Court upon an argument on demurrer.

The facts, as gathered from the arguments, appeared to be, that the plaintiff supplied goods to a railway company, and, finding some difficulty in procuring payment, brought separate actions against no less than thirty persons, who had been advertised as provisional committee men.

Several of the defendants in these actions had pleaded in such a manner as to involve issues in fact, which stand for trial at Nisi Prius.

One of the provisional committee men, named Ede, was said to have left England after the action against him had commenced, and the present defendant pleaded the pendency of the action against Ede as matter of estoppel. To this plea there was a demurrer.

Mr. Crompton, for the plaintiff, now submitted that the plea could not be sustained. Here the defendant was not twice sued, and it was competent for the plaintiff to go in and sue all the parties indebted to him until he recovered his debt. Mr. Ede, against whom the other action was brought, was a stranger to this, and it would lead to the greatest injustice, if, because an action was brought against one man, who, it might be, would retreat to the Continent, and avoid the service of the writ, another joint debtor could not be sued. The plea was no answer to the declaration.

It was observed from the Bench that the proper mode of pleading would have been for the defendant to plead the non joinder of the other contractors, and not to make it a matter of pleading against Ede as matter of estoppel.

Mr. Bramwell, for the defendant, commenced by stating that the plea was bad. The plaintiff, who got only thirty different actions, and recover in each. He would then be paid his debt thirty times over.

The Court observed, that if once the debt was satisfied, the plaintiff could not be allowed to levy over again. If plaintiff had judgment, and defendant pleaded the non-joinder of a second man, the Court would interfere to prevent him by motion or audita querela.

Mr. Bramwell contended that the plea was good upon precedent, and cited [illegible] in support of this view. He also suggested [illegible] the Court would turn that which was a joint contract, into one which was a several one.

The Court was unanimously of opinion that the plea could not be sustained. The whole body of Provisional Directors made themselves jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff, and, although he could obtain the benefit of his judgment against one, there was no reason why he should not proceed against all. If it was a joint debt only, the defendant might now plead the non joinder of his co-partners. The cases cited were not applicable, and, according to the established principles of pleading, the plea was undoubtedly a bad plea. Upon these grounds the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and against the demurrer.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S STATUE.

PRECEDENTS FOR EQUESTRIAN STATUES ON ARCHES.

(To the Editor.) June 2d, 1846.

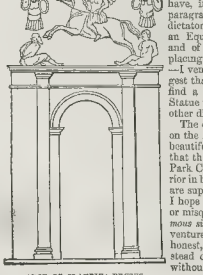
SIR,—In compliance with your request, I willingly send the Engravings, (which you heard were in my possession) of "Precedents for Equestrian Statues on Arches," taken from Montfaucon; and I rejoice at the opportunity afforded me of contributing to undeceive a misled and deluded public!

STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON AND ARCH, AT HYDE PARK CORNER

On Sunday, I went to Wilton to see the Statue of Marcus Aurelius, which bears about the same proportion to the Arch on which it stands, as the larger Statue of the Duke of Wellington will do to this Arch on Constitution Hill! I send you a rough sketch, which I made on the spot, as well as one of the Group intended for Hyde Park Corner; and also one of Claudius Drusus. "An Emperor proceeding to Victory"—which was sent to me by the Rev. Mr. Lillicot, of Torquay. Marcus Aurelius is riding across the Arch; so is Claudius Drusus; and so are the other Precedents to which I refer you.

ARCH FROM MONTFAUCON.

I agree with Bp, the yesterday Correspondent of the Times, and I cannot join in the cuckoo cry for Precedent! But, for the comfort and consolation of those who do—and who have, in speeches, and letters, and paragraphs, pronounced the most dictatorial condemnation of placing an Equestrian Statue on an Arch: and of the "additional atrocity of placing the Horse astride the Arch"—I venture, in all humility, to suggest that their difficulty will be to find a Precedent for an Equestrian Statue upon an Arch placed in the other direction.



ARCH OF CLAUDIUS DRUSUS.

The effect of the Marcus Aurelius on the Arch at Wilton is strikingly beautiful; and I have no doubt that the effect of the Group at Hyde Park Corner will be as much superior in beauty as the Statue and Arch are superior in size and grandeur! I hope I shall not be misunderstood or misquoted, as if I meant that enormous size constitutes beauty; but I venture to declare my humble, but honest, feeling and opinion, that, instead of an "Atrocious monstrosity, without precedent, and in violation of every rule of art or taste," the Group which I hope to see in its place on the day of Waterloo, will prove not only the largest but the finest in the world!

ARCH OF MARCUS AURELIUS, AT WILTON.

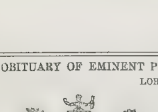
I am, &c.

F. W. TRENCH.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

LORD DOWNE.



THE Rev. William Henry Dawney sixth Viscount Downe, in the peerage of Ireland, and an English Baronet, was the second son of John, fourth Viscount, by his wife, Laura, only daughter and heir of William Burton, Esq. He was born the 20th of May, 1772, and succeeded to the title the 18th Feb., 1832, on the demise, without issue, of his eldest brother, John Christopher, the fifth Viscount. The Rev. William Henry, the late Viscount, married, 6th June, 1811, Lydia, only daughter of John Heathcote, Esq., of Connington Castle, and leaves, beside two daughters, a son and successor, William Henry, now seventh Viscount Downe, who married, in 1843, Isabel, daughter of Dr. Bagot, Bishop of Oxford, and by her has a family. The late Viscount died on the 23rd ultimo, in the 75th year of his age, at his seat, Beningbrough Hall, Yorkshire.

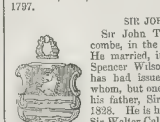
The family of Dawney, Viscounts Downe, is an old and distinguished house: the family came into England at the Conquest. An ancestor, Sir William Dawney, was made a General by Richard Cœur de Lion, when, having slain a Saracen Prince, and afterwards killing a lion, the knight cut off the paw, and presented it to the King, who immediately, in token of approbation, took a ring (still in possession of the Dawney family) off his finger, and, presenting it to Dawney, ordered that, to perpetuate the event, he should bear, as a crest, a demi-Saracen, with a lion's paw in one hand, and a ring in the other. The first Viscount was Sir John Dawney, M.P. for York, who was raised to the Peerage of Ireland, the 19th May, 1680. From him the present Viscount directly descends.

LORD WODEHOUSE.

John Wodehouse, second Baron Wodehouse, of Kimberley, in the county of Norfolk, and a Baronet, was the eldest son of John, first Baron Wodehouse, by Sophia, only child and heiress of Charles Berkeley, Esq., of Bruton Abbey, in the county of Somerset, and niece of the last Lord Berkeley, of Stratton. John, second Baron Wodehouse, was born on the 11th of January, 1771, his Lordship, previous to inheriting the family honours, represented the county of Norfolk in several successive Parliaments. In politics he was a Tory. His Lordship succeeded to the Peerage on the demise of his father, the 29th May, 1834: he married, the 17th November, 1796, Charlotte Laura, only daughter and heiress of John Norris, Esq., of Wilton Park, Norfolk, by whom he leaves a numerous issue: he is succeeded in his honours by his grandson, John, now third Baron Wodehouse, the elder child of his eldest son, the Hon. Henry Wodehouse, who died in 1834. The late Baron had been declining in health for some months back, yet his death occurred rather suddenly on the 29th ultimo, at his seat, Kimberley Park, Norfolk.

The family of Wodehouse traces its descent to a very remote period in English history. The motto on its escutcheon testifies its fame; for it, as well as the arms, crest, and supporters, were granted by Henry V. to John Wodehouse, as a reward for the valour he displayed on the field of Agincourt. The creation of the baronetcy of this family dates the 29th June, 1611, and the creation of their peerage the 26th October, 1797.

SIR JOHN TREVELYAN.



Sir John Trevelyan, the fifth Baronet of Nettlecombe, in the county of Somerset, was born in 1766. He married, in 1791, Maria, daughter of Sir Thomas Spencer Wilson, of Charlton, in Kent, by whom he has had issue five sons and five daughters, all of whom, but one son, survive him. Sir John succeeded his father, Sir John Trevelyan, the fourth Baronet, in 1828. He is himself succeeded by his eldest son, now Sir Walter Calverly Trevelyan, the sixth Baronet, who married, in 1835, Paulina, eldest daughter of the Rev. Dr. Jermyn. The late Baronet, who had attained the venerable age of eighty-six, died at his seat, Nettlecombe Court, Somerset, on the 30th ultimo.

The family of Trevelyan is of ancient Cornish origin, having possessed lands in Cornwall prior to the Conquest. The baronetcy was conferred on George Trevelyan, Esq., of Nettlecombe, the 24th January, 1662.

PETER PURCELL, ESQ.

This gentleman was a great coach proprietor, and an Alderman of the City of Dublin, and was distinguished there as a forward and active supporter of the extreme Liberal party in politics. He has also, well known as an able agriculturist: his letters on the cultivation of land had great popularity, and led to the formation, in Ireland, of the Royal Agricultural Improvement Society.

Mr. Purcell died on the 29th ultimo, at his town residence, in Rutland-square, Dublin. He is reported to have left behind him a fortune amounting to nearly £170,000.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL MARCUS BARR, C.B.

This distinguished soldier was not only at the splendid victory of Maharajpoor, under the walls of Gwalior, on the 29th of December, 1843, but also at the recent glorious victories of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, on the banks of the Sutlej, during which campaign Colonel Barr held the high office of Acting Adjutant-General of her Majesty's forces. Thus he saw the commencement, progress, and final success of a series of triumphs which will be ever memorable in the history of India. He received his mortal wound at Sobraon, and died on the 26th of March, at Kussowlies, near Simla.

Colonel Barr is most honourably mentioned by Lord Gough and Sir Harry Smith, in their despatches from the seat of war. Sir H. Smith says:—"Colonel Barr was universally beloved and respected throughout India. As a soldier he was pre-eminent, and the tears of scores rolled down the veteran cheeks of that bravest of men, our Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Gough, when we talked of our most valiant comrade."

SIR SPENCER LAMBERT HUNTER VASSALL, K.H., CAPTAIN, R.N.

This gallant officer, who died on the 29th ult., at his residence, 28, Hyde-square, Gardens, was the eldest son of the late Colonel Spencer Thomas Vassall (who fell at the head of his regiment, the 38th Foot, at the storming of Monte Video), by Catherine Brandeth Backhouse, his wife, daughter of the Rev. D. Evans, D.D., and represented a junior branch of the Vassalls, Barons de Gourdon, in France, derived immediately from John Vassall, Alderman of London, who equipped and commanded two ships of war against the Spanish Armada. Sir Spencer was born 17th May, 1795, and entered the Royal Navy in May, 1812, under Sir Home Popham, on board the Venerable, 74. In 1819 he was appointed Lieutenant of the Iphigenia, 42, Captain Hyde Parker: in 1820 served under Captain Vernon, in the Blossom, 26, and, in 1824, joined the Prince Regent, 120, the flag-ship of Sir Robert Moorsom, in the Mediterranean. In the following year Lieutenant Vassall was in the Ranger, 28, under Captain Lord Henry Thynne, sitting out for the South American station, and, in April, 1827, joined the Ganges, 84, bearing the flag of Sir Robert Waller Otway, by whom he was promoted to the command of the Eclair sloop, in the ensuing July. His advancement to the rank of Commander had then already taken place, his commission dated 30th April, 1827. After paying off the Eclair, in Sept. and following, Captain Vassall remained on half pay until the 24th November, 1831, when he was appointed to the Harrier, a new 18 gun corvette, in which vessel he served with much distinction on the East India station. In 1835 he brought her home and paid her off at Portsmouth, subsequently to which his late Majesty, King William the Fourth, conferred upon him the honour of Knighthood, for the gallantry he had displayed in attacking and destroying several extensive settlements of ferocious and dangerous pirates in the Malaccas. Sir Spencer married, in May, 1844, Letitia, only daughter of the late Edward Berkeley Napier, Esq., of Pennard House, Somerset, and widow of the Rev. E. H. Pulsford, a Canon Residentiary of Wells.

ESCAPE OF PRINCE NAPOLEON LOUIS BONAPARTE FROM HAM, AND ARRIVAL IN ENGLAND.

LAST week we announced the escape of Prince Louis Napoleon from the fortress of Ham. The Prince has since arrived in London, and has been much seen in public. On Monday he was at the St. James's Theatre, to witness the French plays. Several versions of the Prince's escape have been published, but we first take the Prince's own account of it, which we translate from a letter addressed by the Prince to the Editor of the Journal de la Somme:—

"My dear M. Degeorge,—My desire to see my father once more in this world made me attempt the boldest enterprise I ever engaged in. It required more resolution and courage on my part than at Strasburg and Boulogne, for I was determined not to submit to the ridicule that attaches to those who are arrested escaping under a disguise, and a failure I could not have endured. The following are the particulars of my escape:—

"You know that the fort was guarded by 400 men, who furnished daily 60 soldiers, placed as sentries outside the walls. Moreover, the principal gate of the prison was guarded by three gaolers, two of whom were constantly on duty. It was necessary that I should first elude their vigilance, afterwards traverse the inside court, before the windows of the commandant's residence; and, arriving there, I should be obliged to pass by a gate which was guarded by soldiers.

"Not wishing to communicate my design to any one, it was necessary to disguise myself. As several rooms in the part of the building I occupied were undergoing repairs, it was not difficult to assume the dress of a workman. My good and faithful valet, Charles Thelin, procured a smock-frock and a pair of sabots (wooden shoes), and, after shaving off my moustaches, I took a plank on my shoulders.

"On Monday morning I saw the workmen enter, at half-past eight o'clock. Charles took them some drink, in order that I should not meet any of them on my passage. He was also to call one of the garçons (turnkeys), whilst Dr. Conneau conversed with the others. Nevertheless, I had scarcely got out of my room, before I was accosted by a workman, who took me for one of his comrades, and, at the bottom of the stairs, I found myself in front of the keeper. Fortunately, I placed the plank I was carrying before my face, and succeeded in reaching the yard. Whenever I passed a sentinel or any other person, I always kept the plank before my face.

"Passing before the first sentinel, I let my plank fall, and stopped to pick up the bits. There I met the officer on duty, but, as he was reading a letter, he did not pay attention to me. The soldiers at the guard-house appeared surprised at my dress, and a drummer turned round several times to look at me. I next met some workmen, who looked very attentively at me. I placed the plank before my face, but they appeared to be so curious that I thought I should never escape them, until I heard them cry 'Oh! It is Bernard!'

"Once outside, I walked quickly towards the road of St. Quentin. Charles, who, the day before, had engaged a carriage, shortly overtook me, and we arrived at St. Quentin. I passed through the town on foot, after having thrown off my smock-frock. Charles procured a post-chaise, under pretext of going to Cambrai. We arrived, without meeting with any obstacles, at Valenciennes, where I took the railway. I had procured a Belgian passport, but nowhere was I asked to show it.

"During my escape, Dr. Conneau, always so devoted to me, remained in prison, and caused them to believe I was ill, in order to give me time to reach the frontier. It was necessary to be convinced that the Government would never set me at liberty before I could be persuaded to quit France, if I would not consent to dishonour myself. It was also a matter of duty that I should exert all my powers to be able to console my father in his old age.

"Adieu, my dear M. Degeorge; although free, I feel myself to be most unhappy. Receive the assurance of my sincere friendship, and, if you are able, endeavour to be useful to my kind Conneau. LOUIS NAPOLEON."

The Morning Post gives the following details:—

"The fortress of Ham is a large squared building, having at each corner a round turret. It was built under Louis XI. Within the Castle there is a large square, on each side of which are different buildings: one of these served as a prison.

"The Prince was watched closely by a battalion of the line. Beside the Commandant du Place, there were also a superior commander of the town and fortress, a special Commissaire de Police, and three turnkeys. These guardians were constantly at the door of the prison, and were commanded to follow the Prince whenever he went to take a walk on the ramparts. There were six sentries inside, and three outside the door.

"The fortress is put in communication with the country by two draw-bridges, each of them having constantly a guard of more than thirty men, under the command of an officer. The iron gates were always shut and locked, and when opened, they were so by a sergeant and a private, who were relieved every twenty-four hours. Besides this, there was at the entrance-door a room for a porter, where any person going in or out was to be seen.

"It was very difficult to elude such close vigilance. However, different proposals were made to the Prince for these six years to facilitate his escape. The Prince always declined such offers, unwilling to quit France without strong reasons, and fearing that his liberty should be a cause of conflict, or that those persons who with reluctance fulfilled their duty should in any way be exposed.

"The Prince, however, at length determined to seize a good opportunity, and to trust his project to no one except the two persons he had with him, namely, his friend, Dr. Conneau, who would always share his captivity, and Charles Thelin, who never quits him, and is at the same time his secretary and valet de chambre. Both Dr. Conneau and Charles Thelin had permission to go to the town.

"The Prince, being of late positively made sure that all the steps of his friends in Paris with the Ministers had proved unsuccessful, and seizing upon the opportunity of several workmen being on the spot to make different repairs, he resolved on taking the clothes of one of them, and to start in that disguise. The difficulty was not only to pass the guards and soldiers, but also to make his way amidst the workmen, who, if they did not discover that he was the Prince, might at least be surprised at having a stranger among them. Moreover, he might have been met by the director of the works, the guards of artillery, and other employés, who are so numerous in France.

"Notwithstanding these difficulties, it was resolved that Charles Thelin should ask the commander of the fortress permission to go to St. Quentin, and that he would provide a conveyance openly for that purpose, as had already been done on different occasions. The Prince, after choosing the early part of the morning for effecting his escape, put on a carpenter's clothes, and got a board, which he carried on his shoulder to conceal his face whenever he found himself in a dangerous situation. Charles Thelin was to go before the Prince, in order to attract the attention of one of the guards, whilst Dr. Conneau was retaining the other. But, when once the Prince was in the yard, Thelin was to follow him, in order to call on any one who might address the Prince as a workman. Everything was ready for Saturday, the 23rd; but, owing to some visits from Paris, the intended escape was postponed to the following Monday. Accordingly, on Monday morning, the workmen being already in the fortress, the Prince shaved himself, blackened his hair, put on a blouse, and a board on his shoulder. Although the workmen had been drawn into an adjoining room, scarcely had the Prince left his room when he met several of them, whom Thelin fortunately called to him. But it was necessary to pass two guards, who were standing at the bottom of the stairs.

PRINCE NAPOLEON LOUIS BONAPARTE.

"Whilst Thelin was speaking to one of them, the Prince came face to face with the other guard. But, fortunately, the Prince put the board in such a way as to prevent the guard from seeing him.

"The Prince at last reached the yard safely, and passed the soldiers and workmen employed in the fortress, avoiding being known by putting his board on that side from which he apprehended being looked at. When out, he was overtaken by his faithful Thelin, who had already provided a vehicle, and in that way the Prince arrived at St. Quentin, after throwing into a field the clothes that had served to disguise him.

"The Prince crossed St. Quentin on foot, whilst Thelin was getting a post-chaise ready. They were very soon at Valenciennes, where they crossed the frontier with Belgian passports. They then proceeded to Ostend, whence they proceeded to England, and the Prince arrived there before his disappearance was known in Ham."

The Journal des Débats says—"It appears certain that Louis Bonaparte crossed the frontier of Belgium at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the very day of his escape. On leaving his apartment, at seven o'clock A.M., the Prince was dressed as a workman, and carried under his arm a shelf of his own library. He had taken the precaution of shaving off his mustachios and whiskers, which made it impossible to recognize him. He paid the positions liberally, recommending them to drive as fast as possible, being desirous to overtake a rich Englishman, who was going to Brussels. He reached Valenciennes at half-past two o'clock, stopped there an instant, and asked the postmaster if he would consent to keep his carriage, his intention being to continue his journey to Brussels by the railway, and to return in a few days. Having received an answer in the affirmative, Prince Louis, without waiting until his servant had settled his account, repaired by a back street to the station of the railroad, and departed by the first train. He must have arrived at Brussels in the evening of the 25th, the day of his escape."

The Siècle publishes a letter from M. Poggioli, denying that Prince Louis Napoleon had ever demanded his release from captivity of the King or his Ministers. He had been recommended to write such a letter, a copy of which was sent to him, but he had peremptorily refused to sign it. The only favour he had asked was to be allowed to visit his aged and infirm father, pledging his word of honour that he would return to Ham after fulfilling that duty.

Prince Napoleon Louis Bonaparte has written a letter to Sir R. Peel, and one to Count St. Aulaire, the French Ambassador. We subjoin a translation of the latter:—

"London, May 29, 1846.

"M. le Comte,—I come frankly to declare to the man who was the friend of my mother, that, in quitting my prison, I have not been actuated by any idea of renewing against the French Government a war which has been disastrous to me, but only to be enabled to go near my aged father.

"Previous to my taking this step, I made every effort to obtain from the French Government permission to go to Florence, and I offered every guarantee consistent with my honour; but, finding that all my applications had proved unsuccessful, I determined to have recourse to the last expedient, which the Duc de Nemours and the Duc de Guise adopted in similar circumstances, under Henry IV.

"I beg, Monsieur le Comte, that you will inform the French Government of my peaceable intentions; and I hope that such a spontaneous assurance on my part will shorten the captivity of my friends who still remain in prison.

(Signed) "NAPOLEON LOUIS BONAPARTE.

"To Monsieur le Comte de St. Aulaire."

To prove that the Prince has done everything that was in his power to obtain his liberty by way of negociation, we give the copy of a letter he wrote to Louis Philippe, and the answer he received to it:—

(Translation.)

Fortress of Ham, Jan. 14, 1846.

"Sire—It is with the greatest emotion I come to request of your Majesty, as a great favour, the permission to quit France, were it only for a short time, I, who for the last five years have found in the breathing of the native air a large compensation to the torments of captivity. But my son and aged father standing in need of my attentions, to obtain my liberty he has applied to several persons, known to be devoted to your Majesty, and I feel it a duty incumbent upon myself to do anything that lies in my power to attain that object.

"The Council of Ministers having deemed it to be beyond their competence to accede to the request I have made of going to Florence, after taking the engagement of giving myself up again as a prisoner as soon as the Government would express that wish, I come, Sire, confidently to make a call on the feelings of humanity of your Majesty, and to reiterate my request, which I entrust to your high and generous interference.

"Your Majesty will, I am confident, appreciate at its true value a step which binds beforehand my gratitude; and, sensible of the lonely situation, in a foreign land, of a man who, when on the Throne, deserved the esteem of all Europe, I hope you will comply with the wishes of my father and my own.

"I beg your Majesty to accept the expression of my deep regret.

(Signed) "NAPOLEON LOUIS BONAPARTE."

To this letter, M. Duchatel, the Minister of the Interior, answered that the request of the Prince could not be complied with, because to obtain the Royal clemency it was necessary that the grace should be deserved and avowedly asked for.

Since that time a great many influential persons, both English and French, continued to take steps for the setting at liberty of the Prince; but to no use. It was only when all hopes had vanished, and that the news concerning the health of his father became more alarming, that the Prince determined to have recourse to the only means left to him.

THE FORTRESS OF HAM.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY, REGENT'S-PARK.

A letter from Paris says: "The general belief here is that the escape of the Prince was contrived at by the Government, as the only means of getting out of the difficulty about his release. Count Montholon could long ago have obtained his liberation; but, with a mistaken notion of honour, he refused to accept of it unless Louis Napoleon should be also released. The Count was permitted to come to Paris for his health, two years ago, on parole; and, when there, it depended upon himself to return to prison or not. The truth is, that the greatest indulgence has been shown at Ham to all the prisoners confined there for the échauffourée of Boulogne, and the Government will be glad of the excuse now offered for setting them free. The Government professes to be very indignant at the report that it has connived at the escape of Louis Napoleon, and will, therefore, make a show of a desire to recapture him; but such an event would be even more disagreeable to it than to the Prince himself."

A meeting of the foreign Ambassadors and Ministers has taken place, to consult on the line of policy to be adopted towards Prince Napoleon Louis, and it has been agreed that, until they receive instructions from their different Courts, they will abstain from personal intercourse with the Prince. The ex-King of Holland, father to Prince Napoleon Louis, possesses immense wealth, and makes a noble use of it in relieving the poor and unfortunate. He resides chiefly at Florence.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK.

THE second exhibition of flowers took place at the gardens of this society in the inner circle of Regent's Park, on Wednesday afternoon; and for once the weather was as favourable as could well be desired. Nothing, indeed, could exceed the fineness of the day, and the ladies, arrayed in every fashion and diversity of costume, were in their glory. Vast numbers were present, and the aspect of the scene was brilliant and exhilarating in the extreme, heightened as the enjoyment was by the triple military band, which played lively operatic strains without intermission during the whole of the time.

The "show" was a very fine one, and the specimens for which prizes were awarded were more varied, if not more beautiful, than upon any previous occasion. They were placed in tents in the vicinity of the conservatory at the end of the broad walk, and many an apostrophe of admiration was uttered by the crowds as they oscillated to and fro, and contemplated the richness and delicacy of the floral hues. But the gaiety of the company afforded quite as much entertainment to the visitors; for it is not often that so splendid an ensemble of aristocratic elegance and recherché millinery has been met with.

The walks on the east side of the gardens, the fancifully disposed flower-beds, and the verdant shrubberies, not forgetting the artificial stream which steals placidly round the foot of the mound, came in for a large share of approval, and were handsomely and becomingly eulogised by the promenaders who saw them for the first time. The laying out, in short, of this district is very tasteful; and that so much picturesque effect should be accomplished in so small a space is highly creditable to the ingenuity and contrivance of the designer.

The principal prizes were as follow: First gold medal to Mr. Fraser, Lea-bridge-road, for a collection of 30 stove and green-house plants; and to Mr. Mylam, gardener to S. Rucker, Esq., for 15 exotic orchids. Second gold medal to Mr. Barnes, gardener to G. W. Normen, Esq., for 30 stove and green-house plants; to Mr Hunt, gardener to Miss Trail, for 20 ditto; to Mr. Ayres, gardener to J Cook, Esq., and to Mr. Rae, gardener to J. J. Blandy, Esq., for 10 exotic orchids. Third gold medal to Mr. Hunt, for 15 Cape heaths; and to Mr. Plant, for 15 exotic orchids. First silver-gilt medal to Mr. Green, gardener to Sir E. Antrobus, Bart., for 10 stove and green-house plants; to Mr. Barnes, for 15 Cape heaths; to Mr. Dom, gardener to F. G. Ox, Esq., for 10 exotic orchids; to Mr. Cock, Chiswick, for 12 pelargoniums; to Mr. Dobson, Isleworth, for ditto; to Mr. Parker, Roehampton, for ditto, to Mr. Gaines, Battersea, for ditto; and to Messrs. Lane and Son, Berkhampstead, for 12 roses in pots.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREENWICH RAILWAY.—On Tuesday afternoon, as the train was proceeding from Greenwich to London, a young man named Charles White, an engine cleaner, in the employ of the South-Eastern Railway Company, fell from the platform beneath the carriages, and before he could be extricated his legs were broken in two places, and he was otherwise dreadfully injured. He was removed to St. Thomas's Hospital, where he expired in dreadful agony shortly after.

FIRE IN SMITHFIELD. Early on Monday morning a fire broke out upon the premises, 25, Cow Cross-street, West Smithfield, occupied by Mr. J. Smith, a tinplate-worker, and seven or eight other families. The flames originated in the first-floor front, tenanted by a Mrs. Pemberton. It appears that while the occupier was standing at the street door talking to a friend, an alarm was raised by a person that the premises were on fire. Without loss of time the party rushed up stairs, when a most distressing scene presented itself, the bed on which his child was sleeping was completely enveloped in flames, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the child could be rescued; as it was, it was most severely burnt about the body. The mother, in running out of the room with her offspring, came in contact with one of the windows, and was most severely cut about the face. The child was quickly removed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The street door of the burning house having been left open, it caused the flames to be draughted up the staircase with the greatest impetuosity, and very speedily they had obtained the complete possession of the floor in which they commenced.

THE FATAL STEAM-BOAT COLLISION ON THE MERSEY.

ON Saturday morning an inquest was held at the Session House, Chapel-street, Liverpool, on the bodies of John Roach, aged 40, and Patrick Geoghan, aged 45 years, before Philip Finch Curry, Esq., the Borough Coroner, who had met their deaths in consequence of the late collision of the Rambler and the Sea Nymph. After several witnesses had been examined, the Court adjourned until Monday.

On that day it was resumed, and some seamen both of the Rambler and the Sea Nymph were examined, but no new fact of consequence was elicited, and another adjournment took place.

The inquiry was resumed on Tuesday. Several seamen were examined, who stated that the Sea Nymph was pursuing her usual course at the time of the accident. The evidence turned chiefly upon nautical points and technicalities. The inquest was once more adjourned.

The result of the inquiry was, a verdict of "Accidental death," with a deodand of £200 on the Sea Nymph.

THE INQUEST AT THE MAGAZINES.

On Wednesday the inquest was commenced at the Magazines, before Mr. Churton, the Chester Coroner, upon the thirteen persons killed by the late collision between the Sea Nymph and Rambler, and whose bodies lie buried in Liscard Chapel-yard. Only six of the bodies were identified, namely:—James Lally, an old man 70 years of age; Bridget Fury and her infant son, Owen Fury; Martin Ford and his daughter, Bridget Ford; and Patrick Charles O'Malley, a lad. The seven other bodies were so dreadfully mangled that identification was rendered impossible. After the six had been identified, the Coroner adjourned the Court until ten o'clock on Tuesday next, to afford time for the inquest at Liverpool to be concluded, and to enable the witnesses and professional gentlemen there engaged to attend before him at the Magazines.

THE LATE COLLISION ON THE MERSEY.—THE TUMBLER ASHORE.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

THE visit of this distinguished Prince to Paris has closed during the past week. On Monday, his Highness took his farewell of M. Guizot; and, in the evening, visited the Royal Observatory, where he was received by M. Arago. On Tuesday, his Highness sent to the Prefect of the Seine the sum of 12,000f., to be divided amongst the poor in the twelve arrondissements of Paris.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

Ibrahim was to leave Paris on Wednesday for the Royal Château, at Eu; and was to embark at Dieppe, for England, in the Gomer steamer. This is confirmed by the Observer du Havre, which states that "orders have been received at Havre to send a pilot who is well acquainted with the English coast to Cherbourg. This pilot was to go on board the Gomer, (the steamer placed at the service of Ibrahim Pacha), who has accepted the invitation of Queen Victoria. The Prince will embark at Dieppe."

Extensive preparations have been made at Mivart's Hotel for the reception of the Prince, who, with a suite of forty persons, was expected to arrive on Friday. A Contributor has penned the following welcome:—

Prince of the land whose mighty name
Looms mystically on the soul,
The Land of Egypt—soil of fame—
Source of the arts, which loved to roll
Forth to the world the tide of thought,
Whereof the Greek and Roman drank.
The land where Man his wonders wrought,
From Pyramid to Desert Tank!

Prince of renascent Egypt, hail!
Welcome to Albion's friendly shore!
The red Cross and the Crescent pale
Their fratricidal feuds deplore.
Lands, distant once, now join each other,
Science has conquered space and time,
Man now meets man as friend and brother;
Binds heart with heart and clime with clime.

Son of the Nile, whose deathless land
Rives in renovated bloom,
As at the touch of Moses' wand,
Sprang water from its rocky tomb,
Few dazzling scenes of mingle war
Await thee here—few songs of glory.
Peace chains Ambition in his car,
And casts down Moloch's altars gory.

Though not unknown Britannia's spear,
Though not unheard her vengeful thunder,
Witness ye waves of Aboukir!
Witness ye pyramids of wonder!
Reluctantly our country draws
The sword; but drawn will rarely sheath it
Till the rash foes to peaceful laws
Are prostrate in the dust beneath it.

Pacha! far nobler prospects rise
Over the ruins of war's madness;
Beneath thy Father's guidance wise
The very Zaara laughs with gladness.
Thy beauteous land, with plenty laden,
Reaps no but peace to knit its throne,
Which, from the Delta's shore to Aden,
Thy path with blessings shall be strown.

Look round on England! Hope and wealth
Beams in her eye, and lights her cheek.
View her fair fields—her marts of wealth
Her wondrous manufactures! Seek
In these her fame, her glory's key—
The spring of all her worth and pow'r,
That wed her to th' exulting sea,
And brings her kingdoms for her dow'r.

Yet, no Sesostris, England. Kings
Are chained not to her car. Her rule
Is love't, not dreaded, from the springs
Of wild Ontario to Cabool.
The Monarch chainer is laid low:
Sways the Napoleon of Peace.
That brought down France to shame and woe
Thy bade her fame and joys increase.

Thus be thy model, valiant Prince!
Europe and Asia golden ink
Is Egypt. May thy deeds evince
Thee as the Friend of Man! We drink
The cup of welcome. May the Son
Rival the Sire's mature career;
Bring, like the Nile, abundance on
The land e'en o'er the Desert drear!

Over the ruins of war's madness;

Of the heir to the Pachalic of Egypt, a half-length Portrait, with a brief Memoir, appeared in No. 148 of our Journal. The present whole-length was sketched during the Prince's recent visit to Paris.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 7.—Trinity Sunday.
MONDAY, 8 Thomas Paine died, 1809.
TUESDAY, 9.—St. Anthony.—Lilly the Astronomer died, 1681.
WEDNESDAY, 10 — Oxford shot at the Queen, 1840.
THURSDAY, 11 Corpus Christi St. Barnabas.
FRIDAY, 12.—Wat Tyler killed in Smithfield, 1381.
SATURDAY, 13.—Battles: Naseby, 1645; Marengo, 1800; Friedland, 1807.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending June 13.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m	h m	h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m.	h. m.
0 34	0	1 23	1 0	2 13	1 52	3 2	2 37	3 51	3 40	4 35	4 50

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NAPOLEON'S SNUFF-BOX.

(To the Editor.)

Lambert's Place, Mulhouse, May 28, 1846.

Looking over your highly interesting Number 213, dated May 23, 1846, I discover the Illustration of the "Box presented by Napoleon to the late Lady Holland, bequeathed by her Ladyship to the British Museum." Now, it might, perhaps, not be uninteresting to relate the circumstances under which the Imperial gift was offered to and received by the late Lady Holland, which circumstances might be briefly resumed as follows: In 1803, the late Charles Fox (Lord Holland) visited the French capital, and was received in a very flattering manner by Napoleon, who, to mark his esteem, sent to Lady Holland a beautiful snuff box, the lid of which was formed by the very valuable cameo presented formerly (in 1797) to Napoleon by Pope Pius VI. at Tolentino. This fact being known in England, one of the High Tory Lords of the time (1802)—give me leave not to write down his name—addressed some poetical lines to Lady Holland, endeavouring to persuade her not to accept the jewel. The piece contained seven stanzas, and began thus—

Lady, reject the gift, 'tis stain'd with gore, &c.

The greatest English poet of all times, (old "Billy" excepted), Lord Byron, having become aware of this, he immediately addressed a very facetious mural to Lady Holland, containing, in four lines, persuasion, eulogium, and satire, which caused a great deal of mirth at London. The piece ran thus—

Lady accept the gift a hero wore,
In spite of all this e'egant stuff,
Let it serve stanzas written on a hare
Prevent your Lady ship from taking snuff.

The facts afterwards proved that Lord Byron's counsel had been followed, and the High Tory Lord's advice rejected. At last report of Lady Holland's elevated mind is the very bequeathing of "the Box" to the British Museum.

A CORRESPONDENT.

"S," Adelaide, South Australia, is thanked for the Sketch; but we have not room to insert it.

"A Young Man" should provide himself with "Aird's Self-Instructing French Grammar."

"W. C."—Abercrombie's Gardener, improved by Mean."

"C. T. D." should read more closely our brief notice of the French pictures in question.

"K. F. Z." Ireland, should apply to Messrs. Wiley and Putnam, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall.

"Post Prælia Præmia."—We are not in the secret as to the expected brevet.

"A Country Surgeon" may proceed in safety, if the circumstances of the case be correctly stated.

"W. H. G. G."—Thanks.

"Lady Fanning."—To remove freckles, apply the following lotion with linen or a camel hair pencil: mix one drachm of spirit of salt with half a pint of soft water and half a teaspoonful of spirit of lavender.

"W. R." is thanked for his Sketch of Hagglesburg; but the subject is not eligible for illustration.

"J. G." wishes to ascertain who has contracted to light Rome with gas.

"A Subscriber." Wales.—We mentioned in our last that Lord Granville Somerset is younger brother of the present Duke of Beaufort

"A. C. H." Lord Beaconsfield is brother of Lord Melbourne. He was formerly well known in the diplomatic world as Sir Frederick James Lamb, G.C.B. His estimation in the Peerage took place in 1839.

"W. J. K." James or Freeman's Naval History will afford the information required as to Lord Cornwallis's action.

"Cantabor and Sophus"—An Attorney, although LL.D. of Cambridge or Oxford, cannot practise as an Advocate in Doctors' Commons.

"A Subscriber of a Year." No.

"A Subscriber." We could in instance many Commoners' families which can deduce an unbroken male line of descent from the period of the Conquest. The following are (the number required by our Correspondent) occur to us at once: Perrers, of Ilsington, co. Warwick; Cary, of Tor Abbey and Falston, co. Devon: Grimston, of Grimston Garth, co. York; Fitzherbert, of Worden, co. Lancaster; Blount, of Maple Durham, co. Oxford; and Bastard, of Kitley, co. Devon.

"A Constant Subscriber." A commission cannot be purchased in the Royal Horse Artillery. The officers are always kept from the Cadets at Woolwich.

"The Son of a Subscriber."—Mottoes may be assumed or changed at pleasure.

"Horatia."—Frances, widow of Lord Nelson, the hero of Trafalgar, died on the 4th of May 1831.

"U. L. G. B."—The present Colonel of the 66th Bengal Native Infantry is Major-General Robert J. Lister.

"A. B.," Dorset.—The pay of an Ensign in the East India Company's service is 180 rupees per month, which sum includes the allowance for gratuity, tent, and half batta. The pay of a Lieutenant, 224 rupees per month.

"Senior Fidelis"—The gentleman in Blackstone places on the Table of Precedence Colonels, Doctors, Esquires, Gentlemen, and those below them, in this order immediately after younger sons of Baronets.

"E. J. B.," Bromyard.—Thanks for the Programme.

"Exeter." The majority of the Illustrations of the War with the Sikhs, which have appeared in our Journal, have been copied from Sketches, never before engraved, from the portfolio of Mr. G. T. Fepp, the traveller.

"O. A. B.," Devon, will be eligible for the Government situation; and the "family register" will, doubtless, suffice.

"A. H. S."—The paymaster of the Royal Navy is lodged safely with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and principally with the First Lord. Neither commissions nor promotions are to be purchased, as in the Army.

"Mortlake Terrace, Middlesex." Thanks for the Programme.

"*Exiler

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

EXTRAORDINARY MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A man named John Towny, residing at Widegate-street, Bishopsgate-street, on Wednesday committed suicide, having first murdered his wife. It appears that the deceased and his wretched partner were the parents of three children, the eldest of whom, a girl about 13 years of age, went to the lodgings occupied by his parents, a second pair back, in the house in question, about four o'clock in the afternoon. She knocked at the door, but receiving no answer, the girl looked through the keyhole, and saw her father in a position which led her to believe he was in a fit. Having given the alarm, the door, which was locked, was burst open, and Towny was found quite dead, suspended from the bedstead. A paper was found pinned to his coat, which contained a statement of the motives that induced the unhappy man to commit the rash act, viz., the dread of approaching starvation Towny carried on the business of a jobbing tailor, but had been out of work for a considerable period.

About three quarters of an hour after the discovery of his dead body, in pushing the bedstead nearer the wall, the body of his wife was discovered on the floor under the bed. The poor woman was also quite dead, and from the appearances presented, it was evident she had been inhumanly strangled, and that she must were tied together, and were tightly and convulsively clasped. It is said she was given to drinking, and it is supposed that her husband, on going home soon two o'clock, found her lying on the bed intoxicated, and that he thereupon was decided to put her hands. The act of strangling her was not accomplished without a struggling noise, which excited the notice of the neighbours. They called out supposing them to be fighting, and the noise ceased, the woman being unable to offer much resistance, either from the effects of the liquor she had drunk, or, as is conjectured, from the operation of some drug which had been administered, without or without her own consent, by her husband. The ill-fated woman was at the time of her death in daily expectation of her confinement.

It is rumoured that Towny or his wife made application to the parochial authorities for temporary relief during the period of her confinement, and that relief was refused them unless they went into the workhouse, with which condition Towny could not bring himself to comply. Three children are made orphans by this lamentable occurrence, which, from the circumstances of the unfortunate condition, the accident refusal to give her temporary relief, and the misery which they were known to have endured during the period of the husband being out of work, has created the greatest sympathy in the neighbourhood.

THE POISONING CASES IN NORFOLK.

In consequence of the disclosures which have been made in the course of the private inquiry instituted by Sir James Graham, J. Pilcrim, Esq., one of the Coroners for the county of Norfolk, opened another investigation on Monday morning at East Rushton, a village three miles distant from Harpisbrugh, on the bodies of other persons, related to the deceased, Jonas [illegible], who are supposed to have died from the effects of poison administered.

The empanelling of another jury to inquire into the [illegible] was rendered necessary, it being understood to be the result of very important [illegible] revelations Lagness, had been made to the officers to the Coroner. It will be remembered [illegible] exhumed at the Hasborough hill House, of this village, [illegible] of the bodies examined at the parish church-yard, including the deceased Jonathan Banks, who died from arsenic, and although an open verdict was returned, there is no doubt was entertained that the poison was wilfully administered by old Banks's wife was supported by parochial relief, and had made himself very disreputable in the neighbourhood by two or more suspected acts of arson, and other crimes of an abandoned character. The result of subsequent inquiries is to attach considerable suspicion as to other deaths in the family, and it was at length arranged that the [illegible] bodies should be exhumed for the purpose of [illegible] them minutely examined.

By the list that has been handed to the Coroner of the suspected victims, we find, in addition to the bodies of Jonathan Balls, the supposed murderer, his wife Elizabeth, Samuel, Ann Elizabeth, and Elizabeth Ann Postle, his grandchildren whose deaths were enquired into at the former inquest; that of Anna Peggs, a grandchild, who died on the 7th of June, 1836, in her eighth year, and was buried at Ingham Chapel. From some unexplained circumstance, it was exhumed about three weeks after it had been interred. Mr. Pilcrim held an inquest upon the body, and a surgeon considering that it had died from fever, and not from any post mortem examination necessary, a verdict of natural death was returned. This child, like the rest, appears to have been taken ill immediately after a visit to it aged grandfather, what is more remarkable, had no medical attendance. The next on the list is Maria Green, daughter of Mrs. Green (another daughter of old Jonathan Balls's victims was a months old, and died on the 20th December, 1835, and was buried at East Rushton. The infant had been with the grandmother, and, while there, was attacked with illness and shortly expired. [illegible] no surgeon being called to it. Next, the body of William Green, also a grandchild, aged two years, died on the 31st of October, 1841, and interred at East Rushton. He had also been to his grandmother's, and was seized with illness on his return home; and lastly, Martin Green, of the same family. She died when 15 months old, after visiting old Balls' house, and was buried with the others, in the same churchyard.

At nine o'clock, the Jury, which composed the principal gentry of the neighbourhood, met Mr. Martin, the Coroner, at the Public Inn, East Rushton.

It was then announced by the Coroner, at the conclusion of the evidence in these cases, to proceed to Ingham, and there enter into another enquiry on Mrs. Peggs's death, which are directed to be exhumed previously to the commencement of the examination.

One of the daughters of Jonathan Balls, Mrs Green, and mother of the three children, the subject of enquiry on Monday, is in the greatest distress of mind, and having taken a portion of the poison given her by her father, she is still suffering from its pernicious effects

After the Coroner had spoken to the effect, the Jury and all he very much regretted the [illegible] of fact had brought them together, and the circumstances that attended it. The first father, to have been investigated before, and he could not help thinking that, if an inquiry had taken place at the death of the first child, it would have saved the lives of many others who have been sacrificed

Mrs. Green, daughter of the deceased Jonathan Balls, spoke of the suspicious circumstances attending the death of her eldest child, Maria, which happened nine or ten years ago after she had been at her father's house only a short time, and where the child also was not long ere it died. Witness also detailed the facts attendant upon the death of the other children. She said she was much shocked and confounded by these deaths, but never thought that her own father could have done such things.

Rosanna Peggs, wife of Bartholomew Peggs, of Happisburgh, deposed that she recollected the deceased child, Maria Green, being at her grandfather's house for more than a week. She saw the child on the Sunday before it died. Balls came and asked her if she would go to his house, for he thought the child was dying. She went directly, and it had almost expired. She took it up in her arms, and after a struggle it died. Balls said it had eaten a hearty breakfast. She thought it strange that a child in good health should die so suddenly, and she told him so. He made no remark; but when Mrs Green came he seemed rather confused. The child was not talked of in the village particularly. The child did not fever.

By the Coroner: She knew Balls' daughter that died. She was very ill, but did not know if she died suddenly. She was married. The child died in two or three days, and the daughter in nine weeks.

Mrs. Green was recalled, and spoke to the ill-treatment her sister [illegible] by the old deed. Her mother never liked Lacey, her sister's husband. Before she had the child she used to say a few words, but she had no opinion. There were a number of black marks on her body. Her father and Lacey were friendly. The latter was ill himself. She believed his ill-treatment [illegible] cause of her death.

The Coroner observed that it was an extraordinary case that, although there was so much talk about this poor woman's death, no inquiry should take place. It was a very bad and shocking case. He would have the body disinterred in the course of the following morning, and ascertain what state it was in.

The inquiry was adjourned.

[illegible] Balls was proceeded to Ingham, where he gave orders for the [illegible] who also died suddenly, to be disinterred.

The inquiry was continued the next day, and after several witnesses had been examined, it was adjourned till next week, so as to afford the surgeons greater time in their chemical operations. It is understood that the Secretary of State will send down an eminent chemist to assist in the examination.

ATTEMPTED MURDER, AT THAXTED, ESSEX.—On Wednesday morning an atrocious and premeditated attempt at assassination, which, from the circumstances preceding the act itself, has only been equalled by those of late perpetrated in the metropolis, was made at Thaxted, Essex. About two months since Mr. Thomas Woodcock Warner, tin-worker and iron-worker, of Thaxted, discharged an apprentice, whose name is George May Smith, under nineteen years of age, for some misconduct. A few days ago Smith applied for work as a shop-in Lostdam, and, being pressed for a reference as to character, gave the name of his late master, Mr Warner. Mr. W. replied to the application in no recommendatory terms, and on Smith's calling at the shop again, he was told that his former [illegible] had been written to, and the answer was so unsatisfactory that he was ordered to go about his business. Smith, it appears, was now determined on revenge, and down to Bishop's Stortford on Tuesday, that night returned to his master's house there [illegible] a double barrelled gun, powder-flask, and shot-belt, walked immediately [illegible] to Thaxted, a distance of twelve miles, and [illegible] the well at [illegible] premises, early next morning. [illegible] coming out into the world-yard, and, being [illegible] yards asunder, presented the gun and fired. Providence, however, [illegible] the deadly effect. The right hand [illegible] assassin's left hand was dreadfully shattered. Mr. Warner received the [illegible] shot on his arm and hand, but [illegible] to raise the skin except in a very slight degree. The fellow, although [illegible] self-mutilated, attempted to escape, but policeman Dann, seeing him going along the street of Thaxted with blood on his hand, concluded something serious must be the matter, and took him into custody. Shortly afterwards the prisoner was brought to the Dunmow Police Station, where the hand was examined by Mr. Grose, surgeon. It at first was judged that amputation of the hand must be resorted to, but, subsequently, it was determined only necessary to remove two of the fingers at the second joint, and the operation Mr. Grose, with the assistance of Mr. Ball, immediately performed. Smith was the same day examined before the Rev. George Longmaid, and by him remanded for further examination till Monday next.

ROBBERY IN AN OMNIBUS.—On Tuesday afternoon, Mrs Abder, residing in St. Martin's-lane, had her pocket picked of £173 between Lombard-street and her residence. Mrs. Abder got into an omnibus at the Mansion-house, and was set down at St Martin's Church, but did not discover her loss till she got home.

A VISIT TO GREENWICH ON WHIT-MONDAY.

'The silent highway" is a name which certainly did not apply to the Thames on Monday last; for, from the first shoal of day, until after midnight, the noise and uproar on its boson quite outdid that on land. One after another the steamers went down the river, so frightfully freighted with holiday keepers, that, on two separate occasions, during their heavy rolls, we saw the water wash in at the cabin windows. And yet, as every pier, fresh passengers were struggling for barely standing room, choosing to run every risk rather than be left behind. The very barge and corner were so closely wedged together, that they could not play, both lines of combatants for bargers with the full decamp and stand, when the tune had continued: the boy had scarcely room enough to put his lungs into action for the necessary warning of "Ease her!"

The Fair was held, as usual, in the exceedingly inconvenient thoroughfare—it scarcely deserves the name, being the best compromise between a passage and a road as can ever effected going off from the principal street below the church, and to this point we first bent our steps.

A pleasant colleague, in noticing the Fair at Easter, spoke of "Richardson's," and its performances, thereby saving us a portion of our task. We will pay no attention to the smaller game exhibited, and sneak of the humble shows. The first exhibition was held in a dismantled dwelling-house on the right hand, where various figures in wax-work, of the true Mrs. Jarley school, were set up for show. In the recesses of the sitting-room were placed two figures, as they were intended, originally, for Amy Robsart and the Earl of Leicester; but which represented, we were informed, Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, enjoying the retirement of domestic life, apart from the pomp of Royalty. Why they should have chosen to enjoy retirement in fancy dresses of the time of Elizabeth, those best acquainted with the habits of those august personages can inform us.

The characters in the exhibition were, if we understand not, old friends. We found that we once knew them in Holborn, where the organ played at the door, and the monkey sat on the hot gas pipe. At all events, if they were not the same, the men had cast two in the same mould whilst he was about it. But we do not think he had been happy in the likenesses. Sir Robert Peel was unmeasurably Mr. Meadows of the Lyceum, when he is playing in a fight Hazel wig; Lady Sale we once knew as Queen Adelaide; and Oxford had transmigrated into Wix, the eyes having mauiestly been wrenched violently round to form the squint of the latter miserable culprit. In one point, though, the Holborn Tussaud of evidently excelled nature. He had preserved the one remarkable fact the coolness of the show, while the folks looking on were melting with the heat from which we were not sorry to escape.

The second show we entered consisted of learned bards. This was held also in an unfinished house or shed. A curtain nailed to the rafters divided the rude interior into two parts; by pushing it aside with our stick, we saw a flock bed upon the ground, a smouldering fire, and a tin saucepan; a thin, unhappy dog was persuading himself that he was asleep on an old show cloth before the fireplace. In front of the penetrale was a dirty bleeding cage, in which five or six poor, dirty, ragged canaries were sitting on a perch, huddled together as if for self-defence. A man came to the front and said, "Stand back, gents, and then you can see: the canaries, the performing canaries, brought from the celebrated Canary Islands for the Queen." (N. B. It was somewhat remarkable that there was not one single show in the fair which was not under her Majesty's especial patronage.) "They will go through their wonderful performances, admitted by all who have seen them to be the most surprising thing ever witnessed. Now, Tom, sir—come, look alive."

A variety of peep-shows came next. "The Battle of Sobrown" was the chief point with these, as well as "The Taking of Ghaznee." There were views, also, of "The Execution of Wix the Murderer"—a picture taken from the top of Catnatch hill, painted, and put behind a cosmoramic glass: "The Queen Landing at Treport"—a cut from the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, much lengthened; "Schabazzar's Impious Feast," the "Battle of Navarino," the "Burning of the Houses of Parliament," the "City and Harbour of Hong Kong," &c. &c.

Algar's Dancing Booth divided these shows from Richardson's; and where this marquee monstre began and ended, it is impossible to tell. It appeared to us to be the largest—at all events, the longest—temporary erection we ever saw, and ran at the back of a long line of booths of smaller dimensions—for the most took advantage of its band for their own company. The profusion of illuminated lamps, in all sorts of devices, outdid Vauxhall; and over the bar were six or eight really splendid chandeliers, with large ground glass shades. The inspired

THE BREAK OF GAUGE AT GLOUCESTER.

TRANS-SHIPMENT OF GOODS FROM THE BROAD GAUGE TO THE NARROW GAUGE CARRIAGES.

NATIONAL UNIFORMITY OF GAUGE.

No public question at first sight ever seemed so inapt for pictorial illustration as that of the Railway Gauges, being nothing more than parallel lines, essentially stiff, mechanical, and monotonous; yet no one has yielded better pictures than those which we publish to-day. It is another proof that the commonest everyday incidents present good subjects for pictures if we will but to seek them. As universal chroniclers, we could not give this question the "go by," uninviting as it appeared; and so we dispatched our Artist to Gloucester, where the strongest evidence on this subject is said to be made palpable every day and hour. At Gloucester, two different railways unite; one running southwards, from Birmingham; the other northwards, from Bristol. The first has a width of 4 feet 8½ inches between its rails; the last, 7 feet: and an effect like this which we here make manifest in straight lines takes place.

Gloucester

From Bristol | To Birmingham

The Gauge, or width of the rails, is broken or interrupted: hence the term we now hear so much of—"Break of Gauge." Gentle Reader, you have now a theory of what "Break of Gauge" is. If you chance to travel yourself between Birmingham or Cheltenham and Bristol, you will sensibly feel it. The Gauge being thus broken, your journey is brought to a dead halt. With all your baggage and rattle-traps, whatever they be in number and size, you are obliged to shift from one carriage to another. Make the journey, and you will have practical experience of what our Artist has so vividly presented. You will hear the Railway Policeman bawling into the deaf Passenger's ear that he must dismount; you will see the anxious Mamma hastening her family in its transit from carriage to carriage, dreading the penalty of being

SHIFTING OF HORSES FROM THE BROAD GAUGE TO THE NARROW GAUGE CARRIAGES.

PASSENGERS AND LUGGAGE BEING SHIFTED FROM THE BROAD GAUGE TO THE [illegible]

too late; your dog will chance to have his foot crushed between wheel barrows and porters' baskets—howling more terrifically than the engine itself; the foreigner "Got dams," in broken English, at the stolid porter who is carrying off his luggage; the best glass decanters to be presented to your host, fall and are cracked to atoms; your wife's medicine-chest is broken, and rhubarb, grey powder, and castor oil unnaturally mixed before their time; the orphans going to school at Cheltenham, lose their way in the crowd; and the old maid and her parrot are screeching at honest John for his passive inactivity amidst the turmoil. The reality far surpasses the bustle of our illustration. If your carriage-horses accompany you, they, too, must be shifted by dint of whip and cajollery—perchance "Highflyer," over-restive and impatient at the prospect of another Railway trip, protests so vehemently against a second caging, that he must needs be left behind, and kicking the bucket has sprained his leg; you resolve that no consideration will ever tempt you to bring your horses again by Railway, where there is "Break of Gauge."

The removal of goods, owing to the "Break of Gauge," is even more irksome than that of passengers. Where it does not absolutely prohibit the traffic, the transshipment involves loss, pilferage, detention, besides a money tax of from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per ton, as we learn from the statements of Messrs Pickford and Horne, the greatest carriers in the world. An "old carrier" thus graphically speaks of the contents of a goods train, and the shifting of them:—

It is found at Gloucester, that to transship the contents of one waggon full of miscellaneous merchandize from one Gauge to another, takes about [illegible] an hour, with all the force of porters you can put to work upon it! An ordinary train of waggons, [illegible] one hour [illegible] to follow one [illegible] waggons, such as bricks, slates, iron, coal, stone, and chalk, flags, clay, manure, salt, coal and coke, timber and deals, drywoods, iron, iron ore, lead and metals, cast-iron pots, grates and ovens, grindstones, brimstone, bones and hoofs, sulphur and sea-shells, oil cake, potatoes, cotton, and other vegetables, cheese, chairs and furniture, hard-ware, earthenware, dry salteries, groceries, provisions, cotton wool, oils, wines, spirits, and other liquids, manufactured goods, fish and mango, rice, &c. &c. Now let us contemplate the loss by damage done to the goods on this one train alone, by reason of the Break of Gauge causing the removal of every article. In the hurry the bricks are smashed, the slates chipped at the edges, the cheeses cracked, the ripe fruit and vegetables crushed and spoiled; the chairs, furniture, and oil cakes, cast iron pots, grates and ovens, all more or less broken: the coals turned into dust, the salt short of weight, scarcely a cask of wine deficient, and the fish no use for market. Whereas, if there had not been any interruption of Gauge, the whole train would, in all probability, have been at its destination long before the transfer of the last article, and without any damage or delay.

The pigs decidedly object to Break of Gauge, and oxen resist terrifically: two hours have been spent in transshipping one.—(Ev. 978.)

Our third illustration exhibits this process of transshipment, which may be seen upon, at the present time, every night and morning.

Palliatives have been proposed, but they are pronounced, by greatly preponderating evidence, to be decidedly impracticable. It was suggested, for example, to have loose carriages, removable, by a lifting machine, from one truck to another. It is answered, first, that "loose" carriages, for coals, &c., have already been tried on the Liverpool and Manchester, and Midlands, and given up. And, as respects the lifting machine, it is but one operation out of many requisite; and, to transship a train of 100 waggons, would require a man and horses to travel 50 miles! to ship on each waggon to the lifting machine.

Such are the results of interrupting the uniformity of the Railway Gauge. At present there is only one Break—at Gloucester; but, as the newly-sanctioned railways would at once increase the one to ten, and the projected increase the ten to thirty, Parliament stepped in, and, at the advice, the Crown appointed the Commissioners whose duty it was to inform our readers weeks ago, reported in favour of the necessity for having a UNIFORM GAUGE. There being already above 1900 miles of 4 feet 8½ inch gauge, and only 270 miles of 7 feet gauge, and as the broader gauge can be easily reduced whilst the smaller cannot be enlarged, and as the respective merits were, if not balanced, rather in favour of the NARROW Gauge for general purposes, the recommendation of the Commission was that the 4 feet 8½ inch gauge should henceforth be declared the NATIONAL GAUGE, and all railways made upon it.

It should not, however, be withheld that the Broad Gauge has been found to insure certain advantages over the Narrow; these are the increased power and speed of the engines, and the stability and convenience of the carriages; all which are strikingly evident on the Great Western Railway.

THE BREAK OF GAUGE.
RHYMES ON A RAIL.

GRAND OPENING CHORUS BY ALL HANDS.

Smash! dash! splash! crash!
Reading! writing! howling! growling!
Bawling, squalling, over-hauling,
Tearing, swearing, dell-may-caring,
Jabbering, gabbering, ladies blushing,
Crockery breaking, babies shrieking,
Hens steaming, parents screaming,
Earthly Pandemonia seeming.
Oh! the Gauge, the Gauge,
The Break of Gauge,
The crack in improvement of our age!

ARIA.

How sweet are the pleasures of training
From London to Liverpool town, Sirs,
Though, when you're half way—I am meaning
At Drummagan—there you go down, Sirs.
Arona'd from your slumber—your number
Forgotten—your baggage is trundled
Perhaps twenty miles o'er the Humber,
While you are towards Holyhead bundled!
Chorus Smash, crash—as above.

Here comes a dowager duchess
With pace and her parrot and chickey,
An Alderman deaf as his crutches,
A maestro in furious parley.
The sweet little maid and her brother—
Poor orphans! I sar, Love, hand in hand locks:
Here's a cabs roaring lusty—her mother
Amazed at the smash of her bandbox!
Chorus "con lerio" -Smash &c.

Such scenes our best feelings must harrow,
Or else they must speedily harden
The dog's gont is cured by the barrow;
Smashed phials ("wash care") from the Garden,
Pour out their sance for the fishes;
While over their innocent basket,
Rattle down glasses and dishes.
Roll'd off by the man in the casquette.
Chorus—Smash, ad. lib.

And now have the passengers entered
Their cribs, and away on the journey:
Peer, peasant, steed, ox, are encountered;
Dogs, boys, and a stagging attorney.
Through tunnels the steam vent is screeching;
They drive like the hurricane blind, sirs.
And now they're the terminus reaching,
With half of their luggage behind, sirs.

FINALE.

Smash—dash—plash mash;
Bawling—squalling—overwhirling;
Neighing braying not obeying;
Barking—larking—swell mob sharking;
Hogs squeaking—jarvies whipping;
Cabs and busses—glorious fusses;
Steaming — scheming — fighting — screaming—
Earthly Pandemonia seeming:
Oh! the Break—the Break—
The Break of Gauge—
The crack dodge of the Railing rage!

* Id. est.—Hatton.—Vide Bozzum

OPENING OF THE SOUTH DEVON RAILWAY.—This line of railway, the opening of which, from various causes, has been so long delayed, and which was originally intended to have been worked upon the pneumatic principle, was, on Saturday, opened as a locomotive line. The day was a remarkably fine one, and was celebrated as a holiday along the course of the line, which runs through a most picturesque and romantic portion of the county. The line, starting from Exeter, passes along some meadows, and follows the course of the Exe, giving some magnificent views of the city of Exeter, the extensive estuary of the Exe, the towns of Topsham, Lympstone, and Exmouth in the distance. On the other side of the river are seen Powderham Park and Castle, the seat of the Earl of Devon. After passing the Starcross Station, the appearance of the line becomes still more romantic, for you are carried apparently through the sea, the line running close to the mouth of the Exe; it then runs into a very deep cutting through the Langstone Cliffs, which are seen towering upwards of 100 feet above. After passing Dawlish that portion of the line is reached, in the construction of which, running close, as it does, along the sea-beach, so many difficulties have been encountered, and where, in the most assailable part, an immense buttress has been built to protect the line from the impulse of the sea. Having passed over the beach at Dawlish and through several tunnels, you arrive at Teignmouth, which is sufficiently well known as one of the most delightful watering-places upon the western coast of England. Here, on Saturday, the directors, &c., left Exeter at twenty-five minutes after twelve o'clock, being punctual to their departure, and during the whole of its progress, by the assembled multitude, and arrived at Teignmouth soon after one o'clock. The line is carried to be in a capital state, the carriages passing over it very smoothly, and with but little oscillation. By this opening the metropolis is connected directly with Teignmouth.

THE BRIGHTON AND LEWES AND BRIGHTON AND CHICHESTER BRANCH RAILWAYS.—It is intended to open the line throughout from Brighton to Chichester, on Monday next, and also the Brighton and Hastings line, as far as Lewes. The Lewes line branch off to the east of the London and Brighton Railway, immediately passing over a magnificent viaduct, second only to the celebrated Ouse viaduct on the London and Brighton line. A few weeks ago the centre arch of this viaduct gave away, but it has since been finished. The distance from Lewes to Brighton is about eight miles. The line from Leominster to Chichester is almost a dead level from Brighton to Chichester, and the arches on the line comprises even less cutting and embankment than that which is already open. The only work of magnitude on the line is the Telescope bridge over the ARUN. The line is in excellent working order, and great efforts are making to provide carriages for the approaching Goodwood races.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR JUNE.

WHO ARE "THE PEOPLE?"

A long time ago we imagined them to be something unpleasant: for their name was always coupled with a depreciative epithet. We heard of "Horrid People," and "Strange People," and "People nobody liked or visited;" and these were generally amongst the middle classes. Next, we set "The People" down as a mass of weak-minded individuals, from the things we saw especially addressed to them. Whenever anything was advertised for "The People," it was generally some cheap rubbish that only the elite could be expected to buy. "The People's Picture Gallery" was probably a reprint from worn-out plates, upon bad paper, of uninteresting subjects. "Holidays for the People" were chiefly characterised by crowds of the lower orders tumbling about in a street-fury, as has been on May evenings; meetings of thousands at dreary suburban festivals, ringing with the rude jollities riot, so nearly degenerating into absolute brutality, which, unhappily, characterises all the dull fêtes of the masses in England, compared to those on the continent; sweltering in close meeting-houses at the end of dirty courts, or National Pantheons, or Athenæums, or other patriotic temples, to swill weak infusions of cheap black tea, diluted with spoiled water, as they listened to the noisy gabble of uneducated professors of the "Tee-se-good-as-you" theories of social life; gaping through the British Museum, not from any interest they felt in the collection, but because there were thousands of things they did not understand to be seen there for nothing; and wasting their Easter-eves of the parliament to stream through the National Gallery and Hampton Court Palace, and stare at the pictures with precisely the same feelings as those with they would look at the paintings outside shows, with the exception that they would like the latter much the best; or returning in the evening—with very, very few exceptions—dusty, tired, and quarrelsome.—Albert Smith, in "Bentley's Miscellany."

THE CROSSING-SWEEPER.

The crossing-sweeper is the best of beggars, for he is of all the least a swindler. There can be no deception in the cleanliness of his crossing or the wear and tear of his broom. He only begs you to appreciate the value of dry feet, and is therein but an honourable rival of the apothecary, who may be called in to cure the evil which he prevents. There is something touching in seeing him often absorbed in the self imposed duties of his calling—if, indeed, that can be called a calling which is more distinguished by a ready will than alacrity. Sometimes, he who does the work of a slave without a slave's compulsion is the worthiest (because the most practical) advocate of the slave's emancipation. We say, then, there is some thing touching in the devotional, untiring zeal with which a crossing-sweeper will he follows up his adopted labour, sweeping away, right and left, and backwards and forwards, while "herds" of "fat and greasy citizens sweep on" in their selfish pursuits at best-speed or lazy pace, and with no more thought of him than of his patent shining boot, and Beauty, with her thin-soled sandal shoe, bid him, unrewarded, get out of the way which he has, as it were, carpeted for their comfort. Hob-nailed Hodge may call for sixpence for picking its way, only stamps from its feet the dirt it has collected from other quarters; and the equipage of Fashion rattles over it, contemptuously flinging the off-cast mud into the eyes of the sweeper, who is only left to recover his sight and sweep away again.—Fraser's Magazine.

MONEY.

One would think, from the various synonyms used to signify money, whereby the direct mention of it is in a manner shirked, that it was something of which people are ashamed. Men shrink, in conversation, from naming it outright, and flirt at it, covertly, as the "needful," the "stumpy," or the "ready;" as if the thing alluded to were of an indelicate nature. They describe it by initials, as £ s. d.; and, perhaps, in time, they will come to express it by asterisks. Nay, they defame it by vile and disparaging phrases, such as "dross" and "filthy lucre." Rascals and novelists, in particular, are always separating and decrying it, in a manner which is at least unfair; for they speak ill of it, mostly, on very sligh acquaintance. They call it "sordid pelf," and say that "riches, the incentives to evil, are dug out of the earth." Well, so are potatoes dug out of the earth, and they are just as much, and no more, the incentives to gluttony, as riches are to evil, to those who are over-fond of them; and the only sordidness of pelf is derived from the hand that stretches it. Far be it from us to defend the love of money, considered as a blind passion, which we frankly admit to be the root of all evil, but we must put in a gentle plea for a sensible, well-regulated regard for it. "Wine is a mocker, and strong drink is raging," an equal claim on our affection have the means by which wine is procured.—Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

THE MONTH OF JUNE.

June is the month for hay-making; but as we are told to make hay when the sun shines, we think Vauxhall Gardens should be prohibited from opening, if the regular business of hay-making is to be proceeded with. The poppy now pops upon the field, and the jay looks at us with its great eyes from the trees in our garden. The butterfly also makes his appearance; and the common fly, by a strange instinct, sets to in butter. The first owl may be seen about the middle of the month, by those who desire an interview. The bird is "at home," in the branches of an oak, almost every evening. Several kinds of corn come into the ear in June, and various kinds of dust will come into the eye, if care is not taken.—Almanack of the Month.

THE GRAVE OF TWO SISTERS.

Fairer—than sleep beneath this stone,
God never lent to earth;
Nor e'er recalled, to serve in his throne,
Spirits of purer worth.

Thus I rest it still—our treasures vanish.
R ssmed as soon as given:
Back to the skies, earth's sorrows banish
Fach angel guest from heaven.

A fond and lovely pair they grew,
Sisters in more than name;
Twin minds, twin hearts that never knew
A separate thought or aim.

And sad, indeed, would be our doom,
Were friends to meet no more
Partage, in mystery and gloom,
Of the fatal sore re.

Nor parted now—one fate! one home!
They slumber side by side:
Till the last hour of time be come
None ever shall divide.

Were there not sent, to calm our fears,
Glad tidings from the skies,
Of worlds, where God shall wipe the tears
For ever from all eyes.
Dublin University Magazine.

FACETIÆ OF THE BENCH AND BAR.

One day that Dunning (whose exterior graces were by no means commensurate with his personal quality) had been cross-examining a young woman at considerable length upon the age of a person with whom she professed herself acquainted, he asked her, "How old, now, do you take me to be?" and was considerably dumbfounded by her promptly replying, to the universal laughter of a crowded court, "From your appearance, sixty; from your question, sixteen." The eminent * *, who, as all the world knows, was the son of the Earl of *, was walking in Lincoln's Inn-fields with a witty Chief Commissioner; "I must step into Green's Hotel, and get a Sandwich," he observed; "Right, right," rejoined his companion, "one good turn deserves another."—Of an able lawyer who had been spoken of as becoming himself qualified for the Solicitor Generalship, but who, in speech, was in the habit of dropping with the pronunciation of the letter H, * * remarked that "he wished Z would aspirate more, and aspire less."—The same learned and ingenious perpetrator of pleasantries had to attend an evening consultation with a political opponent, Sir * , Lon Attorney-General, and, for that purpose, took a premature leave of a large dinner party. It happened to be an opera night: one of the company observed, "I suppose you are going to the 'Puritani' to-night?" "No, I am going to hear 'Lucy,'" replied the punster.— *, to whose other qualifications, the graces of personal appearance are no trifling addition, had the misfortune to be thrown out of one of Hansom's safety cabs, and to receive injuries about the face, to the great temporary detriment of its comeliness. A learned and facetious Sergeant-at-Law, M.P. for an Irish city, meeting * * shortly after the accident, and, hearing the cause of it, observed, "Well, it cannot be said, in your case, that blemishes is that Hansom does."—* * was speaking to Sir * * with much complacency of a lately purchased estate, and in his newly awakened taste for agricultural pursuits, dilated at some length upon his farm and pigs. "Suck to the fee farm and guinea pigs," interrupted the other. Dolman's Magazine.

MAY FAIR MARRIAGES.

Marriages at the May Fair Chapel were almost as notorious as those of the Fleet and on that they become the rival, locally, took place in one year; a circumstance that hastened the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act. The chapel, on the site of which now stands Curzon Chapel, the Duke of Kingston was married to Miss Chudleigh, as was the famous Duchess of Hamilton to Hon. Mr Shirley, and the Duke of Hamilton to the beautiful Miss Gunning. The registers form three folio volumes, closely and dearly written, and now remain with the parish books at St. George's, Hanover-square.—The Spectator.

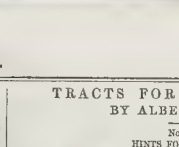
REPRESENTATION OF THE BLOOD ROYAL OF ENGLAND.

Charles I, it will be remembered, left by Henrietta Maria, his Queen, daughter of Henry IV. of France, three sons and two daughters, Charles II, James II, Henry, Duke of Gloucester, who died in 1660, Mary, wife of William of Orange, and Henrietta Maria, who married in 1661, Philip, Duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIV. Of the sons of the martyred King the only one who left legitimate issue, was James II, and he had, to survive infancy, two daughters by his first wife, Queen Mary and Queen Anne, and a son, James Francis Edward, known in history as the Chevalier St George, who married, in 1719, Mary Casmantine, daughter of Prince James Sobieski, and died in 1766, leaving two sons, Charles Edward, "Bonny Prince Charlie," who married, by his wife the Princess Stolberg of Germany; and Henry Benedict, Cardinal York. At the decease of this prelate in 1807, the whole issue of James II. became extinct, and the representation of the Royal Stuarts vested in Victor Emmanuel, King of Sardinia, the great-great-grandson of Henrietta Maria, Duchess of Orleans. That lady, whom we have before mentioned as the youngest daughter of Charles I, left a daughter, Anne-Marie-Louise d'Orleans, who married Victor Amadeus II, King of Sardinia, and was mother of Charles-Emmanuel III, whose son, Victor Amadeus III, left, with a daughter, Maria Theresa, wife of Charles X. of France, and grandmother of the Comte de Chambord, a son, Charles-Emmanuel, who became, at the decease of Cardinal York, representative of the Royal House of Stuart. He left four daughters, Beatrice, Duchess of Modena, Theresa, Duchess of Lucca, Anne, Empress of Austria, and Christina, Queen of Naples. Of these ladies, the eldest, the Duchess of Modena, died in 1840, and was succeeded by her son, Francis, Duke of Modena, in whom now vests the representation of the Stuarts. Our present Queen, Victoria, and Louis Philippe, King of the French, are seventh in descent from the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I., the former deriving from her marriage with Sophia, Electress of Hanover, and the latter from her son, Charles Louis, Elector Palatine.—The Patrician

TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.
BY ALBERT SMITH.

NO. VI.

HINTS FOR JULLIEN.



S M. Jullien has advertised Concerts d'Eté at Covent Garden, we are anxious to suggest a subject to him for a new Set of Quadrilles. The national musical repertoires of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, have been used up; so has everything connected with the Army and Navy; China has been laid under contribution; and so have Mr. Dickens's "Chimes" and "Cricket." The question is, what will he have next? We think we can recommend a set which can combine all sorts of novel effects. We call them "The Greenwich Fair Quadrilles," and these will be added "The Whitebait Waltzes" This is the order of them.

THE GREENWICH FAIR QUADRILLES.

No. 1. (Le Pantalon). LONDON BRIDGE. The old tune of "London Bridge is broken down," with the accompanying apparently inhuman dance over Lady Lea whoever that ill-used person was—will furnish the air of this figure, at certain intervals of which a discharge of steam will take place, and a bell will ring, as in the finale to "The Chimes"

No. 2 (L'Eté). THE STEAM-BOAT BAND.—This figure is arranged entirely for a cornet, fiddle, and harp, and consequently of "Love not," "Still so gently o'er me stealing," an air from "La Fille du Regiment," and the original "polka" —all played with such variations as the ear of the performer may desire. At times the cornet will not be heard, and he is then supposed to be collecting halfpence. A pleasing effect is introduced in the middle by the popping of gingerbeer corks; and the band, instead of buzzing, as in the "British Navy," will at times call out "Ease her!" "Turn a starn!" and "Now, ma'am, if you please!"

No. 3. (La Pipe) THE POOL.—Composed of music of all nations, to represent the different ships—with a singular effect in the orchestra for imitating the noise of the shooting of coals into a lighter at the end of every figure. The music will be Scotch, French, Dutch, Belgian, and English, played as the company are supposed to pass the steamers, City of Aberdeen, City of Boulogne, Batavier, Antwerpen, and Ocean. A coda is added of "Rule Britannia," as embellished of the Dreadnought hospital ship and the sick seamen; as the showman observes, "to keep up the patriotic sentiments, whilst ruling the waves."

No. 4 (La Pastorale). ONE TREE HILL.—A series of married airs, beginning slow, and increasing to great rapidity in the style of the Ethiopian's Galopse; to typify reaching the hill. The following are introduced are "Sometimes about a Turnip" (Macbeth); "Off she goes" (Anon); "Farewell to the mountain" (Barnet); "Get out of the way" (Virgil); and "One little kiss" (Ballet).

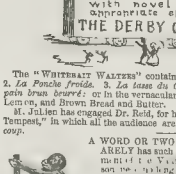
5. La Finale. THE FUN OF THE FAIR.—Every player first provides himself with the fifth instrument here represented, which he runs down the back of the performer in front of him, the whole of the resources of the orchestra are then brought into play. M. Jullien himself performing on the penny whistle and musical pear, Koenig on the fourpenny tin posthorn, Laurent on the harvest fiddle, Chipp on the long drum at Richardson's, and Beaumont on the monster bassoon of Algar's.

The others will, from time to time, cry out through speaking trumpets, as they ring bells and beat gongs, "Hoy! hoy!" "Be in time, there; be in time!" "All in to begin!" "There is no deception!" and "Tee-r-r-r-r reopence each!" The set winds up with a grand conglomeration of all these things at once.

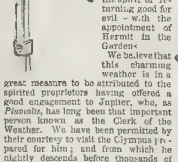
By the way, as beyond doubt this set will make a great hit, we advise M. Jullien to make a last grand splash with an advertising cart before they are done away with. Let it be something beyond anything ever yet attempted for magnitude. We already know his intentions, and hasten to lay them before our readers, like a Derby prophet, with the exception that our prophecy will come to pass.



The "WHITEBAIT WALTZES" contain five figures, viz.: 1. L'Eau souchet 2. La Panche Fredo. 3. La lasse du Cydre. 4. Le Citron. 5. and coda, La pain brun beurre: or in the vernacular, Water Sude, Cold Punch, Cyder Cup, Lemons, and Brown Bread and Butter.

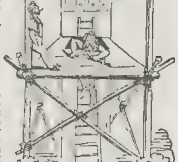
M. Jullien has engaged Dr. Reid, for his help in a grand selection from "The Tempest," in which all the audience are to be blown head over heels as a last coup.

A WORD OR TWO ON VAUXHALL.

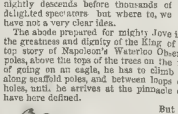


ARELY has such fine weather ushered in the commencement of a Vauxhall season. The chronicles of its season are a catalogue of an open air work in Mr Bobbin's Mercury. Indeed, the Vauxhall season is not finally [illegible] in connexion with wet weather for their burlesques—(there is still a chance with the Horticultural Fête), and there is a prospect of St Swithun being deserted as an old humbug not to be depended on, and charitably provided in the spirit of returning good for evil—with the appointment of Hermit in the Gardens.

We believe that this charming weather is in a great measure to be attributed to the spirited proprietors having offered a good engagement to Jupiter, who, as Pisanio, has long been that important person known as the Clerk of the Weather. We have been permitted by their courtesy to visit the Olympus prepared for him; and from the top of one of the nightly decorated before thousands of delighted spectators but where to, we have not a very clear idea.



The abode prepared for mighty Jove is not in accordance with our ideas of the greatness and dignity of the King of Gods and Men. It is something like the top story of Napoleon's Warrior Column, erected on additional scaffold poles, above the tops of the trees on the firework ground. To reach it, instead of going on an eagle, he has to climb up ladders, and over branches, and along scaffold poles, and between logs of cedar, under planks, and through holes, until he arrives at the pinnacle of his temple in the manner which we have here defined.



But this, compared with his decent amidst squibs and crackers, is meant by the ingenious proprietors to carry out a high moral lesson—that we must not be deceived by the high position of many who dazzle us in the world, for it has often been obtained by wriggling out of the attraction, when he will be carried to the moon, and, perhaps, ultimately take up his abode there with the lunatics popularly supposed to inhabit that planet.

On Monday the Paris Academy of Sciences proceeded to the election of a foreign member in place of M. Bessel, astronomer of Konigsburg. M Jacobi, geometrician of Berlin, having obtained all the votes but one, was declared to be duly elected.

DANGER OF READING IN BED.—On Monday night an inquest, adjourned from Saturday, was resumed, and concluded, before Mr. Higgs, at the King's Head, Park-lane, Clapham, on the body of John Milner, Esq., aged forty-two, of Atkins-road. Two witnesses were examined, one Mr. Ord, surgeon, who proved that the deceased died from erysipelas, consequent on the burns he had received; and the other Charlotte Northfield, the housemaid, who stated that the deceased was in the habit of reading in bed, and that the cause of the fire was his letting the candle fall. Verdict, "That the deceased died from burns accidentally received by a candle setting fire to his bed furniture while reading in bed." Deceased was a stockbroker, and much respected in the City.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Symphonies performed at the sixth Concert on Monday last, were MOZART'S in E flat, and Beethoven's in A No. 7. The minuetto of the former was encored, and a strong disposition was evinced to hear the andante twice. It was not, however, quite so well rendered. The difficulties in No. 7 are enormous, and require the utmost steadiness and presence of mind in a conductor. The breaks are so frequent, the surprises so startling and constant, that the least indecision in taking up the points would cause a scramble. This has been almost invariably the case on former occasions, but Costa's genius triumphed over all perils, and never were Beethoven's imaginings so superbly interpreted. Mr. LODER'S overture of "The Regicide" did not meet with a warm reception. Executed at a rehearsal, it would be no doubt a characteristic introduction to the opera, the story of which is ARTAXERXES, treated by Dr ARNE, who stole his ideas from VINCI. But a Philharmonic audience, habituated to the marvellous overtures of WEBER, CHERUBINI, Beethoven, &c., will not listen to any but first-rate inspirations in that case. THE Mr. LODER, albeit an excellent musician, suffered by comparisons. It was, however, quite right to pay the compliment to a native composer.

SPOHR'S MS Concertante for two violins, viola, and violoncello was well executed by Blagrove, Willy, Hill and Lucas; but the work was tiresome and ineffective, quite unworthy of the distinguished composer. It was written as a compliment to the Society of British Musicians.

M. LAVIGNE'S Ode Fantasia, on a mountain theme of the celebrated Brod, was much applauded. His tone is beautiful, and his execution admirable. BEETHOVEN'S "Egmont" Overture completed the instrumental treat. The vocalists were HERR PISCHEK and MISS DOLBY, the former singing GLUCK'S scena from "Ifingenia in Aulis," noticed in our columns last week, and the second scena of SPOHR'S "Faust," "Wie ist mir?" and the latter a charming air by MERCADANTE, "A te nede." MISS DOLBY was never in such good voice, and evinced marked improvement in her style. Her vocalisation was quite artistical. We need scarcely add that the exertions of the great baritone were unsparing, and that he elicited the heartiest greetings. The room was crowded to excess, and the interest in these concerts appears to increase nightly.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The programme, on Tuesday evening, comprised Onslow's Quintet in A minor, sur 3 ; played by SIVORI (first violin), M. DELORME (second ditto), HILL (viola), HERR KELLERMANN (violoncello), and HOWELL (contra-bass). This was followed by a very clever Trio in G, No. 3, for violin, violoncello, and piano, newly composed, and dedicated to the composer, Mr OSBORNE. MOZART'S Quintet in G minor was allotted to SIVORI, HILL, and NADAUD (tenors), and HERR KELLERMANN. The beauty and precision of the entire performance won repeated plaudits from a distinguished assemblage of amateurs and artists.

The Concert for Mr. ELLA, the Director, is fixed for the 23rd instant.

CONCERTS.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.—The annual public rehearsal and performance of HANDEL'S "Messiah," for the benefit of this invaluable institution, took place, the former on Monday morning, and the latter on Wednesday evening, at the Hanover-square Rooms, and we are happy to state that both attracted large audiences. SIR H. R. BISHOP conducted; and the vocalists who gave their gratuitous aid were Madame Caradori Allan, Misses Rainforth, Hawes, Dolby; Messrs J. Bennett, Lockey, A. Novello, and Machin. The Band and Chorus of the Ancient Concerts also afforded their valuable assistance, and the performances was under the patronage of the Royal and Noble Directors.

SIGNOR BRIZZI.—The Annual Concert of this tenor, who is an excellent musician, in Harley-street, was well attended on Monday morning. He was assisted by Signori Emiliani (violoncello), PUZZI (Horn), and Mr. F. Chatterton (harp). The vocalists were Madame Caradori Allan, Madame Claire Heneelle, Madame F. Lablache, Mrs. Toulmin, Miss Dolby, Mdlle. Rosellin, Mdlle. Goldberg; Signor Costa, Signor F. Lablache, Herr Goldberg, Herr Pischek, Dr. Benedict, Mdlle. Nau-de Glimes, and Signori Orsini and Pilotti, were the accompanyists. A MS Romance, composed by Signor Gabussi, was sung with much taste by BRIZZI.

HERR WILHELM KUHE.—This clever artist, the pianist to H. S. Serene Highness the Prince of Hohenzahern-Hechingen, gave an agreeable Matinée Musicale, in Harley-street, and displayed his classical powers in studies by Chopin and Moscheles, and his executive ability in two fantasias—one on Pischek's favourite airs, and the other on the "Chimes" and "God Save the Queen." He was assisted by Parish Alvars in a brilliant harp solo, Herr Kel ermann in one of his expressive violoncello pieces, and, in the vocal selects, by Herr Pischek, Mdlle. Goldberg, Herrn Pischek, Hoelzel, and Goldberg, and by a Signor Felice Pianco. Mr. Moscheles was the accompanyist.

MISS M. B. HAWES.—The annual concert of this clever vocalist was extremely well attended on Tuesday evening. The respect entertained for her may be imagined, when we mention that she was honoured by the patronage of Queen Adelaide, the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Cambridge, and a long list of noble fashionables and M.P's. The programme contained several gems lately sung with such success at the Vocal Concerts, in which MISS HAWES afforded evidence of her great qualities. She also sang several of her popular ballads with equal success. We only regret that she did not introduce one specimen of the sacred school, in which she is unrivalled. She was aided by Mrs. E. Birch, Mdlle. Lucy, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Hobbs, Lockey, Hodda, and Phillips, Herr Pischek, and John Parry. The sole instrumental performers were Mrs. Anderson (pianoforte), Master D'Auvergne (violoncello), Mr. F. Chatterton (harp), and Mr. Lindley (double bass). Mr. Moscheles conducted the first part, and Mr. Brizzi the second act.

MR. HAGEMANN.—This able violoncello player had his soirée on Wednesday, and afforded specimens of his varied abilities in a Fantasia of his own composition, and one by Kummer, in a Quintet by Hummel, a Trio by Mayseder, and in the obligato Lanciner's song, "Dar Waldvöglein," sung by Madame Caradori Allan. Benedict and Charles Horsley were the conductors, and the beneficiaire had the advantage of the instrumental talents of Madame Dulcken and Mrs. Goffrie (pianistas), Willy (viola), Herr Kellermann, Lucas, and Piatti (violoncellos), Hill (double clarionet), and C. Severn (contra-basso). One of Romberg's duets for two violoncellis was finely executed by Kellermann and Hagemann. The vocalists were Madame Knyvett, Mdlle. Schloss, Madame Caradori Allan, Mdlle. Nau-de Glimes, Herr Pischek and Heizel.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—On Friday evening Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was performed, being the quarterly anniversary of its first execution. The vocalists were Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Rainforth, Messrs. Lockey, Rafter, and Phillips.

MR. JOHN PARRY.—We were unable to record the doings of this unparalled buffo singer in our last number, at his Annual Concert on the 26th ult. It was, perhaps, the best of the season in a financial point of view; although there were exhibitions by certain artists which might have been dispensed with: but, on the other hand, there were MISS DOLBY, MISS Rainforth, MISS HAWES, the MISSES Williams, Madame Thilon, MISS Messent, HERR Pischek, and Mr. J. Calkin, to console the hearer for every contrariety. The Distin Family, Messrs. Distin, Sedgrove, Thomas, R. Sedgrove, and Hausmann, were the solo instrumentalists of note, and Benedict and Negri were the accompanyists. But the great items of the evening were the launches of two scenas: the music arranged by John Parry, and the matter concocted by Albert Smith. The speciality of these peculiar songs is now too well known to require elaborate description. Our columns afford evidence of the powers of observation of our colleague Mr. Albert Smith. He has a happy facility in noting down the absurdities of everyday life, and his jokes are of an unexceptionable order. Mr. John Parry's part in the astonishing scenas was inimitable. He is a genius of the first water, whose every school of music is familiar. He has three distinct qualities of voice, which enable him to imitate the high notes of the soprano, and the deep ones of the bass, while the intervening tenor register, in a most extraordinary manner ("the Connambuna," (a Mexican, opera composed) and the "Family Argument" (Foreign Affairs) will be acceptable additions to his répertoire. We prefer the former, as we think so one of Albert Smith's pieces of fun equal to the delineation of Henry Russell's "Manuel song," "I saw her walking on the wall," elicited peals of laughter. We may add that John Parry is as much esteemed for his excellent private qualities as he has been distinguished in the profession. It is not that he is a worthy son of a most worthy man, Mr. Parry, the active and indefatigable Manager of the Charitable Society, which affords a refuge to the Musician in the days of misfortune, and a consolation in the widow and orphan's home, is supported by Madame Thilon, Miss Hawes, Miss Dolby, Miss E. Birch, Herr Pischek, Signor Marras, and John Parry. The accompanyists were Negri and Benedict, and the solo players were F. Chatterton, Harry and Richard, and Mr. Alma Dulcken on the Piano

MR. ELLIS ROBERTS.—The annual concert of this skilful Welsh Harper was well attended, and he presented a good programme for his supporters.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The Niederrheinische Musikfest, or Annual Meeting of the musicians of the Lower Rhine, took place on Sunday and Monday last, at Aix-la-Chapelle, which town came in regular rotation. On the first day, MOZART'S symphony in A, and HAYDN'S "Creation" were performed; and, on the second, Handel "Alexander's Feast," Beethoven's C Minor Symphony, Weber's "Oberon" Overture, and a Motett by Cherubini. The principal vocalists were the famous soprano, Mdlle. Lind; Herr Staudigl, the Munich singer, the Messrs. Herr Conrad, the Frankfort baritone, and Herr Unger, the basso of Aix-la-Chapelle. Mendelssohn conducted, and the performances were full of great spirit. The Concertos were chiefly composed of solos and, as the same who sang at the Rhein Beethoven Inaugural in last August; and this band and singers altogether amounted to nearly the number of our "Sacred Harmonic Society."

DEATH OF MISS WAGSTAFF.—This vocalist, a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, for some time, a professor of singing, at Leamington, is no more. She died of consumption. She was one of the favourites of the late Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, and a violinist for many years in the Philharmonic and Ancient Concert and Opera orchestras

VIENNA NEWS.—This musical city is now on a provincial tour, but will return to town to perform at the next Philharmonic Concert, and at the future meetings of the Musical Union. He is now first violinist to the Russian Court.

THE DARMSTADT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—Great preparations are making for the meeting which commences August 24. HANDEL'S "Messiah" will be given as usual, on the last day (Friday). A portion of Beethoven's "Mass Solennelle" in D will be performed. Rietz has composed a psalm, and VOGELWEIDER'S new oratorio will be executed for the first time, under the direction of the composer. The Committee have engaged GRISI, MARIO, and F. LABLACHE; and BENEDICT is to conduct the music sung by the Italian artists—a most judicious arrangement!

PAULINE GARCIA VIARDOT.—This celebrated vocalist has returned to Paris from St. Petersburgh, but has suffered so much from the climate, that she will not return to Russia again

MUSICAL MEETINGS.—Madame DULCKEN'S Morning Concert was given yesterday, but we must reserve our notice until next week.—This morning Mrs. A. SLOMAN'S Farewell Concert at the Hanover square Rooms; and Pauline Lang's Matinée in Harley-street.—On Monday morning CIPRIANI POTTER'S Concert at the same room as Pauline Lang's, and Mr. F. CHATTERTON'S at the Portman Rooms. In the evening the seventh meeting of the Beethoven Society, and Madame THILLON'S début at the Haymarket. On Friday, Mr. H. WYLDE'S Sacred Musicale; and first night of M. JULIEN'S Concerts.—On Saturday morning, Philharmonic Rehearsal of the ninth Concert, at which VIEUXTEMPS and Madame DULCKEN will play.—Opera, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Her Majesty's Theatre; and every night at Drury Lane Theatre.—Linton's Opera of "Scadella" will be produced to night.

WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY.—Out of fifteen works sent in for adjudication for the prize of ten guineas for the best madrigal after the Ancient Masters, that of Mr. JAMES CALKIN, the violoncello player and composer, was selected as the winner. The seventh annual festival will be celebrated at Freemasons' Hall on the 19th instant, when the successful madrigal will be performed.

MR. CALKIN.—This musician and composer, an Irishman by birth, who resides at Paris, where he is much respected, has arrived in town for the season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.—LISZT was still giving concerts in Vienna: his tenth and last concert was on the 24th ult. A new opera, called "LA VESTALE," by Mad. BAU," had been successfully produced at the Salle Favart, the music by M. Duche, the husband of Madame Duche, the actress.

THE THEATRES.

We cannot call to mind a WHIT-MONDAY on which so little a stir was made in the theatrical world. With the exception of the two houses mentioned below the managements appeared to be unusually inactive; and, consequently, the audiences were scanty, and anything but spirited. Besides the want of attraction, this may, however, be attributed to the lovely weather and the opening of several fresh places of amusement. The steamboats bore their hundreds of thousands up and down the river, swarming like bees on every available position; all the railways sent out trains, in some cases literally a quarter of a mile in length, and even longer, were seat counted. The road to Hampton Court, at one time, looked like a Derby Day of nothing but vans; and every Hansom and village about London seems, by its dancing booths and tents, to have holiday makers. We cannot quarrel with them for giving a preference to blue skies, soft cool turf, and pure air, over the gaudy ceilings, close boxes, and can be used atmosphere of a theatre.

DRURY-LANE.—There was no novelty at this house; on the other hand, the performances were worse than worn out, and the thinly scattered audience in the same condition Long before they concluded the company themselves looked below the management appeared to be unusually inactive; and, consequently, the audiences were scanty, and anything but spirited. Besides the want of attraction, this may, however, be attributed to the lovely weather and the opening of several fresh places of amusement. The steamboats bore their hundreds of thousands up and down the river, swarming like bees on every available position; all the railways sent out trains, in some cases literally a quarter of a mile in length, and even longer, with every seat occupied full of gratitude, makes an offering of half-a-crown to the Genius, who, unaccustomed to the sight of such a lump of money, cannot, at first, believe that it is intended for him to keep, but asks, with an air of primitive simplicity, if his "Honour" wishes him to run to the town—only five miles off—to get it changed. The conclusion which the Angling Tourist draws from this adventure is that the flies which he first tried were not suited to that particular stream—that there was something about their form and colour that the trouts did not like, and that the Genius was snubbed to dress a killing fly from his accurate knowledge of their particular taste at the time. In all such cases, however, the conclusion that we generally draw is, either that the Angling Tourist was a mere novice in fly-fishing, and that the flies which he used, till he was taught better by the Genius, were such as no trout would take, in similar weather and water, in any part of the world; or that if his flies were such as would tempt trout, in similar weather and water, either in Scotland or England, his success, after using the fly of the Genius, was not owing to any thing peculiar in its colour or form, but to the disposition of the trout, after a certain time of day, to feed. In such narratives, we are also inclined to suspect that the whole truth is not always exactly told: the interval between the change of the unsuccessful for the successful fly is not particularly noted; and it is possible that more than one cast was made with the latter before a fish was hooked. The mistake of concluding "post hoc, ergo propter hoc," is made by Anglers, as well as others, even in the present day. The old fisherman, who did not merely date, but also inferred, the increase of the Goodwin Sands, from the erection of Tenterden Steeple, is not a solitary instance of human weakness in ascribing an effect to a wrong cause.

FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

As our paper is now exhausted and our pen stumped out, the ROACH and GUDGEON, which appear to solicit our attention, must bide our time till next month, when they will afford better sport than at present. In the meantime, whoever pleases may try to catch them, and so while away an hour or two very pleasantly in a punt.

X. Y.

FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

FASHION has been defined as "a species of tacit agreement of society, decided by the numbers in its favour;" but yet, the reality in the present day would seem to be just the converse, for what every one wears cannot be adopted by a true élégante; and it only needs, in behalf of novelties, that they should be in good taste, and that the leaders of high society should adopt them. If their example be not followed by the many, so much the better. The summer season has at length arrived. To the belle, as well as to the modiste, the month of June brings ideas of light and fairy-like costumes, of brilliant colours and aërial textures. We will now endeavour to describe them.

Bonnets for the morning and for the promenade are no longer in the Pamela shape, for the latter met with too much opposition; those now worn, however, are rather a modification of the Pamela than a complete change. The new bonnets are all made in crape, covered with bouillonés of tulle. They are extremely light, and on almost all of them are placed several light feathers in the most delicate colours. They are generally marabouts, knotted and shaded, forming, as it is called, en rouage at the side, and intermixed with gauze or crape ribbons. The favourite colour is that pecul ar blue called China blue, or, in Paris, "bleu de Nemours," because it is admirably becoming to the fair hair of the charming Princess whose name it bears. The other colours in vogue for transparent bonnets are maxarine violet, straw colour, bordering on maize, American green, sky blue, paon green, and écru. To form an idea of the extreme elegance of these bonnets they should be seen at the great Magasins, such as that of Vouillon and Lauré. Capotes of a heavier description are made of half lace and half silk, ornamented with flowers. The favourite colours are Turkish pink, sapphire blue, china green, and black and pink. But, for the morning promenade, the bonnet still principally worn is of light straw, almost without pattern. Singular names are given to some of the novelties in this line; one of the most substantial species of these bonnets is called "Chemin de fer" straw bonnets are in rather close shapes. They are trimmed with handsome lace ribbons, black and pink, azure blue and black, straw colour and black, poncean and black, and are lined in crape, without flowers. Others, in white plaited straw, have the crown covered with silk: they have been named "Olga" bonnets. This name, since such an immense quantity of purchases were made in Paris for the daughter of the Emperor of Russia, has become quite magical. This is not surprising, as £20,000 worth of dresses, &c., were bought for the trousseau of her Royal Highness.

For evening head-dresses, petits riens, made of ribbon, brocaded with gold-lace and fringe, are very much worn. There is no specific rule for the form; the best in these cases, is to choose that which is the most becoming to the fair wearer. Wreaths of flowers still hold the supremacy for evening parties and balls, and they are now so exquisitely made, and so becoming, that they will, probably, long remain in vogue. The bouquets to be worn on the front of the boddice are made very large, and, for trimming the skirts of the dress, large flowers, such as dahlias, full blown roses, branches of accacia, auriculas, lilacs, and many others, are used. Green leaves are also much worn; and, when well shaded, produce a charming effect by candle-light.

Besides the crape and iris gauze dresses, looped up with flowers, those made in crape or tarlatan, embroidered in various styles, sometimes in imitation of straw, are much worn. The most recherché colours are mallin lilac, Turkish pink, English green, and sky blue.

For morning, dinner, and evening dresses, there are such a number of new and extraordinary materials, that it would be useless to attempt to describe them. For morning wear, shot foulards, lilac and white, brown and white, Nemours blue and white, are extremely pretty; as are also the dresses in écru, striped with shaded violet and white, dark and light green, pink and black, besides many other mixtures.

The gros d'Italies glacés are also much worn. Those in dust colour mixed with lilac, with sapphire blue, dark chesnut, or lilac and green, have a sort of moss-like effect, which has quite become the rage amongst our élégantes.

LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF THE CORNHILL AND LIME-STREET WARDS' CHARITY SCHOOL-HOUSE.

THE olden festival of Whitsuntide was commemorated in a truly Christian spirit, on Tuesday last, in the above locality of the City of London, by founding a building, wherein the children of the poor are to be usefully educated. The district is one of considerable importance; comprehending, as it does, the two mercantile Wards of Cornhill and Lime-street: and the inhabitants appear to have been, for more than a century and a quarter past, alive to the duty and interest of educating their poorer neighbours; a school for which purpose was established here so early as the year 1710. The small foundation has been, from time to time, nurtured by the bounty of public companies and the bequests of benevolent individuals; and, in "the book of accounts," we find one of the largest contributions to have been made anonymously by a lady, who would have "blushed to find it fame." It is pleasurable to point to this early educational provision by the citizens of London; were it only to counteract the erroneous notion, that east of Temple Bar, the education of the many has been less attended to than the gratification of the few. On the contrary, charity, which is "all mankind's concern," is the brightest beam of our splendid civic hospitalities, as the walls of every church and hall testify in letters of gold—thus reading, through ages, a bright lesson of love to succeeding generations.

THE CORNHILL AND LIME-STREET WARDS' NEW SCHOOL-HOUSE.

Akin to this feeling were our sentiments as we paced the finely embellished church of St. Andrew Undershaft, in Leadenhall-street, last Tuesday afternoon; and there awaited the arrival of the civic authorities, to proceed to the business of the day. Soon after four o'clock, the procession was formed in the nave. We have not room for the Programme: it includes the 40 girls and 40 boys of the Schools; the Contractors for the new building, with mallet, level, &c.; the Architect (Mr. Samuel Angell), with plans, &c.; the Treasurer, with Silver Trowel (Thomas Bridge Simpson, Esq.); and the lecturers, curates, and rectors of the three parishes, (St. Michael, St. Peter, and St. Andrew); the churchwardens and school committee. Then came the City Marshals; Mr. Sheriff Chaplin, in his robes; the Alderman (Farebrother) of Lime-street Ward; the Mace-bearer and Sword-bearer; the Lord Mayor and his Chaplain, in their robes; and the Common Council ex officio Members of the Committee, in their mazarine gowns. It is true that all this ceremonial was but to lay the foundation of a moderately-sized house; but there was a sanctity of purpose in the proceeding worthy of all honour.

In this order, then, the procession advanced to an inclosed piece of ground on the west side of St. Mary-Axe, the site of the old Church of St. Mary the Virgin, and St. Ursula and the Ten Thousand Virgins, which parishes were united to that of St. Andrew Undershaft, about the year 1561. There were the usual preparations on the ground: seats were reserved for the ladies, to witness the ceremony; forms were provided for the children; and the stone was made ready to receive the plans, &c. The Lord Mayor, Sheriff Chaplin, and Alderman Farebrother, Architect and Treasurer, the Clergy, Common Councilmen, &c.; then took up their positions around the stone, and proceeded with the ceremony, in which prayer and benediction were appropriately the leading features. The stone being "laid," there were placed upon it a girl and a boy from the school; the girl read an address to the Lord Mayor; the whole of the children sung the Old 100th Psalm, and the ceremony concluded.

In the evening, a goodly party of some sixty gentlemen dined together at the London Tavern, to commemorate the event, and, in furtherance of the object of the Charity; the Lord Mayor presided, and most persuasively pleaded in aid of the School Funds. The subscription for rebuilding the School-house, we learned from Mr. Simpson, the indefatigable Treasurer, to be still considerably deficient of the outlay; and, notwithstanding two years' exertions of the Committee, of 750 mercantile firms in the district, only about 230 had contributed to the Building Fund. In the list of subscribers, we were pleased to find the Hon. East India Company, £150. The current of charity, however, flowed freely after dinner, so as to reduce the deficiency to a sum by no means intimidating to the movers in the good work. The healths of the officers of the Charity and of the Right Hon. Chairman were most cordially drunk; the school children were introduced; and what with the exuberance of the cause, and the palatable means taken for its success, a very agreeable evening was the result: it was enlivened by some good singing by Messrs. George, Moody, &c.

We annex an Engraving of Mr. Angell's tasteful design: the structure will be of brick, with stone finishings; the style, Old English, appropriate and indicative of the pure and noble object and character of the building itself

"NELSON'S TREE."

EVERY memorial of the illustrious Nelson, however slight, has considerable popular interest. That which we have engraved is a Sycamore, planted by Nelson, when a boy, at the entrance to Grove Cottage, the residence of the hero's uncle, at Kentish Town. The houses around the Tree are to be shortly removed in the formation of a new street; but the Sycamore, we are assured, will be spared. As a guide to visitors whom curiosity may lead to the locality, we may mention that the Tree stands close to the southern wall of the Castle Tavern, at Kentish Town.

Southey has thus concisely summed up the fame of the hero of Trafalgar:—"The death of Nelson was felt in England as a public calamity; yet he cannot be said to have fallen prematurely whose work was done, nor ought he to be lamented who died so full of honours and at the height of human fame."

NELSON'S TREE, KENTISH TOWN.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

CROYDON PALACE.

READER, if thou wishest for a pleasant "Railway Ramble," hie thee to the old town of Croydon, nine miles and a half south of the metropolis—stated to have been once a Roman city, Noviomagus, and accordingly, upon one of the great military roads of the Romans, which, in some localities, form part of the railway of our own scientific times. It is about half a mile from the Brighton station; and, says the agreeable author of the "Railway Chronicle Travelling Charts," is especially a station for a day's excursion. The archæologist may well spend some hours here, with its church and the remains of the archiepiscopal palace, for a long time the chief residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury. At the Norman Conquest, the manor, with this palace, was given to Archbishop Lanfranc.

CROYDON PALACE.

It was built of timber, and was, in 1278, in its original state. No part of the present structure is older than the fourteenth century; and large portions of it were rebuilt by Archbishops Wake and Herring. Here Queen Elizabeth and her Court were sumptuously entertained by Archbishops Barker and Whitgift. In 1780 it was sold, and became a calico manufactory, and the gardens were used as bleaching grounds: it is now a laundry. The present summer residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury is three and a half miles from Croydon, at the mansion in Addington Park, which stands on the site of a hunting-seat of Henry VIII.

Hard by the old Palace, is the Church of St. John, erected on the ruins of older churches in 1381—1395. "It is near the Wandle, and must have been very interesting until it was beautified by the barbarous taste of Churchwardens. In the Rebellion, one Blesse was hired at half-a-crown a day to break the painted glass windows. High wages for such easy mischief!"

MADAME PLEYEL.

Camille Marie Denise Moke was born at Paris, 1815; married, 1832, to Camille Pleyel, the celebrated pianoforte manufacturer, who was then in his forty-fifth year.

She commenced the pianoforte at four years of age, under Jacques Herz, brother of the well-known Henri Herz, the Professor, to whom Madame Pleyel owes her classical education, and under whom she studied the works of Bach, Mozart, Handel, Cramer, Clementi, Dussek, Weitl, Beethoven, and all the great musical composers. She commenced with Kalkbrenner, at twelve years of age. At twelve, thirteen, and fourteen years of age, Mdlle. Moke played concertos at the Concerts Spirituels, with immense success.

The union with M. Pleyel was not a happy one; and four years after it took place there was a separation between them. From the date of this separation (1836) the artistic career of Madame Pleyel may be said to have commenced.

At Hamburg, after giving two grand concerts with brilliant success, Madame Pleyel retired from public life, with her mother, Madame Moke, and devoted herself for two years and a half to study, during which time she made a great progress.

Count Nesselrode, Prime Minister of the Russian Empire, happening to be at Hamburg, heard Madame Pleyel play, and induced her to pay a visit to St. Petersburg, promising her the protection and patronage of his family and the Court. At St. Petersburg, Madame Pleyel staid seven months, during which her career was a succession of triumphs. The Emperor, the Empress, and the whole of the Imperial Family, lavished the greatest kindnesses on her, presented her with superb presents, patronised her own concerts, and continually invited her to the Court.

From St. Petersburg Madame Pleyel passed successively to Leipsic, where she gave three concerts; at Dresden, three, besides three concerts at the Court; at Prague, 3; and at Vienna, six, with continued success. At Vienna Madame Pleyel gave concerts for the poor, and played at all the Court concerts. The Emperor of Austria and his family were present at all her concerts.

MADAME PLEYEL.

From Vienna Madame Pleyel proceeded to Munich, where she was well received by the King of Bavaria; played twice at the Court; and thence, in 1840, returned to Brussels, where she has since resided with her father, Professor Moke—a well-known literary man—and her mother, who died last year. Since her residence at Brussels, Madame Pleyel has played at all the principal towns of Belgium, Liege, Ghent, Bruges, Antwerp, Mons, Brussels, &c., for the poor, but never on her own account till last year. In 1845, Madame Pleyel visited Paris, and gave two Concerts at the Theatre Italien, before 3,000 persons, with the most brilliant success she ever encountered. The unexpected death of her mother recalled Madame Pleyel to Brussels, and obliged her to renounce her engagements at the Paris Conservatoire and elsewhere. Since that, Madame Pleyel remained six months without playing in public; till, last summer, she was invited by the Committee of the Beethoven Festival at Bonn, where she played (as our readers know) the Concert-Stuck of Weber, before the Queen of England, Prince Albert, the King and Queen of Prussia, &c., &c., and about 4,000 persons—which event made her known to England, and was the origin of her visit to this country. Since her return from Bonn, Madame Pleyel played at Antwerp and Brussels* for the poor, with such immense success, that her friends forced her to give a Concert on her own account—the first she ever gave at Brussels: there were 2,000 present. Since then, Madame Pleyel played at Malines, Antwerp, &c., and at the Brussels Conservatoire—two days after which, she started for England in the Tyton steamer—arrived on the 6th of May—played at the Dublin Philharmonic on the 13th—and first recital in London on the 18th.

On Thursday afternoon she gave her second recital, at the Hanover-square Rooms, in the presence of upwards of 700 distinguished amateurs and professors. The enthusiasm was greater than at the first concert. She performed Döhler's Andante ("Don Sebastian"), and his celebrated Trulle Study, Kalkbrenner's "Piraia" Fantasia, Prudent's "Lucia di Lammermoor" Fantasia, Schubert's "Marguerite," Liszt's Tarantella, and the Pianoforte Obligato to Beethoven's "Adelaide." Her happy facility of accommodating her style to every master's inspiration was never more strikingly proved. The passion with which she invested the "Fra Poco" and "Tu Vedrai," the celebrated airs of the tenor Rubini, was beyond all praise. The perfection of her mechanism, her prompt and masterly triumph over all difficulties, her delicious phrasing, her sweetness of touch, excited rapturous demonstrations. In Leopold de Meyer's "Carnaval" she was encored; her elegant dexterity and playful fancy were superbly displayed in this intricate piece. In addition to Herr Pischek's singing, Mille. Vera gave airs by Bellini and Paesiello. She sings artistically, but has little voice.

* At the latter, in the Eglise des Augustins, there were 4,000 people. She was presented with a golden medal by the Directors of the Hospital.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

A second performance of "Il Matrimonio Segreto," on Saturday, has confirmed the fact that, while the works of newer composers are enjoying deserved popularity with the votaries of the Italian Opera, Cimarosa's music can still defy the course of time, the caprice of fashion, and, what is more, comparison with works composed under the advantages of a far deeper insight into the resources of the lyrical drama than was enjoyed in his day. The lack of this knowledge does, even in this opera, occasionally appear, as, for example, in the comparative simplicity and baldness of accompaniments, and the absence of striking effects of light and shade (the latter forming so prominent a feature in more modern operas, as must be remarked by every attentive listener). But great excellences are always in advance of their day; and there is a descriptive power, independent of mechanical resources and meretricious effects, in Cimarosa's "Matrimonio Segreto," which is certainly not surpassed by any modern opera we know. How strikingly does this remark apply to the famous trio of "Le faccio un inchino,' especially when the voices are blended together in splendid harmony; while, in the finale of the first act, the admirable appropriateness of the words to the situation, the combination of voices and peculiar character of the rhythm, render it one of the most marvellous efforts of descriptive music. As a dramatic scene, also, this finale is comic in the extreme; the high-pitched voices of the three women screaming simultaneously into the ears of the deaf and irritable old Geronimo, who can, of course, understand nothing, from such a warring of sound, is excellent: the inimitable look of bewilderment which Lablache assumes, and the angry eagerness of gesture of the women, form an admirable picture, of which we this day present a sketch to our readers.

The two concerted pieces we have mentioned, and the famous duet "Se fiato un corpo avete," in our opinion give the peculiar value to this opera. Mario's song "Pria che spenti l' aurora," and the other arie and duets interspersed through the work, though sweet and flowing, are, we think, quite subordinate in point of intrinsic merit to these masterpieces of melody, harmony, and dramatic effect.

Grisi's impersonation of Carolina cannot be too highly praised. It presents that combination of softness, of feminine malice, which it was no doubt the intention of the composer to impart to it. Of Lablache's Geronimo we have already spoken; had we time, we should return to it, for it cannot be praised too highly or too often. The performance besides of Castellan, Sanchioli, and Mario, gi e a fulness and brilliancy of effect to the music which is invaluable.

All these admirable artists were again presented to us on Thursday, in "Don Giovanni!" "I Lombardi" having been repeated on Tuesday.

"Don Giovanni," every time we hear, gives us fresh cause for marvel at the transcendent genius of its composer. We fancy that we can, in the peculiar characteristics of this work, trace the impress of the circumstances under which it was written.

SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF "IL MATRIMONIO SEGRETO," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"Don Giovanni," as is well known, was composed at Prague, in the on[illegible]en an elevated site, commanding a view of the ancient but faded magnificence of that city in its castles in ruined cloisters, and other majestic remains of feudal times; while the grounds of Dussah, the host of Mozart, and in which he used to sit, were filled with numerous guests, whose favourite amusement was playing at bowls. Amidst such delightful locality, and many other of the Composer pursued his work, but rose, from time to time, to take part in the [illegible]ort. It seems that we may trace the mingled impressions thus produced on the mi[illegible]ginalities of Mozart in "Don Giovanni," which, more than any other of his compositions, combines the most reckless joyousness, the most romantic grandeur, and the most solemn tragic effects.

THE FORTHCOMING BALLET OF "LALLA ROOKH," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE

We will now give our readers some insight into the plot of the new ballet, which excites so much expectation amongst the votaries of Her Majesty's Theatre. It is founded on Moore's poem of "Lalla Rookh," of course, altered in parts, to suit the exigencies of choreographic composition, but yet preserving the most salient features of the beautiful original. The scene is laid in a country, at this moment chiefly interesting to all Englishmen as that where our late hard-fought battles were won. The progress of the Princess from Lahore to Cashmere gives an opportunity, besides, for presenting on the stage, some of the most striking features of Eastern scenery the dreary waste the fearful sand-storm—the view of Lahore, with its peculiar Eastern architecture, and the glories of Cashmere, the loveliest spot in the world. The following are the chief incidents of the plot:—

The great Emperor of Hindostan, Aurungzebe, has promised the hand of his lovely daughter in marriage to Abdul, the young King of Bucharia, and the story opens with the approaching departure of the young Princess with her suite, for Cashmere, where she is to meet the youthful Monarch, and where the nuptials are to be celebrated. The wife of Aurungzebe feels with a mother's pride for her bride, and amongst the other attendants is a young poet named Feramore, renowned for his minstrelsy. During the journey, the latter has many opportunities of interesting the feelings of the Princess for him, by his evening performances and his graceful bearing, and lastly, by the services he renders her when placed in imminent peril by a fearful tempest, during which she is abandoned by her frightened attendants, and even her life only to his devoted care. It follows that Lalla Rookh bestows her young affections on the poet, despite the watchful vigilance of Fadladeen, the great Nayer, or Chamberlain, of the Princess, whose anxious feelings are all enlisted upon the pleasing manners and talents of the young Poet, and by the preference testified for him by Lalla Rookh. The Princess arrives at Cashmere: despite her re-assurance and declaring entire love, she is compelled to fulfil her promise; she is dragged, an unwilling victim, into the presence of the young Monarch, to whom she can only give her hand, for her heart is with Feramore. But, what is her astonishment, when the King throws off his disguise, and she finds in her lover, and thus assured himself of the real and constant attachment of his destined bride.

The foregoing is but a hurried and meagre sketch of the plot, which, in action, contains scenes of much interest and dramatic effect. We understand that the greatest pains have been taken to give the local peculiarities of the Eastern scenery, costumes, music, and, above all, the dances, some of which will be characteristic and peculiar in the extreme; and the whole will, we and no with a representation of one of the loveliest and most fanciful scenes in the world—the Feast of the Roses, in the vales of Cashmere, so exquisitely described by Moore in "The Light of the Harem."

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Intelligence has arrived from the Cape to the end of March of an important character. War had been declared by Governor Maitland against Sandili, Tola Botman, and the Gaika tribes generally, or such as were in strict alliance with them, and the Governor himself had proceeded to the frontier to take the command of the troops in person. The absence of Graham's Town and other places had been enrolled and armed, and nothing short of the signal punishment of the Kafirs was expected, so excited were the colonists by their constant and [illegible]. The [illegible]ssador of the war, and the general necessity for it. Among the [illegible]s, it was the rescue from a small British escort of two or three Kafir prisoners, by an armed body of the enemy, in the very [illegible]ourse of some lives being lost on both sides. The outrage was committed between Beaufort and Graham's Town, and is said to have been actually planned by Tola and Botman on the market place of Beaufort.

Letters from Athens of May 20, state that the King had intended to make an excursion in the Peloponnesus, but his departure was postponed on account of the arrival of the Prince of Wales, who had arrived at Athens to pass some days with his Majesty. The Corn-laws have been the subject of discussion in the Greek Chambers as well as with us, but with a very different result. The Athens Observer informs us that the Chambers unanimously "in maintaining the protective system and the existing sliding-scale."

A mysterious prisoner has been for some time confined in the fortress of Kongsten, in Saxony. It is supposed to be [illegible], to be [illegible] of Warsaw. It is said that he will be sent to America.

Letters from Constantinople mention that there are gratifying accounts of the rich discoveries of Mr. Layard, at Nemrood, near the site of ancient Nineveh. He has cut the Tyrenis entirely out, and the treasures of which the most sanguine imagination never dreamt. Among other things, we hear of winged lions, twelve feet high, which, though buried for thousands of years under the same, are in the most perfect state of preservation, and are the compliment sculptor, with a delicacy of finish which speaks highly of the advancement in the arts of the old Assyrians.

A St. Petersburg letter contains a report that Prince Albert will, on the occasion of the marriage of the Grand Duchess Olga, return the visit which the Emperor of Russia paid to Queen Victoria, her Majesty being unable to do so in person.

A Constantinople letter of the 13th of May, gives a fearful account of the persecution to which the Catholic Albanians of Scodra and Scoutsca has been subjected. The original number of Christians thrown into the prisons of Scodra was 155; they have now reached the place of their exile, near Brousse, in number less than 80. Half have perished on their way either under the blows of the escort or from hunger, exposure to the weather, and other horrors. Many of them were perfectly naked, and all were in a state of the most squalid filth and utter exhaustion. Sir Stratford Canning has written a very strong note to the Porte on this outrage on the established laws of the country and the principles of common humanity.

By the most recent advices from St. Petersburgh, the Emperor had left the capital for Warsaw, to meet the Empress, on her return from Italy. They were expected to arrive at St. Petersburgh on the 15th of January, shortly after which the marriage of the Grand Duchess Olga would be celebrated.

The Countess Hahn-Hahn, the well known German writer and traveler, has arrived in London. The Countess makes, we understand, but a brief sojourn in this country.

A splendid fête is to be given at Brussels on the 15th of this month, on the occasion of the opening of the railway from Paris to Brussels. The French authorities will arrive in Brussels from Paris towards the evening of that day. They will be entertained at a grand banquet, and will afterwards attend a ball in the new station of the Northern Railway. Eight thousand invitations will be issued. Several popular entertainments will take place on that day at the expense of the city.

The King and the Crown Prince of Wurtemberg have returned to Stuttgardt from Saxony, where the Grand Duke Leopold of Baden, the Duke of Nassau, have also been staying. When the Empress of Russia introduced Princess Olga to the King and Queen of Wurtemberg on her Imperial Majesty's arrival at Stuttgart, Empress accompanied the presentation of her daughter with saying, "Here I give to you my dearly beloved child," which kind expression was responded to by their Wurtemberg Majesties in the most affectionate manner. [illegible]

On the 30th ult. a man, in the pit of the Royal Theatre at Vienna, shot himself in the middle of the performance, covering the persons immediately around him with his blood. A singular coincidence in this frightful event is, that at the instant before the report was heard, an actor on the stage, reciting his part, uttered the words, "A shot is about to be fired;" and for a moment the audience fancied that the sound came from behind the scenes. The performance was stopped till the lifeless body was carried out, and then resumed.

Orders have been forwarded to the seaports, says the Paris Presse, to send several ships of war to the Gulph of Mexico, to reinforce the French squadron on that station, which is to overawe the cruise about the shores during the continuance of the war between Mexico and the United States.

A letter from Warsaw of the 26rd ult., informs us that the Emperor of Russia still is in that city. He is stated to have revoked the sentence granted to a Pole named Rujewski, on account of that person having betrayed [illegible] to imprisonment for theft.

A woman named Elizabeth Wilhame, aged 26, was executed at Metz, on the 27th ult., for the murder of her father by strangulation. She and her husband were tried some time back for this crime, and found guilty. Extenuating circumstances, however, were found in the case of the man, and his life was accordingly spared, but the crime was brought home to the unfortunate daughter with saying, "Here I give to you my dearly beloved child," which kind expression was responded to by their Wurtemberg Majesties in the most affectionate manner. [illegible]

On the 30th ult. a man, in the pit of the Royal Theatre at Vienna, shot himself in the middle of the performance, covering the persons immediately around him with his blood. A singular coincidence in this frightful event is, that at the instant before the report was heard, an actor on the stage, reciting his part, uttered the words, "A shot is about to be fired;" and for a moment the audience fancied that the sound came from behind the scenes. The performance was stopped till the lifeless body was carried out, and then resumed.

Orders have been forwarded to the seaports, says the Paris Presse, to send several ships of war to the Gulph of Mexico, to reinforce the French squadron on that station, which is to overawe the cruise about the shores during the continuance of the war between Mexico and the United States.

A letter from Warsaw of the 26rd ult., informs us that the Emperor of Russia still is in that city. He is stated to have revoked the sentence granted to a Pole named Rujewski, on account of that person having betrayed [illegible] to imprisonment for theft.

A woman named Elizabeth Wilhame, aged 26, was executed at Metz, on the 27th ult., for the murder of her father by strangulation. She and her husband were tried some time back for this crime, and found guilty. Extenuating circumstances, however, were found in the case of the man, and his life was accordingly spared, but the crime was brought home to the unfortunate daughter with saying, "Here I give to you my dearly beloved child," which kind expression was responded to by their Wurtemberg Majesties in the most affectionate manner. [illegible]

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat are to our market here seen very limited, Saturday's fair only having added a small number of sacks; the sale is however nearly to the extent of the current week's arrivals, which are slowly at barely late rates. We [illegible] a full average sup[illegible] which is slowly at barely late rates. We [illegible] a full average sup[illegible] Oats, barley, and beans are [illegible] sale at [illegible]

ARRIVALS: English wheat, 1940; barley, 1270; oats, 1860 Irish wheat, —; barley, [illegible] oats 600 Foreign: wheat 3800, barley, [illegible]; oats, 170 Flour, 2340 sacks; malt, [illegible]

English: Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 52s; ditto white 50s to 62s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 48s to 57s; rye, —s to —s; grinding barley, —s to —s; malting, —s to —s; malting ditto, —s to —s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, —s to —s; brown ditto, 60s to 64s; Kingston and Ware, —s to —s; Chevalier, —s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire red oats, 22s to 26s; potato do., 27s to 30s; Yeoshal and Cork, black 20s to 23s; ditto, white, 24s to 28s; thick beans, new, 30s to 32s; ditto old, 32s to 36s; grey peas, 28s to 30s; white, 30s to 40s; boilers, 44s to 42s, per quarter. Town-made [illegible] to the [illegible]

[illegible] ditto fine, —s to —s; beans, s to —s; peas, —s to —s, per quarter.

Foreign: Wheat, 57s to 62s; barley, 28s to 30s; oats, 18s to 20s, per quarter.

Town and Market.—Limited cakes are in fair request at full prices In [illegible] kinds of seeds most to nothing doing.

English, sowing, 54s to 57s; Baltic, crushing, 49s to 54s; Mediterranean, and Odessa, 46s. Hempseed, —s to —s, per quarter. Rapeseed, English, new, £20 to £21 per last; ditto, old, —s to —s. Linseed, English, £10 5s to £10 10s; ditto, foreign, £7 5s to £8 5s per 1000 Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 5s per ton. Canary 45s to 50s. Coriander, 12s to 14s. Tares, old, 42s to 46s; extra, 50s to 52s. white, 60s to 65s. Fenugreek, red, 40s to 48s. extra, 50s; white, 60s to 70s. extra, 72s per cwt.

Liverpool.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 6d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 38s 6d; barley, 28s 4½; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 32s 1d; beans, 32s 10d; peas 34s 3d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 38s —d; barley, 28s 4½; oats 23s 8d; rye, 32s 1d; beans, 32s 6d; peas, 34s 3d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 17s 6d; barley, 8s, —; oats, —; rye, 9s 6d, beans, 7s 6d; peas 8s 6d.

Sugar.—Most kinds of raw sugar—the quantity of which on offer is large—move off slowly, at a little more money. Refined goods are in limited request, for the finest kinds of grocery lumps

Coffee.—This market is in a very quiet state, at last week's quotations.

Rice.—Bread is firm at full prices. In other kinds, very little is doing

Provisions.—Although a good business has been transacted in foreign butter this week, price s have not been supported. England may now be purchased at from 74s to 76s; and the inferior kinds, 68s to 72s per cwt. English butter—the supply of which is large—is at a rise in value to per cwt. Irish, 72s to 76s per cwt; fresh 8s to 9s per dozen In Irish bacon, next to nothing is done at barely late rates Bacon is in fair request at very full prices Waterford, 56s to 58s; Limerick, 52s to 56s; other Irish, 50s to 52s; lids and heavy, 46s to 47s For forward delivery next to nothing is doing Hams are a shade dearer, and the supply is moderate. Lard is in good request, at full prices. Of other kinds of provisions, only a limited business is done

Tallow P Y C is steady, at 38s 6d to 42s 6d on the spot, and 41s 3d on hand for forward delivery Town tallow is abundant at 40s 6d to 41s net cash

Hay and Straw.—Prime hay, £3 3s to £4 4s; clover ditto, £4 6s to £5 15s; out straw, £1 12s to £1 14s; wheat straw, £1 14s to £1 16s per load.

Wool.—The wool market as in a very depressed state for all descriptions, and prices have a downward tendency.

Hops Friday.—P accounts from the plantations not being favourable [illegible] a small demand for [illegible] at full prices The duty is [illegible] £ 30,000. New Kent bags, £5 12s to £8 8s; New Kent pockets, £5 5s to £7 7s; Sussex, £5 5s to £7 7s; Farnham, £8 8s to £10 10s per cwt.

Coals (Tuesday.—Chaster Main, 18s; Killingworth, 18s 3d; Lambton, 18s 9d; Hetwell, 18s 3d; Sidney's Hartley, 16s 6d; New Tanfield, 15s 6d; Wylam, 16s 3d; Russell, 16s 6d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on offer here, this morning, was not in excess of last week's, and the demand was pretty active, at last Monday's quotations From Scotland, we received 6 oxen, and 190 sheep, from Prussia, 20 oxen from Germany 21 oxen and 180 sheep, and from Scotland, 80 horned and polled Scots The numbers of sheep, being in the decrease, the mutton trade ruled firm, at previous quotations. From the Isle of Wight 300 lambs came to hand; from other parts, the receipts were rather extensive All kinds coarse and of slow sale, prices were barely supported. In calves, a good business was done, at an advance of 2d per 8lb. Pigs dull, at our quotations Milch cows were selling at from £15 to £18 each.

Per 8lb to sink the offal—Coarse and inferior beasts 2s 8d to 2s 8d; second quality ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 4d, prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and ordinary sheep 3s 2d to 3s 6d; second sort of ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime coarse woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d, prime south Down ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; large hogs, 2s 8d to 4s 0d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 5s 2d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d Suckling calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 18s to 32s each Beasts, 918; cows, 123; sheep and lambs, 12,350 calves, 270; pigs, 270.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very meagre demand here to-day, at the following quotations:

Per 8lb to the [illegible] Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; large coarse calves, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; large coarse [illegible] 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; small porkers, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d per quarter. Beasts, 2,400; sheep and lambs, 18,350 calves, 270; pigs, 210.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Notwithstanding the usual absence from business which the holidays of Whitsuntide invariably causes, the English market was, in a great measure, recovered too depressed in existing last week. A current report that America will accept the [illegible] has [illegible] influence in creating this improvement, which the continued fine weather confirmed. Consols on Monday closed at 86¾ for money, and 86¾ for the account. A greater degree of animation prevailed on Tuesday, which was [illegible] by the receipt of money, and 87¼ to ⅜ for account. The Exchequer market still continues very flat; and as the advertised bills are now in course of payment, the remainder will be quickly quoted at about 1 per cent. discount. Bank stock left off on Tuesday at 176, 177. Three-and-a-quarter per Cents, 97⅞. Long Annuities, 14⅛. India Bonds, 27 premium.

The only circumstance possessing the slightest interest, in connexion with the foreign market, has been the fluctuations in Portuguese and Mexican stock The former has fluctuated between 53¾ and 54¼, closing at 53¾ for money, and 53¾ for account. The latter has been done between 29¾ and 30¼, closing at 29¾ to ⅜. On Thursday, a meeting of the Mexican bondholders took place at the London Tavern. Mr. Robinson then read the correspondence with Mr Baker and the other agents of the Mexican Government, which was brought to a close by the Mexican Government, feeling itself unable to meet its engagements, had determined to propose a consolidation of the debt into one general stock, after the following particulars: Amount of debt, £21,641,650; to the purposes of the active debt, £5,961,56.; to the debentures on debt; created the 8th of March last, £4,680,000 The means to be provided would then be applied to the Active and Funded debt, £10,074,000, to the Deferred Debt. The amount of the Redemption Fund, for the purpose of satisfying the hypothecation on the tobacco revenue, would be 82,134,765, but on this latter revenue there would also be the charge of the political expenses of the State. Some discussion ensued, but, ultimately, after an amendment was lost, the above proposition was unanimously carried No transactions have been since registered in the Active stock, and the prices left off at 18¾. The general feeling of the market was good at the close of the week, although business continues very limited, prices closing at the following rates: Brazilian Bonds, 9 per Cent., 85¾; Equitable Bonds, 8¾; Grenada, 1 per Cent; 21½; Ditto Deferred, 4¼; Mexican Defer ed, —; Portuguese Four per Cent, 53¾; Ditto, for the Account, 53⅞; Spanish Passive, —; Ditto Deferred, 10¾; Venezuela Bonds, 2 per cent, 42¾; Ditto Deferred, —; Dutch 2½ per Cent Certificates, 59.

The Share Market has been very inanimate during the week, nor does its present appearance indicate any great probability of a change. Prices are tolerably well maintained in the dividend-paying lines, as sales being made for their assuming, in some measure, the character of permanent investments. The annexed closing prices of the ones last dealt in, will best display the tone of the Market:—Aberdeen, 83; Arbroath, 48; Bolton and Leigh, 20; Eastern Counties, 7; Birmingham and Gloucester, 126; Bristol and Exeter, New, 10½ Buckinghamshire, par; Caledonian, 11¼; Ditto, Extension, 1½; Direct Manchester (Denbighshire), 2; Eastern Bengal (Sanscrit), 2½; Direct Northern, 1½; Dublin [illegible], 23½; Ditto, New, 7¼ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 1½; East [illegible] Edinburgh and Glasgow, 76; Goole, Doncast, & Sheffield, &c., [illegible] Bonds, 3½; Great Grimsby and Sheffield, 9; Great Northern, 82; [illegible] Do. Quarter Shares, 16½; Harwich and Eastern [illegible] Junct n, 1½; Leeds and Bradford, 50½; Leeds and Carlisle, 12; Leeds and Bellevue Extension, 4½; Leeds and Thirsk, 20; Lancaster and [illegible] London and Birmingham, 228; Do. Fifths 25; London and Brighton, 65¾; Do. [illegible] London and York, 2½; Do Half [illegible] 1½; Manchester and Leeds Extension, 2½; Do. Birmingham, 82; Do Quarter Shares (A), 13½; Do. Quarter Shares, (B), 13½; Manchester and Southampton, 1½; Midland, 150; Do New, 34½; Do. Birmingham and Derby, 123; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 1½; Ditto, New, 5½; Ditto, New, Brandling Junction, —; Newcastle and Berwick, 23½; North Staffordshire, 3½; Northampton, Buckingham and Banbury, —; Northern and Eastern, 2½; Northampton, Peterborough, and Huntingdon, —; Preston and Wyre, —; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2½; South Midland, 1½; Stockton and Darlington, —; Stockton and Hartlepool, —; Sheffield, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Manchester, 2½; Shrewsbury and Chester, —; Shrewsbury and Hereford, —; Shrewsbury and Newtown, —; Waterford, Limerick, and Kilkenny, —; West Midland, 1½; West Riding Union, 2¾ pm; Whitehaven and Furness Junction, 2½; York and Lancaster, 1½; York and North Midland, 38½; Ditto, Scarboro' Branch, 4½; Ditto, Selby, 7¾; Ditto, Extension, 3¾; Do. East and West Riding Extension, 1½; Bordeaux and Amiens, 11; Bordeaux and Mediterranean, —; Central of Spain, 2½; Dutch Rhenish, —; East Indian, —; Great Western Bengal, 8½; Jamaica Sout h Midland Junction, —; Lowman and Semapore, 1½; Luxembourg, 1½; Northern of France Constituted, 13½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 9½; Over Yssel, —; Paris and Lyons Constituted, —; Paris and Orleans Constituted, 5; Sambre and Meuse, 6½. Joint Stock Banks: Australasia, 27 —; Colonial, —; Commercial, —; Mines: Cobre Copper

Saturday last Bank Stock and Consols shut yesterday; prices were firm at 87 for the opening on the 17th of July. Mexican Actives improved to 30½; but soon subsided, depressed them to 29½, to Deferred closes at 17. Shares were quiet, without much business. The decision on the London and York Line is postponed until [illegible]

THE LATE SIR JOHN SEBRIGHT'S FANCY BANTAMS AND PIGEONS.—On Wednesday, this celebrated collection, removed from Beechwood, was disposed of by Auction, at the King's Arms' Inn, Hemel Hempstead. It comprised Bantam Fowls, of the Gold and Silver Spangle Sorts; and 100 pair of Fancy Pigeons, of the purest breeds in the Kingdom, the late Baronet having taken the first prizes at Shows, for many years past. The Bantams brought very high prices, —from £3 to £8 per walk of three; and three of the silver lots were purchased for her Majesty's House Farm. The Pigeons, also, realised good sums: two pairs of Yellow Jacobins being purchased at 32s. and 40s., by Mr. Baker, of Leadenhall Market, who was, likewise, the buyer of some other rare lots

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 2.

BANKRUPTS.—E. CLARK, Mortimer-road, Kingsland-road builder. T. ROBERTS and T. HARAH College-hill, City, steel nerv. J. BIRD, Church-row Bethnal green, timberdealer. H. SHAW, Stone-street Cubitt Town, ship-broker. C. ALBES, New-port, Isle of Wight, bankers. B. FENWICK, Newcastle upon-Tyne, Boarding-house. G. STEELE, Carysfort, Dublin, [illegible], shoemaker, tailor. A. BIRD, Birmingham, grocer. M. CHAPMAN, R. POWELL, Stapleridge, Lancashire cotton-spinner. J. NIELD, woollen manufacturer. J. BEATES, Newcastle, Lancashire, manufacturing chemist. D. THOMPSON, Bury Lancashire.

SCOTCH sequestrations. T. MONCUR, Montrose, glass and china merchant. A. [illegible]oughton, M. P. for Aickendrightshire, Cas. Strickendrightshire. A. M'CALLUM [illegible] merchants.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5.

COMMISSIONS GRANTED BY THE QUEEN

Westmoreland Militia.—Capt. E. H. Smith to be Adjutant, vice Bennett.

Perth Militia.—Capt. C. A. Balneaves to be Adjutant

[illegible] S. James to be Adjutant

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORD LIEUTENANT

DEVONSHIRE. C. B. Calmady, Esq., to be Deputy Lieutenant; Col. H. R. F. Davie to be Deputy Lieutenant. R. Porter, Esq., to be Deputy Lieutenant

Royal Devon Militia.—H. E. Rice, Esq., to be Captain, J. Stevenson, Esq., to be Captain; J. Rolewick, C. H. Webber, and J. W. Walrond, to be Lieutenants; J. Bear, J. Ralph, H. J. [illegible] and J. Lean, to be Ensigns.

North Devon Militia.—C. H. Webber, Esq., to be Captain, vice Portescue; W. C. Bayer, Esq., to be Lieutenant, vice Bayer, promoted; J. Chichester, —to be Ensign.

Militia.—The Hon. J. W. Fortescue to be Major, vice H. Williams Bury to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice H. T. Hartnell to be Major.

[illegible] to be Captain in the Royal Berkshire Regiment of North British Militia, vice [illegible] promoted.

[illegible] to be Captain and Adjutant, vice Cadell—Lieut. S. KNOWLES, [illegible]

[illegible] Mordaunt, Knaresland, bailiff; [illegible] G. M. J. HOPKINS' [illegible] Dewsbury. [illegible] J. DIXON, W. MITCHELL, Finsbury place South, [illegible] dealers. W. M. SMITHSON, Cambridge, Gloucester. J. BODDINGTON, Manchester, [illegible] cotton dealer. J. D. PAINE, Hale mill, Surrey, and Duke street, Westminster, or paperhaze printer. [illegible] SHARPLES, Bolton, Lancaster, cotton spinner. J. SUTHERLAND, West Derby, Lancashire, wool-combster. W. ROBERTS, 19 St. Thomas's Bridge, Halifax, Yorkshire, dyer and [illegible] J. CONLEN, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, woollen draper. J. SOLOMON, Exeter, [illegible] layer. J. CONLEN, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, woollen draper. J. SOLOMON, Exeter, [illegible] SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. W. MACDONALD, Glasgow, plumber. G. NICOL, Newmarsh corn-merchant. A. FLOCKHART, Kinross, banker. E. WALKER, Glasgow, warehouseman.

BIRTHS

At Rockwell, county of Donegal, Lady [illegible] of Mr. Shanahaw Chesbrine, of the wife of Thomas W. Tatton, Esq., of [illegible] Berks, a son, the heir of [illegible] At Aberdeen, the wife of Mr. [illegible] surgeon, of a daughter [illegible] At Lisburn, near the wife of the Rev. John Ballwin, of a [illegible]

MARRIAGES

At Trinity Church, Marylebone, William Henry Lee, Esq., to Susan Cordell, [illegible] of Colonel Fanshawe, C. B. At Rugby, Thos. Sautee, Esq., to Miss Habisford. At Cunningham Church, Carmarkenshire, Alfred Thomas, Esq., late of the 6th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards, to Caroline Emma Loftus, only daughter of the late Colonel Stephen Parsons [illegible] Dublin. At Bere Warren, Alfred, son of Rowet Warren, Esq., to Anne Elizabeth, eldest [illegible] late of the late Cadwaladar Waddy, Esq., M. P.

DEATHS

At Hyde-park [illegible] Captain Sir Stephen Lambert Hunter Vassall, R.N. At Cannes, south-eastern Estrews [illegible] Elizabeth Hanbury, re lict of the late John Hanbury, Esq., of Trenham, in her 80th year. At Bath, Mary Ann, the 19th year of her age, Mary Ann, eldest daughter of W. T. Copeland, Esq., M. P. At Newington-place, in the [illegible] Edmund Oliver Bray, Esq., one of the Masters in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery. At [illegible], Hugh M'nicenery Campbell, Esq., of the Hollies, Staffordshire, aged 59 Saturday, 30th ult. Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Mr. W. Wagstaff, St. Lower Belvedere-place, Eaton-square, of decline, aged 31 On the 14th May, Sydenham collier, eldest child of John Eagar, Esq., of Lisgool, Ripley, Surrey

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE MDLLE. CERITO has the honour to inform her friends, subscribers to the Opera, and the Public, that her BENEFIT will take place THURSDAY NEXT, 11th of June, 1846 when will be performed a Favourite Ballet of Action, in two acts, entitled LA GITANA, or, THE GIPSY'S REVENGE. Characters, Mdlle. CERITO, Madame Saulnier, and Fitzjames, Madame Castelan, Mdlle. Caselan, Pauline, Sigrave Marini, Desplaces, Rousseau, Lucien, and Garcia, Signor Lablache

To conclude with an entirely new Grand Oriental Ballet, entitled LALLA ROOKH; or, the Princess of Delhi. The Music by Mr. Frank Romer, Scenery by Mr. Thomas Moore, Esq. Composed by M. Albert, arranged by Signor Fagoni The Scenes by Mr. Charles Marshall The Machinery by Mr. Messrs. Gerrie, Miles, Honours, Moncrieff, Cannon, Demellaus [illegible] Mr. Nicholas Trgliotti Mr. Mdlle. Maslin, M. Bertrand, and Mdlle. Constance by Miss Bradley and Mr. Whales, under the superintendence of The Locations by Mr. Conrad Bodwell. The Machinery by Mr. D. [illegible] Actions for Books, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade, at Seven, of whom Libretti may be had.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. ABBOTT. Under the especial Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, and Royal Family.

On Monday, the 15th inst., will be produced a New Grand Equestrian Spectacle, entitled THE CONQUEROR OF ALGIERS, or, THE SIEGE OF ANTWERP, which will be performed every evening during the present and next week. The Arena will be thrown into the form of a Fortress, on which occasion the performances will be precisely the same as those so recently performed by command of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, commencing each day at Seven o'clock precisely.

MR. FREDERICK CHATTERTON'S MORNING CONCERT, MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 8th under the Patronage of her Royal Highness the DUCHESS of GLOUCESTER, PRINCESS SOPHIA of GLOUCESTER, and Viscountess de Vesci. Mdlle. Bockelotti, Misses Birch, Dolby, S. Novello, Pyne, L. Pyne, Wells, Dobbs, M. Hawes, Miss A. Harcourt, Mdlle. Parodi, Signor Gordigiani, Mr. Sims Reeves, Castelli, Benjamin Blakmore, Richardson, Bennett, and Frederick Chatterton, who will perform two of Sebastian Bach's Concertos, Les Clochettes, and "Prince Charles's Voyage to Scotland," Conductor, Mr. Kuhlmark. Tickets 1l. 1s. each; Stalls and Stalls Boxes Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; to be had only of Mr. F. Chatterton, 53, Great Pardon [illegible]

ST. JAMES'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, REGENT STREET. The Nobility and Gentry are most respectfully informed the Colosseum will remain Open during the Season, until Eleven o'Clock, and that the atmospheric effects in the marvellous Panorama of EXHIBITION OF LONDON from the Monument, and the Diorama of Jerusalem, from Three till Five and Eight till Half past Ten. Private Lessons continued

DAY EXHIBITION AT THE COLOSSEUM.—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories—Aviary—Chinese Junks—Mont Blanc and the Mountain Torrent.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—London by Night—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories, and Flower Show, brilliantly illuminated—Chinese Junks, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent represented by Moonlight—Open from Ten till Half past Five, and Half past Seven till Eleven, when possession of the Building is given up to Day and Night Hours.

LOVE'S POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENTS.—At Vernon-place, Bedford-square, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, MR. LOVE will present (for the first time this season in the City) his Entertainments entitled LOVE IN ALL WEATHERS, or the Gallery of Portraits. Hobers, the Welsh Bard, who has recently visited the Continental Courts, and the distinguished honour of appearing before Her Majesty LOVE'S LABOURS LOST, in which Mr. Love will sustain the characters of eight different persons, and other entertainments—Begin at a quarter past eight. Tickets, 3s. Gallery, 1s.—On MONDAY, JUNE 8th, Mr. Love will appear at the Hall Hanover-square. On THURSDAY, JUNE 11, at the Rooms, Wardamslow on MONDAY, JUNE at the Literary Institution, Somerset-street, Old Kent-road.

HOSPITAL for CONSUMPTION and DISEASES of the CHEST.—The BAZAAR to be held in the GARDENS of the ROYAL HOSPITAL CHELSEA, will be opened on THURSDAY the 25th of JUNE under the immediate Patronage of Her Majesty the QUEEN

Her Majesty the QUEEN DOWAGER.

Her Royal Highness the DUCHESS of KENT

Her Royal Highness the DUCHESS of CAMBRIDGE

Her Royal Highness the DUCHESS of GLOUCESTER.

Her Royal Highness the PRINCESS SOPHIA

The following Nobles and distinguished Ladies have kindly consented to preside at Stalls

The Duchess of Norfolk | The Lady of the Bedchamber | Mrs Cooper Gardiner
The Duchess of Sutherland | Lady Aylmer | Mrs. C. Hall
The Duchess of Somerset | Hon. Julia Maynard | Miss Kennet
The Marchioness of Westmin[illegible] | Lady Lucy Foster Stanhope | Mrs. Anthony Rowland
Lady [illegible] | Mrs. Lowes
Lady [illegible] | Mrs. Robert Montgomery
The Countess of Antrim | Lady Wilson | Mrs. Hesketh Fleetwood
Mrs. Vernon Graham | Lady Dunleath | Mrs. Thorpe
The Viscountess Jocelyn | Mrs. Alfred Barnes | Mrs. Theophilus Thompson

Any of whom contributions of Work of all kinds will be thankfully received, to be Presented at Hospital-place, Chelsea, or by the Secretary.

[illegible], May 27, 1846

NOTICE.—On account of the crowded state of the Room, and the number of persons that were unable to obtain admission,

GENERAL TOM THUMB will continue his LEVEES at the EGYPTIAN HALL, previous to his final departure to America. He will appear at Three and Seven o'Clock, in all the Costumes and Characters in which he had the honour of appearing three times before her Majesty, and at all the principal Courts of Europe. Doors to be opened at Half past Two and Six; Half-past Three to Five; and Half-past Seven to Nine o'Clock. Admission, 1s. Children under the age of Ten, Half price. All Tickets that have been issued will be received, notwithstanding their date. After Nine o'Clock each evening, the Rooms appears in his New Play at Astley's Royal Amphitheatre.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Dr. RYAN'S New and Interesting LECTURE

[illegible] and [illegible]
[illegible] ENGINE for [illegible] the REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for [illegible] and [illegible] PARSONS'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, an ENVELOPE CUTTING MACHINE, &c. in action DR. RYAN'S NEW and SUPERIOR DISSOLVING VIEWS. PORTRAIT of Lieutenant-General man in the GOVERNMENT and ARMY of LAHORE mounted on the [illegible] the RUSCOPE. The ACHROMATIC MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects, &c. &c. Admission 1s. Sc. [illegible]

KENLEY-ON-THAMES GRAND REGATTA.—The REGATTA will take place on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, the 25th and 26th days of JUNE, when the following prizes will be rowed for:

On GRAND CHALLANGE CUP, for eight-oared Boats. Entrance [illegible]
On AMATEUR CHALLENGE CUP, for eight-oared Boats. Entrance [illegible]
On SILVER CHALLENGE CUP, for [illegible] Boats. Entrance [illegible]
On DISTRICT CHALLENGE CUP, for four-oared Boats. Entrance [illegible]
The TOWN CHALLENGE CUP, for four-oared Boats. Entrance [illegible]
The SILVER WHERRIES (Cheaper Models), Presentation Prize, for Amateurs in pair-oared Boats. Entrance £2 2s
[illegible] Station Prize, for Amateur Scullers. Entrance £1 1s
[illegible] (Presentation Prize), for Bonâ fide Amateur Scullers.

Silver Medals will be presented to the Winners of the Cups.

Entrances must be duly made with the Secretary, at Mrs. Williams's, Catherine Wheel Inn, Hanley, on or before the 20th day of June next. JAMES NASH, Secretary

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.—M. JULLIEN'S CONCERT DRETS for one month only.—M. JULLIEN has the honour to announce that the CONCERTS D'ETE will commence on FRIDAY NEXT, the 12th inst. In addition to M. Jullien's unrivalled orchestra, several eminent Vocal Artists are engaged. M. Goldberg Herr Gudberg, Herr Hutlasi, and Herr Piachek, will make their first appearance on this occasion.

NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE TWELFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their GALLERY, 5, PALL MALL, near St. James's Palace Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
JAS. FAHEY, Secretary

TRIUMPHANT SUCCESS

VAUXHALL GARDENS OPEN EVERY NIGHT, except SATURDAY, on which occasions a PARENTED TROUPE—FIVE STATE HORSES TRIANGULARLY HIGHLY-TRAINED HORSES, VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT BAND of SEVENTY PERFORMERS, JOEL, the DIAVOLO of DESCENT from the MONASTERY DRAGON TOWER on a FIERY DRAGON. GORGEOUS PROCESSION before the PALACE of the GOLDEN BELLE. MAGNIFICENT FIREWORKS. BRILLIANT ILLUMINATIONS.—MYRIADS OF VARIEGATED LAMPS.—Catalogues of the Performances, Doors open at Eight. OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

The Royal Property opened last evening for the 112th season, and, judging from the enormous throng who visited the Gardens, it certainly augurs favourably for the Proprietors. Every attention is paid to personal convenience; a large raised platform has been erected in the Grand Orchestra, for the immediate benefit of those who feel a delight in tripping it on the light fantastic toe;" and a new feature has been added, by the introduction of M. Tourniaire's troop of horses, the usual rotunda having been adapted to their use. The horsemanship was of a superior description, and elicited universal applause. We must not forget to mention the display of Mr Derby, which gave general satisfaction to an numerous an assembly as ever gathered within the Gardens. There is great credit due to the Proprietary for the very great attention which has been paid both within and without to the persons of overflowing of visitors, without unnecessary exposure, chairs being placed throughout the interior of the Gardens, and omnibuses waiting without till two in the morning for the safety conveyance of passengers at the usual fare We cannot but recommend a visit to those old and favourite Gardens.—Times, June 2nd

"The opening of the 'Royal Property,' which took place last night, was one of unusual success and brilliancy, and so favored was it for the amusing season. Much has been done by the proprietors to restore the patronage of which the attendance last night was so good an omen; and numerous—several are, we should imagine, necessary—have been introduced to improve the whole of the arrangements. On few opening nights has the attendance been more numerous. A new stage has been laid down in front of the orchestra for those who may like to try their words and their heels together, may we do so 'sport the light fantastic toe'? Previous to the display of fireworks, there is a grand procession, and tournament, with a faithful representation of the Emperor Kwang, Emperor of China, reviewing his Tartar troops," which, no doubt, is sufficiently amusing to the rude, and certainly excites no small admiration. And then comes all the pyrotechnic display for which Vauxhall has been so famous for so many years, and which has not been surpassed by the redoubtable Joel on this occasion, as well as ever it did, the large assemblage of the public. Nearly 5000 persons were present last night."—Chronicle, June 2nd

"We find that considerable alterations and improvements have been effected in the gardens during the recess, particularly in the Pavilion and the boxes round the Quadrangle which have been repaired and embellished, and in the Illuminated Avenue, where the lamps are novel, and exceedingly effective. The Rotunda has been metamorphosed into an ample theatre for equestrian performances, and the Grand Orchestra has been raised platform, rising with temporary lamps, has been erected for the accommodation of those who are inclined to dance at the close of the performances. The extraordinary and brilliant display of fireworks have effected since last season in the gardens; a new stage, around which are to be erected for the accommodation of the boxes of the gentlemen, for the exhibition of the flowers of the arbors and Jullien. A new and expansive circle has been constructed in which a number of gentlemen exhibited away the time in the art of horsemanship. In the early part of the evening there was a concert, of the usual Vauxhall order, and they who survived the shock of the brass band, afterwards finished on the fireworks, which exceeded in all previous pyrotechnic displays, nothing has been seen this season so brilliant and dazzling as the last night's display. The whole was then brought to a conclusion with each other, and showers of flame descended."—Herald, June 3rd

The weather was as beautiful as could be desired; and upwards of 10,000 persons, (numbers were present, the great majority of the holiday folks, but amongst the dense mass of promiscuous and well-known faces, several important establishments of the season. Many of these have been

FINE ARTS.

THE GARDEN PAVILION OF BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

WITH this large engraving, we complete our Illustrations of the Pavilion lately constructed and embellished for her Majesty, in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. A view of the exterior appeared in No. 197 of our Journal, page 90; of the lunette, by Mr. Maclise, R.A., in No. 195, page 132; and a section of the plan in No. 201, page 163.

The present Illustration shows one of the sides of the Octagon or Middle Room, with the lunette, containing Mr. Maclise's fresco from "Comus," engraved of larger size in No 199 of our Journal.

The Engraving before the reader will convey a good idea of the chaste style of decoration adopted in the Octagon Room. Of Mr Maclise's fresco we have already spoken, as the highest class in the whole series. The mouldings and enrichments are of exquisite design; and the arabesques in the panels, painted by Mr S Rice, of the School of Design, in Somerset House, are admirably executed.

We now take leave of Mr. Gruner's illustrations; and congratulate him on his tasteful commemoration of her Majesty's patronage of British genius, in the decoration of the entire Pavilion. The views, we should add, have been engraved and published by Royal command.

THE BEY OF TUNIS'S PRESENTS TO HER MAJESTY.—In addition to the seven splendid Arabian horses, six gazelles, two ostriches, and a fine young lion three years old, the remainder of the gifts from his Highness the Bey of Tunis have arrived, and have been taken to Buckingham Palace. The presents were in cases, and consisted of rich scarfs, shawls, silks, attar of roses and other perfumes, bridles and harness studded with diamonds and other precious stones.

IMMENSE RAILWAY TRAINS. On Monday morning, as early as seven o'clock the approach to the termini of the Brighton, Dover, and Croydon Railway was the scene of much confusion, owing to the immense number of persons waiting for the early excursion trains. The eight o'clock Brighton train consisted of 44 carriages, and was propelled by three powerful engines. It extended nearly half a mile in length, and the carriages contained nearly 4000 persons. The nine o'clock train took down an immense number also: as did the trains for Dover, Ramsgate, and Croydon. Numbers of persons also availed themselves of the cheap excursions on the South-Western, Northern and Eastern, and the Eastern Counties lines.

ENGLAND AND THE OREGON QUESTION. The Liverpool Times has the following statement, to which, however, in our opinion, little credit is due:—"We have reason to believe that the object of General Armstrong, the United States Consul at Liverpool, in proceeding to America by the Great Western, was to take out a proposal for the settlement of the Oregon question, on the part of the British Government. General Armstrong is a veteran soldier, a companion in arms of General Jackson, and an intimate friend of President Polk, and yet a firm friend to the preservation of peace between the two countries. The terms which he is authorised to propose are said to be such as the Governments of both countries can agree to with honour. We think it necessary to mention what we have stated above, as we have seen it stated in some of the papers that General Armstrong has been recalled by his own Government to act in a military capacity. He has not been recalled, and we have reason to believe that he will return to Liverpool in five or six weeks from the present time, we trust with a treaty for the partition of the Oregon territory."

APPOINTMENT OF A BOARD OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION.—A minute has just been issued by the Admiralty, appointing a Committee of Naval Construction for the superintendence of all matters connected with the constructive department of the Royal Navy. The members of this committee are Dr. Inman, the distinguished head of the late School of Naval Architecture; Mr. Bincham, the master shipwright of Portsmouth Dockyard; and Mr. Abethell, the master shipwright of Pembroke Dockyard. Lord John Hay has been appointed chairman of the committee, and Mr. Henry Chetwild, of her Majesty's Dockyard, Deptford, its secretary. All matters of detail connected with the construction of our ships of war are to be submitted to its direction; and it will be held responsible for the accuracy of the calculations of displacement of all ships of war that may hereafter be built.

THE ARMY.—Eighty-three gentlemen entered the army during the preceding month, thirty-four of whom have purchased their commissions at prices varying from £1260 to £400 each, and amounting in the aggregate to no less a sum than £21,940.

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.—The following regiments are under orders for foreign service, and to return home:—6th, Ireland to Malta; 16th, Gibraltar to Ionian Isles: 88th, Malta to West Indies; 71st and 93rd, West Indies to America; 36th, two battalions, England to Ionian Isles; 36th, two ditto, England to Gibraltar; 97th, two ditto, Ionian Isles to Malta; 42nd, two ditto, Malta to Bermuda; 20th, two ditto, Bermuda to America; Rifle Brigade, first battalion, Ionian Isles to Jamaica; 48th, Jamaica to America; 79th, Gibraltar to West Indies, 60th, second battalion, America to England; 52nd, 81st, 44th, and 89th, America to England.

HER MAJESTY'S PAVILION IN BUCKINGHAM PALACE GARDENS.—SIDE OF THE OCTAGON.—LUNETTE BY MR. MACLISE, R.A.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

(Concluded from page 360.)

At the central point, on the boundary line, which separates this branch from the high historic, we would place Mr. Poole's "Dissolution of Sion Nunnery." It is a large work, of high pretensions, challenging serious criticism. The centre is occupied by the Commissioners and their attendants, sectaries, confessors, &c. On the right of the spectator are ranged the offending sisters, with their Abbess in her chair of dignity, and a nun before her gathering the flowers of a rosary, which the Abbess may have broken to pieces in her agitation. A staircase in the background leads to the cells of the nuns, who are descending. Richness of colour is given by magnificent hangings, the sumptuous and variegated dresses of the Commissioners and their troop, and the reliquaries and plate of the Convent, which have been gathered for removal. The first merit of this work is expression in the heads. That of the principal figure, a sinister, hard-featured official, gravely contemplating the treasures, of which the lion's share will probably fall to himself, is an example of well-conceived dramatic purpose, well-worked out. The heads of the friars are throughout vigorously imagined, and harshly painted. The nuns are less successful. They are all alike, mere variations of one type, and the attitudes and expressions want distinctness of meaning. We cannot enter into the minds of the sisters: could not, if we tried, find appropriate dialogue for them, could not in a word, walk their personages in the painter's drama. There is besides an unnatural enlarging of the eye, and a strain in the attitudes of all these figures. The drawing of the limbs is by no means so good as that of the heads; in many cases it is painfully bad: witness the feet of the monk on the spectator's left—who is turning to look at the load of conventual treasures which an attendant is bearing in two very weakly arms, which have no more clutch in them than those of a paralytic cripple. The colour is carefully studied, and though the profusion and finish of details place the work in the class of genre rather than historic art proper, it comes, as we have said, very near history. In fact, it might be obtended that only by this equivocal method of treatment is historical painting likely to be successfully cultivated into vitality in the existing state of art among us.

Mr. Elmore, in his scene from "Much Ado About Nothing," has pourtrayed the fainting of Hero and the womanly indignation of Beatrice, with a theatrical effect somewhat too nearly akin to the theatrical nature of his subject. Cleanly painted as the picture is, and marked by much beauty in the heads and skill in drawing and composition, we cannot put it on a level with his "Rienzi" or with his "Scene from Guelph and Ghibelline History" of last year.

Webster goes directly to life. He does not trust anything to costume. His "Remember the Grotto" is full of truth and humour, though in importance and character ranking below his "Village School," in the last Exhibition.

Frank Stone has a graceful and delicate group, "The Twilight Hour." An old cavalier, surrounded with his family, is watching the sunset from a terrace over-looking the sea. At his feet reclines a girl, a figure of refined and tender beauty, her heart filled with the influence of the hour, not even envying her sister, who is blushing a response to the whispers of the young lover who grasps her hand.

Our limits will not allow us to quote a catalogue raisonnée of the remaining pictures. We have indicated their general character in our classification, which leaves no head of subject unconsidered.

In sculpture, we have only to notice two works, Bell's "Child's own attitude," a marble of the charming and characteristic little rebel he exhibited in plaster last year; and "Melancholy" by Obiel—a figure of great beauty. Perhaps it would be more appropriately named "Sentimentality," or "Sensibility," or "Love Melancholy." It is not the larger and sublimer melancholy of the mind, but the tender, half-joyful, self-pleasing pensiveness of girlhood, as it ripens to perfect woman.

The general conclusion we have arrived at from a survey of this year's Exhibition is, that English art is most successful in dealing with matter not far remote from common nature and common life.

The grandly historical is not represented in the Academy rooms. What of it exists is left for Westminster Hall and the Houses of Parliament. We are not sorry for the separation. Religious art, we believe to be dead amongst us. Protestantism and Progress have killed it, by destroying that vitality of anthropomorphising faith, which is the essential condition of its existence, except in lifeless copies, like those of France and Germany, with which we profess little sympathy, feeling little.

But historical art may be vital in England. It asks but a vivid conception of the past, such as the normal imagination may reach to, where there is any creative power whatever. We have our Gerard Dows and Terburgs; we may yet have our De la Roche and our Horace Vernet; we cannot look to have a Raphael or a Leonardo.

Our annual Academy Exhibition is a show of pictures that may be bought by private persons, and hung in private galleries. As our Government does not, like the French, profess to purchase works of art from the Exhibition of the year, it would be idle to waste time and incur expense in preparing pictures which, in all probability, would, however meritorious, remain on the artists' hands.

But we should wish to see the Westminster Hall Exhibition made an annual one, as a market for works which, if they do not exceed private means to purchase, exceed the space of private houses to hang.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECK AND LOSS OF LIFE.—Accounts have been received of the shipwreck of the Karlerona, a Swedish Indiaman, with the loss of no fewer than 115 lives, in a dreadful storm off the coast of Matanzas. In all there were 153 persons on board. The last port she touched at was Havannah, where she shipped a valuable cargo. On her departure the intention of the commander was to proceed direct to Sweden. On the morning of the 1st of May, when the ship was ahead of the coast of Matanzas, she encountered one of the fiercest hurricanes ever experienced in that quarter, during the height of which she capsized, and instantly sunk, carrying with her 115 persons—seven souls of whom were lost. Seventeen of the crew managed to lay hold of one of the ship's cutters, which, as the vessel went down, floated over the deck, and saved them. They endured the greatest privation, being without provisions and water for several days. They were picked up on the 20th day after the deplorable occurrence, in lat. 25, long. 80. In the course of the same storm, or, as it has been termed, tornado, no fewer than thirteen vessels were driven ashore on the coast at Cape Cause. Many lives were lost. Amongst the ships wrecked were the Princess Alice Maude, of London, and the St. Martin, from Liverpool. Both were insured to a large amount.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 215.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1846. [Sixpence.

ENGLAND AND EGYPT.

At the time the land of the Pharaohs was in the fulness of its glory, studded with "hundred-gated" cities, peopled by dusky millions, who have left more for our wonder than imitation—those marvels of architecture, "of which the very ruins are tremendous"—when men travelled to the East as the source of light and knowledge in all the arts and sciences then known to man—when Egypt had its hosts, and battalions, and armies, that were the strength of whole generations of Kings—it is more than probable that the Island, centuries afterwards known by the name of Britain, was a desert, overgrown with forests, where life had not yet began to assume even its wildest form; or, perhaps, visited by a few Phœnician ships, which bore back to the sunny coasts of the Inland Sea dreadful tales of the cold and desolate regions of the North, where the ocean was always stormy—of the gloomy shores that terminated the habitable world, beyond which was the abyss, the abode of darkness, the great void, that knew neither land nor sea, nor the light of sun or star. No idea we can possibly form of remoteness, barbarity, savageness, discomfort, and all things terrible, can approach, or in the faintest degree resemble, the horror with which the old world spoke of all that was supposed to lie beyond the "Pillars of Hercules;" or the dim and shadowy notion they had of some land where life was a punishment—some "Ultima Thule," almost equalling in its actual gloom the fabled terrors of Tartarus.

Down to times far more recent than those of Egyptian greatness, the same ideas prevailed. When the power of Rome was attacked from without, and all her force was required to repel the invaders from the very gates of the Eternal City, the colony of Britain was one of the first to be abandoned, as the most distant and the least worth possessing.

But the time has been when Egypt and Britain—the extreme East, and the extreme West—both acknowledged one master, in the Roman Emperor. As little, with respect to nations as to individuals, can men

> Look into the seeds of time,
> And see which grain will grow, and which will not,

or a vision of what England is, would have startled those Lords of what she was, considerably. Last in the race of time, she is flourishing in the noonday of her splendour, an object of wonder and curiosity to all lands. And not the least striking of the events of modern times is, that the heir to the throne of Egypt, the successor to the diadem once worn by the Pharaohs, should be a guest in the land, of which the builders of the Pyramids never heard the name.

Egypt had decayed long before the Empires of the West began to rise, and, as a state,

> 'Twas dead, and buried, and embalmed,
> Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled.

That it should have been made a tributary to Rome was inevitable; the Power that ordered "all the world to be taxed" would not overlook a country so rich, so fertile, and so weak. It was impossible her ancient greatness could have revived under any Rulers; but, under the Romans, her decay would not have been so complete and desolating as it became under the yoke of the Turkish Empire; the Children of Omar began by destroying every trace of that learning and science that had been raised on the ruins of the mysterious lore of the Egyptian Theocracy, by the Greek and Roman, and had nothing to substitute in its stead. The sway of the Turk was always a blighting one: Greece wasted under it; and though Egypt, long since decayed, could hardly descend lower, the tyranny of the Porte prevented all chance of its ever reviving. The ravens of death already flap their wings over the Empire of the Sultan; and from the Power that can scarcely preserve itself, it is hopeless to expect any policy that can tend to a revival of strength in those who are subjected to it. The impulse that has remodelled, we can hardly say regenerated, Egypt, came from Europe. Its instrument was a man who had sagacity enough to appreciate the superiority of the arts and policy of the West,

IBRAHIM PACHA, PRINCE ALBERT, THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, AND STAFF

PARADE INSPECTION OF TROOPS IN ST JAMES'S PARK ON HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.—(SEE PAGE 379.)

and boldness enough to adopt them, in spite of that bigotry once so intense among the Moslems, which regarded everything that had a western or "infidel" origin with violent hatred; the deeper, perhaps, for the manifest superiority they presented over the unchanged and apparently unchangeable institutions of the East. Mehemet Ali, the son of an Albanian peasant, is the creator of modern Egypt; he wrested it from the Sultan, and, but for the interference of the European Powers, would in all probability have narrowed his dominions still more. Sultan Mahmoud was impressed in a similar manner with the advantages of European enlightenment; while he was calling in its aid to reform his Government, his rebellious Pacha was turning the same weapon against it; and he succeeded far better in his purpose: Egypt is independent, and Mehemet Ali powerful; while, if reports are true, the reforms of the late Sultan, never much relished at Constantinople, are gradually being dropped, to return to the usages of the good old times, sacred in the memory of all "true believers."

To the talents and energy of his father, and his own position as heir to the hereditary Pachalic of Egypt, Ibrahim, at present among us, owes more of the interest with which he is regarded than to his own achievements; his reputation has been gained rather in the field than the cabinet; he is more of the General than the Statesman; more, perhaps, of the mere soldier than either. He has been the active instrument of his father; what was planned for him he executed readily and thoroughly, without any example; war he had enough anywhere, but in the East it has always been most bloody and ferocious; Ibrahim's name alone is a "word of fear" throughout Syria; that reputation rests upon a huge mass of cruelties and horrors and as reputations are wont to do, at the same time conceals them. But neither Ibrahim nor his greater father, Mehemet, are liable to the charge of that wanton delight in blood, that capricious cruelty, that disgusts us in the career of such men as Al. of Janina, and Djezzer, of Acre.

In this, and in many other respects, Mehemet is far superior to most Eastern rulers: it has been objected to him that he has forced his improvements on the country by the "strong hand," and that fear, rather than love, is his engine of Government. But, amid the listlessness and apathy of the East, perhaps improvement is possible in no other way. It is to be hoped that, however established by Mehemet, the new system has taken root, and to have got results in store for the reign of his son, Ibrahim, who, we trust, will not think less of England and its power from a nearer acquaintance with it.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

In the official circles, the immediate change of the English Ambassador here is made confidently a theme of. Lord Beauvale is expected to assume his place. Lord Clanricarde was said to be desirous of the office, but not to be supported by the leading Whigs. This change is far from being a subject of congratulation at Court where the fall of the Peel Administration is a source of the deepest anxiety.

In the family circle at Neuilly, the Royal Pater-familias assumes as bale and hearty as if he were a good-natured farmer sending his married daughters, instead of governing the most unruly of empires. He is constantly exclaiming, all owing to the childhood of his grandson, the Count of Paris, "I dey nuse as well as the Queen, there will be no end of it." The excellent Queen, the model of that most virtuous and sagest lady, the Queen Amelie. She was on her knees through the whole night that preceded the execution of Lecomte; and when the fatal hour came, it seemed as if the sound of the guns would be all echoed like thunder in her heart. The constant peril of her Royal husband fills her mind; and, wherever she moves, she feels surrounded by danger ever shadowing all repose and happiness. It cannot be denied that the bad taste of the Parisians have not been devoid of useless and associations to all parties in the state. The Duke Paquelar, the President, in going as a president the condemnation of the Peers, was accomplice of Marshal Ney: and that in the very presence of his son, Prince de la Moskowa revived most untoward associations and dangerous reflections; whilst the decapitation of the criminal at the break of day was the subject, indeed but too closely to the hour of the sad knell, that no example can deter other desperate men from this hideous crime; but, on the contrary, every allusion to the subject spurs them on. However, it is not by such gloomy thoughts that the Parisians are absorbed, as we would fain have minded, had you seen them on Sunday last, rushing out of Paris under a burning sun, sweating away and a coats, to witness, in different directions, four different fêtes of the same afternoon. The splendour was the Review at Versailles of Louis XVI had a head, but no heart; another city and palace he created, the scenes of the frightful city of its founder. Nothing so singular as to behold Versailles, of which the inhabitants themselves appear in general to have been turned into stone as the inhabitants of the enchanted city in the Arabian Nights suddenly assumed the most ecstatic vivacity. Then the noble land of the Bois de Meary, dominating over an endless view on all sides, is suddenly covered by thousands of spectators awakening every echo by stunning shouts and outbursts of merriment. Thus totally subverting all the notions of the greatest of all pacists: the Grand Monarque was not only said Fetal rest nous but considered all recreation as the particular and exclusive privilege of the Crown. As a song itself the races were highly interesting; but to sing in the crowd was anything but agreeable to family men. At the brightest equipages, those with four horses particularly, and the places of honour were filled by young mine actresses of Paris, and by those who since the days when notaries learnt to dance of Aspasia are cautious how they profane, by their insolence, public meetings. The races will, no doubt, gain more and more public esteem, the lovers of the turf will be more energetically supported by the public and the Government, now that General Oudinot has revealed, in the Chamber of Deputies, the startling fact of the dearth of horses in France. They are not even equal to the demand of the army in a state of peace—5000 troopers having no horses, although the price offered by Government is augmented two fold. All, indeed, that relates to horses excites the greatest eagerness in France; thousands assembled in and near the Hippodrome a few days back, to witness an experiment which proved successful, of a contrivance by which horses are attached and detached in a moment, when the carriage is going full speed.

FRANCE.

TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF LECOMTE.

In part of our impression last week we gave the commencement of the trial of Lecomte, before the Court of Peers, for the attempt upon the life of Louis Philippe. The trial commenced on Thursday, and was concluded on Friday.

On Thursday, at twelve o'clock, the Chancellor, Baron Pasquier, and the members of the Court, entered the hall, and, shortly afterwards, Lecomte was brought in by a sergeant-at-arms, and placed between them in the dock. The accused was dressed in a black [illegible]. He is a middle-aged man, rather stout, and has countenance on detail [illegible] no greatest resolution.

When the [illegible] ted, M. Cauchy, the Secretary, called over the names of the Peers, at out 200 of whom were present.

The President [illegible] erwards directed Lecomte to stand up, and asked him his name, age, profession, &c.—The prisoner replied: "My name is Lecomte (Peter). I was born at Sedan, in the department of the Côte d'Or. I am 48 years of age. I formerly occupied the office of Keeper General of the forest of Fontainebleau. I last resided [illegible] Cayeée, No 3 I am unmarried."

M. Cauchy then read the list of indictment, which the prisoner appeared to listen to with considerable attention.

M. Cauchy afterwards called out the names of the 41 witnesses, who retired from the hall, with the exception of Count de Montalivet, who, suffering from constant [illegible] no greatest resolution

When the [illegible] witnesses were examined, but their evidence formed a mere repetition of [illegible] ance which we gave so recently that it is quite unnecessary to repeat them. Lecomte being interrogated by the President, admitted the whole [illegible] of the accusation. Lecomte confessed that he had fired two shots upon [illegible] hair, he said, distant of the grand the person he was enabled [illegible] many injustices, and, instead of acquiescing in his demand, [illegible] ve him an annual pension which was only to be paid to him [illegible] ed. He had vainly endeavoured to see the King, and once to M. Fain, his secretary. The latter informed him that his demand had been referred to the Minister of War. General de Rumigny,

THE QUEEN OF THE WAVE.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY. 1846.

The Summer Sun is beaming
In cloudless might
On the free-born breeze are streaming
Our banners bright:
A thousand guns on land and sea,
Peal the loud notes of jubilee.
In camp or court,
In port or fort,
Wherever England's sons resort,
The voice, the free, the brave—
There with one skin they hail the name
Of the Sovereign Queen of the Wave!

Honour and Truth have kept her
From Guile afar—
Glory has crown'd her sceptre,
Love her throne's star—
Swart Labour laughs aloud with glee,
Commerce and Ceres now are free.
No more the cot
With Famine fraught,
Shall welcome Crime t' avenge its lot;
Nor shall the half-clench'd hand
The mart and plain shall hail as the
Of Victoria, Queen of the Wave!

Not Regnolar phalanges
Can shake her pow'r—
On Oregon or Gages
No chords shall lower.
Thrice crown'd is Justice Wisdom
Peace
Her heartfelt wish is to increase
World's energies,
Wherever the seas
Shout welcome to the buoyant breeze—
Wafts life to each, and free the slave.
Oh! well may Earth joy in the birth
Of the fair Queen of the Wave!

God's path is pearl'd with science.
Knowledge is might—
Man's best flag of defiance,
And rock of right!
It is the field where England ploughs—
The tree whose branch binds her brows—
Her star of light,
Which points to might
Her wolf-hounds and the friends of right!
Long, long may Albion's glebe
Have for its staff, the myrtle wreath
Of the lov'd Queen of the Wave!

And, in yon verdant Island,
The sister Land
Blended in each plain and highland
By Nature's hand—
There man shall cease to war God's
No more in blood and tears shall fall
The slaughter'ng soil;
A'r hopeless toil,
Sink beneath crimes exciting cell.
Erin! thy waters soon shall have
Their wrongs avenged—Right can destroy
Thy love for the Queen of the Wave!

May blessings beam upon her—
That Ocean Queen!
Around her throne may Honour,
Peace, long be seen
Ha'py in all her homestead ties,
Hail'd by the world's admiring eyes—
Her Throne stand
For the Nations three,
The bond of their brotherhood Loyalty,
Truth's oracle and the martyr's grave.
Long live the Queen in joys serene,
The Sovereign Queen of the Wave!

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON. This splendid squadron arrived at Cove on Friday (last week). The ships came in in the following order, and anchored in the man-of-war roads: St. Vincent 120 guns, carrying the port pennant, command-d by Captain Pasco Collier. Rodney 92, Captain Bruce. British Queen 90, Captain Hall. Queen 90, Captain Willis. Brilliant, 26 gun-brig, Captain Watson. The following ships were off the harbour, but drove in during the evening, anchoring at the same place: Queen, 10 guns; Trafalgar, 120; Superb, 80.

EDUCATION IN THE ARMY. It is reported in military circles, that our military system is about to be thoroughly re-modelled, and that, amongst the improvements about to be introduced, will be the establishment of a school at Chelsea for the training of regimental schoolmasters.

LAUNCHES AT BLACKWALL. On Wednesday a double launch took place from Blackwall, viz. that of her Majesty's brig of war Recruit, twelve guns, and a first-rate steam-ship called the Brin-go-Bragh, the property of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. The attendance of spectators was very great. The Lords of the Admiralty were present, as also the Chairman and principal Directors.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

IBRAHIM PACHA is the second son, and now heir apparent, of Mehemet Ali, the illustrious Pacha of Egypt. Ibrahim was born in 1787. He first distinguished himself by the war in the Hejas with the Wahabites The command against them was originally consigned to another son of the Pachs, Toussoun, who died of the plague at the camp of Dama-hour in 1816, when scarcely twenty years of age. Ibrahim Pacha, in succeeding to the command, defeated the Wahabites in several encounters; wrested Mecca and Medina out of their hands; and reestablished the regular course of the caravans. On the death of his elder brother, Yussuf Pacha, in 1819, Ibrahim was universally recognised as Mehemet Ali's prospective successor in the government of Egypt When, in 1821, the duty of suppressing the Greek insurrection was assigned to the Egyptian Pacha by the Sultan, shortly after the death of his eldest son Yussuf," Ibrahim was selected by him for the office; and, in the campaign of 1821, he successively regained Ibrahim Pacha to the Morea. At Marmorice, the Captain Pacha proposed to Ibrahim to lead the van of the Turkish armament against the Greek fleet in the Dardanelles. On this occasion, Ibrahim demonstrated that if he possessed the courage of the lion, it was sometimes advantageous to possess a so the wiliness of the fox; and, finding that compliance with the Captain Pacha's proposal (who, probably, wished to get rid of a rival whom he feared and envied), would subject his vessels to the hazard of complete destruction. from the formidable Greek fire-ships, he evaded compliance; wearthered the enemy's fleet, and, attacking the Greeks in the rear (thus avoiding their dreaded fire-ships), dispersed or destroyed their whole fleet, after an obstinate and decisive engagement. The result of Ibrahim's career in the Morea may be briefly recapitulated. After a brilliant and successful campaign of two seasons, during the long campaign in that half depopulated country, which was protracted through the years 1822, 3, 4, 5, and 6, Ibrahim would, probably, have succeeded in subjugating or extirpating the Greeks, had not fate otherwise decreed. The three allied Powers—England, France, and Russia—prompted chiefly by the eloquence and statesmanship of George Canning, whose brilliant Friendship began and ended in 1827—sent a combined fleet to the Archipelago in the latter year, for the purpose of liberating Greece from her Mahometan invaders. The Allied fleet met in the Greek seas in August, 1827; and, on October the 22nd, 1827, fought the great battle of Navarino, which totally destroyed the Turko-Egyptian fleet, and gave birth to the sovereign independence of Greece Ibrahim, who commanded on this occasion, did all that a skilful and resolute General could have done to avert the victory, or mitigate defeat. That victory has been pronounced "untoward," on account of its political results. It was, nevertheless, one of the most brilliant naval actions which modern times have witnessed.

Ibrahim's march from Syria on Constantinople, in the great campaign of 1832 continues the next bright point in his distinguished career. The campaign in Syria, conducted by Ibrahim, began on the occasion of the Greek war, which already disposed the Sultan Mahmoud That vindictive and self-willed autocrat determined to punish Mehemet Ali for evacuating Greece; and, remaining neuter during the Russian campaign of 1828 29, and secretly resolved to support him To anticipate this purpose, Mehemet sent Ibrahim to strike the first blow by seizing Acre, as the first step to the conquest of Syria. The year 1831 accordingly, the possession of splendid Province in Syria, gained by Ibrahim over the Turkish Generals sent against him Acre, Damascus, Antioch, and Aleppo surrendered; and the Turks were totally defeated in the successive battles of Homs, Beylan, and Bylan. Ibrahim then fixed a position on the celebrated defiles of Taurus; and the battle of Konieh, fought on the 21st of December, 1832 followed, which laid Asia Minor at his feet, and closed the campaign and Constantinople and the united Powers now interfered; and, after prolonged negotiations, peace was signed in the S, ring of 1833 by the Government of Syria to Mehemet Ali, in conjunction with Lord Viscount Ponsonby in Egypt

Ibrahim Pacha finally triumphed in that campaign over the best troops which Turkey could bring into the field, and exhibited a thorough knowledge of the art of war. The superiority of the Egyptian and Syrian troops, whom he had disciplined, to the successive Turkish armies which he overthrew in his progress, must have been the result of able tactics and experienced strategy. The campaigns and decisive battle of Nezib utterly broke up and dis-organised all the military and defences of the Turkish empire, and left the road unimpeded open to the victor. His march from Adana, by Eregly and Cogni (the reverse of the renowned march of Alexander the Great), was conducted in the most masterly manner, and although he was wounded, and threatened, have dictated humiliating terms to the Porte at Constantinople, had not Russia interfered to prevent the protecting Ali before the very gates of Ibrahim's camp. The result of this interference of separating Syria and Egypt for ever from the Turkish empire.

I would be an interesting repetition to record the establishment by Ibrahim of a new system of civilisation and discipline in Syria, and to detail the Pacha's measures and resources which saved and courage could exhibit, Ibrahim displayed; but both were vain against the overwhelming forces of Russia, France, and England. The campaign terminated with a quality proportioned to the enormous disparity of the combatants, and the capture of which gave the transient supremacy of Syria to Egypt, was the measure—by the destructive energy of its Arab wrestling the sovereignty of Syria from the hands of Mahmoud, and transferring it to the sceptre of the Sultan. The civilising policy of the two Egyptian potentates was here again remarkable They taught a nation to the use against a people of civilised Europe. It was both a measure and wise act on the part of Ibrahim as his illustrious father to allow passage to Lord Stratford's letters, traffic, and passengers, through Egypt, during the height of a short but most sanguinary campaign, in which we were unwarranted to open fire on favourite nabobs. It was wise, we repeat, as well as magnanimous, and doubtless will contribute, mainly, in the estimation in which Ibrahim Pacha will be held and the respect with which he will be treated during his present visit to this country.

The Portrait which we gave of Ibrahim Pacha in our last week's number, expressed very like his resemblance though it hardly expresses sufficiently the character which strikes the observer on seeing him, namely, the unmarked distinction between the look of his person and the small size of his head. His person commands, although not dignified in bearing and address, by reason of its fine stature. His forehead is high and fine in detail, and his features readily exhibit a placid expression of lofty repose His countenance is marked with the small p. int, which indicated its general effect to be more commanding and pleasing. His eye are bright and searching; and, when lighted up with strong emotion, manifest a forcible spirit which burn within. In the East, they bear the remarkable of possessing fascinating power, with a most piercing charm and subduing the best nerves.

From the period of the Greek Campaign a great change was observed in Ibrahim's habits and manners of Ibrahim. He was accused of destroying the olive plantations of Morea; but he planted them on a large scale in Egypt This was type of the change in his demeanour and conduct. He re-signed in European civilisation the great element of severe gravity, and the pledge of durable power in the forward, he seconded, with all his natural talent and energy, the social, moral, and commercial reforms introduced into Egypt by his illustrious father, and a gradual amelioration of manner was observed to accompany this spirit of general reformation.

Mr St John, in his work, entitled "Egypt and Mehemet Ali" (a work at once precise and comprehensive in its statistical details of the Pacha's vast commercial and educational establishments), gives the following description of Ibrahim Pacha's private life and manners:—

"Ibrahim Pacha, born in a private station, received not the education of a Prince; has his manners, though far from rigid, are regular and respectable. He is an early riser, and repeats his morning prayers in public. Coffee is then brought in, after which he sends several boats in transacting business and giving audience to his principal officers. He then rides out to inspect the Government works and factories established by Mehemet Ali, and, returning, about 21 o'clock, dines in a very frugal manner, not wholly abstaining (on account, poss bly of its European sympathies) from the use of wine In summer a short sleep succeeds his dinner; after which he returns to the Divan, and is engaged in transacting business till sunset, when he retires to the Harem, and spends the remainder of the evening in the domestic privacy of social intercourse of its fair and accomplished occupants."

ARRIVAL OF IBRAHIM PACHA IN LONDON.

This illustrious visitor arrived at the South-Western railway station, at Vauxhall, at half-past eleven, on Monday, from Portsmouth, by a special train, which left the terminus at Gosport shortly after nine o'clock

The Earl of Morley, Deputy Chairman of the South Western Railway Company, Colonel Henderson, Mr. Townsend, Mr Ribbert, and Mr. Smith, Directors of the Company, were in waiting at the terminus, to receive his Highness, who almost immediately he left the train, entered his carriage

In anticipation of the Pacha's early arrival, a large crowd had collected in front of Mivart's Hotel, in Lower Brook-street. Shortly after the Pacha and suite alighted at the hotel, and was conducted to the presence of the Pacha, with whom the noble Earl had a lengthened interview Colonel Campbell, formerly British Consul at Alexandria, was present with an orderly. Effendi, the Turkish Chargé d'Affaires, was subsequently closeted with his Highness for nearly two hours His Excellency Sadyk Pacha, the Turkish Ambassador, from the Pacha of Tunis, and the members of his suite, were introduced to his Highness

These were the only visitors received by the Pacha on Monday. The introductions were in the state drawing-room of the hotel.

Her Majesty's Government, through the noble Earl past four to inscribe his name in the call-book kept at the hotel. The right hon. Baronet was recognised by the crowd of persons assembled in the streets.

The Duke of Wellington made a hasty call at six o'clock, on his way to dine with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity Corporation.

A great many visitors of rank called at Mivart's, immediately after his High ness had arrived

His Highness, accompanied by Major Dickson, and several members of his suite went out late on Monday evening for a carriage drive. On leaving Mivart's, the party proceeded in the direction of Regent-street, and went by Waterloo-place and Whitehall, as far as Westminster Abbey, and then returned by Regent-street to the Regent's Park. The Pacha there got out of his carriage and walked some distance in the enjoyment of a cigar. His Highness and party were absent from the hotel nearly three hours.

Agreeably to his invariable custom, the Pacha rose early on Tuesday morning, and breakfasted at eight o'clock. At nine o'clock (until then) no person was permitted to see him, with the exception of his own suite, and Major Dickson, who had been present at the inspection of the Guards at St. James's Park.

At ten minutes past nine Ibrahim Pacha, attended by Major Dickson, and accompanied by the officers of his own suite, left Mivart's Hotel for Somerset House.

At a quarter to ten o'clock the cavalcade left the Palace for the horse Guards, where his inspection took place. The mace-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief was in advance; his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the Turkish Ambassador Ibrahim Pacha, his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, Viscount Combermere, Lieutenant-General Sir J Macdonald, Colonel Bouverie, Captain F. Seymour, Colonel Drummond, Major-General Wemyss, &c., and the suite of Ibrahim Pacha followed.

The open space in the park, facing the Horse Guards, anciently known as Tothill Fields, was kept by detachments from the Grenadier, Coldstream, and Scots Fusilier Guards The troops assembled for inspection arrived at the barracks, and took up their positions punctually at half-past nine o'clock The force consisted of a squadron of the Regiment of Life Guards, four companies of the Foot Guards, four from each of the regiments of Grenadier, Coldstream, and Scots Fusilier Guards. The full band of each regiment was present in review uniform, and contributed to the animation of the scene by the martial performances of martial music. The mounted band of Life Guards was also on the ground. The whole of the infantry was under the command of Colonel Dalrymple, of the Scots Fusilier Guards. Viscount Combermere, Commander-in-Chief of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, commanded the cavalry. The Foot Guards on parade amounted to 768 men, exclusive of officers. The Infantry took up their open square on the ground, and the Life Guards were stationed on the right of the Horse Guards

On his Royal Highness Prince Albert and Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington, Ibrahim Pacha and suite, &c., entering the open ground from the Park, the cavalry halted instantly struck up the National Anthem, and afterwards performed "See the Conquering Hero come," as a compliment to the noble Commander-in-Chief. Ibrahim Pacha then came a-p ast the ranks of several officers, amongst whom were Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Lord Clinton, Lord Combermere, the Marquis of Londonderry, &c.

There was an extraordinary number of the nobility at the inspection, among whom were the Duke of Beaufort, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford and Lady Rachael Russell, Viscount Combermere, the Marquis and Marchioness of Abercorn, Lady Seaford, Lord Charteris, Lord Ashburton, Lord Ellesmere, the Countess of Westmorland, Lady Peel, Lord and Lady Vivian, Lord and Lady Hope, Viscount and Viscountess Maury, Mr. Alderman Gibbs, &c.

Ibrahim Pacha was the great object of attraction, and he took the most lively interest in the manœuvres of his purpose presence was much admired throughout the whole number of the troops. His Highness wore the superb military costume of the country, a gorgeous scarf and sash of gold thread and silk, and a richly embroidered belt, and with a cap of scarlet velvet. Each side of his dress was covered with diamond buttons, and he wore a rich and decoration of the Legion of Honour, recently presented to him by Louis Philippe. His Highness's horse was also richly caparisoned in the same manner as his person and dress were enriched by a profusion of the most splendid precious stones. The other parts of his equipments were equally splendid. The movements of his Highness's horse were all in that infinitely dashing, with the exception of his stately and majestic

After the inspection had terminated, Prince Albert with Ibrahim Pacha on his right, the Duke of Wellington on his left, and Lord Charteris and Lord Hardinge on the left, left the parade, followed by the aide-de-camp and the officers and attendants on their return to Buckingham Palace.

The Pacha, on his arrival at Buckingham Palace, almost immediately took leave of his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Duke of Wellington, to repair to the hotel with his suite

His Royal Highness, after partaking of luncheon, granted interviews

Dwarkenauth Tagore, Sheriffs Chaplin and Laurie, Lord Dudley Stuart, and Dr. Bowring, M.P., had interviews with the Pacha in the course of the afternoon.

His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge called on the Pacha on Tuesday afternoon, and inserted his autograph in his Highness's book of visitors

We understand his Highness and suite intend to leave for a tour in the provinces and the Highlands of Scotland towards the close of the ensuing week, unless any unforeseen circumstances should arise to alter the contemplated movements.

The visitors to his Highness on Tuesday were numerous.

His Highness and suite went Lady Peel

His suite attended by Major Dickson, and accompanied by Colonel Ibrahim Pacha, Captain Mustapha Effendi, Captain Ismail, Mr. Bandorf, Mr. Bell, and M. Mestorff, also was received on his arrival at every by Sir Robert Peel, by whom the Pacha was cordially welcomed. Sir Robert where the best of visitors had by this time departed. His Highness were in conference and the Pacha and the several members of his retinue gave many orders and other information of Bonaparte. His Royal Highness Prince Cambridge came early. The picture gallery presented scene when the whole of the company had assembled, from the uniform, for with very few exceptions, all the visitors Pacha and his suite gave an additional interest to the assembly. It may properly be observed in first introduction to English society. His Excellency Sir the Lord Extraordinary Ibrahim Pacha left Lord of Tunis, and were present also.

The Pacha visited several of the principal objects of interest in the course of Wednesday. The carriages were order at the twelve o'clock, and his Highness, accompanied by his suite, as usual, was driven by the route of Oxford-street, Regent, Cavendish, &c., to the Lunacy-one entrance of the Tuileries Tunnel, which at descended into, and inspected from end to end, traversing each of the causeways, and putting innumerable questions.

From the Tunnel the party drove to the Tower. After a short delay, the Pacha was conducted into the Jewel House, where the regalia of England are kept, and which had a short time previously been visited by the lovely children of Ibrahim, who accompanied the elder Pacha in the course of the forenoon. It was with some curiosity that the party viewed the splendid collection of jewels and plate, and the noble Governor of the Tower, Lieutenant-General Sir Alexander Dickson, explained the various articles of interest. His Highness's visit to the Tower, in which the Arms Bequeathed by Napoleon to the Sultan, in the campaign of 1812, were also inspected, was the first visit of the kind which the Pacha had made to the Tower, and was, therefore, of peculiar interest. The Pacha was conducted to the vaults, wherein there are stored such articles as valuable (perhaps more) of gold and precious stones as have been found in the Tower from time to time. The Record Office, the Rotunda, the Salt-pet Debt Department, the "Dr. Johnson's Shop," &c. From the ground-floor the visitors were led to the upper story, where the principal portion of the business is carried on. Here the respective operations of watering in the pans, paper, and of printing and numbering it, were explained to the Prince, who made an exclamation in his vernacular (Turkish) to Mr Heath, the Governor, which, on being interpreted by Dr. Bowring, he assures, was equivalent to saying, "If you make the semblance of a dollar, you possess the reality down below!" a compliment which Mr. Heath acknowledged by a bow.

IBRAHIM PACHA'S DIAMONDS. The diamonds brought over by Ibrahim Pacha are of enormous value, some of them of the first water. The state robes of scarlet and gold are gorgeous, and in that of the artist are ornamented with jewels of great value. The breast-plate, dress, and other military ornaments with which it is ornamented being brilliants of the finest water, and in the centre of the hilt is a diamond of very large size. His pouch is of great size, and studded with diamonds.

ARRIVAL OF IBRAHIM PACHA AT PORTSMOUTH.

His Highness Ibrahim Pacha arrived at Portsmouth on Friday morning, (the 5th) as we announced in part of our impression of last week. His Highness left Paris in the Gomer, on Thursday afternoon, at four o'clock, and having reached the Nab between four and five on Friday morning, lay at anchor there till the tide let her about two hours, till it was nearly flood tide. On coming up in the Solent, her Majesty's ship Cawsand, having taken the flag of Sir Charles Ogle, passed at full speed, and saluted with the Gomer having again come to anchor, opposite the King's Rooms, Mr. Brown proceeded in the Echo to take charge, and bring her into harbour

The Gomer was brought in at the buoy, opposite the King's-stairs, where Admiral Sir C Ogle, Bart., the Commander-in-Chief; Mr Richard Hand, Secretary to Admiral's Flag-Lieutenant Morris; Mr Parr, Master-Attendant; Mr. French, Master Shipwright; Mr Pennell, Surveyor; and Lieutenant Hall, Director of the Police, met assembled.

Sir Charles Ogle, in the Admiral's barge, with his flag in the bow, accompanied by General Sir Hercules Pakenham, Lieutenant-Governor of Portsmouth; Colonel Gray, Brigade-Major; Captain Dacres, Captain Coles, and Captain Peyton, of the Calcutta, now proceeded on board, to pay his respects to the Prince, and to assure his wishes as to how or when he would land. They had been but a short time on board, when his highness's shrill whistle was heard In a moderately few yards were manned, and the Prince, with his suite, descended into the Admiral's barge, his flag was struck, and the French ship-of-war took his place, the Gomer firing a salute, while her crew stood at the gangway, and the band of the Royal Marines of the 13th Light Infantry, and that on the poop of the Victory. The Admiral's barge was followed to the shore by the barges of the other ships in commission, with all officers in full dress of rank.

His Highness Pacha was accompanied in the Admiral's barge by Ibrahim Pacha, Major General of the Egyptian armies; Ismail Bey Marechal de Camp; Moustapha Effendi, Aide-de-Camp to Ibrahim Pacha; Ismail Bey, Lieutenant; Capitaine Effendi, Secretaire; and Nubar Effendi, secretaire-interprete; all wearing the ordinary Egyptian dress

His Highness and his immediate attendants were conducted by the Commander-in-Chief and the other officers into the dockyard to Admiral's House, the head of the 13th Light Infantry playing up the National Anthem. As His Highness having reached Admiralty House, the Gomer lowered the Prince's standard and hoisted the National Ensign, at the main, and at the fore, and saluted with twenty-one guns, now dressed and manned the usual complement of seven. Immediately after the Gomer had hauled down her flag, being saluted by the guns from the battery and the Victory on leaving anchored.

The Prince, after remaining about an hour at Admiralty-house, proceeded with his suite to the George Hotel, where a guard was placed

At the hotel, his Highness, Ibrahim Pacha, accompanied by the Town Clerk, the Vicar, Aldermen, and Councillors, in their robes, were admitted into the Reception Room, when the Town Clerk read a congratulatory address, which Nubar Effendi having received and translated, Pacha, in his reply to some observations in reply, which the interpreter rendered in French to the following effect:

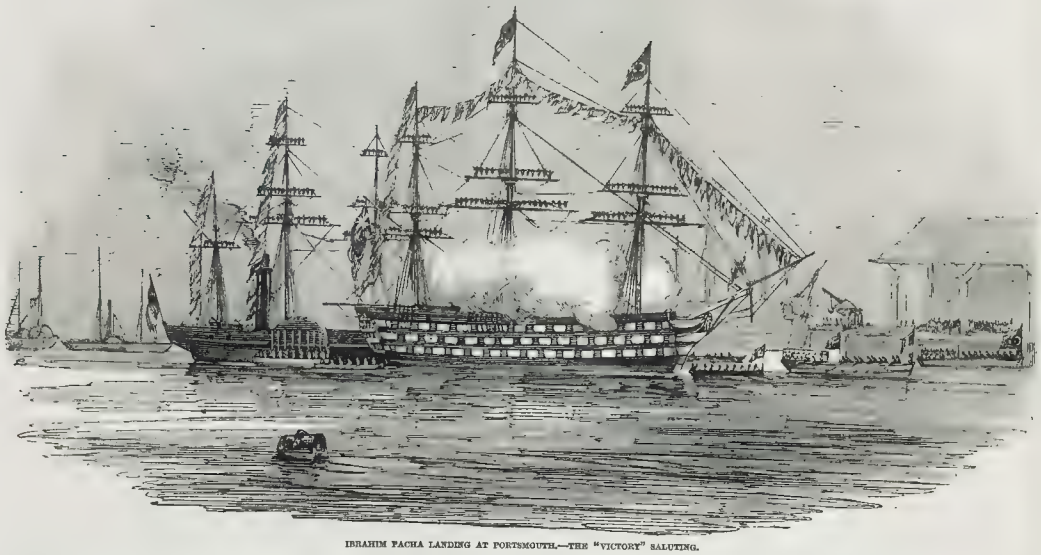
"The Pacha has received her Majesty has deigned to take notice of him; and his Highness begs to thank the authorities of Portsmouth for the act of kindness in present to him with an address With reference to that part of the address concerning the commercial enterprise of this country, his highness the Pacha begs to assure you that, as Egypt will always endeavour to facilitate in every way the communication of the country with her eastern possessions. For his part only, his father has taken the greatest interest in the subject. The Pacha will always regard with peculiar interest the prosperity of England, and will pray for the long life and happiness of her Majesty in conclusion, in the name of his father and himself, he thanks the assembly."

The Mayor and the Corporation then withdrew, greatly charmed with the courtesy affability of the Pacha.

The Prince and suite, after breakfast, Ibrahim and suite, attended by Major Dickson and Mr. Briggs, took seats in four carriages to the railway station where they were met by the Commander-in-Chief and his staff, with the Admiralty state carriages in waiting. At the latter barges the party embarked, and were rowed by Sir Charles Ogle Castle, in the Pacha, and Mr. Chase Master of the Royal Sovereign, proceeded in the Royal Charlotte yacht, having hoisted their respective flags. Captain Scott and Lieutenant M. Nicholas, of the Royal Marines, attended the Pacha.

Mr Grant, the Director, who on this occasion took the party to the station, his Highness saw the model working steam engine in full movement.

The party, and suite, proceeded to the Nab, where the Pacha, Ibrahim Pacha, and the Admiral's aide-de-camp, Captain Mustapha Effendi, and the Admiral's flag-lieutenant Morris, were received on board the yacht by the Admiral



IBRAHIM PACHA LANDING AT PORTSMOUTH.—THE "VICTORY" SALUTING.

Southsea Common at four o'clock, and it now being past three, it was given up, and the Pacha and suite repaired to the George Hotel for some refreshment. Ibrahim Pacha, after having visited successively Cowes, Osborne House, and Southampton, on Sunday, returned to Portsmouth in the evening, at nine o'clock.

On Monday his Highness took his departure from the George Hotel, and having proceeded to the dock-yard, there took leave of Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Sir Hercules Pakenham, and the other naval and military authorities of the port. His Highness subsequently embarked in the Admiral's barge, and crossed the harbour to the Clarence Victualling Yard, proceeding thence to the railway station, where he arrived about nine o'clock.

A guard of honour, composed of two companies of the 3rd Buffs, were on duty at the station, and, when his Highness arrived, the troops gave him a general salute. On alighting he was received by Mr. Campbell, the Secretary to the Railway Company, by whom he was conducted to the saloon prepared for his reception. Here the Directors were severally presented to his Highness by Mr. Campbell.

The ceremony of presentation concluded, Mr. Campbell, as Secretary to the Company, read an appropriate address to the Prince.

M. Nubar having rendered the document intelligible by translating it into the French language

His Highness, in reply, expressed his extreme obligation for the handsome manner in which he had been received by the directors. In the name of his father, himself, and his family, he begged to thank them for their courtesy, and to assure them that it would ever be his greatest pride to afford every possible facility to English travellers and commerce passing through the country, with which his feelings were naturally most interested.

His Highness having taken leave of the officers who had accompanied him from the dockyard, here entered the railway carriage, and everything being in readiness, Mr. Gooch took the direction of the Eagle engine, selected to propel the train, which was set in motion precisely at twenty-four minutes after nine o'clock.

The journey was admirably performed (including a stoppage of five minutes duration at Basingstoke) in two hours and ten minutes, the train arriving alongside the platform at the Nine Elms station precisely at thirty-four minutes past eleven o'clock. His Highness Ibrahim Pacha left with the authorities at Portsmouth £30 to be given to the poor.

The two annexed Illustrations of the Landing at Portsmouth—the Victory saluting; and the Presentation of the Corporation Address, have been engraved from sketches by Mr. R. H. C. Ubsdell, the marine-painter, of Portsmouth.

IBRAHIM PACHA RECEIVING THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF PORTSMOUTH.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

POPE GREGORY XVI.

THE LATE POPE GREGORY XVI.—FROM THE PORTRAIT IN THE VATICAN, BY PAUL DELAROCHE.

His Holiness, Gregory XVI, Pope, Servus servorum Dei, was a native of Belluno, of, we believe, humble origin. His name was Mauro Capellari, and he was born on the 18th Sept., 1765. He early in life devoted himself to a religious career, and entered the order of Benedictines. Here he displayed great ardour and ability in the acquisition of learning and knowledge. As a scholar in languages, literature, and science, he was perfectly versed; as a theologian he could scarcely be surpassed. Yet, added to this, such were his modest and retiring habits, that, had it rested with himself, he would have never left his monastery. The reputation of his talents and of his private worth, however, soon spread beyond the cloister, and he was spoken of as a future prince of the Church, long before his elevation. He was nominated a Cardinal by Pope Leo XII., on the 21st March, 1825. In this high station, the Benedictine Monk confirmed his fame. Being placed by the Pontiff at the head of the vast and important administration of the Propaganda, or congregation for the propagation of the faith, he here, aided by his African and Asiatic erudition, displayed no ordinary capacity. As a politician, Cardinal Capellari was rather inclined to the popular side, and opposed to the Austrian party in Italy. His elevation to the Popedom was carried against the influence of Austria. He was elected Pope the 2nd February, 1831, and sat on the Pontifical throne under the name of Gregory XVI.

The Pontificate of Gregory XVI. was long and glorious. At every time, and on all occasions, he displayed the greatest anxiety and interest in the cause of humanity and Christianity, without looking to a distinction of sects. Indeed, so universal were his charity and benevolence, that he even had sent to him thanks and presents from the Sultan, for the kindness his Turkish subjects had experienced at Rome. To strangers of all nations, and especially to the English, he was always accessible, and affable. One lady traveller, from England, a Protestant, described her reception in glowing terms, and spoke of his Holiness as the most courteous, good humoured and agreeable gentleman in his dominions. His principle was that mildness, and not force was the true mode of success. His late conduct to the Emperor Nicholas was characteristic of this, and perhaps will have more effect than any other endeavour to relieve the persecuted Catholics in Russia. He quietly but firmly told the Emperor that, considering his great age, the time approached when he should render an account to God, and it was under the inspiration of his piety, as well as of his heart, that he defended, on that solemn occasion, justice and religion oppressed.

His Holiness had been for some time in a declining state of health, but his dissolution was not immediately expected. He expired suddenly, at Rome, on the 1st instant, in the eighty-first year of his age, and the sixteenth of his reign. Many Sovereign Pontiffs may have made more brilliant display in the affairs of the world, but none have certainly ever exceeded Gregory XVI. in wisdom and goodness. His death is universally deplored.

Among those spoken of as likely to succeed to the chair of St. Peter are Cardinal Giustiniani, Bishop of Albano; Cardinal Franzoni, Prefect of the Propaganda; and Cardinal Acton. The last, though born at Naples, is the scion of an English family. He is the uncle, and at present the heir presumptive, of Sir John Acton, Bart., of Aldenham, in Shropshire. He is in his forty-fourth year, and is a man of high reputation and ability. He was Judge of the Cameraria, or civil court at Rome, when only twenty-three years old.

WILLIAM HENRY ASHHURST, ESQ., OF WATERSTOCK, CO. OXFORD.

This respected country gentleman, who died at Waterstock, on the 3rd inst., in the 68th year of his age, was eldest son and heir of the late Sir William Henry Ashhurst, Knt., one of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench, in the reign of George III., and twice one of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal. The family of Ashhurst is amongst the oldest in England. Soon after the Conquest Adam de Assehurst obtained from Roger de Leyland a grant of lands in Dalton, and from that remote period to the present, his descendants have preserved a male succession, several having received the honour of knighthood in early times, and been distinguished in the wars of the Plantagonets.

Mr. Ashhurst, whose decease we record, succeeded his father in 1807, served as High Sheriff of Oxfordshire in 1810, and was chosen, in 1815, M.P. for the county, which he continued to represent until 1830. He married, first, in 1806, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Oswald Mosley, Esq., of Rolesworth Castle, and by her has left several children. He married, secondly, in 1839, Selina, eldest daughter of Sir John Morshead, Bart., of Trenant Park, and widow of Sir Charles Mill, Bart.

FRANCIS GLANVILLE, ESQ., OF CATCHFRENCH, CO. CORNWALL.

Mr. Glanville, who died on the 3rd instant, in his 84th year, sat in Parliament for Malmsbury, in 1794, and for Plymouth in 1797. He was son of the late Sir John Glanville, who was knighted when High Sheriff of Cornwall, in 1753. The Glanvilles of Halwell and Kilworthy, from which he derived, are reputed to have sprung from the famous Ranulph de Glanville, Baron de Bronholme, temp. William the Conqueror. After a sojourn of three centuries at Halwell, they were removed to their more splendid mansion of Kilworthy, by Sir John Glanville, Knight, Judge of the Common pleas, temp. Queen Elizabeth.

The late Mr. Glanville, by his first wife, Sarah, daughter and co-heir of William Masterman, Esq., had one daughter, the wife of G. W. Gregor, Esq., of Trewarthenick, and by his second, Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Fanshawe, Esq., he has left several sons and daughters.

THE COUNTESS OF ROMNEY.

Her Ladyship, who died on the 5th instant, was fourth daughter of Charles William, late Duke of Buccleuch, by Harriet Katherine, youngest daughter of Thomas, first Viscount Sydney. Her marriage to Lord Romney took place on the 8th February, 1832: the issue she has left are two sons and three daughters.

RECENT IMPORTANT EXCAVATIONS AT POMPEII.

(From our Correspondent.)

Naples, May 18th, 1846.

On the 14th inst. I made my tenth visit to Pompeii, accompanied by an old umbrella and a sketch-book, for the purpose of illustrating your Journal with a few of the latest and most interesting excavations of this ill-fated city. I left Naples at six o'clock in the morning, by the railroad, which passes by the modern entrance to Pompeii. As I alighted, and heard the convulsive grunt of the retiring train, I must confess to a little bit of poetic weakness the classic Forum of a city buried, in all its native truth, nearly two thousand years since, greeted my vision, whilst my ears were saluted by our most marvellous of modern wonders the steam-engine! "The Sleep of the Past—the Life of the Present," would have been the title of my inspirations, had not a sensation of hunger induced me to spare your readers and myself. I took a devilled turkey's leg from my pocket, and picked it in the atrium of the house of Sallust!

PORTABLE KITCHEN, FOUND AT POMPEII.

I do not intend to put on the toga because I happen to be at Pompeii; but, I shall give you a simple, unaffected account of what I did, and what I thought. A very few minutes had passed ere I was mobbed by guides; queer-looking fellows, dressed something between a gardener and a footman (out of place.) I told them I knew Pompeii very well, and begged to be left alone. How vain were my solicitations! they would keep talking on most officiously.

Whilst I strutt along the narrow streets, worn by the wheels of the biga, let me observe that, since the publication of the Entertaining Knowledge Society's two volumes on Pompeii (1836), comparatively little has been done. There are only some thirty men constantly employed, and they are barely sufficient to repair the casual falling in of earth, &c. The portion of Pompeii which has of late engaged attention is the Street of Fortune, running to the gate of Nola, and another nameless line of dwellings advancing towards the Street of the Theatres. Operations have also been carried on in the Tortuous Street, near the Forum, where some detached walls, forming a sort of passage apartment, are supposed, by Carlo Avellino, to have been used by the homeless poor of the city. I have seen very similar resorts in the interiors of Old Naples, where some curious examples of narrow doors and brick-built counters, with cavities in the top, may be found, singularly resembling those of Pompeii.

The immediate cause of recent excavations were the visits of the Seventh Scientific Congress of Italy, and those of the Emperor and Empress of Russia. The result of the former was the uncovering of a house near the Street of the Wine-shops, which was evidently the dwelling of a rich citizen—it has all the convenience of a superior Roman dwelling. The atrium is spacious, and partly paved with a mosaic, of elegant design. The impluvium has a fountain of various coloured marbles, at the back of which, (no uncommon circumstance), a table was found, supported by lion-clawed legs. The private apartments on either side of the area are decorated with fresco paintings; not, indeed, very artistically remarkable, but as good as are usually found.

Our Illustration is "The House of the Hunter," finally cleared in February (1846). This is a very interesting dwelling, and possesses some novel features. It was, in all probability, the house of a man of wealth, fond of the chase. A painting on the right occupies one side of the large room. Here are represented wild animals—the lion chasing a bull, &c. The upper portion of the house is elevated, where stands a gaily-painted column—red and yellow in festoons; behind which, and over a doorway, is a fresco painting of a summer-house: it may be a representation of some country retreat of the proprietor's. On either side are hunting horns. Passing through this doorway, you arrive at a square-built room, in excellent preservation. The most beautiful painting in this apartment represents a Vulcan at his forge, assisted by three dusky naked figures. This is a fine composition. The Vulcan is Herculean, and drawn with great boldness and power. In the niche of the outer room a small statue was found in terracotta. The architecture and paintings of this house were evidently the caprice of its owner; it is singularly rich in decorations, which differ from those executed by artists when left to their own fancy; the colours are very bright and vivid, particularly those of the birds and vases immediately facing the entrance.

The house excavated on the occasion of his Russian Majesty's visit does not present any peculiar features, and I was unable to gather information about the bronzes and amphoræ found therein. I believe nothing singular or rare was discovered.

I had scarcely finished my sketch when I heard the rattle of advancing carriages. On my arrival in the Street of Fortune, I found a committee of gentlemen had just alighted from their hackney coaches in the middle of the Forum! They were the appointed inspectors of excavation. I joined them as we proceeded towards the nameless street running into that of the theatres. Operations were here commenced, when one of the workmen exclaimed, "Roses and money!" "Clear the way!" shouted half a dozen excited antiquaries, as they rushed into a small apartment. Here were the bones of three skeletons, very perfect; and, near the hand of a young male, were found 37 pieces of silver, and two gold coins; some of the former were attached to the handle of a key! I examined the money, and found the silver to be Vespasians, and some family coins. The two gold pieces were Domitians; both in good order, and one having an interesting reverse. The unhappy beings who here perished may have been the inmates of the dwelling; or, what is not improbable, thieves who had profited by the excitement of the tarrific hours, and here concealed themselves with their ill-gotten wealth. We know from Pliny that the [illegible] and active had plenty of time for escape. Some peculiar motive must have delayed flight—hence the comparatively few skeletons found at Pompeii.

We next directed our steps to the spot partially excavated for the Empress of Russia. Here a curious domestic article was found a portable kitchen—of which I give you a sketch. This singular contrivance is made of iron. The upper portion is formed by two circular holes for boiling pots. The tabular surface was occupied with fire so as to enable other instruments of the kitchen to receive the heat which which was applied to the elevated portion. A handle in the front suggests its portable intention.

With this event ended one of the most pleasing days at Pompeii I ever remember; in fact, nothing so interesting has been disinterred for many months. The Committee left whilst I lighted a very bad cigar, and returned to revise my sketches; but not without my chattering guide! who I was obliged to send to gleam with some brandy-and-water, to enable me to enjoy that profound silence which forms the eloquence of Pompeii.

POMPEII APARTMENT IN "THE HOUSE OF THE HUNTER."

During the three days we were descending into night, and that sunshine which had given me so much beautiful light and shade disappeared. I returned to the pyramid with two Italian artists, now employed in restoring the house of the tragic poet to its original glory. I am glad of this, for my descriptions or drawings can never give me so good an idea of a Roman interior as will here present itself when completed.

* * * * * * * *

Tabet tabet! A horrid scream!—we are off for Naples: the old world is forgotten. I am once again in the world and think of the busiest of it.

I. W. B.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 14.—First Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 15.—Magna Charta signed, 1215.
TUESDAY, 16 Duke of Marlborough died, 1722, aged seventy-two.
WEDNESDAY, 17. Cobbett died, 1835, aged seventy-three.
THURSDAY, 18 Battle of Waterloo, 1815: cost £13,000,000.
FRIDAY, 19 Sir Joseph Banks died, 1820.
SATURDAY, 20.—Accession of Queen Victoria, 1837.

HIGH WATER at London bridge, for the Week ending the 20th.

Morning							Evening
Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.		Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.		h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
6 5	6 33	7 0	7 30	8 1	8 34		8 19	8 47	9 13	9 40	10 6	10 33

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Sophia," Cambridge. "The best reply we can give is on the following extract from a note in Mr. Bloxam's new Treatise on "The Principles of Gothic Ecclesiastical Architecture." 8th edition just published:—"The figure of a fish, when the term was in popular estimation, was one of the most ancient of the Christian symbols, emblematically significant of the word ΙΧΘΥΣ, which contained the initials of the whole and titles of our Saviour. The symbolic representation of a fish is first elaborated on some of the sarcophagi of the early Christians discovered in the catacombs at Rome; but the actual figure of a fish afterwards gave place to an oval shaped compartment, within it both extremities bearing the same mystical signification as the fish itself and formed by two arches intersecting each other in the centre. This was the most common symbol used in the Middle Ages and thus did receive it abounds in illuminated manuscripts. Every where we meet with it during the Middle Ages, in sculptured sculptures, in painted glass in enamel tiles, and on seals and the form is yet retained on the seals of many of the ecclesiastical courts.

"A Constant Reader," Hastings, may, very probably, ascertain the legality of Rock Brig by reference to "Horsfield's History of Sussex," which we have not at hand.

"A Subscriber" "Sullivan's Dictionary of Derivations." Dr Johnson cures derivations as also does the recently-published English Dictionary by Richardson. A Treatise on Compound Interest will be found in "The Library of Useful Knowledge" in "Examples of Processes of Arithmetic and Algebra."

"Lynn Regis" Has not come.

"A Subscriber," Dunstable. "I only claim his share of the outstanding debts

"A Subscriber." No 15 and all other back Numbers of our Journal are kept in print.

"A Subscriber" The Fund raised as a Testimonial to Mr. Rowland Hill, for his services in establishing the Penny Postage System, has been, in part or wholly spent (it to that question was, according to the original intention, for amount we believe represented by £3,000. The presentation will be celebrated, in a few days by a public dinner.

"D. A." Edward the Black Prince married in 1361, Joanna styled "the Fair," the daughter of the great uncle, the Earl of Kent.

"An Old Subscriber" Woolwich, is thanked.

"R. N." Cork, should send specimens for approval. much depends upon the subject and upon the mode the words are selected.

"G. A." Enfield, cannot encourage declining to recommend any medical practitioner.

"A Sub from Beginning" may purchase a book of instructions for using the Electro-Magnetic Telegraph, by application at

"L. L." A policeman is not justified in making a charge for rectifying the address of a letter passing through his hands

"A Subscriber on India" will we trust be further gratified with our Engravings of Pictures in the Royal Academy Exhibition (though not of those by the artist named in a communication

"Q. Q." Stamford. The Description of Dublin, accompanying the large View, will be posted immediately after the Title-page and Contents of our present Volume.

"Enquirer" Any thing like interest with some person connected with Government, or with a Member of Parliament.

"D. D." The Shrewsbury Show was engraved in No. 192 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"E. R." Manchester is thanked; but we have room to print the Sketch.

"G. L." had better address a note to H. Beverley of the Theatre in question, as it would have more attention, than the Public.

"C. H. W." Dr Lindley's School Botany.

"An Old Subscriber" The Plans of London published by the Useful Knowledge Society, and the Encyclopædia Metropolitana.

". . . ple." No.

"S. C. P." Drawings are, should forward specimens.

"X. Y. Z." Dr Mantell's "Medals of Creation" or First Lessons in Geology," is really rich in illustrations of Organic Remains.

"L. jones." We cannot say much in praise of a "Guide to London and its Environs" the books of this class are usually forgotten before they are published. Perhaps the two cheapest pamphlets "A Week in London," and "The Environs of London," are the best of the twelfpenny

". . . B." We do not remember.

"An Annual Subscriber" "Rose in Flowerpots.—Flowers in water, and living plants to pass, if kept in wet wood, greatly relieve the parsley of the air during the night time of long evening occupations of the inmates.

"Poor Art" we suspect to be "so a fix": the only attempt to obtain the nuisance should be by a magisterial appeal, or by indictment.

"Thomas Dexter." An original Tale by a distinguished Authoress, will be common as with our next Volume.

"W. I. Bishop.—Some of the most successful Portraits in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS have been engraved from Photographs.

"A Young Vocalist" We recommend an application either to Sir G. Smart, Sir H. R. Bishop or Mr. T. Cooke: or if our Correspondent prefers a lady teacher to Mrs Chaun, or Miss Mason. Any Music Publisher in Regent-street will supply the addresses of the Professors we have named.

"Betsy Martin." Miss Birch did not whilst she was in Italy. For Mrs. Stirling's new reply to that lady—Stage Door, Princess' Theatre.

"Ever Chester. Write to Julien, Regent-street

"J. E. M. S." Apply to the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society for the performance of "The Deluge" oratorio; and, if for an overture or symphony, to the Directors of the Philharmonic Society

"J. H." is thanked, but, we cannot promise early insertion of the subjects suggested.

"Japhet" See the original Memoir of Ibrahim Pacha in our present Number

"A Subscriber from the Commencement." We had rather not enter into the explanation."

"B. F." London, is thanked; but the Sketches did not reach us in time to be available.

"G. . . Thomas, Dulwich.

"J. . . Sunderland. See the Treatise on the Study of Mathematics published by Mr. Knight, price 6s. 6d.

"A Sub from Beginning" Martinus Buerus was a friend of Luther and on coming to England, at the invitation of Cranmer, he became Professor of Theology at Oxford.

"F. A." Lady Willoughby's Diary" is not a fiction. See the elaborate article "Dwarf and Dumb" in the Penny Cyclopædia."

"S. T." Trowbridge, is entitled to the Panorama of Dublin, which was duly forwarded to the newsroom

"Unitarian." Christian Frederic Schwartz, the zealous German Missionary to the Indians was employed there by the English Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

"Greenberry" should enclose the letter, unsealed, to the Lord Chamberlain.

"D. W." Declined.

"Athelia." The Railway Travelling Chart" is sold at the London and Brighton Railway terminus 2 Dulwich.

"R. J. T." is sold

". . . Reader," Birmingham.—The address is Clarence-terrace, Regent's park.

"Inquirer," Heywood.—Sabre is pronounced Sa

"H. M. B." Waterford.—Inquire of Messrs. Wiley and Putnam, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall

". . . Goldhill Chambers.—The late Earl Spencer (when Lord Althorp) was Chancellor of the Exchequer, not First Lord of the Treasury.

"Q. V." is thanked, the Sketch taken at Lahore may shortly be available.

INSCRIBE.—"Story, by W. G

ERRATUM. Page 366, col. 3 for Mr. M'Sweeny, read Dr. M'Sweeny.

THE PANORAMA of DUBLIN, presented to our Subscribers last week, was sketched by Mr. WHITTOCK, drawn on the wood by Mr. ANDREW, and engraved under the superintendence of Mr. F. SMITH. The blocks of wood were joined by Mr. WELLS, of Bouverie-street, so as to present one entire block.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1846

BUT that we have great faith in the certainty with which "all things work together for good" we might see some cause for alarm as well as perplexity in the present position of parties. The Premier, unassailably strong upon one measure, is comparatively weak upon others, and, at the present moment, stands in danger of defeat from a strange, but not unexpected, coalition of parties against him. The Protectionists average the passing of the Corn-Bill upon the Coercion-Act; and Lord George Bentinck, to punish the Minister he calls a traitor, is quite ready to commit an act of treason to his own opinions himself. He supported the first reading of the Coercion Bill, but will vote against the second, to punish Sir Robert. The language of the noble Lord has recently become, not less violent, for that was hardly possible, but decidedly more vulgar; he appears to have lost temper, and, in that state, is ready to say or do anything, no matter how inconsistent, that may have the effect of unseating the Premier. So he and his party join the Whigs, who, in the same manner, have grown oblivious of former eulogies of strong measures, and the Irish Members—the only thoroughly consistent opponents of the Coercion Bill, inasmuch as they have denounced it alike at all times and seasons—accept the support thus offered them from both sides: so attacked, the Bill will be defeated—of that, little doubt can be entertained; but we question if the Premier will res gn upon that account, while the Corn Bill and the Sugar Duties are still unsettled. It is more likely he will remain in office, see the Corn Bill through the Lords, and "go out" on the Sugar Duties, or some question that may be a better theme on the Hustings of a General Election, than the old and often repeated policy of Coercion for Ireland, which, as it has been often tried, and never succeeded—(being sure to be wanted again)—is beginning to fall into discredit on all hands.

At all events, it is certain that perils are fast gathering round the path of the Peel Ministry. We wish we could see, in the combination of parties against it, any hope of a Cabinet that could succeed it with credit. But those who have so easily joined will as easily separate. They have nothing in common with each other. As to the Whigs, they are eclipsed; their theories and plans are adopted and worked out. Their return to office would only be the creation of another "obstructing" Conservative Opposition, who would prevent all improvement whenever they might be disposed to do.

It is difficult to say what party would predominate in a new Parliament; the Protectionists would probably be quite as strong as they are now; but what is to draw the distinction between a Ministerial Conservative and a Whig, and as a candidate, give one the preference over the other, we are at a loss to conceive. All party distinctions seem obliterated.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

DINNER TO PRINCE ALBERT AT LINCOLN'S INN.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn by accepting a dinner on Wednesday evening. The first grand day since the elevation of his Royal Highness to be one of their body. The new hall was crowded by members of the inn, of whom there were nearly 300 present.

His Royal Highness arrived about half-before eight o'clock, attended by several noblemen and gentlemen of his household, and was received with the usual ceremonials. The Prince wore the silk gown of a bencher, and the star of the order of the Garter.

Amongst those present were Lord Brougham and Denman, and the great majority of the Benchers, the Bishop of Durham, &c. Lord Brougham sat next his Royal Highness at the table.

The band played during the evening, "The Queen," was proposed by Mr. Harcourt Q.C., the Treasurer of the Inn.

His Royal Highness returned thanks before eight o'clock, attended, as he was usually escorted as he departed.

An album table-cloth, and a profusion of rich and rare wines, were provided by the Benchers for the occasion. After the dinner the Members of the Inn Band of the Coldstream Guards performed several pieces in the gallery in the course of the evening.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTH DAY Tuesday having been appointed for the celebration of her Majesty's birth, it was observed with the usual demonstrations of loyalty and attachment to the Sovereign. The morning was ushered in with many hearty cheers from the crowds collected in the streets, and, in the evening the houses of her Majesty's tradesmen, the clubs, and other public buildings, were brilliantly illuminated. The Park and Tower guns were fired at one o'clock. Full dress was the order of the day in the evening by nearly the whole of the members of the Ministry in each brilliant attendance.

ARRIVAL OF THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA. The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday in command of the Imperial steam-frigate, accompanied by two frigates The line of battle ship saluted the Admiral, and the garrison with twenty-one guns. The salute was returned by the forts, and from the Admiralty-pier the Grand Duke landed at the usual state in the Dockyard, and was received without any state by Admiral Berkeley and the authorities. His highness proceeded to the Admiral's house, where he will take up his abode during his stay at Portsmouth, which, it is stated, will be some days.

WINDSOR THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.) His Highness Duke of Nassau arrived at Slough this morning, en route to Ascot Heath, in the state carriage of the Great Western Railway Company, by a special engine (the Autocrat), at twenty minutes past eleven o'clock. Three of her Majesty's carriages and four, with the Grand Duke and suite, in their dress liveries, being in waiting at the station, the distinguished party immediately departed for Windsor, and proceeded direct to the Castle, alighting at the Grand Entrance in the Quadrangle, after inspecting a portion of the private and state apartments, and remaining for nearly an hour, left the Royal residence, at half-past 2 o'clock, for the course, proceeding through the Long Walk to Ascot Heath, various foreigners and their attendants, on their return from the course, it receded direct through Windsor and Eton to Slough, and left for town, by a special train, at a few minutes before six o'clock. His Excellency, Sidi Ahmed, the Ambassador Extraordinary from the Bey of Tunis, and his suite, arrived at Slough, from Paddington, shortly after the Pacha had left for Ascot, and immediately proceeded to the course in the state carriage-and-four.

ENTERTAINMENTS.—The Queen's Concert.—The Duke and Duchess of Cleveland gave an elegant entertainment on Wednesday evening to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at their mansion in St. James's-square. The Duke's ball on evening party after the banquet. The noble Duke and Duchess will give a grand entertainment to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge on the 26th inst.

THE ASCOT RACE BALL.—The annual race ball took place on Tuesday evening at the town Hall, Windsor, under the patronage of the Earl of Orkney, the Earl of Rosslyn, Colonel Sir William Robert Clayton, Bart., Ralph Neville, Esq., M.P., Hamilton Farkes, Esq., and Colonel M'Dowall and the officers of the Grenadier Guards. Dancing commenced at seven o'clock; and in a short time afterwards the hall was thronged with fashionable company, among whom were Lady Anne Vane and daughters, Lady Amelia Knox and daughter, the Hon Mr Neville, the Earl and Countess of Orkney the Earl of Munster, Capital and Mrs. Bishop Colonel Piper and party, Sir George Armytage, Captain Mortimer West, Mrs. Forbes and party, the Hon. E. J. Forester, the Hon. Captain and Mrs. Fitzmaurice, Captain and Mrs. Ram-bottom, Colonel Hamilton, Cooden Ingram, &c. &c. At one o'clock, the company adjourned to the council chamber, and partook of the banquet provided by her widow, dancing was again resumed and kept up with great spirit until four o'clock.

THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE'S GRAND FÊTE AT DEVONSHIRE HOUSE. The Duke of Devonshire gave a magnificent entertainment on the Saturday evening at his princely mansion in Piccadilly. The dinner circle consisted of the Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Catherine Leveson Gower, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Normanby, the Earl of Ashburnham and the Bishop of Ely, the Earl of Ilchester, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl and Countess of Granville, the Earl Fitzwilliam, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, the Earl and Countess Spencer, Viscount and Viscountess Melgund, Viscount Morpeth, Lady Mary Howard, Viscount Duncannon, Lord and Lady John Russell, Lord Campbell, Lady Strathedon and Hon. Miss Campbell, the Right Hon. Sir John Cam Hobhouse, Sir Edward Belcher Lytton, the Hon. Adam Gordon, and Hon. F. Leveson Gower. Covers were laid for thirty-six guests The noble Duke after the banquet opened his grounds for an assembly. The concert which followed the band of the whole of Her Majesty's Guards.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM'S DAUGHTER.—The marriage of Lady Anna Eliza Grenville with Mr. Gore Langton was solemnized on Tuesday morning, at St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Hon. and Rev. Sydney Godolphin Osborne, the Earl of Buckinghamshire, the bride's father, and the brother of her ladyship, were present at the ceremony.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGES On Wednesday, the marriage of the Duke of Marlborough and Miss Charlotte Augusta Lavinia Spencer, eldest daughter of Viscount and Viscountess Ashbrook, was solemnized at Lambeth Palace, by special licence.—The marriage of William Walter Viscount Lewisham, eldest son and heir of the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, with the Lady Augusta Finch, eldest daughter of the Earl of Aylesford, was solemnized on Tuesday last at St. James's Church, Piccadilly.—Lord Adam Loftus, third son of the late Marquis of Ely, and other brother of Lady Harvey, was married on Tuesday, at Ickleton, to Miss Fanning.—The long-set ripated union of Viscount Fielding, eldest son of the Earl of Denbigh, and Miss Fenwick, great granddaughter of the celebrated antiquarian and historian, is to be solemnized on the 16th instant.—It is generally rumoured that Lady Katharine Cust, youngest daughter of the Earl and Countess Brownlow, is about to be married to Viscount Crawley, son of the Earl of Onslow.

RAILWAY BILLS IN THE LORDS.—From returns issued by order of the House of Lords, it appears that the total amount of capital authorised to be raised by the Standing Orders that House from the commencement of the session to the 8th instant is £85,365,995; and the total amount of further capital hey authorise to be borrowed £14,130,196 6s. 6d.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. FRIDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

The Marquis of EXETER resumed the adjourned debate on the question that the House resolve itself into Committee on this Bill. The object of the Bill was to subject the hitherto duties of the country to competition with the untaxed labour of foreign countries. (Hear.) It was difficult to imagine any reason for the sudden change which had taken place in the opinions of her Majesty's Ministers. (Hear.) At the time the measure was proposed, the country was in a state of prosperity, and the agriculturists were just recovering from the effect of the last change which took place in the Corn-Laws, and the labourers were receiving moderate wages. (Cheers.)

The Earl of DELAWARR declared that he could not agree to a bill so detrimental to the landed interest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON THE PROTECTION OF LIFE (IRELAND) BILL.

As a good deal of private business had been disposed of, the adjourned debate on this bill was resumed by Mr ROSE, who spoke at some length against the measure.

IMPORTANT DECISION UPON RAILWAY RESPONSIBILITY. – In the Court of EXCHEQUER, last day, the Lord Chief Baron gave his decision in the case of Wallace v Spottiswoode. After going over the facts of the case, which are known, he (Lordship said, that a rule had been granted for a new trial, or to show cause why a nonsuit should not be entered. Cause had been shown against it, and the rule fully argued, and he (the Chief Baron) had now to state that on the second count only, for money had and received the judgment of the Court was in favour of the plaintiff. It appeared that the Company failed before any scrip was issued, and therefore the answer of the secretary on that point was sufficient and proper evidence to go to the jury. They found that the Company was at an end, and the Court were of opinion that was a proper finding. There was another question raised viz., whether the Company were entitled to a claim of 5l 6d per share for contingencies. Now the provisional committee stated that it was intended to raise a company for a specific purpose; but if their scheme was not carried into execution, no such claim as set up could be maintained, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover on that point also. The judgment of the Court was in favour of the plaintiff on the second count, and therefore there would be no new trial. The effect of this judgment establishes the right of the allottee (the plaintiff) to recover the full amount of deposit that she had paid. The Court was much crowded during the delivery of the judgment

THE WHOLESALE POISONING IN NORFOLK. The inquiry respecting the appalling deaths by poison at Mileham and neighbourhood of Hapsburgh, was brought to a close on Thursday evening, and further murders have been detected. The jury found that the deceased, Maria Lacey and Maria Green died from the effect of arsenic, but by whom administered there was no evidence to show. With regard to the deceased, Martha Green, William Green, and Hannah Pegg, the verdict was left open. The supposed murderer, Jonas Balls, lived in his late 40 years) in the parish of Happi-burgh, and had always borne a bad character. He had been guilty of many offences. During the last fifteen or twenty years he was principally dependent on his married daughters or sub lettings, and the supposition is, he poisoned his grandchildren, in order that their parents might get better able to support him. In addition to this many deaths charged against old Balls, it is now believed that he dispised of his two sons, who live been dead more than ten years, and his father and mother

FIRE AND DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY AT BRISTOL. A fire of the most alarming kind, and which has led to the destruction of property to the value of between £25 000 and £40,000, occurred at Bristol, on Tuesday morning, and, as might be expected, spread the utmost consternation throughout the city. The conflagration originated in some extensive premises at Counterslip, which run back to the wall of the floating harbour, and are occupied by Messrs. Fisrell and Son as a sugar refinery. The books of the firm were fortunately secured, and no small store of sugar was not entirely destroyed, but it is expected that the loss will not fall short of £25,000, a large part only of which is insured. What makes the matter more distressing is, that about 80 persons will be deprived of their means of livelihood

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE RIVER OFF THE RED HOUSE.—On Thursday evening, a coal half-past six, a wherry was unfortunately swamped, by the swell of the steamer, close to the pier of the Red House, Battersea. In the boat were a gentleman and two ladies, and they were all thrown into the water. The boy of the gentleman was recovered, and on his knees in the name of Henry Sparkes.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

The Times of yesterday published a letter from Lisbon of the 1st instant, received by the Spanish Government mail, in which the insurrection has become universal. The funds have fallen a further 10 per cent. 15 per cent within a fortnight. The official report of trade in the Diario of this day is of the most depressing character. Lord Howard of Effingham and Mr. Wyndham are not aware of any transaction to specify.' The Patriota has published a supplement, announcing that the Chartres had at last risen, and joined the general movement of the nation, and that the government of the province of Alemtejo, where the troops were concentrated. This, says the letter, completes the rising of the entire nation, with scarcely the exception of one isolated town.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER AT TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—At Tunbridge Petty Sessions, on Saturday last, Thomas Hall, of the Camden Hotel, was charged with cutting the throat of a fellow servant named Frances Sanders, with intent to destroy life. It appeared that the prisoner was desirous of paying his addresses to the young woman, but she refused them. He frequently vowed that if she would not have him, no one should ever be her husband or employ other means to kill her. On Sunday afternoon, as saw her walking with her favoured lover through some fields, he followed her, and suddenly followed her, and pulling out of his pocket a clasp knife, began to sharpen it upon a stone, saying, that if she did not leave the arm of the young man, and walk with him, he would cut her throat. This, however, as well as the witness deemed meant, and extended from below upwards, and from behind forwards. It had nearly severed the jugular vein, but the carotid artery had very narrowly escaped, in consequence of the edge of the knife not being straight. It would be extremely dangerous for the young woman to be removed at present for the purpose of giving evidence. The prisoner was remanded for a week.

THE LOSS OF LIFE ON THE INVERNESS SANDS.—The Preston Chronicle states that on Thursday night (last week), as a number of persons were crossing Ulverston Sands, from that town to Flookburg, on their return from the fair, they missed their way, and, after forcing their carriages into a hole known as the "Black Scar," and horse, cart, and passengers, nine in number, went down, and never rose again. Several cars were following in the right track, but no trace of the accident was seen, and it was not until the waters were out of the incident at all the following morning. Six of the bodies were found in the hole, with the horse and cart, but the other three have not been discovered.

THE FROM HOSPITAL TRAGEDY.—On Saturday, Mr. W. Payne resumed the inquiry, at the King's Head, East Cheap, which was commenced last week, as to the death of Mr. Richard Dresser, who was alleged to have died from impropriety in the Hythe Hospital Establishment.—On Saturday, Mr. Payne resumed the inquiry, at the King's Head, East Cheap, which was commenced last week, as to the death of Mr. Richard Dresser, who was alleged to have died from improper treatment at the Hythe Hospital Establishment.—On Saturday, Mr. Strawbridge Park, surgeon. The first witness examined was James Maynard, the bath man at the asylum, and from his testimony it appeared that the deceased was at Dr. Ellis's from Friday evening, being some time after the usual hour, and was put to bed without any medical attendance. The following (last week), by Mr. Prendergast: He took a dose of the food he wished. Never took cold water up without some warm. Dr Ellis's diagnosis of the case was read, from which it seemed the deceased had first been treated for rheumatism, and subsequently according to the document, of liver complaints, and inflammation, and suppuration. Mr. Wutterworth, of the New Kent-road, surgeon, said that Dr Ellis's paper did not agree with witness's post mortem examination in any one point. He had known the deceased for six or seven years. He was generally in good health, but was not a strong man. He saw him last in April The cause of death was congestion of the heart and lungs. There was no appearance of inflammation or suppuration of the liver, and the patient died of cold or hot baths, even if he had been so attacked, would have seen very improper except for a short time. He believed the congestion was the result of some cold application, or exposure to the atmosphere The Coroner summed up, leaving the jury to decide whether Dr. Ellis had acted with due caution in his treatment of the deceased, or whether he had acted rash by and without due caution. The jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Dr. Ellis, who was bound over himself in £500 and two sureties of £250 to surrender at the next sessions of the Central Criminal Court.

THE WHIGS AND THE CORCION BILL.—The Whigs have had a numerous meeting at Lord John Russell's house, at which they came to a determination to give the most decided and strenuous opposition to the Coercion Bill.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL AND THE EARLY DELIVERY.—A written notice, of which the following is a copy, has been put up in the letter-carriers' branch of the Inland Office: "His Lordship, the Postmaster-General, has given directions to stop the admission of any more subscribers to the early delivery, and to forbid the letter-carriers to receive such, upon pain of dismissal.—June 10. 1846."

RAPID COMMUNICATION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—Some very rapid voyages between France and England have recently been performed by the Gier land steamer On Tuesday, June 2, the fair Dover for Calais head to wind, and accomplished the entire distance in one hour and twenty-eight minutes, and returned to Dover on the following day, Wednesday, June 3, in one hour and thirty-seven minutes against the current, consequently, France, as has been observed, ...ace this speed has been attained by a Dover mail steam-packet, is nearer to England than Woolwich is to London by the average speed of river conveyance.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES FOR THE POOR.—The Bishop of LONDON presented several petitions, praying their Lordships to pass a measure to enable boroughs and parishes of certain size to borrow money on the security of the rates for the purpose of establishing baths and washhouses for the poor. The right rev. Prelate warmly supported the prayer of the petitioners. The Marquis of NORMANBY and Lord KINNAIRD also spoke in favour of the establishment of baths and washhouses.

The Duke of BUCKINGHAM gave notice that, in Committee on the Corn Importation Bill, he should move that the words "until the 1st day of February, 1849," be omitted.

The Friendly Societies Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Lordships adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House was for some time occupied with private bills. A division was taken on a motion for the re-committal of the Staines and Richmond Railway Bill, which proposition was rejected by 68 to 61, so that the bill is lost for this session.

PROTECTION OF LIFE (IRELAND) BILL.—OPPOSITION OF THE COUNTRY PARTY.

The Earl of LINCOLN moved the second reading of the Protection of Life (Ireland) Bill.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Mr BERNAL seconded the amendment. During the course of his speech, Mr. D BROWNE twice moved that the House be counted, and each time there were found barely sufficient members present to make a House. When Mr Bernal had done speaking there were not forty members present, but then Mr D. Browne had left the House, or the "count out" would probably have been effected

Mr B. OSBORNE supported the amendment, and charged the present Irish Secretary with being the most ignorant man that could have been chosen to undertake the arduous duties he ought to fulfil.

The Earl of LINCOLN spoke for upwards of two hour in defence of the bill, the necessity and the efficiency of which he maintained. It was but a temporary remedy for a temporary emergency, and one that was never proposed as a panacea for the evils afflicting Ireland, but as a means preparatory to others of a lasting nature when were to follow. He hoped that even the Irish members instead of diminished in force since the introduction of this bill. In the course of the noble Lord's speech, he made some reference to the state of the county Mayo; and, on being asked as to the cause of the particular crime, created some laughter by appearing not to know that Castlebar was the county town.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL supported the amendment.

Lord G. BENTINCK announced the determination of himself and party to oppose the Government. He said he believed that the cause célèbre had now arrived when they could no longer support the Government. The noble Lord referred the state-papers of the Earl of Leven in regard to Ireland, and declared that with having paid so little attention to the affairs of Ireland as to be ignorant of the existence of the town of Castlebar. He proceeded to denounce the Ministry in these terms:—"Although the right hon. Baronet, the member for Tamworth, has a test by measure

ASCOT RACES.—1846.

THE ROAD TO THE RACES.—THE LONG WALK, WINDSOR.

Si monumentum quæris—circumspice!.....

THE variety of avenues by which the Royal Course was wont to be approached in former times, ere locomotion had got into hot water—ominous category!—prevented the journey thither from exhibiting the stir and bustle of a pilgrimage to Epsom; and there was about the whole thing an air of quiet, aristocratic nonchalance. Many, in those primitive times, would commence their wayfaring the day previous to the meetings; and, as the mists of evening were wreathing the forest glades, and the nightingales making their twilight melodies, seek their quarters at some rural hostel or rustic cottage. The inn at Sunning Hill Wells was then a most popular rendezvous. The grounds were park-like, and in excellent taste. There, beneath tall trees, you saw the steadfast trainer talking oracles to the manikin at his side, that on the morrow was to ride his steed of a thousand descents. And then there were—ay, and there are—the Wheatsheaf, hard by Virginia Water, and the Red Lion, at Shrub's Hill, and the—but we shall run riot. Oh! reader fair and friendly—with a little leisure, and cash wherewith to relish it—we entreat thee next Ascot Races, or rather next week, by the spirits of the Dryads, Fauns, and Lurlines, to glean around that Wheatsheaf! If you are of mind to ascend the Rhine, or set forth for far-off Lemonpause, and first pay your devoirs to Virginia Water; thread, we beseech thee, every alley of the sylvan region around that bright lake. Let no point escape. Take advantage of every glade—feast on every copse and brake of that glorious landscape—hold onward for the forest—repose under the boughs of its patriarchal oaks—loiter on the flowery carpet in gentle dalliance with the woodbine and wild-rose; and then, turning to your heart for its opinion of the scene in subject, trust us you will have for answer the assurance that

Our first, best country ever is at home!

Peradventure, if a utilitarian, you will be of the like opinion still, albeit you wend your way to the terminus of the Great Western, in lieu of those classic groves which for ever and for aye are destined to look green in the undying song of Pope. Well! well! Time cannot wear out of us the memories of the road, or turn us from drawing odious comparisons.

How sweet it was to win the pleasant way,
Seated behind "three chestnuts and a grey,"
Hailph g with nature. But, ouse "re .s' have thriven
Instead of rural raptures, you are driven
(Unless your nerves are brass) into hysterics,
On "locomotive" lines, or "atmospherics."

By grace of the broad gauge of the Great Western Railway, nine-tenths of the company are now conveyed to Slough, ex route for Ascot Heath. Why do they persist in locking up the prisoners—that is to say, the passengers on that line? Will nothing soften the hearts of the Directors? Let them take notice, that should we—as it is very likely—be taken off by apoplexy in one of their carriages, ARRIVAL AT THE COURSE.

NEWSPAPER

ASCOT RACES.—1846.

A SKETCH ON THE ROAD.

our ghost shall be at their bedsides every night they put out their candles "with all its determination of blood to its head!" . . .

This year the courtly meeting adjacent to Windsor was shorn of its chief attraction, by the absence of the Queen. There was neither pageant nor brilliancy in keeping with such occasions as those wherein the presence of the Sovereign is wont to breathe life and likelihood into the scene. Nevertheless, as a national exhibition, as a popular fête champêtre, it was a great and a glorious sight. It is not in the throes of political parturition, bathed with the toil and sweat of labour—"sicklied o'er with the pale hue of thought"—that we would present our country at the great loves of mankind. Our national character is only to be read aright in our social institutions. The history of the popular position of England needs no proud marble for its record. The people have made it—and themselves—what they are—a system of civilization such as never yet prevailed: a nation blessed beyond all that have yet existed. Grumbler, growl thy bellyful—nevertheless, it is so. An' ye doubt us, go to any of the great popular meetings, such as that which forms our present theme, and we say to you—

Si monumentum quæris—circumspice!

Twenty years ago Ascot Heath was as wild a district as any in Great Britain; with hardly a house visible from it but the Royal Kennels and an apology for a race stand. Now the buildings appropriated to the turf form a little city of Olympian palaces—the most complete range of racing chateaux extant. The sport too, instead of being as it was a very few years since, a beggarly account, on the occasion in hand was indeed a feast worthy of being set before a Sovereign For the four days thirty-three races were provided, some of them bringing together the best horses in the land. The opening day, Tuesday, visited by a few brief showers, brought out a large pleasure phalanx, and went off with considerable éclat. It was certainly not as brave a gala as it might have been, but it was not bad. The racing commenced at half-past one, and came off in this wise:

The Trial Stakes, of 5 sovs each, with 50 added.

Mr F. R. Clark's The Conjuror	(Whitehouse)	1
Sir J. Hawley's A-la-mode	(F. Butler)	2
Lord Albemarle's Nell Cook	(Chapple)	3

Betting.—5 to 4 agst the Conjuror, 3 to 2 agst A-la-mode.

Won easily.

The Ascot Stakes, of 25 sovs each, 15 ft., and 5 only if declared, &c.—

First class.

Sir G. Heathcote's Akbar	(Chapple)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Marquis of Conyngham	(Kitchener)	2
Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress	(Templeman)	3

Betting 4 to 1 agst Inheritress, 5 to 1 agst Akbar, 8 to 1 agst Columbus, 5 to 1 agst the Marquis of Conyngham, and 6 to 1 agst Keppel.

THE TWO [illegible] CUP.

The Ascot Derby Stakes, of 50 sovs each.
Sir G. Heathcote's Brother to Valentisimo .. .. .. (Chapple) 1
Lord Exeter's St. Demetri .. .. .. (S. Mann) 2
Lord Lonsdale's Lyncus .. .. .. (Robinson) 3
Betting. 5 to 2 agst Joy, 2 to 1 agst St. Demetri, 5 to 1 agst Lyncus, and 5 to 1 agst Ginger.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs, h ft.
Lord Orford's Prussic Acid .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Osbaldeston's King Charles .. .. .. (F. Butler) 2
Sir G. Heathcote's c. by Amato, out of Countess .. (Chapple) 3
Betting.—5 to 4 agst Prussic Acid, 6 to 4 agst King Charles.

The Gold Vase, given by her Majesty, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.
Mr. T. Dawson's Grimston .. .. .. (Lye) 1
Lord Waterford's Cormanna .. .. .. (Nat) 2
Sir G. Heathcote's Khondoos .. .. .. (Chapple) 3
Mr. Merry's c. by Don Juan, out of Peri.. .. (J. Prince) 4
Betting.—3 to 2 agst Khondoos, 4 to 1 agst Cormanna, 4 to 1 agst Peri colt, and 5 to 1 agst Wood Pigeon.
Khondoos went off with the lead, and increased it so much, that, at the top turn, he was seven or eight lengths in advance. At the last turn, Grimston, Cormanna, and the Peri colt joined him, and they ran in company to the distance. Grimston here took up the running, and was first home by two lengths.

Ascot Stakes.—Second Class.
Mr. Herbert's Petitioner .. .. .. (W. Marson) 1
Lord Orford's Footstool .. .. .. (J. Sharpe) 2
Betting.—3 to 1 agst Footstool, 4 to 1 agst Rowena, 5 to 1 agst Vol-au-vent, 6 to 1 agst Petitioner, and 10 to 1 agst I-am-not-aware.

The Welcome Stakes, of 20 sovs each, with a bonus by subscription of 5 sovs each.
Colonel Anson's Iago .. .. (Butler) 1
Lord Exeter's St. Demetri .. .. .. (Mann) 2
Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque .. .. .. (Darling, Jun.) 3
Betting.—6 to 4 agst Iago, 5 to 2 agst Burlesque, and 6 to 1 agst Humdrum.

A Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.
Lord Chesterfield's Arkwright, ... (Nat) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Bustaccio .. .. .. (Marson) 2
Colonel Anson's Turon .. .. .. (Butler) 3
Betting.—5 to 4 agst Bustaccio, 7 to 4 agst Crown Prince, and 4 to 1 agst Arkwright.

A Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each, h. ft.
Lord Exeter's c. by Glenmon Pistoff, out of Velveteen .. (Mann) 1
Lord Chesterfield's c. by Don John, dam by Ishmael .. (Pope) 2
Mr. Gratwicke's Mermaiden by Gladiator .. .. .. (Nat) 3
Betting. 5 to 4 agst the Velveteen colt, 7 to 4 agst Field Mouse, and 5 to 2 agst the Don John colt.

WEDNESDAY.

Wednesday was an "off day," and heavily with clouds—it must be confessed in more senses of the word than one. The racing, however, made some amends, as the list will show.

A Sweepstakes of 50 sovs, h ft.
Lord Exeter's St. Demetri, Galata colt .. .. .. (Mann) 1
Mr. C. Scott's Otho .. .. (F. Butler) 2
Lord Lonsdale's Joy .. .. (Bartholomew) 3
Betting.—3 to 4 on St. Demetri, and 5 to 2 agst Otho.

The Fern Hill Stakes of 15 sovs each, 5 ft, with 50 added.
Lord G. Bentinck's Blackcock .. .. .. (Adsale) 1
Mr Osbaldeston's Rufus .. .. .. (J. Marson) 2
Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque .. .. .. (Darling, jun) 3
Betting. 3 to 1 agst Laundrymaid, 4 to 1 each agst Miss Milner colt, Miss Catton filly, and Burlesque, and 10 to 1 agst Blackcock.

The Royal Hunt Cup, value 200 sovs, by subscriptions of 10 sovs each, with 100 added.
Mr. W. S. Stanley's Leasonfield .. .. .. (Carter) 1
Mr. A. W. Hill's Ironmonger .. .. .. (Denman) 2
Lord Miltown's Colleen Bawn .. .. .. (Dodd) 3
Betting.—5 to 1 agst Wood Pigeon, 10 to 1 agst Beaumont, 10 to 1 agst Queen Pomaria, 10 to 1 agst Colleen Bawn, 10 to 1 agst Rowland Hill, 10 to 1 agst Lamplighter colt, 10 to 1 agst Farthing Candle, 12 to 1 agst Gannet, 13 to 1 agst Ironmaster, 15 to 1 agst The Cure, and 15 to 1 agst Leasonfield.

The Coronation Stakes of 100 sovs each
Mr. Ford's Guaracha .. .. (J. Howlett) 1
Duke of Bedford's Lucrina .. .. .. (Robinson) 2
Colonel Anson's Elsess .. .. (F. Butler) 3
Betting.—5 to 2 agst Taurina, 2 to 1 agst Dawdle, 4 to 1 agst Birdsay, and 4 to 1 agst Guaracha.

A Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, with 100 added.
Lord Lonsdale's Jericho .. .. .. (Bartholomew) 1
Mr. S. Paul's Mentor .. .. .. (Templeman) 2
Even Betting.

A Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.
Mr Merton's Evenus .. .. (F. Butler) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Cherokee .. .. .. (W Adsale) 2
Mr. Meiklam's Philip .. .. (Templeman) 3
Betting.—6 to 4 agst Evenus, 7 to 4 agst Cherokee.

The Windsor Town Plate of £50.
Lord G. Bentinck's His Serene Highness by Bay Middleton, out of Ill-fated .. .. (Ketchener) 1
Lord Lonsdale's f. by the Saddler, out of Barbakin .. (Canterbury) 2
Mr Payne's c. by Jerrid, out of Kalmia .. .. .. (W. Marson) 3
Betting. 7 to 4 agst Iago, 6 to 1 agst Barbakin f, 10 to 1 agst Jerrid c, and 12 to 1 agst His Serene Highness.

A Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.
Mr Coombe's f. by Glaucus, out of Cerasus .. (Bartholomew) 1
Lord Albemarle's The Little Vulgar Boy.. .. .. (Robinson) 2
Betting.—6 to 5 on the mare Won by four lengths.

The Swinley Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, with 50 added.
Lord Orford's Footstool.. .. .. .. (Mann) 1
Count Batthyany's Tragical .. .. (Chapple) 2
Betting.—3 to 1 on Footstool. Won easy by a length.

THURSDAY. THE CUP DAY.

Alas for the affinity between the sublime and the ridiculous! Thursday, the great anniversary of the Court Olympus, was appropriately ushered in by a glorious sun shine and refreshing breezes. Of these, consequently, came much company and more dust. It was awful, that latter accompaniment, and no error. Apropos of the society at Paddington, there was the Queen's Royal Railway equipage, waiting to carry Ibrahim Pacha to Slough; and, a little beyond Slough, a knacker's cart, waiting to carry off such unlucky coursers as the sun and drought should convert into dog's meat! The fashionable prestige of Ascot is amain in its popular character, it advances rather more than pari passu in keeping with the spirit of the age. Soon after one, Ibrahim Pacha arrived in moderate state. He presently entered the Royal Stand, and bowed with reverence to the lovely unbelievers (we must not say "unfaithful") gathered to seek — him welcome. South to say, he looked anything but gallant or gay — "Araut" — [we believe a term of contempt in our language, and I hear the —] in the course of the day in a fashion of abhorrent in our own time. In the pageant of the day there was no marked feature. In items of equipage, costume, pomp, and circumstance, things ran pretty much in ordinary, while, as regarded the creature comforts, people ate and drank as much as they could, as usual. For the first race a score was entered, and a brace ran — only two for a Queen's hundred: what a glut of money there must be in the racing circle! The 50 sovs. Sweepstakes gave us a walk over—so chary are they of their horse-flesh. The St. James's Palace Stakes—a moderate affair—still gave us a pretty finish, but three running on for it to the post with much earnestness. The preparation for the Cup race was the first really stirring occasion of the afternoon. A dozen weighed for it, a field of unusual strength, and of considerable pretensions, as the Racing Calendar will show. Of course, each horse was scrutinised when saddling according to the wishes of those who examined them. It is fit to say, the winner was the perfection of condition—while Orlando looked too like a pet, a character he supported at the post, by kicking his rider over his ears. At the start, the running was made for Weasel by Cervantes at speed that augured ill for his stable companion—if it was to last. They pa— the Stand at a most moderate speed Cervantes leading, Jerico next; in short, in the order they are to run them—for they were written at my elbow. A they passed the mile post they began to go faster. Here first Alarm showed himself of the track, and showed in front. When called on he came at once, ran [illegible] his horses, and won with all ease. Still, none of the others were beaten off—both to make a first-class performance.

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas, &c.
[illegible] Archer 1
Luff 2

The St. James's Palace Stakes, &c.
Lord Chesterfield's Free Lance 1
Sir R. W. Bulkeley's Jolerdie 2
Lord George Bentinck's Pinnacle 3

The Emperor's Vase of £500, &c.
Mr Greville's Alarm 1
Lord Lonsdale's Jericho 2
Mr. G. H. Moore's Wolfdog 3

Twelve started.

Visitors' Plate of 100 sovs (handicap), by subs of 5 sovs each.
Count Batthyany's Gannet 1

New Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 100 added.
Lord G. Bentinck's f. by Slander 1

Dinner Stakes of 100 sovs each.
Mr. Coombe's f by Glaucus, out of Harmony 1

Stand Plate of 70 sovs.
Mr. Meiklam's Philip 1
Mr. Jaques's Headsman 2

FRIDAY.

Match.—Wolfdog beat Miss Ells.
Match.—Taurina received from Camelia.

The Borough Members' Plate.
Alvanley 1
Pergami filly 2

The Great Western Railway Plate.
Mr. Meiklam's Lightning 1
Mr. A. W. Hill's Beaumont 2

Won by a length. 21 ran.

Wokingham Stakes. Second Class.
Mr. E. R. Clark's The Conjuror 1
Lord Stradbroke's Evenus 2

The 200 Sov Sweepstakes for 4 years old.
Duke of Bedford's Leopard 1
Mr. Ford's Fuzbos 2

Won in a canter.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The Emperor's Vase and the Derby claimed a little attention this afternoon; but in the first named only did the transactions show any material alteration in the quotations last given in this paper. Orlando, it will be seen, obtained the call of Alarm, whose position was very tottery. Miss Sarah and Wolf Dog were also in request, and seem to be strongly fancied by their respective parties. Jericho had so many engagements that his friends fought shy. Last Betting:—

EMPEROR'S CUP.
4 to 1 agst Orlando (t)
4 to 1 —— Alarm
7 to 1 —— Wolf-dog
9 to 1 agst Nestor
10 to 1 —— Miss Sarah (t)
10 to 1 —— Jericho
12 to 1 agst The Baron
25 to 1 —— Wood Pigeon
25 to 1 —— Cormanna

DERBY.
33 to 1 agst Miles's Boy
40 to 1 —— Red Hart
50 to 1 agst Sir Columbe (t)
50 to 1 —— Cruiser (t)
100 to 1 —— Brocklesville (t)
100 to 1 agst Marpessa (t)
100 to 1 —— Jerusalem (t)

THE PRESS AT ASCOT.—During the late meeting, nothing could have been more marked than the discourtesy offered to the gentlemen who attended there on behalf of the London journals. The only place to which they were accorded resort was a spot appropriated to the use of the servants of the Royal Family on the roof of the Grand Stands, in which there were rooms wholly unoccupied! The authorities should be taught to understand how the representatives of the English press were treated in the country of the Consort of their Royal mistress.

CRICKET.—THE MARYLEBONE CLUB V. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—The match was resumed on Wednesday, at Lord's, when there was again some admirable play. On the first innings, the University had the advantage by 70 runs. In their second innings, on Wednesday, the whole score was 68, therefore putting in the M. C. C. for 138 to the The University, however, won the match, for the score of the Club was 94 in this innings, by 44 runs.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE PROCESSION OF THE TRINITY BRETHREN TO DEPTFORD.

Monday, being Trinity Monday, the members of the honourable corporation of the Trinity House went in state to Deptford. His Grace the Duke of Wellington, attired in the uniform of the brethren, arrived at the Trinity House at half past ten, in a carriole driven by himself, and was received by Captain Sir John Henry Pelly, Bart., the deputy master; Captain Aaron Chapman, M.P.; Admiral Sir Charles Adam; Captain Abel Chapman, Andrew Timbrell, Daniel Stephenson, Robert Wellbank, John Hayman, John Rees, Henry Nelson, John Lodge, Alexander Wyynton, Charles Wilson, Frederick Madan, Stephenson Ellerby, George Prahyn, William Pixley, Charles Farquharson, Robert Gordon, Henry Benham Beck, and W. E. Parsons; Lieut. Herbert, R.N., G. B. Maltby, Esq., and many of the Younger Brethren of the Trinity House. His Grace, in company with the Brethren, partook of a cold collation; and, at a quarter before twelve, a procession was formed, headed by a band of music playing martial airs, and moved on to the Tower gates, at which a military escort was formed, conducting the procession to the Tower, where they took water.

The procession consisted of the harbour master in his gig, the Thames police superintendent in his gig, a shallop with a band of music, the Admiralty House eight-oared barge, in which sat "Duke," with many of the elder brethren, were seated; the Admiralty yacht's pinnace swing barge, the Admiralty eight-oared cutter, the Admiralty eight-oared shallop, the Admiralty six-oared barge, the Admiralty six oared gig, the Green with Cinque Barge (six oars). The Trinity House boats and Thames police boats brought up the rear, and some were placed on either side to keep the passage clear.

On the arrival of the procession opposite the Victualling Yard, three boats of the Marine Society joined it, and on its appearance within sight of Deptford, a salute was fired from the Trinity House Yard on the opposite shore. The whole of the procession was under the superintendence of Mr. Masterman, the Admiralty barge master. Shortly before two o'clock the Brethren landed at Deptford Pier, proceeded on and moved to St. Michael's Church, where divine service was performed by the Rev. A. E. Skatchley, M.A. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D., President of Halleybury College, and Chaplain of the Tower.

On leaving the church, the Duke was warmly greeted by a large collection of persons who had assembled to witness the ceremony, with as many of whom as he could reach he affectionately shook hands. He then proceeded to Admiral's House in his carriage, and at seven o'clock returned to the Trinity House, Towerhill, where he presided at the grand annual banquet.

CABINET COUNCIL. A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office on Tuesday which was attended by Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Ellenborough, the Earl of Lincoln, the Right Hon. Lord Badminton, Lord Granville Somerset, Sir James Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Secretary Goulburn, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, Earl St. Germains, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, and the Earl of Aberdeen. Previous to the Council several of the ministers had interviews with Sir Robert Peel, at the right honourable Baronet's private residence.

POLISH BALL.—The "grand fancy ball" annually given on behalf of the Polish refugees, took place on Monday night at Willis's Rooms under the Royal and exalted patronage that is usually accorded to it. Nothing could exceed the brilliancy of the scene about midnight, when the company was all assembled.

PROPOSED REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.—It is stated that there will be a grand review of troops in Hyde Park, on His Highness Ibrahim Pacha, either on the 17th or the 19th of the present month, when, in addition to the household infantry and cavalry, the 7th Hussars and Royal Artillery will go through the various movements of a field-day, for the gratification of the illustrious foreigners now a this country. It may be added that the troops will not receive any their ammunition from what an called firing field days, in anticipation of the event.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS. A Government bill has just been brought into the House of Commons to enable the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to construct a new street from Piccadilly to Shoreditch, and for that purpose to raise a sum of £120,000 on the "Metropolis Improvement Fund" account. The street is to commence at the north end and in continuation of Commercial-street, crossing the west end of Bishopsgate-street and the east end of White's-row, and to pass northwards in or nearly in a line with and along Red Lion-street, crossing the ends of Union-street and Church-street, and the ends of Lamb-street and Brown's-lane, and thence to run in a north-west direction across Vine-street, Vine-place, Wheeler-street, Fleur-de-Lis-street, Middlesex-court, Elder-street, and Blossom-street, to Shoreditch, south of and adjoining the present terminus of the Northern and Eastern Counties Railway.

BATHING IN THE SERPENTINE. In consequence of the recent hot weather, bathing has been very general in the Serpentine. In the course of eight days, the number of bathers was no less than 65,000.

THE WEATHER. There has been some variation in the weather during the week. For instance, on Wednesday, there was a cold wind, but, general y speaking, the temperature has been very high. On Sunday afternoon, at Greenwich, a thermometer placed outside a window directly exposed to the sun, marked 103 degrees.

DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number of deaths in the metropolis, in the week ending June 6th, was 839, being 63 less than the average of five summers (892), and 135 less than the averages of five years (967). The warm weather, therefore, though it gives rise to many complaints, is not unfavourable to life.

THE BENTINCK TESTIMONIAL.—The subscription of money raised as a testimonial to Lord George Bentinck is £2100, and which sum, by the direction of his Lordship, has been invested in Bank Consols, in the joint names of the Duke of Beaufort, Duke of Bedford, Duke of Rutland and the Earl of Chesterfield, as a permanent capital, to be called "The Bentinck Donation," and not to be sold out upon any account whatever but in the interest of the stock to be appropriated to the relief of well-conducted but distressed trainers and riders, and their widows and children.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—It was stated some time ago that a submarine telegraph was to be laid down across the English Channel, by which an instantaneous communication could be made from coast to coast. The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, with a view of testing the practicability of this undertaking, have been pleased to approve of the projectors laying down a submarine telegraph across the harbour of Portsmouth, from the house of the Admiral in the dockyard, to the railway terminus at Gosport. In a few days after the experiment has been successfully tested at Portsmouth, the submarine telegraph will be laid down across the Straits of Dover, under the sanction of both the English and French Governments.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. M." Pillown.—The game, in parts, is well played on both sides. Favour us with the name of your opponent, and see the "Chronicle" for July.
"P. M. R." —Many thanks: the emendation shall be made, and the Problem appear.
"Scrico."—Your solution is the true one: White, although interdicted from "Queening" his Pawn, promotes him to the rank of Knight, and effects mate on the way you point out.
"W. W. H." We mentioned in our last that the annual subscription to the new German Chess Magazine (its name by-the-by we pass through Mears. Williams and Borgate. It will appear on the 1st of July.
"D. T. E."—The only complete and manifest Treatises on Openings are Heydebrant's, Jaenisch's, and Lewis's: these are real and trustworthy authorities upon the game. Cochrane's work has long been out of print.
"H. B."—De la Bourdonnais Chess-Board can be got at the office of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."
"Lumen." "St. J."—We have every reason to believe that our announcement of Mr. Kussertskii's expected arrival is correct, but we regret to learn, from a communication just forwarded to us by M. Von H. de Lasa himself, that there is no probability of that distinguished amateur visiting England at present, professional business rendering his presence at Paris indispensable for some months. The following extract from his letter cannot fail to be interesting to the Chess fraternity of England:—" At Vienna, you know, there are many players, but none of established fame. We had lately a match of the two players from Paris Messrs. Grumm and Lowenthal; who, with M. Szen, composed the Committee for playing the Match against Paris. Mr Grimm was here for business, in which he was much occupied; and second, besides, had to be in good health. I had some hasty games with him, and won them. The second guest, Mr Lowenthal, after a few years at Grosschenhoy, paid a visit to Berlin and Breslaw, of which Mr Bledow will, doubtless, furnish the particulars in an early Number of his fortcoming Magazine. At Vienna, I had seven games with Mr. Lowenthal, who is a fine player—equally agreeable and accomplished in play. He seemed highly pleased with his reception at Berlin, and spoke of returning there, if possible, in the course of the present summer, and of persuading Mr. Szen to accompany him. Our first two games were drawn—they are not yet printed and I send you a copy of them. The result of the remaining five was to my advantage, through Mr. Z's persistence in playing, three times, the Evans's gambit attack." The two five games above alluded to shall enrich our columns hereafter. We have not space to give them now.*
"P. C." The "curious" position you allude to was at Lewis's books—his translation of Greco, we believe—and was lately sent us by a Correspondent. Place the men thus. White—K at his R sq, Kt at R 5th, R at Q 4th, Kt at Q 6th, and Kt at K B 8th; Black—K at his 4th; and then show how White mates in four moves.
"J. P." Manchester.—1. Stalemate is a drawn game, both in England and France. 2. A Kt cannot Castle on the side of which the Rook has been moved. 3. In Castling on the Queen's side, you move the King to Queen's Bishop's square and Rook to Queen's square.
"Agnes." The Problem sent shall be examined, and the solution forwarded as you request.
"Hampshire Boy."—A Chess Club has recently been established in Southampton, and, we are told, already numbers nearly forty members. The Secretary should send us his name and address.
"A German."—You are in error Long before the appearance of M. Hirschbach's "Schach-Jahrg," Chess formed one of the features of the Illustrated German Newspaper published in Leipsic.
"C." Always. The long-dreaded pocket has not yet arrived.
"T. C." Chester Chess Club.—The Problem shall be duly looked to.
"G. W." Dublin Chess Club.—Thanks for the end game, which is neat and instructive. We shall have much pleasure in giving the promised games
"S. A."—The Game by correspondence between Durham and Stockton-upon-Tees shall appear immediately. In reply to the other points of your very welcome communication, you will hear from us in a day or two.
"Ladimancher."—A Pawn only can take a Pawn "in passing." We think, with you the invocation of taking it in this way is a blemish.

Solutions by "Alpha," "P. H.," "J. M. P.," "G. P.," "R. D.," Lewis; "J. G.," Dublin; "A M.," "J. A.," "Lodmagnian," "Peon," "Marozon," "R. W. B.," Dublin; "P. W.," "F. G M.," "R. S. N.," "O. P. Q.," "Amateur," "Fred.," and "Philo Chess," are correct.

 We have this week the pleasant duty to acknowledge, thankfully, the receipt of many valuable contributions to our store of Chess material. In addition to the highly interesting communication of Mr. H. de Lasa, we have received a number of original Games and Problems from Professors, of Paris; M. Horwitz, Mr C. Stanley, of New York; M. Kling, M. Kuiper, Captain Kennedy, Mr G Spreckley, Mr. Williams, Mr. Harmonie, of Boston, U.S.; together with a countless variety of similar contributions from the outstanding portion of our Correspondents.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 124.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q B 4th (ch)	K to Q at 3rd	4 Kt to B's 4th	K takes Kt
2 B to Q Kt 6th	Q P two or *	5 B to Q B's 7th—
3 P takes P	P takes Q R P	mate

* 2. Q P one
P takes R P

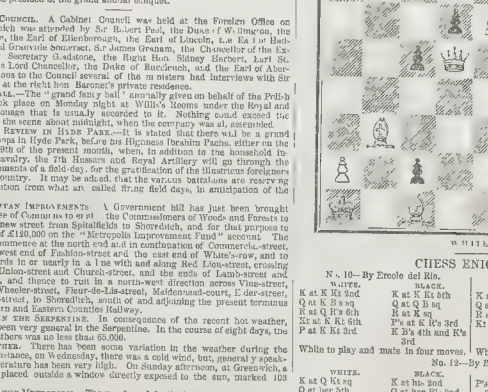
3. Q P one
4. A to B 4th &c.

PROBLEM, No. 125.

By MR. MC. G——Y.

White playing first mate's in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 10—By Ercole del Rio.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at K Kt 3rd	K at K B 4th
Q at K B sq	Q at Q B sq
R at Q R's 6th	R at K sq
Kt at K 6th	P's at K B's 3rd
P at K K 3rd	K B's 4th and K's 3rd

White to play and mate in four moves.

No. 11—By D. C. of Huntley.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his sq	K at his 6th
Q at her 5th	Q at her R's sq
R at K R's sq	R at K 5th
Kt at Q B's 3rd	P's at K K's 6th, Q's 6th, and Q B's 6th

White to play and mates in three moves

No. 12—By Brede.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his 2nd	P's at Q B's 2nd and 5th
Q at her 5th
R at K R's 3rd
Kt at K B's 6th and K's 6th
B at Q's sq

White to play and mate in three moves.

For the following short and spirited skirmish we are indebted to Mr. Stanley, Secretary of the New York Caesa Club:—

WHITE. (Schulten.)	BLACK. (Stanley.)
1. K P two	P takes P
2. K to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th
3. Q B P one	Q Kt to B 3rd
4. K to K 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd
5. Q P one	K Kt to K 4th
6. Q P one	K P takes P
7. Q B P takes P	Q to K B 3rd
8. K B P one	Q Kt takes Q P
9. K B P takes Kt	Q P two
10. K to K 3rd	Q to K R 5th (ch)
11. K Kt P one	Q takes R P
12. K B takes Q P	Q B takes K Kt P
13. K B takes P (ch)	K to Q 2nd
14. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q R to Q sq

WHITE. (Schulten.)	BLACK. (Stanley.)
15. Q B to K 3rd	K to Q B sq
16. Q B takes Kt	R takes R
17. Q to Q Kt 3rd	Q B takes K Kt
18. K to B 2nd	Q to K R 5th (ch)
19. K takes R	Q takes Q R
20. R to K B 4th	K to Q 2nd
21. K to Q B 5th	R to Q Kt 5th
22. R to K B sq	B takes Q
23. K takes Q	R takes Q R P (ch)
24. K to B 3rd	K R P two
25. K to K 3rd	R to K B 7th (ch)
26. K to his 4th	Q B P one
27. B to K 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd

GAME BETWEEN CAPTAIN KENNEDY, AND MR. SCHULTEN, OF NEW YORK.

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Capt. K.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Capt. K.)
1. K P one	K P two	25. K to K B 3rd	R to K sq
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	26. K Kt to K R 4th	Kt to K B 3d
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	Q K to K B 3rd	Q B P two
4. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	K to K B 7th	R to Q sq
5. K R P one	K P one	Kt to K 5th. (ch)	K to K sq
6. Q P one	K B P one	30. K to K 3rd	Kt to K 4th
7. Q B P one	K B to Q Kt 3rd	31. K to K 4th (ch)	K to K B 3rd
8. Q B to K 3rd	Castles	32. K Kt to K 7th	Q B P one (dis. ch)
9. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q R to K 3rd	33. K to K 2nd	R to Q B 2nd
10. K B to Q Kt 3rd	Q Kt to K 2nd	34. K to K 4th (ch)	K to R sq
11. K B to Q B 3rd	Q Kt to K Kt 3rd	35. K to K B 5th	Kt takes Q Kt
12. Q P one	Kt to K B 2nd	36. K Kt P takes Kt	R to Q 4th
13. K Kt to K R 2nd	K B P two	37. B to K B 7th	R to Q Kt 4th
14. K B P two	K P takes K B P	38. Kt takes Q P	R takes Q Kt P
15. K P takes K B P	Q B takes P
16. K B to K B 3rd (ch)	K to K sq	39. K to Q sq	B to Q 4th
17. Q B takes P	Q B to Q 6th	40. Kt takes Q B P	R takes Q P
18. Q to K Kt 4th	B takes K R	41. K takes B	R takes Q R P
19. R takes R	Kt takes Q B	42. K to K 2nd	R to K 3rd
20. R takes Kt	R takes R	43. Q P one	R to Q 3rd (ch)
21. Q takes R	Q to Kt 4th	44. Q P one	R takes Q P
22. Q to K B 2d	R to K sq	45. K to Q B 2nd	R takes Q P
23. K Kt to K B 3d	Q to K 8th	And wins.
24. Q takes Q	B takes Q

Mr Staunton gives the Pawn and move to Mr. Horwitz.

(Remove Black's K B's Pawn from the board.)

WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)
1. K P two	Q Kt to B 3rd	23. R to Q B 5th	R to Q B sq
2. Q P two	K P two	24. R to Q B 6th	R takes K (b)
3. Q P one	Q Kt to K 2nd	25. P takes R	Kt to Q Kt sq (c)
4. Q B to Kt 5th	Q P one	26. P to Q B 7th	Kt to Q 2nd
5. K B to Q 3rd	Q to her 2nd	27. B to Q Kt 4th	Kt to Q Kt 3rd
6. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to K Kt 3rd	28. K to his 2nd	R to Q B 4th
7. Q to K R 5th	K B to K 2nd	29. P to K 5 4th	Kt takes Q B P
8. K Kt to B 3rd	Q to K R 5th	30. P takes P	P takes P
9. B to Q Kt 5th (ch)	K to a 2nd	31. Kt to K B 3rd	R takes R
10. Q takes Q	B takes Q	32. R takes Kt	R to K B sq
11. B takes K B	B takes K Kt	33. K to his 3rd	Kt to Q 2nd
12. P takes B	K takes B (a)	34. K R P two	R to K B 3rd
13. Kt to K 3rd	Q Kt to K B sq	35. R to Q 8 4th	R to Q B 6th (ch)
14. Kt to K Kt sq	Kt to K R 5th	36. B to Q 6th	R to K B 6th
15. B to K 2nd	Kt to K Kt 7th (ch)	37. K to Q 2nd	R to K B 6th
16. Kt to B sq	Kt to K R 5th	38. K to his 3rd	R takes P
17. Q to K R 3rd	K R P one	39. K to Q B 4th	K to his 2nd
18. Q K P two	Q Kt P one	40. K R P one	Kt to K B 3rd
19. Q R to B sq	K Kt to B 3rd	41. K B P one	Kt takes K R P
20. Q B P one	K P takes P	42. R to Q B 6th	R to K B 3rd
21. P takes P	K K to Q 2nd	43. R takes B	Kt takes R
22. P takes P (ch)	P takes P	And black won the game.

(a) To pee ent the mives. Bishop, both . . . layed to Q's 7th

(b. Kt to Q Kt sq was t have been better play, and is content to win without it. . . . . th Kt to K sq; he would soon after have taken it by leaving the Kt to be taken . . . . . and Kt to Kt sq.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

LONDON for the time being is turned into a populous Sahara—at least, the heat can hardly be more sweltering on the sandy deserts of Nubia, the metropolis during the week has been "arida lamnen vestrex," a dry nurse of flame. Ibrahim Pacha and his bearded and red-capped suite, the Tunisian Ambassador and his tawny train, quite eclipse the Grand Duke Constantine and his broad-nosed, wasp waisted Russians. Lions wander through our streets, leopards are caught on Wanstead Common, and the whole world is afloat at Battle Bridge. Real, if the warm weather continue, we shall have Surrey overrun with wild beasts, and Wombwell's occupation gone for ever.

The Egyptian lions have shown extraordinary tameness and docility. Nobles and gentlemen by the hundred have turned Van Amburghs for the nonce, and ventured into the den of the interesting foreigner at Mivart's. Hitherto, however, all has gone on tolerably well. The only outbreak of Eastern nationality which "Abraham Parker," as he is familiarly called by the waiters, has committed, being a feint attempt to bastinado his fellow-voyagers' boots for venturing to lay Christian hands on the sacred papooshes (slippers) of his Highness. John was already seized by the attendants, and his shoes in the course of being rudely taken off, when his cries of "Murder" and "False imprisonment" reached the ears of the Inspector of Division, before his Highness has been given to understand by Colonel Rowan. The Inspector, with some difficulty, succeeded in explaining to his Highness that in this land of liberty he must not take the law into his own hands. On which his Highness proceeded to say the bastinah (whip), which always carries over the arm of Eastern soldiers, should be applied to the soles of the feet of the person who was marched into the room, and his Highness forcibly handcuffed. The case, we believe, will be hushed up, out of respect to the illustrious visitor.

In one particular, the Pacha is distinguished from ordinary lions. He has an awkward habit of asking questions, and, unfortunately, very intelligent questions too. The embarrassment and difficulty which the answering of these questions gives the officials whose duty it is to accompany the Pacha in his inspections, may be readily conceived. On the occasion of his visiting the Thames Tunnel—no previous notice of his intention having been given—the crew was ready to receive his Highness and suite. Immense confusion ensued. Policemen were rushing in all directions, in search of a Chairman or Director—or even a Clerk of the Works. The attempt to find some person who knew something of the matter was quite unsuccessful for a long while; and the check-taker was on the point of doing duty for a Director, when the Secretary was lugged out of his hiding-place, and forced to play cicerone. This would have been an easy task enough with the Emperor of Russia, or the King of Saxony, or Prince Albert, who are accustomed to the usages of society, and never ask any questions which can possibly embarrass public functionaries. But, Ibrahim wants, as he expresses it, "to have his mind enlarged." Quest on after question was poured, through the organs of Nubar Effendi, on the devoted head of the unhappy Secretary. "What cost the Tunnel?" "Is it strong enough?" "Is it safe?" "Is it well made, however, by dint of evasions and invention, till his Highness asked, "What was the use of the Tunnel?" The Secretary boggled dreadfully at this, but at last managed to get out, "To cross the river, your Highness." "Mashallah!" said Ibrahim, "as the Giaour, if they haven't bridges enough?" This was too poor! Secretary was obliged to confess that there was no want of either; and, by a torturing cross-examination, was forced to acknowledge that nobody had ever been known to enter the Tunnel, for the purpose of getting to the other side of the Thames.

Ibrahim is considered by the Company to have treated them very unfairly in not giving notice of his visit, as it would have drawn a great influx of half-pence; and the stall-keepers under the arches have serious thoughts of getting up an indignant remonstrance. The gentleman who keeps the weighing-chair, made a forcible attempt to convince the Pacha of his mistake. His Highness evidently did not relish the appearance of it, but commanded an Effendi of his suite to get in at once, evidently expecting that something painful would be the result. The poor man obeyed with many "Allah Kerims," and "Allah Aalems," and other Arabic expressions of "Lack, a!" and seemed much relieved when he got out again, with his natural manner of ears.

He was seemed a good deal disgusted with the Governor of the Bank. That excellent person put a roll of notes into his Highness' hand, explaining that they were worth £1,000,000. His Highness, who was about to consign the notes to the pocket of his capacious trousers, when Mr. Heath made a santer at them, and shaking his head violently, put them back into the drawer from which he had taken them, as the Pacha naturally enough thought, as a "backsheesh," or present of honour. The interpreter had great difficulty in explaining the transaction, and his Highness made a remark in the Egyptian vernacular, equivalent to the English sentiment, "that it was a scaly [illegible]."

But it was at the Mint that the Pacha's inconvenient habit of asking questions came out most strongly. He evidently imagined that Sir George Clerk being Master of the Mint, knew all about the processes, and fairly upset him with interrogatories about blanks, and dies, and alloys, which Sir George answered in a manner which "back the by-standers as rather wild, to use a mild expression.

His Highness afterwards acknowledged that his mind was enlarged on all points but one, and that was, how the business of all departments was got through in England, with the heads of the [illegible] nothing whatever of their business. What a pity it [illegible] Highness doesn't pay a visit to the General Office, and interrogate the clerks. He would, certainly, go away with the impression that our colonial greatness was owing to our complete adoption of the Eastern notion that the greatest fools are the chosen recipients of wisdom from above, and that the government of our dependencies goes on well, because we have made such an admirable choice of young gentlemen, who, if inspiration and fully are conferred on man in the same ratio, must be inspired beyond Mahomet himself.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Munich, of the 31st ult., informs us that the King of Bavar a had, in compliance with the popular feeling, just dismissed three of his Ministers, who were supposed by the people to be the friends of the Jesuits and opposed to liberal measures. They are the Count de Feinsheim, Minister of Finances, M. Giese, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and M. Schrenck, Minister of Justice. They are replaced by men of liberal opinions. M. Flormann, the Director of Police, who is very unpopular, is also dismissed.

On the 20th ult., says a letter from Florence of the 25th, in the Débats, a c me was committed at Bologna, which has quite a political character. Lieutenant Count Leonard Alegrina, who was a member of the corps in which tried the prisoners in the affair of Rimini, was stabbed repeatedly by some men in masks. His wounds are serious, but it is said they are not mortal. None of the assassins have been arrested.

The official account published by the Russian Government of the late operations in the Caucasus, represents them in a favourable point of view. It will even from the details this given it would seem that the troops of the mountaineers are in a better condition than formerly. Schamyl has from 15,000 to 20 000 men under his command, they are now provided with cann n, and if the Russians advance one day they are obliged to retire the next. Schamyl has entered into relations with the tribes on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas, and the Russian generals themselves allow that they cannot become masters of the country until they have destroyed the warlike population.

The English Government has at length determined upon bringing the affairs of the River Plate to a settlement. We understand that Mr. Hood, a gentleman eminently qualified for the task, sailed on the 31st ult., in the Benadventure steam-frigate, direct for Buenos Ayres, with instructions to enter upon negotiations with General Rosas, with the view of bringing the question to a settlement. The French Government has also sent orders to Rio, to Baron de Mareuil, to join Mr. Read at Buenos Ayres.

It is stated in a letter from Naples that the Neapolitan Government never vouchsafes to make free ports of Naples and Palermo.

On the 13th instant, at Rome, a small portion of the works of the new port existed with such violence that the fragment is of the rock, blown into the air, fell through the roof of the church of St Laurence d. wn to the paved floor of the nave. Happily the church was completely deserted at the moment, and there are, no one was hurt.

The coronation of Oscar I., and his consort Eugenia, daughter of Prince Eugene de Beauharnais, as King and Queen of Sweden, is fixed for the 13th Oct ber next, on which occasion the Storthing will be convoked.

The Emperor of Russia left Warsaw for the frontier in the afternoon of the 29th ult., attended by Count Orloff his aide-de-camp. The Empress of Russia, with the Grand Duchess Olga and the Prince Royal of Wurtemberg, arrived at Teschen (Austria) on the 30th ult. The Empress travels incognito as Countess Zzamenska. The Empress's physician, Dr. Mandt, is one of the Miraculeux, near Cracow, where his Majesty will meet his consort and daughter.

A Vienna letter of the 30th ult says:—"Some weeks ago several bankers of this city applied to the Baron de Kübeck, President of the Supreme Chamber of Finance, to authorise the Bank to make advances on deposits of shares in the stock companies. M. de Kübeck replied that the Supreme Chamber could not accede to such a request. It was to be expected that the President, who is the avowed enemy to joint stock companies, should be averse to such a proposal. The reasons he gave for his refusal are said to have been perfectly just and convincing. The news has made an unfavourable impression on the Exchange, but it will have the salutary effect of limiting very considerably the dealings in shares.

The German Journal of Frankfort denies, on the authority of a letter from Tarnow, the truth of the news of the arrest of the rebel chief, Szela. He is still, free, says this journal, but a prosecution has been commenced against him. His wife is in the city at Prague.

At the sitting of the Council of Berne, on the 3rd inst., the three first clauses of the new constitution were adopted without any amendment. There were along de ate on the third paragraph, which fixes 21 as the age at which the citizens are to have the right of voting. There was a minority of 57 in favour of fixing the age at 20.

A Berlin letter of the 31st ult., in the Augsburg Gazette, states that a sort of reaction has taken place in the minds of the German Governments on account of the mildness of the latter towards the Polish insurgents.

In the month of February, M. Runge was cited before the Criminal tribunal at Breslau, for having entrusted to the press of the various creeds assembled in Prussia, in a work printed by him at Breslau, under the title of Neue doch alte Fassde ("New Enamles and yet Old Ones"). This suit caused much uneasiness to M Runge's friends, for the censorship of the criminal laws was very severe. The tribunal declared M. Runge to be acquitted, and passes all the costs of the charge of the State." A number of houses in Breslaw were illuminated the same evening to celebrate the decision.

The Belgian Government has just issued a notice that the opinion entertained by many persons, that a passport is not necessary for entering Belgium, is erroneous. It declares that a passport will not be dispensed with but this every facility will be given for the verification of it, and that it will always remain in the possession of the traveller.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday). During the present week the arrivals of all kinds of our account have been on a very moderate scale, hence the show of samples here to-day was small; still however, a decline of full was at a sluggish trade at about Monday's currency. In foreign wheat there was not in the middle business was transacted that prices were quite nominal. Grinding barley is very dull, and the value of last week's rates were very full on demand for malt was by no means animated. The supply of oats being very small, fine parcels were firm, and the terms for beans and peas remained without change.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1090, barley, 910; oats, 160. Irish: wheat, ——; barley, 1000; oats, 2200. Foreign: wheat, 1690; barley, —; oats, —. Flour, 1470 sacks; malt, 2220 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red 40s to 53s; ditto white, 50s to 62s, Norfolk and Suffolk, red, the to 48s, ditto white, 48s to 57s; rye, — to —; grinding barley, — to —; distilling, — to — malting, — to — brewing, — to —; Chevalier, — to —; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire ditto, — to —; Kingston and Ware, — to —; Chevalier, — to —; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire ditto, — to —; Scotch, — to —; potato, — to —; Peas, boilers, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 32s to 36s, white, 44s to 48s; hog peas, 30s to 32s, ditto old, 36s to 38s; grey beans, 32s to 36s, mazagan, 33s to 34s; tick beans, 30s to 32s, ditto old, 36s to 38s, grey peas

THE BRIGHTON, LEWES, AND HASTINGS RAILWAY, OPENED TO LEWES.

THE BRIGHTON VIADUCT ACROSS THE PRESTON-ROAD.

THIS Railway, as many of our readers are, doubtless, aware, forms a portion of the main trunk Southern Coast Line, between Portsmouth and Dover; and is the property of the London and Brighton Railway Company. That portion of it which extends from Brighton to Lewes, was inspected by General Pasley on the 3rd instant, and was opened for general traffic on Monday last.

The line has several works of considerable magnitude and interest; a few of which we have selected for illustration. It branches from the London and Brighton line immediately after passing the New England Viaduct, and then crosses the Preston road by the Brighton Viaduct, a magnificent structure, consisting of an ellip[tical] [arch] feet high, [illegible]d, on one side, by 18, and on the o[ther] 60 feet span. The former are built on a curve of 2 mile[s] [illegible] they are of the same height [illegible] and the piers are 1 foot 6 inches [illegible] ster to have the opposings parallel. General Pasley, at the inspection, ex-

The first stone was laid by W. Nash, Esq., Chairman of the Company, on May 28, 1845; and on the 28th of March following, the last arch was keyed in. Perhaps, no similar construction, either for its extent or its beautiful proportions, has ever been completed in a shorter space of time.

When viewed from the point selected by our Artist, this elegant specimen of railway engineering is seen to most advantage: on the elevated ground to the right is the extensive Terminus of the London and Brighton Railway; and in front lies the town of Brighton, with its fine expanse of sea: a picture of no ordinary interest, and sufficient of itself to repay the investment of an excursion-ticket and a day's holiday, independent of the many other attractions of this favoured locality.

One of these inducements is the interesting old town of Lewes, its castle and seven churches, and a host of other antiquarian relics. Proceeding thither, after crossing the Brighton Viaduct, we then pass through a short tunnel (sixty yards) beneath the Ditchling Road, and the deep chalk cutting on either side: we have engraved the latter, and our Artist has shown the mode adopted by Mr. Wythes, the contractor for the works, for getting and filling his chalk cuttings: the first step was to bore a hole, or heading, at the intended level of the railway, through the cutting; then, four shafts were sunk into the heading from the top, at from 18 to 20 feet apart, down which the chalk rolled into waggons placed beneath, when it had once been loosened by the men with their parks. Just beyond the cutting, a bridge crosses the road, forming the northern boundary of the parish of Brighton. After passing through another cutting of considerable depth, the line extends along the side of the hill at the back of the Lewes barracks; and consists of embankment and cutting combined. Another cutting brings us to Moulscombe, a neat villa, the grounds of which are bisected by the railway, and again connected by a bridge.

THE ROSE HILL CUTTING.

THE RODSHROVE SKEW BRIDGE.

A deep cutting brings us to Hodshrove, where the Lewes turnpike road is crossed by a skew-bridge of three arches, which we have engraved: the arches are of noble proportions and massive strength. From this point, the line, which had, hitherto, run on the western side of the Lewes road, lies entirely on the eastern side. A high embankment and a deep cutting follow; and we then pass a long embankment, skirting the front of the Earl of Chichester's park, at Stenmer. This is the most beautiful domain on the line: the estate comprehends the whole parish and village of Stanmer, including the church; the park occupies a valley formed by one of those bold ranges of hills which adorn the coast of this county; and its undulatory surface, varied by thick masses of foliage, forms a rich contrast to the open downs by which it is environed.

THE FALMER TUNNEL.

SCENE FROM THE NEW BALLET OF "LALLA ROOKH," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The Stanmer embankment brings us to the foot of Falmer Hill, where a cutting commences, and is succeeded by a Tunnel, 500 yards in length, followed by a long and deep cutting; then a shorter one, and we obtain a sight of Lewes, St. Anne's Church and the Castle being the most prominent objects. Nothing remarkable occurs after this till we reach the foot of Water Shoot Hill, where the Railway crosses the Winterbourne; and, taking a curve to the right by a short tunnel, enters Southover, passing under the road, which leads from Lewes to Newhaven. It then crosses the Priory grounds (engraved in the number of our Journal detailing the recent antiquarian discoveries there), and thus arrives at the Lewes Station, which is in High-street, at the foot of School Hill.

The Engineer-in-Chief of the line is Mr. J. U. Rastrick; Mr. George Wythes being the contractor for the entire works, which have been executed under the direction of the Resident-Engineer, Mr. G. Meredith. We are indebted for some of the preceding details to Mr. H. F. Birt, as well for the assistance afforded by him to our artist in sketching the annexed views. A portion of the descriptive details is extracted from the Brighton Gazette.

The line was opened to the public, as we have stated, on Monday last; and on the same day was opened the line to Chichester; thus extending the "iron way" east towards Dover, and westward towards Chichester, in part of the great trunk Southern Coast Line. At Lewes, the event was celebrated by a general holiday on Monday; and it is curious to reflect that the railway passes very nearly in the "route of Ravenna's," along which the Roman soldiers marched nearly 1800 years since,—"by Stanmer and Falmer," to the station Mutuanonia, now Lewes. The railway extension in the opposite direction to Chichester, the site of the Roman station Regnum, is of equal historical interest,—in associating the era of the colonizing of Britain with the noblest triumph of her civilisation—the Railway of our own Times.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE great event of the week, at this Establishment, has been the production of the new ballet of "Lalla Rookh;" and, although we must defer till our next number the more minute details of its performance, we will endeavour to give our readers such an idea of the whole as to enable them to form for themselves an opinion of its merits.

The subject selected is, no doubt, highly appropriate for choregraphic purposes. Independently of the charm with which the genius of Moore has invested the plot of "Lalla Rookh," whose very name conjures up before us images of beauty and fairy-like brilliancy, the simplicity and intelligibility of the subject are highly advantageous for a ballet, while there is enough of romance and dramatic effect to give full scope for the display of pantomimic power in the artists, and to interest the feelings, as well as the fancy, of the spectators. The locale thus selected, with the splendid scenery, the magnificent buildings, the gorgeous costumes of the East, faithfully copied, can but produce a splendid effect on the stage, besides that it possesses a peculiar interest from the circumstances of the day.

The framers of the ballet have also enjoyed the advantage of the most enchanting models. Moore's descriptions of festive scenes, so rich in colouring, so minute in detail, so full of varied splendour, furnish admirable materials for a composition of this kind—the difficulty being that of selection, which has been, in this case, most judicious. The description of Selem's Feast in the Shalimar, from which the festivities of the durbar in the first scene are copied, and, above all, the "Feast of the Roses," from the "Light of the Harem," given in the last tableau, are, perhaps, the most charming passages of the kind to be met with throughout "Lalla Rookh." The latter, the idea of which is beyond measure poetical and graceful, and more approaching our idea of a fairy fête than an actual scene of earth, seems, from its very nature, to claim a choregraphic representation, and we can only wonder that it has now been attempted for the first time.

The great and striking merit of this ballet is that all engaged composers, choregraphic and musical, the scene-painter, and the fair Cerito herself—seem to have imbibed the inspiration of the poet. The dances—entirely Indian in character, and in the manner in which they are executed: the music, partly selected from Felicien David's "Desert," an Oriental composition par excellence; and the scenery, which has all the warm Eastern colouring, and is, moreover, faithful to the descriptions and sketches of travellers to those interesting regions—all are in harmony with the design of the great poet. No expense has been spared to render the mounting of the ballet perfect, and we are assured that, in one scene, there are no less than two hundred dancers on the stage.

We will now proceed to a brief notice of the principal dances. In the first tableau the most remarkable is the "Pas Symbolique" copied from the native dances of the Hindoos, in which they are continually forming into varied groups, imitative of natural objects. This is most fanciful, and, we believe, entirely novel on the stage. The following are some of the figures represented by Lalla Rookh and the Eastern Maidens:—

Hermes,	The Harp,	The Car of the Rising Sun,
The Shell,	The Framed Picture,	The Butterflies,
The Kiosks,	The Morning Breeze,	The Sun a Rays,
The Cage,	The Stars,	The Living Statue, and
The Mirrors,	The Pine Apples,	Its Pedestal.

The second tableau presents to us the dreary waste across which the Princess and her suite are travelling on their way to Cashmere. Here the well-known "March of the Caravan," from Felicien David's "Desert," is most happily introduced; the peculiar rhythm and the wild character of this march, give a striking originality to the whole scene—a most novel one for a ballet. Then comes on a fearful tempest, and again the "Storm" of Felicien David magnificently describes the warring of the elements. Then follows the preservation of Lalla Rookh by the devotedness of the poet, and the return of calm. Then we have the wild Arabian air of the Chibouk, played by Perasoro, to the tune of which Cerito executes a striking and peculiar dance, while Fadladeen is sent to sleep by the fumes of his pipe. Then follows the "Sunrise," the music of which every amateur remembers with pleasure. The whole of this tableau is characteristic in the extreme, and strikingly contrasted with the brilliant feasts with which the ballet begins and concludes.

The "Feast of Roses" forms the last scene of the ballet; and it is while the festival proceeds that the recognition of the lovers takes place. We have, after this, the "Pas de Corbeilles" of the fair maidens of Cashmere, and the "Pas de Neuf," executed by Cerito and her attendant nymphs. The brilliant pageantry that surrounds them, the bright and varied colours of the floral feast, and the graceful movements of the dancers, form an enchanting picture.

The lyrical performances of the week have consisted of "Don Pasquale," "Norma," and "Il Matrimonio," each and all displaying three of the principal actors—Grisi, Mario, Lablache—in parts so totally opposed to each other, that it is difficult to conceive such a versatility of talent, and such a power of disguising their identity.

MUSIC.

ALESSANDRO STRADELLA, ROMANTIC OPERA IN THREE ACTS; COMPOSED BY F. FLOTOW, AND ADAPTED TO THE ENGLISH STAGE BY MR. BENEDICT; THE LIBRETTO BY MR. BUNN.

Considerable interest was manifested to hear the first performance of this opera; and Drury Lane Theatre on Saturday night was completely filled. It was well received, and may be pronounced to be a legitimate success; but it was not a triumphant one, and certainly in no way approached the furore which has attended its career in Germany. It has been observed that the work is more calculated to please the public than the critics and professors, and this remark has been proved to be just, not only as regards this country, but also in the musical towns of Germa... The Teutonic critics in record... ...parous feeling in its favour carefully absta... ...t ourselves from eulogy. Here less good nature has been displayed, and "Stradella" has been unmercifully condemned by the writers. We think that judgment has been in this instance pre naturely pronounced, for the opera has not been done justice to. It is useless to deny that the choral and orchestral exertions, as well as those of the principal vocalists, on the first night were as bad as bad could be. Grave mistakes were made, in our opinion, in the selection of the tempi for particular pieces; and the absence of a Conductor capable of giving the right colouring to the music was a serious drawback. We do not mean to form a merit to assert that two German successes of this genre can at all be accounted for on national grounds, but we do declare that it is altogether rubbish, is manifestly ab-surd. The music is light and agreeable, devoid of all learning, but at times nicely instrumented. It went tamely because the artists were tamely put before the public, as well as because the tempi—in ...s opinion would increase materially. Like the compositions of the opera-comique school, to which class "Stradella" decidedly appertains, it requires good acting as well as singing, with our artists it has little chance of either at present. We attribute no blame to the manager; on the contrary, he deserves every credit for producing an opera that has attained such continental fame; and he has spared no expense in the mise en scène. The scenery by Grieve is charming; nothing can be more beautiful than the Venetian View by Moonlight, Stradella's Villa in the second act; and the last scene, of St. Peter's at Rome during the Festival of the Madonna.

SCENE FROM THE NEW OPERA OF "STRADELLA," AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

The story of Stradella is well known Born in Naples in 1645, he was engaged for some time as a composer and singing-master at Venice, and was the instructor of Hortensia, a young lady of the Venetian family of that name. The pupil and master of a Stradella and the pupil were mutually smitten, and fled from the "Paradise of Sighs" to Rome. The Venetian nobleman despatched two assassins to the Papal City to kill Stradella, but the gentle singing of the latter deterred them from their foul intention. Stradella and Hortensia went to Turin, and were protected by the Duke of Savoy, but an attempt was not the less made on his life. Stradella and Hortensia were separated from his servants, but after a time fortunately recovered. The malignant designs of his Venetian foe were ultimately accomplished at Genoa. In 1678, and both Stradella and Hortensia were murdered in one day. It was Burcdelet, the musical historian of the time, who has left a circumstantial record of this tragical history.

The opera opens in Venice, with the carrying off of Leonora (Miss Rainforth), in the midst of the Carnival, by Stradella; the manager, who are on the side of the popular tenor, frustrating the attempts of Signor Basso, her guardian (Weiss), to recover his ward.

In the second act there is the marriage of Stradella and Leonora at Rome, and the arrest of Barbarino (Brahiol), and Malcolo (Stretton), the two ruffians hired by Basso to assassinate Stradella.

In the third act Basso arrives at Rome, to see if his agents have perpetrated the wicked act, but finds them so charmed with Stradella's voice, that they refuse to obey his orders. He increases the promised reward, and they again consent; but the tenor rehearses a hymn for the approaching mercy and grace for the hardened sinner. This air has the effect of not only converting the two bravos, but their employer also, and after a candid avowal to Stradella of their defeated project, Basso gives his consent to the marriage of Leonora and the opera closes in a grand chorus of devotees at the Festival of the Madonna.

There is no speaking. The action is carried on in accompanied recitative, but generally in choral responses. In the first act there is little to attract the ear. Harrison has a long serenade, and with Miss Rainforth a Notturno; but there were some portions of the finale not destitute of spirit. In the second act Miss Rainforth had an interesting air. Stretton and Burdini have two duets, the last a Bacchanalian one, which was encored, and is clever. The "Bell" chorus is also extremely pretty; and Harrison's romance pleased the audience so much that the last verse was called for a second time. In the third act, Harrison has a common-place song about Italy, which is turned into a duo with Miss Rainforth, and finally becomes a quartet with Stretton and Burdini. A long trio between Weiss, Burdini, and Bertini, in the finale, was the concerted piece in the English style, which was rapturously encored. The hymn of Harrison is a lovely composition, but he was unable to do it justice. The overture contains several themes, both afterwards throughout the opera, but it is a pity it is struck up so ...ate in the overture, frustrating the attempts of Signor Basso, her guardian (Weiss), to recover his ward.

In the second act there is the marriage of Stradella and Leonora at Rome, and the arrest of Barbarino (Brahiol), and Malcolo (Stretton), the two ruffians hired by Basso to assassinate Stradella.

In the third act Basso arrives at Rome, to see if his agents have perpetrated the wicked act, but finds them so charmed with Stradella's voice, that they refuse to obey his orders. He increases the promised reward, and they again consent; but the tenor rehearses a hymn for the approaching mercy and grace for the hardened sinner. This air has the effect of not only converting the two bravos, but their employer also, and after a candid avowal to Stradella of their defeated project, Basso gives his consent to the marriage of Leonora and the opera closes in a grand chorus of devotees at the Festival of the Madonna.

There is no speaking. The action is carried on in accompanied recitative, but generally in choral responses. In the first act there is little to attract the ear. Harrison has a long serenade, and with Miss Rainforth a Notturno; but there were some portions of the finale not destitute of spirit. In the second act Miss Rainforth had an interesting air. Stretton and Burdini have two duets, the last a Bacchanalian one, which was encored, and is clever. The "Bell" chorus is also extremely pretty; and Harrison's romance pleased the audience so much that the last verse was called for a second time. In the third act, Harrison has a common-place song about Italy, which is turned into a duo with Miss Rainforth, and finally becomes a quartet with Stretton and Burdini. A long trio between Weiss, Burdini, and Bertini, in the finale, was the concerted piece in the English style, which was rapturously encored. The hymn of Harrison is a lovely composition, but he was unable to do it justice. The overture contains several themes, both afterwards throughout the opera, but it is a pity it is struck up so late in the overture, frustrating the attempts of the second repetition that it received after a strenuous battle.

Since the above article was penned, we heard "Stradella," for the second time, on its third representation on Tuesday night. It thinks better of its music, but ... Our article have no notion of the light French school of ... ...ndered "Victoria" brilliants to gain an extra minute. One of the most healthy signs of the times, is the ...ent falling off in the attendance at the Concerts of the undignified matinées ...alls "Grand Concerts," although there is no orchestra, and nothing but a ... ...ano and tenor accompaniment to sustain the singers and solo players for upwards of four hours. Such entertainments are a disgrace to the name of ... than gas, a name by these speculative affairs. The classical meet... at her own residence have gained for her a great name ... as most exqui... ...e who has manufactured a chest-note or two, and brought the audience to swell out the scheme, and all kinds of "outs" are numerously made in compliments to gain an extra minute. One of the most healthy signs of the times, is the ...ent falling off in the attendance at the Concerts of the undignified matinées ...alls "Grand Concerts," although there is no orchestra, and nothing but a ... ...ano and tenor accompaniment to sustain the singers and solo players for upwards of four hours. Such entertainments are a disgrace to the name of ... than gas, a name by these speculative affairs. The classical meet... at her own residence have gained for her a great name ... as most exqui... ...e who has manufactured a chest-note or two, and brought the audience to swell out the scheme, and all kinds of "outs" are numerously made in compliments to see her achieve with the "... ..." what she has done so well with chamber performances. The instrumentalists were the Dulcin Family, Parish Alvars, Dando, Regondi, and Lucas on the trombone player, Mr. Willy, and Herr Kalkbrenner. Madame Dulcken played in brilliant style Döhler's fantasia on the "Lucia" themes she also executed, with Mr. Wallace, a duet for two pianos on the same opera. Both pianists first rate in ... ...ecart," and, with Sivori, a duet for violin and piano. The vocalists were Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Schloss, Madame Bennelle, Mdlle. Roppiett, Miss Birch, Miss Rainforth, Messrs. Lockey, Bodda, Lucas, Hobbs, and Lablache, and Portheart. Had the Tuilon was announced, but was afflicted with one of those sudden indispositions with which she has been tormented during the season, and which, in the eleventh hour, annihilates the engagements Mr. Jo...n Parry gave momentary life to the heaviness, by his comic duties. Mr. Benedict was the accompanyist.

Mr. Henry Russell. This vocalist gave his entertainment at Sadler's W... ...s encores.

Mr. J. B. Cramer. The veteran John Cramer, in his day one of the greatest pianists, gave a performance yesterday morning (Friday), at the Hanover-square Rooms, of pieces newly adapted by him from the quartets of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. We doubt that this remarkable programme next week, being too late for our first edition.

M. Jullien's Concerts d'Ete.—We are unable to report progress as to last night's opening at Her Majesty's Theatre, but we have no question as to the ability to ask an audience with pleasure the evident desire manifested by M. Jullien to elevate the character of his entertainments. Whatever may be our opinion as to the peculiarities as a conductor, there can be no question as to the zeal and ability he has displayed to afford to the public, at the cheapest rate, the advantage of hearing the works of the best masters adequately performed. He now begins a series of Vocal Concerts, and has had the talent to engage Madame Anderl, Mdlle. Grahn, Mdlle. Ann Bishop, and Mr. Braham, supported by Mdlle. Rose Nes, Caroline James, and Miss Poole, &c. Honours. Applications for Brass stalls and Tickets to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Two o'clock precisely.

Astley's Royal Amphitheatre. Proprietor, Mr. ... ...y Bat at Green ... Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert the Duke of Wa... ... ...ances of the new Mimic Spectacle of ... ...ek. This evening (Saturday) the vertable General Tom Thumb in his ... ...ge, with his unrivalled Lilliputian Company. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the Grand Mimic Spectacle of ... ...England's victories of 1845 (in which the well known corps of the Equestrian troupe will ... ...ghout), concluding with the admirable burlesque of BOB OF MILLBANK, or, the Fatal Boots. Friday, Mr. Batty's ... ...ts; and on Saturday, the ... ...ill appear, for the ... ...ance of the Nigger Minstrels, Mr. Batty in a ... ...ts. Box-office open daily from ... ...o Five. To ... ...ce on FRIDAY, JUNE 19 ... ...ance of Two Acts of ... ...

Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-Square.—Mr. ... ...First Grand Orchestral Concert. ... ...ance of this ... ...ay next, the 15th inst., at Eight o'clock precisely. ... ...ARSAT will ... ...ance have been engaged.—Vocal Performers: Madame Caradori Allan, ...the following ... ...Miss Birch, Miss Rainforth, Miss Poole, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Lucas, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. ... ...Madame Anderl, Mdlle. Grahn, Mdlle. Ann Bishop, Mdlle. Rose Nes, Miss Maria ... ...Hawes. Signor Marras (from Her Majesty's Theatre), Herr Hoffmeister, Herr ... ...Bach (making his second and only ... ...), Herr Goldberg, Herr Bach (making his second and only ... ...), Herr Reichardt, and Mr. Jean Lavy, from the Conservatoire de Paris, will perform Berth... ...Trio, Beethoven's Pastoral Sonata (Op. 28), and Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 2, in B flat, for the Violoncello, with Pianoforte accompaniment. Conductor, Mr. Willy. Leader, Mr. Sivori. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of Mr. Mitchell, Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, and of all the other principal Music Shops.

Royal Vauxhall Gardens.—Open every ... ...(except Saturday and Sunday), with ... ...ar's ... ...astonish the ... ...Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert. Conductor, Mr. Godfrey.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and th

BENEDICT'S GRAND CONCERT.—Mr MITCHELL, Bo

COLOSSEUM.—LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE. The

LAST WEEK BUT ONE OF GENERAL TOM THUMB'S

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Dr. RYAN'S

OLD PUPIL'S SUPPER.—The FIFTH HALF YEARLY

ORGAN for TRINITY CHURCH, CARLISLE.—G. M.

NEW HISTORICAL TALE. Nearly Ready, price 6s. in cloth,

CHARLOTTE TORDAY.

SCRIPTURAL MUSINGS. By AUGUSTA M. WICKS.

DESPATCHES of the BRITISH GENERALS during the

THE CAMPAIGN on the SUTLEJ, and the WAR in the

AN EASY GUIDE TO THE GAME OF CHESS, whe

Mr Mitchell, Publisher to her Majesty and to the Queen Dowager, will shortly publish

AN AUTHENTIC PORTRAIT of the DUKE of WELLING

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON

TO AMATEURS of MUSIC.—The MUSICAL HERALD

WISDOM and CHEERFULNESS.—The FAMILY HERALD

THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE, in Square Post

SUBSCRIBERS to KENNY MEADOWS'S ILLUSTRATI

On the 30th inst., price One Gallon, Vol. I. of the re-issue of

THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE, Revised from the most

KENNY MEADOWS'S ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERI

HOW TO LIVE. Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 3d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the

By R. J. CH

TWELVE CHAPTERS on NERVOUS COMPLAINTS

DYSPEPSIA, Nervousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Bilious Complaints, Constipation, Nervous Irritability, Hypochondriasis, Spasms, Palpitation, Nervous Headache, Nervous Debility, Hysterics, Nervous Diseases, Nervous Fevers, Nervous Consumption, Nervous Decline, Nervous Apoplexy, Nervous Paralysis, Nervous Epilepsy, Nervous Blindness, Nervous Deafness, Nervous Tic Douloureux, Nervous Rheumatism, Nervous Lumbago, Nervous Sciatica, Nervous Affections of the Heart, Nervous Affections of the Kidneys, Nervous Affections of the Liver, Nervous Affections of the Stomach, Nervous Affections of the Bowels, Nervous Affections of the Womb, Nervous Affections of the Bladder, Nervous Affections of the Skin, Nervous Affections of the Eyes, Nervous Affections of the Ears, Nervous Affections of the Nose, Nervous Affections of the Face, Nervous Affections of the Throat, Nervous Affections of the Chest, Nervous Affections of the Limbs, Nervous Affections of the Joints, Nervous Affections of the Muscles, Nervous Affections of the Nerves, Nervous Affections of the Generative Organs, Nervous Affections of the Urinary Organs, Nervous Affections of the Digestive Organs, Nervous Affections of the Respiratory Organs, Nervous Affections of the Circulating Organs, Nervous Affections of the Brain, Nervous Affections of the Spinal Marrow, Nervous Affections of the Ganglionic System, Nervous Affections of the Cerebro-Spinal System, Nervous Affections of the Sympathetic System, Nervous Affections of the Cerebral System, Nervous Affections of the Organic System, Nervous Affections of the Animal System, Nervous Affections of the Vital System, Nervous Affections of the Natural System, Nervous Affections of the Functional System, Nervous Affections of the Secretory System, Nervous Affections of the Excretory System, Nervous Affections of the Absorbent System, Nervous Affections of the Assimilating System, Nervous Affections of the Reproductive System, Nervous Affections of the Lymphatic System, Nervous Affections of the Capillary System, Nervous Affections of the Arterial System, Nervous Affections of the Venous System, Nervous Affections of the Muscular System, Nervous Affections of the Osseous System, Nervous Affections of the Cartilaginous System, Nervous Affections of the Fibrous System, Nervous Affections of the Adipose System, Nervous Affections of the Cellular System, Nervous Affections of the Mucous System, Nervous Affections of the Serous System, Nervous Affections of the Synovial System, Nervous Affections of the Dermoid System, Nervous Affections of the Epidermoid System, Nervous Affections of the Pilous System, Nervous Affections of the Ungual System, Nervous Affections of the Pigmentary System, Nervous Affections of the Chylopoietic System, Nervous Affections of the Chylopoietic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Hæmatopoietic System, Nervous Affections of the Hæmatopoietic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Uropoietic System, Nervous Affections of the Uropoietic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Spermatopoietic System, Nervous Affections of the Spermatopoietic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Pneumatic System, Nervous Affections of the Pneumatic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Encephalic System, Nervous Affections of the Encephalic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurilemmatic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurilemmatic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurinic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurinic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuroglia System, Nervous Affections of the Neuroglia Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuromatic System, Nervous Affections of the Neuromatic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocerebellic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocerebellic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocerebral System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocerebral Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurospinal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurospinal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurosympathetic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurosympathetic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurosplanchnic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurosplanchnic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurosomatic System, Nervous Affections of the Neurosomatic Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocranial System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocranial Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurospinal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurospinal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurosacral System, Nervous Affections of the Neurosacral Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocaudal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocaudal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocoxal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocoxal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurofemoral System, Nervous Affections of the Neurofemoral Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurotibial System, Nervous Affections of the Neurotibial Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurofibular System, Nervous Affections of the Neurofibular Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurotarsal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurotarsal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurometatarsal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurometatarsal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurophalangeal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurophalangeal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurohumeral System, Nervous Affections of the Neurohumeral Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuroradial System, Nervous Affections of the Neuroradial Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuroulnar System, Nervous Affections of the Neuroulnar Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocarpal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocarpal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurometacarpal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurometacarpal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurophalangeal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurophalangeal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurocostal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurocostal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neurosternal System, Nervous Affections of the Neurosternal Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuroclavicular System, Nervous Affections of the Neuroclavicular Viscera, Nervous Affections of the Neuroscapular System, Nervous Affections of the Neuroscapular

THE ASCOT PRIZE PLATE.—1846.

THE QUEEN'S VASE.

tage over that of last year in being elegantly useful as well as decorative. Upon one of the faces of the supporting pedestal is the inscription, which is the same as last year

LVDORVM ASCOTIENSIVM MEMOR
QVAM SIBI INTER PRIMOS
REGINAM VICTORIAM
HONOS
MENS. DVX. MDCCCXLIV
SOLENNE CERTAMINIS EQVESTRIS PROBITVM
INVITAT
NICHAS
TOTIVS EVXINIAE IMPERATOR

The height of this truly magnificent Prize is 46 inches, and its weight 980 ounces. It has been executed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskill, of Bond-street, the successors of Messrs. Storr and Mortimer. The value exceeds 500 guineas.

THE ROYAL HUNT CUP.

The ROYAL HUNT CUP, which was run for on Wednesday, is also the work of Messrs. Hunt and Roskill, and was modelled by Mr Macarthy. It consists of a group—dogs pulling down a deer—of very spirited design, and recalling to memory one of Landseer's finest pictures. It is 24 inches high, including the bronze stand, and it weighs 230 ounces.

The QUEEN'S GOLD VASE, run for on Tuesday, is of remarkably elegant and novel design by Mr. Cottrill, executed by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket. It consists of a flagon, of classic form, and richly ornamented, fixed upon a stand, which, of itself, forms a drinking-cup: and both combined, are, in appearance, a magnificent vase. On the shoulders of the flagon are sculptured, in high relief, a mounted knight in full armour, attended by a page and man-at-arms. The knight has thrown down his gauntlet as if offering or accepting a challenge. This is a beautiful composition. Indeed, the whole work is of masterly design: the details are worked out with knowledge and freedom; and, in the manipulation of the precious metal, variety of colour and texture has been artistically studied; so that the Vase, altogether, reminds one of some of the celebrated productions of Italian art.

THE EMPEROR'S PLATE.

dramatic line—to the impersonations of dramatic "common life." Her Miami was intimitable: her Olympia Capriana, the Queen of the Abruzzi, is equally characteristic. There are capital parts for Mr. O. Smith and Mr. Paul Bedford; and Mr. Ryan, of whom we have before had occasion to speak favourably, makes a famous Irishman. And, when we add to these a band of effective Salvator Rosa looking brigands, a bevy of pretty girls, some charming scenery, and all the leading characteristic dances of the original ballet, with some others into the bargain, it may be conceived that "another Adelphi hit" is the result of the combination. Mr. Sterling Coyne is an author of no ordinary versatility; the sides of the audiences have scarcely ceased to ache from the effects of the question respecting sending your wife to Camberwell; and he touches their sympathies in an entirely opposite direction, and with equal success.

The applause at the fall of the curtain was loud and prolonged, and Madame Celeste was called for.

VAUXHALL

The continued fine weather has given a most fortunate turn to the destinies of this popular place of amusement; and, notwithstanding the counter-attractions of the Surrey Gardens, the "Royal Property" has been thronged with visitors, fully as respectable to all appearances, as those accustomed to resort there under the old prices, which were double the present ones. We hope, therefore, that the present management will prove more prosperous than it has been for several bygone seasons. We say this, because, we believe, it is pretty well known that, for some time past, the affair has been a very losing game to the lessees. Much of this is, without doubt, to be attributed to our uncertain climate; but we think we can point out other causes of the non-success of its management. That there is a great deal of money to be made there we are convinced; but a great deal must first be expended; and this large outlay must be directed by much original taste and inventive power, with respect to the capabilities of the Gardens. In the first place, the amusements must be entirely re-organised; something should be shown to the public which, from the very nature of the place, they cannot see anywhere else. The programme has remained the same as long as we can recollect it; and even this year, under a liberal proprietor, of whose exertions and honourable character every one speaks in the highest terms, the same conventional clinging to the old business is apparent. The public yawn now at what amused them even ten years ago; and their ideas of entertainment have become wonderfully expanded; hence, a different disposition of lamps or a new coat of paint is not sufficient to satisfy them. No place of its kind offers the capabilities for ingenious devices of every description that Vauxhall does, but they have never been properly taken advantage of. The same reformation is wanted which Mr. W. Bradwell effected at the Colosseum. Weather we cannot control: but if, in past ages, it was possible to roof in the Roman amphitheatres, and protect the spectators from the effects of sun and rain, we should conceive it to be perfectly practicable at the present day, if not entirely to avert, at all events to diminish the discomfort attendant on a wet evening.

We have, this week, engraved the grand feu d'artifice, which is a most brilliant scene.

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

The number of sights for the holiday-keepers of last week, and our incapability to become ubiquitous for the occasion, did not allow us to notice the further improvements made by the spirited proprietor of this resort since it opened for the summer season. There are few places where an evening can be so agreeably passed as at the Surrey Gardens. There is much to see, to carry on time, even during the performances of the very excellent orchestra; and the amusements have the advantage of being over at an early hour—an especial recommendation; whilst the moderate price of admission and refreshments, precludes the visitor from rushing into any great expenditure, even were he so inclined. A pretty diaramic effect has been arranged at the foot of the new Chinese Bridge, representing the Grotto of Calypso; and the distant mountains in the Vesuvius picture have been so delicately shaded off, that the effect of distance is perfectly marvellous. The application of gas to the illumination lamps is a great advantage gained; as, on the commencement of the pyrotechnic displays, they can all be suddenly turned out; whilst a greater brilliancy is imparted to them when burning.

THE ASCOT PRIZE PLATE.—1846.

THE ASCOT PRIZES of this year are of a much improved order, great as the advance of art in this branch of design during the last few years.

The EMPEROR'S CUP, the prize annually presented by his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, is superior in the weight of the silver and the design to that of last year. It consists of a group, St. George destroying the Dragon; and St. George being the patron saint of Russia, as well as of England, the subject is doubly appropriate. It was, we understand, selected by the Earl of Rosslyn, the Master of the Royal Buck-hounds; and by Baron de Brunow, the Russian Ambassador. It was drawn by Mr. F. Howard, and modelled by Mr. Brown, under the superintendence of Mr. Baily, R.A. The group is unusually spirited, treated with much originality, and of most exquisite workmanship; indeed, we do not remember to have seen a finer specimen of silver-work. From the base rises, like a canopy, a candelabra for 13 lights; so that the Prize has the advan-

FIREWORKS AT VAUXHALL GARDENS.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, aforesaid. SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 216.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE GAUGES.

THE Gauge Question has at last been brought formally before Parliament, and the Government has made an attempt to solve this—perhaps the most difficult and momentous of the social problems of the day. We are in a curious position with regard to our present means of communication, and all we can do is but a shift and compromise between two great powers. We are paying a penalty of inconvenience for having progressed, and for having done, perhaps, too much in an early stage of a great invention.

All that the advocates of the Broad Gauge can prove as to the superiority of that system will not help the country out of the dilemma. The elaborate experiments, in which every ounce of weight and every foot of speed are calculated with mathematical nicety, to show with what safety a rate of speed can be obtained of which the first railroad engineers never dreamed; all the flying along the double lines of iron, with the speed of an arrow and the smoothness of a billiard ball, leaves the "great difficulty" just where it stood; it only serves to increase our regret that we had not begun on the "Broad" foundation, instead of arriving at it now, trammelled and fettered by another system, which has taken such firm root among us, that to alter it, to what may perhaps be more advantageous, is an impossibility.

Every proof and demonstration that can be given of the superiority of the "Broad Gauge," even if admitted, is a vexation; men dislike being told of the good things they cannot enjoy; it does not require a Board of Directors, a Chairman, a Banquet, and exultant speeches, to prove that seventy miles an hour, as the rate of speed, is better than half that amount, or any amount, indeed, less than it. Everybody grants the advantage of saving time and shortening distance. But, if the trains could be shot along the line with the speed of a message along the wires of the Electric Telegraph, with perfect safety (and it would be rash to pronounce even this impossible), unless the improvement could be applied to every line in the kingdom, the benefit would remain an abstraction, a thing proved to be possible, but not possible for us, with the physical means we at present have at our disposal. No experiment, no science, no reports, nor any number of speeches at dinners, can do away with that enormous "fact," the one thousand six hundred miles of railroad already made upon the Narrow Gauge. There they lie upon the surface of the country, stretching in every direction, intersecting at every possible angle; where they do join with the "Broad" line that has succeeded it in the course of time, with some points of practical advantage in its favour, the inconvenience, trouble, confusion, and, consequently, expense, are awful drawbacks upon that system. What would it be with some score of trunk lines of the "Broad" system driven among that net-work of the "Narrow" railways which overspreads the North? Every point of junction would become an affliction and a nuisance, destructive to the time or property of all men. The delays and accidents of Gloucester, multiplied by forty or fifty, would be too much for human patience to bear.

If any mechanical means can be found of rendering the difference of the rails of no importance to the carriages that run upon them, the conflict will cease; but, if all prospect of such an expedient must be relinquished, some compromise between the two systems must be effected. To this the resolutions of the House of Commons amount. The continuation of the Great Western into Cornwall, and all its branches southward to the coast, will be on its own gauge, of necessity; but, north of that line, no railway will be made on any gauge but the narrow. This is for the future; but it leaves the evil actually existing unprovided for; in fact, here Parliament is powerless; it cannot undo the past: if the difficulty is ever got rid of, it will be by the same energy that has brought our railway system to what it is. Except drawing up intricate and absurd standing orders, which have multiplied the expences of railway bills to a ruinous amount, encouraging litigation, and placing the best and the worst lines on a footing of equality, the Government has done nothing during the development of modern railway enterprise, that entitles it to the slightest respect. That it repents its carelessness now, may be true; but it seems to lack either the skill or the courage to grapple with the difficulty effectually. We, of course, mean by the term Government, the Executive, without regard to parties.

The present state of things, that is, the existence of two conflicting systems, cannot be charged against either the Government or private parties. The Narrow system was the best when it was adopted; the speed attainable on it was thought the maximum that could be gained; but mankind never will rest contented even with a good thing when something a degree better is shown them, though undoubtedly sufficient for all practical purposes. The Broad Gauge does not differ in its superiority, if even that is conceded, so much in kind as in degree; it resolves itself into a calculation of less or more on all points; less oscillation, more speed, and so forth. But the motion of the Narrow Gauge is very bearable, and its speed not to be despised; the very highest speed attainable on any line will never be made the general average; thus the advantages of the two systems will, in the long run, approximate pretty nearly. If we were beginning our career, with our present experience, it would be right to choose that system which presented even the smallest shade of superiority; but, as it is, circumstances have decided for us, and bound us down, for better for worse, to one principle over the greater part of the country. The question now is, which shall be accommodated to the other? The larger can, of course, be altered to the smaller; a Narrow Gauge could be worked on a Broad Gauge line with comparatively little outlay; but no conceivable sum would effect the converse. It would be unjust to compel the Broad lines to alter their rails to the Narrow at their own expense; but the addition of an intermediate line of rail would do all that is required; and the Government itself, which has done so little, might attempt this without finding it ruinous. The tendency of present proceedings is evidently to a compromise, as the only way of getting rid of a daily increasing difficulty. This is proved by the following extract from a leading morning journal:

MEXICANS.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

And here we would throw out another suggestion for abolishing, if possible, the bugbear of "Break of Gauge." That proclamation to be issued for the encouragement of mechanical genius, offering a handsome premium for any invention that shall either remedy or rectify the evil. Who knows but that, in the inventory of events, some succedaneum may be found in reserve? It will be admitted by either partisans that neither Gauge as yet has had sufficient probation. The ordeal years of the Railway System do not yet equal the years of our own infants. No.ther Gauge comes down to us as of ancestral nativity, and no one is necessarily Narrow Gauge. However much probability may be against the prediction, which the Broad Gauge does not possess. Both are pioneers of a new process of improvement. At any rate, the Broad Gauge up to the present period has proved itself the Dem.rgos. or mechanical wonder of the age. True it is, that the one has the ad-antage over the other in genealogy. If the one dates its ancestry from the dark ages of railways, the other links its lineage with the reformed production of later days. The one seeks to catholicise the Gauge of the country, and to suppress the competition of a great system, while that great system is struggling to introduce its novum organum of Gauge with its Atalantas of speed and its Titans of power. On all hands hinges the fate of the two great confederacies—the Guelphs and Ghib.-.ines of the rail way company. The Broad Gauge, it cannot be denied, is an invigoration of the old railway system, on a gigantic and energic scale. It is, nevertheless, doubtful whether, if the question were reopened, either would be pronounced the Optimist Gauge, since we are greatly swayed to the conclusion that the intermediate of six feet would be looked on as the happy medium.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

In our last impression we gave the most recent accounts from Mexico, which detailed reverses experienced by the Americans. The Britannia has since arrived with New York papers to the 31st ult., from which it appears that the Americans had quite retrieved their losses. At the period of our previous notice, Captain Walker had, with daring courage, started from Point Isabel, for the purpose of conveying despatches to General Taylor's camp. The advices now received state that this enterprise, having been successfully accomplished, the American Commandant immediately determined to march a portion of his army to the relief of Point Isabel. On the 1st ult., accordingly, he left his intrenchments, opposite Matamoras, with a force of from 1000 to 1200 men—cavalry, artillery, and infantry, and, on the morning of the following Jay, reached the Point, without encountering a single Mexican. On the morning of the 3rd ult., the booming of artillery being heard in the direction of Matamoras, Captain Walker was dispatched to ascertain the cause, and, on the 8th, having again safely accomplished his enterprise, that officer reported that the Mexicans, discovering at Matamoras, and on the left bank of the Rio del Norte, an attack being also made upon the rear of the camp. The Americans returned the fire upon Matamoras from a battery of five guns, and in thirty minutes, it is stated, succeeded in silencing the enemy. One life only was lost. On the evening of the 1st, having effectually strengthened the defences of Point Isabel, and obtained supplies for its position in front of a "chaparral," lying in the vicinity of a stream named the Palo Alto. An engagement ensued.

General Taylor, in his official despatches, describing it, says:—"The strength of the enemy is believed to have been about 6000 men, with 7 pieces of artillery, and 800 cavalry. His loss is probably at least 100 killed. Our loss is but four, from 3 officers and 40 men killed, and 13 officers and 100 men wounded; while that of the enemy has, in all probability, exceeded 300 killed; more than 200 have been buried by us on the two fields of battle. I regret to say that Major Ringgold, 3rd Artillery, and Captain Page, 4th Infantry, are severely wounded. Lieutenant Luther, 2nd Artillery, slightly so. The enemy has fallen back, and, it is believed, has re-passed the river. I have advanced parties now thrown forward in his direction, and shall move the main body immediately."

The Mexican General, De la Vega, was also taken prisoner, and had arrived at New Orleans by the steamer Colonel Harney. It was also reported that General Paredes was advancing from the interior of Mexico to Matamoras, at the head of 15,000 men. The Mexicans, at the date of the last accounts, were dispersing rapidly, and the United States army had not any enemy in sight. The Great Britain steamer, with news of the 9th ult., arrived at New York on the 29th; and the Britannia, with news of the 19th, reached Boston on the 1st instant, before the Camilla came away.

THE MEXICANS

We have engraved upon the preceding page a group of the Mexican people, from an original Sketch, by an artist who has visited the country, and to which the following notes may be interesting pendents

"The population of Mexico is estimated at 9,000,000, though it probably does not exceed 7,000,000. It contains several natures, but no great portion of Aboriginal Indians. Among the rest are European Spaniards, Creoles, or descendants from Spaniards, Mestejo, or descendants from Whites and Indians; Zambas, or descendants of Negroes and Indians; Mulattoes, or descendants of Whites and Negroes; mixtures of these varieties; Negroes, and a few Malays from China, and the islands of the Indian Ocean, especially the Philippines, a Spanish colony. The Negroes are not numerous, as slavery was never extensive in the Spanish continental colonies, and was abolished on the separation of Mexico from Spain, in 1810. The character the Indians, who constitute seven-tenths of the whole population, are intelligent, docile, peaceful, rather industrious, and very ingenious in mechanic arts, especially those of painting, carving, and moulding. They are gentle, and hospitable; and, though intemperate, like all the American Indians, north or south, they exhibit no violent or ferocious propensities when intoxicated. They exhibit capacity for improvement under good Government, and encouraged them in developing their resources, mental and physical."

The writer in the Philadelphia Ledger then proceeds to argue that "annexation" would be the greatest benefit upon the population of Mexico.

In the preceding group, are presented the Ranchero, part of the material of the Mexican army, half Indian and half Spanish in their extraction; gaunt, shrivelled, though muscular in their frames, and dark and swarthy visaged as they are, these men are the Arabs of the American continent. Living half their time in the saddle, for they are unrivalled horsemen, with lasso in hand, they traverse the vast plains in search of the buffalo and wild horse. The killing of these animals and the preparation and sale of their hides are their chief means of livelihood. Their costume generally consists of a pair of tough hide leggings, with scrolls of the same material, bound together with leathern thongs, over which is a blanket with a hole in the centre large enough to allow the head to be thrust out, and which falls not ungracefully over their shoulders, leaving ample room for play of their arms. Add to this a broad straw sombrero, and the lasso hanging ready for use in front of the saddle, and you have the picture he appears in the time of peace. Join to this a lance, with a sharp spear-head, and he left identically supplied with pistols and knives, and you have the Ranchero as a member of a body of bandits, or as a soldier in a body of cavalry. The power of enduring fatigue is almost inexhaustible, and a scanty meal per diem of parked beef and plantain suffices them during months. These are the men who comprise the great body of the Mexican army, and they are the same as of that nation what the Cossacks are to the Russians—ever on the alert, never to be surprised, and untiring in the pursuit of the foe, when plunder, no matter, how trifling, is to be obtained.

The central figure in the group portrays a Ranchero; to his left is a mounted Stewards Dragoon; and to the right, a Mexican cavalry-officer, and a priest. In advance of the mounted group, are an Infantry soldier, and an Indian guide and Baggage-carrier.

EXPERIMENT WITH THE BROAD GAUGE.

On Saturday last, an experimental trip was made to Bristol, with the view of testing the capabilities of the broad gauge, and of testing a new engine, the fame of which has been already sounded throughout the railway world. This engine, which is called the Great Western, is of enormous size, the driving wheels being eight feet in diameter, the cylinders of her engines eighteen inches, with two feet stroke.

A large party assembled at half-past eleven o'clock to accompany the train to Bristol. Ten carriages were attached to the engine, each weighing ten tons, and those in them were no passengers; were loaded with iron. The entire weight which the engine had to drag was upwards of one hundred tons amongst the company present were—Lord Alfred Churchill; Mr. Beckett Denison, M.P.; Mr. C. Russell, M.P.; Chairman of the Great Western Company, and several of the Directors; General Pasley, the Government Engineer; Mr. Gooch, the Locomotive Engineer of the Company, and most of its superior [illegible]

The distances downwards were performed thus:—

	H. M.	Miles distant from London.
Lo[illegible]don	0 0	0
Slough ...	0 [illegible]	[illegible]
Maidenhead ...	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]ter ...	[illegible]	[illegible]

[illegible], the train stopped [illegible] for the engine, which caused a delay of about four minutes and a [illegible]

Swindon	H. M.	Miles distant from London.
[illegible]	2 14	81

According to calculations made during the journey, the highest speed [illegible] was seventy miles an hour, the 87th mile being performed in 81 seconds and a half. This was attained, however, with a descent of 1 in 100; and the speed afterwards gradually slackened until 634 seconds were required to perform the mile. So much for the down trip. On returning, the highest speed attained was 63½ miles an hour. The train left Bristol at 1 minute after 4, and reached Paddington at 36 minutes to 7. In the down journey, the engine started a pump at Slough, which [illegible] to have retarded its speed considerably.

With all this extraordinary speed, the passengers had no feeling of uneasiness;

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

The Paris papers, as might naturally have been expected, are this week very much engrossed with the details of the inauguration of the Great Northern Railway from Paris to Brussels.

The inauguration of this important line of communication took place on Sunday, uniting Belgium to France, and forming a junction to the Belgian railroads by two different points, one by Lille to Tournay, and the other by Valenciennes to Quiverain.

On the evening of the inauguration, the French Princes, the Dukes of Nemours and Montpensier, left Paris for Amiens by a special train, to assist at a fête de nuit, which had been offered to them by the town of Amiens.

On Sunday the first grand coup d'essai (d'honneur) special train left Paris for the Belgian frontiers at 6 30 A.M., and a second at 7 30 A.M. Each of these was composed of two trains of 25 carriages each, containing 800 persons, making the total number of 2000 who had been specially invited.—(We have engraved the Paris terminus at page 408.)

These trains stopped at the principal stations at St. Denis, Enghien, Pontoise, Beaumont, Creil, Breteuil, and Amiens, where they were highly complimented by the crowds such an interesting event had collected. It was at the last town that the first official and religious ceremony took place. The Bishop of Amiens, surrounded by all his clergy, blessed the opening of this railroad, and the civil and military authorities received, in the midst of grand music and roaring of cannon, this mass of guests, composed of the highest public functionaries, merchants, bankers, and men of science.

At twelve o'clock the convoys left for Arras, and a déjeûner-dînatoire was first offered to the Royal Princes, who had arrived early, and afterwards to the numerous party which formed the convoy of inauguration. The trains left Arras at two P.M., and arrived in one hour at Douai, and towards four o'clock the immense trains, which had been increased to such an extent by the Belgian guests, added to the trains of the Princes, that it may be well termed the monster convoy, made its triumphal entry into Lille, where an immense population crowded the avenues and roads leading to the station, and which produced an effect as brilliant as imposing.

At six o'clock in the evening a splendid banquet was given by the directors of the Great Northern Railway to the French Princes, the authorities, and distinguished inhabitants of Lille. Covers were laid for 3000 guests.

After dinner, at Arras, a grand ball took place. The town was brilliantly illuminated during the night, and similar rejoicings took place at Douai, Amiens, and Clermont.

The two trains bringing the Princes and the remainder of the guests from Lille, arrived at Brussels on Monday, at three o'clock.

Great preparations had been made at Brussels for the reception of the French Princes. The King and Queen of the Belgians arrived at the station at half-past three, and, when the train came in at four o'clock, their Majesties, accompanied by the young Count Egbert and the Count of Flanders, came forward on the platform to receive the French Princes, the Queen of the Belgians [illegible] Gilion, the tutor of the young Count of Flanders, and [illegible] which the Duc d'Aumale [illegible] the King was to have presided, had been prepared in the Salle du Grand Concert, but, in consequence of the death of the Count d'Arschot, the Grand Marshal of the Palace, the King determined to entertain his Royal guests in the private of his Palace. In the evening, however, the King and Queen, accompanied by the [illegible] went to the ball, which was given in the spacious and splendid [illegible] wards of 2000 persons were present. It can scarcely be said [illegible] numerous area, for there was ample space for all. The blaze of light would have put the sun out of countenance at mid-day: a profusion of refreshments also served to keep every one in good humour. An orchestra was erected in the middle of the hall, and, at the upper extremity, on a dais, on which were the King and Queen, with their two illustrious guests. The King wore the uniform of a Colonel of the National Guards, the Duc de Nemours that of a French General Officer, and the Duc de Montpensier that of a Colonel of Artillery. The banquet was served in an immense tent, lighted up by myriads of wax lights, and a brilliant vista of glittering tables, each for fifty persons, were covered with the choicest dainties which Paris could furnish, and than the 2000 persons who partook of them, could not be said [illegible] There was plenty of room for everybody dinner, without the slightest disorder. There was plenty of room for everybody dinner, without the slightest disorder. There [illegible] dispositions of the guests, was always forthcoming, and handed forth from [illegible] hidden recesses by the attentive waiters. The Princes with the "Hoi de Finances" (M. Rothschild), and other wealthy bankers, sat at a [illegible] table at one end of the tent, the other extremity being occupied by a military band. It was the best management of the sort that ever was witnessed.

The Duc de Nemours sat at the middle of the centre table, having on his right his brother, the Sardinian Ambassador, the Archbishop of Cambrai, the Prince de Ligne, &c., and on his left, the Neapolitan Ambassador, the Marquis de Rumigny, M. Dupin, &c. Theirs was the post of honour, and even by the most fastidious of the guests, was always forthcoming, and handed forth from [illegible] hidden recesses by the attentive waiters. The Princes with the "Hoi de Finances" (M. Rothschild), and other wealthy bankers, sat at a [illegible] table at one end of the tent, the other extremity being occupied by a military band. It was the best management of the sort that ever was witnessed.

The Duc de Nemours sat at the middle of the centre table, having on his right his brother, the Sardinian Ambassador, the Archbishop of Cambrai, the Prince de Ligne, &c., and on his left, the Neapolitan Ambassador, the Marquis de Rumigny, M. Dupin, &c. Theirs was the post of honour, and even by the most fastidious of the guests, was always forthcoming, and handed forth from among the

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS—MONDAY.

THE CORN BILL.

The House having gone into Committee on the Corn Bill,

On the 1st clause.

The Duke of BUCKINGHAM moved the omission of the words providing for the cessation of all duties except a nominal one of 1s. after the 1st of February, 1849. His Grace desired it to be distinctly understood that he was no party whatever to the bill; that he opposed it altogether; but that he moved his amendment with the hope of reserving a small portion of Protection, and of rendering the measure less injurious to agriculturists than it would be if passed as it then stood. The noble Duke called on their Lordships not to think about backing up the administration, but to regard the interests of the country, and to do as he did, and throw aside all personal feelings and friendships when they came to give their votes.

The Earl of RIPON shortly opposed the amendment, as involving an entire alteration of the principle of the bill.

The Earl of CLANCARTY supported the amendment.

The Earl STANHOPE also warmly supported the amendment. His Lordship said that no man could predict the position in which the commercial and financial interests of the country would be placed by this measure. The country should have justice judged of the proposed alternative. The Ministry should have made an appeal to the country; though this appeal they had not dared to make, because well aware of what that appeal would produce upon an oppressed, an outraged, and an indignant people. Under such an appeal, no base sycophants would probably have been found—sycophants who had crept like filthy reptiles towards their own purposes. Under such an appeal no such creatures as these would have been found, for they would have retired to their native obscurity.

Lord BEAUMONT supported the amendment, because he thought it would be dangerous to abandon, after three years, a maintenance of revenue because a three years' course of experiment, instead of being an advantage to the farmer, would be an injury—and because Parliament had no right to legislate this year for another Parliament, which must necessarily sit before this measure could come into full operation.

The Marquis of BUTE said he had been in early life in favor of Protection, but practical experience had satisfied him that its maintenance was injurious to trade and commerce, while in removal could not affect the interests of agriculture.

The Earl of HARDWICKE wished to retain a fragment of Protection until the country should decide on the maintenance of Protection. He was firmly persuaded that with Free-Trade the power and wealth of the nation must go out of cultivation.

Lord KINNAIRD admitted that there was some danger of an influx of foreign grain, though the apprehension must be considerably diminished by the fact that much of the wheat now in bond could not pay at 60s., while that very day prices at Mark-lane had gone up 4s., which he attributed to foreign demand. Better farming would cause a vast improvement both in the quantity and quality of the produce, enabling us effectually to compete with the interior produce of other countries. As a member of the Anti-Corn-law League, he assured their Lordships that the quiescence of that body, and of the country, was no sign of the submission of interest or anxiety, but from a wish not to have the appearance of influencing or acting on their Lordships' deliberations.

A division was then called for, when there appeared—

For the Duke of Buckingham's amendment	.. ..	107
Against it	.. ..	130
Majority against the amendment ..	..	23

The further proceedings on the bill were adjourned till Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEW WRIT.—On the motion of Colonel CONOLLY, a new writ was ordered for Carlow, in the room of Thomas Bunbury, Esq., deceased.

THE PROTECTION OF LIFE (IRELAND) BILL.

The adjourned debate on the Protection to Life (Ireland) Bill was resumed by Lord WORSLEY, who argued at considerable length against the measure, as being the continuance of a system which had been for centuries adopted towards Ireland, and which had uniformly failed in producing the effects expected to result from it.

Sir R. INGLIS and Colonel VERNER severally condemned the delays which had taken place in passing this bill; but, at the same time, would support it, having heard, since they had voted for the first reading, no reason which should induce them to take a different course on this stage of the bill.

Mr. HORSMAN strenuously opposed the bill.

Mr. COLQUHOUN said he would support it, if the Government would pledge themselves that the clauses called "the curfew clauses" should be retained in the bill.

Colonel SIBTHORP opposed the bill.

Lord J. RUSSELL maintained that this bill was not necessary; for, if he referred to the increase of crime in Ireland, he found there was nothing which ought not to be made by increasing the military forces in a disturbed districts, as had been done when the peace of the country was threatened to be interfered with in the manufacturing districts of the north of England. He (Lord J. Russell) contended that having adopted all the measures of the Whig Administration without having the candour to admit they were doing so.

Mr. DISRAELI said that the whole nation at once admitted that the noble Lord (Lord J. Russell) had been harshly and unjustly treated. He then argued at great length against the course pursued by the Government in respect to the Catholic Relief Bill; and, finally, referred to the reign of Sir R. Peel in the country as having effected insurgents is now at Villa Franca (only 20 miles from this city), and is headed by the famous Manton, one of the chiefs of the arsenal revolt in 1838."

RUA DAS PORTAS DE STA. CATHARINA, LISBON.

In Lisbon all is now perfectly quiet. The theatres are open again, and everything (saving the marching out of troops) wears as peaceable an appearance as if there never had been any commotion. Commercial transactions, however, continue to be much cramped by the suspension of Bank payments. Bank of Lisbon notes fell to a discount of 6¼ per cent., but have since risen again about two per cent.

The Diario of the 10th contains declarations of submission received from the Juntas of Vizen, Guarda, and Guimarsea, all of which, however, are anterior in date to the renewal of the rupture between the Government and the Santarem Junta."

The Cabrals have published an absurd manifesto at Cadiz, accusing the Duke of Palmella of an intention to have them assassinated.

We have taken this opportunity of engraving a specimen of the street architecture of the Portuguese capital—the "Rua das Portas de Sta. Catharina." Like most of the streets, this is steep and inconvenient: the houses, however, are very lofty; and to the right of the view is a boldly sculptured fountain. In the distance are seen a portion of the fortifications, and one of the conventual buildings, which are the most striking and imposing edifices of Lisbon.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRIZES OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF ARTS, MANUFACTURES, AND COMMERCE.

YESTERDAY week, the Annual Meeting of this Society was held at their House in the Adelphi, for the Distribution of Prizes; this being the ninety-second Session of the existence of the Institution. The President of the Society, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, had been announced to take the chair; but, shortly before the appointed hour, a communication was received from Buckingham Palace, to the effect that an accident which the Prince had met with during the morning, would prevent his Royal Highness from being present.

Soon after twelve o'clock, his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, accompanied by his interpreter, and attended by Major Dickson, arrived at the Society's House, and on alighting, were received by the Vice-Presidents, headed by Admiral Sir Edward Codrington. His Highness was then conducted to the Great Room, and was most courteously received by the meeting; and Sir Edward Codrington, the hero of Navarino, was duly installed in the chair. The rencontre was a somewhat strange one; but the gallant Admiral having recovered from the effect of an unlucky allusion, commenced the business of the day.

Ibrahim Pacha soon began to consult his interpreter, Nubar Effendi, for an explanation of what was going on. His Highness was much interested with the distribution of the prizes, and the nature as well as merits of the inventions for which these were awarded. Several of the persons who gained medals were mechanics: Ibrahim was, at first, puzzled to ascertain to what class they belonged; but observing their horny hands in receiving the medals, exclaimed in an under tone to Nubar Effendi, "These are working people, after all." A pretty and ingenious young lady was called up to receive a medal for a drawing of flowers, and she had the presence of mind to offer his Highness a very graceful courtesy as she retired; Ibrahim returned the compliment by a marked and extremely courteous bow. On another occasion, the Prince joined in a general round of applause offered to one of the boy artists, by clapping his hands very heartily—laughing loudly all the time.

MESSRS. MINTON'S PRIZE JUGS.

FELIX SUMMERLY'S PRIZE TEA-SERVICE.

Sir Edward Codrington informed the Prince of the manner in which the Society had endeavoured to show their sense of his personal merits, and of the high honour he had done them by being present, which was interpreted to him by Nubar. Ibrahim then rose, and, addressing himself (in Turkish) to the meeting, uttered in a rapid and energetic manner a few highly impressive sentences, his auditors, including his suite, standing all the while. The interpreter, when the Pacha had concluded, stated the sentiments of his Highness in French.

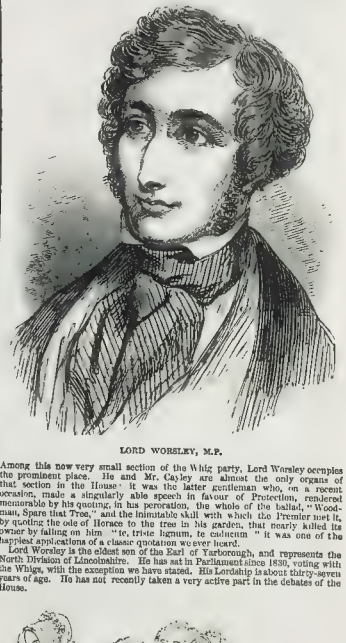
When the Pacha had concluded, Sir Edward Codrington alluded before the assembly to the fact of the Pacha who now honoured them with his presence having once been his enemy; but he was certain that no sentiment of enmity remained in the mind of their illustrious visitor, who doubtless recollected that each did his best for the service of his country on the occasion to which he referred. Nubar Effendi rendered the exact purport of these "untoward" observations to Ibrahim, who very coolly replied that the memory of the past did not remain with him, but that it was better to bury all such recollections, and not to dig them up again, for, said the Prince, "There is a proverb in my country, which says, it is not fair to remind any one of his misfortunes." Having said this in a dignified, and, at the same time, a very significant manner, the Prince rose, and being conducted to the carriage by Mr. John Scott Russell, the Secretary, and the Vice-Presidents, his Highness quitted the Adelphi amidst a general cheer.

The Prizes distributed were for inventions or improvements in agriculture, chemistry, the mechanical and fine arts, and manufactures, of the useful and domestic class. The large gold medal was awarded to Mr. T. O'Brien, of Dublin, for his improved method of making bread from Indian corn. To Mr. M. Ricardo, of Brighton, for a machine for registering the speed of railway trains, the gold fals medal; and the same to Dr. Ritterbandt, for the prevention of incrustation in steam-boilers; and like rewards were given to Mr. Albano, C.E., for his patent cannabic composition; and to Mr. Warriner, for essence of beef, from Australia. We have engraved a few of the Prizes in Design: three are two model jugs, for which Messrs. Minton and Co., of Stoke-upon-Trent, received the Silver Medal and ten guineas: the raised devices upon these jugs, as well as their outline, are very beautiful. The other specimens are from a model earthenware tea-service, in one colour, with much of the beauty of the antique form; for these, the Silver Medal and ten guineas were awarded to "Felix Summerly," whose clever guide-books and admirably-illustrated works for children have so frequently received commendation at our hands. Indeed, there are few popular teachers who so well understand the adaptation or the common-sense of art.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

LORD WORSLEY, M.P.

THOUGH a great political party generally agrees on all great questions, and though its leading opinions are mostly "in a man expressed," yet there is often a section that dissents on one or more subjects, and acts for itself on those occasions on which those specific questions are involved. Thus the Whigs as a body have accepted the principles of Free-Trade, and have aided in carrying the abolition of the Corn-Laws; but the time is not very distant when they might have been described as advocates of a fixed duty, and some of them have never conceded even that, but remain stanch to the principle of Protection in its fullest extent.



LORD WORSLEY, M.P.

Among this now very small section of the Whig party, Lord Worsley occupies the prominent place. He and Mr. Cayley are almost the only organs of that section in the House: it was the latter gentleman who, on a recent occasion, made a singularly able speech in favour of Protection, rendered memorable by his quoting, in his peroration, the whole of the ballad, "Woodman, Spare that Tree," and the inimitable skill with which the Premier met it, by quoting the ode of Horace to the tree in his garden, that nearly killed its owner by falling on him—"Ir, triste lignum, te cadentem" it was one of the happiest applications of a classic quotation we ever heard.

Lord Worsley is the eldest son of the Earl of Yarborough, and represents the North Division of Lincolnshire. He has sat in Parliament since 1830, voting with the Whigs, with the exception we have stated. His Lordship is about thirty-seven years of age. He has not recently taken a very active part in the debates of the House.

IBRAHIM PACHA AT THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRIZES OF THE SOCIETY OF ARTS, ADELPHI.

LAUNCH OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA'S NEW SCHOONER YACHT, AND VISIT OF HIS SON, THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE, AT COWES.

Although so many beautiful models of naval architecture have been launched on the waters of the Medina during the present season, the sight-seeing taste of the public does not appear to have in the least diminished; for never did this fashionable rendezvous appear more brilliantly gay than on the morning of the 10th instant—the day appointed for the launch of this splendid model of "a floating palace." Probably, greater excitement was manifested by the expected visit of the Grand Duke Constantine at East Cowes, who had intimated his intention of being present to witness the launch of his father's yacht.

The Royal Yacht Squadron House Battery was in readiness to blaze forth a Royal salute, as well as from the several gates on the inside walls of the inhabitants along both shores of the harbour. Yachts of every denomination, as well as the numerous foreign shipping then at anchor in Cowes Roads, were decorated with a profusion of bunting "low and aloft;" and the coup d'œil was truly magnificent. In the immediate vicinity of the launch, flags and evergreens were suspended from house to house across the street. The flag-poles fronting the Foreign Consulates displayed their national ensigns, and were otherwise dressed with signal flags. Countless boats studded the harbour with fashionables, whilst the more humble class of her Majesty's subjects the artisans of the building yards, crowded the very ships in frame.

Towards noon all was anxiety, every eye was turned to the eastward in the expectation of witnessing the approach of her Majesty's steamer, with the Grand Duke. At a quarter-past twelve, there being no prospect of his arrival, and the tide having turned, preparation was made for the launch; and, in the absence of the Grand Duke, the lady of the Russian Vice-Consul, at the port, J. H. M. Strauben, Esq., of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, named the yacht by gracefully casting a bottle of Iacrymæ Christi "broad on the bow," giving to those in the immediate vicinity a taste of its contents. The Queen Victoria, for such the vessel has been named (by our gracious Queen at the special request of the Emperor), then glided along the ways until she was released from her marine cradle, and floated on the Medina.

A prettier or more graceful model of naval architecture, we will venture to say, was never launched.

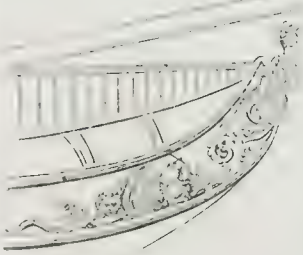


FIGURE-HEAD OF THE EMPEROR'S YACHT.

LAUNCH OF THE EMPEROR'S YACHT AT EAST COWES, ISLE OF WIGHT.

The dimensions are as follows:

	New Measurement. Feet.	Tenths.			Old Measurement. Feet.	Inches.
Length aloft	95	5	.. .. ..	..	78	7
Keel for tonnage ..			.. .. ..	..	63	1
Breadth .. .	22	6	.. .. ..	..	21	11
Depth	12	0	.. .. ..	..	12	3
	yrs.					7
Tonnage N. M.	150	Tons	.. ..	..	O. M. 258	74

Shortly after the launch, the yatch was conveyed to the sheers, where she received her lower masts, and was afterwards moored in the stream, and visited by a number of persons the same afternoon.

The internal decorations of the yacht will be of the most recherché description; the state cabins fitted with rosewood and bird's-eye maple. The yacht is to be furnished with a carved bust of "Queen Victoria," for her figure-head, with the sceptre in the right hand and the orb in the left, the mantle in graceful folds. On either side of the iront boards will be the Royal arms and supporters.

She is to be manned by a crew of thirty hands, all Welchmen; twenty-one of whom, with the Master, have already arrived, and have taken charge of her—every man being five feet nine inches in height; and a finer and steadier set of men were never seen together, on board a yacht, most of them being the Gaisten's men, and who sailed in that yacht, in her match with the Water Witch.

It must certainly be gratifying to the feelings of Mr. White, to find that his scientific acquirements have reached the notice of his Imperial Majesty; for, we believe, when that gentlemen was commissioned to build this yacht by Lord Mount Edgecumbe, the Commodore of the Royal Western Yacht Club, he was not aware that the yacht was to be ultimately destined for so august a personage as the Emperor himself. The celebrity of the Water Witch and the Ivanag, in the late experimental cruises having led his Imperial Majesty to select their builder as the designer and architect of a yacht for his Majesty's own private use.

There are many rumours afloat as to the command of this fine vessel; but we believe that none more likely to credence than that she is to be sent to Russia, with the present crew, under the command of Mr. Powell, and will there be taken charge of by the Grand Duke himself.

On Saturday, the town of Cowes was honoured by a visit from the Grand Duke Constantine and suite, for the purpose of inspecting the schooner yacht. On the approach of the Lightning steamer, with the Russian flag at the fore, a Royal salute was fired from the Royal Yacht Squadron House Battery, as also from several yachts which were moored off the harbour. Shortly after, the yacht took up her moorings in the Roads: the Grand Duke and suite, accompanied by his Excellency Baron Brunow, the Russian Ambassador; Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, and several other officers, embarked in the Admiralty barge, and proceeded to the Royal Yacht Squadron House, where they disembarked; and, after a brief stay Royal Yacht Squadron House, where they disembarked; and, after a brief stay there, returned in the barge, and proceeded towards East Cowes, accompanied by the Russian Vice-Consul, in his boat. In this order, at half-past two o'clock, the distinguished party disembarked on Mr. Joseph White's premises. The Duke, on landing, was received by the clever builder, and conducted along a temporary platform erected for the occasion, to the yacht, which he minutely inspected, as, also, the gentlemen of his suite; and, after remaining on board about th ee quarter, returned to the barge, and was conducted to the Fountain Pier. ters of an hour, returned to the barge, and was conducted to the Fountain Pier. The distinguished party then landed, and proceeded in two carriages on a tour through the Island, visiting, in his sojourn, Carisbrooke Castle and the Undercliff; returning the following day, by the way of Ryde, to Spithead.

CHEPSTOW HORTICULTURAL AND FLORICULTURAL SHOW.

On Thursday, the 11th inst., the romantic ruins of Chepstow Castle were the scene of the Third Show of the Chepstow Horticultural Society. "The effect," says the Beacon report, "was enchanting and magical. Indeed, the forgone associations connected with the spot chosen by the Committee, viz., 'the Castle,' for the Exhibition; the contrast of its modern uses to its primitive intentions, when each massy tower bid defiance to the hostile intruder—when 'the eastern portal was defended by two massive latticed gates, iron bolted and bound, and by two ponderous portcullises;' as a whole, it could not be contrasted with the past, but call for reflections of the most pleasureable nature.

"Chepstow presented an unusually gay appearance;—the Castle towers were decorated with flags, as also was the shipping in the river. The beautiful vessel lately launched (the Rapid), was gaily decorated in honour of the occasion; its rigging entirely new, and, with its numerous flags flying in the breeze, formed a conspicuous point of attraction. Some delay was occasioned in the arrangements at the Castle, by the non-arrival of the Wye steamer from Bristol at its expected time, but it did eventually come, and was crammed to excess with a joyous and goodly company from Bristol and its neighbourhood.

HORTICULTURAL GRAND FETE IN CHEPSTOW CASTLE

"Upon landing, each party was welcomed with the hospitality of Colonel Cl—stow is proverbial; and, to while away time till the opening of the doors at 1, Castle cars, pinnetons, and carriages of all kinds, were in requisition for Tintern and Wyndcliff.

"Upon entering the first Court, he visitors were agreeably pleased with the cool and picturesque appearance that was presented. A large quantity of handsome and ornamental flower-pots were on the greensward, exposed for sale. Proceeding onwards, the beautiful band of the 37th Foot was heard pouring forth the most popular melodies; and, upon entering the second Court, a brilliant spectacle presented itself. A splendid marquee or tent was erected at the immediate entrance, on the left hand. The band of the 37th Foot was stationed at the upper end of the Court. The tent was decorated without, in the most tasteful manner. On either side of the front entrance was a banner, with inscriptions—on the one, "United we stand, divided we fall"—on the other, "Chepstow Horticultural Society." Proceeding onwards, the Chapel was entered, where refreshments of a superior description were to be procured; and we would here state that the supplies reflected great and deserved credit to the caterer, Mr. Howell, confectioner. The upper Court was next attached, wherein was erected another large tent, containing specimens for exhibition, and a show table for the visitors.

"The interior of the Grand Tent was most imposing, the entrance presented a beautiful display of fruit, more especially strawberries and grapes; those of the latter, sent by Sir J. Smith, Bart., and F. Bailey, Esq., were remarkably fine. The Cape Brieas were splendid specimens, as were also the Pinckians. One particular point of attraction was the specimens of parasitical plants exhibited by Messrs Mantle and Sons, of Bristol. In the Grand, a splendid specimen of the Clethora Arborea, exhibited by James Jenkins, Esq., particularly attracted notice, as did the Cannanula of Captain Story. The Upper Tent was deservedly attractive from the display of cut flowers and vegetables; where all were good, it would be invidious to mention any parties; suffice it to say, that the Exhibition was of a character and on an equality with the highest Horticultural Show in the kingdom."

We must not, however, omit to notice the courtesy of the indefatigable Honorary Secretary and Committee of the Society, who so satisfactorily superintended the business of the Exhibition.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 21.—Second Sunday after Trinity Longest Day
MONDAY, 22.—Battle of Vittoria, 18.3
TUESDAY, 23. Akenside died, 1770.
WEDNESDAY, 24.—St. John Baptist.—Midsummer Day.
THURSDAY, 25. No real night till the middle of July.
FRIDAY, 26. George IV. died, 1830.
SATURDAY, 27.—Saturn rises at 10h. 54m. p.m. in S.E.

HIGH WATER at London Bridge for the Week ending June 27.

Sunday	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.
1 48	2 13	2 38	3 2	3 27	3 52	4 17

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Julia" will find the Portrait, &c., in No. 138 of our Journal.

"Newtown." We do not believe that any such act was ever passed.

"Ολωι μέτρι ὄθωστεις."—The daughters of an heiress quarter their mother's arms. When an heiress dies, her arms are marshalled on her hatchment on an escutcheon of pretence in the centre of her husband's shield.

"J. M. H." We believe that there exists at the Horse Guards no regulation against the granting of commissions to persons of the stature mentioned by our Correspondent.

"E. S. W." St. Ives, will obtain all the information he requires at Messrs. Grindlay and Co's, 8, Martin's-place, Charing-cross, or Cornhill.

"L. E. G." Government declined pay to a county magistrate.

"Ludanagister." The tenth year of her Majesty's reign will commence on the 21st of June.

"W. C. C." and "A Subscriber." We must "Precis for the Trains"

"A Constant Reader" Morgenbote. "Taylor's Short-Hand, improved by Harding." It is possible, but vastly public, to report an ordinary speaker verbatim.

"J. F.," co. Langford.—Sheridan has pronounced vase to rhyme with base and case; Walker goes it with the Horse; Elphinston sounds it as it written vawse. which Nares considers an affected pronunciation Who shall decide when doctors disagree?

"M. B." The deprecatory comparison of "a brass farthing" may, possibly, have arisen in patterns for coins being of brass, and of less value than the current coin.

"Dunnow." We cannot decide the fate of the four readers (a to have the Supplement), but, to prevent the recurrence of the difficulty, we recommend each reader to subscribe himself

"G. T. S." had better consult a solicitor.

"J. L. E." is thanked, but we have not room for the illustration.

"A Subscriber's Servant." Pass present.

"A Reader and Subscriber." Wansford Smith's Car is on the parish of Lambourn. White Horse Hill, in Uffington: both in Berkshire.

"A Student, R. C.," is thanked for the "great facts" we will not lose sight of the matter.

"Lodeman on Lambeth." Declined.

"Jeremy Twitch" Certainly.

"J. G." The lighting of Rouen with gas has only just been decided on and we are not in possession of the contractor's name—i. e. of he he chosen.

"Childe Harold." In the event of the resignation of the present Ministry, the Duke of Wellington would not necessarily resign his office as Commander-in-Chief.

"Brevity" should be the soul of the letter in question. Your "cart-rope" letters in comparative strangers have little chance of being read.

"G. B."—The final is pronounced in Chester.

"Newbam."—A Duke is styled "His Grace," and "The Most Noble;" a Marquis, "Most Honourable;" and an Earl, a Viscount, and a Baron, "The Right Honourable."

"W. J. P." No one who has not attained the age of twenty-one can exercise the elective franchise

"Jawena Nauticus." The Naval Cadets, after a certain period of service, become Midshipmen. Their pay is £1 2s. per month; that of a Midshipman, £2 8s.

"Alpha" Edinburgh is thanked: our large View will be from a Drawing made expressly for the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

"Grammatus" have quoted the passage incorrectly: it is—

"—and then, the restless,
In fair round belly, with good capon lined," not " and good capon." This correction, we presume, will settle our Correspondents' dispute.

"L. L." may purchase the Opera of the "Sonnambula" at any Theatrical bookseller's

"J. N." Liverpool.—A Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Harding." A knowledge of the art of printing is requisite for short-hand writers and reporting.

"W. P.," Runcorn.—The widow of the testator will not be entitled to the property unless she has complied with the conditions of the bequest.

"M. A. B." Newport.—The name is Napoleon Louis, as we have given it: not Louis Napoleon.

"A. B. C."—The question as to a Gallery for Ladies in the New House of Commons is not, we believe, definitively settled.

"Daphne" is thanked for the intelligence.

"N. T." Bristol.—The marriage can only be dissolved by Act of Parliament.

"A. P." cannot, in law, be a party to any agreement, during his minority.

"D. D." we think, correct.

"F. C. S." Received.

"J. J. E.," South Moms. See the Launch Illustration in our present No.

"C. P." Congleton Our present Volume will be completed next week.

"An Old Subscriber and Admirer." The Railway Illustration is in the Engraver's hands

"R. T." should look out: there are many minor changes consequent upon a change of Ministry; but, if matters turn out as he anticipates, his chance of success will be but small

"A. Z."—"Flaxman's Lectures on Sculpture."

"An Inmate Subscriber." See the Memoir and Portrait of Mr. Walter, M.P. for Nottingham, in No 16 of our Journal.

"Artium Mag ster" is thanked for his letter as to the placing of the Wellington Statue: it is, we believe, decided that it shall occupy the Green Park Arch.

"Thorneb" Lines are received.

"Pisciator."—We cannot settle the dispute whether the Otter destroys eels, which, in their turn, destroy the spawn of trout and salmon. The Otter is, certainly, a good fish hunter and fish catcher.

"Joo. W. B."—The popular translation of "Agenda" is "Things to be done" Among duties, sometimes Agenda signifies things which a man is bound to perform, in opposition to Credenda, which he is bound to believe. It also denotes the service or offices of the church.

"S. C. T."—"Taylor's Short-Hand improved by Harding."

"Samrod" is thanked for the Sketch, which is, however, too slight for engraving.

"P. G.," Wrexham.—We have not a History of the Augsburg Confession at hand, and, without it, we cannot satisfactorily reply to our Correspondent's question.

"Parvenu"—Thanks.

"J. W.' Islington.—Thanks

"Sturdy" had better consult one of the works on the Jesuits lately published.

"J. C." We have not room for the long article on the Agricultural Labourers of South Hand

"M. as Wardle."—Newspapers for Bohemia are charged 1d. each, if posted in England; they must be prepaid.

"M. S. J."—The least troublesome route to Ostend is direct by steamer from London. A Belgian passport alone is necessary, countersigned by the Prussian Consul, which will be valid at the different frontiers. The Paris and Strasburg Railroad is not opened, but dangerous run constantly. English is spoken at all the chief hotels, and English notes and gold are taken with the greatest alacrity, but a letter of credit from a good London Bank will be found most convenient INELIGIBLE.—"The Dream, by W. L.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1846.

THE debates have lately partaken of the prevailing heat of the atmosphere: political acrimony has run almost as high as the degrees on the thermometer. In the Lords, the temperature has been pretty equable, considering the importance of the measure under discussion, and how closely it is presumed the passing of it will affect the personal interests of many members of that august Assembly. The Ministerial majority stands at 33—two divisions on amendments to the Corn Bill having given that number. It may, therefore, be considered as settled.

But, in the Commons, the debates have been far fiercer. The Coercion Bill, as it deals with force, seems, by a kind of sympathetic action, to awaken violent feelings in those who discuss it; or, rather, it is made the object on which the anger and ill-will engendered by other matters, are expended. The Protectionists, headed by Lord George Bentinck, refuse to assist the Ministry in passing a measure giving extraordinary powers, on the ground that they have no confidence in it: we do not wonder at this withdrawal of support—it is, in itself, consistent enough, and nearly inevitable. But, as exhibited upon this particular measure, it is attended with a contradiction: the same party has sanctioned the same measure, and agreed to its principle, by supporting the first reading. If inconsistency is only to be met by inconsistency and change, politics and parties will be thrown into inextricable confusion, and present a complete Parliamentary puzzle—they are, indeed, not very far from that consummation at present.

The opposition to the bill would have been better placed on the delay of the measure, so protracted as to be wholly irreconcilable to the plea that it was imperatively necessary for the protection of life; but those who have once supported it, are hardly absolved by any change in the Minister on other subjects, from continuing their allegiance on this. Nature, however, is frail, the nature of politicians forming no exception to the rule. The embers of old differences burst into flame whenever they are stirred, and there is a kind of vengeance that suffereth not Prime Ministers to rest. It is keen and vigilant, availing itself of all occasions and many weapons, striking in the present with a blade sharpened upon the enmities of the past, that often lie far closer to the surface than many who gaze on the generally calm waters would imagine. Thus, Mr. Disraeli has invoked the "political Nemesis" to revenge upon the Sir Robert Peel of 1846, the alleged conduct of the Sir Robert Peel of 1827 to Mr. Canning. This long-deferred infliction of a penalty resembles that historic justice so well described by Mr. Canning himself as a power that

> Visits ancient ills on modern times,
> . . . . . esol Pope for Cæsar's crimes

The details of the political quarrels and intrigues of twenty years ago can be but imperfectly known to any but the immediate parties to them. We know that the conduct of Sir Robert Peel to his illustrious colleague has been often impugned; he joined the section of the Tory party (for there no longer existed a party) that resisted to the utmost the concession to the Catholics of the rights of freemen; and we know that, in a very short time afterwards, Sir Robert Peel was the Minister by whom those claims were conceded. The secession of Peel from Mr. Canning must have embarrassed that Minister; and the language, the bitter, foul-mouthed abuse, that we must imagine that violence of speech first came in with the Reformed Parliament, which Mr. Canning was assailed by by some members of that party, gives some colour to the charge that he was, by that section, "hunted to death," we have heard the details of gross personal insults that were offered to Mr. Canning through the professional press, but, as we have never seen any evidence to connect Sir Robert Peel with that conduct. Granting that there is little chivalric generosity in his disposition, he never narrowed and intensified his animosities to persons; he was always too keen a watcher of the signs of the times to commit himself to deadly enmities with men to whose opinions he was, perhaps, coming round. It was only the underlings of party, the Knatchbulls and Dawsons, whose zeal got the better both of forbearance and discretion. It is the retribution for having acted with such a party, without sharing its feelings, that Peel now suffers under. And whether he is guilty or not of the double dealing Lord George Bentinck imputes to him, it has very little to do with the Irish Coercion Act of 1846; yet such is the tendency to the discussion of what is personal rather than public, that it has been the prominent point in two nights' debate!

COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Instructions were received at Frogmore House this morning, from Clarence House, St. James's, for the mansion to be got ready for the reception of the Duchess of Kent, who will arrive from London to morrow afternoon. Her Royal Highness will remain at Frogmore during the visit of the Court to the Isle of Wight. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by some of the Royal family, will leave town to-morrow, by the South Western Railway, en route to Osborne House. The Court is expected to remain at her Majesty's Marine Residence, in the Isle of Wight, for about ten days or a fortnight. The Queen and the Prince Consort are fully expected to arrive at Windsor for a short period about the second week in July.

DEPARTURE OF HER MAJESTY FOR THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Her Majesty left Buckingham Palace for Gosport this morning, by the South Western Railway, for a sojourn of about three weeks, according to present arrangements.

CHURCHING THE QUEEN.—On Wednesday morning, at half-past nine o'clock, the ceremony of churching the Queen was performed in the Private Chapel, in Buckingham Palace, by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury. There was present only his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, and the Master of the Household.

THE INFANT PRINCESS.—The christening of the infant Princess is fully expected to take place at Windsor Castle, early in the ensuing month; upon which occasion, it is stated, their Majesties the King and Queen of the French, accompanied by the Duchess of Orleans, who will be one of the godmothers, will pay a visit to this country. The names fixed upon by her Majesty, for the youthful Princess, are "Helena Augusta Victoria," the sponsors being her Royal Highness the Duchess of Orleans, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, and his Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz. The Duchess of Orleans is near relative of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and, as a Protestant, is the only member of the French Royal Family who could perform the duties of sponsor to an offspring of our Royal house.

DEPARTURE OF THE QUEEN DOWAGER FOR THE CONTINENT.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar and her suite, left Marlborough-house at half-past nine o'clock on Tuesday morning, to proceed, viâ South Eastern Railway, to Ramsgate, en route for Ostend. The train with her Majesty arrived at the Ramsgate Terminus, after an agreeable journey, at four minutes after one o'clock. In passing from the platform to the steamboat, a little girl, daughter of Mr. Coxhead, the stationmaster, presented her Majesty with a beautiful bouquet of flowers. The Royal party immediately proceeded from the station direct to the place of embarkation. A German band struck up the National Anthem when the Queen and suite appeared. The whole line of route was crowded with spectators. After a short delay, the commander of the steamer, Master Samuel B Cook, gave orders to prepare for putting the vessel under weigh. Earl Howe and the Earl of Denbigh, then took leave of her Majesty, and came ashore. The steamer was discharged from the ordnance on the Cross Wharf, and the coast-guard on the Fort Pier fired a feu de joie in honour to her Majesty. Her Majesty arrived at Ostend on Tuesday evening, a few minutes before eight o'clock. She was received on landing by Sir Hamilton Seymour, G.C.H., by Gen. Crockenberg, A.D.C. to the King of the Belgians, and the authorities of the town. A guard of honour was in attendance, and on her arrival salutes were fired by the packets belonging to the South Eastern and Continental Steam Company, General Steam Navigation, &c. Her Majesty appeared in excellent spirits.

APPROACHING MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE. It is said that an alliance is definitively settled between Viscount Maidstone, only son of the Earl of Winchilsea, and Lady Constance Fagot, second daughter of the Earl of Uxbridge.

FETE AT STOW HOUSE.—The Duchess of Northumberland gave a magnificent fête champetre, on Tuesday, at Stow House, Isleworth. About four hundred of the leading aristocracy assembled. The band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) were in attendance, to enliven the scene by their performances. The conservatories and pleasure-grounds were thrown open, and in the corridors tables were laid out with the choicest delicacies of the season. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, attended by Baron Knesebeck and Lady Augusta Cadogan, arrived at a quarter to five o'clock. The Royal Duchess was welcomed by the Duchess of Northumberland, a Royal salute being fired, and the military band striking up the National Anthem. The Duke of Cambridge was absent from the gout.

DANGEROUS ILLNESS OF LORD WILLIAM RUSSELL.—We learn that the Duke of Bedford and Lord John Russell have received accounts from Genoa, announcing the serious illness of General Lord William Russell. But faint hopes are entertained of his recovery; the letters from his lordship's medical attendants have prepared the members of his family for the worst.

DEATH OF MISS ELLIS, AT DOVER'S LODGINGS.—We regret to learn that the Honourable Miss Ellis, daughter of Lady Dover, and sister of Viscount Cullen, expired on Sunday morning, after an illness of only two days. It is a severe shock for the family, for not the least apprehension was entertained of her eventual recovery.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES

SUDDEN DEATH OF MR. PETER GRILLION.—On Monday, Mr. Peter Grillion, the well-known proprietor of Grillion's Hotel, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, died under the following awfully sudden circumstances:—Between nine and ten o'clock the unfortunate gentleman was standing in the rick-yard on his farm at East Acton, superintending the erection of a rick of hay, when he was suddenly observed to stagger and fall to the ground. He was immediately picked up and conveyed into his residence, and Mr. Clabbe, surgeon, of Acton, sent for, but Mr. Grillion never rallied, and expired just after the arrival of the surgeon. The melancholy event has occasioned much regret in the neighbourhood, where Mr. Grillion was highly respected.

SUICIDE OF THE LATE COLONEL PIERCE BUTLER, M.P.—Mr. Carter held an inquest on Tuesday, at the Commune Arms, York-road, Lambeth, on the body of the Hon. Colonel Pierce Butler, aged 72, M.P. for Kilkenny, whose death occurred under circumstances detailed in the following evidence: Richard Green, a police constable of the L division, said that on Saturday night last, whilst on duty at Astley's Theatre, he was requested to accompany a gentleman, named Clark, to the house where the deceased resided, in York-street. He did as requested, and found the door of the house open on the first floor locked from the inside. Having forced the door, he discovered the deceased sitting in a chair, and quite dead. Witness noticed a bottle of medicine standing on the mantelpiece, but nothing indicated that he had taken any deleterious mixture.—Mrs Eliza Fernandez said that the deceased had regularly resided in her house for several years, during the parliamentary season. Deceased was the son of Viscount Mountgarret. Saw him last alive on Saturday. He was seized with a shivering resembling the ague. Witness proposed to send for medical assistance, which he at first, refused, but afterwards he sent her to Mr. Farmer, a chemist, of the Commercial-road, who gave him a mixture, of which he took one dose. At five o'clock she heard deceased cough, and at seven o'clock, on her husband returning home, he went to inquire whether he could be of any service to the deceased, and found the door of the deceased's room on the first floor locked from the inside. Having forced the door, he discovered the deceased sitting in a chair, and quite dead. Witness noticed a bottle of medicine standing on the mantelpiece, but nothing indicated that he had taken any deleterious mixture.—Mrs Eliza Fernandez said that the deceased had regularly resided in her house for several years, during the parliamentary season. Deceased was the son of Viscount Mountgarret. Saw him last alive on Saturday night

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS FRIDAY.

THE CORN IMPORTATION BILL.

The House having resolved itself into Committee on this bill, the DUKE OF RICHMOND moved the amendment of which he had given notice, granting compensation to tenants for unexhausted leases.

Lord ABINGDON and Lord STANHOPE, and Lord ASHBURTON followed.

The DUKE of Richmond's amendment was negatived without a division, and the House adjourned at nine o'clock.

The third reading to be taken on Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS FRIDAY

The House was very much crowded this evening, and considerable excitement prevailed, Sir R. PEEL having given notice that he should vindicate himself from the charges made against him, on Monday night, by Mr. Disraeli. There were a great many Peers below the Bar.

SIR ROBERT PEEL'S VINDICATION.

About half-past five o'clock, Sir R. PEEL rose, and, in moving the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on the Protection to Life (Ireland) Bill, expressed his regret that it should be necessary for him to avail himself of, perhaps, a doubtful privilege, for the purpose of making a personal explanation "nt he doubted whether there was any member in whose estimation he would not fail, if he did not avail himself of the earliest opportunity of noticing the accusations made against him on Monday. He thanked the House for the general forbearance towards a public man in defending himself against an accusation which might have been brought forward any time during the last twenty years, when the evidence would have been stronger, and he might have had better evidence for his defence. Since 1827 there had been great and effectual conflicts, and he had thought in 1835 that the events of 1828, 1827, and 1829 had ceased to be remembered. When the attack was made on him on Monday, he had to send to his country residence for the whole of the correspondence. He had been collecting papers and newspaper reports to defend himself against these charges which had been made against his veracity and honour. He listened to the charges with the calmness resulting from the consciousness of conviction that they were not founded in truth, but yet with the anxiety naturally resulting from the lapse of time which had taken place, that had deprived him of the evidence of those who had heard what passed. He could now only deal with the evidence at present brought forward and, if there were other evidence, it ought to be [illegible] brought forward before in common [illegible] evidence were brought forward this [illegible] time to time. If, but with regard to evidence now before the House, if he did not show that the charge was utterly without foundation, he should retire from the House that night with great [illegible] confidence. The noble Lord (Lord G. Bentinck), who had been a Member of Parliament in 1826, 1827, and 1828 [illegible] who had been Private Secretary to Mr Canning, thought proper to bring forward, in 1845, the charge that he (Sir R. Peel) had acted to act with Mr. Canning in 1827, on the ground of the opinions of Mr. Canning on the Catholic question, for having, in 1828, told Lord Liverpool that his opinions on the Catholic question were changed. The charge was without foundation. He had never told Lord Liverpool that his opinions were changed, but finding himself in a minority on that question, he asked Lord Liverpool to relieve him from the responsibility of the Government of Ireland. Thus it rested until the Member for Shrewsbury (Mr Disraeli), on Monday, thought proper to insinuate that there was a letter in his (Sir Robert Peel's) in existence to Lord Liverpool, written in 1826, and stating his change of opinion. If that letter were in existence he challenged its production, and he had pled al himself if he had any such letter to produce it. The charge was that he had communicated his change of opinion in 1825 to Lord Liverpool, and that he had, in 1826, distinctly avowed that in 1825 such a change of opinion had taken place, and that charge was grounded upon a report in the "Mirror of Parliament," to the effect that he (Sir R. Peel) had informed Lord Liverpool, in 1825, that the time had arrived when something ought to be done; upon a report of the Times, containing the same words; and upon a reference made by Sir E. Knatchbull to that report. He was also charged with a suppressio veri, and last he had, for unworthy purposes, mutilated a report in "Hansard." With regard to the first question, he would refer to the correspondence which he took in Parliament in 1825. Was it consistent with the idea that he had stated to the head of the Government that his opinions were changed? Is this [illegible] he had opposed the motion of Sir Francis Burdett, in favour of Catholic Emancipation, on the 28th of February, 1825, which motion was carried by a majority of 30. On April 1, he had come on for a second reading, and, in opposing this motion, he said that he gave all credit for conscientious motives to his hon member for Armagh (Mr. Brownlow) in changing his opinions; and that if he (Mr. Peel) had changed his opinions, he should have [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and that in that his opposition to the bill through every one of its subsequent stages; and it was not probable that he would then have gone to the Earl of Liverpool, and stated that his opinions had changed. It was after the 10th of May, when the bill had passed a third reading, and he had been also beaten on other measures connected with emancipation, that he had told Lord Liverpool that his position was untenable; and he requested to resign. It was subsequently agreed that he should remain in office and the Catholic question should be made an open question. That was after the bill had been rejected by the House of Lords, and after Lord Liverpool had made a more decided speech against the Catholic claims than he had ever made previously. On the 26th of May, in allusion to the alteration of opinion avowed by Mr. Canning, he had again stated in the presence of Mr. Canning, that his opinions remained unaltered; could he have done this in the presence of Mr Canning if he had written such a letter to Lord Liverpool as that to which the honourable gentleman had alluded? So much for the charge, and that in a single case made upon him had rallied round him public sympathy—(loud cheering)—and on that, and the justice and generosity of that House, he placed his fullest support. (Cheers.)

Lord G. BENTINCK read extracts from speeches in the "Mirror of Parliament," and insisted that his charges against Sir R. Peel were well founded.

Lord J. RUSSELL considered Sir R. Peel had completely vindicated himself from the charges laid against him.

Mr. DISRAELI defended himself from the observations that had been made on his late speech.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, Mr. BICKHAM ESCOTT, and Lord MANDON, spoke in vindication of Sir R. Peel.

Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD considered the explanation unsatisfactory

Mr. HUME, Lord MORPETH, and Mr. C VILLIERS, spoke in favour of, and Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN against the vindication.

The debate was adjourned.

The House rose at a quarter to twelve o'clock.

ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN DOWAGER AT BRUSSELS.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager arrived in Brussels about half-past one o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, by a special train from Ostend. All ceremony was dispensed with. Her Majesty, who appeared rather fatigued, proceeded immediately on her arrival in a private carriage to the Hotel de Belle-Jardin, her suite following in another one.

ARRIVAL OF THE REIGNING DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG.—The Duke of Saxe Coburg, accompanied by his uncle and suite, arrived at Southampton on Thursday evening at six o'clock, in the Pegasus steam-vessel. Immediately on his arrival, Captain Ellis and S. P. Edwards Esq., waited on his Royal Highness to receive his commands. At a quarter to eight his Royal Highness and suite left for London in a special train.

ELEVATIONS TO THE PEERAGE.—Sir James Graham, it is said, will immediately elevated to the Peerage, by the title of Lord Preston. Lord [illegible] ton is, we understand, to be elevated to the Peerage, by the title of Lord Exmere

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

THE WEST INDIES. The West Indian mail-packet, the Forth, Captain Chapman, has arrived at Southampton, with the usual West India mails. She brings the large number of 238 passengers, amongst whom are Lord Elgin, Lady Elgin (his lordship's daughter), Lady Charlotte Bruce and young Bruce. All the West India accounts were healthy, but the drought still continues in Jamaica.

NEW ZEALAND.—By the arrival of the ship Augustus at Penzance, papers from Launceston, of the 5th of February, have been received at Launceston, from New Zealand, the latest by the medium of Hobart Town, accounts have been received at Launceston, from New Zealand, announcing the capture of the pah occupied by the Chiefs Kawiti and Heki, on the 11th of January, after a protracted and severe engagement, which appears to have been accepted by all but Heki, who had burned another pah, and had retreated into the bush with his tribe. There are no letters from New Zealand by the Augustus, so that no further particulars have come to hand.

EXPRESS RIDING IN AMERICA. The account of the battles of the 8th and 9th, between the Americans and Mexicans, was brought by a boy only thirteen years of age, from Montgomery to Mobile, a distance of two hundred and twenty miles, in thirteen hours, during the whole he having to catch and saddle the horses on every occasion. He was rewarded with a purse of seventy dollars. The above is from an American paper, and, if true, surpasses every feat of the kind on record.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The summer like the present has not been experienced for several years. We have experienced two or three slight thunder storms, the commencement and extreme heat of the summer weather induced a fear that the crop would suffer from the exhaustion of the moisture of the land, but happily, notwithstanding the excessive heat, the ground has been moist, and [illegible] has caused a slight degree of frost has prevailed. This, although the crops [illegible] forced forward, a check has been given which has served to [illegible] the plant and harrass the [illegible] yield. Wheat was never in a [illegible] condition, and the barley is improving. On dry land the want of rain is beginning to be felt. The hay in this and the adjacent neighbourhood has been [illegible] in excellent order. We have experienced two or three slight thunder [illegible] at the weather generally speaking, continues of the most suf[illegible]

Cambridge Advertiser

THE "BAMBLER" STEAM-BOAT.—This ill-fated vessel, on board of which several persons perished at the time of the collision with the Sea Nymph, resumed her station between Liverpool and Silloo on Saturday last. During her trip she ran upon the Maiden Rock, near Belfast, and sunk. The crew and passengers were saved. The vessel, we believe, is a total wreck.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday afternoon, at the Foreign Office. The Ministers present were Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir James Graham, Mr. Secretary Gladstone, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Ellenborough, the Earl of Ripon, Lord Granville Somerset, the Earl of Lincoln, the Earl of Dalhousie, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, and the Earl of St. Germans. The Council sat an hour.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF WATERLOO.—Thursday being the anniversary of the victory of Waterloo, the Duke of Wellington gave his annual banquet to such of the surviving heroes of the contest as conveniently attend. The above veterans, as usual, laid out in his Grace's large Banqueting Room. The band of his Grace's Regiment, the Grenadier Guards, was in attendance, and played at intervals during the evening.

ARTESIAN WELLS FOR LONDON. The chalk beds of London are considered to be an unfailing source of supply of pure soft water. The metropolis south of the Thames is at present supplied from that river, and it need scarcely be said that the quality of that supply is not so pure as might be desired. Speculators, thwarted in railways, has, it appears, now been directed to sinking artesian wells for the metropolis, and, on Tuesday evening, a meeting of the inhabitants of the borough of Southwark was held at the Bridge-house Tavern, for the purpose of hearing an explanation of the plans of the new company, the nominal capital of which is no less than £3,000,000. The explanations appeared to afford satisfaction to the auditory, but whether the plan will ever be carried into effect or not, time alone can show.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY. The fourteenth annual meeting of this charity was held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, on Tuesday. About 300 persons sat down to dinner. Mr. Baron Platt presided on the occasion. The amount of subscriptions announced was above £300. A number of toasts were given and responded to appropriately. The objects of this institution are to establish a general benefit fund, for rendering liberal pecuniary assistance in the process of sickness, inability through age or other infirmity, to earn the means of subsistance, and on the death of a member or member's wife. Also a casual fund to afford assistance by loans and gifts to law clerks, whether members or not, and their widows in temporary distress.

REMOVAL OF THE WOOD PAVEMENT IN THE CITY. The wooden pavement in the Old Bailey has been removed by order of the City Commissioners, and replaced with granite, except a small portion in front of the Courts.

THE WEATHER. The temperature, though at the early part of the past week somewhat less than at the latter part of the preceding week, having been reduced by the fall of a few refreshing showers, is nevertheless considerably high; and on Monday at noon the thermometer stood at 82 degrees in the shade; at eight o'clock in the evening it was no lower than 76 degrees. On Friday, June 12th, the temperature was 16 degrees 4 minutes higher than the average temperature of the corresponding day for the same period of twenty-six years. The present season is, therefore, at once unusually hot, and, hitherto, unusually healthy. Last Thursday week (June 18th) the temperature in the shade was 83.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS. The number of births registered in the metropolis in the week ending June 13th, was 1331 being 23 more than in the preceding week, 11 more than the week before that, and 54 more than the week ending May 23rd. The number of deaths in the week ending June 13th was 824, being 71 less than the average deaths of five springs, and 146 less than the average of five years. The mean temperature of the same week was 7 deg. 1 min. higher than the average temperature of the corresponding week for 25 years.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Warsaw Gazette announces the arrival of the Emperor and Empress of Russia in that city on the 2nd inst.

The Post Ampt Gazette of Frankfort has a letter of the 31st ult. from Vienna, stating that M. Kyrski had been attacked and robbed on the high road in Galicia, and left with his arms and legs broken with clubs; that near Bochnia three landowners have been murdered by the peasants; and that, near Tarnow, the wife of another landowner was murdered as she was returning from Cracow, where her husband had died in prison.

Letters from Bologna of the 4th inst. state, that the moment the news of the Pope's death reached the city, the authorities had ample proof to adopt military measures of precaution. It was reported that a new conspiracy had been discovered at Ancona, and that numerous arrests had taken place in consequence of the attempt made against the life of M. Antonelli, Commander of the Dragoons, and member of the Military Commission. When that officer was attacked, he was walking with Captain Paull, who vainly attempted to seize his two assassins. M. Allegrini's wounds, although severe, were not mortal. Five officers and non-commissioned officers had been arrested, and a portion of the garrison of Ancona was believed to be implicated in the conspiracy. Rumour stated that an Austrian flotilla had passed the harbour of Ancona.

The Sardinian Government have, it is said, proposed to the Austrian Cabinets to submit to a third Power the differences which have arisen between those two Powers on the subject of salt and wines, and has left the choice of the arbitrator to the Cabinet of Vienna.

A letter from St. Petersburgh of the 1st, contradicts in the most positive manner the statement, in several of the German journals, that the cholera had declared itself on several points of the frontiers of Russia in Europe. It has not, says the letter, approached these frontiers.

A Berlin letter in the Cologne Gazette states, in positive terms, that the independence of Cracow is to be annihilated even in name, and that it will be incorporated with Austria, but the other conditions agreed upon between the three Powers are not yet known.

A letter from Alexandria of the 29th ult., states the Nile steamer was getting ready for a voyage to Marseilles, to receive on board Ibrahim Pacha, on his return to Egypt.

The King and Queen of Naples have returned to their capital from their excursion in Sicily. They stopped for a day at Foggia, and returned to Naples by land. The King has just ordered that Brindisi, the ancient Brundusium, shall be declared a free port. It will, therefore, probably again become the [illegible] emporet for the commerce of the Adriatic and the East.

[illegible] from Rome allude to rumours that two Cardinals had died, and that a third had been murdered in that city. These letters state that Cardinal Micara had the best chance of being elected Pope, if French influence, which was strongly opposed to him, because of the liberal tendency of his political principles, did not prevent it.

A letter from Berlin of the 5th June says—"The celebrated painter Cornelius arrived a few days since at Berlin from Rome, where he had executed the cartoons of the fresco paintings commanded by the King of Prussia for the decorations of the Campo Santo, which is being constructed in the environs of Berlin. A magnificent serenade has been given to Cornelius, at which were present about 10,000 persons."

Letters from Cracow of the 4th instant mention that the Emperor Nicholas awaited the arrival of the Empress a short distance from that city. When the Emperor saw her Majesty's coach arrive, he darted towards the horses, and, seizing them by the bridles, opened the carriage door, and a most affecting scene took place in the presence of the assembled spectators. Soon afterwards he got up, and sat down beside the Empress. About 100 peasants having been presented to him, the Emperor, knowing they had remained faithful to the Government during the late troubles, presented them. His Majesty gave to each [illegible] a silver rouble, and ten ducats to those who had prevented the peasants of Gallicia from entering Cracow, and promised silver medals to all of them.

The German papers announce that the Emperors of Russia and Austria, and the King of Prussia, are to meet at Vienna in September next. They also confirm the reported robbery of the courier of the French Embassy at Rome of his despatches on his way to France.

The Manchester Examiner says that the following changes are contemplated in the Russian tariff:—The duty on earthenware of a single colour, not gilded and not having coloured patterns, and paying 4s. and 9-10d. per English pound weight, is to be reduced one-half. The same qualities of articles, but now charged 12½d. per English pound weight, are to be reduced in the same proportion. The duty on coffee, which is now per cwt. 60.7. paper rubles, will also be reduced one half. Tallow has been suggested as an export duty of about £2 3s. 4d. per ton; this duty is also to be reduced one-half. Cloths, black and green, silks of some kinds, and other articles, particulars of which are not yet known, will be reduced to the extent of 20 per cent.

A letter from Wessel, in Prussia, says:—"The daughter of M. Medling, a merchant of this place, was bit by a dog in March last. The wound, which was scarcely more than the scratch of a pin, healed up rapidly, and the girl appeared perfectly cured. On June 1, however, Mdle. Medling manifested symptoms of hydrophobia. Every one fled from her in terror, except her father, and, on his going up to pacify her, she bit him severely in the arm, and expired almost immediately after. The wound of M. Medling was immediately cauterised, but some apprehension is felt on his account.

A further arrival of ice has taken place from the United States of America. A ship and a the Jonuade, which has arrived in the St. Katherine's Docks, from Boston, U.S., is brought an entire cargo, consisting of 654 tons weight of the ice.

The Brussels papers state that the Count d'Arschot, the diplomatist, died on Saturday night, or rather Sunday morning, at half-past two o'clock; the disorder of which he died was organic disease of the heart, combined latterly with dropsy. He was in the 75th year of his age, being born the 12th of December, 1771.

A letter from Brussels, dated Monday, states that, during the fête on that day, on arriving at the opening of the Railway to Malines, a bridge out, and the crowd scampered off to the Chapelle du Palais, which was in flames. The Royal escort were carried away by the common impulse. The fire raged for about an hour and a half, and did much mischief. The archives of the town were burned, as well as the roof of the Chapelle.

The Courrier Français says—"We are assured that the Government has received from Tahiti news of the most serious character. Some sharp engagements have taken place between our soldiers and the natives of the different islands, for the subjection of which, M. Bruat had given orders. But the most serious feat is the connivance of English missionaries, who have openly sent arms and ammunition to the insurgents. Several cases of cartridges, concealed under Bibles and religious books, have been seized, the muskets have been found, abandoned by the natives on the field of battle, with the stamp of English manufacture."

A GOSSIP ABOUT THE BRITISH INSTITUTION

The Exhibition of the Works of Deceased Painters, always, to many, the most interesting of the year, furnishes us on this occasion with a peculiarly interesting selection. Its three rooms are filled with a collection of Portraits of "Persons Illustrious in History, Literature, and Art."

Portrait Exhibitions may be the dullest, or may be the most amusing of all picture gatherings. Few things, except a family party, are more tedious than an ordinary family gallery, where the periwigged country squire, in his laced doublet of the time of Charles II., squints ominously on the leering lady by his side, represented, with all the satirical grace of Sir Peter or Sir Godfrey, as a shepherdess surrounded by the attributes of innocence: in which the eye turns along the costumes of succeeding reigns, rather than the individualities of successive generations of men and women: and where, whether from the dullness of the subject or the creeping tameness of the painter, all the faces seem copied from one model—the men, full-cheeked and dull-eyed; the women, fair and fat, and leering in a most unlovely display of their feminine attractions. But this Exhibition contains not for heads that have not round them the halo of some celebrity. It is the quintessence of the men who have made History, for the last three centuries embodied in forms of art, either interesting, as illustrations of the history of painting; or intrinsically valuable, as fine pictures.

But little arrangement has been employed, either historical or pictorial. Individuals and schools are strangely jumbled: something of the value of the Exhibition is lost by this carelessness. In some cases, however, there seems a certain sly intention in the juxta-positions, as when the feeble, fox-like face of Laud is dimmed by the massive and broad-browed Luther that hangs alongside it; or, when a row of adjoining Reynoldses enables the spectator to compare different degrees of deterioration and decay, and joyfully to contrast them with occasional, but, alas, too rarely recurring bits of fresh and unimpaired colour. In the selection of the celebrities, the directors have been catholic enough. We have monarchs and actors, Royal mistresses and Court poets, bluff admirals and rapt painters, women remarkable for virtue, and remarkable for the want of it; quondam notorieties of their own day, whose names are now scarce remembered; nobilities unacknowledged of their age, only to be more fully recognised by posterity.

In our notice of the pictures, we may take either a series of historical or artistic parallels. We may proceed by the walks of the men or the schools of the painters. We may stroll through the pageant-filled courts of Kenilworth, or Astley End, in company with Master Richard Lauchan, and admire the exceeding quaintness of Elizabethan costume in the literal rendering of Zucchero. We may lounge through the gay reception-rooms of Whitehall, or the glittering Mall, with De Grammont, in the masterly pictures of Lely, who appears here, as he really is in his finer works, a painter hardly inferior to Vandyke; and wind up at a pleasant gathering of the Dilletante Society in St. James's-street, to discuss claret and cornelians, French vintages, and Etruscan vases, in the lively society of Sir William Hamilton, Sir W. W. Wynn, and Sir Joseph Banks. Again, if we abandon historica, rem nascence for artistic criticism, we may contrast the earlier [illegible] of art, exemplified in the elongated forms and the bodies of "The Marriage of Henry the Sixth and Margaret of Anjou," with its advance, in the faithful character and wonderful finish and clear colour of Holbein, and its moon-day brightness, in the chastened splendour of the "Common Family" of Titian; and then, having sat by its cradle, and traced its progress to manhood, follow it as it declines into the feebleness of our modern Hoppner and Philipps, retarded in its decay by the increasing glory of Reynolds.

How any man, looking at such pictures as the portraits of John Talbot and his wife (492 and 153), works of the 15th century (in which we recognise the originals of our Court card Kings, and Queens, and Knaves, as square and gaudy in the forms and colour of the dresses, and as flat in the faces), can retain any predilection for early art, except for its historical value, is hard to understand. Last we should have been amongst as anxious to go back to the manner and manipulation of Holbein a little less extraordinary. If, indeed, instead of imitating the rigidity of his attitudes, and his diapered backgrounds, they were to revive after an equal truth of character, and subordination of accessories to important points, the admiration and study of these works might produce a more wholesome and sustaining fruit. The Cabinet Amour furniture, from the collections of the Duke of Sutherland, some curious and valuable early illustrations of French notables. There is a pencil head of Rabelais, admirable in its Socratic irony of expression and like the play of muscle. It is the real portrait of Rabelais, who fascinated from the magic lantern of his wit visions of high truth and reasons of largely informed wisdom, mingled with the most grotesque products of unscrupulous humour and rampant fancy. A more melancholy [illegible] hangs about the drawing, by the same hand, of the ill-fated brothers Coligny, whose portraits are accompanied by a fragment of the bell which sounded the awful tocsin of blood on the night of the Bartholomew, while further illustrative relics of the same wretched period is furnished by the portraits, by Janet, of that wayward and half frantic bigot, Charles IX., with his wily yet hearty brother, Henry IV., and the feeble and meretricious Duke of Anjou.

We have two portraits of Charles V.; one anonymous, in which he is accompanied by his son, Philip, the husband of our cruel Queen Mary; and the other, a magnificent full-length, by Titian.

Mary herself, with her most uninviting physiognomy, has found two painters—Holbein and Lucas de Heere. The two portraits are identical in feature and expression, and so prove the fidelity of the other, and the latter's [illegible] of expression. Nothing can exceed the cold and unfeminine harshness of the features: they present the beau ideal of the unhappy wife, the soured fanatical woman, and the suspicious and mistrustful Queen.

The Court of Elizabeth, one of the most crowded with great names in our history, finds, as might be expected, numerous illustrations.

First, we have the Virgin Queen herself, the well-known portrait by Zucchero, with her Majesty's favourite device, the jewels gleaming among her light auburn hair, which, in any but a Queen, we should call red; and her robe, embroidered with eyes and ears, quaintly typifying the multifarious duties of the Queen, and her motto, "Semper eadem." We have the rash and impetuous Essex; stalwart Howards in abundance; the yellow stockings of Sir Nathaniel Bacon (painted, and very cleverly painted, by himself); the learned Salisbury; Sir Christopher Hatton, celebrated as the first unprofessional Chancellor, and the best unprofessional dancer of his time; and, last and greatest, a, if not the Shakespeare Portrait, by Zucchero—a full-length figure in his favourite, but displaying a height of brow more marvellous than even the Stratford bust, and reminding one of the singular conical form of the head of Sir Walter Scott. This portrait may rank in the second class, for authenticity, after the Droeshout portrait, prefixed to the first edition of 1623; the Chandos Picture, at above, (which belonged to Davenant and Betterton); and the Janssen Portrait. With all these, it agrees substantially: and the probability is, that we may gather an accurate notion of Shakspeare as he lived, as of any other remarkable man of that time.

We have several illustrations of the reign of James I., though no portrait of that monarch himself, except as an infant (in the picture by Zucchero, belonging to the Merchant Taylors' Company), accompanying his Consort Anne, and their daughter, Mary, Queen of Scots. Her face, though the picture is one of the worst Zucchero in the collection, is beautiful, even under the disadvantage of an unbecoming costume. This is much, when one sees what very "queer" notions of beauty once admired: have been transmitted us by the early English painters, as witness the Gorgon-like Jane Shore from Eton, in this exhibition, with an unmistakeable squint, which no regard for Rose's heroine, or sympathy with her fate, will allow us to soften into a "slight cast," and an eccentric costume, consisting of nothing but a profusion of jewellery, which is remarkably suited to the [illegible] weather, and reminds one of the summer attire of "a shirt collar and straps," so often sighed for during the last fortnight.

The mighty master of philosophy is there, Bacon: with a brow wide as his range of thought, and both as his own philosophic sayings, but accompanied by a querulous meanness of lip and chin, which indicates that remarkable contradiction between the voices of head and heart which has made the name of the wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind a puzzle to all who would fain believe that great powers and great goodness go hand in hand. But we feel that an attempt to compress all we have to say of this interesting exhibition into a single notice would be unworthy and unjust to its remarkable interest. We shall conclude our gossip next week.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Having observed that in the Church and State Gazette, I am invaded in the clerical list of speakers, I shall feel it a kindness if you will lend me the aid of your paper in contradicting that statement.

Brazenose College, Oxford. EDWARD CASWALL.

Mr. Charles Dickens, according to the Genevese newspapers, arrived at Geneva on the 24th inst.

BREAK OF GAUGE.—The forcible and excellent Picture of the Break of Gauge which the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS published, has been put in EVIDENCE before the Parliamentary Committee on the Southampton and Dorchester railway. The picture was put into a witness's hand, and he was asked if it represented the facts. Opposing Counsel objected, but the Committee, amidst great laughter, decided that the illustration should be received.—Railway Chronicle

MYSTERIOUS SUICIDE OF A BOY AT DULWICH. On Monday forenoon an inquiry, began on Friday, was continued and concluded at the Plough, Lord-hip-lane, Dulwich, before Mr. Carter, the Coroner for Surrey, to enquire into the cause of the death of George James Banwell, aged sixteen, in the service of Mr. G. W. Evans, a manufacturer of Piqua tea, living in that lane. The boy was found with his hands tied and a weight fastened round his neck, on Sunday evening (last week), in a pond behind his master's house, and some injurious surmises made the inquiry of more than ordinary interest. It turned out, however, from the evidence of the lad's stepmother, that he had committed self-destruction, and she had no doubt that he had destroyed himself. From the combined evidence of Mr. Evans, of his son, and several other persons, it was clearly proved that Mr. Evans was absent when the death occurred, and that he had used proper means to recover the body and restore animation on his return. The boy had left information, by writing with chalk, where his body was to be found. The Coroner and the Jury summed quite satisfied that the evidence warranted the verdict they found—"That the deceased drowned himself in a state of temporary insanity."

FINE ARTS.

ROYAL AGADEMY EXHIBITION.—THE VISIT TO THE NUN.—PAINTED BY MR. EASTLAKE, R.A.

We have, this week, engraved Mr Eastlake's only contribution to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy—"The Visit to the Nun"—very sweet in colour, and, altogether, one of the most interesting pictures in the collection.

THE CONVENT

Poor, broken-hearted victim [illegible]
[illegible] month and hour! [illegible] pass away?
Lives all thy world within this Convent dreary,
Is all thy life to fast, to weep, to pray?

Thou fastest; but thy soul is fond and fed
[illegible]
Thou weepest; but [illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible] from the world when youth begins to bloom
[illegible]
[illegible]

Our Second Illustration is Frederic Tayler's "Roadside Travellers," from the Old Water Colour Society. As we said at page 811, in our notice of the Exhibition, the artist "gives us a soldier with his wife and children, adust and thirsty, with the beads of sweat upon face and brow, the boy drinking greedily from a pitcher, and the baby sprawling, charmingly, over the mother's shoulder, painted in broad washes, with sparing use of body-colour."

SOCIETY'S EXHIBITION.—ROADSIDE TRAVELLERS.—PAINTED BY MR. F. TAYLER

FETE IN CHELSEA HOSPITAL GROUNDS IN AID OF THE HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION.

THE GREAT TENT, FROM THE AVENUE.

DUCHESS' STALL.

We have, upon several occasions, endeavoured in our columns, to advance the truly charitable work of establishing, upon a firm basis, in the metropolis, a Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest.

The project of such an Institution originated in 1842. It was the first of the kind ever established, although, nearly 6000 persons die annually of consumption in the metropolitan parishes.

In the above year, the Hospital was opened at Chelsea; but it was soon found insufficient for the numerous claimants for admission; and, accordingly, the first stone of a new Building for the Institution was laid by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in June, 1844; when, also, a Bazaar was held in the gardens of the Royal Hospital at Chelsea, in aid of the Consumption Hospital Building Fund. This Fete will be found engraved in Vol. IV., p. 388, of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS; and so successful was the issue of the Bazaar, that £2000 were realised for the benefit of the Charity. This sum has been devoted to the building of a portion of the Hospital, which is now in course of being furnished for the reception of patients. An Engraving of the entire Building, from the Architect's drawing, appeared in No. 98 of our Journal.

The Charity, from the first, has enjoyed the highest patronage; and in its subscription lists appear the illustrious names of her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the Duchesses of Kent, Cambridge, and Gloucester, and the Princess Sophia. Still, the New Hospital is only in part completed; and, to enable the Committee to carry the great work to a glorious accomplishment, they have again appealed to the charitable public in aid of the building-fund, by holding a Second Bazaar, on the same site as before; the Gardens of the Royal Hospital having been again placed at their disposal by the unremitting kindness of the Governor.

Thursday (Waterloo day) and Friday were the days fixed for holding the Fête. For such a purpose, we know not of a more beautiful locality than the Gardens of Chelsea College; and its resources were cleverly made available. Upon the great lawn on the south side, next the Thames, was pitched a vast central marquee, 60 feet high, and 80 feet in diameter; at each corner was a smaller tent: there were others upon the upper portion of the lawn; and the Ranelagh Grounds, adjoining the College Gardens were thrown open for the occasion. In the four corner tents were the four stalls, at which presided the Duchess of Norfolk, the Marchioness of Aylesbury, the Duchess of Sutherland, and Lady Shelley, and the Countess of Antrim. At other stalls in the grounds presided the Marchioness of Westminster, the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Combere, Lady Jocelyn, Lady Charlotte Berkeley, Lady Aylmer, the Honourable Mrs. Leveson Gower, Lady Esthope, Lady Wilson, Lady Hamilton, Mrs. Rawdon, &c. The stalls were much better stocked than usual—not with fancy work and useless bric-à-brac articles, but with porcelain vases, glass, and articles of the useful and elegant class. Several artists, among whom were Messrs. Prout, Ward, Lance, Jutsum, &c., likewise contributed some of their exquisite water-colour paintings.

Upon the Great Lawn the bands of the Royal Horse Guards Blue, and Coldstream Guards were in attendance on Thursday, and played alternately. The juvenile band from the Duke of York's School were to have been present, as in 1844, but were forbidden by the authorities. The day was one of tropical heat, but the company poured in at the rate of eighty per minute: and, throughout Thursday afternoon and evening, the attendance was truly brilliant. Early in the day, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester honoured the Gardens with a visit; and Prince Albert was expected.

The scene was, altogether, a truly splendid coup d'œil; and, we trust, will prove very productive to the funds of the Hospital.

Our artist has shown the great central marquee, with the principal promenade, and the south front of the Royal Hospital. Another Illustration shows the central marquee as seen from the avenue leading to the Thames; and the third portrays a stall presided over by one of the noble Duchesses, who have so benevolently lent their high patronage and presence to further the interests, and accomplish the completion of this truly national undertaking.

Among the contributions we noticed, with much satisfaction, the continuation of a tale by Mrs. S. C. Hall, commenced in 1844, and sold by the gifted authoress at the first Bazaar, as well as at the fête on Thursday. The proceeds, we are happy to learn, have already been very productive to the funds of the charity.

There likewise were well-appointed stalls, presided over by Mrs. Alfred Barnes,

THE GREAT LAWN AND TENT, [illegible]

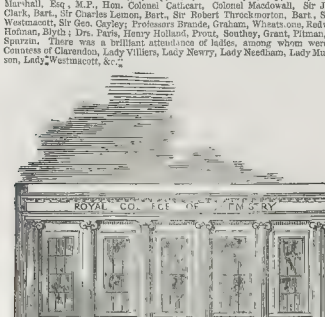
Mrs. Cooper Gardiner, Miss Kennett, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mrs' Hamilton Rox, Mrs. Philip Rose, and Mrs. Theophilus Thompson.

The arrangement of the stalls, &c., was under the superintendence of Mr T. Belshaw, of Manchester; who was engaged expressly on this occasion, in consequence of his clever management of the late Manchester Exposition; and it is but fair to add that his success at Chelsea fully justified the choice of the Committee.

In conclusion, we feel that we should not sufficiently advocate the claims of this new charity upon "all who enjoy the luxury of doing good," did we not add that the Hospital for Consumption is for the reception of patients from all parts of the kingdom; so that its claims are not local, but general

ROYAL COLLEGE OF CHEMISTRY.

THE ceremony of laying the first stone of the new Laboratories of this Institution was performed on Tuesday, the 16th, by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the President of the College, in the presence of the Council and members. The Prince was attended by the Marquis of Abercorn; Earls Clarendon, Ducie, Antrim; Viscounts Palmerston, Sandon, Ebrington, Newry, and Marne; Chevalier Bunsen, Charles Drouet, Esq.; the Lord Bishop of Norwich, Durham, and Oxford; the Dean of Westminster; the Right Hon. William Bingham Baring, M.P., Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., John Bright, Esq., M.P., Thomas Wyse, Esq., M.P., William Marshall, Esq., M.P., Hon. Colonel Calthorpe, Colonel Macdowall, Sir James Clark, Bart., Sir Charles Lemon, Bart., Sir Robert Throckmorton, Bart., Sir H. Westmeott, Sir Geo. Cayley; Professors Brande, Graham, Wheatstone, Redwood, Hofman, Blyth; Drs. Paris, Penny Pollard, Frost, Southey, Grant, Pitman, and Spurzin. There was a brilliant attendance of ladies, among whom were the Countess of Clarendon, Lady Villiers, Lady Newry, Lady Needham, Lady Murchison, Lady Westmeott, &c.



THE LABORATORIES OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF CHEMISTRY, HANOVER-SQUARE.

A handsome marquee was erected for the occasion, with a platform round the to ndation-stone, capable of holding several thousands of spectators, which was crowded to excess by the friends of the Institution.

On the arrival of his Royal Highness, he was received by the Council, who conducted him down to the stone. His Royal Highness looked remarkably well, and, on descending the steps to the scene of action, graciously accepted a lithographic print of the elevation of the College, which was presented to him by Mr. W. Welch, the clerk of the works.

His Royal Highness having skilfully performed the ceremony of laying the first stone, amidst the cheers of the spectators,

Lord Clarendon stepped forward and addressed the Prince. He said that he had been deputed by the Council of the Royal College of Chemistry to convey to his Royal Highness the humble expression of their gratitude for the great and important service he had that day rendered them by laying the first stone of the building in which their future researches and operations in the science of chemistry were to be conducted. After alluding to the patronage which his Royal Highness has so liberally bestowed upon the many valuable institutions of this country, Lord Clarendon spoke in the highest terms of praise of Dr. Hofman, whose services had been secured to England, through the influence of Prince Albert with the King of Prussia—services which (his Lordship said) must have fulfilled his Royal Highness's most sanguine expectations. They did not forget the liberality of the Prince in contributing so largely to the funds of this Institution, and were fully aware that, when he consented to be the President of the College, he would not content himself with being President in the mere nominal sense of the word, but he would prove himself a true friend to the Institution, and one who was watchful over its interests. His Lordship, after commenting upon the beneficial effects likely to result from the establishment of these laboratories, and the patronage of his Royal Highness, concluded, by observing that he was confident that patronage would stimulate every member and student in the school to elevate the character of the College by their zeal and assiduity.

The Bishop of Oxford then said that he had been desired to follow the noble Earl in the expression of their heartfelt thanks for what his Royal Highness had just performed, though his thanks were expressed on a different ground. The Council were not of that class of persons who thought that philosophy tended to diminish the respect which was due to the Almighty; but, on the contrary, they were fearful that those who rejected the wonderful attributes of God's hand were more likely to look up in humiliating fear and devotion to the Almighty. He (the Bishop) private contended that the science of chemistry was calculated to promote the welfare, not only of the arts, manufactures, and commerce of this country, but also of its religion; therefore, on behalf of the Council of the College, he begged to tender their most heartfelt gratification and acknowledgments to his Royal Highness for the great service he had conferred upon them that day.

Prince Albert, upon the conclusion of the Bishop of Oxford's address, said that it had given him great satisfaction and pleasure to lay the foundation stone of so noble an institution. The want of a practical school of chemistry had long been felt in this country, and he trusted that their Institution would fully meet this want, and be the means of not only promoting the science, but also materially promote the progress of art, science, manufactures, and even religion. In conclusion, his Royal Highness assured the members that they would find him ready to act with the Council when its services might be required, and to do [illegible] that would promote the interests of the College.

The commencement was received with much enthusiasm by the assembled friends, and after many cheers in honour of the Prince, and for the prosperity of the College, the gay and fashionable assemblage broke up, evidently delighted with what had taken place

We annex an engraving of the elevation of the Laboratories, designed by James Lockyer, Esq., architect to the College; and whose exertions, with those of Dr. Gardner, the indefatigable Secretary, have brought the institution to its present state of prosperity

LONDONDERRY AND COLERAINE RAILWAY. GRAND BLAST AT THE DOWNHILL TUNNELS.

THE novel nature of the undertaking proposed by the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Company, has, from its very appearance before the public, invested that project with a peculiar interest to scientific and the monetary world.

Lough Foyle, a deep indentation of the sea on the northern coast of Ireland, covers an area of about 50,000 acres. With the exception of the channel along the Donegal shore, leading up to the port and city of Londonderry, the tide in this lough is [illegible] nearly one mile from six feet, and, at low water, a large portion of it is [illegible] of city, exposing a rich formed of the richest alluvial deposit, capable of immediate conversion into valuable soil. The situation of the lough [illegible] land-locked, protected from the swell of the Atlantic by its narrow entrance, and sheltered from the prevailing winds by the mountainous nature of the country on the Donegal coast is such as at once to suggest the idea of facility for winning it from the sea, and reclaiming a great portion of the soil it now covers.

In the Session of 1837, an Act of Parliament, authorising this reclamation, was obtained, and two enclosures were made, winning from the sea about 1000 acres, upon part of which luxuriant crops have already been reared. In 1844, public attention became alive to the necessity for establishing railway communication between the important towns of Londonderry and Coleraine. The mountainous nature of the intervening country, rendered a line inland impracticable, and the idea was conceived of combining the Railway and the Foyle reclamation, making one embankment serve for both. With this object a Company was formed, terms were arranged with the parties in whom rested the powers under the Act of 1837; and, in the Session of 1845, the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Company obtained its Act of incorporation.

The length of line proposed by this Company is 39 miles, including a branch to the town of Newtown-Limavady 15 miles to be constructed on an embankment through Lough Foyle; and by which embankment about 22,000 acres of land will be recovered from the sea. Of this reclaimed land, 19,000 acres are set apart to cover the expenditure on the railway. The works are now so far advanced, that by the end of the present year the Directors anticipate being in a position to enclose and sell a portion of the land; and, as the works proceed, like portions may from time to time be enclosed and sold.

The Line, after leaving Lough Foyle, proceeds eastward across Magilligan Point, and along the coast towards Coleraine. About seven miles from the latter town and close to Downhill, the beautiful residence of Sir Harvey Bruce, Bart., it passes through the cliffs between Downhill House and the sea by two tunnels, one about 200 yards and the other about 300 yards in length. The works upon these tunnels have been some time in progress by the ordinary process of picking and blasting; but it being deemed necessary to expedite their construction, it was determined to effect the removal of the obstructing rock by one grand blast.

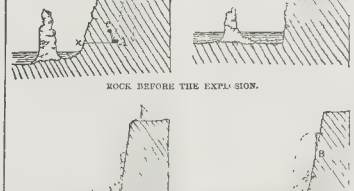
This blast, which was second only in importance to the great explosion of the chalk cliffs at the Shakspeare Tunnel, on the Dover Railway, came off on Saturday, the 6th instant. The mass of rock which it had been originally necessary to remove was at the western mouth of the large tunnel, and measured nearly 60,000 tons, the material being the hard basaltic stone, in which the coast of Antrim and Londonderry abounds; a large portion of this rock had been previously removed by the common slow process already named. Having resolved upon the large blast, Messrs. Bromhead and Hemming, the contractors, formed a headling or gallery into the rock, from the side of the cliff, 50 feet in length; at the end of this a shaft was sunk, 22 feet to the level of the railway, as seen at C A; and again another gallery at the bottom, running at right angles to the first gallery, and further into the rock, was made for 10 feet. At the end of this was placed the large charge of powder, 2,400 lbs., shown at A. The whole was then well filled up, and tamped with clay and masonry, and the wires to convey the electric fluid from the battery through the charge were carefully arranged. The smaller charge, which was higher up in the rock, and which is seen at B, contained 600 lbs. of powder; and the gallery B F leading to it was about 70 feet in length; this was also tamped in a similar manner to the larger one. The galvanic battery, which stood on a shed on the top of the cliff, was a very powerful one, consisting of 18 cells, each cell about 14 inches square.

The operations were conducted by Mr. Hemming and Mr Webb, Superintending Engineer to the Contractors. Mr. M'Leod, acting under Mr. Robert Stephenson the Engineer of the Company, was present, with Mr. Langton, and other civil engineers. There were also several Royal engineers and scientific gentlemen, who had come from different quarters of the country to witness the explosion.

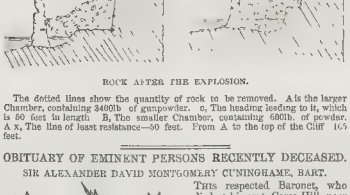
At the appointed hour some little delay occurred in connecting the wires with the battery; but, at half-past three o'clock, the two poles were united, and instantaneously the bottom of the rock was seen to heave out for a moment, the mass of rock above stood, trembled, and, cracking into a thousand fissures, rolled into the sea beneath. A deep and hollow sound was heard, like distant thunder, but no report. The quantity of rock removed must be upwards of 30,000 tons. The effect will be seen by referring to the accompanying profiles or sections taken through the lines a a & b, in the front view, both before and after the blast. The result, in an engineering point of view, was perfectly successful, and reflects the greatest credit on the gentlemen superintending the operation.

The unusual nature of the spectacle, the splendid character of the scenery in the neighbourhood, and the fineness of the weather, drew together an immense assemblage of spectators; in steamers from Liverpool, Glasgow, Belfast, and Londonderry, and vehicles of every description from the interior. After the blast, Mr. Hemming entertained upwards of 300 of the ladies and gentlemen in one of the tunnels, which was tastefully fitted up as a banqueting room, and lighted with a row of magnificent chandeliers, bearing 300 candles, and 1000 variegated oil lamps. The effect was exceedingly beautiful, and elicited universal admiration. Toasts being warmly pledged to the success of the undertaking and the health of their generous host, the entertainment ended, the assemblage dispersed, and the proceedings of the day terminated without the occurrence of the slightest accident to cloud their success.

We annex an engraved Section or Profile of the Rock through the Lines, previous to the explosion.



ROCK BEFORE THE EXPLOSION.

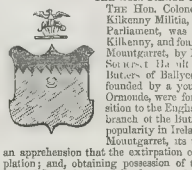


ROCK AFTER THE EXPLOSION.

The dotted lines show the quantity of rock to be removed. A is the larger Chamber, containing 3400lb of gunpowder. C, The heading leading to it, which is 50 feet in length. B, The smaller Chamber, containing 600lb. of powder. A X, The line of least resistance—50 feet. From A to the top of the Cliff 165 feet.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

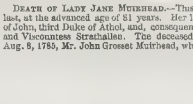
SIR ALEXANDER DAVID MONTGOMERY CUNINGHAME, BART.



THIS respected Baronet, who died at his seat, Corse Hill, near Ayr, on the 8th instant, was the eldest son of the late Sir James Montgomery Cuninghame, Bart., by Jessie, his wife, daughter of Thomas Cuming, Esq., representative of the Cumings of Earnside; and nephew of Sir Walter Montgomery Cuninghame, Bart., who, at the decease of John, 15th Earl of Glencairn, in 1796, claimed the honours of that noble and ancient House, as heir male of the Hon. Andrew Cuninghame, second son of William, fourth Earl. He was opposed by Sir Adam Ferguson, Bart., of Kilkerran, the heir of line; but no definite decision resulted. Sir Alexander has died unmarried, and is succeeded in the title by his next brother, the present Baronet.

THE HON. PIERCE BUTLER, M.P.

THE Hon. Colonel Butler, who commanded the Kilkenny Militia, and represented the County in Parliament, was brother of the present Earl of Kilkenny, and fourth son of Edmund, late Viscount Mountgarret, by Henrietta, his wife, daughter of Sir Pierce Butler, first Earl of Carrick. The Butlers of Ballycorna, from whom he descended founded by a younger son of the eighth Earl of Ormonde, were for centuries noted for their opposition to the English Government, and are the only branch of the Butler family which has retained its popularity in Ireland. In 1642, Richard, Viscount Mountgarret, was then chief, took up arms, under an apprehension that the extirpation of the Catholics was in contemplation; and, although possessed of Gowran Castle, was appointed General of the Irish forces, and chosen President of the Supreme Council.



Colonel Butler had, at the period of his decease, which occurred suddenly on Saturday, the 13th inst., completed his 72nd year. He married, in 1800, Anne, daughter of the late Thomas Marsh, Esq., of Lisburne, and has left a large family. In politics, the hon. gentleman was a decided Liberal.

DEATH OF LADY JANE MUIRHEAD.—The venerable lady expired on Sunday last, at the advanced age of 81 years. Her ladyship was only surviving daughter of John, third Duke of Athol, and, consequently, great aunt of the present Duke, and Viscountess Strathallan. The deceased was born Dec. 5, 1764, and married Aug. 8, 1785, Mr. John Grosset Muirhead, who died exactly ten years since.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"One of the Number."—Your suggestion shall be considered; but we fear, from want of space, it is impracticable.

"M. N. T." Dublin.—The parties you name played only three or four light games, and as yet to be expected, Mr. Horwitz was victor.

"D. C." Hunley.—Thanks. They shall receive due attention shortly.

"Henley Arms."—Apply to Mr. Leans himself, at the London Chess Club. We believe the work to be out of print.

"H." Hamburgh.—Your welcome communication has reached us safely, and shall be answered without delay.

"W. H. C." "R. H. B." Aberdeen,—and "Beta."—If we can find room, we will next week give the solution you require.

"P. h." Romney.—"The Sussex Plower's Chronicle" is punctually published on the 1st of every month; and has been, without a single instance of irregularity, since its first establishment.

"W. H. P."—You may obtain Mr. Bryan's "History of the French Match," of Hastoge, in Carey-street, or Hurst, of King William-street, Strand.

"Al Sish."—The positions from Greco are beautiful, and many of the best will bear republishing.—Inquire of Barnes and Lovell, the Foreign Booksellers.

Solutions by "Hanley," "D. C." "Chapel Rock," "James," "P. Simple," "Paterson," "F. H. M." "S. H. P." "N. A. D." "Sigma," "Alpha," "W. R. C." "Ralph," "J. Lyon," "O. W. T." "Al Sish," "G. A. H. and R. H." "Alpha, Cambridge;" "Bluensenny," "Ludimagister," "Perseverance," and "G. A. S.," are correct

 The Answers to several Correspondents are unavoidably deferred till our next Number.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 125.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q B 8th (ch)	K to Q 3rd	4. Q takes Q (ch)	K takes Q or †
2. Q takes R (ch)	K to Kt 2nd (best)	5. B to Kt 2nd (ch)—mate
3. Q to her B 3rd (ch)	Q interposes or *

* 3. K to R 2nd
Q interposes &c.
† 4. K to R 2nd

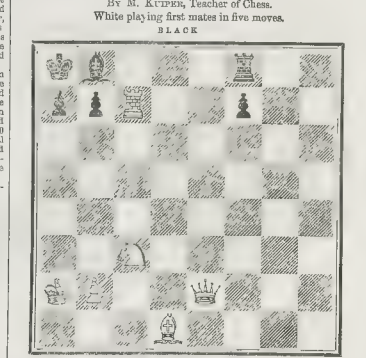
4. B takes P (ch)
5. B takes P (ch)—mate

PROBLEM, NO. 126,

By M. KUPPER, Teacher of Chess.

White playing first mates in five moves.

BLACK



WHITE

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 13.—By M. KLING.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B 6th	K at Q 4th	Kt at K 6th, and P at K B 2nd	Kts at K B 2nd and Q B 3rd
Q at K 2nd	Q at her K 7th		Q B 3rd
Kt at K B sq	Kt at Q R 3rd		Ps at K 8th, Q 7th, Q B 6th, & Q Kt 5th
Kt at Q R 3rd	Bs at Q R 3rd and Q B 4th

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No 14 By MESSRS. HEMING.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B 7th	K at Q 2nd
Q at her B 4th	Q at Q R sq
White moves, and wins.	P at Q 6th

No. 15.—By LOLLI.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B sq	K at his B 4th
R at Q R sq	R at Q R 2nd
P at Q 6th	B at Q R 8th
	Kt at K B 6 h

White plays, and draws the game.

The following Game has been just concluded (by correspondence) between Durham and Stockton-upon-Tees. Durham had the black pieces and the move.—

BLACK (Durham).	WHITE (Stockton).	BLACK (Durham).	WHITE (Stockton).
1. K P two	K P two	27. Q B takes P (ch)	K to Kt sq
2. Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	28. K R to Q sq	Q h to K 3rd (h)
3. Q P two	P takes P	29. K R P one	R to K sq
4. B to Q B 4th	K B checks	30. Q B to Q Kt 2nd	Q B to K B 2nd
5. Q B P one	P takes P	31. R K to Q 2nd	R to K 8th (i)
6. Castles	Q P one	32. K B to Q 3rd	R to K 8th (ch.)
7. Q R P one	B to Q R 4th	33. K B to his sq (k)	R to K sq
8. Q B P two	B to Q Kt 3rd	34. R to K 2nd	R takes R
9. Q to Q Kt 3rd (e)	Q to Q 2nd sq	35. B takes R	K B to Q R 3rd
10. Q Kt takes P	K Kt to B 3rd	36. K B to Q B 4th	Q Kt P two
11. Q Kt to Q 5th	Kt takes Kt	37. B takes Kt	B takes B
12. P takes Kt	Kt to K 2nd (k)	38. R to B 6th	Q R P two
13. Q B to Kt 2nd	Castles	39. B to Q B 3rd	P takes P
14. Q R P two	K B P one	40. P takes P	K Kt P one
15. Q R to R sq	Kt to h B 4th (c)	41. K B P one	K B to B 5th
16. K B to Q 3rd	Q to K B 2nd	42. K to K B 2nd	K B to Q B 2nd
17. Q to K 4th	Q B to Q 2nd (d)	43. R Kt to B 5th	K R P one
18. Q R to K B 4th	K Kt P one	44. B to Q 4th	K to R 2nd
19. K Kt P two	Kt to K 6th (e)	45. R to B 6th	K B to B 8th
20. Q to Q 3rd	B takes P	46. B to Q B 3rd	K B to K 7th
21. Kt to K 4th (f)	Q to K 4th (g)	47. R to B 8th	K B to Q B 2nd
22. Kt takes K B P (ch)	K takes Kt	48. R to B 5th	K B to B 5th
		49. R to Kt 2nd (l)	K B to Q B 2nd
23. Q takes Q	P takes Q	50. R to B 6th	K B to B 5th
24. R takes R	K to Q 4th (best)	51. K R P one	K B to h 6th
25. K to B 4th	K to B 6th	52. K R P one	Resigns (m)
26. Q R to K B 3rd	Q B P one

(a) The game has for precisely the same as one of the celebrated French games played between the Clubs of London and Edinburgh; London (white) now played for the move, Q to K 3rd

(b) The best move we believe

(c) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the view of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(d) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(e) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(f) This secures Black's advantage

(g) They have no better move

(h) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(i) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(k) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(l) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(m) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(n) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(o) This secures Black's advantage

(p) They have no better move

(q) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(r) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(s) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(t) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(u) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(v) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(w) This secures Black's advantage

(x) They have no better move

(y) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(z) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(aa) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(bb) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(cc) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(dd) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ee) This secures Black's advantage

(ff) They have no better move

(gg) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(hh) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ii) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(jj) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(kk) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(ll) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(mm) This secures Black's advantage

(nn) They have no better move

(oo) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(pp) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(qq) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(rr) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(ss) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(tt) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(uu) This secures Black's advantage

(vv) They have no better move

(ww) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(xx) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(yy) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(zz) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(aaa) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(bbb) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ccc) This secures Black's advantage

(ddd) They have no better move

(eee) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(fff) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ggg) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(hhh) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(iii) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(jjj) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(kkk) This secures Black's advantage

(lll) They have no better move

(mmm) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(nnn) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ooo) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ppp) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(qqq) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(rrr) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(sss) This secures Black's advantage

(ttt) They have no better move

(uuu) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(vvv) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(www) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(xxx) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(yyy) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(zzz) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(aaaa) This secures Black's advantage

(bbbb) They have no better move

(cccc) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(dddd) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(eeee) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ffff) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(gggg) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(hhhh) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(iiii) This secures Black's advantage

(jjjj) They have no better move

(kkkk) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(llll) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(mmmm) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(nnnn) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(oooo) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(pppp) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(qqqq) This secures Black's advantage

(rrrr) They have no better move

(ssss) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(tttt) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(uuuu) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(vvvv) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(wwww) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(xxxx) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(yyyy) This secures Black's advantage

(zzzz) They have no better move

(aaaaa) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(bbbbb) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ccccc) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ddddd) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(eeeee) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(fffff) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ggggg) This secures Black's advantage

(hhhhh) They have no better move

(iiiii) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(jjjjj) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(kkkkk) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(lllll) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(mmmmm) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(nnnnn) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ooooo) This secures Black's advantage

(ppppp) They have no better move

(qqqqq) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(rrrrr) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(sssss) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ttttt) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(uuuuu) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(vvvvv) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(wwwww) This secures Black's advantage

(xxxxx) They have no better move

(yyyyy) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(zzzzz) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(aaaaaa) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(bbbbbb) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(cccccc) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(dddddd) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(eeeeee) This secures Black's advantage

(ffffff) They have no better move

(gggggg) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(hhhhhh) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(iiiiii) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(jjjjjj) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(kkkkkk) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(llllll) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(mmmmmm) This secures Black's advantage

(nnnnnn) They have no better move

(oooooo) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(pppppp) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(qqqqqq) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(rrrrrr) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(ssssss) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(tttttt) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(uuuuuu) This secures Black's advantage

(vvvvvv) They have no better move

(wwwwww) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(xxxxxx) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(yyyyyy) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(zzzzzz) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(aaaaaaa) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(bbbbbbb) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ccccccc) This secures Black's advantage

(ddddddd) They have no better move

(eeeeeee) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(fffffff) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ggggggg) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(hhhhhhh) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(iiiiiii) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(jjjjjjj) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(kkkkkkk) This secures Black's advantage

(lllllll) They have no better move

(mmmmmmm) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(nnnnnnn) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ooooooo) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ppppppp) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(qqqqqqq) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(rrrrrrr) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(sssssss) This secures Black's advantage

(ttttttt) They have no better move

(uuuuuuu) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately (vvvvvvv) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(wwwwwww) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(xxxxxxx) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(yyyyyyy) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(zzzzzzz) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(aaaaaaaa) This secures Black's advantage

(bbbbbbbb) They have no better move

(cccccccc) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(dddddddd) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(eeeeeeee) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ffffffff) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(gggggggg) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(hhhhhhhh) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(iiiiiiii) This secures Black's advantage

(jjjjjjjj) They have no better move

(kkkkkkkk) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(llllllll) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(mmmmmmmm) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(nnnnnnnn) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(oooooooo) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(pppppppp) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(qqqqqqqq) This secures Black's advantage

(rrrrrrrr) They have no better move

(ssssssss) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(tttttttt) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(uuuuuuuu) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(vvvvvvvv) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(wwwwwwww) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(xxxxxxxx) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(yyyyyyyy) This secures Black's advantage

(zzzzzzzz) They have no better move

(aaaaaaaaa) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(bbbbbbbbb) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(ccccccccc) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ddddddddd) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(eeeeeeeee) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(fffffffff) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ggggggggg) This secures Black's advantage

(hhhhhhhhh) They have no better move

(iiiiiiiii) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(jjjjjjjjj) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(kkkkkkkkk) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(lllllllll) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(mmmmmmmmm) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(nnnnnnnnn) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(ooooooooo) This secures Black's advantage

(ppppppppp) They have no better move

(qqqqqqqqq) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook, and win immediately

(rrrrrrrrr) Very well played; much better than choosing K at once.

(sssssssss) Has the King moved, White would have obtained a very embarrassing attack

(ttttttttt) Had they played Kt to Kt 3rd, Black contemplated moving Rook to R 6th with the purpose of [illegible] look for Bishop or Knight when attacked by either of them

(uuuuuuuuu) After this, the game is, we think, irretrievable; it requires, however, great caution on the part of the attack

(vvvvvvvvv) Highly ingenious, and the best move

(wwwwwwwww) This secures Black's advantage

(xxxxxxxxx) They have no better move

(yyyyyyyyy) Had they taken Kt P, attacking the two bishops, Black could take Kt with Rook

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The programme of the seventh Concert contained Symphonies by Beethoven and Onslow - the former in No 2 in D, and the latter in A. The Overtures were M Marti's "La Clemenza di Tito" and Weber's "Ruler of the spirits" the latter being encored. Onslow's work, clever as it is, proves how difficult it is for one of Introducing into these Concerts any symphonic novelties. Everything is ruled, in fact, by the colossal proportions of Beethoven's epic genius; and only Haydn and Mozart can be endured by way of contrast. Even the Mendelssohnians and Spohrites feel that a Philharmonic programme with an Overture, Symphony, and a dreary waste: and when it does come, it kills all the other instrumental productions. Where understands orchestral treatment, and there is no lack of melody in his subjects; but the divine fire is wanting -there is no genius. The Minuetto and the last movement satisfied the amateurs most; but there was no excitement, like that manifested afterwards, when the No. 2 of the glorious "Nine" presented itself. Onslow would have been delighted, had he been present, at the care and finish of the execution—thanks to Costa's sway over the band.

Madame Dulcken performed a MS. concerto in G minor, composed by Parish Alvars, the celebrated harp player. It is a very fine composition; the first movement is beautifully treated; the second subject is a charming cantabile, and the contrapuntal working of the ensemble was admirable. The slow movement with the stringed instruments con sordine is full of melodious phrases, a crescendo towards the close being an impassioned burst of feeling. The rondo is brilliant and excessively difficult, but the fairy fingers of Madame Dulcken triumphed over every intricacy. She never played better in her life. The pitch of the piano was not in accordance with the band, the heat of the weather having its effect. Nevertheless Spohr's violin concertino in E flat major, of so important and so complete a composition, but rendered remarkable by his grandeur of style and perfection of execution. The vocal selection was rather "low." The once popular duet from Meyerbeer, "Gl'avvinato Cavalier," from the "Crociato," did not go smoothly, the voices of Mdlle. Vera, Miss Poole, and Miss Bassano not amalgamating. The same artistes gave a trio from Rossini's "William Tell." Miss Poole, whose first appearance at the Philharmonic was a source of great gratification to the admirers of that modest and unassuming talent, sang the "Fac ut Portem," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," in her usual unaffected and simple style. Mdlle. Vera essayed Glück's "Che Faro," which proved quite a failure; she is a good musician with little or no voice, and ought never to sing out of a small room. The eighth and last Concert will be on the 29th inst., when Mdme Pleyel will perform.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

At the sixth meeting, on Tuesday afternoon, at Willis's Rooms, Vieuxtemps appeared for the first time this season, and was cordially greeted. The programme comprised Haydn's Quartet in F, No. 82: Mendelssohn's Trio in D Minor, Op 49; and Beethoven's Quartet in A, No. 5. The executants were Vieuxtemps (violin), Sainton (second violin), Hill (tenor), Piatti (violoncello), and Sterndale Bennett (piano). These beautiful inspirations of three great masters were gloriously rendered, and warmly applauded by the intelligent and sympathetic auditory. The Vice-President of the "Union," the Earl of Westmoreland, was present, with the Countess, and was cordially welcomed both by artists and amateurs.

The Director's Matinée Musicale takes place on Tuesday afternoon, when Vieuxtemps, Sivori, Sainton, Deloffre, Piatti, Kelerman, Hill, Howell, Madame Pleyel, and Pischek, will assist. As this is the only remuneration for the time and trouble given by the Director to the "Musical Union," he will, no doubt, be supported as he deserves to be.

MR. LUCAS'S MUSICAL EVENINGS.

The First Concert of a Second series of these excellent "Evenings" was given on Wednesday, at Mr. Lucas's residence in Barnes-street, the Earl of Westmoreland, the Earl of Falmouth, and a host of amateurs being present. A new arrangement has been made: Sainton and Blagrove alternating the parts as first and second violin. A new contra-bassist whose playing we last remarked at Dando's Crosby Hall parties - Mr. Pratten, was also introduced. Mr. Lucas, of course, was the violoncello; and Tolbecque and Hill, the tenors. The scheme comprised Haydn's Quartet No 2, of Op. 64: Mayseder's Septet, Op. 51: Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 62: and a MS Quintet in D major, by Mr. H. Leslie, a young amateur, who has fair talent for composition. The Quintet is full of beauties; most learnedly constructed, and well filled with graceful melodies. Mr. Leslie, we understand, has completed an opera on Walpole Otranto," which will be heard next season at Drury-Lane Theatre.

[illegible]

MR. BENEDICT.—The annual Monster Morning Concert of this composer and pianist was given on Monday, at the room of Her Majesty's Theatre, and was honoured by the presence of the Duke of Kent, the Duc d'Aumale, and the Duke of Cambridge. Although Grisi and Mario were not included in the attractions, there seemed to be no diminution in the at tendance. We rarely, however, recollect one of Benedict's concerts without many stars; and, with the two operatic companies of Lablache and Pischek, the English singers decidedly were superior to their foreign rivals. Miss Birch, Miss Bassano, Miss Dolby, and Mr. Bainforth, are better singers, in every respect, than Madame Montenegro, Madame Corbari, Madame Sanchioli, Madame Vera, Mdlle. Corbari, Madame Knispel, and Mdlle. De Ruppin. The town has been in undated this year with sentimental melodrames, to the great injury of our native talent. Of a programme of forty-three pieces, divided into three parts, which commenced at half-past one o'clock, and did not terminate until past six o'clock, we can say but little. Every such concert was occupied, and the hall was inconvenienced. There was no orchestra; a couple of pianofortes did duty for the vocal accompaniments, MM. de Glimes, Pilotti, Benedict, and Wallace officiating in turn. [illegible] Parish Alvars, harp; Lavigne, oboe; Piatti, violoncello; [illegible] Sax horns; Sivori and Vieuxtemps, violins; Lablache, Patti, Bassano, and Rousselot, violoncelli; and Madame Pleyel and [illegible] pianofortes.

Pischek, in a pirate's song, composed by Benedict, and John Parry in the "Sonnambula" scena, where he gave his "Foreign Affairs" and "Welsh Melodies." Archdeacon Hodges delivered the usual Times. The other artists who aided at this colossal entertainment, were Madame F. Lablache, Signori Brizzi, R. Costa, Ciabatta, Fornasari, Marras, Lablache, and Herr Hoenel. The pieces performed were Benedict's Concertante Variants, Dolcemente, and the Carnival of Venice; Verci, Recil Spohr, Geraldy, Costa, Vieuxtemps's Recital, Schubert, Linley, Paccini, Weber, &c. The items of the day were Pischek's Welsh Air, Parry, and Madame Pleyel's duet in the "Sonnambula," Piatti's Pirate Song, and a grand scena [illegible] musical enjoyment. The toilettes on such occasions are the guides for provincial civilians. It was scribbled, sketched, and described in every possible and impossible fashion, to listen to the bates of artists, good, bad, and indifferent, who may be assembled. Art has nothing to do with such affairs—it is a speculation on the one hand, and a love of notoriety on the other; and the beaufacare and the public are no doubt equally satisfied

MR. MOSCHELES.—The "farewell" of artists are somewhat suspicious: they retire to return, whether prompted by fame or by finance. We know not whether Moscheles, who gave a "Farewell Morning Concert," on Wednesday, is serious. He certainly goes to the Leipsic Academy, to teach the piano to his Teutonic host, but we incline to suspect that he will come next season to say, "How are you?" He has been a lucky Professor. He has amassed a large fortune here, and he goes to Germany to spend it. It would be idle to affect, further, that they receive him for anything. He is an unmatched performer, and nothing more. As a very clever composer, and a very enjoyable pianist, but few think that he has done. He has he communicated to his pupils much of his genius, and to do no more than he could easily do. Once or twice a season, and timed them to a second. What does he bequeath us? Nothing! He takes his learning with him—much good may it do the Germans. He has given us no new pianoforte music, nor any of twenty artists, to perform overtures and concertos. For shame, Moscheles! Why do you not die game, and give us the Philharmonic band, as an artistical legacy? Then we might have a glorious year "Jena and Are" overture, as the last work of the composer. Or a new pianoforte with your fine playing. Is it not distressing that such dread speculation should be [illegible] and with genius ability? The "Sonate Symphonique," although dedicated to the King of the French, and idealized by Madame Pleyel's exquisite performance, was a terribly dry affair. It was long, tedious, incoherent, and pondérous, fatiguing the auditory to the last degree. Mr. Moscheles put in requisition the talents of Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Rainforth, Madame Pischek, Madame Knyvett, Herr Hoenel, and Herr Pischek, as vocalists. Some MS songs of Moscheles were given, but they were hardly efficient. A Concerto, by S. Bach, for pianoforte and violoncello (Hiller and De Folyi) might have proved curious if given in the original form, but it was "hashed" up for the occasion. The room was well attended, and Moscheles had no reason to complain of his receipts.

[illegible] Concerts. The fourth and last programme of the present season, on Monday evening, contained a selection from Haydn's "Seasons" and Handel's "Acis and Galatea." Penaloro [illegible] Miss Birch, Mr. Bodda, Mr. Bennett, and in the latter [illegible] Mr. Phillips, as the nymph. Elliott's Glee, "Come, [illegible] last pleasures," was encored; it was brilliantly rendered by Miss Birch, Miss Rawes, Messrs. Lockey [illegible] Bennett. Down in a flowery valley" Pearsall's Glee, "O [illegible] Mozart's "Benedictus," Dr. Cooke's Glee, "Dan I dove" Chorus, "Zadok!" and Spofforth's Glee, "Elge la sera spesso," were [illegible] in the gleanings. Miss Birch sang Handel's "Sweet bird," with Blagrove's violin obligato; and Miss Rawes, Handel's "Lascia ch'io pianga," from "Armida:" and Dr. Arne's Air, "O, too lovely," from "Artaxerxes." Both ladies were encored. Concerts will be given next season, on the alternate Philharmonic nights, and will be [illegible] well patronised.

MR. HOWARD GLOVER. This young and promising composer has son of Mr. Glover, the actress. He gave a Concert on Tuesday evening [illegible] the Mornington-place [illegible] and several clever pieces from his MS. op [illegible] were sung by Miss S. Fower, Miss Cubitt, Miss F. Hughes, Mrs. Alexander, Madame Rainforth, and Mr. H. Sapio. The other vocalists were [illegible] tinuse, her first appearance in this country, Miss Rainforth, [illegible] Parker, Mr. Allbright, Mr. John Parry, Harris Hoenel and new series of six compositions for [illegible] Players, the violoncellist; Lindsay Sloper, pianist; and the Distin Family, Sax horns. Mr. Howard Glover and Mr. Wallace were the accompanyists. Mrs Glover recited Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," [illegible] was called on to execute it well.

MISS AND MASTER DAY.—Miss Day, almost since she was an infant, has been [illegible] accomplished pianiste, and her brother, Master C. E. Day, has [illegible] equal facility on the violin. Their Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, enabled them to display their abilities to the best advantage. Maurer's celebrated concertante for four violins was brilliantly executed by Sivori, Sainton, Willy, and Master Day. Kellermann performed a violoncello fantasia, and there was Mr. Willy's select band to play overtures. Mr. Wallace and Mr. T. Cooke were the accompanyists. The vocalists were Miss Hawes, Miss Messent, Mrs. Weiss, Mdlle. Schmitz, Mr. Bartleti, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Weiss, and Signor Farlado. Barret and Baumann played, with Miss Day, Rud's trio for the pianoforte, oboe, and bassoon.

MR. J. B. CRAMER.—The performance of violin quartets on the pianoforte is not of itself very interesting, but the beautiful touch of the veteran, John Cramer, with a clever executant, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, and Mr. Mercer, the contest with Barret (oboe), Lazarus (clarionet), Baumann (bassoon), and Puzzi (horn), Mr. Cramer proved that the intellect was unimpaired, if the physical power did not exist, as in the days of yore.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was repeated on Wednesday night at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, but the attendance was not so great as usual. On Monday morning Mr. Lindsay Sloper has a concert; and Madame Zablowski, a matinée musicale. In the evening, the concert of Madame Bompiani and Madame Caire Hendrick, Mr. Wilson's entertainment, and the eighth and last meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society. On Tuesday morning, Mr. Ella's matinée musicale at Willis's Room. On Wednesday morning, Madame Pleyel's third pianoforte recital at the Hanover-square Rooms; Madame Dulcken at Willis's Rooms; Signor Janetti's, at the Opera House Room; the evening, Huish Choral Meeting, and Mr Lucas's sixth Musical evening. On Thursday, Mdlle. de Rappilin's matinée and the "Melodists." Friday morning, Miss Macready's Concert. On Saturday morning, Signor Emiliani's matinée. Last night, the Western Madrigal Society celebrated its anniversary Festival at Freemason's Hall, when Mr J Calkin's Madrigal was performed. Yesterday morning, Mdlle. Bassano gave a morning concert, and Mr. Ganter completed, last night, his Musical Lectures. This morning, is the fourth and last concert of the Royal Academy of Music, and the performance of Beethoven's Quartet, with the fugue by Sivori, Sainton, Hill and Rousselot, in Harley-street.

M. Jullien's Concerts, this week, have been affected by the heat of the weather, though every precaution has been adopted to secure a free ventilation. Pischek, Herr Hoenel, Herr Goldberg, Mdlle. Goldberg, Miss Birch, and the Misses Williams, have been all well received, although Pischek is, of course, the "great gun." The decorations of the house are in excellent taste; and the Ballrooms sprinkling of the real with artificial flowers has been well managed. The orchestra has been lowered, and brought more into the pit; and the partitions of the dress circle have been removed. The house has altogether an animated appearance, with its pink, white, and gold draperies.

Madame Montenegro, who was so well received at Benedict's Concert, sang with great success at Drury-Lane Theatre, on Tuesday evening, in a scena from "Norma."

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.—Standigl has been engaged, and will sing in Mendelssohn's new oratorio of "Elijah," which is now in the hands of Mr. Bartholomew, for adaptation to English words. The choral effects in this work are much spoken of. Mendelssohn conducted great Choral Festivals, at Liege, on Sunday last; and, on Saturday, at Cologne. He will arrive in London in August, to conduct the Birmingham Festival.

THE HEREFORD FESTIVAL.—The 123rd meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester, will take place in Hereford this year, on the 6th of September. The band will be led by T. Cooke and Willy. The vocalists already engaged are Miss Birch, the Misses Williams, Messrs Hobbs, Machin, Phillips, and Lockey. Mr. G. T. Smith, the organist of the Cathedral, will be the conductor.

Ernestina Grisi, the vocalist, sister of Carlotta Grisi, the danseuse, has arrived in London. Mrs H. R. Bishop, after a long continental tour, has arrived in London. Sivori departs for the United States in September. Bochsa, the harpist, is in London. Pischek leaves for Germany on the 2nd of July; he has been offered an engagement to sing in Italian at Her Majesty's Theatre.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

This great Establishment, during the past week, has been more than usually brilliant. The splendour of the new ballet, and its novel character, have rendered it a gibly attractive to the habitués. It naturally creates a deep interest in the lovers of art and poetry than the general run of these compositions—the [illegible] When the curtain rises, the spectator is unceremoniously transported to the East. The scenery, the dresses, the attitudes of the attendants of Aurungzebe the rich, warm colouring of the whole, all warn the beholder that he is carried to a distant and far different land. The illusion is perfect.

The palette of this scene deserves much attention. The Mogul Emperor is seated on a throne formed of peacocks' feathers: he is overshadowed by a splendid canopy, brought forward to assist the effect. Behind him are ranged the Guard of the Durbar is open to the air, and, beyond, is a charming [illegible] end of landscape. The corps de ballet, in large numbers, grouped within the Hall, in Oriental costumes, give the finishing touch to the scene, which we have seldom seen surpassed, although that of the "Feast of Roses," at the end, is, perhaps, still superior. Here we have a splendid open pavilion of modern form, most brilliantly lighted up with gas lamps, while, beyond, is the far famed Vale of Cashmere, with the moon shining over the lake: in front, the exquisite movements of the dancers in one of the most charming and graceful of the ballets. The dresses of Schiller, Perrot, and Mdlle. Fanny Cerito, surrounded by Louise Taglioni and her six attendant nymphs, with St Leon hovering near, forms a group worthy the pencil of [illegible] Lepoids last scene, all the resources of scenery, action. The "Pas de Corbeille," comprising all the sylphides, is extremely graceful; and the two pretty children, Julienne and Lamoureux, dancing amid the flower baskets, give to it a most delightful effect. These and the "Pas Symbolique," in the first tableau described by us in our last week's notice—are the most remarkable choral dances if we may so call them of the ballet. The "Pas de Chiboone" formed a most brilliant finale, full of fanciful grace. In the dance, not only the feet, but the hands, the arms, the whole person, take a part; and, together, give the character to the dance; and, therefore, it is admirably suited to Cerito, one of whose great merits is that her head and every gesture always correspond to the movements of her feet.

All the performers in this ballet are deserving of the highest praise. Although we may regret that Perrot has no saltatory feats to perform, every one must be [illegible] with the admirable manner in which he directs the general evolutions, and does a character to which, in a ballet, it must have been difficult to impart much effect—that of Pedlodon. St Leon, in the last tableau, dances most gracefully and with great effect of his co-operation in the "Pas de Nuit" is excellent. As for Louise Taglioni, she improves daily. She is rapidly advancing towards the highest rank of her art, and the thunders of applause with which her pas seul is hailed every encored, testify to the position she already holds in the favour of the public.

We must not quit the subject of the ballet without alluding to one of the most striking scenes it contains that where, on the scene of the pavilion being drawn up, the sleeping travellers are disclosed to view, while the morning sun illuminates the picture.

We have now spent more than our wonted space on the description of the ballet; but the lyrical performances of the week have been no less objects of interest. On Saturday, "Lucia di Lammermoor," with Castelan and Tamberlik in the principal parts, "Lucrezia Borgia;" and on Thursday, "I Puritani," delighted the ears of every lover of melody. Time failing us to do justice to all these, we must specially remark on the improvement in Mario so visible in the part of Gennaro. We have heard the charming air, "Di pescator ignobile," given with more real feeling and exquisite taste and at the same time he gave it with perfect simplicity, not thought it necessary to make a single change or fioriture, except the usual cadenza. We did not, however, admire the introduction immediately after this air of the duo from "Adelia," "Nelle tue braccie vivere"—an indifferent morceau of one of Donizetti's poorest operas. It is rarely that we approve of Mario's introductions, and in this instance it was quite out of place. Far more felicitous was the introduction of "Dolce Venezia," a composition of Alari's, in the last act—this air being admirably suited to develop the resources of Mario's voice.

We must not omit to remark the exquisite taste of our tenor's costume in this opera. In respect of dress, he is marvelled except by Formasari, but on this occasion there was more than the usual recherché, and it developed the manly and graceful figure of Mario. In fact the costumes in this opera was very well executed by Brambilla, and she gave the pretty drinking song "Il segreto per esser felice" with much spirit.

Scarcely at any time in the recollection of the present race of play-goers, have the theatres been doing so badly. Although the entertainments, at all of them, are certainly above the average degree of merit, yet the attendances, at first price, are scanty, even in the upper tiers, usually devoted to the free-list and and, at no time during the evening, are the benches anywhere more than [illegible] ed. There are general rumours abroad, of premature terminations to the season: and, at Drury Lane and the Surrey Theatres, these appear likely to be realised.

Of course, the cause of all this is the continued lovely weather; which, whilst it is rendering the place of the theatrical treasurer almost a sinecure, is going high towards making the fortunes of the proprietors of the al fresco resorts for the amusement-seekers. Vauxhall, the Surrey Gardens, and Cremorne, are crowded almost every evening: and a person standing on any of the bridges, will see by the balloons travelling about, and fireworks going up in all direct ons, will the swarming steamboats setting their way up and down the river, that the masses are all for out-of-door revelry.

Writing this, as we do, in the middle of the week, we have some hopes that our climate is about to be rescued from the oblo[illegible] The joke of "the summer having [illegible] walk" [illegible] year, and the fears entertained, by observant meteorologists, that, in the course of a few seasons, we should make hay in January, and burn the Yule log and play at snowballing in Midsummer Day, must have been quite dispelled. In fact, for the last twenty years, we have been thinking that the old poets, in their rhapsodies about May and June, did not altogether romance as strongly as we always imagined they did.

It is certainly very hot. Unshaded pavements glow even through the soles of boots: stucco[illegible], in wind w boxes, gradually forms a hortus siccus; and, in retired streets, the houses appear to be inhabited only by hard-working pianos, when sound through the open windows all day long. Boys cluster round the depôts of the Welham Lake ice, as though they thought the mere sight of the large crystal blocks would cool them; and there appears a chance of Welham Lake itself sharing the fate of the rivers during the progress of the army of Xerxes, and being entirely sucked away by sherry coblers. Here no concert audiences, seen from on high, present nothing to the view but a sea of agitated fans, and ladies are borne out fainting at six o'clock P.M., when they are not half over; and people begin to think that the voyages to the North Pole, cannot have been such hardships after all; and engaged couples long for love, and a cottage on a glacier. Steam-boat engineers, and cooks in large families, have excite our commiseration; and the man who passes the greater portion of his life at the bottom of the tank at the Polytechnic Institution, our envy. Nobody thinks of any more evening parties, although all the doors are removed for strained muslin, and all the thorough drafts that can be secured, are engaged for the evening at any sacrifice. Nobody any longer takes out-of-town walks because it is fine; and, to return to our subject, which these speculations upon "the prevailing epidemic," as we may reasonably term the heat, have entirely turned our thoughts from—nobody appears desirous of going into a theatre.

Yet the managements are not idle. The Cushmans have returned to the HAYMARKET, where, also, a new three-act piece is in preparation. The speedy advent of Madame Rachel is announced by Mr. Mitchell, at the ROYAL ADELPHI, and that spirited impresario always keeps his word; and Mr. R. B. Peake has a romantic drama in rehearsal at the ADELPHI. The LYCEUM announces the last three nights of "Robin Hood;" so we suppose some striking novelty is ready to take its place; and the speedy re-appearance of Madame Vestris and Mr. Charles Mathews may be looked for at the PRINCESS'.

The Gardens above spoken of have seriously injured the transpontine theatres, as a chance visit to any of them will directly show. The water-piece at the SURREY has been withdrawn—albeit we conceive that an immense number of fountains on the stage would be the most refreshing things people could look at this weather—and a blood-heat melodrama, "The Ravens of Orleans," has been put up in its place. Even Madame Vestris and Mr. C. Mathews do not attract. The audience are most considerate in their applause, when they are in the house, and nothing can go better than "The Swiss Cottage," "The Welsh Girl," and other of the most favourite pieces from the répertoire of these clever artists; but the main difficulty appears to be to lure the play-goers into the house.

ASTLEY'S appears in a similar predicament; and the counter-attraction of Tourniaire's excellent equestrian corps at Vauxhall may still further operate against the interests of this house. And yet the present piece of the "Sikh Invasion" is one of the best things of the kind we have seen here during Mr. Batty's management. There is a greater share of probability in the construction than is ordinarily the case in representations of our foreign victories, and the groupings and evolutions are arranged with some artistic taste The language, for an equestrian piece, is of a superior kind; and, what is a greater novelty than anything, there is not a comic Irishman in the cast, a character without whose aid, as we have always learned from the Astley drama, not one of our victories anywhere could ever have been gained. All the accessories are carefully placed on the stage; and the correctness of much of the detail may be attributed to the fact that the piece was compiled for the theatre by a gentleman thoroughly intimate with the scenes and manners, the use of which permitting, to enjoy a long run. We think a little change would be desirable in the Scenes in the Circle. The [illegible] are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] variety; the invention requires as much taxing to produce new effects in the arena as on the stage. The Blue General Tom Thumb finished the entertainments with the burlesque of "Jack and the Beanstalk," in the course of which, about six boards, he seems even smaller than ever. His Polka, which we take to be an introduction since he appeared at the Lyceum, was uproariously applauded. An arrangement respecting fees to the box-keepers at this theatre, as well as at the Surrey, deserves to be generally adopted.

LITERATURE.

FRENCH DOMESTIC COOKERY, COMBINING ELEGANCE WITH ECONOMY. Bogue.

"Thirty years' extended intercourse with the Continent," says the Editor of this work, has, unquestionably introduced great changes in English cookery; but, these benefits have been diminished by the popular error as to the relative cost of French and English cookery." The preparation of this volume will, we should say, disabuse the latter mind of this false impression: it is, states the Preface, an adapted translation, of the "Mrs. Randell" of France—the "Cuisinière de la Campagne et de la Ville," which, throughout France, enjoys a circulation co extensive with that of the celebrated "Domestic Cookery, by a Lady," in England. The French Work has reached its thirtieth edition, extending to upwards of 80,000 copies, and is to be found in nearly every affable-class house in France. Of the new English Cookery being most expensive, economy is a recommendation of the French kitchen: it is the best cookery, and that is the cheapest; for, as sensibly observed by Ude, "by good cookery, we make the most of every thing; by bad cookery, the least."

The present volume is stated to be "an adapted translation" from the French work: it contains some 1200 receipts, chiefly in French cookery; but, with a considerable infusion of the German, Polish, Spanish, and Italian kitchens. A single glance at the [illegible] of the work will reveal the reader of the great number of articles employed in foreign cookery as compared with that of the native kitchen: and, when we add, as a joint of meat is "pitchforked" into a saucepan of water, set upon the fire, and thenceforth cooked: in France, on the contrary, it is not so much of a lenteur alter affaire, and this plain boiling of the cookery of savage Britain" the most eminent writers on dietetics have proved food so cooked to be wholesome, and palatable in proportion as it protects the appetite against the disadvantageous monotony of plain food.

Besides the Receipts for Cookery, this work describes "Culinary Implements and Processes, new or little used," illustrated by several engravings of the articles recommended, as new stoves, ovens, &c.: there is also, a chapter on "The Arrangements of the Table," which contains some economical and tasteful hints: that for making a plateau, as in France, is at once cheap and ingenious, and more effective than when of the "pressed metals." There are, likewise, chapters of Domestic Receipts, which scarcely come into the cook's category; and of the Management of French Wines in the cellar, and their Service at Table.

Altogether, this work deserves encouragement: it must be considered as a novelty among cookery-books; and, as this desirable quality is to be attained, not by any increased outlay, but rather by economy of present materials, the book is certainly, an advance for the "cooking and" [illegible] here is also, a chapter of Invalid Cookery, which, if carefully studied by the sick-nurse, may, undoubtedly, much information which will be acceptable to persons of adult years. The book appears to be admirably adapted for education at home

THE BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL. By HENRY TAYLOR. Groombridge and Sons.

The sale of two large impressions of this really practical work proves the interest taken in the wonderful economy of the Honey-bee, its management, and [illegible] plete preservation. The author, though an amateur bee-keeper in the main, [illegible] practical utility, and strips the subject of many errors and prejudices, which are too apt to be engrafted upon stores of natural wonder. In this little volume every page of the Bee is manly described, and illustrated with wood-cuts of the several combs and fittings. Indeed, it would scarcely be possible to produce upon the subject a work of more direct utility.

A MANUAL OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By the Rev. C. J. SMITH, M.A. Cleaver This little work is intended for the use of the Classical and the Upper Classes in Parochial Schools. The compiler has taken the principles in general from Dr. Russell's excellent "English Etymology and Syntax," a work of Edgeworth Practical Education, and strips the subject of many errors and prejudices, which are too apt to be engrafted upon stores of natural wonder. In this little volume every page of the Bee is manly described, and illustrated with wood-cuts of the several combs and fittings. Indeed, it would scarcely be possible to produce upon the subject a work of more direct utility.

STEPS TO KNOWLEDGE; OR, CYCLOPÆDIA FOR YOUTH. By MRS. BOLTANE. Darton.

These "Steps" are in the catechetical form, which the title-page would scarcely lead the reader to expect. It aims at giving Familiar Explanations of Things we see, hear, and read of," more especially Natural Objects, and the Discoveries and Inventions of Science and Art. Such a work is not to be judged by its title-page: it is by no means an easy matter to produce an unexceptionable book of the class, so as correctly to combine the practical with the instructive. In the many Pamphlets, Questions and Answers of the Juvenile Library, there is, also, a chapter of "Things to be Remembered," which, undoubtedly, much information which will be acceptable to persons of adult years. The book appears to be admirably adapted for education at home

THE CHILD'S FIRST STEP TO SCOTTISH HISTORY. By ANNE RODWELL. Simpkin.

A neatly-executed précis of the History of Scotland, intended as a companion to the Authoress' little History of England. The framework is—Mamma reads aloud the story, and Arthur and Jane occasionally ask questions, somewhat too clever for children, as usual in such cases; but tending to give the little book an air of domestic familiarity calculated to impress the tender minds of children. The work is liberally illustrated with wood-cuts.

OPENING OF THE EASTERN UNION RAILWAY.

THE COLCHESTER STATION.

THIS line, which extends from Colchester to Ipswich, (17 miles,) was opened on the 11th instant, by the Directors and their friends, with the usual ceremonies on such occasions.

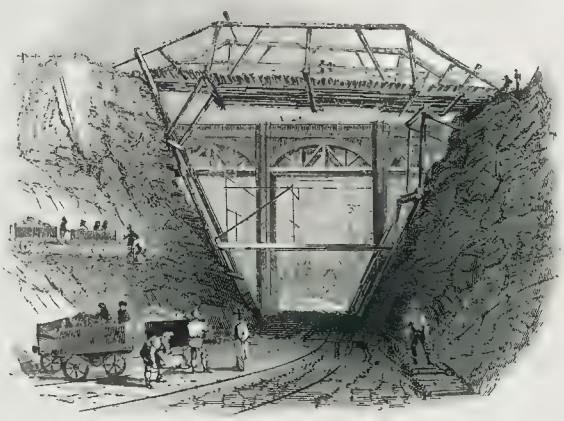
At half-past ten o'clock, a train started from Ipswich, conveying Mr. J. C. Cobbold, the Chairman of the Eastern Union, and most of the Directors, with many shareholders and residents in Ipswich, to Colchester. Here they were met by a special train from London, which brought Mr. G. Hudson, M.P., Chairman of the Eastern Counties; Capt. Gladstone, M.P.; Mr. J Locke, the Engineer; and a large body of the friends and supporters of the new line. The two trains were then quickly united, and, propelled by two powerful engines belonging to the Eastern Union Company, soon reached Ipswich, where they were welcomed with all sorts of joy from an immense concourse. The terminus here has been remarkably well chosen as to its locality: it stands on a most beautiful spot, close to the town, environed by rural scenery, and commanding a fine view of the river Orwell and the adjacent country. Here the joint-trains were welcomed by a host of ladies, located in a handsome stand, built for their special accommodation. Guns were fired, bells were rung, and all was rejoicing at the advent of good friends. The company then walked into the grounds of Mr. C. F. Gower, bordering on the river Orwell, who most kindly lent them for the occasion. Here an excellent luncheon was set out by the Directors, which proved duly attractive. The little steamer, the River Queen, was moored alongside the garden, and was soon filled with a party, including the two Chairmen, who had made a trip to Harwich.

At five o'clock, some 200 gentlemen dined at the assembly rooms Mr. C. Cobbold in the chair, supported on his right by the Mayor of Ipswich, the Mayor of Norwich, Lord Rendlesham, &c.; on his left by Mr. G. Hudson, Capt. Gladstone, M.P., Rev. – De Grey, &c. After the usual toasts, Mr Cobbold proposed the health of Mr G. Hudson, and said that whatever differences had existed between the Eastern Counties and the Eastern Union Railways, he hoped that they would now be forgotten by all. Mr. Hudson, in returning thanks, assured Mr. Cobbold that he would promote the joint interests of the two railways The dinner was highly relished: the supply of champagne being ever abundant, some "railway" songs, written for the occasion, created much mirth. One song proclaimed that directors liked "perfect flats to work upon"—a joke received with tumults of laughter—and a hope expressed that Hudson's land would extend as far as Hudson's river, seemed to tickle the fancy and illume the English face of the great "king" exceedingly.

Meanwhile, the amusement of the people was not forgotten. At about half past six in the evening, Mr. Green, the veteran aeronaut, made a splendid ascent in his Albion balloon, from the old Ipswich Grammar School playground, to the delight of thousands of spectators. After remaining for some time almost stationary over the town, the balloon took an easterly direction, and the descent was safely effected at Bucklesham. At ten o'clock, a magnificent display of fireworks took place on the floating dock. At the same hour, a special train was in readiness to convey the Londoners back, and at one o'clock, A.M., they were received at the Shoreditch terminus with shouts by the whole army of guards and porters belonging to the Eastern Counties.

The principal engineer of this newly-opened line is Mr. Locke, who, at the dinner, acknowledged himself to have been greatly assisted by Mr. Bruff, in the details of the works. They are admirably executed throughout; and the construction of the line has not cost £300,000; although it was estimated at £500,000.

We have engraved three of the most important works on the line. First is the Colchester Station, a handsome pile, in the Italian style. Next is a noble bridge erected over the deepest part of the cut near Brantham, and consisting of five arches, each of 30 feet span. The third view is taken on the Suffolk side of the Ouse, or Manningtree River, which forms the boundary of the counties of Essex and Suffolk. The bridges are called the Catwade Bridges.



BRANTHAM BRIDGE AND CUTTING.

VIGNETTES OF WATERLOO.

LA HAYE SAINTE.

A few months since, one of our metropolitan Artists—a distinguished Member of one of the Societies of Painters in Water Colours—made the excursion from Brussels to Waterloo; and, while on the Field, sketched these very interesting memorials of his visit. Such was the origin of the annexed Illustrations; and it will, doubtless, bespeak the Reader's confidence in their picturesque authenticity.

First is the "Farm of La Haye Sainte," about half-way down in the hollow which separated the two armies, and in which the most bloody combats took place, close to the roadside on the right. A terrible carnage took place in the house and garden, and the building was riddled with shot. Close to the house is shown the grave of Shaw, the valorous Life-guardsman; and not far off, a heap of the bodies of men, intermixed with horses, were buried in one common grave. Near this spot, too, Picton was killed, and Ponsonby wounded: one of the attacks against the English was led by Ney in person; four Scotch regiments were engaged in this part of the fight:

WALL AROUND THE CHATEAU OF HOUGOUMONT, WITH THE ROUGH LOOP-HOLES MADE BY THE BRITISH.

La Haye, bear witness! sacred is its height,
And sacred is it truly from that day:
For never braver blood was spent in fight
Than Briton here hath mingled with the clay.
Set where thou wilt thy foot, thou scarce can'st tread
Here on a spot unhallowed by the dead.
Here was it that the Highlanders withstood
The tide of hostile power, received its weight
With resolute strength, and stemm'd and turned the flood;
And fitly here, as in that Grecian strait,
The funeral stone might say—Go, traveller, tell
Scotland, that in our duty here we fell.

Three of our Illustrations are views of the "Château of Hougoumont, or Goumont, about three-quarters of a mile from La Haye Sainte, and decidedly the most interesting spot in the Field of Waterloo, not only for its importance in the history of the battle, but because it still exhibits marks of the dreadful conflict. In Murray's excellent Handbook, the place is thus minutely described:

"It was an old-fashioned Flemish château, with walled gardens and farm offices attached to it. Had these buildings been formed for a fortress to resist the kind of assault which they endured, they could scarcely have possessed greater advantages; being surrounded on all sides by strong walls, which the Duke himself caused to be further fortified by breaking loopholes in them, through which the garrison, if it may be so called, directed the fire of their musketry. But, notwithstanding its strength, so furious were the attacks, and so disproportionably great the number of assailants, that it could not possibly have held out, but for the bravery of the troops by whom it was maintained. The orchard and garden were several times in the possession of the French, but they never succeeded in forcing the enclosures which surrounded the house. This little citadel, though set on fire by the howitzers, and almost gutted by the flames, was bravely and judiciously maintained to the very last by the Coldstream Guards.

SHRINE ON THE FIELD.

Toward the grove the wall with musket holes
Is pierced: our soldiers here their station held
Against the foe, and many were the souls
Then from their fleshy tenements expell'd.
Six hundred Frenchmen here have been burnt alive by,
And underneath one mound their bones and ashes lie.

"At the beginning of the battle, the house stood in the centre of a wood; but the trees were so mutilated by cannon shot during the action, that few remained, and these have since been grubbed up. The old house, however, still exhibits a shattered and patched-up appearance; and the walls of the orchard retain the loopholes formed by the English, who, by this means, converted them into a sort of battery: whilst on the cubicle they present a broken surface crumbling to the touch, from the effect of the French musketry so long and vainly directed against them. 'The Belgian yeoman's garden wall was the safeguard of Europe, whose destinies hung on the possession of this house.' In the little chapel is shown a crucifix, saved (as the peasants say) by miracle from the flames, which, after destroying all about it, stopped on reaching the foot of the cross. The autographs of Byron, Southey, and Wordsworth, were once to be discovered among the names which cover the walls."

The other illustrations show memorials to the slain: one of them the Obelisk raised in honour of the Hanoverian officers of the German Legion, who fell on the spot.

One-and-thirty years have rolled away since this mighty conflict: and, although it is now regarded by Englishmen with a far different feeling to that in which it was once visited, it is beginning to assume "that undefinable but impressive halo which the lapse of ages throws around a celebrated spot."

Yes! Agincourt may be forgot,
And Cressy be an unknown spot,
And Blenheim's name be new;
But still in story and in song,
In many an age remembered long,
Shall live the towers of Hougoumont
And Fields of Waterloo.

A Correspondent, imbued with generous sympathy, has penned the following lines on this (Thursday) the Anniversary:

HANOVERIAN OBELISK.

THE WATERLOO OF PEACE.—JUNE, 1846.

"Time, the Avenger! on this morn
What see'st thou?
Scowls Moloch on the yellowing corn,
With baleful brow?
Cheers he the roaring squadrons on,
'Gainst Ligny, Quat' Bras, Mount St. John?
Or, hurling 'gainst old Goumont's wall,
The bristling bayonet, crushing ball,
Shouts 'Vive Napoleon!'"

"Those days are gone!"
Responds old Time,
"The sun hath shone
Which blazon'd crime.
Acclaimas shall cease!
A nobler field has England won,
Than ever conqu'ror gazed upon,
The Waterloo of Peace!"

"Yet, Time! those were—'Three Glorious Days'
At Waterloo—
When through the battle's crimson haze,
Gaul's Eagle flew!"

"I saw them ravening for their prey,
When charged the brave, led on by Ney,
'Le Brave des Braves,' when nobly fell
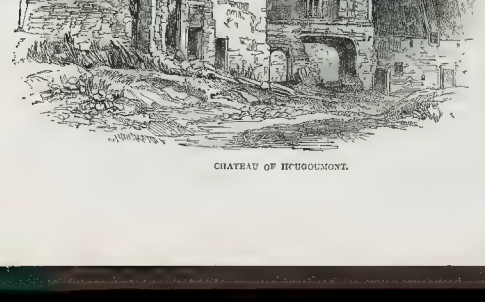
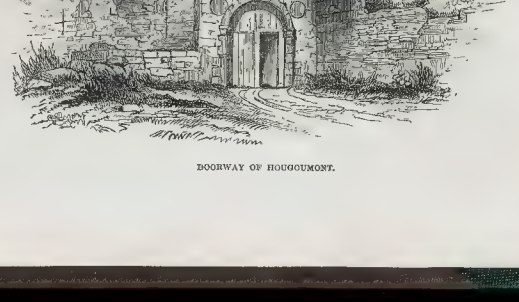
Thousands beneath the shot and shell
Mowing their murderous way.
I saw them, too,
Those Eagles dire,
When they withdrew
From England's ire,
Shrieking at war's caprice! ...
But soars the Tricolor again,
Its Three most Glorious Days attain,
A Waterloo of Peace."

"Time, the Instructor! which be ours,
'The Glorious Three,'
When civil triumph wreath, the flow'rs
Of Liberty?"....



CHATEAU OF HOUGOUMONT.



DOORWAY OF HOUGOUMONT.

"The Fr ct Day beamed in '29,
When S avery (of the soul divine!)
Fled, fled for ever, from these shores,
Wherein has from earth now adores
God without fear or fine!

I se e the brave
In hym per fect bale
Suffor, like slave,
A stigma u le
Till Conviction gran'd release.
'Twas there Religious Freedom bound
Her brow with palm — with olive crown'd—
The Waterloo of Peace!"

"When was the Second Day, Old Time
That Peace arose,
Victorious, in her arms sublime,
O'er Freedom's foes?"

"It came, long struggling through the storm,
Which roar'd around the barque Reform.
It came, when Albion, in her might,
Flung from her breast Corruption's blight
The Constitution's worm!
And that day's close
Was doubly bless'd:
Then cease'd the woes
Of s rvos, oppress'd
Worse than in Rome or Greece.
It bade the Negro's soul rejoice,
And bade, with exulting voice,
The Waterloo of Peace!"

"Time, the Emancipator! when
Beamed Day the Third

When triumphed England's citizen
O'er laws absurd?"

"That day arose when famine pale
Wildly invoked the friendly sail,
Whose colours bore 'Free Trade and Barter
O'er all the world, boon Nature's Charter
That Charter shall be —
This day, though can —
Is not yet past;
By clouds of gloom
Its even'g

And muttering threats increase.
Yet fear not! Ere the set of sun
The wreath of Ceres shall be s om —
The Waterloo of Peace!"

"Time! lovest thou yon heavy cloud,
Whose ev'le crown
May well eclipse the brightest leaf
Of war's renown?"

"Love him! I love to shield his life
Who shrinks from fratricidal strife;
Prizing his country above
Private and party ties I love
That chief with wisdom t e
Proud is his name
On battle-field:
But his great fame
Be Peace is shall.
Eternal be its lease!
A — — Tha, I exclaimed Old Time,
"From age to age re-echoed shall re sollins
THE WATERLOO OF PEACE!"

NATIONAL SPORTS.

MARTIAL as the old — we will call him, to mark the distinction between him and his son, as we are wont to distinguish the two Pangs used to introduce into one of his "At Homes" the story of an ancient Cockney that formed an item in a water-party, once upon a time, to Richmond. The old gentleman, when at last fairly seated, found anything but comfortable, by the time Kew-bridge was doubled, appeared the very picture of despair. "Why don't you enjoy yourself, old Vinegar face?" cried one of the company, with pleasure coming out of every pore; "why don't you enjoy yourself, as I do? way aint you happy, old Never-smile?" "Oh, it's all very fine for you to talk," answered the antique citizen: "nobody has for you to talk about being happy; but you would not enjoy yourself so very much I dare say, if, like me, you was sitting among the knives and forks. This is apropos to the sports and pastimes of the — — —

JUST OUT, PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE,
THE COMING HOME.
A COMIC PANORAMA, DRAWN BY LEECH.
[illegible] and Co., Strand. RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Sudge-row; WESLEY, [illegible]

VESTIGES of the NATURAL HISTORY of CREATION.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

Just published, Second Edition, post 8vo., cloth, 5s.,
EXPLANATIONS; with a Postscript. By the Author of "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation."
JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

NATIONAL UNIFORMITY of GAUGE. A Short Letter to [illegible]
[illegible] commissioners, the general proposals of the Board of Trade. Just published, price 6d.; by W. STEPHENSON 12 and 1 Parliament-street.

MARRIAGE PRESENT.
Just published, price Six Shillings,
INFANCY AND PARENTAL LOVE. A Didactic and [illegible]
[illegible] BARCLAY and Sons, 107, Piccadilly and W. OSTELL, 24 Hart-street, Bloomsbury

Now ready, purple cloth, gilt, price 3s.,
DR. MANTELL'S WONDERS of GEOLOGY; or, a POPULAR [illegible] of the Structure and Revolutions of the Earth. New and Enlarged Edition (Seventh); with 14 Illustrations, 2 Coloured. "There could not [illegible] to convey some of the grandest truths in geology."—American Journal of Science.
REEVE, Brothers, King William-street, Strand.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d.,
DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.
72 Columns, Large Folio, Price 6d. Editor and Proprietor, DOUGLAS JERROLD.
Containing numerous Original Articles by the Principal and eminent Literary Associates, and being in every respect a full and efficient Newspaper, advocating the Liberal Principles of the Age.
No. 28, Strand, where Prospectuses may be had Gratis, and of any Town or Country Newsman.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.
Mr. Mitchell, Publisher to her Majesty, has the honour to announce that he will shortly publish
AN AUTHENTIC PORTRAIT of the DUKE of WELLINGTON, from a Picture recently painted by the CHEVALIER DORSAY, from sittings granted by His Grace, and engraved in the first style of Mezzotinto, by [illegible] Engraving [illegible] Letters, with Autograph, £3 [illegible] Proofs before Letters, £4 4s. [illegible] Proofs before Letters, £6 6s. [illegible] Proofs before Letters, £6 6s. [illegible] Proofs before Letters, £6 6

"ALARM," THE WINNER OF THE EMPEROR'S CUP AT ASCOT.—DRAWN BY MR. J. F. HERRING, SEN.

MDLLE. CARLOTTA GRISI, IN "PAQUITA."

Sylphid syren, lightly bounding,
Grace's spells thy form surrounding
Well thy fascinations trace
The softness of thy southern race.
Bright Paquita—Senorita—
Spain should be thy dwelling-place;
On the Rota, fair Carlotta,
One might hail that form and face.

WE annex one of the most admired dances by Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi and M. Silvain, in the new ballet of "Paquita," at Drury Lane Theatre; in which the fair danseuse never fails to be received with rounds of genuine applause. The production of the Ballet has already been noticed in our Journal.

MDLLE. CARLOTTA GRISI AND M. SILVAIN, IN THE NEW BALLET OF "PAQUITA," AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

RACE PRIZE PLATE.

WE have engraved the handsome Plate to be run for at the Newcastle-upon-

THE NEWCASTLE RACE CUP.

Tyne Meeting, on the 25th instant. It is mounted upon a pedestal, in front of which is inscribed the date of the Race, and the names of the makers, "Lister and Sons," Newcastle; and on the reverse panel, "Right Honble Earl of Eglinton and Winton, John Cookson, Esq., Stewards." The group represents the well-known incident in the Holy War, of Eleanor sucking the poison from the wound of Prince Edward.

THE SUTTON-PARK RACE CUP.

The second Prize is a superb Silver Cup, 90 ounces weight, run for at Sutton Park, and presented by Mr. George Richmond Collis.

THE WILTSHIRE TOPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY held its Sixth Anniversary Meeting at the Albion, on the 10th instant; when it was reported that H. M. Hoare, Esq., had presented the Society with twenty guineas, in addition to a former donation of ten guineas. This was intended to promote the publication of Aubrey's "Natural History of Wiltshire," the fair copy of which, prepared by the press, is deposited in the Library of the Royal Society. The Council of that Society, at the request of the Marquis of Northampton, has granted permission that the said MS. be copied for that purpose. It was also agreed at this meeting to proceed immediately to print the history of "Castle Combe," by George Poulett Scrope, Esq., M.P., which will embrace some interesting matter from Manuscripts by William of Worcester, who was Steward, or Seneschal to Sir John Fastolf, Lord of the Manor of Castle Combe. Officers were elected for the ensuing year; a Report was read and ordered to be printed, and other routine business transacted. The Wiltshire Topographical Society is the first county association that has been formed to promote local history; but it is hoped that gentlemen of other counties will follow the example, and thereby publish useful and authentic works on their respective districts.

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY FROM PARIS TO BRUSSELS.

THIS "inauguration" has been the great event of the week at Paris, as will be seen by reference to another page of our Journal. We have engraved the Embarcadère (or termeaux) at Paris. It has but slight pretension to architectural character; but is of about the same utilitarian stamp as we are accustomed to employ, generally, in the construction of railway termini in England.

NORTHERN RAILROAD OF FRANCE.—THE PARIS EMBARCADERE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 217.—Vol. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE DISSOLUTION.

CERTAINTY—which, in all cases of perplexity, is an advantage, even if it is certainty of the worst—begins to appear through the extraordinary confusion of principles and parties. It is certain that the Peel Cabinet will be dissolved; it is quite as certain that Lord John Russell and the Whigs cannot, with the present Parliament, form one to succeed it, for any length of time; it is certain that, failing in this point, the dissolution of the Government will be followed, at no very distant day, by a dissolution of Parliament. So far, events can be foretold without any extraordinary exercise of sagacity. But the keenest political seer would be perplexed to define what the position of parties will be in the next House of Commons; anticipations, with more or less of probability in all of them, and absolute certainty in none, are all that can be ventured; the very basis of former calculations is broken up and shattered; the "ancient ways" on which statesmen are recommended by Lord Bacon to take their stand, exist no longer; the old roads of legislation are abandoned; our rulers, like the rest of the world, have got upon the "rail," and rattle down what Tennyson figuratively calls the "ringing grooves of change" with a velocity that would be more profitable if more equably distributed; we progress in jerks and leaps, with long and weary intervals of dragging discussions, and our leaders, like the retainer of the Capulets, "strike quickly, being moved;" the drawback being that they "are not quickly moved to strike."

This alternation of speed at some points, and complete fixity of tenure" at others, has brought us again to the eve of a break up of a "strong Government;" Cobbett began the letter he wrote to Sir Robert Peel on his fall from power in 1835, by enumerating all the Prime Ministers whose fall he had "Registered," adding the pertinent question, "Who next?" "Who next," indeed; since that time Ministers have passed before us like the shadowy Kings who mocked the eyes of Macbeth, and we might almost repeat the words of the usurper, and say, "And lo! an eighth appears." The power invoked by Spenser under the name of Mutability, is surely enthroned in Downing-street, and by contact infuses into the hearts of Ministers a disposition to open their eyes to new lights, and their hearts to fresh convictions, till their astounded followers look on them with the sort of aversion the Athenian mechanics felt for Bottom when he appeared among them with an ass's head on his shoulders instead of his own, and fled from him with the cry, "Thou art translated!" Lord George Bentinck and the Protectionists all aver that the transformation Peel has undergone is identical with the celebrated instance we have quoted; the Premier's present head is not with them that oracle of wisdom it was within the memory not only of men, but infants. He has been on the "rail" while they remained at the "station." We are not dealing with his present rival and probable successor; but he too has changed much—not, perhaps, in kind, but in degree—since his days of "finality." The word itself, in the midst of what is passing around us, reads like a mockery.

And now that the Conservative Government, so strong in 1842, is in this month of June, 1846, sinking beneath an unnatural alliance between opposite parties, against an unfortunate measure which no party approves, and none defend save at best as a hateful necessity, even that being disputed,—it may be profitable to ask, as we suppose History will ask, what were the causes that led to such a catastrophe?

To find them we must go far back into the past, to the days of the "Conservative Opposition" and the hustings of 1841. Sir Robert Peel was then a man of mature years, old and experienced in the arts of office and Government, the trusted Minister of a series of Sovereigns, the acknowledged leader of a party who had humbled their opponents to the dust. His opinions must have been formed, his policy decided—at least they ought to have been; and those who followed him might well be excused if they took it for granted they were so. He spoke, too, as if they were; and no man believed it to be within the range of possibilities that the great abandonment of opinion and policy committed in 1829, could be repeated on any subject. They did not think that, to use the words of his tormenter and satirist, Disraeli, "Protection in 1842 was in the same position as Protestantism in 1829;" and yet one was destined to be abandoned like the other! This is the source and fountain of those waters of bitterness now flowing over the head of the Prime Minister. His party is fairly entitled to say, "Why did you mislead us; if you are right now, why did you not come to the conclusion sooner? the change may be good, but it is not either right or just in you to make it."

Sir Robert Peel can plead State necessity, and deny that a Minister can be bound to deal with the affairs of a great empire in the manner that may best keep a party together; the rise or fall of one is a very insignificant consideration compared with the onward progress and well-being of the other. We believe, in his position, the view is the right one; but, unfortunately, his own past career was his greatest obstacle: he "o'er-leaped" it gallantly, but the penalty of such "vaulting" is inevitable: he now "falls o' the other side."

Sir Robert Peel seems to us always to have been misplaced, among the Tories first, and the Conservatives afterwards; his mind, on every question, appears to have been always advancing. While the sages of the law were resisting the efforts of Romilly to reconcile our Criminal Code—the bloodiest in all Europe—to something like humanity, the young secretary was silently framing the digest which he afterwards carried, leading the way in that path of improvement. The Currency is still a disputed question; there are rival theories of it; but on this subject, too, he formed his opinions on the best—and, what is more characteristic, the newest—authorities; the party-man, who governs on political and social traditions, needs no fresh knowledge; Peel was always acquiring it; our present commercial policy may be traced distinctly to the Macullochs and Deacon Hmmes of the day; what Mr. Pitt or Chatham may have thought or done is to Peel a matter of perfect indifference; the pilot must steer by present soundings; those of traditionary charts are useless now, however good formerly. The tendency of the opinions of statesmen for the last twenty years has been in the direction we are now going; no one can read the speeches of Mr. Huskisson, and doubt for a moment that he would approve every change effected by Sir Robert Peel. It is this advance of their leaders that a party, all whose associations are with the past, as if our grandfathers had taken all insight, prudence, and knowledge of affairs out of the world with them, cannot appreciate. It is different from what they have been used to, and so they call it apostacy. It is so to those who have not watched the small shades of change as they developed themselves. And, probably, it is to the greatest defect of the Premier's disposition, the reserve and secrecy with which he treats the bulk of his party, that most of the anger with which he is now visited may be ascribed.

THE MERCHANT'S EXCHANGE, NEW YORK.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

We wish he had not fallen on a Coercion Bill for Ireland: so successful with the new principles that are yet to shape the destinies of nations, why resort to the old, worn-out, suspected, and despised armoury of the past? Why is it we can rule Mahomedans, Hindoos, Arabs—men of all climates, creeds, and complexions, who seek our protection as a blessing—in comparative peace and contentment, and yet cannot govern five Irish counties within a day's journey of the Metropolis, without the old and barbarous expedient of a Norman conqueror? In India, we rule millions with hundreds, and have no need to shut the door of the tiller of the earth, and make him a prisoner from sunset to sunrise! Why is Ireland to be our eternal difficulty and disgrace? There never was a Coercion Bill that did not leave irritation and hatred behind it. We believe the present alliance of parties against it to be accidental, and on one side, at least, dishonest and unprincipled. But whether the change comes from vexation, and a wish to work the fall of a Minister, or from a real dislike of oppression, if the Bill is rejected, it is the first Coercion Act for Ireland that Parliament ever refused, and, so far, may be a step to a juster and more kindly policy. We wish Sir Robert Peel had never asked for it; a powerful Minister should not be overthrown by such a weapon: the pebble to Goliath, the poisoned ring to Hannibal, seem scarcely less humiliating. There is no consolation in such a defeat; there will not be a hustings at the next election at which any appeal will be made in favour of the falling Government founded on this unhappy measure. On anything else, Peel could have "gone to the country" with a prestige in his favour as the only man capable of commanding confidence enough to give stability to a Government; and, even now, his prospects are by no means desperate.

THE MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, NEW YORK.

THIS magnificent edifice has been the scene of great excitement during the recent monetary crisis in New York.

The structure is of blue Quincy granite. Its main dimensions are, length, 200 feet; width, 171 and 144 feet; height, to the top of the cornice, 77 feet. The principal façade, shown in our illustration, has 18 massive Ionic columns, fluted; each 38 feet high, and 4ft. 4in. in diameter, and one slab weighing 43 tons.

The centre of the building is occupied by the Grand Rotunda—a splendid chamber, one hundred feet in diameter, and ninety feet in height to the top of the dome, which is partly supported by eight Corinthian columns of beautiful Italian marble. These are forty-one feet in height, from the pedestal to the capital, and four feet eight inches in diameter. The dome, which is of solid masonry, is eighty feet in diameter, and presents a grand-looking moulding, radiating from the ornamental foliage around the lantern, with which the Rotunda is lighted. The admission of light is very ingeniously managed, the windows being invisible from almost all parts of the chamber. There are doorways in the four recesses, between the columns, and the floor is paved with slabs of beautiful variously black and white. A portion of the area of this chamber is railed off, as an apartment for the body known as the "New Board of Brokers." This is in the form of a half circle; the exterior is festooned round with crab cloth, and the further side of the interior is lined with crimson hangings. The Rotunda is used for the sittings of the (New) Board of Brokers until twelve o'clock, when the sales by auction of real estate take place. Occasionally, other sales connected with securities for money are also made. These generally terminate at one o'clock, when the merchants assemble for the transaction of the business incident to the commercial emporium of the Union.

The Rotunda stands in the centre of a square of buildings facing on Wall-street, and abutting on William-street on the west, Exchange-street on the south, and Hanover-street on the east. These buildings contain the Branch Post-office, the rooms for the sittings of the old Board of Brokers, and the Merchants' Newsroom, containing on file all the leading newspapers of America and Europe. There are, also, a great number of rooms occupied by brokers, auctioneers, insurance-offices, &c.

The cupola of the building is occupied by a Telegraph, corresponding with Staten Island and Sandy Hook, and by means of which the appearance of a packet ship in the offing, forty miles distant, is made known in the city in a few minutes.

This building is daily the scene of immense operations, both in stocks, real estate, and general merchandise: each busy set, as it passes from the scene, is succeeded by another, equally anxious for the same object. The panic is as promulgated the authentic news of the stock speculators. The "bulls," anxious for a rise, make the dome echo with proofs of the absolute glut of money, and the impossibility of employing it, except in the stocks they have to sell. The "bears," pale-plot, up jumps upon the stand of an auctioneer a well-known "bear," who reads dread certain advices from Washington, that Aimonté has demanded his papers and quit. His patriotic soul boils over with wrath at the insolence of the Mexican, and stocks fall, in his imagination, before the inevitable bear his fancy has conjured up. The opposite party exclaims, with the thumb on the nose, "It's no go down," and stocks again rise.

The present building, embracing the square formed by Wall, William, Hanover, and Exchange-streets, was projected soon after the great fire of December 16, 1835, which destroyed the beautiful building then occupied as the Exchange and Post Office. In accordance with the then enlarged views and speculative character of the times, the present building was projected on a scale of great magnificence. The capital of the Company formed for the construction of this building was one million of dollars; but, before the work was completed, it was found that the capital was utterly inadequate to the purpose, and the bonds of the Company were issued for near 1,000,000 dollars more, making nearly 2,000,000 dollars as the cost of the concern. The first year of its completion, in 1839, the rental was 190,000 dollars. The disastrous repulsion which followed, resulted in a fall of the income to 40,000 dollars, leaving a deficit of near 20,000 dollars per annum in the means of the Company to meet interest and expenses. One of the bondholders was then put in possession, as mortgagee in trust. Affairs have now been so far restored, that the rental nearly equals the expenditure, and the Company is again in possession of the building.

ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS CASE OF POISONING IN NORFOLK.—During the last two or three weeks many mysterious rumours have prevailed in the vicinity of Norwich, relative to the death of a young woman, named Maria Read, who died about a month ago in the parish of St. Edmund's, in that city. It appears that a few days previous to her decease she came from Yarmouth to reside with her father and mother, when she was taken ill with a violent sickness on a Friday evening, and early on the following morning expired—a medical gentleman, named Colsby, being in attendance upon her just before she breathed her last. There were, at the time, some doubts as to the cause of death, and on inquest was held upon the body; but no post-mortem examination took place, and the Jury agreed to a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God." Owing, however, to the many suspicions reports that have been since circulated, the body was exhumed, and the contents of the stomach submitted to Mr. Firth, the surgeon who so ably brought to light the recent deaths, by poisoning, at Hapisburgh, on examination. It is said that the presence of arsenic has been detected in the corpse, and the further examination and analysis which is now going on will prove and ascertain the quantity and its effect. No doubt, when the necessary tests are completed, and the evidence in a more perfect state, the city Coroner will re-open the inquiry into the cause of death. At present, the case is involved in complete mystery.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

It is asserted that the Duchess of Orleans refusing, on account of her children, King Louis Philippe will bring over the Queen to attend the christening of Count de Paris. Sur That Louis Philippe will come I believe, but that the Queen will, nobody does here. She is so stanch a Catholic that, altho' an excellent woman, her difference of religion keeps her on very cool terms with her Protestant daughter-in-law, and, to witness Queen Victoria's offspring made a Protestant, would be a source of deep grief to that anti-heretical Princess, the good Queen Amelia. Speaking of Catholicism, nothing has more astonished us who cannot elect even an officer of National Guards without a contest, than the sudden and unanimous nomination of the Holy Father of Catholicism. For five centuries such an event has not occurred, and, in the College of Cardinals, a Prelate of fifty-four is but a youth in his teens that has not sown his wild oats.

The nearest relatives of the new Pope, nobles of Ancona, have run the strangest career. One I dined with but a short time back. He is an old, eccentric, and valiant soldier of Napoleon's army, covered with wounds, and has fought, it is said, twenty-two duels. The last was with three German officers, who had insulted him—one he wounded, the other he killed, and the third begged to be excused. The brother of this warrior was deeply implicated in the insurrection of the Papal States, in 1831, and is now in a mercantile house at Naples. In this city, during the cholera, Cardinal Ferretti, then Nuncio of the Pope, behaved with such Christian devotion in attending the sick, and selling even to his furniture to buy them necessaries, that the ever-enthusiastic Neapolitans were wont to go on their knees whenever he appeared, and the Neapolitan Government was too happy to get him recalled, by a preferment, to Rome.

This order and unanimity of the conclave of the once passion-tossed, has not been imitated in Paris in the Chamber of Peers. The scene here that each bloodied politician and judicial harlequin, Duke Pasquier, and the fiery Prince de la Moskwa, whom he had cruelly wounded, had, as last, introduced, even in the Upper Senate, the most riotous of personal verbal contests.

In the Chamber of Deputies, the Bell with which the Speaker or President so absurdly attempts to reduce the orators to order, has long ceased to be of any avail, although rung to distraction almost daily and hourly. A Parisian song has published the statistics of the aforesaid President's performances. He receives 100,000f. per annum, and he sits, on an average, a hundred times in a year; he thus gets £40 for each sitting of the room. On the other hand, he rings his Bell on an average twenty times each sitting, which makes each Bell-ring cost fifty francs. Owing to the approaching Elections, the political sky is as full of explosions and squibs as the illuminations for our Paris Vauxhall and Mangin with rockets—many a joke upsetting a candidate in France, where ridicule is the most dangerous of all weapons. At N——, Count de P——a, a friend of mine, and a ci-devant beau of Paris, who having spent his fortune, is about to reform, and turn politician and if possible Deputy, the shortest road to fortune, has lately played off a hoax with the utmost success. He sent his valet to waylay a number of rich farmers who were going to dine at the inn with the rival candidate. The valet announced to these good folks that the gentleman who had invited them to the inn had since secured a private house as more respectful to give them a dinner. Here the worthies were met by my friend, and so well appeared to them the joke and the dinner, and, above all, so potent was the Champagne and Burgundy, that at the end of the repast the host came to Paris with a written proof in his pocket that the election had signed over their allegiance to him. His triumph seems certain; for here a political enemy may be mortally wounded by a good joke. Mr. T——, a rich merchant, but a heavy man, not long since vainly offered 20,000 francs for the post of prefect. The Count has, however, found his way into the journals. It was as follows. At the soirée of the Countess de C——, a gentleman observed, "Mr. T—— has hay in his boots," a proverbial expression, which, in French, means a man is affluent. "Yes," answered Baron R——, "the carries his larder with him." Mr. T—— has not recovered to this day this innuendo as to his being of the asinine species. The slightest peculiarity of appearance creates a sensation amongst the quid nunc of Paris. The following is an instance. Here the majority of persons of all classes wear mustachios, but with those of radical opinions the length of hair and bristles is an indispensable part of my profession. The Duke of Rohan

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE IMPORTATION OF CORN.—Lord ASHBURTON moved a resolution, "That, whatever may be the alteration which it may be expedient permanently to make in the laws regulating the introduction of foreign corn, it is the opinion of this House that the sudden importation of the large quantity of wheat and wheat flour now in bond at a very low rate of duty, while the prices are moderate, and the prospect of the approaching harvest is promising, may be productive of great injury and injustice to the cultivators of the soil of the United Kingdom; and that some better provision against such a calamity should be provided than is contained in the bill now before the House." The noble Lord contended that, unless the Corn Bill should be thus far modified before it passed into law, the whole of the wheat in bond, being about 2,500,000 quarters, would be at once poured upon the markets, to the serious injury of the British agriculturists.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE opposed the resolution, on the ground that not more than 1,000,000 quarters of wheat and wheat flour were now in bond, and that no increase of that amount was likely to come from foreign countries. Lord GREY considered the passing of such a resolution would be tantamount to the rejection of the Corn Bill.—Lord REDESDALE said the motion was only a measure of justice to protect the farmer from a sudden depreciation in price, just as harvest was approaching. The Earl of ELLESBOROUGH said that there were from thirty to forty millions of quarters of corn ready for market in Poland alone, the gift of which could not fail to drive down the market. He did not think, therefore, that the liberation of the bonded corn would produce the effect anticipated by his noble friend (Lord Ashburton).—After a short reply from Lord ASHBURTON, the House divided, and his resolution was negatived, by a majority of 70 to 41.

THE CUSTOMS' DUTIES BILL.

On the question for going into Committee on the Customs' Duties Bill,

The Duke of RICHMOND presented and supported a petition from the Spitalfields weavers, praying to be heard by counsel at the bar, against the proposed reduction of the duties on silk. He moved to that effect.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE urged present and incompatibility against the motion, as the question could be fully argued by either House, without involving the incongruity of a legal pleading on behalf of special interests.

Lord BROUGHAM felt that, in a complicated case, where they had an assurance that the opposition was not for delay, but bond fide to bring under their attention special ai egations of injury, they might allow to the petitioners not merely counsel but witnesses. He adduced his own case, in 1812, when he was employed to argue, at the bar of the House of Lords, against the "Orders in Council," when counsel was heard in overthrowing them.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH felt that in acceding to the prayer of the petition, they would be sanctioning a precedent which would be an obstruction to all legislation whatever.

The Duke of WELLINGTON remarked on the inconvenience of any amendment in Committee on a money bill, the only effect of which would be to paralyse the functions of Parliament.

The Duke of RICHMOND, with some warmth, protested against this interpretation of the constitutional powers of that House, by which their whole proceedings would be reduced to a mere farce. In that case, let them alter their standing orders, and declare that the consent of the Queen and the Commons was sufficient to sanction any measure whatever.

Upon a division, the Duke of Richmond's motion was negatived by a majority of 78 to 7.

Lord BROUGHAM complained of the use of proxies upon such an occasion. The votes of noble Lords who were present were, in the present instance, swamped by the votes of those who were absent.

A warm personal discussion arose on this point, several peers protesting that the votes of those desirous of hearing counsel, and who were present, were nullified by votes of peers who knew nothing and cared less about the question.

Lord LYNDHURST, in reference to the bill, said that he would not abandon the principle of protection to native industry, as he felt confident that ere many years the country would declare itself of a similar opinion. As a final step it was sure, he believed it would lead to difficulties, for whatever Ministry might be in power a year hence, they would find a serious deficiency in the revenue. But in measure was not only calculated to destroy the revenue, but it would likewise impoverish the producer and benefit no one but the foreigner.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE vindicated the propositions of the Government.

After some observations from Earl Stanhope, the Earl of Ripon, Lord Monteagle, the Marquis of Salisbury, and other noble lords, the House went into Committee on the bill.

On the second clause, relating to the reduction of the duties on timber,

Lord STANLEY moved its omission, on the ground that it was not requisite to give up so large an amount of revenue.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE opposed the amendment, and on a division it was defeated by a majority of 54 to 52.

On the suggestion of Lord STANLEY it was arranged that as no division was to take place on the third reading of the Corn Bill, it should be postponed until Thursday.

The House sat till nearly on o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEW ZEALAND.—In answer to a question from Mr. C. BULLER, Sir R. PEEL said that the difficulties in the way of devising a plan of government for New Zealand had been much diminished by the last advices, for it now appeared that the settlers in the British Crown was established in the colony. It was his intention to present to the House this session a plan for the government of New Zealand, but whether it should be carried out by an enactment or otherwise was not yet determined on.

THE SUGAR DUTIES.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER having stated that he had received from Lord G. Bentinck a notice of the following amendment to the Sugar Duties Continuation Bill, viz.—"That the introduction of the Sugar Duties Bill for so short a period as one month is calculated injuriously to affect the commercial interests of the country, and that it was the duty of the Ministers to amend it in such a manner as to give sufficient time to have passed through both Houses before the expiration of the present year" appealed to the noble Lord not to press his amendment, as the effect would be to cause the present sugar duties to expire at the end of fourteen days.

Lord G. BENTINCK replied that it was not his intention to put an end to the present duties, or to cause a large discussion to that effect. It was his intention in making his amendment was to raise a censure on the Government for not having so late a period of the session to arrive before asking for the removal of a measure which between three and four millions of revenue were annually raised. We are asked now, said his Lordship, to pass a Sugar Bill for a month; but in the present position of political affairs in this house, there are sufficient indications that probably more than a week will not elapse before the right hon. gentleman, now at the head of the Government will be no longer, and then his successor will have a right to ask a considerable adjournment for the purpose of making the usual arrangements and procuring seats for the members of his Administration in this House, under which circumstances he should be obliged, no doubt to ask another month. Now, is it right so to derange the trade, and to put to hazard so large a revenue?

After a short conversation, the House went into Committee, and agreed to a resolution to continue the existing sugar duties for a month from the 5th of July.

THE CORN BILL.

The adjourned debate on the Protection of Life (Ireland) Bill was resumed by Mr. S. CRAWFORD, who opposed the bill.

Mr. Crawford was followed on the same side by Mr. Caleb Powell, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Villiers Stuart, and Lord John Manners. In support of the bill, there were Mr. SEYMER and Mr. WILLIAM COLLETT, while

Mr. GORARTS, though opposed to the bill, censured both the Protectionists and the Whigs, for opposing a measure which either party, if in power, would be compelled, on their own principles, to support. Indeed, it was rumoured that if Lord John Russell, at the close of last year, had succeeded in forming a new Administration, the Earl of Besborough was to have gone to Ireland as Lord-Lieutenant with a coercion bill in his pocket.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL denied that there was any truth in the statement.

Mr. ROEBUCK, with such a contradiction, at once admitted that the rumour must have been groundless.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM, at considerable length, defended the bill, on the plea of its necessity, as called for by the existing state of crime and the peculiar circumstances of Ireland. He also defended the Government from the imputation of having compelled the measures of their opponents, contending that the Whigs had pursued a similar course on their return to office in 1835, especially with reference to the appropriation clause.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, as a member of the Whig Government, warmly repudiated the charge brought against it by Sir James Graham. The Home Secretary was the last man to charge any one with inconsistency, seeing he had, by a change of sentiment, unblushingly opposed of the opinions of a whole life. He defended the course pursued by the Whigs in now opposing the bill after assenting to the first reading.

The debate was again adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE CUSTOMS' DUTIES BILL.

The House having resolved itself into Committee on the Customs' Duties (Tariff),

The Earl of HARDWICKE moved the omission of the articles of butter and cheese from the schedule. The revenue produced by butter, in 1845, was £217 604; and that by cheese, in the same year, was £141,818. They were increasing articles, and it was, therefore, most unwise to reduce them. To lower the price for the benefit of consumers was the avowed desire of the Government; but the reduction in price would be so small as to be felt by no one, whilst the proposed remission of ten shillings duty would take from the poor Irish producers £500,000 a year.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE replied that the Government did not frame the schedules with the view of reducing the price of any article of food, but the consumer would not be lowered by the reduction of duty, the poor Irish farmers would not be injured.

Lord STANLEY said the noble President of the Board of Trade was in this dilemma, from which he could not escape: either the price would be considerably reduced, and then the poor Irish producer would be damaged to the extent of the million of cwts. now imported from Ireland; or, there would be no reduction of price, which was the position the noble Earl thought it most advisable to argue, and then the measure would have the effect of gratuitously putting into the pockets of the foreign producer about £500,000 a year out of the consumers.

Upon a division, the proposal of the Earl of Hardwicke was negatived by 60 to 33.

The remaining clauses, down to the article of "silk," were agreed to, after considerable discussion.

The Duke of RICHMOND then moved the omission of "silk" from the new tariff, and contended that, unless his amendment were agreed to, the Spitalfields silk-weavers would be ruined.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE denied that the trade had been injured by the former reduction of the protective duties on silk. It was apparent from the face of the returns that there were more silk goods in existence now than then; that there was a greater amount of capital engaged in the trade, and a far greater number of people employed in it. In addition to these facts, there was the conclusive one, that the importation of the raw material had increased more than double in amount since the reduction of the protective duties; and yet, in the face of these facts, it was said that the silk trade had been ruined by the diminished protection he had referred to. The truth was that Spitalfields was more injured by the competition of Macclesfield, Congleton, and other places, than by the diminution of the protective duties.

Lord STANLEY said that if the speech of his noble friend were good for anything, it would go the whole length of proving that the silk trade was in a most prosperous condition at the present moment. He (Lord Stanley) believed that the reverse of that was the case in this branch of trade had fallen and were failing, and that, if the proposed reduction should be agreed to, those wages would be reduced from 1s. 4d. to 1s. a day. The question was neither called for by wisdom nor by justice. It would be a wrong with the additional disadvantage of reducing the revenue to the extent of £320,000.

On the House then dividing, and the Duke of Richmond's amendment was negatived by a majority of 71 to 39.

The Duke of RICHMOND objected to the remission of the duty upon "hops," but there was no division.

The remaining articles were then agreed to, and the bill was reported to the House without amendments. The third reading was fixed for Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

RAILWAY BILLS. The report of the Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle Railway Bill was carried by 166 against 100; thus reversing the decision of the House on a former division.—Mr. F. MAUDE gave notice that he would endeavour to have this decision reversed on the third reading. Several other railway bills were forwarded.

The report of the Committee of Ways and Means on the Sugar Duties was received.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM, in reply to a question, stated that a measure on the subject of pauper lunatics was in progress.

On the motion of Mr. C. BULLER, a Select Committee was appointed to consider the best means of providing a record office for England and Wales.

Some other unimportant business was transacted, and the House was "counted out" at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House of Commons met to-day at twelve o'clock and sat till six.

THE PARLIAMENTARY ELECTORS' AND FREEMEN'S BILL.

Sir DE LACY EVANS moved the second reading of the Parliamentary Electors' and Freemen's Bill.

After a short discussion, the Bill was rejected on a division, by 94 against 53.

SUGAR DUTIES.

The Bill for continuing the present Sugar Duties for a month from the 5th of July was read a second time.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL.

The House went into Committee on the Roman Catholic Relief Bill.

Mr. WATSON moved the insertion of the clause of which he had given notice, providing against the celebration of any rites or ceremonies in the public way, and for the registration of Jesuits, monks, friars, &c.

Sir ROBERT INGLIS objected altogether to the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that the Chairman should leave the chair.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM, although he acknowledged that the state of the law with respect to the regular orders of the Roman Catholic Church was unsatisfactory, did not think the present a moment when the subject could be dispassionately considered, nor that the clauses proposed by Mr. Watson were sufficient. He should, therefore, support the amendment, as he believed postponement to be the wisest and most prudent course.

Mr. WISE supported the bill.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL objected to the Church of Wales, at least, had as little to apprehend from a Protestant Legislature as from the Roman Catholics.

After a debate, in which Mr. B. Escott, Mr. Fitzgerald, Lord Seymour, Mr. Redington, Mr. Colquhoun, Mr. Labouchere, Lord J. Manners, and Mr. Newdegate took part, the Committee divided, on the question that the Chairman leave the chair—

For the amendment	120
Against it	80
Majority against the bill	40

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER brought in the New Zealand Bill, which was read a first time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

PASSING OF THE CORN BILL.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE moved the third reading of the Corn Importation Bill.

No opposition was offered to the motion; and, after some discussion, the bill was read a third time and passed.

THE CUSTOMS BILL.—The Customs Bill was also read a third time and passed, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

DEFEAT OF THE MINISTRY ON THE COERCION BILL.

On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, the adjourned debate on the second reading of the Protection of Life (Ireland) Bill was resumed.

Mr. S. O'BRIEN said, that he agreed with her Majesty's Government on the necessity of taking measures to preserve the public peace in Ireland; yet he must hesitate to entrust the extraordinary powers of this bill to a Ministry who had so greatly and so grossly deceived their friends. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. VISEY said he should support the second reading of the bill.

After an animated debate, in which Mr. C. Buller, Mr. Bankes, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Sheil, and Mr. Cobden took part, the House divided: the numbers were—

FOR THE SECOND READING	219
AGAINST IT	292
MAJORITY AGAINST THE MINISTRY ...	—73

The announcement of the numbers was received almost in silence.

The House rose at a Quarter past Two.

SCOTLAND.

OPENING OF THE NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY.

On Thursday (last week) the railway from Edinburgh to Berwick-upon-Tweed was opened with the accustomed ceremonies. The completion of this undertaking reduces the distance from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the East and North of Scotland to London, and the whole of the North of England, by a space (to speak according to the language of the day) of not less than four hours, being somewhat more than one-fifth of the whole time hitherto consumed in the journey between the two capitals. Such a result is in itself sufficient to create an entire revolution in the social and commercial relations of the two great sections of the empire; but when viewed in connection with the still further strides in the same direction now in progress (as alluded to the line between Berwick and Newcastle, which will most probably be finished by October), the opening of the North British Railway is entitled to be regarded as a truly national event of the very first importance.

The trains started from the North Bridge, Edinburgh, at ten o'clock, and the whole area along them was crowded by well-dressed men and women, among the élite of the city of Edinburgh. The first train, consisting of seven handsome carriages, drawn by five splendid engines, started about half-past ten o'clock; the last train of twenty-three carriages, drawn also by five engines, started about ten minutes to eleven. Upon this occasion, of pleasure merely, 45 miles an hour may be considered the highest speed, about 30 the average. But upon this occasion there were five engines to water, where in ordinary trains there will be only one. Berwick may now be considered within two hours' drive of Edinburgh.

The first train left Dunbar a little after five o'clock, shortly followed by the other division; and the whole company arrived at the Edinburgh terminus before seven o'clock, having enjoyed a most delightful trip, and at the same time witnessed the satisfactory completion of this national undertaking.

THE CITY OF GLASGOW AND SIR ROBERT PEEL.—The following address has been extensively signed by the leading merchants, bankers, and manufacturers [illegible]: "To the Right Hon. Robert Peel, First Lord of her Majesty's Treasury. Sir—The personal and unmanly attacks which have recently been made upon you induce us, the merchants and bankers and other inhabitants of the city of Glasgow, thus publicly to express our entire satisfaction with the great commercial measures which you have proposed to Parliament during the present session, our marked disapprobation of the opposition which has been offered to you and to them, our earnest desire that you should persevere in the face of every obstacle to support and protect those important measures in all their integrity until they become the law of the land, and our conviction that, while they will prove of vital importance to the welfare and prosperity of the empire, they have been fully and favourably appreciated by the public at large."

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES &c

OXFORD.

June 24.

In a Convocation holden in the Theatre, this day, the Rev. Dr. HAWTREY, of Eton College, Cambridge, the Hon. Master of Trin. College, the Rev. Benjamin Jowett, M.A., the Rev. Mansel, M.A., and the Rev. Stephen Thomas Hawtrey, M.A., all of Trinity College, Cambridge, were admitted ad eundem.

The Crewean oration was delivered by the public orator, the Rev. William Jacobson, Vice-Principal of Magdalen Hall, and the several prizes were recited by their respective authors. Latin Essay, Mr. Goldwin Smith, of Magdalen College; English Essay, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, of Christ Church; Latin Verse, Mr. Thomas C. Sandars, of Balliol; E. Verse, Mr. G. Osborne Morgan, also of Balliol.

Professor Hansen, Director of the Observatory at Seeberg, on whom it was proposed to confer the honorary degree of D.C.L., was prevented from attending.

THE LIVING OF ST. PANCRAS.—The living of the parish of St. Pancras is become vacant by the decease of the late vicar, the Rev Dr. Moore. This parish is one of the most extensive, populous, and influential of the metropolitan parishes.

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—At the Meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday, the 22nd, a letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, in which he advised the assembly to [illegible] Conciliation Hall, and to [illegible] Mr. Barrett's motion was ordered to be struck off the list of the Association. The letter then condemns the Tenants' Compensation Bill, and Mr. O'Connell denies that, should the Whigs come into power, he intends to abandon the Repeal cause. He says:—"It is with the bitterest regret and deepest sorrow that I witness the efforts which are made by some of our juvenile members to create dissension and speculate distractions amongst the Repealers. It is manifest that the great majority of the Repeal Association must exert themselves strenuously to support the Association, or the persons to whom I allude will divide its ranks, and finally destroy the Association itself. For my own part, I will not be an idle spectator of such a struggle. The true that the people may be induced to desert me but I never will desert the people. I perceive that it is—I will not use the proper term—but I will say, most unhandsome suggestions are made, in the event of the Whigs coming into power, that Repeal cause is to be abandoned, or postponed, or compromised. I utterly deny the assertion. While I live, the Repeal cause shall never be abandoned, postponed, or compromised, to advance any persons to power—to support any party or faction. I have long since hailed the colours of Repeal to the mast, and they shall, during my life, never be taken down unless to cover the entry of the Irish Members into the Irish Parliament in College green."

COUNTY OF CARLOW ELECTION.—The High Sheriff of Carlow, P. J. Newton, Esq., has appointed Wednesday, the 1st of July, for holding the election for a representative for the county of Carlow, in the room of the late Mr. Bunbury. Mr. W. B. M'Clintock is the only candidate as yet in the field.

EXECUTION AT NENAGH.—Three men were executed at Nenagh on Friday (last week), pursuant to their sentence, two—namely, Patrick Hayes and Patrick Rice—for conspiring to murder the late Mr. Patrick Clarke; and one, named William Fogarty, for shooting at Mr. M'Donald, a steward in the slate quarries. An immense multitude collected to witness the scene. The three men were accompanied to the drop by Roman Catholic clergymen. They died after a brief struggle, having made no public confession of their crimes. A large police force of 150 men, and a company of the 72nd depôt, comprised the guard in attendance. All was quiet and peaceable, says a local paper, and nothing heard but the moanings of the friends of the culprits. After the usual time of hanging, the bodies were lowered into coffins, and given to the relations. The long respite obtained by these men whilst various points of law were urged in their favour, gave much additional interest to their cases.

ALLEGED ILLEGALITY OF THE IMPRISONMENT OF MR. W. S. O'BRIEN.—A Limerick paper says. "Our distinguished county member has commenced proceedings against the Speaker of the House of Commons; and, from the opinion of an eminent barrister, it is extremely probable Mr. O'Brien will be successful. An action lies both against the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms, but whether Mr. O'Brien will proceed against the latter remains to be seen."

BARBAROUS MURDER.—The following revolting detail of murder is extracted from a Galway journal. The scene of the foul deed lies towards the junction of Galway with the county of Clare:—"We regret to state that, on the night of Thursday (last week), a barbarous murder was committed at a village near Woodford, in this county. The unfortunate object of the assassin's vengeance was a man named Pat Hill. Two persons came into his house, and brought him out of bed to a place about forty yards distant, and there inflicted no less than forty-two bayonet wounds on his person, besides a fracture of the skull. His wife, hearing his screams, went to his assistance, and, having begged for mercy, she was told by the heartless ruffians that if she did not go away, she would herself be treated in a like manner. Having completed their purpose, the miscreants, who are unknown, walked off, and their victim almost immediately expired. An inquest was held at Portumna, when a verdict of 'Wilful murder' was returned against persons unknown. Deceased was in rather comfortable circumstances and bore a most excellent character."

MEXICO AND CALIFORNIA.

OPPORTUNELY in association with the war just terminated between Mexico and the United States, two works have just been issued from the American press, which are entitled to especial attention.

The first of these, entitled "[illegible] Travels over the Table Lands and Cordilleras of Mexico, during the years 1843 and '44:" by Albert M. Gilliam, late U.S. Consul to California. The author's journey extended to about 4,000 miles, stated in Mexico to be the greatest distance of internal travel ever accomplished by a person in a private capacity.

Mr. Gilliam's port of embarkation was Nc Orleans, whence he sailed for Vera Cruz, [illegible] the snow-capped peak of Orizava. Of the city of Vera Cruz, as it now is, he describes to be in a palpable state "previous to the Revolution, it contained above 25,000 inhabitants; but, assuming to be, it does not possess more than about 7,000. The general appearance of the town shows great decay and dilapidation; for the many scourges, by war and the decline of commerce, resulting from a system of government worthy, have reduced the flourishing, gay city of yore into a heap of ruins, and a by word for civilized nations."

Our traveller's track from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, he tells us, was the same, or nearly so, which the unmerciful Cortez and his brave troops took on their victorious conquest of the country, leaving death and desolation [illegible] The first object [illegible] scorched plains, having the temperature of the tropical regions, [illegible] on which was often to be seen the deep black mould of fertile soil, on which was the inexhaustible luxuriancy of growth of many varieties of lovely aspect, and of [illegible] mate with flowers and shrubbery, mingled and matted with the largest [illegible] tanza and our traveller then passed the ranges of the Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl; but, he adds significantly, "it should ever be remembered by the reader that, whatever size the traveller may behold, he is never out of sight of the crosses of melancholy bearing, being monuments erected over the bones of murdered human beings, and thus consecrated."

Our illustration shows the author's progress over this mountain, which, although cold, our traveller describes, somewhat naively, as interesting, "from the many crowds of Arrieros, with their cargoes on packed mules, a large party of whom were loaded with the specie of the second indemnity from the Mexican to the United States Government."

On the descent, the scene was changed for the far-famed valley of Mexico, which was spread out, like a map, before our traveller's view [illegible] "the day was favourable—for the clear, blue vault of heaven [illegible] the spot to dim the exceeding and peculiar serenity of the skies of that elevated and rarefied region. The atmosphere of which was so light and thin, added to the brilliant gleaming of the sun, that the eye could overcome space, and comprehend distant objects, with beauty surprising to one raised in a more dense and lower climate. Hence it is, I suppose, that that plain has been called [illegible] and thus, as it were, at one view, bursts upon the astonished traveller, village, city, lakes, plains, and mountains."

Then, while on the plain, he sees a tract made sterile by the neglect of its opulent owners, on the left is a prospect, as far as the eye could reach, of lands cultivated in maize or Indian corn, chili or Indian pepper, and flowery fields of the cochineal plant.

In our traveller's sketch, he has shown, [illegible] valley, which, also, called by the Mexicans Mayney, which attains the height of 10 or 15 feet.

Mr. Gilliam adds: "the view of the valley of Mexico, from this point, is truly beautiful and magnificent, but for the painful absence of timber and the vast sterility of much of its territory, might, perhaps, be the most magnificent sight any where to be met with upon the face of the globe. There is no country in [illegible] more [illegible] of its territory, might, perhaps, be the most magnificent sight any where to be met with upon the face of the globe. There is no country in [illegible] more [illegible] than Mexico. The [illegible] of the country [illegible] number, [illegible] probability, less than 800,000 are the owners of all the large farms of that rich country."

The second Illustration presents another specimen of the mountain scenery, near Cameles, in the interior. "We had," says our traveller, "to ascend a mountain, which brought us in view of a snow-capped peak, which reached far above any other point. Having descended the opposite side, we travelled along the bed of a river for some four or five miles. The stream was shut up between two mountains, whose rocky and precipitous heights prohibited a passage along its sides. Many were the curiosities and freaks of nature that I beheld in the singular formations of the rocks. On the top of a high point, on one of these mountains, was a flat rock, just the shape of a man's hand, which sat upright on a wrist. The Mammoth hand could not have been less than one hundred feet in height. It appeared to point due north and south, as if to prevent the traveller, who was confined between these wild and rugged barriers, from becoming bewildered." This scene, like its companion, offers some fine specimens of the luxuriant vegetation of the country.

MEXICO AND CALIFORNIA.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Gilliam's work gives us the broad and bold characteristics of the country, in preference to the mere incidents of travel; and, in this respect, as affording intelligence of a country but little known in proportion to its vast extent, this book of travels must be regarded as valuable and interesting.

The second work, which is equally well-timed with that by Mr. Gilliam, is a very interesting account of California, at this moment a territory of immense importance to emigrants from the United States; and, destined, perhaps, at no very distant period, to become a free Republic. The author of this work observes:—

"In the many revulsions suffered by Mexico from political struggles, California has had her share of domestic disturbances; and for years past it has been the scene of numerous conflicts. The natives possess an inveterate dislike towards the Mexicans, which has given rise to sundry revolutions in their government. The time is not far distant when they will cease from such broils, and either become consolidated into an independent form of government, or be the subjects of foreign administration. Immigration will aid the former, while the attractions of its magnificent and giant harbour of St. Francisco may, in a very few years, effect the latter."

The work before us is entitled "Life in California; during a Residence of Several Years in that Territory, comprising a Description of the Country, and the Missionary Establishments, with Incidents, Observations, &c. By a American." We have engraved from his Illustrations, a view of MEXICO.—AMERICAN INDEMNITY ON ITS WAY TO VERA CRUZ.

STA. BARBARA.

"From the mission," says our traveller, "we stood over for some small and rocky islands at the south-east point of Sta. Cruz; and on the following morning, close under our lee, we behold the beautiful vale of Sta. Barbara.

"Seen from the ship, the 'Presidio,' or town, its charming vicinity and neat little Mission in the background, all situated on an inclined plane, rising gradually from the sea to a range of verdant hills, three miles from the beach, have a striking and beautiful effect. Distance, however, in this case, 'lends enchantment to the view,' which a nearer approach somewhat dispels; for we found the houses of the town, of which there were some 300, in not very good condition. They are built in the Spanish mode, with adobé walls, and roofs of tile, and are scattered about outside of the military department; shewing a total disregard of order on the part of the authorities. A ridge of rugged highlands extends along the rear, reaching from St. Bonaventura to Point Conception, and on the left of the town, in an elevated position, stands the Castillo, or fortress.

"The port of Santa Barbara is completely sheltered from the northwest and westerly winds, but somewhat exposed to those from the southeast. The anchorage is hard sand, abounding in seaweed, where the ship came to, in six and a half fathoms.

"The Presidio of Santa Barbara consists of a large square of buildings, surrounded by high walls, in plan similar to that of St. Diego, and contains a chapel, cemetery, prison, and storehouses. The Commandant, Don Romualdo Pacheco, is a Mexican, who came to the country in the year 1835, with the present Governor, Echandia. The number of men garrisoned under his command does not exceed forty.

"In the morning we walked to the mission, distant from the town about half a league. The road was pleasant, through scattered oaks; and groups of cattle were seen grazing upon the grassy plains. On the right were spacious wheat fields; at length, through a narrow way, amid immense rocks scattered over the ground, we reached the establishment. The stone church, with its two towers and extensive wing, its artificial clock, tiled roofs, arched corridor, and majestic fountain, was before us. On the right were various buildings for superintendents, a guard-house, tannery, and a dilapidated grist-mill; on the left, the spacious garden, with its fruit-trees and flowers, and several rows of low buildings.

"In the rear, from a slight elevation might be seen large fields of wheat and corn; and the little valleys among the hills, filled with fruit and vegetable gardens. A foaming stream rushes down the mountain, from which is carried in an open aqueduct along the brow of the hill, a supply of water for a spacious reservoir of beautiful masonry.

SANTA BARBARA, ALTA-CALIFORNIA.

ANCHORAGE AT YERBA BUENA, ST. FRANCISCO, ALTA-CALIFORNIA.

"The dress worn by the middling class of females is a chemise with short embroidered sleeves, richly trimmed with lace, a muslin petticoat flounced with scarlet, and secured at the waist by a silk band of the same colour, shoes of velvet or blue satin, a cotton rebozo or scarf, pearl necklace and ear-rings, with the hair falling in broad plaits down the back. Others of the higher class dress in the English style, and instead of the rebozo substitute a rich and costly shawl of silk or satin. There is something graceful in the management of the rebozo, that the natives alone can impart, and the perfect nonchalance with which it is thrown about them and worn, adds greatly to its beauty.

"Very few of the men have adopted our mode of dress, the greater part adhering to the ancient costume of the past century. Short clothes, and jacket trimmed with scarlet, a silk sash about the waist, botas of ornamented and embroidered deer skin, secured by coloured garters, embroidered shoes, the hair long, braided, and fastened behind with ribbons, a black silk handkerchief around the head, surrounded by an oval and broad-brimmed hat, is the dress universally worn by the men of California."

The next Illustration shows one of the finest anchorages in the world, in the island of Yerba Buena, with the castillo, or fort—low buildings with dark-tiled roofs, and the house of the Commandant among them.

"San Francisco has one of the largest and most valuable harbours in the world. Nature has so defended its narrow entrance, that, with but little expense, it might be made perfectly impregnable. Its steep and lofty cliffs, on either side, combined with other prominent locations within, might be so fortified as to bid defiance to the most powerful and determined foe. The soundings are deep, and in mid-channel, may be found in from forty to forty-five fathoms. The course for vessels coming in from sea, is generally midway between the bluff points of land

"There are five missionary establishments located on the sides of the bay, called the Missions of Dolores, Santa Clara, St. José, St. Francisco Solano, and St. Rafael. These have a population of over five thousand Indians, and only about two hundred whites. The whole number of cattle, domesticated, is more than forty thousand, exclusive of horses, mules, and sheep. The rivers and creeks are supplied with an abundance of salmon and other fish; game is plentiful, and bears, wild cats, wolves, and coyotas, are often met with. On the northern side of the bay are found the American elk and antelope, and great quantities of deer; the first of these is hunted for its tallow, which is preferred to that taken from bullocks. The islands and neighbouring lands afford abundance of wood and timber. The soil is excellent, and, perhaps, in no part of the world more yielding, particularly for wheat; as an instance of its immense fertility in this respect, the following circumstance was related to me by the mayordomo of the mission of St. José. Eight fanegas, equa to twelve bushels of wheat, were sowed which yielded twelve hundred fanegas, or eighteen hundred bushels; the following year, from the grain which fell at the time of the first harvest, over one thousand bushels were reaped; and, again, in the succeeding year, three hundred bushels. The average production of wheat is one hundred fanegas for one sowed. In many parts of the country irrigation is necessary, but here, owing to the heavy dews which fall at night, the earth becomes sufficiently moistened for cultivation."

We have left ourselves but little space to speak of the very attractive character of this work, which abounds with statistical information, and cleverly-drawn pictures of the country and its people.

Both the preceding works, we should add, have just been issued in this country by Messrs. Wiley and Putnam, of Waterloo-place.

MEXICO.—MAN'S HAND MOUNTAIN.

MEMORIALS TO DR. SOUTHEY.

FEW men of genius have so pure a claim upon what Dr. Mackay calls "the affectionate reverence of posterity," as the lamented Rober Southey. We are, therefore, confident that these Memorials will bespeak the interest of our readers.

The first is a white marble bust, which has been placed in the cathedral of Bristol, the native city of the Poet. The supporting pedestal is of dove-coloured marble, and it stands within a canopied recess, as shown in our Illustration.

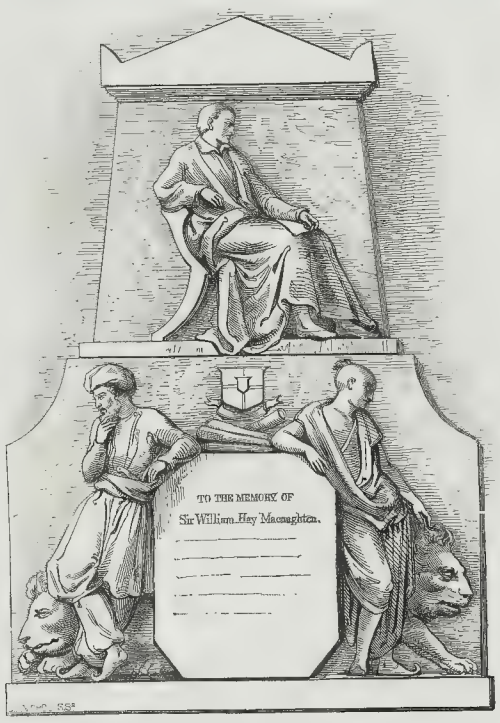
The second Memorial is a recumbent effigy of Dr. Southey, of white marble, admirably sculptured by Mr. Lough. It is intended to erect this monument in Crosthwaite Church, in the vale of Keswick: this structure has recently been entirely restored, at the expense of James Stanger, Esq.

The memory of Southey has also been honoured by the erection of a third Monument, viz. in Westminster Abbey. It consists of a plain entablature, bearing the name of the poet, and the periods of his birth and death, surmounted by his bust. It is but an appropriate compliment that this monument is placed near that of Shakspeare, and, of course, amongst those of the greatest English poets.

MONUMENT TO THE POET SOUTHEY, IN BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.

WILL OF SIR W. BOOTHBY.—The late Sir William Boothby, Bart., of Ashborne Hall, Derby, Receiver-General of her Majesty's Customs, had made his will in May, 1833, during the lifetime of his former wife, Lady Boothby, and in the event of her surviving, had made a provision for her of £300 a year; but Sir William did not alter his will on his intermarriage with Mrs. Nesbitt, nor has he made any testamentary disposition in her favour. To his daughters, Louisa, Caroline, and Maria, he leaves £3,000 each, and as the late Earl of Liverpool has amply provided for two of his children, Cecil and Fanny, he leaves to them, as a mark of affection, £100 each. The residue of his property, real and personal, he leaves to his son, Sir Brooke William Robert Boothby, Bart., who is the acting executor. The freehold in Derbyshire, and all other estates, he directs to be sold, the funded and personal property amounting to only £3,000.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—A paper was lately read at the Polytechnic Society of Berlin, by Baron de Reden, to prove that the number of accidents which occur on railways are exceedingly small in comparison to the number of travellers. In France, he stated, in the most unfavourable year, namely, in 1842, when the Versailles catastrophe took place, there was one accident for 25,000 travellers; and in 1844, the most favourable year, one accident for 1,321,000 travellers. In England, in 1840, the most unfavourable year, one accident for 64,000 travellers, and in 1843, the most favourable, one accident for 69,000. These figures, says M. de Reden, prove that accidents are much less frequent on the French than on the English lines. During the five years from 1841 to 1845 inclusively, the number of persons who were injured on English railways was 1,067 (of whom 399 lost their lives), or one in 95,000. In Belgium, in 1843, the most unfavourable year, there was one accident in 88,000 travellers; and in 1844, the most favourable one, one for 102,000. From 1835 to 1844, 58 persons were killed, and 103 injured on the Belgian railways. On the German railways, from 1841 to 1845 inclusively, there were only three persons injured and four persons killed.



MONUMENT TO SIR WILLIAM HAY MACNAGHTEN, BART.

MONUMENT TO SIR W. H. MACNAGHTEN.

THIS very interesting Memorial to the lamented Sir William Macnaghten has just been completed in marble by Mr. Lough, and is highly honourable to the chisel of this distinguished sculptor. It bears the following inscription:—

TO THE MEMORY OF
SIR WILLIAM HAY MACNAGHTEN, BARONET,
OF THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.
HIS MIND, LIBERALLY ENDOWED BY NATURE,
AND ENRICHED BY EDUCATION AND RESEARCH,
WAS QUICKENED INTO ACTION BY HIGH AND GENEROUS IMPULSES, ALIKE CONDUCIVE TO GOOD AND GREAT RESULTS,
AND TO HONOURABLE DISTINCTION.
THUS THAT CHARACTER BECAME DEVELOPED,
WHOSE EXCELLENCE, ACKNOWLEDGED WITHOUT DISSENT,
WAS REGARDED WITHOUT ENVY,
FROM THE MODESTY WHICH EMBELLISHED IT.
ENTRUSTED DURING A LONG CAREER OF ARDUOUS SERVICE
WITH CONFIDENTIAL AUTHORITY,
HE ADVANCED THE REPUTATION HE HAD EARLY ESTABLISHED;
UNTIL, WHILST ENVOY AT THE COURT OF CABUL, HONOURED BY HIS SOVEREIGN,
AND ON THE EVE OF ASSUMING THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY,
HIS BRIGHT CAREER OF EARTHLY USEFULNESS WAS ARRESTED.
REVOLT HAD BURST FORTH UPON THE LAND,
AND ON THE 22ND DAY OF DECEMBER, 1841,
IN THE SUMMER OF HIS MANHOOD AND HIS FORTUNES,
IN THE 42ND YEAR OF HIS AGE,
HE FELL BY THE HAND OF AN ASSASSIN.
HIS PUBLIC ACTS WILL BE FOUND
RECORDED IN THE ANNALS OF HIS COUNTRY.
THIS MEMORIAL IS THE LAST TRIBUTE PERMITTED TO PRIVATE FRIENDSHIP.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The undermentioned detachments of corps have been selected by the Commandant Colonel C. Middleton, at the cavalry depôt at Maidstone, for embarkation to join their respective regiments, serving in India, viz.:—3rd King's Own Light Dragoon Guards furnishes 130 men; 9th Queen's Royal Lancers 40 men, and the 14th King's Light Dragoons 70 men; making a total of 240 men. The following officers proceed with the above troops:—Captain J. W. Yerbury, with Cornet J. H. Stisted and Cornet F. Chaplin, of the 3rd Light Dragoons; Lieutenant W. Cosevelt Kortwright, Cornet John Henry King, and Cornet C. A. Delmar, of the 9th Lancers; and Cornet J. W. Bennett, of the 14th Light Dragoons.

DEATH OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR CHARLES PHILLIPS, KNT.—This veteran officer expired on the 20th instant, at his residence, Linwood Lyndhurst, New Forest, after an honourable and distinguished career, in the service of his country, of sixty-three years.

PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON.—It is stated that the Prince's journey to Florence, to see his dying father, is delayed in consequence of one of the representatives of a Power, through whose territories he must pass, refusing to visé his passport. This will account for the Prince's lengthened stay in London, and not from any more favourable accounts of his father's health having been received.

STEAM LOWER.—Above one hundred thousand men were employed for twenty years in erecting the Great Pyramid of Egypt. From a computation of M. Dupin, it appears that the steam-engines of England would equal the whole product of this immense application of human labour, in lifting stones, within the short space of eighteen hours.

PRESENT FROM MEHEMET ALI TO HER MAJESTY.—On Tuesday morning a handsome horse, estimated at the value of 3,000 guineas, arrived at Brighton by the General Steam Navigation Company's packet, the Magnet, as a present to her Majesty from Mehemet Ali, and was immediately forwarded to London by railway.

THE FOUNTAINS IN TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.—The fountains in Trafalgar-square, after a cessation of a few days, recommenced playing on Monday with increased vigour, some alteration having been effected for the purpose of giving a greater supply of water, and therefore of throwing up a higher jet. This has been a decided improvement, and it might be still further extended with great advantage, as the water power at command, from the great altitude of the reservoir, is sufficient to throw up a jet five times higher than at present.

EFFIGY OF THE POET SOUTHEY.—BY LOUGH

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 28.—Third Sunday after Trinity—Queen Victoria crowned, 1838.
MONDAY, 29 St. Peter
TUESDAY, 30.—Great Fire at Woolwich Arsenal, 1805.
WEDNESDAY, July 1.—Battle of the Nile, 1780.
THURSDAY, 2.—Hungerford Market opened, 1833.
FRIDAY, 3 D.... Days long.
SATURDAY, 4 Transfiguration.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 4.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
5 30	6 03	6 08	6 35	6 45	7 07	7 21	7 46	8 15	8 40	9 21	9 33

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Smoker." St. Ivo has been styled the Patron of Woolcombers His festival (Feb. 3) was formerly kept by processions with candles, which may have led to the Bishop's offices being printed upon tobacco wrappers.

"Enquirer." We have not one of the Kind.

"R. C." Impossible, however the numerous attention of Miss Fanny Corbeaux, must be gratifying at any moment.

"W. S." Plymouth In 1801.

"A Constant Subscriber." Copthall-court.—An before a vowel or h mute.

"R. F. E."—Declined.

"Telemachus" Hitchet is derived from the French, Hache, Hachette Latin, Asca a small axe. Refer to any common work on Gardening for a Remedy for Blight

"G. W. S." Dublin.—M. There's new work is in course of publication. We are not aware of the conditions upon which the translation in question was commenced.

"A Real Sonnemer." A newly-invented Life-Preserver, the Nautilus Belt, may be purchased in Wellington-street, Strand.

"X. Z. Z." Railway trains run from London to Ipswich, viâ "Eastern Counties" and "Eastern Union."

"Jafier."—We do not know the present "whereabout" of Mr. or Miss Vandenhoff.

"Delta." Beccles.—Certainly.

"N. H."—It is not expected that the River Terrace in front of the New Houses of Parliament will be open to the public.

"J. W." Waterford, is anxious to obtain the address of the representatives of the late Capt. Burns, who, in 1838, lived in Torrington-square.

"W. L. B." The Supplement to No. 114 of our Journal contains an illustrated description of the Tools used in Wood Engraving.

"Organistes"—A small work was published last year by Messrs. Longman, on the Organs built since the Reign of Charles II. There is a brief but practical article on the Construction of Organs in the "Penny Cyclopædia."

"Aliquis."—The well-timed "Railway Song" which so highly amused the company at the Eastern Union Railway Opening, is by Mr. Brulon, the popular comic singer and composer, who conducted the vocal arrangements on the above occasion.

"A. A." should remit the amount to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

"W. A. B." Staffordshire Potteries, has adduced many cogent reasons for preferring Phonography, or Phonetic Short-hand, to the mere A B C systems. Our Correspondent's reasons are greater simplicity, rapidity, brevity, and ease of reading.

"Denelm," Durham, should apply to Mr. Thomas, News-agent, Finch-lane, Cornhill.

"Alpha"—The medallion stamp will suffice, provided it has not received the post-office obliterating mark.

"Balena." Next week

"R. B. D." Manchester.—" Hemingway's Guide to Wales," to be obtained, by order, of a London publisher.

"C." Gillingham, should address Stratton-street, Piccadilly.

"G. H. B. A." Glasgow.—The Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons has a double line of seats—one for the gentlemen taking notes, and one for those in waiting to relieve them. The whole of the present House having been fitted up after the fire, the side galleries are of the same date as the seats in the body of the House.

"Y. R. Y." Bristol. Many similar plans of remedying the inconvenience of the Break of Gauge have been proposed: it had better be referred to a practical Engineer it is impossible to give an opinion from a mere verbal description.

"Medicus" must receive the same notice in reply to his letter: we are glad that our assertions on the Grape Question prove correct.

"A Reader and Subscriber."—The local history of Whitby will afford the information required about Hugo Cholmondeley's monument.

"P. H. I."—Letters to public office should be prepaid. The pronunciation of the second part of the title referred to is similar to "ring."

"Anonymosity."—Immediately after the will is proved, the will may be referred. Doctors' Commons is close to St. Paul's Churchyard. The payment of one shilling to the office will obtain the inspection of a will.

"S. S."—A Captain in the Army, being an Esquire from the fact of his holding the Queen's commission, takes precedence of a Country Gentleman who is not invested with the temporary or any official rank.

"Suspende." To words "High Honourable" are correctly applied to those children of Peers to whom courtesy allows the title of Lord; consequently, the appropriate address of the Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief would be "The Right Hon. Lord Fitzroy Somerset."

"Jane." Mr. Weiss, of Drury Lane Theatre, is no relation of Madame Weiss, the Proscriptrix of the Viennese Children. Her Majesty's address may be obtained at the Stage Door of the Opera House.

"Police." The reported marriage of Mario with a lady of rank has been authoritatively contradicted. We do not know the amount of Rachel's salary at Sans-Souci, but we engaged by the King of Wurtemberg for life. We do not know for what pensions are appointed.

"A. W." Dublin.—Madame Pixis does not give lessons

"Scrutator." The new franc from Johnson's translation of the 10th Satire of Juvenal, on the Vanity of Human Wishes. The person referred to is Charles XII., of Sweden The allusion is to the long hair of the Merovingian Kings. The skin worn for the Greek Dionysiac robe, worn by the actors of tragedy, which was in its origin of a religious character, and connected with the worship of Dionysus, the Greek Deity of Wine. "Scripsed pult," means pult (robe) and scripta.—The circumflex accent " is made up of the acute ' and the grave `, and originally indicates a contraction. As the acute cannot be thrown further back than the antepenultimate syllable, the circumflex must fall on the penultimate.

"G. R.," Nottingham Park. Under consideration.

"A. H.," Bedfast, is thanked; but the Sketch reached us too late for engraving.

"A Lover of the West" should have paid the postage of his communication. Ibrahim Pacha enjoys smoking; the counter-statement appeared by mistake.

"A Subscriber," Ramsgate We do not recommend either.

"A Constant Reader," Grantham, should address his application to the Editor of the Publisher's Circular, Fleet-street, the most likely means of hearing of a copy of a modern book out of print.

"J. Le L." Wakefield.—Mudie's Lives of the Players," published some years since, is, we believe, the latest work of its kind.

"Lady Fanny" is recommended to consult the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts."

"W. S." may purchase the varnish at any fancy stationer's.

"German National Sport." We have not room for this communication of five folios extend

"W. G." Are not the lines set to music by our Correspondent, copyright?

"F. d'A."—We will take care.

"R. C." Stamford.—A complete work on the Punjab is on the eve of publication.

"B. H.," Shoreditch Next week

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1846.

THE CORN Bill was read a third time in the House of Peers soon after nine o'clock on Thursday evening, passing its final stage without a division. A message immediately brought down to the Commons their Lordships' assent to the measure. Mr. Charles Buller was speaking at the moment against the Irish Coercion Bill; the body of the House was moderately well filled; and as it appeared generally known what the message would be, as soon as the Masters in Chancery appeared below the Bar, there was a slight murmur of remark. The Pachas of Egypt, his interpreter, and attendants, were seated below the Bar, where they had been for some time spectators of the debate, up to that period rather a languid one. As soon as Mr. Buller had concluded, the Speaker summoned the Lords' messengers, they advanced to the table and communicated to the House the Peers' assent to several measures, among them the Customs' Duties, and Corn Importation Bills; as soon as the titles of the last named acts were uttered, a general cheer burst from what is generally called the "Opposition benches," by which cries this question at least have held the stanch supporters of the Government; the Protectionists of course sat in silence, the messengers retired, and the last form of the House of Commons with respect to these great measures was completed.

There is something solemn in the completion of an act, that, as far as legislation can affect it, must influence the destinies not of England only, but the world. The laws regulating the trade in corn, so often changed, so violently contested, unpopular when they were passed, a constant theme of declamation to those who denounced them, and scarcely felt as a benefit (to judge from frequent complaints) by those for whose protection they were intended, have virtually ceased to exist; their term is appointed, and in their past shape at least they will vex Cabinets and Ministers no more. For nearly thirty years they can be traced through successive Parliaments—through voluminous debates—through the writings of statesmen, merchants, and philosophers; the principle they involved has set up and thrown down Ministries; they have called forth, in the midst of an age of indifference, the most powerful "League" History has seen, not even excepting the great Commercial League of the Middle Ages—the Union of the Hanseatic Towns—that overthrew and destroyed the power of the feudal Barons, who knew nothing of commerce, save that it was a convenient thing to plunder merchants by tolls. The ruins nodding on many a "castled crag" of the Rhine are the works of those sturdy Burghers, who dealt with the fighting Barons with their own weapons—the torch and spear! But we live in other and better days: our victories are those of peace; discussion, and opinion, are the pioneers of our improvements. One of the greatest changes of modern times has been wrought without violence, tumult, or terror, not a single life endangered—not a blow struck—not a drop of blood shed! How few have been the great social changes of which the same can be said! The Corn Laws have gathered together as large assemblies of men as ever met to advocate a change in England, and that frequently; and yet in no instance has the peace been endangered. It is creditable to all parties among us that this should have been the case.

On no measure has a Minister ever proved himself more powerful than Sir Robert Peel in the Repeal of the Corn-Laws; yet, so blended is the good and evil of human things, that at the very moment his triumph on this measure was completed, his fall was hastening upon another. Ireland is still the bitter drop, the amari aliquid in the cup of prosperity. Is it always so to be? Is Ireland destined to play the part of the slave the ancients placed in the triumphal car of the conqueror, to remind him, in the height of his exultation, of the frailty of poor Mortality? It seems to be the part at present—for at the very moment the Premier completed his conquest of the House of Peers, and heard his measure put past all fear, the debate was closing that prostrates him! Thus, almost in a few hours are included the extreme of success and the depth of humiliation and defeat.

OUR attention has been drawn to an article in the Dublin Evening Mail of the 13th inst. On perusing it we were surprised to find in some passages a perfect identity of language with a letter we had some days before received from a Dublin Correspondent. We conclude, therefore, that the writer of the letter and author of the leader, are one and the same person. We always receive the communications of private Correspondents with respect, believing that a strong interest in the question prompts them to take the only available mode of stating their opinions; but when an individual, who has the columns of another journal at his disposal, obtrudes his advice upon us by letter, and then twists the same epistle, with additions and suppressions, into a newspaper leader, we must treat it, not as a letter which is entitled to courtesy, but as a public attack, which deserves none. Our double censor finds fault with certain statements in our "History of Dublin;" he has a perfect right to form his opinions on the subject, as we have ours. But we do not see that, either in his letter or leader, a single fact is disproved or denied. The History of the Rebellion of 1798 is a sad one for all parties; no Englishman can read it without shame and disgust; but, unless facts, dates, names, sums, occurrences, can be erased from our records, the conclusions of most men upon them will be much the same, and the general opinion in England is that to which we have given expression.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—[From our own Correspondent.]—Although nothing, at present, has been determined upon with reference to the precise period the Court will return to Windsor, there appears to be very little doubt that her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Royal Family, will arrive at the Castle in about a fortnight—not in much more than ten days. The future arrangements, however, connected with the movements of the Court, will very materially depend, in the present state of political matters, upon the decision of Sir Robert Peel, and the Ministry, as to any changes which may take place consequent upon certain contemplated events. The private apartments at the Castle, however, are always kept in a state of preparation, so that they may be fit for the reception of her Majesty at a few hours' notice. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent took a carriage airing in the Great Park this afternoon, attended by the Baroness de Speth, and Lady Augusta Bruce. Her Royal Highness will prolong her stay at Frogmore House, during the visit of the Court to the Isle of Wight.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE HOUSE. The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing on Tuesday afternoon in an open carriage, the Prince driving in the rides of Osborne House. On Wednesday morning their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice went to the sea beach, and took their accustomed exercise with the Majesty and her Royal Consort walked on Wednesday forenoon in the plantations of Osborne House. We understand that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert purpose to prolong their residence at Osborne House until Wednesday next, July 1.

ENTERTAINMENT TO HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.—Last Saturday evening, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston gave a sumptuous entertainment to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at their mansion on Carlton House-terrace.

BARONESS ROTHSCHILD'S FETE CHAMPETRE. On Wednesday afternoon, Baroness Rothschild gave a magnificent fête champêtre at Gunnersbury Park to their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and Prince George of Cambridge. The arrangements were on a scale of princely splendour. At six o'clock, the repast was announced, the Royal table in the grand dining-room being laid for thirty-six guests, at which the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, and Prince George of Cambridge, and a select circle partook of a sumptuous repast. A table was provided in the orangery for nearly ninety persons; and, in addition, a spacious marquee, erected on the border of the lake, afforded accommodation for above 100 persons. At dusk, the whole of the company repaired to the mansion; and in the music-room, which was brilliantly illuminated, dancing commenced, Jullien's band being stationed in the conservatory that adjoins that splendid saloon.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

The following inscription is now being cut in the north-west corner recess of the colonnade:—

On this site
Sir Thomas Gresham
Erected the first building for the meetings of
The merchants of this certain,
Which was named by Queen Elizabeth
THE ROYAL EXCHANGE,
January XXIII., MDLXIX.
It was destroyed,
In the great Fire of London,
September II., MDCLXVI.
By the care of King Charles the Second
It was rebuilt,
And opened September XXVIII., MDCLXX.
On January X., MDCCC.XXIV.,
The Exchange was again destroyed by fire,
And on January XIII., MDCCC.XXIV.,
The first stone of the building was laid by
Her Majesty's Most Gracious
His Royal Highness Prince Albert.
The Princess Royal
Was also present
The Queen of England,
Victoria.
The Royal Exchange,
William Tite, F.R.S., Architect.

In the south-west corner recess are engraved the names of the members of the Joint Gresham Committee at the opening of the Royal Exchange, on the 28th day of October, 1844.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS. The births in the metropolitan districts in the week ending Saturday, June 20th, were 1320, being 3 less than the preceding week; the deaths were 868, or 13 less than the preceding week. The mean temperature at Greenwich of 20 days in June was 66 degrees 9 minutes, being 3 degrees 6 minutes higher than the highest mean temperature of any corresponding 20 days in June since 1841. The mean temperature of the week was 9 degrees 2 minutes higher than the mean temperature of the corresponding week for 25 years. The deaths were again much below the average of the last 6 years.

SALE OF THE ST. JAMES'S CLUB-HOUSE.—On Tuesday, the St. James's Club-house, better known as Crockford's, was sold by auction by Messrs. Christie and Manson, by order of the executors of Mr. Crockford, for the sum of £5,900. It was held on lease, of which 36 years were unexpired, subject to a yearly rent of £1,400. It was said at the sale that the decorations alone of the building cost the late proprietor £24,000.

ELECTION OF SHERIFFS.—Wednesday being appointed for the election of Sheriffs, Guildhall was crowded to excess. Placards were posted about the exterior, calling upon the Livery to vote for John Walter, J. Thornton, Alderman Challis, and R. W. Kennard, Esqs. At one precisely the Lord Mayor entered the Hall. After the customary business had been gone through, the Common Sergeant read over the names of the gentlemen put in nomination. The show of hands was in favour of Alderman Challis and R. W. Kennard, Esq.; not a hand was held up in favour of the other gentlemen. The Sheriffs accordingly declared the election to have fallen on Alderman Challis and R. W. Kennard, Esq.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—On Monday, prizes were awarded by this Society for the following lots of domestic fowls, &c., now exhibiting at the Gardens, in the Regent's Park:—Mr. Spigen's four grey Dorking fowls, second prize. Mr Lewry, old Sussex fowls, first prize. Messrs. Baker, gold-spangled Hamburg, second prize; Spanish fowls, second prize; Malay fowls, second prize; Indian game fowls, second prize; cross between Cochin China and Surrey, second prize; black-breasted red game, second prize; Cochin China, first prize; gold-spangled bantams, second prize; black bantams, second prize; silver owl pigeons, first prize; Aylesbury ducks, second prize; Rouan ducks, second prize. Mr. Nolan, of Dublin, gold-spangled pheasant fowl, second prize; turkey (male), first prize; Toulouse geese, second prize. The birds are exhibited in a range of cages, shaded by an avenue of trees, and extending on either side along the walk which leads from the end of the new carnivora dens to the tunnel which forms the communication between the north and south gardens. The Exhibition will remain open until after the next Promenade Musicale, on the 4th of July.

DEMOLITION OF CANONBURY HOUSE.—This once-celebrated tavern, with its tea-gardens, is to be pulled down. In another week or two, not a vestige of either will be remaining. The grounds have been cut up; streets are laid out, and boxes of brick and mortar will speedily occupy the whole site. Thus, as the metropolis spreads out in every direction, were it not for sea-shores and railroads, the inhabitants of the extreme cities would be deprived of every chance of inhaling fresh and health-giving air. The tavern cannot boast of any great antiquity. Within the last century it was but an unconsiderable alehouse, and was subsequently, from time to time, improved and enlarged. An excellent bowling-green and pleasant tea-gardens were added; and, at length, it became one of the most respectable places of public resort near town, celebrated for the festivities of corporate and parochial bodies. Now its glory has departed, and in a little while it will be known no more.

ROYAL HOSPITAL, CHELSEA.—The grand fête and bazaar held in the beautiful Gardens of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on behalf of the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, terminated on Friday evening (last week), much to the satisfaction of its benevolent supporters. The sum realised was upwards of £1,000.

THE PRICE OF BREAD IN THE METROPOLIS. On Wednesday another reduction took place in the price of bread among the bakers of the metropolis. Some, however, maintained the prices of 6d., although that the reduction in wheat did not justify any alteration. Good bread may now be purchased at 6d. per loaf, and 6½d. to 7d. for the best.

THE WEATHER.—The weather is still an object of great interest. On Monday last the heat was intense. In the sun, the thermometer was, at one time of the day, at 130; and at 90 in the shade. At night, however, a heavy storm took place, which purified the air. It was particularly violent in parts of Kent, and also in Essex. A great deal of rain also fell in London. The lightning was very vivid, but the thunder was not violent. Since then, the weather has been much cooler. On Tuesday morning there was a cold, north-westerly wind, but the thermometer, in doors, was at 68.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

LAMENTABLE SUICIDE OF MR. HAYDON, THE ARTIST.

We regret very much to announce the suicide of Mr. B. R. Haydon, the historical painter, caused, as it is believed, by pecuniary embarrassments.

The story which Mr Haydon affected his wife and children that the unhappy man had coolly and deliberately considered everything in connection with his dreadful purpose, before putting the same into execution.

On Tuesday evening, while sitting with his family, he suggested to Mrs. Haydon that she should, on the following morning, proceed to Brixton, for the purpose of visiting a gentleman, named Coulton, an old friend of the family. Although the suggestion appeared somewhat strange, Mrs. Haydon promised to accede to it, and in due course Mr. Haydon retired to rest, apparently in his usual health and spirits.

On Monday morning Mr. Haydon rose at an early hour, and shortly after left the house. He returned home about nine o'clock, apparently fatigued from walking. He immediately retired to his studio, and passed some time in writing. At half-past nine the young daughter of Mr. Haydon, Miss Haydon, proceeded at one o'clock, in order to convey a letter (as the man describes) to the Duke of Sutherland. As the messenger was about leaving the room, Mr. Haydon desired him not to wait an answer to the communication.

Mr. Haydon, shortly before ten o'clock, appears to have entered his painting room (the principal apartment on the first floor of his residence), and here it was that he committed the dreadful act. It was usual for Mr. Haydon to lock himself into this apartment when engaged in painting, and he seems to have done so on Monday morning. At a few minutes after ten o'clock, Mrs. Haydon passed up stairs, on her way to her own room. As she passed the door of the painting room, she tried the lock, upon which Mr. Haydon called out, rather loudly and hurriedly, "Who's that?" Mrs. Haydon replied, it was only herself, and that she was proceeding to dress. Mrs. Haydon then went to Brixton. Mr. Haydon rejoined, "Oh, very well;" adding, as she left the door, "God bless you! I will see you presently." Within a few minutes, Mr. Haydon followed his wife up stairs, and in her bedroom found his unhappy daughter in a swooning state. Mrs. Haydon was informed with her until she had completed her toilet. Shortly before this (about a quarter to eleven o'clock), both ladies were for the moment alarmed by what appeared to be the report of a gun or pistol. The servants, however, being exercising in the park close at hand at the time, and, as nothing particular succeeded the report, both Mrs. Haydon and her daughter imagined that the alarm had originated from the firing of the artillery. They did not, however, hear any fall on the floor of the room beneath was heard, but as Mr. Haydon was frequently in the habit of moving his heavy pictures, and in so doing allowing the corners to fall suddenly on the ground, the noise was attributed to that circumstance, and no notice was taken of it.

Shortly after eleven Mrs. Haydon left the house, and proceeded to Brixton.

At a quarter-past twelve, Miss Haydon, who is only sixteen years of age, prompted by filial affection, and knowing the desponding state of mind in which her father had been for some time, went down stairs and knocked at the door of the painting room. Not hearing her father's usual prompt reply, she tried the lock, which opened at her touch, and a moment's glance discovered the body of her unhappy parent crouched up together on the floor. Her first impression was that her father had fallen down in a fit. This illusion was, however, soon dispelled, and the frightful reality made manifest. Miss Haydon immediately rushed out of the house and ran across the way to the residence of Messrs. Bryant and White, surgeons, in Burwood place, the former of whom has been for a long time the family medical attendant. Mr. Bryant was, unfortunately, from home at the time, and a neighbouring surgeon was sent for. Without waiting his arrival, however, Miss Haydon, throwing herself into a cab, directed the man to drive her to Brixton, intending to proceed to Mr. Coulton's, where her mother had previously gone. Mr. Coulton and Mrs. Haydon crossed the young lady on the road in a hackney coach, and arrived together in Brewer's-place, shortly after one o'clock, Mr. Coulton's visit merely arising from some little matter of business he wished to transact with Mr. Haydon. On entering the house, they learned the dreadful tidings. Mr. Coulton, who was an intimate friend of the unhappy artist, proceeded up stairs, where he found the deceased in the state described, and on the table several sealed packets. The first of these was addressed to "Mrs. Haydon and my dearest love." It contained several letters: one to herself, imploring her forgiveness for the additional pang which his last act would add to the many he had already given her, and expressing a hope that Sir Robert Peel would, if possible, be (the deceased) had earned a pension for her. It also alluded to the receipt of a cheque for £50 from the private purse of the same right hon. Baronet, on the previous Friday, £10 of which he directed should be given to his daughter; £10 to his son Frank; and the remainder to be appropriated to her own purposes. The packet also contained a letter to each of his children, enjoining them to lead a pious life and live affectionately with each other, with other appropriate advice to each. Another packet contained the deceased's will, in which he appointed as his executors Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, Dr. Darling, and Mr. Coulton. This document, which is of a most extraordinary and elaborate character, gives a full detail of the unhappy man's life and difficulties. It also devises his various pictures to different individuals. A third packet contained three letters, addressed respectively to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Sir George Strickland, and Mr. Sergeant Talfourd. These Mr. Coulton took possession of, and immediately delivered in person. No trace was discovered of any letter addressed to the Duke of Sutherland.

Within two hours after the receipt of Sir Henry Hayter, Sir Robert Peel replied to Mr. Coulton, as the principal executor of the unhappy deceased. His letter, after expressing how painfully he was shocked at the intelligence Mr. Haydon's letter had communicated, went on to state that as he feared the family might be in need of some immediate assistance, he had thought it right to enclose a cheque for £200 from the Royal Bounty Fund, as a temporary relief. The right honourable baronet further stated, that he proposed a permanent provision for the family would be immediately suggested; and if so, he begged to add, that so far as his own private purse and personal influence were concerned, both might be commanded.

There was another paper found, headed "The Last Thoughts of Haydon," at half-past ten o'clock, one of the principal points in which was a comparison of the characters of the Duke of Wellington and Napoleon Buonaparte.

An examination of the body proves that the deceased must have first fired a pistol into his head, a perforated bullet wound being visible in the parietal bone. The appearance of the face had a fair effect; and there are traces of blood about the room where deceased appears to have subsequently walked to obtain possession of a razor, with which he afterwards inflicted two severe gashes in his throat, and thus caused death.

Mr. Haydon has left four children to mourn his death.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Wakley, M.P., held an inquest upon the deceased, at the Norfolk Arms Tavern, Burwood-place, Edgware-road. Some of the evidence forms a repetition of the facts above stated; but we give it because it elucidates all the melancholy facts of the case.

Miss Mary Haydon, daughter of the deceased, was first called. She said, I am the daughter of the deceased, whose name was Benjamin Robert Haydon. He was an artist, and resided at No. 14, Burwood-place, Edgware-road. He was sixty years of age in January last. I found him dead on the floor of his studio about a quarter past twelve on Monday morning last. I went there on returning from a short walk which I had taken with my brother, who was herself gone to Brixton at the request of my father. On opening the studio door I saw my father stretched across the floor with a quantity of blood near the upper part of his person. I felt his head and found it cold. I then alarmed the servants, and, on the coach coming up stairs, I ran across the way to call Mr. Bryant, my father's medical attendant. He was from home, and shortly after my return I left the house, and proceeded to Brixton, to inform my mother of what had occurred. He was my father last saw about ten o'clock on Monday morning. He then looked agitated,—more so than usual. I have never before known him to make any attempt upon his life.

The Coroner: Had your father been under medical treatment lately?—Witness: Yes.

The Coroner: Had he complained of his head in any way of late?—Witness: Yes. It was very unusual for him to do so; but on Sunday night last he did complain, and during the last two or three days I recollect to have seen him frequently put his hand up to his head.

The Coroner: Did your father usually sleep well?—Witness: He had not done so for the last three months.

The Coroner: And did he not seek medical advice?—No, sir. The witness here added, "My father was a man of very temperate habits."

The Coroner: Have you observed anything remarkable in his manner of late?—Witness: I have noticed that he had a very different expression of countenance during the last three days. He was very silent during the whole of that period, and apparently absent in mind.

The Coroner: Are you aware where your father kept his razors?—Witness: In his bed-room, generally. I never knew that he had a pistol in his possession, but I have heard that he had a carbine. My father went out very early on Monday morning before breakfast, and it is possible he might have purchased the pistol on that occasion.

Mr. Orlando Hyman, of 4, Porchester-place, was next introduced. He said: I am a step-son of the deceased, the son of Mrs. Haydon by a former husband. I am a surgeon. I last saw the deceased on the Saturday previous to his death. I very rarely saw much of him. On Saturday, I observed a very great alteration in his countenance. All his family observed the same change in him, thinking it arose from the unfortunate circumstances in which he was placed, we were thrown off our guard, and did not pay so much attention to it. The deceased seldom said much to me, and never complained to me, but my mother had frequently mentioned to me that he has complained to her. He was eccentric from his youth.

The Coroner: He was, I believe, a man of temperate habits?—Mr. Hyman: He was a man of marked sobriety, and led the most regular life possible.

The Coroner: Do you know, sir, was the deceased in the habit of keeping a diary, in which he noted down the principal circumstances which occurred to him?—Mr. Hyman: He was, sir.

The Coroner: Have you read any portion of that diary of late? Mr. Hyman: I have looked into it several times, more from the fact of its having been left open, which was a somewhat unusual occurrence.

The Coroner here produced a large folio manuscript volume, enclosed in vellum covers, and, handing the same to Mr. Hyman, said: Will you be good enough to look over the entries for the last few weeks, and read such extracts, or portions of them, as will not disclose family secrets in any way. I observe a note from Sir Robert Peel attached to one of the entries, which I should like to have read. If the Jury are not satisfied with the arrangement I propose, they can of course inspect the diary for themselves, but I do not wish that the deceased's circumstances should be unnecessarily paraded before the public.

Mr. Hyman retired to mark the passages in the diary as suggested by the Coroner, and on his return read a variety of extracts from the manuscript:—

April 4.—The first day of my exhibition being opened. Not a single admission on one cause, Jerrold, Bowring, Fox Maule, and Rothhaus excepted. How different would it have been twenty-six years ago. The ruin would not have kept them away then.

Receipts first day. Expenses first day.
Christ Entering Jerusalem—1820. Banishment of Aristides.
£19 16s. £1 1s. 6d.

To God I trust. Amen

April 18.—Receipts, £1 2s. 6d.! An advertisement of a fine description could not have been written to catch the public, but not a shilling more was added to the receipts. They ran by thousands to see Tom Thumb. They push—they fight—they scream—they faint—they "help!" and "murder!" They see my bills, I warrant, but do not read them. They see in them, but they see to gape. It is a melancholy—a rather furious illustration of what I would not have believed Englishmen could have been guilty. My situation is now one of which I have known so many. I began fourteen, thirty-eight years ago. Involved in debt, as a young poet, more so than when I began fourteen, thirty-eight years ago. Involved in debt, as a youthful painter of little sympathy which the public display towards me, I could not have several private engagements yet to fulfil. I awoke, as usual, at four o'clock this morning, and was immediately filled with the next picture of my career. I felt immediately, the whispering of an evil or good spirit, but believing it to be for good, I called to the actor, who has led me through so many years, not to desert me at the eleventh hour.

May 1.—I have just received a lawyer's letter—the first for a long time. I have called on Mr. ——, who is an amiable man, and has promised to give me time. I came home in a state of horror, delight, misery, and satisfaction, and sat down to my palette under an irritable influence. My brain became confused, as I foresaw ruin, misery, and prison before me. I went on with the picture, and rejoiced heavily at its effects. I was then harassed and confused, felt into a deep slumber, from which I did awake for an hour. I awoke and—the fire came out of the picture, and I was saved.

May 14.—That day 42 years I left my native Plymouth for London. I have closed my exhibition, with a loss of £111. No one can accuse me of showing less talent or energy than 26 years ago.

May 2.—Worked hard at my picture, and advanced immensely. Felt uneasy because I could not get the dear son money to go and see his mother.

June 3.—Called on my dear friend Kemp, who advanced me some cash to get over my difficulties. By the same my pictures are finished they will be all mortgaged. Oh, heavens! what is that I get them done.

June 18.—Got on much advanced, but my necessities are dreadful, owing to the failure of my brother-in-law, the bail. In God I trust. It is hard—this struggle of forty-two years' duration; but Thy will, and not mine be done.

June 14.—O God, let it not be presumption in me to call for Thy blessing on my own works. Let no difficulty on earth stay their progress. Grant this week Thy Divine aid. Even accident, inevitable accident, forbids to save me from the embarrassments which want of money will bring upon me, and grant that this day week I may be able to thank Thee for my entire deliverance.

June 15.—Rose in great anxiety, after harassing thoughts about for several hours in the heat of the sun.

June 18.—Sat from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 20.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 21.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 22.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 23.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 24.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 25.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 26.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 27.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 28.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 29.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

June 30.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 1.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 2.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 3.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 4.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 5.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 6.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 7.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 8.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 9.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 10.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 11.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 12.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 13.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 14.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 15.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 16.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 17.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 18.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 19.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 20.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 21.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 22.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 23.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 24.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 25.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 26.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 27.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 28.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 29.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 30.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

July 31.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 1.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 2.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 3.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 4.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 5.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 6.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 7.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 8.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 9.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 10.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 11.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 12.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 13.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 14.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 15.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 16.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 17.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 18.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 19.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 20.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 21.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 22.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 23.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 24.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 25.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 26.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 27.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 28.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 29.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 30.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

August 31.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 1.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 2.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 3.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 4.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 5.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 6.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 7.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 8.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 9.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 10.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 11.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 12.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 13.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 14.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 15.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 16.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 17.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 18.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 19.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 20.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 21.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 22.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 23.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 24.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 25.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 26.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 27.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 28.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 29.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

September 30.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 1.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 2.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 3.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 4.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 5.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 6.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 7.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 8.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 9.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 10.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 11.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 12.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 13.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 14.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 15.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 16.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 17.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the morning till 8 in the evening.

October 18.—Sent from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my pecuniary difficulties. Got no rest after, so kept on in a frenzy from 5 in the mor

THE BONFIRE DANCE.

THE HILL BONFIRE.

THE FEAST IN THE HALL.

MIDSUMMER'S OR ST. JOHN'S EVE.

(AS IT USED TO BE.)

What ho! what ho! 'Tis St. John's Eve,
The Summer's joyous feast;
Come forth to keep the festival
Bold yeoman, peer, and priest.
Some hoary eld and childhood fair—
The matron and the maid—
For sun ne'er shone on Saint like Joh
Who died by Herod's blade.

Light up the bonfires on the hill—
The altars of the sun;
Light up the fires, while city spires
Ring out their benison.
And dance ye deftly round and round,
Each gleesome nymph and swain;
Or through the fire-ordeal bound,
With laugh and jest amain.

Ay! those were good and gallant times
When England's King and Queen,
'Mid loud hurzas and merry chimes,
Rode in the jocund scene.
They came with all their brilliant Court,
And beauteous dames serene,
Nor scorn'd to grace the festive sport
Upon the blazing green.

Then burst the rebeck long and loud,
Then rose the choral song;
Then strove the champions of the crowd
The wrestlers keen and strong;
And still upon their stalwart limbs
The bona fides brightly shone,
So saith the chronicle which hymns
The Feast of Good St. John.

Then thro' the glade, the love-sick maid
Stole forth with mystic rite,
To [illegible] by card,
Of her [illegible] night
Then simple-minded rustics drew
Omens of good or ill,
By orisons gather'd 'neath the dew
Of midnight calm and chill.

Why laugh we at those times bygone,
And ridicule our sires,
Who hail'd the Feast of Good St. John,
And danced around his fires?
Wisdom has loved to seek the part
When overwrought the head,
And Virtue often play'd her part
In scenes where Frolic led.

Then ho! come forth! 'tis St. John's eve
Come forth! The glorious sun
Prepares our northern clime to leave,
And smile more warmly on
The sweet, sweet south! Then age and youth
Come forth, with wife and maid,
For never shone a saint like John,
Who fell by headsman's blade.

MIDSUMMER EVE FESTIVAL.—DRAWN BY WILLIAM HARVEY.

FINE ARTS.—THE EXHIBITION AT THE LOUVRE.

DUCKS.—BY DECAMPS.

LES CANARDS (Ducks).' By DECAMPS.

THE name of this eminent artist is not yet so popular in England as it ought to be, owing to the difficulties of rendering, either in lithography or engraving, the principal merit of his magnificent pictures; yet his productions are familiar to every artist or amateur, as some of his works have already found their way into several of our best private collections. Decamps is not only a great colourist—the very best of the modern school, perhaps, with one exception, viz. Diaz, unfortunately quite a new name in our artistical world—but he is, also, quite original. His style and subjects are his own entirely. His attempts, and always succeeds, in effects of light never attempted before. It is impossible to point out any master, ancient or modern, to whom he may be fairly compared. Thus, in the picture before us, a scorching Asiatic sun on the wall, contrasted with the freshness of the water in the shadowed part, is one of the most felicitous efforts of art we, perhaps, ever witnessed. The only objection made by fastidious critics to his pictures, with some appearance of justice, is the abuse of what the French call empâtement—the usual result of an over rapidity of execution.

LE CONVOI. By LELEUX.

THIS picture, by a young and very promising artist, is an instance of the freedom and facility of composition so very remarkable among the French modern painters. We have already noticed among them a sensible return to a more congenial source of inspiration; and the execution of the above natural and affecting scene, in one of the most rugged parts of France (Brittany), shows what a source is open to every true lover of nature, when unbiassed by the conventional contempt for everything of one's age or country.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

'Tis but a few years since, the singers of the Italian Opera, openly and avowedly neglected the means of dramatic effect, as not embraced in the scope of the lyrical art. And, even long after Meyerbeer and others had worked a reform, in this respect, on the French stage, most of the Italian operas of the day were still composed and executed, as though the libretto were but the link by which airs, trios, and duets, were strung together; and the audiences applauded, as though nothing more were wanting. How altered is the case now! Some of the first of living actors are included in the troupe of the Italian Opera here; while those, who in years past, depended for success on the effect of a beautiful voice and agile execution, are now compelled, in compliance with the improved taste of the day, to study the acting as well as the singing of their parts. Of this, Mario is an instance. Until this year, his co-operation in an opera, in which the other parts were taken by such admirable actors as Grisi, Castellan, Lablache, and Formes, was frequently diminished than increased its dramatic effect, in spite of his handsome person and delightful voice. But, this year, his improvement in this respect is matter of general remark. His acting of "I Lombardi," setting aside his execution of the music, is a triumph. His performance of the "Sonnambula" (with the exception of the last scene) and that of the "Lucrezia Borgia," are also instances of this remarkable advance; and now he has twice worthily enacted Edgardo, in "Lucia di Lammermoor"—a part more than any other requiring dramatic feeling and energy. Few characters possess a more romantic interest than that of the unfortunate Edgar of Ravenswood, in Sir Walter Scott's charming fiction, and this has been transferred to the Edgardo of the opera with remarkable success. He is still the same proud, gloomy, and intractable character, forgetting his revenge awhile in the ardour of his passion for his enemy's daughter, but only to return to it with greater vehemence at the least suspicion of wrong done to himself. This character gives admirable materials for the composer and librettist, who have profited by them to the utmost, and Mario does not fall short of their inspirations.

No character could be more appropriate to Madame Castellan than that of the gentle, affectionate, confiding Lucy Ashton. The unaffectedness and natural sensibility which give such a charm to the acting of this artiste, her youthfulness and grace of person, and her fresh and delicious voice, all point her out as the Lucia par excellence; and, thus performed, this charming opera is truly most attractive.

"Lucrezia Borgia" was given on Tuesday last, with its wonted effect, and, on Thursday, that chef d'œuvre of Verdi, "Nino" was performed for the benefit of Ferrarri. This was a happy selection; for the resources of this admirable artist, both as a singer and actor, are rarely displayed to more advantage than in the part of the Assyrian monarch. We have too frequently adverted to his performance in this fine composition, however, to have anything left to be said on the occasion. The music of "Nino" will never tire; on the contrary, it gains on each repetition, as a work of real genius is sure to do. We have only to observe the extraordinary increase of favour with which Verdi's compositions are regarded, since the production of "Ernani" last year, to perceive the propriety of this test of merit.

FRENCH PLAYS.

Mademoiselle Dejazet's benefit, on Wednesday evening, was attended by one of the most crowded audiences of the season, who assisted at the representation, partly in compliment to the intimable bénéficiaire, and partly from anxiety to witness her in a new character, in which she has gained no ordinary success in Paris.

"Un Conte des Fées" is the name of the piece in which she appears; and its title is likely to mislead one as to its nature. We directly think of "once upon a time there lived a King," and we anticipate the appearance of old women, fairies, and beautiful princesses, and younger sons and wicked gnomes. But no, there is nothing of the kind: all is mortal and natural, albeit the young Prince of the story is as much bewildered as ever were those who went before him, when white cats, sleeping beauties, and yellow dwarfs came to turn their intellects topsy-turvy.

Mdlle. Dejazet performs the part of a Marquise, young, witty, and rich; and M. Lafont is a Chevalier, young and witty also, but not overburthened with money, for his two passions are dice and women, and they are both expensive ones. Well, the Marquise loves this reckless fellow, and, by the assistance of a harmless sorceress, Zina (Mdlle. Anna Grave), she lets the unfortunate cavalier into losing what little he has, and then, pretending to be an old woman, with the help of Zina's stories, and a grey-haired wig, she ultimately drives the Chevalier up into such a corner, that, having lost his all, and being baited by his creditors, he consents to marry her, old as she seems to be, and save himself from perfect ruin.

The second act is one of excellent situation. We find the Chevalier leading a joyous life, with everything at his command, and intending to make the most of it, but in the midst of his hilarity in which he quite forgets his old wife—he is astonished to find that she has taken a dose of some marvellous elixir, which has the property of making old persons young again; and she appears with all her attractions of thirty years ago. He directly thinks her now worth paying some little attention to; but she will not allow this. She will not even admit that they were ever married! All her friends are in the plot: and situation follows on situation with admirable tact, until the poor Chevalier, utterly and inextricably mystified, is at last imprisoned upon a charge of having got rid of his old wife, nobody being able to find her.

In the third act, Zina comes to see him in prison, and imparts to him the information that she knows of another elixir which can make young people old. This is capital: he will give some to the Marquise, and then she will be at once recognised, and he will be liberated. But Zina insists that he also shall drink some, the conditions are desperate, but no time to question. Zina has a hard fight with herself to consent, but at last agrees to the compact; when the Marquise, who loves him all along, pleased with his generosity, brings about the eclaircissement. She appears again before him in her natural youth; everything is explained; and we may suppose, in the words of the real fairy tales, "then both lived happy all the rest of their lives until they died."

THE CONVOY.—BY LELEUX.

The success of the piece was most decided, and the laughter of the audience incessant and hearty from beginning to end. Mdlle. Dejazet's dashing humour, ringing laugh, and saucy, sparkling retorts, never came out to better advantage She was admirably played up by Lafont, whose position, as he had a hard fight with him

The Tyro Stakes of 2 sovs each, with 50 added.
Lord Jno. Scott's f by Camel, out of Queen of Glory's dam (Whitehouse) 1
Mr. Taylor's George Stephenson.. 2
Lord Eglinton's Eryx 3
Won by a length.

The Hunters' Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 20 added, were won by Captain Potter's Northumberland (Mr. H. Johnstone), beating Mr. Parr's Tom Tough (owner), Maid of Auckland (fell), and The Captain (fell).

WEDNESDAY.
Maiden Plate of £50, Heats.
Mr. Harrison's Lady Mallorie 1
Mr. Scholefield's Tommy Moore 2
Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each.
Mr. C. Monck's Vanish 1
Mr. Ramsay's Malcolm 2
Won easy.
The Northumberland Plate of £300, added to a Handicap of 25 sovs each.
Lord Eglinton's Dolo .. .. (Prince) 1
Mr. Bell's Winsour .. .. (Bunby) 2
Mr. Stephenson's Sheraton .. .. (Irvine) 3
Free Handicap of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.
Lord Stradbroke's Evenus .. .. (Edwards) 1
Mr. M. Jawson's Amaia 2
The Grand Stand Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 50 added.
Mr. Merry's Maid of Motherwell .. .. .. (Longstaff) 1
Lord John Scott's f by Camel or Nonsense out of Queen of Gipsies' Dam, 2 yrs 2
Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas.
Mr. Ramsay's Ingiewood, 3 yrs .. .. (Duffo) 1
Mr. Johnstone's br to Sir Henry, 2 yrs 2
Mr. Arrowsmith's Tractarian, 3 yrs 3
THURSDAY.
The Members' Plate of £50, added to a handicap of 15 sovs each.
Lord Eglinton's Plaudit .. .. (Prince) 1
Mr. Kitching's Lucy 2
The Tyro Stakes of 10 sovs each.
Lord Chesterfield's Tom Whiffler .. .. (Holmes) 1
Mr. Merry's c by the Augean, out of Nonsense 2
The Gold Cup of £150, by subs of 10 sovs each.
Mr. Bell's Winsome, 6 yrs .. .. (Bunby) 1
Mr. O'Brien's Mentor, 4 yrs 2
Colonel Cradock's Jinglepot, 4 yrs 3
The Corinthian Stakes of 15 sovs each, with 20 added.
Mr. Meiklam's Aristotle, aged .. .. (Mr. Osbaldeston) 1
Mr. W. H. Johnstone's The Roper's Daughter, aged 2
The Gateshead Lottery Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added
Mr. O'Brien's Grimstone, 3 yrs .. .. (Templeman) 1
Mr. Wormald's c by Velocipede, out of Monica, 3 yrs 2

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—We can only submit a list of the average prices, at the close of a very dull afternoon.

NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE.
7 to 2 agst [illegible] | 10 to 1 agst Polar Star | 10 to 1 agst Roper's Daughter
7 to 2 agst [illegible] | 10 to 1 agst [illegible] | 12 to 1 —— Colonel (t)
7 to 1 —— Mentor (t) | 12 to 1 —— Colonel (t) | 12 to 1 —— Dolo (t)

GOODWOOD STAKES
[illegible] st Jack Cade
100 sovs on 30 against the field, one not to be given when the acceptances are published.

ST LEGER
4 to 1 agst Bawson's fot (t) | 7 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First | 16 to 1 agst Brocardo (taken
5 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes | 12 to 1 —— Fitzroy Boy | 20 to 1 agst Rowland
20 to 1 agst Dolo
40 to 1 agst Statter to Cubwold | 40 to 1 agst Old Fort (t) | 50 to 1 agst Bingham
colt (t) | 40 to 1 —— Miller's Boy (t) | 1000 to 7 —— Christopher

COUNTRY NEWS.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

The Pacha arrived at Liverpool on Saturday last. He visited the docks and shipping of that great port, and frequently expressed great astonishment at the vastness of the new docks now constructing, and which, taken in connection with the great dock space already in existence, must fill his Highness's mind with surprise at the opinion that Liverpool was preparing docks for the shipping of the whole world. The Pacha was very heartily received. His Highness sailed for Belfast at eight in the evening in the new steam-ship Prince of Wales.

He arrived in Belfast on Sunday morning at nine o'clock from Liverpool with his suite.

The principal object of the visit of his Highness to Ireland being to obtain a view of the different stages of the manufacture of linen cloth, he on Monday commenced that of inspection. His Highness arose early, as is his invariable custom, and having breakfasted about eight o'clock, accompanied by his suite, to visit the extensive linen warehouses of Messrs. Richardson, Sons, and Grubbs, in Donegall-place. The distinguished visitors were conducted through the premises by Mr. J. G. Richardson and Mr. Owden; and the Pacha himself repeatedly expressed his admiration of various articles of linen manufactured by that firm.

In the afternoon a review of the garrison took place in the barrack-yard of the three o'clock, that distinguished regiment, the 92d Highlanders, with a troop of the 7th Hussars, were formed in review order, the whole being under the command of Colonel M'Donald, C.B., 92d Highlanders. Major-General Sir George Berkeley, K.C.B., accompanied by Colonel Williams, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, and Captain Bell, A.D.C., entered the barrack-square, and soon after, his Highness and suite, with a guard of honour of the 17th Lancers. The Pacha was evidently much pleased at the precision with which the military evolutions were gone through, and spoke in highly complimentary terms of the appearance and discipline of the troops.

At six o'clock his Highness and suite left the hotel for the pier, where they embarked on board a steamer, and immediately crossed over to Liverpool, which they reached on Monday morning.

His Highness returned to Mivart's Hotel on Wednesday afternoon, from Belfast. The Pacha travelled express the whole distance from Liverpool by train. He had entirely changed all his preconcerted arrangements on Saturday last; his arrival in town was not anticipated so soon. His Highness did not receive any visitors after his arrival, but shortly after his return went to Greenwich to dine with the Sheriffs, who had invited a large circle to meet the illustrious stranger.

On Wednesday night, shortly before eleven o'clock, his Highness, accompanied by three gentlemen of his suite, paid a visit to the Reform Club. His Highness inspected all the apartments of this splendid mansion, from the hall to the smoking-room, and examined the kitchen, of which the illustrious chief, Mr. Soyer, was luckily at hand to explain the mysteries. Among the members of the club who happened to be in the house on occasion of the Pacha's sudden visit, was Sir Charles Napier, whom his Highness instantly recognised as an old acquaintance, and greeted very cordially. An animated conversation was held between the two veteran warriors, and some jokes passed in the Turkish language, at which the Pacha laughed most heartily. His Highness retired, after a visit of one hour, and proceeded to his carriage by Sir Charles Napier, and other gentlemen present in the club

PRINCE ALBERT'S PROPOSED VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

The following arrangements may be considered as agreed upon:

His Royal Highness will leave London early in the morning of the 30th of July, and, accompanied by his suite and the Chairman of the London and Birmingham and Grand Junction Railways, he will proceed by special train with all speed to Liverpool, which he will reach about twelve o'clock. His Worship the Mayor and the Committee will be at the station, Lime-street, to receive him, and the civic coach being placed at his disposal, he will drive direct to the Judges' lodgings, and then to the Town Hall, where, the whole Council assembled, the Corporation address will be presented to his Royal Highness.

Immediately after this ceremony, his Royal Highness will proceed to George's Pier, and go on board the Fairy steamer.

After steaming up and down the river for about an hour, the Fairy will enter the Albert Dock. The Committee have arranged to admit between three and four thousand ladies—by tickets, of course—to the quays of the new dock.

The ceremony of opening these splendid works having been gone through, his Royal Highness will land, inspect the buildings, and partake of the large room, where will be assembled six hundred ladies. A splendid dejeuner will be laid out.

From the Albert Dock his Royal Highness will drive to the Judges' lodging [illegible] to prepare for the grand banquet, which will take place at half-past seven o'clock, in the ball room of the Town Hall. Three hundred guests will be invited. The display on this occasion will surpass everything of the kind ever witnessed before in Liverpool.

While the dinner will be in progress, the whole of the Exchange will, if possible, be illuminated with a degree of effective brilliancy, which will compensate for the absence of fire-works. Devices of all sorts, it is expected, will cover the building on all sides. The Exchange area, through which the people will pass, [illegible] will take place on Thursday. On Friday, a most imposing procession will take place. At ten o'clock, the council, the gentry, and the trades, [illegible] assemble in St. Anne-street, opposite the Prince's lodgings. His Royal Highness will occupy one of the Royal carriages, which will be sent down specially for the occasion. The procession will go to the site of the Sailor's Home, Carning-place, opposite the Post-Office, the whole occupying about two hours. The ceremony of laying the stone will then take place.

His Royal Highness will take a cold collation in the Town Hall, and proceed by special train to London, at five o'clock that evening.

FATAL THUNDER STORMS IN THE COUNTRY.—There was a terrific thunder storm in the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland on Thursday (last week). It commenced about four o'clock in the afternoon, and continued with unabated violence till near eight o'clock in the evening. When it began, the lightning proceeded [illegible] compared with the largest drops of rain ever seen in that part of the country; the atmosphere was oppressively close and sultry; [illegible] the very air smelled of fire, and flesh and thunder-clap succeeded [illegible] with almost a [illegible] crash. The electric fluid which was of the forked description, darted in streams of various colours from the south at the rate of eight or ten thousand per minute; while the continuous claps of thunder were of the most sudden, loud, and startling kind. The rain at the time fell very abundantly, and continued with little or no abatement till near three o'clock. The loss of life and damage has been considerable. On the moor near Shap Beck-gate, in Westmoreland, the wife and daughter of Benjamin Gris dale, a labourer, were gathering tufts of wool from the fences on Knipe Scar, when the lightning, the fine young woman, was struck by the electric field, and killed on the spot by the side of her mother, who most fortunately escaped destruction, but was slightly injured. A man named Hinds, of Hardendale, Westmoreland, was also struck, and is so much injured that but little hopes are entertained of his recovery. In a field near Penrith eleven sheep and one lamb, the property of Mr. William Robinson, were killed by the lightning while lying under a tree, which was shivered to splinters. Large trees on the opposite side of the road, followed by Mr. Dalman, to notice the progress of the storm, although earnestly entreated not to do so by Mrs. B., to whom he replied—"Oh! there's not one in a million killed." The former had entered the garden, while the latter was at the gate of it, and who, on being struck, were seen to fall instantly, and without a struggle, expired. Mr. B. was found near the hedge of his garden, by his deeply afflicted wife. The hair on one side of Mr. Bailey's head was burned off, but upon the person and clothes of Mr. Dalman the ravages were most awful, and his whole form fearfully disfigured. Several persons in the town were, in different ways, affected by the destroying fluid. The object which attracted the lightning was a tall spiral poplar tree, beneath which they stood, and which was planted by Mr. Bailey's own hand.

MURDER BY TWO BOYS AT MANCHESTER.—Two boys, named James Seddon and Joseph Dean, have been committed, at Manchester, on suspicion of having deliberately murdered a boy named George Wray, thirteen years of age. The poor child who has met with such a violent and untimely death, was the son of a poor, but industrious man, living in Deansgate, Manchester. His father is a manufacturer of hacking, furniture pads, and sealed in black lead, which the murdered boy and a younger brother were employed to work about in the town and neighbourhood, with an ass. These two boys left home on Friday morning (last week), taking with them the hacking and black-lead to the value of 9s. After traversing Greenheys and Chorlton upon-Medlock the whole day, they succeeded, by about eight o'clock in the evening, in disposing of the whole, or nearly so. The proceeds of the day's sale amounted to about 18s., and, with this money in their possession, the two boys were met by Seddon, aged 17, and Dean, 14 years old. After playing together for some time, the deceased was observed by these two boys to be in possession of the money, which it seems, they first thought of getting it from him. To effect this object, the deceased, by some means not yet brought to light, was induced to send his younger brother away, in charge of the ass, to a neighbouring street, with orders to await his coming, that they might proceed home together. With these orders the little fellow complied, and, having got him out of the way, his brother, under the pretence of going to look at some fowls, was decoyed to a coal-yard in Jenkinson-street, near Greenheys, kept by the elder boy Seddon, and, as there appears every reason to conclude, was taken inside a little hut or cabin in the yard, and was struck on the head till he died. This was effected about twelve o'clock at night, and between that hour and one o'clock the next morning, his body was conveyed from the spot by the two youths, down Jenkinson-street, in which the coal-yard is situated, along Tuer-street, to the Black-horse, a distance of 105 yards from the scene of the murder, where, his money having first been taken from him, he was laid in the brook, as if he had been drowned.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The mail-packet, the Osiris, reached Marseilles on the 17th inst., with news from Egypt to the 10th inst., and from Constantinople and Smyrna to the 6th. The journey of the Sultan is the only event of importance from the east At Adrianople the Sultan visited the new barracks and military hospitals, and expressed his satisfaction by giving presents to the different employés. He has also visited the mosque of the Sultan Bayazid Edirine. The Sultan left Adrianople on the 19th May, and arrived at Tchataghara, one of the most important towns of Roumelia, on the 21st.

A vessel called the Lorpent, which has arrived at the port of Liverpool, from Shanghai, China, in addition to an extensive cargo, has brought 100 cabinets of Chinese antiquities, which, from their singular and curious character, are not so much from the extent or the value of the articles as from the novelty of their supply from that distant country.

From letters and papers recently received from Barber, now in Norfolk Island, under sentence for the wilful forgeries, it appears that he still clings to the hope of establishing his innocence and obtaining emancipation. He appears to have used the most unremitting exertions for such objects, and has succeeded in enlisting in his favour clergymen, magistrates, and others of high standing, from whom investigations have been conducted, and certificates given, declaratory of the conviction of his innocence, the particulars of which have been transmitted to Sir James Graham, with a view to obtaining an official investigation.

Austria has refused to accept the proposition of Sardinia for a reference of the contested points of dispute to the arbitration of a third power.

The Brussels papers mention that last Saturday the public trams commenced running, for the first time, between that city and Paris. It is calculated that the distance will not be traversed, for the present at least, under 12 or 13 hours.

Athens papers of the 10th of June state that on the 1st of that month, the anniversary of the King's birthday and of his accession to the throne had been celebrated in the usual manner, but the King had refused the addresses made to him on those occasions proposed by his Ministers on the occasion, on account of the burden which they would entail upon his treasury. The King and Queen were at Nauplia, but were expected to return in a few days to Athens.

The States of Saxony were closed on the 17th by the King in person. His Majesty thanked the States for having voted the sum required for railroads. He expressed his regret that greater progress had not been made in the measure for the reform of the penal laws. The King added that he felt disposed to admit the principle of publicity in the proceedings of the courts, but that it would be necessary to proceed with caution.

The King of Denmark has published a decree mitigating the several regulations relative to the press. The penalty of imprisonment, inflicted for the publication of political articles in journals not specially authorised to treat of such subjects, is replaced by a fine, varying, according to circumstances, from 20 to 220 rix-bank dollars (35fr. to 550fr). When a journal is seized by the police before its publication, the responsible editor cannot be prosecuted against (as has been hitherto done), and he will have the right to bring an action against the police for the seizure.

The inauguration of the statue of the Emperor Francis took place at Vienna on the 16th, in presence of the Court, the Ministers, and an immense assemblage of the inhabitants.

Another disaster has fallen upon Smyrna. In the night of the 30th ult. a fire broke out, the flames which consumed in a very short space of time nearly 400 small shops. It was only by the greatest exertion that the more important buildings were preserved.

The Lyons journals state that there have been a great many cases of death in that city from apoplexy, arising from the excessive heat.

The Epoque says:—"We learn from a certain source that the Austrian Ambassador at Florence, and the Austrian Representative of Florence, has refused to grant a passport to Prince Napoleon Louis for Tuscany. The Austrian Ambassador declares that from the moment Prince Napoleon Louis made his appearance on the frontiers of Tuscany, he would not, without being wanting in consideration for the French Government, facilitate the Prince's journey to Italy without the special authority of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. He therefore has reconducted his carriage to the apply direct to the Grand Duke for permission to go to Florence and visit his sick father."

A Frankfort journal states that after several conferences between the Prince de Metternich and the Apostolical-Nuncio at Vienna, it has been resolved to augment the Austrian force in Italy by 10,000 men.

The mountain of Riesengebirg, in Silesia, says a letter from Breslau, of the 15th inst., is still covered with snow. On the 25th ult. there was a fall of snow which lasted for several hours.

A letter from Mouza, in Lombardy, of June 11, states that a dreadful hurricane had almost destroyed the forest near that town, 4000 trees having been torn up by the roots, and the rest stripped of their leaves. The ground was covered with birds killed by the hail. The storm extended to the Venetian territory, where it also did great damage.

The ship Nouveau Tembory, of upwards of 300 tons, was totally destroyed by fire on the night of the 18th inst. in the port of Marseilles. She had discharged her cargo and was anchored near the Paissade Sainte Anne, fronting the Canebière. It is most fortunate that the accident occurred during a night so calm, that the sparks fell into the water, and vertically. Had it happened during a breeze, there can be little doubt but that the greater part of the shipping in the port would have fallen a sacrifice, and even the town itself presented the spectacle of Hamburg over again. The origin of the fire has not been precisely ascertained.

A letter from Amsterdam, dated June 22, says:—"We have experienced hot weather here. The thermometer, which yesterday at noon was at 70 (Fahrenheit), and at five o'clock had fallen to 66 degrees, this morning at eleven o'clock had risen to 80, and in the course of the day was as follows—at twelve o'clock, 81; at one, 83; at two, 84; at three, 89; and at four o'clock, 87 degrees."

An announcement of some importance is made in the Buenos Ayres papers, viz., that the United States Government had offered its mediation between Rosas and the authorities of Paraguay, which both parties were willing to accept.

Cape of Good Hope papers to the 25th of April have reached us. The troops moved into Caffarland between the 14th and 17th, but had met with no opposing force. Fine rains had fallen and refreshed the eastern province, a further assistance to the progress of the troops.

LITERATURE.

A COMPANION TO THE FOURTH EDITION OF A GLOSSARY OF TERMS USED IN ARCHITECTURE. J. H. Parker, Oxford.

THE PRINCIPLES OF GOTHIC ECCLESIASTICAL ARCHITECTURE. By MATTHEW HOLBEACHE BLOXAM. Eighth Edition. Bogue.

The popularity of architectural studies is well attested by the success of the last named work, large, indeed, but, in no respect, disproportionate to its actual merits. Mr. Bloxam, the editor of the very useful manual, is evidently a man of nice discrimination in the selection of examples, and is well skilled in the principles and history of Ecclesiastical Architecture, to the study of which his work forms an admirable introduction. The care with which this Edition has been improved is especially shown in the nice estimate of the authorities for the affixed Centenary of Architectural Terms, a brief but very useful addendum. The plan of the work, it may still be useful to state, comprehends the origin, progress, and decline of Gothic or English Ecclesiastical Architecture, and its division into Styles—commencing with the Anglo-Saxon, (referable to the Debased Roman), of which a few examples are to be met with in England, notwithstanding the ravages of the Danes in the ninth and tenth centuries, when most of the Anglo-Saxon monasteries and churches were set on fire and destroyed; and, in the twelfth and following centuries, it was the custom to rebuild from the very foundation, in the style of the then existing age, the earlier structures of rude masonry and design. To this succeeded the Anglo-Norman style, in times of comparative tranquillity, when the sanctuaries of religion were no longer liable to be plundered and burnt; but many decaying churches were repaired, and a new impulse given to the erection of others. Hence our national architecture is especially rich in specimens of this period, as is shown in our majestic cathedrals—from the simple massiveness of the plain and clearly Norman work, to the sculptured ornaments of the later specimens. Although the style is scarcely to be chosen for imitation, it indicates an advance towards perfection in medieval architecture. Mr. Bloxam's next division is the Semi-Norman Style, i.e. the period next to the highest state, or rather, the Circular Norman in transition to the Pointed, from about the middle to the end of the twelfth century; indeed, our author considers it "a Transition style, comprising the general form of the arch of one age with the details of a preceding one." To this succeeds the Early English of the 13th century, of which Salisbury Cathedral and Westminster Abbey are our finest exemplars: and the sculpture of the latter exhibits a very rapid advance in design and feeling. All this was, however, destined to be surpassed by the Decorated, which prevailed for about a century, during the reigns of the three first Edwards: Exeter and Lincoln Cathedrals present, perhaps, the most beautiful remains of this style, both in sculptured and architectural detail, are to be found in the churches of some parts of Lincolnshire: the sculpture of the period, too, is the finest school of monumental art. Next is the Perpendicular English Style, from the multiplicity, profusion, and minuteness of its detail, also called "Florid;" yet, says Mr. Bloxam, "wanting in the chaste general effect and majestic beauty in which the Decorated style stands pre-eminent." The Chapel of Henry VII. at Westminster, is the richest specimen of the Florid Style on a large scale; and the towers of Magdalen College, Oxford, and St. Mary's, Taunton (lately engraved in our Journal), are fine examples: it ends in Tudor church tower, circa 1600. The work closes with a chapter on the Debased English Style, dating from the Reformation, with the dawn and progress of which we lose those wild defined styles of Ecclesiastical Architecture which we have already traced in the several years. The Debased Style seems to have commenced about 1540, and to have continued for about a century, or rather more," when the Renaissance or Italian School, founded on classic models, and which, hitherto, in Church Architecture, had only appeared in detail, seems to have entirely superseded the last remnant of Gothic Art: several of the college chapels at Oxford are in this corrupt style. "At the commencement of the eighteenth century, the Roman or Italian mode appears to have prevailed generally in the churches then built without any admixture even of the Debased Gothic Style; they were often constructed of brick, with stone dressings and quoins, after the Italian manner, or else ornamented with urns, festoons, and other symbols of Paganism."

Towards the close of the last century originated the revival of the study of ancient Ecclesiastical Architecture; but the best specimens produced were feeble and unsuccessful attempts to imitate the Architecture of the Middle Ages Still, this was but the dawn of the Revival; and, though the practical study commenced at the beginning of the present century, the knowledge of our ancient Christian Architecture, in its purity and adjustment of proportion, has begun to be properly considered; and, we agree with Mr. Bloxam, that perfection is still an age of transition from a low and perverted to a purer and better taste." We have not yet forgotten the "carpenter's" and "Strawberry Hill" Gothic, with their glaring defects, referable to ignorance of the art. But, at the present day, there is a multiplication of a class of churches of very slight artistical character, which we are grieved to witness; we refer to the great proportion of new churches in the Anglo-Norman style, which is scarcely entitled to the praise of its merits; but has become popular in the economy of its plan and the starveling of art. Still, as regards Ecclesiastical Architecture in England, we live spe melioris ævi. The formation of so many societies for its encouragement must ere long create a just taste of its professors and amateurs; and to the advancement of this end, Mr. Bloxam's present work will, unquestionably, contribute, by greatly enlarging public information upon the general subject. The illustrations, of their characteristic excellence, are engraved by Mr. Orlando Jewitt, of Oxford.

To this end, also, the volume named at the head of this article will mainly contribute. It is intended as a Companion to the enlarged Glossary of Terms in Gothic Architecture, and Gothic Architecture, generally, so well known to our readers. The present work illustrates, chronologically, the rise and progress of Gothic Architecture, with reduced facsimiles of inscriptions recording the dates of the characteristic excellence, and presence, that he never witnessed an assemblage of amateurs who showed a better appreciation of good music and fine playing than the members of "The Musical Union."

VIEUXTEMPS. DELOFFRE. HILL. PIATTI. BELLA.

QUARTET PARTY AT THE MUSICAL UNION.

The Director is a practical, theoretical, and literary musician, and has long enjoyed the esteem of those nobles who so cordially support his undertaking. The low amount of subscription (one guinea for eight concerts) covers the literal outlay for the entertainments, and the Director's remuneration is his annual concert.

OXFORD COMMEMORATION.

THE Commemoration at Oxford has attracted an unusual number of visitors to the University during the past week. On Sunday evening, the Broad Walk in Christ Church Meadow was graced by upwards of three thousand promenaders, most of them splendidly attired, presenting a spectacle seldom witnessed at an ordinary Commemoration. On Monday, the umbrageous walks on the banks of the Cherwell and of the Isis, and the cooling shades of St. John's, Worcester, and New Colleges, were thronged by gaily-attired parties. In the evening, the banks of the Thames were lined by thousands of spectators, to witness the closing scene of the aquatic sports of the season. During the previous six weeks, the racing between the boats manned by the undergraduates of the different colleges was of the most exciting character; Brasenose taking the lead in the early part of the season, and retaining it to the close. The exhibition on Monday evening was a procession of the boats in the following order:—

RACING BOATS		TORPID BOATS.
1	Brasenose	9. Trinity	17. Exeter
2	Christ Church	10 Queen's	18. St. John's
3.	Merton	11. Magdalen Hall	19. Brasenose
4	St. John's	12 University	20. University
5	Pembroke	13. Wadham	21 Christ Church
6.	Worcester	14. Magdalen College	22. Worcester
7.	Lincoln	15. Oriel
8	Exeter	16 Balliol

The barges moored on the river were crowded with spectators; two bands of music played alternately during the evening. The Royal standard and other flags, with the pennons of the various boats, floated gally in the breeze, and the river was crowded with skiffs; the whole forming an animated and exhilarating spectacle after the languor and fatigue caused by the heat of the day. At length the signal gun was heard, and the contending boats swept gracefully up the river, each boat being decorated with its proper colours, and the crews in their appropriate costumes. The Brasenose boat then drew up near the University barge, and received and returned the salutes of the various boats as they passed.

A Grand Concert was advertised to take place at the Star Inn; but, from the heat of the weather, and the attraction on the banks of the river, the concert-room was but thinly attended.

On Tuesday, the annual sermon for the benefit of the Radcliffe Infirmary was preached in St. Mary's Church, by the venerable Bishop of Calcutta. The church was crowded in every part; the large galleries, usually appropriated to the undergraduates of the University, were, upon this occasion, filled by elegantly-dressed ladies. The Bishop appeared in much better health than on his arrival from India, but was too feeble to stand, and, even when seated, was obliged to support himself by leaning on the sides of the pulpit. There was no longer that fervid animation which formerly distinguished this eloquent preacher; but there were the same high tone of feeling and straightforward appeals to the heart and mind of the hearer.

In the afternoon, the gardens of New College were thrown open to the public for the show of the Oxford Horticultural Society. Six large marquees were erected in different parts of the garden, in which the various specimens were arranged. There were nearly five thousand persons present. Among the numerous objects of attraction, was the premier stand of pinks, consisting of twelve varieties, exhibited by Mr. Hastings; also, a stand of seven blooms, which took the first prize in that class, by Mr. Wm. Colcutt, together with a very fine seedling, placed first, belonging to the same gentleman. Mr. Bates, who had officiated as judge, was requested by Dr. Buckland to inform him which was the best pink exhibited; when Mr. B., without a moment's hesitation, handed the Very Rev. Gentleman a seedling selected from a stand shown by Mr. A. Kerr, called Harietta and which we understood to possess every requisite that constitutes a good flower, but was ineligible to take the seedling prize, being a flower of last year. In the same tent were some magnificent roses, sent by the Rev. A. H. Mathews and J. R. Betteridge, Esq. Among the plants, we were much gratified with a collection of calceolarias, from the gardens of his Grace the Archbishop of York; as also the grapes, melon, and strawberries, from the same noble Prelate.

The walls of New College Gardens are the remains of the ancient wall that encircled the city of Oxford; and, in two of the circular towers, were shown the flowers, fruit, and vegetables raised by the cottagers in the vicinity of Oxford, who had been invited to contribute to the show

The amusements of Tuesday concluded with a ball at the Star Inn, which was attended by upwards of 200 persons.

On Wednesday, the Commemoration took place in the noble theatre; but its commencement was delayed an hour to allow time for the sermon preached annually on Midsummer Day, from the stone pulpit at Magdalen College. Immediately on the opening of the theatre, it was crowded in every part; and as the various heads of colleges and the officers of the university made their appearance in their appropriate places, they were greeted with the usual vociferations and salutes from the undergraduates in the galleries; but we were pleased to find that "Young England" appeared to be in much better temper than on some former occasions.

Australia formed the subject of the English Poem: it was ably recited, and contained many beautiful passages, which were highly and justly applauded. The author and reciter was J. O. Morgan Esq., of Balliol College.

The Latin Prize Poem was elegantly recited by its author A. C. Sanders, of Balliol College.

The English and Latin Essays were read by their respective authors. The prize for the English Essay was gained by C. S. Fortescue, B.A., Christ Church. The Latin Essay was written by Goldwin Smith, B.A., Magdalen College.

The venerable Bishop of Calcutta appeared in his robes among the Doctors on this occasion, and was loudly greeted by the assemblage. The Bishop of St. Andrews was in the area of the theatre, but did not appear in canonicals.

OXFORD COMMEMORATION.—FLOWER SHOW IN THE NEW COLLEGE GARDENS.

THE LETTER-CARRIER'S LAST KNELL.

WE have just lost another of what poor Thomas Hood called "those evening bells." The Postmaster-General having issued his fiat for the abolition of "ringing bells" by the Letter-Carriers, the last knell was rung in the City on Wednesday last. The "ringing" will be entirely discontinued after the 5th of next month; and, as a memorial of the departure from what appeared to most persons a very useful practice,

THE LAST POST OFFICE BELLMAN.

our Artist has sketched a Letter-Carrier, on his last evening call at our office: and another hand has appended the following Lament:—

THE WAR AGAINST THE BELLS.

Bell-ah! horrids Bell-ah! The Postman's Bell

Don't talk of the Punjaub—of Hardinge and Gough;
Don't talk of Bugeaud and his feats in Algiers;
Don't "fling me the picture" of old Katteroff,
Of Wellington, Bony, and all their compeers.
A war still more Lorrid than ever that florid
Old minstrel, blight Homer, could tune to his shell,
Rests for my poor singing—the war against ringing
The Dustman's, or Postman's, or Muffin-boy's Bell.

The Dustman was first to forego his brass clapper;
The Muffin-boy speedily followed his shade;
And now 'tis the Postman—that double-tongued rapper—
Must give up I'is Bell for the eve's promenade.
"Panic Animal!" sage Legislators!
Why rage against trifles like these? Prithee tell,
Why leave the solution to rude commentators,
Who say that at home you've enough in one Belle?

What! there you get tongue enough! Out on the libel:
You feel more respect for the 'public of letters;
Were I in the House, I would introduce my bill
To free every Bell from dull silence's fetters.
Next stop the dumb-waiter's Bell—muzzle St. Paul's—
No more let "Old Tom" on the atmosphere swell.
But there's one exception—when Cupid enthralls,
Obey the old maxim, and pray Ring the Bells.

THE REASONING FACULTIES OF ANIMALS.—A year or two since much interest was excited in the metropolis by the experiments of M. Léonard, an intelligent French gentleman, upon the reasoning faculties of animals. M. Léonard had two dogs, Braque and Philax, which exhibited powers, under his tuition, almost amounting to reason. Chambers' Edinburgh Journal had an article upon the subject, and the animals were alluded to in Mr. Jesse's "Anecdotes of Dogs." We understand that M. Léonard is again in London, and that since his former visit he has turned his attention to the intellectual faculties of horses. The principle upon which he acted towards dogs, he applies to horses, so that he can not only subdue the most vicious animal, but establish the assertion that it is possible to teach them by the influence of reason, rather than by means of mere punishment. It is to be remarked that M. Léonard is a gentleman of reputation, and does not embark in the project to gain money, but rather to establish a curious and important theory—that some animals possess faculties beyond mere instinct and closely approaching to reason.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

BLACKLOW-HILL, WARWICKSHIRE.

BLACKLOW, or probably Black-law Hill, so called from its being the place of execution, is situated in the parish of Wotton, within a mile and a half of Warwick. Hither Piers Gaveston, the corrupt favourite of a weak and infatuated King, was dragged to an ignominious execution, "without judgment of his Peers or any course of law, by the Earls of Lancaster and Warwick, who had taken him by surprise at Dedington, in Oxfordshire."

This disgraceful mission, whom Edward I. had caused to be educated together with his son, afterwards Edward II., in consideration of the great service his father had done the Crown, is described by the old historian Samuel Daniel, as "filling the Court with buffoons, parasites, minstrels, players, and alle kinds of dissolute persons, to entertaine and dissolve the King with delights and pleasures."

Among the many enemies which he made by his arrogance and wantonness, the most inveterate appear to have been Thomas, Earl of Lancaster; Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke; and Guy, Earl of Warwick; whom he severally stigmatized with such contemptuous nick-names as "the Stage Player," "Joseph the Jew," and "the Black Dogge of Ardern." The Player may be said to have been too cunning for him when he wiled him into Warwickshire; and right deadly was the grips of the Black Dogge when the miserable parasite, after being hunted like a fox from one lurking place to another, succumbed at length to his unrelenting fangs on Blacklow-hill. The head of the wretched victim is said to have been struck off where a hollow in the crag appears to supply a natural block for such a purpose, just over an ancient inscription, which records the event as follows:—

1311
P. GAVESTON,
EARL OF CORNWALL,
BEHEADED HERE

BLACKLOW-HILL.

A cross of recent date is erected on the brow of the hill immediately adjacent, with a tablet thus inscribed:—

In the Hollow o this Rock
Was Beheaded,
On the 1st Day of July, 1312,
By Barons lawless as himself,
PIERS GAVESTON, EARL OF CORNWALL,
The Minion of a lawless King,
In Life and Death
A memorable Instance of Misrule.

STRAWBERRY TRADE OF LONDON.

THE supply of the metropolis with Strawberries, one of the most delicious of our summer fruits, has suggested the annexed seasonable illustrations.

This supply is obtained from gardens in the neighbourhood of London, more especially those on the Surrey and Middlesex banks of the Thames.

Our first Engraving has been sketched on the Hammersmith Bridge-road to Richmond, a locality well known for its Strawberry beds. The business of the illustration is the wathing of the fruit, to be carried to market, by women and girls, the toil of which during the recent hot weather must have been truly distressing. An ingenious friend of ours once took some pains to collect the statistics of this laborious occupation, upon the spot; and, though his account may be somewhat strong in "virtuous indignation," we believe it to be as applicable to the present day as to that on which it was written:—

PINE STRAWBERRY PLANT, GROWN BY MR. CUTHILL, AT CAMBERWELL.

"In the Strawberry Season, hundreds of women are employed to carry that delicate fruit to market on their heads; and their industry in performing this task is as wonderful as their remuneration is unworthy of the opulent classes who derive enjoyment from their labour. They consist, for the most part, of Shropshire and Welsh girls, who walk to London, at this season, in droves, to perform this drudgery, just as the Irish peasantry come to assist in the hay and corn harvests. I learnt that these women carry upon their heads baskets of strawberries or raspberries, weighing from forty to fifty pounds, and make two turns in the day, from Isleworth to market, a distance of thirteen miles each way; three turns from Brentford, a distance of nine miles; and four turns from Hammersmith, a distance of six miles. For the most part, they find means conveyance back; but, even then, these industrious creatures carry loads from twenty-four to thirty miles a day, besides walking back unladen some part of each turn! Their remuneration for this unparalleled slavery is from 8s. to 9s. per day; each turn from the distance of Isleworth being 4s. or 4s. 6d.; and from that of Hammersmith, 2s. or 2s. 3d. Their diet is coarse and simple; their drink, tea and small-beer; costing not above 1s. or 1s. 6d.; and their back conveyance, about 2s. or 2s. 6d.; so that their net gains are about 8s. per day, which, in the Strawberry Season, of forty days, amounts to £16. After this period, the same women find employment in gathering and marketing vegetables, at lower wages, for other sixty days, netting about £5 more. With this poor pittance they return to their native county, and it adds either to their humble comforts, or creates a small dowry towards a rustic establishment for life. Can a more interesting picture be drawn of virtuous exertion? Why have our poets failed to colour and finish it? More virtue never existed in their favourite shepherdesses than in these Welsh and Shropshire girls. For beauty, symmetry, and complexion they are not inferior to the nymphs of Arcadia, and they far outvie the pallid specimens of Circassia! Their morals, too, are exemplary; and they often perform this labour to support aged parents, or to keep their own children from the workhouse! In keen suffering, they endure all that the imagination of a poet could desire; they live hard, they sleep on straw in hovels and barns, and they often burst an artery, or drop down dead from the effect of heat and overexertion! Yet, such is the state of one portion of our female population, at a time when we are calling ourselves the most polished nation on earth, and pretending to be so wealthy that we give away millions a-year to foreigners ansolicited, and for no intelligible purpose! And such, too, is their dire necessity, that it would be most cruel to suggest or recommend any invention that might serve as a substitute for their slavery, and thereby deprive them of its wretched annual produce!" —From Sir Richard Phillips's Walk from London to Kew.

The species and varieties of Strawberries are very numerous; and in the present high state of horticulture, new sorts are produced every season. Our attention has lately been drawn to a splendid specimen of Pine Strawberry, grown by Mr. Cuthill, of Denmark Hill, Camberwell. The plant, from high cultivation, is of such strength, that, instead of creeping on the ground, as usual, it is erect to the height of from 12 to 15 inches, so that little of the fruit touches the ground. Each plant bears from 100 to 150 berries, many of them five inches and upwards in circumference. The grower of this new sort, we learn, has been equally successful in the culture of seedlings.

The generic name of the Strawberry, Fragaria, is derived from the Latin Fragum; and the English name from the practice in England of cultivating the plant with straw surrounding it. So think Lye and Skinner, the etymologists; but Lennon objects that the same observation may apply to the cucumber; and we have somewhere seen the word traced to Stray-berry, from the plant straying widely on the ground.

The leaf of the Strawberry has for ages been used in the circles of gold worn by certain of the British nobility: thus, the Duke has eight; a Marquis, four; and an Earl, eight, Strawberry leaves. How long this heraldic appropriation has existed, is a quæsio vexata among our genealogists and antiquaries. Mr. Burke considers it to be "doubtful if the ornament was originally a Strawberry leaf; and, certainly, it does not occur on early representations of coronets; query—if before the time of Elizabeth:" though there is a leaved coronet on the brow of John of Eltham, second son of Edward III., who died in 1334, and is buried in Westminster Abbey. The helmet of Edward the Black Prince at Canterbury, has a coronet of oak-leaves.

It is uncertain how long Strawberries have been cultivated in England. The Wood or Alpine species is found wild in our woods and on hill-sides, sometimes in great quantities; and many of these produce the cultivated varieties which are known in gardens. We have heard a wonderful story of Strawberries being gathered on Box-hill, near Dorking, in such prodigious numbers as to be carried away by horse-loads!

The culture must have been comparatively common in the 15th century, when Strawberries were cried about the streets as in the present day. Thus Lydgate who lived about 1430, sings:

"Hot pescode cwn began to cry,
Strawberry's rype, and Cherrys in the rys."

They are mentioned, too, in Shakspeare's Richard III., where Gloster addressing the Bishop of Ely, says:

"My Lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good Strawberries in your garden there,"

this incident being transcribed from Hall's Chronicles.

NEW AMERICAN LINER.

NEW AMERICAN LINER.

The New York Proprietary of the London Packet Line have of late been enlarging their establishment, to keep pace with the increase of sea-going passenger population between the two metropolitan supremacies of Europe and America. Thus, one packet will hereafter run weekly from each side of the Atlantic, instead of once in ten days; and, punctually to perform the promise, four new vessels have been built to be placed on the line.

One of these, the Margaret Evans, is now on her second voyage; and a noble liner she is:—In measurement, 1000 tons; length on deck, 166 feet; breadth of beam, 36. The under-deck steerage accommodation affords "ample space and verge enough," not alone for alongside ranges of berths, but for promenades, conversazioni, and soirées dansantes, should the some hundreds of passengers who have secured most of the places be so disposed. There is, besides, a most convenient novelty prepared for them in a forecastle deck, to shelter them and the crew from the casual out-door inclemencies of weather which may befal in the voyage. But the grand and ladies' cabins are the triumph of ship-building art. There is nothing to compare with them except in the Victoria, one of the same class of liners. Here there is no veneering, but solid splendid wood and workmanship, all through of the finest and most expensive handicraft. Couches and carpeting there are of Eastern luxury. A sight alone should tempt the fashionable votaries of Hymen to spend their honeymoon in a trip across the Atlantic, rather than in a country excursion, where trees and green fields of every day's wear are alone to be seen. And, by the way, Captain Tinker, the commander of this noble vessel, and a very favourable sample of the land beyond the sea, is, as reported, to change his state on his return; whether the Margaret Evans represents the name of the bride, however, does not appear. But, like a proper bridegroom, he has put his house, that is his ship, in sumptuous order to receive his betrothed on return from his first voyage in her. Ventilation, without storms and chilly draughts, is insured by air-pipes carried below, which let in all the supply of air necessary for the comfort of passengers, or the condition of cargo, down to the bottom of the hold. She has accommodation for 60 persons in first and second class cabins, and 300 in the steerage.

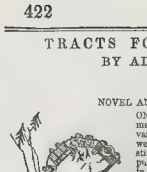
THE STRAWBERRY TRADE.—POTTLING.

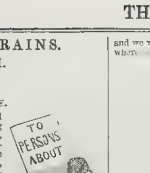
TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. VIII.

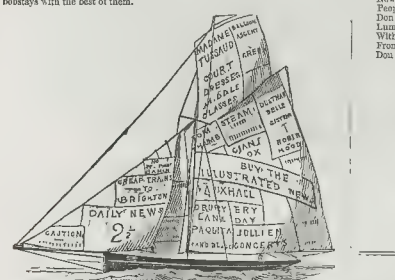
NOVEL ADVERTISING SCHEME.





ONSCIOUS that a general massacre of the advertising vans is known to commence, we beg to suggest a substitute, by which the same publicity can be obtained, in the absence of boardings to post bills upon a want which has seriously affected different managers of the theatres.

It is known that the expense of keeping a yacht is very great, and that nothing tending to diminish this expense must be joyfully received by the owners. A difficulty of raising the wind appears to attend all the matches, but we think we have in a great measure lessened this evil. We recommend the sails to be used for advertising on: by pasting placards on them they will have the whole world better, and the present plan of throwing cold water on them need not be resorted to. Different sets of advertisements may be kept on board, as the signals are; and a new inn will be given to the orders of the skipper. Thus he may command his men to "haul up Madame Tussaud," or "send with a close-reefed Captain Grisi." Or he may "shorten General Tom Thumb," or "hurl the fore-top Surrey Zoological." These orders are written at length, for no pea jacketing nautical; although, we are convinced, with a little practice, we could box the boom, take a reef out of the biller, heave the spanker, belay the taffrail, or port the bobstays with the best of them.



The same plan might be admirably carried out on board the steam-boats—only from the absence of sails, large frames would be necessary, similar to those which M. J Nixon and Mr. Bann delight to hide their theatres with.

A thorough revolution in nautical affairs might be looked for, from this change, which might, doubtless, extend to our Indiamen and ships of the line; and this would then be the style of the songs :—

THE STORM.

A LAY OF THE ADVERTISING SHIPS.

Cease, Sir Peter, endless railler!	The "Llama Paletot" point to the
List, ye van-men, all to me!	wind,
Advertisers ! hear a sailor	Keep it clear to deck the course ;
Sing about your puffs at sea.	Let "Stradella" go—don't mind, boys,
	Though the business should be worse.
Mark ! the boatswain, hoarsely bawling,
By "Cremorne House—Grand Gala !"	Now, once more on joys we're thinking.
stand ;	The "Vandius" preserves our lives ;
Down, "Board's Daguerreotypes" be	With "Wenham Lake Ice" let's be drink-hauling ;	ing
Down, "Queen o Chinа." Hand,	To our sweethearts and our wives.
boys, hand !
	Bring your wine your lemon, peel it ;
Now, "Miles's Bay of Epsom Races,"	Now your white lump sugar pound ;
Now, the "Daily News" hold tight.	Tap your ale ; past woe, dont feel it—
Luff, boys, luff ! Don't make wry faces ;	All's in Bass and Sherry drown'd !
Clew your "Packet every night !"

RAILWAY TYPES.—THE OLD LADY.

We have seldom travelled in a second class carriage without meeting "The Old Lady," for to that part of the train does she incline.

The prominent idea of the Old Lady is, that she is always too late, and hence we never saw her but she was much flustered, and her parcels had evidence of being made up in a hurry. And in the minds of the second-class Old Lady are wondrous things—they will never go anywhere, neither on the omnibus nor in the train ; and none of them are packed in normal fashions. We never saw the Old Lady with a carpet-bag, but she loves a basket handled, tied up with a fourpenny cotton handkerchief, of a staring pattern, bought extempore for the purpose ; and in her own, she carries oranges, and perhaps a toy, or a penny pictorial paper bought at the Golden Cross. For the information upon merchants who haunt that office, and offer their cutlery, annuals, and gold watches upon such advantageous terms, know that the Old Lady is sure to be their best customer ; and that if they tellher that the back number of some disjunct periodical is Punch, she will buy it incontinently. For, never understanding any jokes, but conventionally supposing them to be clever, those founded upon allusions of a year back do just as well as those of the present hour.

The Old Lady is the great dread of the clerk at the station ; for she never knows precisely where she ought to take her ticket for ; and the greater the demand for tickets, the more confused she gets. Neither does she in any way understand the order in which the stations come ; for she will ask at every one, all down the line, if it is not Woking, although the policeman shouts the name regularly into each carriage as the train stops.

The journey of the Old Lady by the rail is a succession of terrors, which, by the time she arrives at the end of it, almost deprive her of her senses. Her first shock is when the engine is brought up to the train, and the jog that ensues nearly well nigh gives her a fit. The noise of the valve, too, is dreadful, as the steam comes out. Nothing will persuade her from the opinion that the boiler is bursting. Indeed, her knowledge of an engine not being very scientific, she attributes explosive properties to the entire train and everything belonging to it, and as much expects to see a guard or a second-class carriage blow up as a locomotive. When a train reaches the down one, her despair is frantic ; she tears her hands about in frantic fright, and cries out ; nor is she pacified for a long time, and then it is only to be worse terrified by the squeal of the whistle, which she is sure must be the dying shrieks of the engineer and stoker, who are cut in half.

The Old Lady, after all her enquiries, never recollects that she has arrived at her station until the train is just starting again ; and here, her agitation nearly deprives her of all power. She is dragged out more dead than alive, totally forgetting where her handbox was put, as the train moves on. She leaves her ticket, of course, behind her ; her box, never directed, gets down to Southampton, and stops there for an indefinite period ; when you last see her, she is struggling between two fly-men, who each insist upon her going with them to some certain country place, where they are convinced she ought to live if she does not.

There are various figures of speech in vogue use to express great states of discomfort. We hear of a wasp in a whirlwind, a fish out of water, a pig in a poke, a bee in a bonnet tab, a frog in a fit, a dying duck in a thunderstorm, and other positions suggestive of anything but pleasure. But the worst of all is an Old Lady on a railroad.

RAILWAY RESEARCHES.

Every day we hear of relics of antiquity turned up by the spades of the navigators forming the new lines. Roman tumuli have come out remarkably strong ; and we were ourselves witness, last week, at a part of the new Richmond line, which is an occurrence could hardly have been anticipated, of the remains of

OPENING A BARROW.

CHARADE THE FIFTH.

Don Alphonso de Granada is a man of vast estate,
There's no other landowner in Andalusia half so great.
He has vineyards up the mountains, on the land, and by the river,
Stretching from the Guadalete to the sparkling Guadalquivir
Don Alphonso de Granada is a "sporting gent," beside,
On the Pizzas—called "de Toros" you will see him in his pride,
When the Matadores are striving to exhaust the maiden's bull,
And with Bandertilleros and Picadores the square is full
Hither now he bends his footsteps—'tis a goodly day for Cadiz,
And the streets are all astir with the bustle and with the cry of evil Spanish ladies.
Don Alphonso gives a purse to those who after glory thirst,
And he draws the wealth that fills it, solely from my golden FIRST.
As he enters the arena, loud shouts burst from all around ;
Don Alphonso bows, and meekly bends his eyes towards the ground,
When he finds his understanding not so perfect as he reckond,
And he whispers to his servant, "Go, and quickly bring my SECOND."
Hark ! the trumpet blows a flourish, and the Matadores ride in ;
Now, the bull is sent to meet them, and the bloody sports begin.
Now the monsters are at play there—now the people sit on thorns ;
Now the bull appears to bellow, "who will take me by the horns ?"
People cheering—trumpets blowing—ladies fainting—horses dying ;
Don Alphonso is elated, and in the sun is almost frying
Lumps of transatlantic crystal, citron from his own domain,
With my FIRST, a goodly draught he mixes, and my WHOLE's his gain.
From what other thing on earth can mortal such enjoyment draw ?
Don Alphonso smiles enraptured, as he owns it "worth a straw !"

ANSWER TO LAST CHARADE.

1. Band. 2. Box. 3. Bandbox.

FANCY SKETCH THE NOAH LIGHT.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat having been very moderate, and to-day's supply of barley scarcely equal to 1,000 quarters with samples still scarcer, as it is expected the new duties on foreign corn will be proclaimed at the Custom-house to-morrow, the country farmers were cautious in their attendance in Mark-lane to-day, as a most uncertain state, yet we can notice no alteration in the prices of any description of foreign wheat have been good, and the arrivals free of duty commanded very little attention at late rates. The late fine showers having produced a very beneficial effect upon all spring corn, the sales progressed heavily and, in some few instances, the quotations had a downward tendency. Superfine malt being scarce commanded full prices, but all other kinds were neglected.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 2700 quarters ; barley, 1740 ; oats, 3150. Irish : wheat, ——, barley, —— ; oats, 560. Foreign : wheat, 10,230 ; barley, —— ; oats, 10,790 Flour, 1800 sacks ; wheat, 4500 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 48s to 57s ; ditto white, 57s to 60s. Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 45s to 49s ; ditto white, 54s to 57s. Rye, 34s to 36s. Grinding barley, 25s to 26s ; distilling, 27s to 30s ; malting ditto, 30s to 34s. Lincolnshire and Yorkshire oats, 19s to 21s ; Scotch and Irish, 17s to 19s. Beans, 34s to 36s. Peas, 34s to 36s. Tick beans, new, 31s to 36s ; ditto old, 34s to 38s. Grey peas, 32s to 34s. White, 36s to 40s. Boilers, 42s to 45s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 47s to 50s. Suffolk, Dorset, Yorkshire, and Yorkshire, 37s to 39s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, —— to —— ; barley red, 24s to 25s ; white, 26s to 30s. In Bond : wheat, —— to —— ; oats, brew, —— to —— ; oats fed, —— to —— ; beans, —— to —— ; peas, —— to —— per quarter. Flour, American, 27s to 29s ; Baltic, 28s to 30s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Owing to many of the mills having ceased work, the demand for linseed both English and foreign, is heavy to-day ; the sales are few, and prices nominally the same as last week. Cakes are steady, at full prices ; but all other articles command very little attention

Linseed : English, sowing, 52s to 56s ; crushing, 42s to 44s ; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 45s. Rapeseed, 34s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 15s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 13s to 14s ; white ditto, 6s to 7s 6d. Tares, 40s to 44s per bushel. English Rapeseed, £34 to £35 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 5s to £14 ; ditto, foreign, £7 15s ; 28 lb per cwt. Rapeseed cakes, £6 5s per ton. Canary, 56s to 68s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s, extra, 55s to 58s ; white, 60s to 62s extra, up to 66s. Foreign, red, 30s to 36s ; white, 40s to 44s. Cake W. H. A. Dashwood, 10s per ton. Trefoil, 24s to 28s. Ribgrass, 40s to 44s. Carraway seed, 72s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d, of household ditto, 6½d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 51s 8d ; barley, 27s 3d. ; oats, 22s 8d ; rye, 33s 4d. beans 36s 4d ; peas, 37s 6d.

The Sea Fresh Averages. Wheat, 55s 8d ; barley, 28s 1d ; oats, 23s 7d ; rye, 33s 1d ; beans, 35s 10d ; peas 37s 2d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 18s 0d ; barley, 6s ; oats, 6s ; rye, 9s 6d ; beans, 7s 6d ; peas, 9s 6d

Tea.—The demand for all kinds of tea is exceedingly heavy and prices are almost nominal.

Sugar.—On the whole, the demand for most kinds of sugar continues well at fully previous rates, at some instances a decline of ½s per cwt. has been conceded.

Coffee.—This market continues to rule heavy, with large supplies on offer. There are sellers of good ordinary Ceylon, at 43s per cwt.

Rice.—Bengal and most other qualities are moving off steadily at full prices.

Provisions.—Irish butter, we have to report an improved demand, at an advance in the quotations from 2s to 4s per cwt. Waterford, on board, is selling at from 77s to 80s ; Clonmel, 82s ; and Limerick and Cork 78s to 80s per cwt. The supply of Dutch butter being scarce, that article has been forced to work from per cwt. Friesland is selling at from 76s to 82s ; and inferior qualities, 65s to 76s per cwt. English butter is steady, at 86s to 90s for Dorset, 78s to 82s for Devon, and 68s to 74s per cwt. for fresh. Bacon is in good request at late rates. Prime Waterford, landed, 58s to 59s ; ditto, Limerick and Cork, 56s to 57s ; and Irish, 54s to 55s per cwt. Lard firm, at 50s for the best Waterford kind.

Tallow.—P. Y. C. very active, at 42s per cwt. For delivery very little is doing, at 41s for the last three months. Town tallow meets on 32s net cash.

Oils.—This market is in a very sluggish state, at but little alteration in the quotations.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 4s ; clover, £3 14s to £5 15s ; new ditto, £1 10s to £1 17s ; wheat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s per load. New meadow hay is sellin, at from £2 to £3 5s per load.

Hops.—The demand is very dull, at a decline of 1d per lb. In foreign and colonial qualities, scarcely to nothing is doing.

Metals.—The following quotations on offer are selling slowly : at from 20s to 10s per ton

Hops (Friday).—The late fine showers having greatly benefited the growing bine in the plantations in the Weald of Kent, the accounts from thence are very heavy ; and prices are not quite so buoyant. The duty is lowered at £130.00. New Kent pockets, 56s to 70s ; Weald of Kent, 47s to 57s ; Sussex, 45s to 54s ; Farnham, Bramley, and Surrey, 70s to 90s ; East Kent, 120s to 140s ; Mid Kent, 110s to 130s ; Weald of Kent, 90s to 110s ; Sussex, 84s to 100s ; Farnham, Bramley, and Surrey, 120s to 140s.

Potatoes.—Prime Scotch Regents, 120s to 130s per ton ; Yorkshire ditto, 90s to 100s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 70s to 80s ; Scotch Cups, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Shaws, 60s to 70s ; Yorkshire ditto, 50s to 60s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 30s to 40s ; Scotch Kidneys, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Rocks, 50s to 60s ; Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 30s to 40s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 20s to 30s ; Scotch Ashleaf, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Flukes, 50s to 60s ; Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 30s to 40s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 20s to 30s ; Scotch Blues, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Whites, 50s to 60s ; Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 30s to 40s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 20s to 30s ; Scotch Reds, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Purples, 50s to 60s ; Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 30s to 40s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 20s to 30s ; Scotch Whites, 90s to 100s ; Yorkshire ditto, 80s to 90s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 70s to 80s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 60s to 70s ; Scotch Reds, 50s to 60s ; Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 50s ; Lincolnshire ditto, 30s to 40s ; Essex and Kent ditto, 20s to 30s ; Scotch Purples

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT-GARDEN.—M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS D'ETE.—Last Week but Two.—Sivori, Salaton, and Vieuxtemps.—The present is the last Week but Two of M. Jullien's Concerts d'Ete. The three most eminent Violoncists in Europe will perform.—Prices of admission, as formerly, viz., Dress Circle, 2s. 6d.; Promenade, 1s.

MDLLE. RACHEL. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—MR. [illegible] has the honour to announce that the eminent tragedienne, MDLLE [illegible] will APPEAR IN SIX REPRESENTATIONS at this theatre, of popular French Tragedies, consisting of Les Horaces, Phedre, Bajazet, Andromaque, Le Malade Imaginaire, CAPTAIN POWELL'S PATENT TRANSFERABLE RAILWAY CARRIAGE.—FIG. 1.

CAPTAIN POWELL'S PATENT SECTIONAL TRANSFERABLE RAILWAY CARRIAGES, TO REMEDY THE INCONVENIENCE OF "BREAK OF GAUGE."

In the early history of Railway Engineering, experiment necessarily supplied the want of experience. The Narrow, or 4ft. 8½in. Gauge, had been adopted up to the year 1834; but, in 1835, in order to modify the rocking motion then complained of, and which a slight irregularity of rail would communicate more sensibly to carriages, when travelling rapidly over a narrow line, than a broad one—and also to secure a higher velocity with a greater steadiness and safety, Mr. Brunel was induced to recommend to the proprietors of the Great Western Railway, the adoption of the Broad or 7ft. Gauge.

On the comparative merits of these rival Gauges it is not our province to determine; but we, in common with many others, have felt the annoying inconvenience arising from their joint existence, by being summoned, in the depth of winter and dead of night, to join in the helter-skelter that distinguishes the transfer of passengers and their luggage from the Broad to the Narrow Gauge, or vice versâ; and should hail as a public benefit any contrivance that would mitigate the miseries of such a scene, if it only relieved us from all anxiety as regarded the safety of our own miscellaneous packages.

The subject has of late attracted much notice, and the attention of Parliament having been recently called to an invention (by Captain Powell, of the Grenadier Guards) intended to obviate many of the evils complained of, we have the pleasure to lay before our readers a series of Engravings in illustration of the gallant Captain's plan, and which we hope will put the public sufficiently in possession of the principle and details to enable them to form a correct estimate of the merits of the entire scheme.

Fig. 1 shows an intersection, at right angles, of the Broad (1) and Narrow (2) Gauges, and also the process of transferring the goods from one set of trucks to the other, either from the Broad to the Narrow, or from the Narrow to the Broad Gauge. Thus the luggage box C may be supposed to be passing from B to A, or vice versâ. A being the narrow truck, two boxes are arranged upon it longitudinally; whilst on B three are placed transversely. (Under this truck on the Broad Gauge line a turntable must be fixed.) The length of these boxes corresponds with the width of the Broad Gauge trucks, and their width with that of the Narrow. The floor of both trucks must obviously be on the same level, and the fittings, as shown in section Fig. 3, must be uniform in all the boxes and trucks.

Fig. 2. D is a common Road Truck, and E, a Luggage-box, united with D, for the conveyance of goods to and from a Railway station. The floor of D being level with the floor of A and B, the Luggage-box can be transferred to either of the Railway trucks, as before explained.

Fig. 3. Longitudinal section through the centre of the floors of the common Road Truck and Luggage-box, showing the arrangements for facilitating the transfer of the latter from Truck to Truck, and also the means of securing it firmly for travelling.

F F, iron rails bolted to floor of D, which pass through a dove-tail groove, at the bottom of E. G G, small flanged Friction-wheels, fixed in E, and running on the edges of the square grooves a a, in the floor of D. b b, rim, jointed to floor of Truck, to aid the security of the Luggage-box whilst travelling, and made to fall outwards, to allow the box to pass over when removing, as soon in Fig. 1, x x.

The inventor proposes that merchants and the carriers of goods, to and from railways should be provided with common-road trucks and boxes like Fig. 2, and that these should be loaded at their stores, where every attention could be paid to careful packing, and from whence they would be forwarded to their destination, over common-road and rail, undisturbed and undisgured by the confusion and carelessness that so eminently distinguish the operations, wherever a Break of Gauge occurs.

Touching its importance with reference to military movements, we will leave he gallant Captain to speak for himself:—

"This invention is peculiarly adapted to the moving of troops required on an emergency; after receiving their orders, their ammunition and baggage can be at once packed in these patent carriages, in the barracks; which can then accompany the troops on the railway that conveys them (or follow them, should the Ganges cross). should their destination, then, be some miles by the common road, their ammunition, and baggage, packed in these carriages, could still accompany them, until their arrival at their destination, and there would be no occasion to unpack them, or to have the slightest delay occasioned, through changing from the different Gauges, or to the common road, or from one to the other, as the invention is so simple and easy of execution, that the railway servants would easily get the carriages transferred, before the men could get their packs on their backs, and be fallen in, ready to continue their march.

"On the other hand, should necessity require it, these carriages can be opened at any instant, either on the rail or on the road. Ammunition might thus be obtained at a moment's notice in any quantity, or enough might be taken for the occasion, should the regiment be engaged, whilst the remainder would be as secure in one of these conveyances as if in the magazine from whence it was issued, and still ready to be served out to the men the moment it was needed.

"These carriages are also about the size that would accommodate the baggage of a company; so that each company would have a carriage to itself, quite independent of the others, which, in case the regiment was to be detached along the line, would be found to be very valuable in preventing any confusion or mixing of baggage, which, when indiscriminately packed, is occasionally and unavoidably the case, when a regiment is ordered to march at a few hours' notice. By the use of these carriages all this could cause; the company that was to halt at the nearest station would be in the last railway carriage, and its baggage in one of these Patent Sectional Carriages, with the company's number chalked on it, on the last truck, which would be at once transferred to the road truck, and thus be ready to accompany the troops, either to the barracks or to the interior of the country, should it be required to do so."

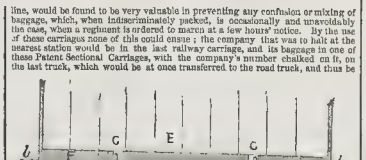

FIG. 3.

DEATH OF M. BONPLAND.—Accounts have arrived in England of the decease of this celebrated naturalist and companion of the great Humboldt, with whom he travelled over a great part of the world, and wrote the "Voyage aux Régions Equinoxiales du Nouveau Continent fait en 1799, 1800, 1, 2, 3, et 4." After a short sojourn in his native land, he embarked a second time for Buenos Ayres, and settled himself for some time at Candelaria, on the southern side of the Paraná, in the territory of Entre Rios, where he industriously occupied himself in farming plantations of the Paraguay tea. At the close of 1821 his establishment was destroyed and himself taken prisoner by the Dictator Francia, who kept him a prisoner for ten years, but finally allowed him to settle at Corrientes, where he died

SALE OF CURIOUS AUTOGRAPHS.—During the week, there has been a sale of curious autographs, the property of the late W. Upcott, Esq., by Messrs. Sotheby & Co. Three letters of the Duke of Wellington, one written in French, sold for £4 11s.; two in the handwriting of the Duke of Marlborough, one addressed to Queen Anne, announcing the surrender of Douay, sold for £3 14s.; the signature of Francis Bacon, as Lord Chancellor, to a document for the payment of £100, sold for £3 12s. 6d.; a document in the handwriting of Sir Christopher Wren, relating to the Monument, &c., £5; the signature of Hogarth to a receipt, &c., £4 8s.; two interesting letters from Gainsborough to Garrick, with a receipt in the handwriting of Richard Wilson, £4 7s.; 371 letters of the English Nobility from the reign of Henry the VIII. to Queen Anne, in two vols., many of them addressed to John Evelyn and the Fairfax family, sold for £175; two thousand one hundred and thirty-three Letters of Peers and Baronets of the United Kingdom, from 1663 to the present time, £92; a collection of 395 letters written by well known founders of libraries and collectors of books, commencing with Sir Thomas Bodley (the founder of the Bodleian Library) in 1595 and continued to 1825, sold for £145; a large collection of unpublished papers by John Evelyn, addressed to Sir Richard Browne, and relating to the insurrection in Kent in 1648, bought for the British Museum for £70; 470 letters of deceased British poets of the 15th century, £49. Of literary characters there were four series; the first, relating to literary characters of the 16th century, comprising 383 letters, sold for £80; the second 752 letters, £33; the third, 1,379 letters, £40; and the fourth, of 1,753 letters, £16. Of the single letter, one by Lawrence Sterne to Garrick, asking for the loan of £20, sold for £3 18s.; the signature of Izaak Walton, £3; and a signature of Dr. S. Johnson to a receipt £3 3s. The remaining lots sold were equally curious and rare, and the sale in the aggregate realised between £3,000 and £4,000.

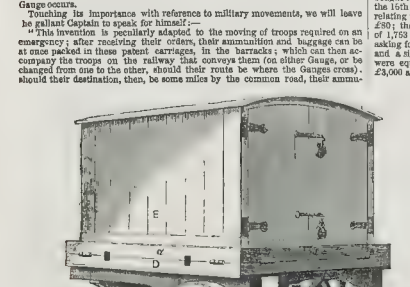

FIG. 2.

LUGGAGE BOY—8FT. LONG, 6FT. WIDE, 5FT. 6IN. HIGH.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. D., Liverpool.—Volume 5 of the "Chess Player's Chronicle," containing the Games of the Great French Match, can be got of Hurst, King William-street, Strand—and the Games between Staunton and Bonassera, at the same place.

"F. P. W."—Your hint may be worth consideration when the Chess season commences.

"D. C." Hamley, will perceive we have availed ourselves of his suggestion. His problem shall be examined.

"J. S." and "Sea Weed."—Look again attentively.

"Hamley."—You cannot take a piece in the act of Castling. Full particulars as to the back volumes may be had at the office.

"W. T."—1st. A distinction without a difference. 2nd and 3rd. Get "Tomlinson's Amusements of Chess." Your solution is erroneous. We have not the "curious position" at hand, but we will refer to it.

"G. A. N."—We believe you are right.

"J. C."—Much too obvious and simple for publication.

"W. H. H."—The only recognised version of the Laws of Chess is that published as "The Chess-Player's Chronicle," and in Lewis's later Treatises.

"H. M." Pilcom.—We are obliged by the trouble taken, and will publish the game.

"H. T. V."—The Brighton Chess Club—a highly promising and agreeable assemblage of players—holds their meetings daily at the well-known Album Reading Rooms, on the Steyne. Write to the Secretary.

"Old Stager."—When the season for Chess playing comes round, we shall gladly take advantage of your friendly offer.

"Embassy."—The gentleman named is at present in Rome.

"Jonathan."—You may get copies of the American Match Games at the office of "The Chess-Player's Chronicle," and they will amply repay you for the labour bestowed in playing them.

"Colon."—Why do you not become a Member of the St. George's Chess Club? There you would frequently see the games mentioned.

"A. B. C."—We cannot promise that the Games and Problems in THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be collected in a volume; they are accessible, as all the back Numbers are kept on sale.

Solutions of Problem by "Adolescens," "H. S.," "J. G." Dublin; "Hamley," "Laudemagister," "Zella," "Chapel Rock," "Maravien," "J. D. S.," "Master Smith," "A. Z.," and "Omega," are correct.

Solutions of the Enigmas by "D. W. H.," "H. N.," "I. C." "P. S." "Amateur," "P. S.," and "Sandy," are right. Those by "Hamley," "B. N. T.," "Juvenile," and "Tom," are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 126.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to her R's 6th	B takes R (best)	4. Q takes Q P (ch)	B takes Q
2. B to K B's 3rd	R to Q Kt sq	5. Kt mates
3. Kt to Q Kt 5th	B to Q B 3rd

The two following well-contested games were lately played at Brighton, in a little match, wherein Mr. Staunton had engaged to give the odds of a Knight to Mr. Hannah, one of the strongest and most improving players of the Brighton Chess Club. The number of games to be played was seven, exclusive of drawn battles; and the result was, Mr. Staunton scored five—his opponent, two—and one was given up as a rémise.

(Before playing over these games, remove Black's Queen's Knight from the board.)

BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	15. Q P one (c)	K R P one
2. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	16. K P one (e)	Q P takes P
3. Q to K 2nd	Q P one	17. P takes P	K B P one
4. K B P two	B takes Kt	18. R to K B 3rd (f)	Q R to Q sq
5. R takes B	P takes P	19. R to K R 3rd (g)	K B P one
6. Q P one (a)	Q Kt to B 3rd	20. R to Q B 3rd	R to Q 2nd
7. Q B takes P	Kt to Q 5th	21. K Kt P one	P takes P
8. Q to K B 2nd	Q to K B 3rd (b)	22. R takes P (h)	K R to R 2nd (i)
9. K to K B sq	Q Kt to K 3rd	23. B to Q Kt 4th (ch)	Q R to Q 3rd (k)
10. B takes Kt	B takes B	24. R to Q sq	K to Q 2nd
11. Castles	K Kt P two (c)	25. P takes R	Q B P one
12. B to Q 2nd	Q takes Q	26. R to K B sq	K to his sq
13. R takes Q	K B P one	27. R to K B 8th (ch)
14. Q R to K B sq	K to his 2nd	And White resigns.

(a) In this position of the Lopez Gambit when the Q's Kt is given, we consider it far bette for the opening player to move this pawn one step only.

(b) Promising to take the Q B P with his Kt (ch).

(c) Had he taken the Q B P, Black would have attacked the Q with K P, and gained an irresistible attack.

(d) Hoping to drive away the adverse Bishop, and then take the K Kt P with his Bishop.

(e) White's last move compels his adversary to change his tactics.

(f) Black's forces are so well disposed, and his opponent's so inoperative, that in effect the latter is giving the odds of a piece.

(g) Threatening to win a Pawn and the Exchange, but the object is mainly to force White to advance his B P.

(h) He takes with his Rook to unmask his Bishop.

(i) Overlooking the terrible check impending.

(k) He might have prolonged the defence by now interposing the Q B P.

BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	25. Q B P one	R to K Kt 3rd
2. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	26. B to K R 4th	K to Q 2nd
3. Q to K 2nd	Q P one	27. P to Q 4th	P takes P (ch)
4. K B P two	B takes Kt	28. K takes P	R to Kt 6th (ch)
5. R takes B	Q Kt to B 3rd	29. K to Q B 5th (f)	K Kt to R (3rd)
6. Q B P one	Q to K B 3rd	30. B to K 4th (ch)	K to Q's sq (g)
7. K B P one	K Kt P one	31. B to Q sq	Q Kt P one (ch)
8. K Kt P two	P takes P	32. K to Kt 5th	B to Q 2nd (ch)
9. Kt P takes P	Q to K R 6th (ch)	33. K to R 6th	B to Q B sq (ch) (h)
10. R to K Kt 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	34. K takes P	R takes Q B P
11. Q P one	R to K Kt sq (a)	35. R to K B 8th (ch)	K to Q 2nd
12. Q to K Kt 2nd	Kt to K R 4th	36. B takes Kt	K takes B
13. Q to K R 3rd	Q to Q 2nd	37. R takes B	Kt to B 4th
14. R takes Q	Kt to B 3rd	38. R to K R 8th	Kt takes P
15. K to R 2nd	B to Q 2nd	39. R takes P (ch)	K to Q 3rd
16. Q Kt P two	Castles	40. R to R 6th (ch)	K to his 4th
17. B takes K B P (b)	R to K Kt 2nd	41. R to K 6th (ch)	K to his B's 4th
18. B to Q Kt 3rd	Q P one (c)	42. B to Q Kt 3rd	R to Q B 6th
19. P takes P	Q Kt to K 2nd	43. K to Kt 7th	B P two
20. R to Kt 3rd	R takes R	44. P takes P (en passant)	R takes B
21. P takes R	B takes K B P	45. P takes R	K takes R
22. Q to K Kt 5th	R to Kt to his own sq	46. P to Q B 7th—and wins
23. K to his 3rd (d)	R to Q 2nd
24. R to K B sq (e)	R to Q 3rd

(a) Better play than Kt to B's 4th, as, in that case, Black would have forced the exchange of Queens by playing Q to Kt's 4th, and then have commanded the open file with his Rook.

(b) The giving up this Pawn we think a fault, but it was resigned intentionally, and after very, very much consideration.

(c) The attempt to break up the centre is well conceived

(d) Tempting him to take the doubled Pawn.

(e) White's game is now one of extreme difficulty, and it appears almost impossible for him to avoid loss. If the Bishop is moved, Black immediately checks with his R, then takes R with B, and, finally playing Q P one, wins the K Kt. Taking no heed of time, Mr Hannah, by dint of long and patient investigation, at last hit upon the move in the text, a coup which finally relieves him from a good deal of his embarrassment

(f) A daring step, to say the least of it.

(g) K to B sq would, perhaps, be better

If then Black took the Kt it would cost him the game, e y —

31 B takes Kt	30 K to B sq
32 R to Kt's 6th	31 Q Kt's P one (ch)
(A) A futile check.	32 R to Kt's 2nd. And mates next move.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The annexed is one of the Games to which allusion was made in the extract we gave from M. Von H. de Laza's letter, a week or two ago, between M. Von H. de Laza and M. Lowenthal, of Pesth.

BLACK. (M. L.)	WHITE. (Von H.)	BLACK (Von H.)	WHITE. (M. L.)
1. K P two	Q P two	19. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt (ch)
2. K P takes Q P	K Kt to B 3rd	20. K R to B 2nd	R to K 5th
3. Q P two	Kt takes P	21. Q R to Q B sq	Q R to K sq
4. Q B to K 3rd	Q B to B 4th	22. Q to her 2nd	K Kt P one
5. Q R P one	K P one	23. Q P one	R to Q B sq
6. K Kt to B 3rd	Kt takes B P	24. Q B P one	K R P two
7. P takes Kt	Q B P two	25. Q Kt P two	Q R P one
8. K Kt to B 3rd	K B to K 2nd	26. Q R to Q sq	Q takes Q
9. Castles	Castles	27. K R takes Q	K to his B sq
10. B to Q 3rd	P takes Q P	28. K to B 2nd	R to Q sq
11. P takes P	K B to K 5th (ch)	29. K R to Q sq	K to his sq
12. K R P one	K B to his 3rd	30. Q B P one	K to Q 2nd
13. B takes B	P takes B	31. K to B 3rd	R to K 4th
14. Castles	Q Kt to B 3rd	32. R to Q B sq	R to Q B sq
15. Q Kt to Q 4th	Q Kt to K sq	33. R to B 4th	K B P one
16. Kt takes B (ch)	Q takes Kt	34. K R P two	Q R P one
17. Q P one	Q R to Q sq	35. Q Kt P takes P	K R takes P
18. Q to Q B 2nd	Kt to Q 5th

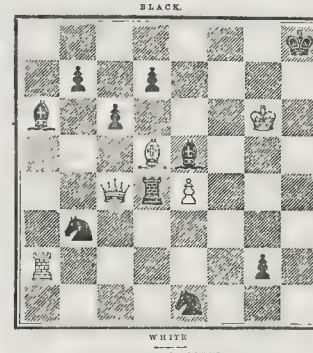
And after several more moves, the order of which we are unable to make out from the MS., the game was drawn.

PROBLEM, NO. 127.

By M. KHIPER.

White to play and mate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 16. By M. D'OLIVILLE.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q 4rd	K at his 3rd
Q at her 3rd	R at K R 2nd
R at K Kt 3rd	B at K B 3rd
Kt at Q Kt 7th	B at Q R sq
Pawns at K's 2nd and Q B 5th	Kt at K 2nd

White plays first, and mates in 3 moves.

No. 17.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at Q B 3rd
Q at her 2nd	Q at K Kt 7th
R at K R 7th	R at K R 7th
B at Q 8th	B at K 3rd
	Kt at K B 4th
	P at Q Kt 4th, and Q R 3rd

No. 18.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q Kt sq	K at his 4th
Q at her 2nd	Q at her R 6th
B at K R sq	R at K Kt sq
B at K B 8th	R at Q R sq

WHITE.	BLACK.
Kt at K 4th	B at Q R 2nd
P at K B 3rd, and Q B 3rd	Kt at Q B 5th
	P at K R 6th, and B at K 4th

White mates in 3 moves.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1846.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

VOL. VIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1846. [GRATIS.

A BRIEF HISTORICAL MEMOIR
OF
THE CITY OF DUBLIN,
FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE PRESENT TIME;
WITH A
NOTICE OF ITS PRESENT ASPECT AND CONDITION.

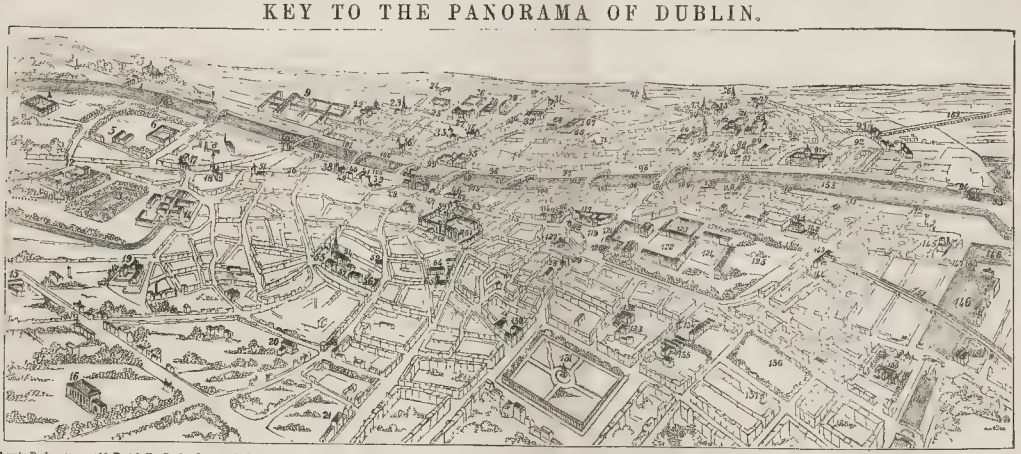
IN ORDER that nothing that lies within our power may be wanting to complete our Illustration of the CITY OF DUBLIN, we present our readers, this week, with a SUPPLEMENT, devoted exclusively to the subject of the History of that City, which we will notice as fully as the limited compass of our space will allow. We commence, therefore, with

THE EARLY HISTORY OF DUBLIN.

THE precise period of the foundation of the City of Dublin, like that of most other eminent cities, is wrapt in obscurity. The earliest authentic account of it is to be found in the writings of Ptolemy, the geographer, who lived during the reign of the Roman Emperor, Antoninus Pius, A.D. 140, and who mentions it as a city, by the name of Eblana: thus, without departing from the strict domain of history, we find that the City of Dublin can fairly lay claim to an antiquity of more than seventeen hundred years. Allusion is also made to it in the Irish Historians,* as a chief place, at a time shortly subsequent to that of Ptolemy, namely, on the occasion of the conclusion of a treaty of peace between Con (surnamed of the hundred battles), King of Ireland, and the King of Munster, about the year 191, when a bipartite division of the island, north and south—the line of demarcation running through High-street, Dublin, westward to Galway—was made between those two Monarchs. It is also mentioned by the monk Joceline, in his life of St. Patrick, as being a "most noble city" in the time of the Patron Saint of Ireland; and again in the English King Edgar's Charter, called Oswald's Law dated at Gloucester, A.D. 964, in which that Monarch claims dominion over "all the kingdoms of the islands of the ocean, with their fierce

* Ware's Antiq. Fishert. Ogygia, Keat. Hist.

KEY TO THE PANORAMA OF DUBLIN.



1. Phœnix Park-gates
2. Wellington Monument
3. Wellington Infirmary
4. Royal Military Hospital
5. Swift's Hospital
6. Stephen's Hospital
7. King's Bridge
8. Vitriol Works
9. Barracks
10. Barrack Bridge, commonly called Bloody Bridge
11. Barrack Gate Entrance to Military Road
12. Southern House of Industry, originally the Foundling Hospital
13. City Basin
14. Ceal Head
15. Penitentiary Circular Rop
16. Portobello Gardens
17. St. James's Church
18. New Church in St. James's Street
19. Fever Hospital, [Cork Street
20. Meath Hospital
21. Orphan Asylum
22. Blue Coat Hospital
23. St. Paul's Church
24. Richmond Penitentiary
25. Lunatic Hospital
26. Northern Union Workhouse
27. Whitworth Hospital
28. Fever Hospital
29. Basin of Royal Canal
30. Stoney Batter
31. Prerogative Court
32. Linen Hall
33. St Michan's Church
34. Capuchin Convent, called St. Mary Street Chapel
35. Four Courts
36. St Paul's ✠ Church
37. Queen's Bridge
38. St. Andrew's Church
39. St. Michael's
40. St. Andrew's ✠ Chapel
41. Franciscan ✠ Convent
42. Christ Church Cathedral
43. Whitworth Bridge
44. St. Werburgh's Church
45. St. John's Church
46. Fishamble Street, Part of Old Theatre
47. Castle Street
48. St. James Street
49. High Street
50. St. Thomas Street
51. St. Catherine's Church
52. St. Bride's Church
53. St. Patrick's Cathedral
54. St. Nicholas' Church
55. The Deanery
56. Old Archiepiscopal Palace; now Police Station
57. Archbishop Marsh's Library
58. St. Peter's Schools
59. Dublin Castle
60. Birmingham Tower
61. St. Patrick's Chapel
62. Bibernian Bank
63. The Royal Exchange
64. Carmelite ✠ Chapel
65. St. Peter's Church
66. Newgate
67. Recorder's Court
68. St. Ann's ✠ Chapel
69. Richmond Bridge
70. Essex Bridge
71. St. Mary's Church
72. St. Mary's Chapel of Ease
73. Rutland Square
74. Lying in Hospital
75. Rotunda
76. St. George's Church
77. Old Chapel of St. George
78. Sackville Street
79. Nelson's Column
80. Post Office
81. St. Thomas's Church
82. Metropolitan ✠ Chapel
83. National Education Schools
84. Marlborough Street
85. Wesleyan Chapel
86. Abbey Street
87. Abbey Street Theatre, or Circus
88. Music Hall
89. Savings Bank
90. Chapel
91. Custom House
92. The King's Docks
93. Beginning of Drogheda Railroad
93.* Light House
94. North Wall
95. Eden Quay
95.*ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS Office
96. Bachelors' Walk
97. Lower Ormond Quay
98. Upper Ormond Quay
99. King's Inn Quay
100. Arran Quay
101. Ellis's Quay
102. Usher's Island
103. Usher's Quay
104. Merchants' Quay
105. Essex Quay
106. Wellington Quay
107. Crampton Quay
108. Ashton's Quay
109. Burgh Quay
110. George's Quay
111. City Quay
112. Sir John Rogerson's Quay
113. Dame Street
114. Commercial Buildings
115. National Assurance Company
116. Royal Bank
117. Bank of Ireland
118. Statue of William III.
119. College Green
120. Wellington Bridge
120a. Carlisle Bridge
121. Dublin University Trinity College
122. Library Square
123. Botany Bay
124. Parliament Square
125. Park of Trinity Coll.
126. Provost's House
127. St. Andrew's Church
128. Clarendon ✠ Chapel
129. Grafton Street
130. Surgeon's Hall
131. St. Stephen's Green
132. St Ann's Church
133. Mansion House
134. Leinster House — Royal Society
135. Agricultural Museum
136. Merrion Square
137. Residence of D. O'Connell, Esq., M.P
138. Conciliation Hall
139. Theatre Royal
140. Lock Hospital
141. St. Mark's Church
142. Concert Room
143. Entrance to Kingstown Railway
144. St. Andrew's ✠ Chapel
145. Gas Works
146. Grand Canal Docks
147. Drawbridges, Roads
148. Grand Canal
149. Railway Carriage Factory
150. Back of Sir Patrick Dun's Hospital
151. Kingstown Railway
152. Drogheda Railway
153. The Liffey

Kings, as far as Norway, and the greatest part of Ireland, with its most noble City of Dublin."

With whatever justness Flaherty and other writers have called in question the truth of the assertions and claims put forward in this document, it may, at all events, be fairly cited in proof of the antiquity of Dublin as a principal city of the Sister Kingdom.

Its ancient name amongst the Irish themselves was Bally-ath-Cliath (contailed, in ordinary pronunciation, into Blaclieh), which name it retains to the present day in the Irish language, and which signifies the town of the ford of hurdles, in allusion to the practice of obtaining access to the Liver Liffey, on which it stands, by means of hurdles laid over the low, marshy grounds adjoining, before that river was embanked. The modern name of Dublin is supposed to be a version of the words Dubh-lein, which the author of "The Life of Saint Kevin" interprets to signify the black bath, or black waters, in reference to the colour of the Liffey at this place.

Who the original inhabitants of the district were, or whence they came, is a point cloaked in the mists of remote ages. The most probable conjecture is, that they were of the same race who first peopled Britain. All writers, however, agree that the Danes, under the denomination of Ostmen, or Easterlings, at the earliest periods of their encroachments on the Irish coast, settled themselves in this, the chief town of the aboriginal inhabitants; and it is well ascertained that, in the ninth century, they had firmly established their position on the banks of the Liffey, and had succeeded, in a great degree, in expelling the native Irish from this, now become their stronghold, which they encompassed with rude fortifications and walls.

During the three following centuries, history presents but a series of sanguinary struggles between the natives and the Danes; the latter, however, amidst all the vicissitudes of the strife, retaining possession of Dublin, under the government of Princes of their own race.

At length, about the beginning of the year, 1014, the brave Brien MacKennedy, celebrated in Irish history under the name of Brien Boroihme, or Brien Boro, King of Munster, and Monarch of Ireland, having entered into a league with the majority of the other Kings and petty Princes of Ireland, marched, at the head of their combined forces, against the Ostmen of Dublin, for the purpose, by one united and vigorous effort, of rooting out the intruders from the soil, and recovering possession of the "faire citie" and its territory. The Ostmen, under their King, Sitric MacAulaffe, having had their ranks strengthened by hordes of their countrymen, invited for that purpose from the Isle of Man and the Hebrides, were not unprepared for the formidable array brought against them; and, accordingly, after great preparations made on both sides, the two hostile armies met on Good Friday, April the 23rd, in the above year, at the village of Clontarf, in the immediate vicinity of Dublin, and, after a long and obstinate engagement, of the most furious and sanguinary character, victory declared in favour of the Irish, and the Danes were driven from the field with great slaughter. The Irish, however, purchased their success dearly; they lost in that battle not only the energetic old Monarch himself, Brien Boro, but his gallant son Murrough, and the flower of their army. They were, in consequence, unable to follow up their success, and carry out their original intention of expelling the Danes; but they had inflicted such a blow as effectually repressed the insolence of those daring adventurers; and though Sitric and his Danish successors continued to hold Royal sway in Dublin, they remained comparatively quiet, until, in 1095 Mortogh O'Brien, Monarch of Ireland, joining his own forces to those of the petty Kings of the island, marched to Dublin, and expelled the Ostmen, with their King Godfrid Meranagh; after which, Dublin became part of the possessions of the Irish Monarch, and whatever Ostmen or Danes remained in it accepted the rule of the native Sovereign, to whom their petty Princes, whether of Irish or Danish blood, rendered homage as to their liege lord and suzerain, until the reign of the Dane Asculph MacTorcall (from A.D. 1161 to A.D. 1171), during which the English got possession of Dublin.

INVASION OF THE ENGLISH.

IRELAND, at this period, was divided into several petty states, governed each by their respective Princes, who rendered homage, as tributary Kings, to the Monarch of all Ireland; the latter being generally elected from their body to fill that high dignity, on account of his distinguished talents and qualities, either in peace or in war, was, by virtue of his sovereignty, President of the National Council, or Diet, of the whole kingdom, which was held at stated periods at Tarah, in the county of Meath, and was intrusted with the execution of its decrees relative to measures for quelling the angry broils and disorders which the turbulent and ambitious spirit of the provincial Kings was constantly exciting; and also all other measures relating to the public weal of the whole island.

About the year 1167 Dermot MacMurrough, King of Leinster, having forcibly carried off the wife of O'Rourke, Prince of Breffne, in Connaught, the latter applied to Roderick O'Conor, King of Connaught, and Monarch of Ireland, the common arbiter in all princely differences, for aid in his attempt to punish the ravisher; and Roderick having espoused the quarrel of O'Rourke, their united forces, joined with a large proportion of Dermot's own subjects, whom his tyranny and oppression had rendered disaffected, overcame his adherents, and drove him with a few followers out of his Kingdom.

MacMurrough, in this extremity, had recourse to Henry II., King of England, for assistance to recover his lost throne, and that ambitious Monarch having accepted MacMurrough's offer to become his liege-man, promised the required assistance, and by Letters Patent granted a general license to all his subjects to aid and assist Dermot in the recovery of his kingdom.

This occurred in the year 1168. MacMurrough, armed with this license, repaired to Bristol, and obtained promises of aid from the leading men of that city and neighbourhood; and, accordingly, in the commencement of the following year, Robert Fitzstephen, Maurice de Prendergast, Hervey de Montmorency, Robert de Barry, Meyler Fitzhenry, and others, with a numerous body of their respective retainers, horse and foot, and archers, sailed for Ireland, and landed in a small bay, not far from the City of Wexford, where they were joined by Dermot and his forces. The combined army proceeded forthwith to the subjugation of the country; and having, in several battles, contended with the Irish, with various success, they proceeded to Dublin, and forced Asculph, the Dane, to swear fealty to them. The ambition of Dermot, now re-instated in the greater portion of his dominions, being roused by the success that attended their arms, he aspired to the sovereignty of all Ireland, and, in order to obtain aid to win the object of his ambition, he wrote to Richard (surnamed Strongbow), the celebrated Earl of Pembroke, to make good the engagement into which he had entered with Dermot when in England, of furnishing him with military aid; accordingly, Strongbow dispatched Raymond le Gros with some knights to his assistance, and shortly afterwards, in the early part of the year 1170, arrived himself with a considerable force; and, having formed a junction with Dermot, the allied army assaulted and obtained possession of the City of Waterford, where, agreeably to former contract between the two leaders, Strongbow espoused Eva, the daughter of Dermot; after which, preparations for the capture of Dublin, which had revolted, were made, and MacMurrough and the English marched towards the capital; near which, at the village of Clondalkin, the Monarch of Ireland, Roderick O'Conor, had assembled an army amounting to 80,000 horse and foot, to oppose the enemy; but the appearance of the mail-clad Anglo-Norman warriors—the Irish were unacquainted then with the use of defensive armour,—their numbers, and, above all, the discipline which their order of march and tactics exhibited, created a panic in the ranks of their ruder undisciplined opponents, and the Irish army gave way without resistance, and dispersed.

Meanwhile, the citizens were parleying with a herald about the surrender of Dublin; but the dispute respecting the terms being somewhat lengthy and tedious, one of the bravest and most impetuous of the English Knights, Miles de Cogan, who led the van of the invading army, burst with his men over the city wall, and sacked the town with great slaughter, Asculph, the Ostman King, escaping with difficulty to his shipping in the bay, whence he sailed northward, to seek assistance from his countrymen.

The English were not long suffered to remain undisturbed masters of Dublin, for Roderick, the Irish Monarch, having entered into a confederacy with Asculph, collected together the largest army ever before assembled in Ireland, and, marching to Dublin, surrounded it, and cut off its supplies. The garrison being sore pressed, Strongbow, at the instance of Laurence O'Tool, Archbishop of Dublin, agreed to surrender to Roderick, and hold Leinster of him as a feudatory province; but the terms insisted upon by the Irish Monarch were so extravagant, that they were rejected, and the fiery Miles de Cogan, supported by Strongbow and Raymond le Gros, made a sally at the head of a numerous force, maddened by desperation, and routed the Irish army at Finglas, O'Conor, the Monarch, who, at the moment of the onset, was enjoying a bath, narrowly escaping being taken prisoner.

The Irish forces were scarcely dispersed when MacTorcall, the Ostman, appeared in the Bay with his shipping and troops, and lost no time in landing and making preparations for an assault on the City. The attack commenced at Dame Gate which was the Eastern Gate of the City, and it was headed by MacTorcall's Lieutenant, John le Dane, or the Mad, a man of gigantic strength and proportions. Miles de Cogan was at the Gate to receive him, where the entrance to the Lower Castle-yard now stands, and modern Dame-street commences. The fight, which was distinguished by a personal encounter between those two redoubted Knights, was obstinate and furious; but, at length, Richard de Cogan, the brother of Miles, with a body of Knights, made a sally from the postern, then called Pole Gate—which stood on the spot where now Ship-street and St. Werburgh-street join—and, taking a circuit through the fields, whereon are now built Stephen's-street and George's-street, fell upon the Ostmen in flank; while Miles de Cogan sallying forth in front, the Ostmen were completely hemmed in and beaten at all points. Their rout was complete. John le Dane fell by the hands of Miles de Cogan; those who escaped from the battle were intercepted by a neighbouring Prince, according to a compact formed with Miles de Cogan before the engagement, and were cut to pieces, so that scarcely any of them reached their ships in the river. Asculph was taken prisoner, and, by order of Cogan, put to death in sight of his own fleet. Thus miserably perished the last of the Sea-Kings in Ireland, and with his inglorious death terminated the dominion of the Ostmen in the Green Isle. Henceforth the history of Dublin is connected with the occupation of Ireland by the Anglo-Normans, or English.

Shortly after the events above related, Henry II. came in person to Ireland. He landed near Waterford, with a fleet of 240 ships, on the 18th of October, 1172, attended by many Barons and Knights, with their attendants, four thousand soldiers, well appointed. Having received the investiture of the City of Waterford, and the homage of Strongbow for the Kingdom of Leinster, he marched to Dublin, which Strongbow, according to covenant, delivered up to him, and the King committed the government of the City to Hugh de Lacy, under the title of Bailiff, or Seneschal; or, as he is sometimes, in the old records, named, Custos of Dublin. During his stay in Ireland, Henry promulgated the English laws, appointed officers for their administration, and, it is supposed, held a Parliament in Dublin, reference to a statute of which is made in a statute passed in the second year of Richard III., in a Parliament held at Trim, in the County of Meath. Henry kept his Christmas at Dublin, and celebrated the festivities of the season with as great state as the place would allow, in order to dazzle, by his regal splendour, the petty native Princes, who flocked in considerable numbers to his Court. He distributed large tracts of territory amongst his followers, in order the better to secure their allegiance; and, finding that the state of affairs in England and Normandy required his presence in those countries, he sailed from Ireland on Easter Monday, 1173, leaving Hugh de Lacy, to whom he had granted the Kingdom of Meath, Constable of Dublin, and first Governor-General of Ireland, under the title of Lord Justice. Thus was laid the foundation of English rule in Ireland, and thenceforth Dublin continued to be the seat of government.

The history of the City of Dublin from that period to the present time, does not present any very remarkable features. The citizens, who were composed chiefly of English adventurers, who had come over with Strongbow and his adherents, and of such of the old resident Ostmen as had escaped the fate of the majority of their countrymen, together with a few of the native Irish, formed a mixed population, which remained faithful in their allegiance to the English Monarch. The particles of this heterogeneous mass became thoroughly fused in the course of a few generations, and their descendants having, from time to time, received additions to their numbers from the Anglo-Irish inhabitants of the Pale,* and from the adventurous spirits of England, the complexion of society presented by the inhabitants of Dublin, and the tone of feeling with which they were animated, differed but slightly from what was to be found in those respects amongst the entire English people. By degrees, however, a change of sentiment in this respect began to spread itself over the mixed population of the Pale, so much so that they were said to be "Ipsis Hibernicis Hiberniores,"† and the minds of the inhabitants of Dublin partook, to some extent, of that change; and distinct and marked as the character of the Anglo-Irish is to this day, from that of the descendants of the native Irish, Celtic, Milesian, or by whatever name designated, they still present characteristics which show how deep was the impression which their association with the latter stamped upon them, and how justly they were styled, "more Irish than the Irish themselves." The history of the events resulting from the collision, which such a tone and state of society as that we have glanced at rendered inevitable, between the interests of the Anglo-Irish and those of England on the one hand, and the interests of the native Irish on the other, would present a most instructive and interesting chapter; but it unfortunately happens that the almost total destruction of all state records and important documents, which occurred during the civil wars and intestine broils that so long devastated Ireland, renders it impossible to do do other than give (and that in the form of annals) a very BRIEF NOTICE OF DUBLIN FROM THE TIME OF HENRY II.

A.D. 1173.—HENRY having received the submission of the Irish granted the City of Dublin to the people of Bristol to inhabit, by the following Charter:—

"Henry, by the grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and Earl of Anjou, to the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Ministers, and Sheriffs, and to all his faithful subjects, French, English and Irish, greeting—

"Know ye that I have given, granted, and, by my Charter, confirmed to my subjects of Bristol, my City of Dublin to inhabit. Wherefore, I will and firmly command that they do inhabit it, and hold it of me and of my heirs, well and in peace, freely and quietly, fully and amply and honourably, with all the liberties and free customs which the men of Bristol have at Bristol and throughout my whole land.—Witness, William de Braosa, Reginald de Courtenay, Hugh de Gundeville, William Fitz-Aldelm, Reginald de Glanville, Hugh de Cressy, Reginald de Pavilly, at Dublin."

1177. Earl Strongbow died at Dublin, and was buried with great solemnity in Christ Church; and in the course of the same year Vivian, the Pope's Legate, held a Synod in Dublin, and therein published King Henry's title to Ireland, and the Pope's ratification of it, denouncing excommunication against all who should withdraw their allegiance from him.

1205. This year, Meyler Fitz-Henry, Lord Justice of Ireland, having signified to King John that he had no secure place wherein to deposit his treasure, and that, for that and other purposes, it would be necessary to erect a fortress in Dublin, the King commanded him, by writ, to erect a Castle, and towards the expense of the building he assigned him the sum of three hundred marks, due to the King by Jeffery Fitz-Robert. He also commanded him to oblige the citizens to fortify and strengthen the City; and granted them a fair, to be held for eight days, to begin on the anniversary-day of the invention or finding of the Holy Cross, and that due proclamation be made thereof, to invite merchants to resort to it. This was the origin of the Castle of Dublin, of which more hereafter.

1210. King John visited Ireland this year. Having previously, when Earl of Moreton and Lord of Ireland, in the reign of his brother Richard I., granted several Charters, confirming all the liberties and privileges given by his father King Henry to the City of Dublin; and having subsequently, in the second year of his own reign, A.D. 1200, granted another Charter, ascertaining the meares and bounds of the City franchises, and conferring tenures, within and without the City, to be disposed of by the consent of the citizens, by service langable in free burgage, &c. &c. &c., he proceeded this year (A.D. 1210), on the occasion of his visit to Dublin, to carry out still farther his Anglicising policy, by further establishment of Anglo-Norman institutions; and, for that purpose, he divided anew such parts of the country as were in his possession into counties; erected Courts of Judicature in Dublin, and appointed Judges, Circuits, and Corporations, as in England. He also caused an abstract of the English laws and customs to be drawn up in writing, and, affixing his seal thereto, deposited it in his Exchequer, at Dublin.

Upon his departure from Dublin, he left the Government in the hands of John de Gray, Bishop of Norwich; who, by command of the King, caused pence and farthings to be coined, of the same standard and fineness as those of England, which had an equal currency in both kingdoms. On this new coin was the King's head, in a triangle, inscribed Johannes Rex; and on the reverse, a crescent and bright planet with three lesser stars in the three points of another triangle, with the Mint-Master's name, and the word Dice., for Dublin, i.e., Dublin. The triangles on the Irish coins of this Monarch, as well as upon those of his two next successors, have been supposed to represent a harp, the emblem of Ireland, which was subsequently better represented on the coins of succeeding Kings.

1215. King John granted a licence to the citizens to erect a bridge over the river Liffey, wherever they pleased.

1283. On the 2nd of January, this year, the greatest part of the City was burned down by an accidental fire, and again in the year 1304, on the 13th of June, a similar misfortune befel a large portion of it, and among the places destroyed was one quarter of the celebrated Abbey of St. Mary, which was at that time the repository of the Chancery Records, many of which were consumed.

1312. The citizens were this year engaged in suppressing the turbulence of Robert de Verdon, * in Uriel, † and afterwards in defending themselves from the attacks of the Irish Septs O'Byrne and O'Tool.

1316. Ireland invaded by the Scots, under the command of Edward Bruce, brother to Robert, King of Scotland. The Scots having marched to Dublin, sat down before it, and threatened a regular siege, but the exertions of the inhabitants in their own defence succeeded so well that Bruce raised the siege and removed to other parts of Ireland.

1350. The septs ‡ of the Harolds, the O'Birnes, and the Archbolds, in presence of the Lord Justice, Sir Thomas Rooksby, elected for themselves separately, chieftains from their several tribes, and submitted to the Government, swearing to continue faithful subjects; and their chieftains engaged that if any of their clans or adherents should, for the future, commit any felony or robbery on the King's subjects, they would, upon notice, bring such in, to abide their trials according to English law.

This for a considerable length of time gave great quiet to the citizens of Dublin, who were perpetually molested by those daring borderers.

* The small district around Dublin, over which the English held undisputed sway during the four centuries which succeeded the period of Strongbow's arrival, was called "The English Pale." The rest of the country was, generally speaking, in the hands of the native Irish.

† More Irish than the Irish themselves.

* One of those Anglo-Norman Lords who were said to be Ipsis Hibernicis Hiberniores.

† The modern county of Louth.

‡ a.e. Clans.

1359. This year, in consequence of the increase of business in the Court of King's Bench, a second Judge or Justice (there having been hitherto only one) was appointed, under the name of Associate to the first, at a salary of £40, and with liberty to continue still to practise as a lawyer, notwithstanding his elevation to the Bench.

1394. Richard II. made his first voyage to Ireland; and landed at Waterford about Michaelmas, with an army of 80,000 foot and 4,000 horse; and, having received the submission of several Irish Chieftains in Leinster, he marched to Dublin, where he stayed until the commencement of the following summer. During that time, he granted to the City of Dublin a penny, to be received yearly out of every house, to repair the bridge and streets; and confirmed, by patent, dated the 4th of June this year, all former grants made to the City. He is also said to have held a Parliament in Dublin during the winter. On the 26th of March, he knighted four of the petty Princes of Ireland—who, attired in robes suited to their state, sat that day at the King's table. He again visited Dublin in 1399, which he entered from Waterford, on the 13th of June, with all that feudal pomp and military array which that weak and unfortunate Monarch so delighted in; and, while indulging in luxurious sloth, he was startled into activity by the news that Henry of Lancaster had invaded England. He hastened to cross the Channel, and was soon after deposed and murdered.

1402. Battle between the Citizens and the O'Birnes, which led to the temporary submission of that sept.

1405. The inhabitants of Dublin fitted out an expedition in aid of Henry IV. against the Scots and Welsh, who had commenced hostilities against that Monarch: the Welsh being under the conduct of Owen Glendower. The Dublin fleet made a descent both upon the Scotch and Welsh coasts; and, detachments having landed, ravaged the surrounding districts, and carried off much booty, among which was the Shrine of the Welsh Saint Cubis, which they deposited, among other reliques, in Christ Church, on their return.

1406. Another battle with the native Irish, on Corpus Christi Day The citizens, on their return, brought home the heads of the Irish slain and fixed them on the City gates.

1407. In consequence of the great services rendered at several times to the Crown of England by the loyal citizens of Dublin Henry IV., on the 6th of March, this year, granted a licence, that the Mayor, for the time being, and his successors, for ever, should bear before them a gilded sword, for the honour of the King and his heirs, and of his faithful subjects of Dublin, in the same manner as the Mayors of London had borne before them.

During the whole of this century, the inhabitants of Dublin were engaged in unceasing hostilities with the native Irish septs bordering on the Pale.

1486. The impostor, Lambert Simnel, was crowned King in Christ Church, under the title of Edward VI., in presence of the Mayor and citizens, who were prevailed on by the influence and example of Gerald, Earl of Kildare, Lord Deputy; the Lords of the Council, and other distinguished men, to assist at the ceremony. The crown used on the occasion was taken from the image of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in a church dedicated to her near Dame's-gate. In the following year, Jenico Marks, Mayor of the City, and the inhabitants, made an apology to King Henry VII., for their conduct with respect to Simnel, in the following words:—"We were daunted to see, not only your chief governor, whom your Highness made ruler over us, to bend or bow to that idol, whom they made us obey; but also our father of Dublin and most of the clergy of the nation, except the reverend father, his Grace, Octavian, Archbishop of Armagh. We therefore humbly crave your Highness's clemency towards your poor subjects of Dublin, the metropolis of your Highness' realm of Ireland, which we hope your gracious Highness will remit with some sparks of favour towards us. Your Highness' loving and faithful subjects of Dublin, Jenico Marks, Mayor; John Serjant, John West, Thomas Mulighan, John Flan, Aldermen," &c., &c. Here followed the marks of several citizens, who could not write. Accordingly, in the course of the next year, Sir Richard Edgecombe was sent to Ireland to take the homage and oaths of the nobility, &c., and to grant them the King's pardon; and on his arrival in Dublin, in the month of July, the Earl of Kildare, Lord Deputy; the chief nobles, the mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty of the City, tendered him their homage, and took the oaths of fealty at Guildhall: and at the same time received from him the King's letters of pardon.

1489. Muskets, or fire-arms, first brought to Dublin, from Germany. Six of them, as a great rarity, were presented to Gerald, the Lord-Deputy, which he put into the hands of his guards who stood as sentinels before his house, in Thomas-court.

1490. On the 17th of June this year claret wine was first imported into Dublin.

1504. Some of the Anglo-Irish Lords—particularly Ulick Burke, Chieftain of Clanricarde, together with Turlogh O'Brien, Chieftain of Thomond, Melrony O'Carrol, and several other old Irish Lords—jealous of the power of the Earl of Kildare, then Lord-Deputy, and unable to oppose him separately, formed a confederacy against him, and collected the largest army that had been seen in Ireland since the English occupation.

To meet his enemies the Earl raised the whole power of the Pale, and also obtained the aid of several Irish Lords, as O'Neal, O'Reilly, O'Connor Faly, and others; as also that of a body of the citizens of Dublin, under the command of the Mayor, John Blake, and the two Bailiffs of the City. They met the enemy, on the 19th of August, at Knocktuogh, or the Hill of Axes (so called from this battle), about five miles from Galway, where an obstinate engagement took place, which ended in favour of the Earl. Upwards of four thousand of the enemy were slain, and a great number of prisoners taken: and the Earl, on his triumphant return to Dublin, distributed 120 hogsheads of wine amongst his army.

For several years succeeding this period the citizens of Dublin took an active part in all the desultory hostilities which sprung out of the mutual jealousies of Gerald, Earl of Kildare; Butler, Earl of Ormond; and other turbulent Anglo-Irish Lords; and also in that ceaseless state of internecine warfare which prevailed throughout the greater portion of the sixteenth century between the Anglo-Irish of the Pale, and the native Irish of the other districts of the country.

Foremost and among the most turbulent and warlike of the Lords of the Pale, were the Geralds, the powerful Earls of Kildare, * who more frequently than any others, filled the office of Lord Deputy. On more than one occasion did those ambitious Lords bid defiance to the Royal authority, and, backed by their numerous retainers, and, at times, also by the aid of the native Irish, who readily lent themselves to any scheme of hostility against the authority of the English Crown, fly into open rebellion. The most remarkable of those occasions occurred in the year 1534, when, during the absence of the ninth Earl, in London whither he had been summoned by the King (Henry VIII.) to render an account of his administration before the Council Board, a rumour reached Ireland that the Geraldine, on his arrival in London, had been committed to the Tower and beheaded. Thomas, his eldest son, surnamed Silken Thomas, * who had been left by his father to act as Lord Deputy in his stead, on learning this rumour summoned together all the men-at-arms he could collect, and riding with them through the City in martial array, proceeded, boiling with anger, across the Liffey to St. Mary's Abbey, where the two Allens, the Archbishop of Dublin, and the Master of the Rolls, between whom and Gerald there existed the bitterest animosity and jealousy, and the other members of the Privy Council, were then sitting in deliberation. Lord Thomas rushed into the chamber where they sat, and, casting the Sword of State on the table, he addressed the Council, saying:—"This Sword of State is yours, not mine. I received it with an oath—I used it to your benefit—I should stain mine own honour if I turned the same to your annoyance. Now I have need of my own sword, which I dare trust. As for the common sword it flattereth me with a painted scabbard, but it hath, indeed, a pestilent edge bathed in the Geraldine's blood. Therefore save yourselves from us as from open enemies. I am none of Henry's deputies—I am his foe. I have more mind to conquer than to govern—to meet him in the field than to serve him in office."

He then left the Abbey, and re-passed through the City unmolested, notwithstanding the orders of the Privy Council to the citizens to arrest him. They were either unable or unwilling to comply with those orders. Aided by the men of the Pale and the native Irish, he immediately commenced ravaging the territory of the Butlers of Kilkenny, who had remained faithful to the King; causing, at the same time, siege to be laid to the City of Dublin, from which the supplies were cut off, and the surrounding country laid waste by the O'Tooles. On leaving the Butlers' country, he returned to Dublin, and proffered security and protection to the citizens, provided they would allow him to besiege the Castle, in which the Archbishop Allen had shut himself up. They, with the consent of the Constable of the Castle, gave him permission; but, in order to show their loyalty, they amply provisioned the fortress. The Archbishop, however, afraid of the success of his bitter foe, embarked on board a small vessel moored in the Liffey, near Dame's Gate, with the hope of escaping to England; but the ship was stranded at Clontarf, and the Prelate retired to the little village of Artane, where he was surprised in the middle of the night by Silken Thomas's men, and, barefooted and almost naked, was dragged before the Geraldine, before whom he fell on his knees and besought him, for the love of God, to show mercy to a Christian and an Archbishop. Thomas, intending, as it is generally supposed, only to imprison the unfortunate Prelate, cried out to his followers in Irish, "Ber oum a buddagh." i. e. "Take away the clown," which phrase his attendants wilfully misconstruing, beat out the Archbishop's brains. Thus, this false churchman, who had been the perpetrator of sacrilege in being the ready tool of Henry VIII. in the spoliation of the monastic establishments and churches of England, became, by what almost seems a judgment of Providence, the victim of a most brutal and sanguinary sacrilegious outrage.

In the meantime, Lord Thomas, taking advantage of the citizens' permission to besiege the Castle, his captains proceeded to plant their falcons (a species of cannon) against its walls, and it is probable they would have taken it, had not one of the City Aldermen, Sir Francis Herbert, returned from London with a positive order from the King for the City, to which he promised speedy assistance, to break faith with Fitzgerald, and so aid the garrison of the Castle in driving off his forces from its walls. In revenge for this, Lord Thomas seized on the children† of the chief citizens who were at school in the country, and declared that he would place them in front of his men, exposed to the fire of the Castle artillery. But the citizens, with heroic devotedness, refused any negotiation with the rebellious chief, and prepared to defend, not only King's Castle, but their own fortifications, against the common enemy. Fitzgerald, apprised of the critical state of his affairs at Dublin, immediately hastened thither from Kilkenny, where he happened to be at the time, engaged in laying waste the territory of his hated foeman,‡ Ossory. In order to render the condition of the citizens as distressing as possible, he cut off the water, and diverted the springs and rivulets which supplied the City with fresh water; he also laid close siege to the Castle on the side of Ship-street, but he was quickly driven from that point by the wild-fire prepared by a man named White, which burned down his machines, and the thatched houses that sheltered his men. He then directed the assault on the side of Thomas-street, and endeavoured to enter the City at New Gate (which was then both a prison and a City gate); and the fire of his artillery having pierced the gate, he pressed the siege hotly, in the ardent hope that the City would immediately surrender; but Richard Staunton, the gaoler of New Gate seeing, through a loophole, one of the gunners levelling his piece, fired, and shot him in the head, and then had the hardihood to rush out by the postern, and strip the fallen soldier of his arms and accoutrements.

The citizens, inspirited by this gallant action, and convinced that many of the inhabitants of the Pale who were in Fitzgerald's army, were in secret loyal and faithful in their allegiance to the King a conviction strengthened by the circumstance that great numbers of the arrows shot over the City wall were unheaded, some of them even having letters attached to their ends, giving an account of their General's plans—resolved upon making a sortie. Accordingly, having, with a view to disheartening the enemy, spread a report that reinforcements had arrived from England, they rushed forth impetuously from the City Gates, and attacked the Geraldines with such vigour that the latter gave credence to the rumour relative to the succours from England, and took precipitately to flight, leaving one hundred Gallowglasses slain upon the field, and their falcon in the hands of the citizens. The hot Geraldine, cooled somewhat by this defeat, and being in want of artillery and ammunition, sought to come on terms with the citizens, and to that end proposed to them—1st, That his men who were in prison should be enlarged. 2nd, That the City should pay him £1000 in money, and £500 in wares; 3rd, That they should furnish him with ammunition and artillery; and 4th, That they should intercede with the King for the pardon of himself and of his followers.

The Mayor and Aldermen having considered these terms, replied to them respectively through the City Recorder. 1st, That they would enlarge the prisoners if he would deliver up their children; 2nd, That his wars had so impoverished them that they could spare neither money nor wares; 3rd, That if he intended to submit he had no need of ammunition or artillery, and if he did not that they would not furnish him with means to punish themselves. That, instead of artillery to withstand his Prince, they expected he would have requested parchment, whereon to engross his pardon; and 4th, They promised to intercede either by word or letter with the King, for his pardon.

It does not appear very clearly whether Fitzgerald accepted these conditions or not; for, though he abandoned the siege of Dublin, we find him shortly afterwards engaged in fortifying all the Geraldine Castles, especially that at Maynooth. *

He, also, about the same period, defeated at Clontarf a considerable force which had landed from England; and immediately afterwards set out to Ulster and Connaught, to urge the Irish Chieftains, O'Neil and O'Conor, to active co-operation with him. Whilst absent on this expedition, the new Lord Deputy, Sir William Skeffington, proclaimed him in Dublin, and at the high cross in Drogheda, a traitor, and proceeded to lay siege to his fortress at Maynooth. He planted his artillery on the Park Hill, at the northern side of the Castle, and, in the name of the King, summoned it to surrender; but to his summons of the garrison, as the old Chronicler has it, "a scoffing and ludibrious answer was returned, after the Irish manner."

The Lord Deputy, who, from the circumstance of his having been Master of the Ordnance, and perhaps, too, in derision of his being no very great adept in the use of artillery, was known in Ireland by the soubriquet of THE GUNNER, was not the man to reduce a garrison so brave and so well provided as that of Maynooth was known to be; and, in all probability, it would have held out until Lord Thomas could have returned to its relief, if it were not for the treachery of the Governor Christopher Paresc, who wrote to the Lord Deputy, intimating that he would betray the Castle on certain conditions. Skeffington accepted his offer; and, accordingly, the garrison, flushed with some success gained in a sally against the enemy, having indulged in strong potations, in which they were encouraged by Paresc, became in a short time dead drunk; and, while in that helpless condition, neglecting watch and ward, the traitorous signal was given, and the English scaled the walls, and put all the Geraldines to the sword, with the exception of two singing men, who, prostrating themselves before the Lord Deputy, sung a pleasing sonnet, called "Dulcis Amica," and purchased their lives by the melody of their strains. The booty obtained in the Castle was immense. The infamous Paresc—whose treachery was rendered still blacker by the fact of his being the foster-brother of the Lord Thomas—when the Castle was compelled in the hands of the English, presented himself before the Lord Deputy, in the expectation of a great reward, when the following colloquy took place between them.

"Master Paresc," said the Deputy, "thou hast certainly saved our Lord the King much charge, and many of his subjects' lives; but, that I may the better know to advise his Highness how to reward thee, would ascertain what the Lord Thomas Fitzgerald hath done thee?"

Paresc recounted, even to the most minute circumstances, all the favours which the Geraldine had conferred on him, from his youth upwards.

To which the Deputy replied: "And how, Paresc, couldst thou find it in thy heart to betray the Castle of so kind a Lord? Here," continued he, addressing an officer standing by, "here, Mr. Treasurer, pay down the money that he has covenanted for——and here, also, Executioner, without delay, as soon as the money is counted out, chop off his head."

"Oh," said Paresc, "had I known this, your Lordship should not have had the Castle so easily."

Whereupon, a by-stander, named Boice, who was a secret friend of Fitzgerald, cried out, in Irish, "Austraugh," i.e., "too late;" which occasioned the proverb, so long afterwards used in Ireland—"Too late, quoth Boice." †

In the meantime, Fitzgerald, by the assistance of O'Conor, had collected together a considerable army, which, however, became greatly thinned by desertions, as soon as it became known that he had lost his stronghold He maintained, notwithstanding, a Guerilla warfare, with great spirit and bravery, for some length of time; but he was ultimately obliged to surrender to the Lord-Deputy Gray, Viscount Grandy, who had succeeded to that office, on the death of Sir William Skeffington, and he rode side by side with Gray, in an apparently friendly manner, into Dublin.

Lord Thomas, who, in consequence of the death of his father in the Tower of London, brought on by sorrow at his son's misfortunes and his own, had succeeded by this time to the Earldom of Kildare, was, shortly after his surrender, forwarded, along with his uncles, to England; and they travelled through that country, on their way to London, free from restraint, until they arrived at Windsor—when they were arrested as prisoners, and, not long afterwards, were all hanged at Tyburn, on the 3rd of February, 1539. Thus ignominiously perished the redoubted Silken Thomas, who, for years, was alternately the scourge of Celt and Saxon, and whose career we have deemed of sufficient importance to warrant its being noticed at some length in an historical memoir of Dublin, with which City his family have been, for so many years, so intimately connected.

The sufferings of the good citizens of Dublin, and their gallant conduct on the occasion of the siege by Silken Thomas, were afterwards, gratefully remembered and rewarded by the King, who, by letters patent, dated Feb. 4, 1538, reciting "the siege, the famine, manifold wounds, and loss of blood suffered by the citizens, granted to them and their successors, for ever, the site, precincts, anbit, and all the estates lately belonging to the dissolved Monastery of All-Hallows,‡ near Dublin, lying in the Counties of Dublin, Meath, Louth, Kildare, Tipperary, Kilkenny, and elsewhere in Ireland, at the rent of four pounds four shillings and three farthings, in the name of the twentieth part of the annual value."

There were some other minor grants also made at the same time, for

* The ancestors of the present noble representative of the Ducal House of Leinster, which in modern times produced a scion true to the ancient reminiscences of his race, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, who died of wounds received on the occasion of his arrest for high treason, in the summer of 1798.

* From the circumstances of his horsemen wearing silk fringes and embroidery on their helmets.

† Amongst those seized were the three sons of Walter Fitzsimons, who had been Mayor of Dublin the foregoing year, and the children of James Stainhurst, who was afterwards an eminent lawyer, Recorder of Dublin, and Speaker of several Parliaments.

‡ Piers Butler, formerly Earl of Ormond and Ossory, but, at this period, only Earl of Ossory, the title of Ormond having been conferred on Sir Thomas Buller Carton, the present seat of the Leinster family.

† Paresc, in his avaricious anxiety to bargain for the largest sum possible, as the price of his treachery, had omitted to make any terms respecting his own personal safety, which he thought would be assured, as a matter of course.

‡ Now the site of Trinity College and its Park, situated in the very heart of the City; but, at that period, without the walls.

the repair and support of the fortifications and walls of the City, which had been damaged by Fitzgerald.

1535. George Brown, an Augustinian friar, of London, was elected Archbishop of Dublin, and embraced the new doctrines of the Reformation, this year. He was the first of the clergy in Ireland that went over to the new creed, and received, as the reward of his pliancy of conscience in acknowledging Henry VIII. as supreme head of the Church the investment of the Archbishop's pall, and a grant restoring to him the temporalities of the Archiepiscopal see. He was deprived of his see in 1554, by Queen Mary,* when a Queen's letter was issued for electing Hugh Curwen Archbishop in his stead.†

1540. This year there was a base silver coinage made at the Mint in the Castle of Dublin; and the exportation of it to England was prohibited by proclamation, under the penalty of forfeiture of treble the value, together with fine and imprisonment. The year following, King Henry, who, as well as his predecessors, had hitherto only borne the title of Lord of Ireland, assumed the title of King of Ireland. The inscription on the coin was altered accordingly; but the base metal was retained. Upon the proclamation of Henry VIII., as King of Ireland, all prisoners, except those for treason, wilful murder, rape, or debt, were set at liberty.

1550. On Easter Sunday, the Liturgy in the English tongue first read in Christ Church, in pursuance of an order to that effect from the King (Edward VI).

1558. In the month of November this year, Queen Elizabeth was proclaimed in Dublin by the Lord Justice Sir Henry Sidney, James Spencefield, Mayor, waiting on him to Christ Church.

During the early part of this reign the citizens of Dublin took an active part in the wars against Shane O'Neil.

1591. The Mayor and citizens having, the preceding year, granted the site of the dissolved Monastery of All Hallows, near the City, for erecting an University thereon, the first stone of the building was laid on the 13th of March this year, by Thomas Smith, Mayor, and the University was dedicated to the Holy and Undivided Trinity, under the title of Collegium Sancte et Individue Trinitatis ex fundatione Regine Elizabethe. It was opened two years afterwards, viz., in the year 1593.

1603. King James I. proclaimed in Dublin, April 5.

The early part of this reign, in Dublin, was marked, principally, by the persecutions by fine and imprisonment, of the chief Aldermen and eminent citizens, for refseing, on the subject of Divine Service, &c. &c. to act in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the 2nd Elizabeth, called the Statute of Uniformity.

1623, January 31. Proclamation issued requiring the Roman Catholic Clergy, regular and secular, to depart the kingdom in forty days, and forbidding all converse with them after that time.

During the wars between the armies of Charles I. and the native Irish, and those between the adherents of the Crown and Cromwell's troops, Dublin shared in the various success of the contending parties, until, in the year

1652, in the month of January, a party of general officers, desirous of the restoration of Charles II., seized the Castle in the name of the Commissioners of Government, and declared for a free Parliament. They afterwards, on the petition of the Mayor and Aldermen, summoned a convention, and, in the year following, accepted his Majesty's declaration from Breda, and the Restoration was accomplished, as far as Ireland was concerned. Charles II. shortly afterwards complimented the City of Dublin with a collar of SS., and, in 1665, the Chief Magistrate was honoured with the title of Lord Mayor, Sir Daniel Bellingham being the first that bore that character; and the King granted to the City £500 a-year for ever, to support that dignity, in lieu of a company of infantry, which he had bestowed on the Lord Mayor when he gave the collar of SS.

1688. March 12: James II. having landed at Kinsale, marched to Dublin, where he arrived on the 24th of the same month; and the next day summoned a Parliament, which continued to sit in King's Inns until the 20th of July. Among the enactments of this Parliament was a statute repealing the Act of Settlement.

1690. April 18: Sir Cloudesly Shovel took a frigate out of the harbour of Dublin, containing a large quantity of plate and valuables, belonging to the Roman Catholic nobility and gentry.

1697. The old parish of St. Michan's, which comprised all of the City that lay to the north of the Liffey, was divided into three separate parishes, viz., St. Michan's (New), St. Paul's, and St. Mary's; and in this year, also, Bartholomew Van Homrigh, the Lord Mayor, obtained a royal gift of a collar of SS., valued at about £1000, to be worn by the chief magistrate of the City, the former collar having been lost during the reign of James II.

1701. This year the celebrated equestrian statue of William III. in College Green, which was commenced in the previous year, was completed, and the inauguration solemnised with great pomp on the 1st of July, the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. The pedestal bears the inscription—

GULIELMO TERTIO,
MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ, FRANCIÆ, ET HIBERNIÆ,
REGI
OB RELIGIONEM CONSERVATUM
RESTITUTAS LEGES,
LIBERTATEM ASSERTAM,
CIVES DUBLINIENSIS HANC STATUAM POSUERE ‡

1704. The interest on money reduced from ten to eight per cent. Foundation of the Royal Barracks laid.

1720. A fearful tragedy was enacted in the course of this year in Dublin. A half-pay officer, Major Johnston, took his two sons, aged ten and twelve years respectively, into a room in his own house, and placing a loaded pistol into the hand of each, ordered them to fire. They obeyed, and shot each other dead on the spot; and their mother coming into the room upon hearing the report, her wretched husband stabbed the unfortunate woman to the heart, and then poniarded himself.

1729. Parliament sat in the Blue Coat Hospital; and an attempt was made to obtain the supplies for twenty-one years, but was defeated by a majority of one.

In the early part of this century a great many of the institutions and public buildings of the City were founded and erected: amongst them—Steven's Hospital, near James-street; the Market House, in Thomas-street; the Linen Hall; Jervis-street Infirmary; the Houses of Parliament, in College-green (foundation laid in 1729); the North Wall, St. Mark's Church, in Townshend-street; Bridewell, in James's-street; Ringsend Bridge; Mercer's Hospital; the Magazine in the Phœnix Park; St. Patrick's Hospital, founded by Dean Swift (commenced Anno 1745, and opened Anno 1757). Between the years 1711 and 1753 there were four thousand houses erected in the City and suburbs, which, allowing an increase of eight persons to each house, showed an increase of population amounting to 32,000 souls in forty-two years. The middle and close of the century, also, are equally marked by the great number and variety of public buildings erected in the City. Of these may be mentioned Essex-Bridge, finished in 1756, at a cost of £20,661 11s. 4d.; St. Thomas's Church, in Marlborough-street; St. Werburgh's Church, rebuilt; the new front of Trinity College; Light-House in Poolbeg; Queen's Bridge; Grand Canal begun, near the City Basin, Anno 1765; Hibernian Society for the Support, Education, &c., of Soldiers' Children in Ireland.

1768. February 16, Lord Viscount Townshend, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, gave the Royal Assent to an Act of Parliament, limiting the duration of Parliament to eight years.

1769. Foundations of the Royal Exchange laid, on Cork Hill: opened in 1779.

1773. Penny Post, for the City and a circuit of four miles, established.

1775. Birmingham Tower in the Castle rebuilt.

1776. Foundations of King's Inns laid: opened 1784.

1781. The Custom-House on the North Wall commenced: opened Nov. 7, 1791.

1782. April 16, the Irish Parliament voted its independence and made a declaration of its constitutional rights.

1783. Feb. 5, Order of St. Patrick instituted.

March 17, First instalment of Knights-Companions of that illustrious Order held in St. Patrick's Cathedral; his Excellency George Nugent Grenville Temple, Earl Temple, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Grand Master.

June 25, Bank of Ireland established by Act of Parliament: opened in St. Mary's Abbey.

1786. Jan. 28, Royal Irish Academy incorporated by Letters Patent. —The first stone of the Four Courts, on Inns' Quay, laid, by Charles Manners, Duke of Rutland, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in presence of the Judges, King's Counsel, &c.

1787. On the 24th of October, this year, died, in Dublin, His Excellency the Duke of Rutland, Lord-Lieutenant; and, on the 17th of November, a grand funeral procession accompanied his remains to the water-side, on their way to England.

1789. Feb. 25, Deputies from both Houses of Parliament despatched to London, to present an address to the Prince of Wales, praying his Royal Highness to accept the Regency of Ireland, without any restriction.

1791. First stone of Carlisle Bridge laid by the Right Honourable John Beresford, First Commissioner of his Majesty's Revenue.

1796. July 29, Commercial Buildings begun: incorporated by Royal Charter Jan. 1st, 1798.

1798. The chief feature of the chapter of events this year is

THE REBELLION.

In the gloomy picture which the history of English misrule in Ireland presents, the events of the year "98" stand forth in prominent relief of the deepest darkness, figuring to the startled imagination an amount of crushing oppression, black treachery, and sanguinary cruelty on the one hand, and of ineffectual resistance, miserable suffering, and frenzied retaliation on the other, that shocks the soul and makes it instinctively recoil from the further contemplation of the depicted epoch, from an irrepressible presentiment that the completion of the frightful details, representing the merciless victors' exultant revenge and blood-traced persecution, and the woe, the heart sinking, and the tortures of the wretched vanquished, is too horrible for the consideration of other than such demoniacal spirits as those who formed the majority of the rulers of Ireland at that calamitous period, and of their adherents—a period when, to use the words of one of the ablest and most impartial writers of the present day,* "the ascendancy party marked out its political opponents as covert traitors who were to be legally removed at a convenient opportunity. It (i. e. the ascendancy party) panted only for the exercise of "that vigour beyond the law" which was the privilege of its exclusive loyalty. Its victories were not over the least influential, the least estimable, the most insignificant of the opposing party. The public service was made the pretext for the destruction of opponents, and with these they filled the prisons and provosts of Ireland."

At such a time, and with such a spirit abroad, it is easy to see that the concentrated virulence of despotism most exhibited itself at the seat of Government, Dublin. To present our readers with the merest outline of the disastrous aspect of the capital City during those its direst days of calamity, would, however, far exceed the limits to which in this skeleton Memoir we are restricted.

Let it suffice for us to indicate some few of those marks and tokens which always discover, even where other means of information are wanting, the existence of barbarous and sanguinary despotism; but which, in a case like the present, wherein the most copious historical evidence abounds, may merely be taken as testimony, satisfactory enough in limine. Let those who would seek a full and detailed view of the Political History of Dublin in the year 1798, consult the numerous works which have been written on the Irish Rebellion of that year, and none more confidently than "The United Irishmen—their Lives and Times," by Dr. Madden—a work which unites the most extraordinary ability and indefatigable research, with the strictest impartiality; and to which we will refer for those marks and tokens to which we have adverted—viz., official bribery, corruption and extortion, treachery, the application of torture, espionage, and delation, perfected on the hideous model which the great philosophic annalist and historian, Tacitus, tells us spread woe, death, and desolation through Imperial Rome, under the government of the monster Tiberius, and his Minister Sejanus. We know of no parallel in modern history to the system which nurtured into infamous existence the delatores of Tiberius's reign, but that which the Town-Major of Dublin, Henry Charles Sirr, organized in the latter city from the commencement of the year 1797 to the close of the year 1803. Dr. Madden, in the work we have referred to, speaking of this period, says:—"His (Major Sirr's) services chiefly consisted in organising and maintaining a band of wretches, who were employed at the assizes throughout the country, but especially in the vicinity of Dublin, as informers. They were known to the people by the name of the 'Battalion of Testimony.'" * * * * * "From the year 1796 to 1800, a set of miscreants, steeped in crime, sunk in debauchery, prone to violence, and reckless of character, constituted what was called 'The Major's People.' A number of these wretches were domiciled within the gates of the Castle, where there were regular places of entertainment allotted for them, contiguous to the Viceroy's Palace. For another company of them a house was allotted, opposite Kilmainham Gaol, familiarly known to the people by the name of the 'Stag House;' and for one batch of them, who could not be trusted with liberty, there was one of the yards of that prison and the surrounding cells assigned to them, which is still called the 'Stag Yard.' These persons were considered under the immediate protection of Majors Sirr, Swan, and Sandys, and to interfere with them in the course of their duties as spies or witnesses, was to incur the vengeance of their redoubtable patrons.

"When the country was broken down sufficiently in strength and spirit to effect the union, these men were turned adrift on society. A great many of them took to desperate courses, and, acting under the dominion of violent passions, they came to violent ends." * * * *

"But their superiors in rank, fortune, and education, their employers and accomplices who superintended their performances in the witness-box and at the triangles, who witnessed and directed their infliction of the tortures of the pitch-cap and the taws, still lived without reproach, but it could not be without remorse."

Of Sirr's band of informers the celebrated Curran, the intrepid and eloquent defender of his persecuted unfortunate countrymen, gives the following forcible description in his speech on the trial of Peter Finnerty, in 1797, quoted in the same work. "I speak not now of the public proclamations for informing, with a promise of secrecy and extravagant reward! I speak not of those unfortunate wretches who have been so often transferred from the table to the dock and from the dock to the pillory! I speak of what your own eyes have seen day after day during the course of this commission while you attended this court: the number of horrid miscreants who acknowledged, upon their oaths, that they had come from the seat of Government—from the very chambers of the Castle—where they had been worked upon by the fear of death and the hopes of compensation, to give evidence against their fellows; that the mild, the wholesome, and merciful councils of this Government are holden over these catacombs of living death, where the wretch that is buried a Man lies till his heart has time to fester and dissolve and then is dug up an Informer.

"Is this a picture created by a hag-ridden fancy, or is it a fact? Have you not seen him, after his resurrection from that tomb, make his appearance upon your table, the living image of life and death, and the supreme arbiter of both?—Have you not marked, when he entered, how the stormy wave of the multitude retired at his approach?—Have you not seen how the human heart bowed to the awful supremacy of his power, in the undissembled homage of deferential horror? How his glance, like the lightning of Heaven, seemed to rive the body of the accused, and mark it for the grave, while his voice warned the devoted wretch of woe and death;—a death which no innocence can escape, no art elude, no force resist, no antidote prevent? There was an antidote—a juror's oath! But even that adamantine chain, which bound the integrity of man to the Throne of Eternal Justice, is solved and molten by the breath which issues from the mouth of the informer: conscience swings from her moorings—the appalled and affrighted juror speaks what his soul abhors; and consults his own safety in the surrender of the victim.

——— Et quæ sibi quisque timebat
Unius in miseri exitium conversa tulere.

Informers are worshipped in the Temple of Justice, even as the Devil has been worshipped by Pagans and savages: even so, in this wicked country, is the informer an object of judicial idolatry—even so, is he soothed by the music of human groans—even so, is he placated and incensed by the fames and by the blood of human sacrifices." *

Dr. Madden, in introducing the following catalogue of informers, justly observes—"The extent to which the system of espionage was carried on, will now hardly be thought credible.

"In Sept., 1797, a Mr. Watkins, in the Castle, dicted Messrs. Newell Murdock, Lowry, Hayes, Kane, Harper, Shaw, O'Brien, McDermott, Kavanagh.

"Jan., 1798. Wheatley, Mitchell, Grey, Chapman, Baynsham, and Travers were on the Major's list, at one guinea a-week each.

"April 7, 1798. Major Sirr employed Doran, McAllister, and Magrath, attending the Assizes.

"Jan., 1799. Grey, Mitchell, Bourke, O'Neil, Lindsay, and Chambers, were the Major's people.

"July, 1800. Major Sirr paid off half-a-dozen of the battalion—Edward Boyle, Michael Fagan, Michael Higgins, Dan. Gore, James Murphy, John Kearney.

"Feb., 1801. Wheatley was paid off.

"March, 1801. Major Sirr lost the services of James O'Brien, committed on a charge of murder.

"July, 1801. Chapman, in Cork, was paid off, after one year and one month's service.

"August, 1801. Edward Lennon was sent "out of town," by Mr. Trevor.

"Oct., 1801. Haslon was employed to bury Edward Lennon.

"Dec., 1801. Campbell was paid for the use of his rooms in the Castle, for Conlan and Hughes; and Major Sirr discharged two men on his list, who were employed in the country, at one guinea each.

"Feb., 1802. Major Sirr came to a final settlement with John Beckett, Mrs. Lennon, Mrs. Dunn, Charles McGowran, John Kearney, and Dan. Carr, in full of their claims.

'In the latter part of the same month, Major Sirr settled, also, with Mrs. O'Brien, John Neil, Francis Devlin, John Coughlan, and J. H. Jackson.

"June, 1802. Coleman was settled with, in full of all claims.

"Oct., 1802. John Conlan and E. O'Neil were discharged.

"May, 1803. Richard Chapman was paid off, and the Major's people then were Boyle, Carrell, Smith, and Farrell.

'Oct., 1803. Dr. Trevor paid off Ryan and Mahaffy; and Major Sirr settled with Condon, for informing against Howley.

"Nov., 1803. The Major's battalion had dwindled down to Carroll, Boylan, and a few minor miscreants; and, at the end of that month they likewise were paid off; and the Major appears to have been com-

* Harris's M.S Collections, Vol. IV., quoted by Whitelaw.
† Document No. XXIX., Chief Remb Office.—Whitelaw.
‡ i. e. "To William the Third, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, this Statue the Citizens of Dublin have erected on account of Religion Preserved, Laws Restored, Liberty Asserted."
This statue, so celebrated for the exhibitions of intolerant party feeling and bigotry which were made around it in the palmy days of the "Ascendancy," was blown from its pedestal in the spring of the year 1836, by means of gunpowder or some other explosive materials applied to it during the night. It was subsequently remounted at the expense of the Corporation; and after the introduction of corporate reform a few years ago, the bare of the Boyne Water and his steed were bronsed all over, and thus the obnoxious colours of orange and blue, with which both were decked before that change, were put out of sight, and this (for many years) brasen image of discord was reduced to what it should have ever been, a mere ornamental erection, in one of the handsomest streets of Europe.

* R. R. Madden, M.D.

* Ridgeway's Report, p. 84.

pelled to "abate his train," and to have experienced the fate of Lear a the hands of Generil."*

One extract more, illustrative of the "reign of terror" which prevailed in Dublin in 1798:—"Many persons are still living (1842) who have seen Major Sirr, accompanied by O'Brien† and a band of his confederates passing through the public thoroughfares in quest of victims; and their descriptions still vividly depict the horror and apprehension with which he and they were regarded, and unfold instances of the brutal and audacious spirit in which their missions were performed. A gentleman of distinction in our City, lately described to the writer scenes which he beheld in the open air, during the period to which we are now alluding. He said that he remembered, upon one particular occasion, having seen Major Sirr come out of the Lower Castle Gate, accompanied by O'Brien and a few others, and then proceed along Dame-street; that a gentleman of a distinguished mien, and evidently a stranger, attracted by the singular appearance of the party, stopped, and with an indication of surprise, regarded them as they went by him. The manner of the stranger attracted the notice of O'Brien, who, darting from his place in the group, prostrated the gentleman upon the pavement with a well-directed blow.

"Major Sirr, hearing the noise, turned round, and seizing O'Brien, thrust him back to his place again, and then proceeded onward without farther noticing the audacity of his subordinate.

"The crowd gathered about the indignant gentleman, and raised him from the ground; he spoke of the laws, and said something of redress, but the silent auditors only shook their heads, and passed away." * *

"The floggings in the Castle-yard were frequently attended by O'Brien and his gang: and the victims, while writhing under the lash, were treated by them with brutal jests and vulgar ribaldry."

Abandoned a helpless prey to the fangs of such monsters, the unfortunate citizens of Dublin suffered more than any persons who have not not been eye-witnesses, or who have not heard, as the writer has, from the lips of those who had been eye-witnesses, a detailed relation of the atrocities which each succeeding day brought forth afresh, can, at the present time, form a conception of, or believe. Amidst the cries of torture, and shrieks of agony, with which the ill-fated City rung in every quarter, spoliation and robbery of the most valuable effects were most openly carried on by Sirr, and Sandys, the Brigade Major of the garrison of Dublin, at the residences and establishments of their victims, while the latter were pining away in some loathsome dungeon, or undergoing the torture of the pitch-cap or the cat-o'nine-tails. Plate, pictures, jewels, wine, and everything else of value that was portable, were rapaciously pounced upon, and carried off by those harpies, while ransacking the houses of the suspected, under pretence of searching for treasonable papers, documents, arms, &c.‡

Without unnecessarily dwelling on this history of horrors, we may before passing on from the year "98," advert to the fate of the most distinguished in rank of the popular leaders of that period—Lord Edward Fitzgerald, the brother of the Duke of Leinster. On Saturday, the 19th of May in this year, he was arrested by Sirr and his creatures, in the house of Nicholas Murphy, a grocer, No. 153, Thomas-street, where he was, at the time, in concealment, from the pursuit of the authorities, who had offered £1000 reward for his apprehension. It was about seven o'clock in the evening when Majors Swan and Sirr, and their party, surprised Lord Edward. He was in bed at the time, but, on perceiving his enemies, he sprang up, and, with a dagger which he carried about him, bravely defended himself with the lion-like spirit of a true Geraldine. He was at last overpowered, not, however, till he had severely wounded his adversaries, and was conveyed to Newgate, where he died the 3rd of June following, of the wounds he had received in the encounter.

In closing this brief notice of the occurrences of 1798, we may observe that, in calling up for a moment before the view of the present age, the dark scenes which were then enacted by men in power, in the name of Constitutional Government, our object has been, not to rake up reminiscences calculated to renew long-forgotten animosities, but to denounce those enormities to the everlasting execration of the English people, whose ignorance, at the time, can alone account for the silence of public opinion on the subject, in the belief that by no means, more effectually than by their denunciation, can the recurrence of such evils be prevented.

1800. March 27: The Houses of Lords and Commons waited on the Lord-Lieutenant at the Castle, with the articles of Union.

Dec. 1. Inspection of Irish Members made to sit in the Imperial Parliament.

1801. Jan. 1.: The Imperial United Standard first displayed upon Bedford Tower, Dublin Castle, in consequence of the act of Legislative Union having come into operation.

1803. An insurrectionary commotion, scarcely worthy the name of rebellion, burst forth in the neighbourhood of Thomas-street, on the evening of the 23rd July this year, at the head of which was Robert Emmet, the younger brother of Thomas Addis Emmet, who had been expatriated in the Rebellion of 1798. During the short time that the riotous sway of the mob was predominant in the streets, Lord Kilwarden, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, happened to pass through Thomas-street in his carriage, which was mistaken by the people for that of the Commander-in-Chief. The equipage was stopped, and an attack upon its inmates commenced by the mob, when Lord Kilwarden, thinking to save his life by making himself known, called out to the insurgents—"It is Kilwarden, the Chief Justice"—a name that was dear to all from his well-merited character for justice and mercy on the Bench. The words "Chief Justice" were all that reached the ears of the infuriated pike-men; they immediately took him for Lord Carlton, the Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, who was especially obnoxious to the people on account of his having presided at the trial of his fellow townsmen, the two brothers Henry and John Sheares, who were hanged during the previous rebellion, and whose guardian, it was generally said and believed (but erroneously), he had been appointed by the will of their father, and piked him to death on the spot.

This tumultuous rising was soon suppressed; and Emmet, with some of the parties chiefly implicated in the conspiracy, was subsequently apprehended, and having been brought to trial, was condemned and executed.

Robert Emmet was a generous, enthusiastic, high-spirited, but rash young man. Without possessing the superior intellect of his brother, he was an accomplished scholar, and an eloquent and graceful speaker: gifted with brilliant talents, and possessed of captivating manners, he was well suited to adorn society; but he was not the man fitted to head an insurrection. Poetry and romance have flung a halo of interest around his memory, and while the beautiful verses of Moore, beginning and Washington Irving's exquisite sketch of the heart-broken Miss Curran are read, the name of Robert Emmet will not be forgotten.

She's far from the land where her young hero sleeps;

And with this short narrative we purpose closing the "Historic Annals of the City of Dublin."

THE OLD CITY WALLS, THEIR EXTENT, SUBURBS, GROWTH AND INCREASE OF THE CITY WITHOUT THE WALLS, &c. &c.

HISTORIANS all agree that the ancient walls and fortifications about Dublin were built by the Ostmen or Danes in the ninth century; and that they were of sufficient strength to protect the town is shown by the fact, that in the year 1000, when Melaghlin, the Irish King, devastated the country up to the very walls of Dublin, and reduced the suburbs to ashes, he was unable to make any impression on the City, by reason of the strength of its walls and the forts connected with them.

Although at that time, as at present, the chief City in the kingdom, it must have been, according to modern notions, a very insignificant place, both as regards extent and the description of buildings of which it was composed, when we find that, according to the maps and plans published so late even as the year 1610, the City walls, including those of the Castle, were little more than an Irish mile in their entire length, beginning at the foot of Bridge-street on the Quay, and extending in an irregular circuit, by Bridge-street, St. Audeon's Church, the end of Nicholas-street, on to Werburgh-street, near St. Werburgh's Church, round by the Castle walls at Ship-street, and thence to the foot of Corkhill and Parliament-street, where they met the River again close to where Essex Bridge now stands, and from that point proceeded along the River banks, which are now occupied by Essex Quay, Wood Quay, and Merchants Quay, to their termination at Bridge-street; and, with respect to the buildings, that it was not till about the period of the reign of Queen Elizabeth that houses in any respect of a durable or convenient description began to be erected.

Even those houses were built of timber, in what was known as the cage-work style. One of those quaint old-fashioned erections is mentioned in his History by Whitelaw, as having been pulled down in 1745, to make room for new houses. It stood in Cooke-street, and on an oak beam which ran along the whole length of the front over the door, the following inscription was cut in large capital letters—

QUI FECISTI CŒLUM ET TERRAM BENEDIC DOMUM ISTAM, QUAM JOHANNES LUTREL ET JOHANA NEI CONSTRUI FECERUNT A.D. 1580, ET ANNO REGNI REGINÆ ELIZABETHÆ 22.*

At this period, it was only castles, towers, churches, monasteries, and other buildings appropriated to religious or charitable purposes, that were built of stone or brick.

In the reign of James I., when some little respite from war was experienced, after the suppression of the rebellion of the Earl of Tyrone, the inhabitants of Dublin began to build their residences of stone and bricks, and cover them with slates or tiles.

The streets were narrow and irregular, and the general aspect of the town by no means such as to lead to the expectation that it would, in little more than a century and a half, become that large, magnificent, and beautiful city, which, at the present time, ranks with the first capitals of Europe, both as to extent and the splendour of its streets and public buildings.

A glance at the plan of Dublin, about the period we have referred to—viz. A.D. 1610—and at that of the modern City of Dublin, will at once exhibit the vast increase which has taken place in its dimensions, without the old walls, since that period. In the joint history of Warburton and Whitelaw, it is said—"At that time (Anno 1610) the River Liffey was not embanked by quays on the north side, and only a part of it on the south. The ground now occupied by the new Custom House, the Bachelor's Walk, the two Ormond Quays—east and west of Essex Bridge, Inns' Quay, Arran Quay, Ellis's and Pembroke's Quays—was then covered with ooze and overflowed by the tides, except a small part about the King's Inns, which had been a monastery of Dominican friars. The entire of the City, on the north side of the river, and which at that time was called Ostman Town, and corruptly Oxmantown, was confined between the religious foundation of St. Mary's Abbey on the east, and Church Street (so denominated from St. Michan's Church) on the west, and extending nearly from Pill Lane to the site of the present New Gaol.† Of course the space from Church Street to the Barracks, and Arbour Hill on the west, and from Mary's Abbey to the new Custom House and Ballyburgh Bridge on the east and north-east, has been added since 1610; and to the northward, Grange-Gorman, Stoneybatter, and Glasmanogue, now united to the City, were then villages at some distance from it; in the latter of which places the Sheriffs of Dublin have been known to hold their courts in the times of the plague, and particularly in the year 1575, as being remote from the City. Rutland and Mountjoy Squares, with a variety of spacious and elegant streets occupy the north-eastern part of this tract.

On the south side of the Liffey the City has been likewise much enlarged since the year 1610. The space now occupied by Crane-lane Essex-street, Sycamore-alley, Temple-bar, Fleet-street, Aston's Quay was then under the dominion of the water; and long after that period George's Quay, the City Quay, Sir John Rogerson's Quay, with many acres of ground between the lower end of Town's-end-street and Ring's-end-bridge, and now either destined for new streets,* or occupied by the Grand Canal Docks, have been recovered from that element.

Dame-street† contained then only a short range of buildings on the north side, at a small distance from the river, and extended no farther than to the precincts of the Augustine Monastery, not three hundred feet in length, opposite to the end of George's-lane. The dissolution of that religious house made room for enlarging the City eastward, the precincts whereof were first converted into gentlemen's houses and gardens such as the Lord Chancellor Eustace's, John Crowe's, and others, which were again demolished and converted into several streets, as Eustace-street, Fownes's-street, Crow-street, at the end of which near, Temple-bar was afterwards erected the Theatre Royal,‡ on the place where the Monastery formerly stood. The parts opposite to the then Dame-street were principally taken up by St. Andrew's Church and churchyard, which, at that time, stood very near to Dame's-gate, and on a part of the site of that church and church-yard, Castle-lane and the houses adjoining were laid out, and on the remainder the Castle-market§ was built by Alderman William Fownes and Mr. Thomas Porley, as late as the year 1704.

The Church of St. Andrew was before that time removed further eastward, near the College, where it now stands. George's-lane was nearly the extent of the suburbs to the east, and was then but partially built and thinly inhabited; though we are told by Mr. Stanihurst ‖ "that it was anciently a place of more consequence, but that the inhabitants thereof being daily and hourly molested and preyed on by their prolling mountain neighbours, were forced to suffer their buildings to fall into decay, and to embay themselves within the City walls." The same writer adds:—"That a place therein (called at the time of his giving that account in 1586), Collet's-inn, was, in ancient times, the seat of the King's Exchequer, but that once, the Baron, sitting in it solemnly and carelessly, the Irish laid hold of the opportunity, rushed in, surprised the unarmed multitude, slew all that fell under their power, and ransacked the King's treasure; after which mishap the Exchequer was removed from thence into a place of greater security." That author gives no account when this accident happened; but it appears from records, that the site of the old Exchequer was on the 28th of July, 36 Edw. III. (1362), granted in custodium to the Prior and Friars of the Augustinian order in Dublin (which lay in the neighbourhood of it), for the profits whereof, they accounted in the 17th year of Richard II. (1393), as appears by a pipe-roll of that year in Birmingham Tower. The place, nevertheless, though abandoned as to its original use, retained the name of Exchequer, which it communicated to a lane called Chequer-lane, now Exchequer-street,¶ built in the year 1610, and extending from George's-lane, now Great George's-street, to Grafton-street. Stanihurst proceeds—"That there was in that lane (namely, George's-lane) a chappell dedicated to St. George likely to have been founded by some worthy Knight of the Garter, that the Mayor with his brethren was accustomed, with great triumph and pageants, yearlie on St. George's Feast, to repair to that chappell, and there to offer; but that the chappell had beene of late razed, and the stones thereof, by consent of the Assemblie, turned to a common oven, converting the ancient monument of a doutie, adventurous, and holie knight to the coal-rake sweeping of a puf-loafe baker."

This chapel was under the care and government of a Master and Wardens, and supported chiefly by oblations; for which reason the Parliament thought proper to take it under its protection, and by a statute†† provided, "That whatever person in the county of Dublin should make any prey upon the Irish enemies, exceeding forty cows, should deliver one cow or five shillings in money towards the reparation of St. George's Chapell, in Dublin; and an action was given for the recovery of the same to the Master and Wardens thereof."

"A village called Hogges lay without the City walls and eastward George's-lane, in which a nunnery, under the invocation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded by Dermot MacMurrough, King of Leinster, about the year 1146, before the arrival of the English. * * * This village is mentioned in several early Charters, particularly in one made about the year 1290, by Sir Jeffery de Constantin, to the Abbey of Tristernagh, in the county of Westmeath, whereby he grants to the said abbey one messuage without the walls of Dublin, near the village of Hogges, the footsteps or traces of the name whereof still remain in a street called Hogg-hill; and Hogg-n-green, whereon St. Andrew's Church now stands, which took up a large space of ground extending to the River Liffey, is often mentioned by the Irish historians as the common place for the execution of criminals, among whom to give one instance:—Adam Duff O'Toole was, in the year 1327, burned here for heresy and blasphemy. Part of this green is now called College-green, from a college founded there by Queen Elizabeth, in the latter end of the sixteenth century, on the site of the Monastery of All Saints. The whole Green is now taken up by buildings; though, at the period mentioned, scarce anything but the little village of Hogges, the sites of the said religious houses, a Bridewell for the reception of vagrants, and an hospital where the Bank of Ireland now stands, were to be seen. * * *

"On the east and south of George's-lane (the Churches of St. Peter and St. Stephen and the College excepted), little was to be seen but enclosed fields. Stephen's Green was then so called, and took its name from the neighbourhood of the Church of St. Stephen, but no improvements were on it; nor was there then any open street or passage from thence to the College but round through George's-lane. A part of Kevin's-street was then built, and some residentiary houses of the prebendaries and canons of the Cathedral of St. Patrick, together with

---

* Some idea may be formed of the means which were taken to get up a rebellion, when we find the sums paid from the 31st of August, 1797, to Sept. 30, 1801, to spies, informers, zealous military officers, et hoc genus omne, as shown by the "account of secret service money, applied in detecting treasonable conspiracies, pursuant to the provisions of the Civil List Act of 1793," lodged in the Treasury, and verified by the affidavit of Mr. Secretary Cooke,—

	£	s.	d.
Amounted to	38,419	8	0
And from Sept. 30, 1801, to March, 1804	15,128	5	1
Total	£53,547	13	1

While the public money was thus squandered upon the miscreants who were engaged either in denouncing victims to loyal vengeance, or acting as executioners in the infliction of it upon them, it must be little matter of surprise to find the inventive faculties of the one, and the bloodthirsty cruelty of the other, stimulated into extraordinary activity. As long as the Government supplied money, victims were found in abundance.

† The Major's Chef de Bataillon. He was subsequently hanged for a brutal murder.

‡ The details of the well-concerted system of oppression and spoliation carried on by Sirr, Sandys, and their myrmidons, would almost pass belief, if they were not so well proved by such authenticated instances as those of Revey, the brewer whose case, as detailed in open Court, by Curran, in the presence of Sandys, is a fair illustration of that nefarious system; of McGowran, the grocer, of Patrick-street, whose crime was that of having a cellar of wine strongly suspected of being long in bottle, and whose liberation cost him a country house at Tallagh, and the forfeiture of nearly all his property; and of others. The hopes and fears of the unfortunates who fell into the Major's clutches were worked on while in prison by such men as the infamous O'Brien, or, as he was generally called, Jemmy O'Brien; and frequently, when, in the expectation of deliverance, they gave up the last particle of property remaining to them, they were, by a refinement in cruelty, after having been mocked with hopes of freedom held out to them, handed over to the tender mercies of a court-martial. Proclamations were issued, inviting informers to appear and give evidence against them, and, upon the perjured testimony of such witnesses, many of whom offered their services in order to escape the felon's death that awaited them, these wretched men were convicted, and sentenced to the torture of the lash, and then to the gallows.

* TRANSLATION.—Thou who madest the Heavens and the Earth bless this House, which John Lutrel and Joan caused to be built in the year of the Lord 1580, and in the year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth 22.

† New-Gate, in Green-street.

* This space is now almost entirely covered with streets.—1846.

† Now one of the most spacious and beautiful of the many beautiful streets with which Dublin abounds.

‡ Crow-street Theatre so famous in theatrical annals for the many eminent actors who first distinguished themselves there has been long since pulled down, and the site is now occupied by the Apothecaries' School of Medicine. There is a hat manufactory contiguous to the spot, which is said to have been that part of the theatre occupied by the stage and scene rooms.

§ Removed in 1753 to the present site between Great George's-street South, and William-street.

‖ Description of Ireland in Hollingshed, page 23.

¶ At present called Wicklow-street.

 Description of Ireland, in Hollingshed, page 23.

†† Chancery Rolls, 26 Hen. VI., No. 19.

the Archbishop's Palace. In short, George's-lane, St. Steven's-street, with Cross, now Golden-lane, to its termination in Bride-street, may be considered as marking the eastern limits of Dublin in 1610; and, of course, our two great squares, St. Steven's Green and Merrion Square, with a multitude of streets to the eastward of this line, and occupying a space nearly equal to half the entire area of the southern portion of the City, appear to be accessions since that period.

"To the westward, Thomas-street, being part of the great western avenue to the City, appears to have been built quite to James's Gate, but the space between it and the river, and extending from the City wall about Mestinghouse-yard to Watling-street, was then an open space, watered by a stream, on which were a few mill-sites. Here, contiguous to Ormond, now Wormwood Gate, were the mills of Mullin-a-cac, with New-row and Tennis Court-lane, now called John's-street, from the adjoining Priory of St. John the Baptist.

"On the South of the City Wall, Francis-street, Patrick-street, and Ship, then called Sheep-street, appear to have been entirely built, with small portions of New-street, St. Kevin's-street, and the Coomb; and these, with a few intermingled sites of churches and religious houses, seem to have been the only objects to arrest the attention in that extensive and populous tract now usually denominated The Liberty, a very small portion of which, notwithstanding its present ruinous aspect, existed in 1610."

GENERAL ASPECT OF DUBLIN: ITS BAY, SQUARES, STREETS, PUBLIC BUILDINGS, &c. &c.

Dublin, the second city in the British empire, with respect to rank, importance, and extent, is, confessedly, the first in general beauty of appearance; for, though some of the streets of London exhibit many private mansions of superior architectural pretensions to anything of the kind to be met with in Dublin, yet it must be admitted that, taken as a whole, the latter city presents greater beauty of aspect than the main features of even "rich, luxurious, Babylonic London" display.

It is situated in the Province of Leinster, in lat. 53 deg. 21 min. north, and 6 deg. 10 min. west from London, at the mouth of the River Liffey, which runs directly through the centre of the City, from west to east, and joins the waters of the sea at the head of a bay, which, for the depth and sweep of its arch, and the picturesque scenery of its shores, has but few rivals. The view which greets the eye of one entering and sailing up the Bay of Dublin, when seen in favourable weather, is lovely in the highest degree, and has been often compared to that presented by the Bay of Naples, but though many of the concomitants of climate, scenery, and classic associations, which add so much to the attractions of the Bay of Naples, are wanting to the Bay of Dublin, and the comparison, therefore, cannot be justly sustained; yet, it may be fairly stated, that Dublin Bay fully merits all the admiration which it has excited. On the northern side, the Headland of Howth * boldly rises in prominent relief, at the extreme point of the Bay; the line of shore thence, as it nears the City, gradually softens down, until it acquires the character of flat immediately about the water's edge, and is studded in every direction with groups of whitewashed cottages, while the background, clad in Ireland's richest verdure, and adorned with groves and elegant villas, rises in gentle eminences to the horizon. On the south side, the Wicklow and Dublin Mountains bound the view at the outer extremity of the line; while Ireland, towards the City, the eye ranges over an elevated country, whose undulating surface presents a diversified succession of woodlands, lawns, rich pastures, extensive domains, and thickly-grouped villas, with their ornamental grounds, forming a landscape of exquisite beauty, in which the dark, sombre hues of the clustered trees unite in picturesque harmony with the ever-varying tints of "the fancy colour of the Divinity"—green—the green of "the Emerald Isle."

The width of the Bay, across the chord of the arc, from Howth Head to Dalkey Isle, is about seven miles English. The navigation being somewhat difficult and dangerous, on account of two sand banks, called the North and South Bulls, which occur at the mouth of the Liffey, a pier, to protect the Channel from being choked up with shifting sands, has been constructed, running from Ringsend eastward into the Bay upwards of three miles. At the extremity of this pier is a Lighthouse, very strongly built of hewn granite. It was commenced in the year 1761, after the designs of Mr. Smith, the architect, who superintended the progress of the work to its completion in 1768. When the tide has risen to half its height, so as to afford enough of water for vessels to enter the harbour, a flag is hoisted on the top of this lighthouse, where it is continued until the tide has half ebbed, when it is taken down. At night, for the same purpose, a small light is exhibited under the large one during the same interval.

On the pier also, at a short distance from its commencement, stands he Pigeon-House Fort, which contains barracks for the accommodation of a small portion of the garrison. Although the Bay, from the manifold improvements which have been effected in its channel, and from the protection afforded by the pier, admits of vessels of the largest tonnage passing up and entering the Liffey, yet all the mail-steamers to and from England, land the mails and their passengers at Kingstown,† on the south side of the Bay, within about seven miles of the City, where there is a capacious and secure harbour, with deep water at all times, irrespective of the tide; and as the terminus of the Kingstown Railway—by which the traveller is conveyed in a few minutes into the heart of Dublin—is situated within a few paces of the point of landing, much time is gained by the arrangement; though it must be confessed the view of one of nature's finest panoramas is forfeited by not going up the Bay.

The usual, every-day appearance of the streets of Dublin differs but little from that of any other large city or town. A modern and intelligent tourist‡ describes his first impressions, on perambulating the town, thus:—

"I should say of the street population of the best quarters of Dublin, that it differs little from that of London; and that, but for the multitude of jaunting-cars, which are peculiar to the country, one set down at Sackville or Grafton-street, would scarcely perceive anything unEnglish in the aspect of the population. But, there are differences, which a somewhat closer observation will detect. The ladies dress more gaily, gentlemen not quite so well. Beggars, if not greatly more numerous than in London, are generally more ragged and miserable-looking. But, above all, there is less an air of business than among the street popular on of London. There is a greater proportion of loungers; and a less number of those whose quick step and eager look bespeak occupation, and its rewards. Need I say that there is also a difference between English and Irish physiognomy—but there is no describing the difference. It exists, however, and will be remarked by the stranger, even on a very cursory glance; and certainly not to the disadvantage of the Irish females, whose generally high foreheads and intellectual expression were not thrown away upon me."

Those observations contain much that is correct and true.

The population is about 280,000.

Of the public buildings of Dublin, that which first claims attention, from the importance of the historic associations connected with it, and from its being, at the present time, the town residence of the Viceroy, is

THE CASTLE.

When the Anglo-Norman dominion began to take fast root in Ireland, it was deemed necessary, for the defence of the Capital, and the greater security of the English interest there, to erect a fortress or stronghold; and, accordingly, in the reign of King John, a writ was issued by that Monarch to the Lord Justice of Ireland, Meiler Fitz-Henry, a natural son of Henry II., directing him "to erect a Castle there (sc. in Dublin), in such competent place as you shall judge most expedient, as well to curb the City, as to defend it, if occasion shall so require, and that you make it as strong as you can with good and durable walls." The date of this writ is A.D. 1205. There is no certain evidence that Fitz-Henry erected a fortress at that time in accordance with that mandate, though there is every probability that he did. Whatever erection was constructed or commenced by Fitz-Henry, the received opinion is, that the completion of the work was effected by Henry de Loundres, Archbishop of Dublin, who was Lord Justice in the succeeding reign, of Henry III., in the year 1220. The Castle did not become the seat of Government until the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who, in the year 1560, according to Whitelaw, "the Castle of Kilmainham, where the Chief Governor resided, being decayed, gave order to repair and enlarge the buildings within the Castle of Dublin, that it might be a fit place for the residence of her representative and those of her successors."

It would appear that the first Viceroy who resided in the Castle was the Lord Deputy, Sir Henry Sidney, who, in Whitelaw's List of the Viceroys of Ireland, is thus noticed—"Sir Henry Sidney, L.D., arrived 12th September, and was sworn the 18th L.D.—This great and good Governor first caused the Irish Statutes to be printed, and the Records to be properly arranged; beautified and enlarged the Castle of Dublin; divided Ireland into counties or shires; put down rebellion whenever it raised its head; and left many other monuments of his wisdom, as well as prowess in arms." Before that period there appears to have been no fixed place for the residence of the Chief Governors, who held their courts sometimes at Thomas Court, on other occasions at the palace of the Archbishops of Dublin, and frequently in the Castle of Kilmainham. Shortly after the Castle had become the Vice-Regal residence, the High Courts of Law and Parliament also begun to be held within its precincts; and we find that, from the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth down to the restoration of Charles II., both Parliaments and the Law Terms were generally held, with some slight exceptions, in the Castle. After that period, other places were specially appropriated for the reception of the Judges and the Representatives of the People.

It is scarcely within the power of a modern writer to give an accurate notion of the Old Norman Fortress as it appeared during the early dominion of the English, and in the stormy days of the Pale, so completely has it been changed by the repairs, alterations, and additions of modern times. The highest and strongest tower was Birmingham Tower; the name is supposed to be derived from the long imprisonment within its walls of Sir William Birmingham, and Walter, his son, who were committed for disloyal practices against the Government: the father was executed in 1332; but the son was pardoned on account of his being in holy orders. This Birmingham Tower was the old Donjon Keep of the fortress, and as such was the State Prison, in which the Irish chieftains most distinguished in the wars against the English were confined when taken prisoners. Here also were imprisoned many of the turbulent Anglo-Irish Lords, whose powerful and vexatious opposition to the Royal authority kept Ireland in a state of perpetual strife, and gave rise to the phrase which has been so often applied to them, that of being Ipsis Hibernicis Hiberniores. Birmingham Tower has thus enclosed in "durance vile" as well a Fitzgerald and a Nugent, as an O'Donel and an O'Neil.

Here, Richard Nugent, Lord Delvin, and afterwards first Earl of Westmeath, who had been born in captivity, in the Tower of London, was confined in 1607, for having been privy to a conspiracy, or rather a pretended conspiracy,* alleged to have been got up by O'Neil, Earl of Tyrone, O'Donel, Earl of Tyrconnell, Maguire, O'Cahan, and other chiefs of the Ulster septs, for the purpose of overthrowing the Government. Nugent was condemned to death, and the day before that fixed for his execution, John Evers, his faithful servant, conveyed to him, in a basket of oranges, a rope, by means of which he escaped from a window; and, mounting a fleet horse, he succeeded in getting safely to Clonghauter Castle, an inland fortress, belonging to him, in one of the lakes of Cavan. Thence, he proceeded, after a short interval, to England, where, suddenly presenting himself before the throne of James, he sued for pardon, which James, who was struck with admiration at the ingenuous confidence he displayed, as well as at his youthful beauty, not only granted, but also restored to him his honours and estates.

Amongst the many strange and interesting reminiscences connected with Birmingham Tower, those which relate to the imprisonment, escape, and adventures, of Hugh Roe O'Donel, are not the least romantic.

This most formidable of the opponents of English rule in his native country, was the son of Hugh, Chieftain of Tyrconnell, and Inneen Dhu or Duff ("Dark Ina"), the daughter of MacDonnell, Lord of the Isles. He was born in 1571, and, as he grew up, his feats of strength, his symmetry of form, his great talents, and generous disposition, made him an universal favourite. His ancestors had been often acknowledged as independent Princes by the Kings of England, and he determined to assert the ancient rights of his house. Sir John Perrott, the then head of the Anglo-Irish Government, became alarmed at the rumours which prevailed on the subject, and he laid the following plot to get the young Chieftain into his hands. He had a ship laden with Spanish wine in the year 1587, which he directed to sail for one of the harbours of Donegal. The vessel sailed accordingly, and put into Lough Swilly, and the Captain commenced trafficking on avantageous terms with the natives of the district, amongst whom came, as had been expected, young O'Donel with his attendants. The wily pseudo Spanish Captain, however, intimated to the O'Donel that he had already disposed of all of his cargo that he meant to sell, but that if the youthful Chief would do him the honour to come on board, he would be happy to let him partake of his choicest wine, which he intended as a present to the Lord Deputy.

O'Donel and his followers accepted the invitation, went on board, and having partaken copiously of "the rosy," were soon sunk in the deep sleep of intoxication, and while in that helpless condition, their arms were taken from them, and the vessel got under way for Dublin, where, on its arrival, young Red Hugh, in his sixteenth year, was committed to Birmingham Tower, and there his fiery spirit was confined three years and three months. At length, in the year 1591, he and some of his followers escaped by means of a rope, by which they descended upon the draw-bridge, they succeeded in reaching the border of the O'Toole's country, in the Wicklow Mountains, where, worn out with fatigue and hunger, his bare feet torn by the furze and thorns that beset his path, he was obliged to stop, deserted by all his companions, who sought their own security in various directions, except one faithful domestic, who went to demand hospitality and protection for his young master at the house of Phelim O'Toole. The latter, who had been also confined in the Tower, had entered, while there, into bonds of friendship with O'Donel, but he had no sooner become acquainted with his young friend's escape, than he hastened to betray him to the English, and the unfortunate O'Donel again found himself in the hands of his enemies, within the strong walls of Birmingham Tower. He made a second escape, and in a most extraordinary manner; he contrived to enter the sewer of the Castle, which communicated with a little river, called the Poddle, which now runs under the Lower Castle-yard, into the Liffey; and, wading through the muddy stream, he again reached the Wicklow Mountains, where some of the O'Neils, who accompanied him in his flight, perished of cold and hunger. His servant, whom he dispatched to Feagh MacHugh O'Byrne for assistance, found him, on his return, dreadfully frost-bitten, and benumbed with cold, lying under a projecting rock, where he had sought shelter from the snow-hurricanes that swept the hills. On recovering from the effects of his hardships, he was furnished by the hospitable O'Byrne with horses for himself and servant, whereby he was once more enabled, after an absence of five years, to tread his native hills. Red Hugh was, shortly after his return, elected by the various Chiefs of septs, THE O'DONEL, in the room of his father, who had become too enfeebled by years to wield the chief command with that vigour which the times required. Animated by a most cordial hatred of England, which his long imprisonment had, no doubt, in a great degree called into existence, Hugh soon entered upon what he conceived to be his especial mission on this earth—the extirpation of the English invader, if not from the entire soil of his native country, at least from that portion of it over which his House claimed sovereign sway, and he succeeded most certainly in the latter object, and, to some extent, in the former; for, despite Elizabeth's best generals, he not only kept his northern home free, but he extended his incursions to the most southern parts of the island. He was, for years, the scourge and terror of the English. The history of his wars do not exactly belong to this place; suffice it, then, to notice merely the close of his career. Possessed of very great military talents, he seldom committed a mistake; but, at Kinsale, where he was met by the English, under Lord Mountjoy, he was led, by a spirit of jealous rivalry with O'Neil, relative to leading an onset, into a fatal error, which brought on a complete rout of his troops. His power was completely broken in this action, and he was obliged to fly to Spain, where he died in the city of Valladolid, in the year 1602.

Before adverting to the modern condition of the Castle, it may be as well to give a short account of a judicial combat which took place within its walls between two Irish Chieftains, in the year 1583. Teig Mac Gilpatrick O'Connor, having killed some of the followers of Connor MacCormack O'Connor, the latter appealed the former before the Lords Justices. Teig pleaded that the men he had killed had confederated with the rebel Cahir O'Connor, and were, therefore, likewise rebels; and declared himself ready to maintain his plea by combat. The challenge was accepted, the defendant choosing the weapons—sword and target, and the next day was appointed for the combat. At the hour appointed, the Lords Justices, the Judges, the counsellors, and a large number of military officers being present, the combatants were led forward within the lists, and, having stripped to their shirts, were searched each by the Secretary of State, to see if they had any other but the proper arms; and then, having taken each an oath that his quarrel was just, the pleadings were read, and they repeated their determination to decide the question at issue, by the sword. The signal was then given by sound of trumpet, and the combat began. Both fought with great resolution, and for a considerable time the issue was doubtful; at length, the appellant (MacCormack), having received two wounds in the leg and one in the eye, attempted to close upon the defendant (Teig), who, being too strong for him, pummelled him so vigorously that he loosened his morion or helmet, and then cut off his (MacCormack's) head, which he immediately presented on the point of his sword to the Lords Justices, and they declared him acquitted.

Birmingham Tower had become so dilapidated in the year 1775, that it was found necessary to take it down. It was rebuilt, in nearly its ancient form, in 1777. The only part of the old Anglo-Norman fortress at present remaining, is the Wardrobe, or, as it is now called, the Record Tower, at the west end of the Chapel. In it are kept the records of Ulster, King-of-Arms; those of the Irish Parliament, and the old records of Birmingham Tower.

The walls of the Record Tower are of great strength and thickness, crowned at the top with an embattled parapet.

The principal buildings of the Castle, as it at present appears, were erected in the reign of George II. They are of red brick, with stone dressings. The courts which they surround are divided into the Upper and Lower, generally called the "Upper and Lower Castle Yards."

The upper, or principal, is an oblong, 280 feet in length by 180 feet in width. On the south side are the apartments immediately appropriated as the residence of the Viceroy. The entrance to those apartments is

* At a short distance from the Promontory of Howth, there are two islands in the Bay—one called Ireland's Eye, and the other, which is much larger, called the Isle of Lambey; on the southern side, the small rocky Isle of Dalcy occurs

† Kingstown, which was formerly a miserable fishing village, called Dunleary, received its present name in consequence of George the Fourth, on his leaving Ireland, in 1821, having embarked there. Near the spot at which he went on board, an Obelisk, surmounted by a Crown, has been erected. It is now a large handsome town, increasing in extent every day.

‡ Henry D. Inglis—"Journey throughout Ireland during the Summer and Autumn of 1834."

* The only evidence of this conspiracy was an anonymous letter, directed to Sir Wm. Usher, Clerk of the Council, which was found on the floor of the Council Chamber, and brought to Sir Arthur Chichester, Lord Deputy, who was sitting in Council at the time. This precious document stated that Tyrconnell, Tyrone, and the other Catholic Chieftains of Ulster, had conspired to surprise the Castle, murder the Lord Deputy, &c. &c. &c. Hostile preparations were immediately commenced against the men of Ulster. Tyrone, Tyrconnel, and the others, were obliged to seek security in flight: some were taken and executed; and the result was that Ulster was cleared, as the modern term is, and the object effected which was had in view throughout the whole of this nefarious business, namely, the Chieftains' estates and possessions, after this specimen of the "clearances system" was given, as an example to future "loyal and true" men to "go and do likewise," were seized and confiscated, and partitioned amongst greedy adventurers, a majority of whom were Scotch; and thus was effected James the First's celebrated "Settlement of Ulster;" a piece of bare-faced robbery, begun and completed in bloodshed; and not often equalled even in the various confiscations of Ireland, for its cool effrontery and unblushing atrocity.

marked by a colonnade. Facing this there is an arched gateway, with portals on either side, which forms the principal entrance to the Castle Surmounting the arch, which is of very elegant proportions and built of stone, a figure of Justice is placed upon a pedestal and cornice, and a little further to the west, in the same range, there is a corresponding arched gateway, erected solely to preserve uniformity, as it does not form an entrance; on its summit is a figure of Fortitude. Between these an ornamental structure of stone rises; the basement is rustic and perforated with three arches, elevated upon which is an Ionic colonnade sustaining a pediment. There is a gallery beneath the pediment for the accommodation of musicians on certain state occasions.

Over the whole is raised an elegant octagonal tower, the cupola of which is crowned by a gilt ball mounting a flag-staff, from which the Royal standard is displayed when the Lord Lieutenant is at the Castle. The buildings in the east and west wings of the court contain the apartments occupied by the suite of his Excellency. In the centre of the square there is a large lamp, near to which are placed, every day, at the relieving of the guard, * the colours of the regiment on duty. The principal of the vice-regal apartments are the Council Chamber, containing portraits of the Lords Lieutenant since the period of the Union; the Presence Chamber, in which stands a crimson velvet throne, with gold-embroidered hangings; and St. Patrick's Hall, a fine spacious apartment 62 feet long, 41 feet wide, and 36 feet high. Here also is a throne with raised seats behind it for ladies; a double row of seats runs along each side of the hall, and at either end are galleries, one for musicians, the other for spectators. The ceiling is divided into three compartments, containing pictorial representations illustrative of Irish History—one of which is St. Patrick converting the pagan Irish to Christianity.

The buildings in the Lower Castle Yard are used as Government offices, residences of functionaries, &c. Within this court is

THE CASTLE CHAPEL.

This is a modern edifice. It was completed in the year 1814, and is a very beautiful specimen of the Gothic Order. The view of the interior, from the principal or western entrance, highly charged as the whole is with profuse ornament, is magnificent in the highest degree. To convey a just idea of the gorgeous effect of the ensemble, would lead us more into detail than our limits admit of: suffice it to point out to the attention of the visitor, the groined roof, with the clustering columns that support the rich carving and tracery which everywhere meet the eye; the east window of stained glass; the viceregal pew in the south gallery, &c. &c. The choral service is very good.

The next public building in Dublin worthy of notice is

TRINITY COLLEGE.

This Institution was founded by Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1591. James II. confirmed and extended its Charter, and conferred upon it the privileges of returning Members to the Irish Parliament. The elective franchise is vested in the Fellows, Scholars, and other graduates who have taken the degree of A.M., or any higher. The Provost, who has a casting vote, is the Returning Officer.

The Collegiate body consists of a Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Provost, Fellows, and Scholars. The Professorships are those of Divinity (Regius), Physic, Civil Law, Common Law, and Greek. There are also Professorships of the Modern Languages, Chemistry, Anatomy and Surgery, Botany, Natural History, and Political Economy—the latter endowed by the present Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Whately. There are three classes or ranks of students—viz., Fellow Commoners, Pensioners, and Sizars. There are some thirty or forty valuable benefices in the gift of the College.

Trinity College is built on the site of the old Augustinian Monastery of All-Hallows, which, on its dissolution, in the reign of Henry VIII., was made over, with its "site, precinct, and ambit," by that Monarch, to the citizens of Dublin, who subsequently, in the reign of Elizabeth, gave it up for the purposes of the newly-founded University.

The front elevation occupies the eastern side of College Green. It is built in the Corinthian style of Portland stone, and is 300 feet in length. In the centre, an angular pediment is supported by Corinthian columns; and, at either end, the range terminates, north and south, in pavilions ornamented with coupled pilasters of the same order, supporting an attic story, which is surmounted by a balustrade. The entrance is formed by an archway in the centre, over which is the Museum. Here, open to visitors, and contains, among other curiosities, a model of the Giant's Causeway, and an ancient Irish Harp, said to have belonged to King Brian Boroihme.

The vestibule under the Museum conducts to an immense quadrangle of about 200 yards by 70; the fine effect of which is greatly improved by the Chapel and Examination Hall projecting at either side. This quadrangle formerly consisted of the Parliament and Library squares, which were recently thrown into one, and, at the same time, several alterations and additions were made to the University building, (amongst them a new square added to the College park), which have greatly increased the external beauty of the whole. The Chapel and Theatre, or Examination Hall, present similar fronts, viz.—a portico of four Corinthian columns, sustaining an entablature and pediment. The similarity also extends to the ornaments and dimensions of the interiors, which are 80 feet by 40 feet. Within the Theatre is a magnificent cenotaph in honour of Dr. Baldwin, who filled the office of Provost in the course of the last century, and, at his death, bequeathed upwards of £80,000 to the University. The Provost's House, which stands detached about 30 yards from the southern end of the great western front, is separated from Grafton-street by a spacious court-yard, with a handsome gate entrance. It is an elegant mansion, built of stone, after the design made by the Earl of Cork and Burlington. The College Park contains about 16 or 20 acres, and is very elegantly laid out and planted, and adds greatly to the beauty of the metropolis in the neighbourhood of Nassau-street, from which it is separated by a low wall and handsome iron railing. At right angles with the College is

THE BANK OF IRELAND.

This is the noblest structure in Dublin, and, taken as a whole, if equalled, it is certainly unsurpassed in grace and beauty by any other pile, however magnificent, in Europe. It is universally ranked amongst the most perfect specimens of British architecture; and yet, from some freak of fate, the architect from whose designs it was erected is unknown to fame.†

Previous to the Union, it was the Parliament House of Ireland; it was appropriated to its present use in the year 1802, when it was purchased from the Government, for the sum of £40,000, and subject to an annual rent of £240, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland. It is built entirely of Port and stone, and is remarkable for the rigidly simple, pure, and classic style of its architecture. "The portico," says the artist Malton, "derives all its beauty from a simple impulse of fine art; and is one of the few instances of form only, expressing true symmetry." The tympanum of the pediment, in front has the Royal arms represented upon it; and, on the apex, a figure of Hibernia, with Commerce on her left hand, and Fidelity on her right. The pediment over the East Front § is also ornamented with statues of Fortitude, Justice, and Liberty. The interior of this magnificent edifice fully corresponds with its majestic exterior. While used as the Parliament House, the centre door under each portico led to a great hall, called the Court of Requests, from which was the entrance to the House of Commons. The latter formed a circle, 55 feet in diameter, inscribed in a square. The seats for members rose in concentric circles one above the other, so as that all could be seen from any part of the House. A rich hemispherical dome, supported by sixteen Corinthian columns, crowned the whole; between the pillars, there was a handsome gallery, for the accommodation of the public. Around the "Commons' Room," as the House was usually termed, ran a corridor, which afforded a convenient communication, by means of three doors, with the Committee Rooms, Coffee Rooms, &c.

This beautiful apartment, together with the Court of Requests, was taken down shortly after the Bank became established within its walls, and on their site was erected, for the more convenient despatch of the Bank business, the fine room which is called the Cash-office. ‖

The House of Lords remains unaltered; it is also a noble apartment 40 feet long and 30 feet wide, in addition to which there is a recess 13 feet deep, at the upper end, wherein the Throne formerly stood; it is now occupied by a marble statue of George III. in his parliamentary robes. Corinthian pilasters, at each end of the room, add to its beauty, while a rich Corinthian entablature is carried over the four sides. Above, springs an arched ceiling, divided into small panels, with a boss in the centre of each. The fire-place is constructed with great elegance, of dark-veined sculptured Kilkenny marble. Above it hangs a large piece of tapestry representing the Battle of the Boyne; and, on the opposite wall, another piece of tapestry of the same size, on which is depicted the defence of Londonderry.

The House of Lords is now called the Hall of the Court of Proprietors, being used for the meetings of the Court.

The Library is 86 feet by 24, and is appropriated to the books, papers, &c., &c., belonging to the Bank. It contains a very handsome model in wood of the entire building.

Next in beauty to the Bank, ranks which was commenced in 1769, and finished in 1779, under the direction of Thomas Cooley, an artist to whom Dublin is indebted for some other fine structures.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE,

The Exchange nearly forms a square of 100 feet, presenting three architectural fronts of Portland stone in the Corinthian order, crowned by a dome in the centre of the building. The principal or northern front, faces Parliament street, and has a noble portico, consisting of six Corinthian columns with a projecting entablature, surmounted by an angular pediment, the tympanum of which, however, is not filled with sculpture, and one cannot help regretting that this little feature is wanting to a façade which, possessing it, would be perfectly beautiful. "On entering this edifice," says Malton, "the attention is immediately called to many conspicuous beauties; but, above all, to the general form. Twelve fluted pillars of the Composite order, 32 feet high, are circularly disposed in the centre of a square area, covered by a highly enriched entablature; above which is a beautiful cylindrical lantern about 10 feet high, perforated by twelve circular windows, ornamented with festoons of laurel leaves; the whole crowned with a handsome spherical dome, divided into hexagonal compartments, enriched and well proportioned and lighted from the centre by a large circular skylight. On each side of the twelve columns which support the dome are impost pilasters of the Ionic order, rising to upwards of half the height of the columns, the same as those which appear on the outside of the building, and covered with a fluted frieze and enriched cornice. The side-walks of the square are covered with a flat ceiling, the height of the impost pilasters, with enriched soffits from the pilasters, to others opposite to them against the wall." * * * * "The floor, through the whole ambulatory, and particularly under the dome, is handsomely inlaid." Between two of the pillars there is a bronze statue of George III.; and on the western staircase a marble statue of Dr. Lucas, for a long time representative of the City of Dublin in the Irish Parliament.

The interior is altogether a felicitous combination of elegance and convenience.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE.

This also is a truly magnificent pile. It is situated on the north bank of the river, a little below Carlisle-bridge, and measures 375 feet in length, by 205 feet in width. It presents four decorated façades, facing almost directly the four different points of the compass; and in general effect, as well as in beauty of detail, far surpasses in appearance the Custom House of London.

In the interior are two courts, separated from each other by the central pile—131 feet broad—which runs from north to south, the whole depth of the edifice. The principal front is the southern or river front; and when viewed from the opposite bank, it exhibits a very splendid aspect indeed. It consists of pavilions at each end, which are united by wings to the central building. The lower story of the building is an arcade. The central building presents a portico of four Doric columns of semi-stature and pediment, in the tympanum of which a group of figures in high relief, representing the friendly union of Hiberina and Britannia, with the good consequences resulting to Ireland therefrom; they are placed in the centre on a car of shell, embracing each other. Neptune, on the right, is driving away with his trident Famine and Despair: on the left, are sea gods bounding their shells; and a fleet of ships, in the distance, approaching in full sail, to which Hibernia is pointing.

On the attic story, over the four columns, are allegorical statues of Industry, Commerce, Wealth, and Navigation.

Above the central building rises a cupola, formed on the model of the cupolas of Greenwich Hospital; it is surmounted by a figure of Hope resting on her anchor, 12 feet high. From the ground to the top of the figure, the entire height is 126 feet. The pavilions at the ends have recesses ornamented with columns, above which are the arms of Ireland, on a shield between the supporters of Great Britain, sculptured in stone. Above the arcades of the wings, there is a range of alternate blank and open windows, the former containing niches; and over all an elegant cornice, surmounted by a balustrade, is carried round the whole building. This façade is of Portland stone; the other three of mountain granite. The north front faces Gardiner-street, and has also in its centre a portico of four columns, but without a pediment. The arcades and pilastered recesses of the river front are also absent. On the entablature over each column, statues, representing Europe, Asia, Africa, and America are placed.

In the interior, a handsome staircase leads to the Long Room, which is the principal apartment, being 127 feet square. A range of composite columns on each side, at about 12 feet from the walls, sustain an arched ceiling, in which are two large circular lanterns, richly ornamented with devices in stucco, which, with semicircular windows above the entablature over the columns, illuminate the room; between these are desks for the officers and clerks.

This noble edifice was designed and executed under the direction of Gandon, the architect: the first stone was laid in 1781, and the building was opened for business in November, 1791. The cost of the whole, including furniture, docks, drawbridge, quay wall, alterations, &c. amounted to upwards of £300,000.

When the Custom House was erected, the trade of Dublin was rapidly increasing every day, and its dimensions were formed more with a view to the prospective requirements of what might be fairly looked to—judging from its then steadily and rapidly progressing increase—as the future trade of Dublin, than with reference to the actual wants of its existing commerce. But the Legislative Union interfered, and stayed all further progress of the trade of the port of Dublin, except in that trifling degree which is caused by the few wants of an increasing impoverished population, and the result is, that the spacious apartments* of this noble Palace of Commerce, instead of resounding with the busy hum of clerks, waiters, agents, &c., are deserted, still, and silent as the tomb; and the stranger, as, with mixed sorrow and admiration, he gazes on the stately pile, feels as though the cenotaph of Ireland's commerce stood before him.

The next important public building on the northern bank of the Liffey is situated on King's Inns Quay, and so called, from comprising the four high courts of judicature, viz., Chancery, Queen's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas.

THE FOUR COURTS,

Like most of the public buildings in Dublin, its dimensions are magnificent, and the character of its architecture at the same time grand and beautiful. The form of the ground plan is that of a rectangular oblong, 440 feet long by 170 wide. The central pile contains the Hall and the Courts, and presents a splendid façade to the Quay, consisting of a portico of six Corinthian columns, sustaining a pediment, which is surmounted by statues of Moses, Justice, and Mercy. The angles of the building are decorated with coupled pilasters, over which are placed, in a sitting posture, statues of Wisdom and Authority. Above the whole rises a lofty dome, of noble proportions, encompassed by columns, between which are perforations for windows. East and west of the central building are court yards, separated from the street by a handsome perforated screen.

The conception of the plan of the interior is unique and singularly happy. Within a square outline, measuring 140 feet, is placed a circular Hall, of 64 feet diameter; and, radiating from the circle, are the entrances to the Courts, which are situated in the corners of the square. The Hall is surrounded by Corinthian columns, and is lighted by eight windows in the dome above; the spaces between which are occupied by eight colossal statues, in alto relievo, emblematic of Liberty, Justice, Wisdom, Law, Prudence, Mercy, Eloquence, and Punishment. Above those statues there is a rich frieze of foliage, extending around the dome; and in the frieze over each window are medallions of the following eight ancient eminent lawgivers, viz., Moses, Lycurgus, Solon, Numa, Confucius, Alfred, Mancho-Capac, and Ollam Fodhla. The rest of the dome is occupied by tablets, representing such interesting events in legal history as the granting of Magna Charta, &c. &c. &c.

The building was commenced in 1786, from the designs of Thomas Corley; and opened in Michaelmas Term, 1796.

Within the last few years, large additions have been made to the original structure, at the back towards Pill-lane: they comprise the Rolls Court, the Nisi Prius Court, the Bankruptcy Court, a Library, a spacious Coffee-room, and some other apartments, for the convenience of attorneys, &c.

Among the other public buildings of note is a quadrangular pile, 228 feet long, by 150 feet deep, and 50 feet in height, situated in Sackville-street. It has an Ionic portico in front, built of Portland stone, and consisting of six columns, with a pediment, above which are placed three finely executed statues, representing Hibernia resting on her spear and harped shield; Mercury, with his caduceus and purse; and Fidelity, with her finger on her lips, and a key in the other hand. The tympanum of the pediment contains the Royal Arms, and a cornice, surmounted by a balustrade, crowns the summit, and is carried all round the building.

THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE,

The foundation was laid in August, 1815, and the building completed in 1818, at a cost of upwards of £50,000.

The structures noticed above are the most important and remarkable of the public buildings of Dublin. There are, however, several others of great architectural beauty, which are well deserving of notice, but a description of which cannot be comprised within the limits assigned to this Memoir. Among these may be named the Rotunda, a handsome circular edifice, for balls, concerts, promenades, public meetings, &c. The Lying-in Hospital, adjoining the Rotunda, situated at the junction of Britain-street and Sackville-street; The Blue-Coat Hospital, in Blackhall-street; The Richmond Surgical Hospital, Brunswick-street; The Linen Hall, in the same street; The King's Inns, in Henrietta-street; St. George's Church, a beautiful structure of large dimensions, the western front of which exhibits a handsome Ionic portico, crowned by a lofty steeple like that of the Church of St. Martin-in-the Fields, London; The Roman Catholic Metropolitan Church of the Conception, Marlborough street, a splendid edifice, having a fine portico, consisting of six fluted columns (each four feet nine inches in diameter) of the Doric order, which support an entablature and pediment in the strictest style of this severe order. This forms the principal or eastern front, which extends 120 feet, and is designed after the celebrated Temple of Theseus, at Athens. Unlike most temples of worship, this has the high altar at the west, instead of the east end. The interior is very beautiful. The centre aisle is encompassed by fluted Doric columns, from the entablature of which springs an arched ceiling, whereon there is, in stucco, a basso relievo of the Ascension immediately over the high altar; the figures appear the size of life. The high altar stands between two columns, at the end of the principal aisle, and is of white marble; its front is beautifully sculptured, representing angels in a posture of adoration before the Eucharist, and an Agnus Dei in relievo.

The length of the interior is 150 feet by about 115 or 118 feet in width. The erection has cost upwards of £50,000; and, taking it altogether, it is justly considered the most magnificent structure dedicated to the worship of God in Dublin.

Not far from it is the handsome little Church of St. Francis Xavier, belonging to the Jesuits. All those buildings are on the northern side of the Liffey; and before we again "cross the water," we may just direct attention to The Terminus of the Dublin and Drogheda Railway, which is in this neighbourhood, at the end of Talbot-street; and The Music Hall, The Circus, and The Royal Hibernian Academy, of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture; all situated in Lower Abbey-street, a pleasant open thoroughfare, leading from Sackville-street to the Custom House. Crossing Carlisle Bridge to the south bank of the Liffey, and turning down the Quay to the left some hundred yards, the visitor meets a plain large building, erected on Burgh Quay, by the Repeal Association, as a place of meeting for that body. The front extends about 60 feet along the Quay, and has a depth of about 100 feet. Plain pilasters support a pediment on which is the date "1843," enwreathed in shamrocks; between the pilasters are three entrances, the central one having the ancient crown and harp over it, in stone; over the others are Irish wolf-dogs, also in stone. The interior is not distinguished by ornament. A circular platform, for the speakers, with a raised seat for the president of the meeting, and a desk for the reporters for the public press, a little below the platform, occupy one end of the chief apartment. The members of the Association occupy the body of the Hall, round the sides of which are galleries for the accommodation of ladies. A large gilt harp and crown, encircled by shamrocks, painted in green, constitute the decorations of the ceiling. Though in no wise very elegant or beautiful in its architectural pretensions, Conciliation Hall is, however, admirably adapted for the purposes for which it is intended. It can contain a very large audience, and the speakers are distinctly heard.

CONCILIATION HALL,

In the immediate vicinity are The Theatre Royal, Hawkins-street; and The Queen's Royal Theatre, formerly called the Adelphi, in Great Brunswick-street; but they present no feature that calls for observation.

---

* The guard is relieved every morning at 8 even o'Clock, at which hour the bands of the regiments play in the Upper Castle Yard for some time.

† A Mr. Cassels or Castell, of whom little or nothing is known, is the person to whose genius the design of this noble structure is generally attributed; but it is stated by Mr. Brewer, on what authority does not appear, that Castell did not visit Ireland until the year 1773, nearly half a century after the structure was commenced, viz. A.D. 1729, in the 4th year of the reign of John, Lord Carteret. It was executed under the inspection of Sir Edward Lovet Pearce, Engineer and Surveyor-General, but was completed by Mr. Arthur Dobbs, his successor in that office, about the year 1739.

‡ This is the grand portico in College Green, which is 47 feet in extent, and of the Ionic order.

§ This consists of a noble portico of six columns, of the Corinthian order, and was erected in 1785, by Mr. James Gandon, architect. This incongruity is the result of a special order of the Peers themselves, who, in the profundity of their collective wisdom, thinking, no doubt, as many worthy folks had thought before, that "variety is charming," ordered that the portico should be of the Corinthian. Gandon, who was somewhat of a wag, superintended the execution of the work, and happening, when the workmen were placing the Corinthian capitals, to overhear a passer-by, who was struck at the incongruity, ask what order was that, he quickly replied, "A substantial order—the order of the House of Lords."

‖ This room is 70 feet long, by 53 wide.

¶ The Custom House Quay, immediately in front, on the same side of the water, is not sufficiently wide to admit of a good view from it of the façade.

* The Custom House now furnishes accommodation to the Stamp Office, the Irish Poor Law Commissioners, and the Geological Society of Dublin.

Amongst the great variety of public edifices which are scattered over the south and south-eastern districts of Dublin, mention may be made of the TERMINUS OF THE DUBLIN AND KINGSTOWN RAILWAY, in Westland-row; and the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPEL OF ST. ANDREW, close adjoining. THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS, in St. Stephen's-green, an exceedingly beautiful stone structure. The front exhibits a pediment, supported by four Doric columns; above the pediment, are placed statues of Esculapius, Minerva, and Hygeia. The CENTENARY WESLEYAN CHAPEL, on the south side of St. Stephen's-green, a handsome stone building, with an Ionic portico. The MANSION HOUSE, in Dawson-street, the official residence of the Lord Mayor of Dublin· it is an unpretending red-brick building, with stone dressings; the interior contains some fine spacious apartments, very elegantly fitted up. The ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY'S HOUSE, in Kildare-street, formerly the town residence of "Ireland's only Duke," was sold to the Society, in 1814, for £30,000. The approach to this noble edifice is through a grand gateway of rustic masonry, leading into a spacious court, which forms a segment of a circle. The front exhibits four Corinthian pillars, with entablature and pediment. At each side is a corresponding colonnade of the Doric order. The rear has an extensive lawn, reaching to Merrion-square, from which it is separated by a dwarf wall, and to the beauty of which it adds very much.* The COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS † in Dame-street, containing a capacious hall and coffee-room, the Stock Exchange, a hotel, &c.

There are two structures remaining to be mentioned, which, from their antiquity, and the interest attaching to the associations connected with them, require a special notice each, and they are the CATHEDRALS OF ST. PATRICK and CHRIST-CHURCH. We will first notice—

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. PATRICK.

This venerable pile is indeed "ancient of days." It was built about the year 1190, by John Comyn, Archbishop of Dublin, on the site of an old church, said to have been erected by the sainted patron of Ireland himself. It was destroyed by fire in the year 1362, and was rebuilt in the pointed Gothic style. It consists of a nave, transepts, choir, and a small chapel, which was dedicated to the Holy Virgin. Among the many monuments which the Cathedral contains are two marble slabs, on adjoining pillars in the nave, to the memory of the celebrated Dean Swift, who had been for so many years Dean of this Cathedral, and to that of the unhappy Stella (Mrs. Johnson). The inscription on the former is—

Hic depositum est corpus‡
JONATHAN SWIFT, S. T. D.,
Hujus Ecclesiæ Cathedralis,
Decani,
Ubi Sæva Indignatio
Ulterius
Cor lacerare nequit.
Abi Viator,
Et imitare si poteris
Strenuum pro viri
Libertatis Vindicatorem
Obiit 19no die mensis Octobris,
A. D. 1745, Anno Ætatis 78°.

This inscription (except, of course, the dates) was written by the eccentric Dean himself. On the other slab the inscription is as follows:—

Underneath lie the mortal remains of Mrs. Hester Johnson, better known to the world by the name of Stella, under which she is celebrated in the writings of Doctor Jonathan Swift, Dean of this Cathedral. She was a person of extraordinary endowments and accomplishments of body, mind, and behaviour; justly admired and respected by all who knew her, on account of her many eminent virtues, as well as for her great natural and acquired perfections. She died, Jan. 27th, 1727-8, in the 46th year of her age, and, by her will, bequeathed one thousand pounds towards the support of a Chaplain to the Hospital founded in this city, by Doctor Steevens.

Near the southern entrance to the nave, in an obscure corner, there is a small tablet of white marble, bearing the following description:—

Here lieth the body of Alexander McGee, servant to Doctor Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's. His grateful master caused this monument in memory of his discretion, fidelity, and diligence in that humble station. Obiit Mar. 24, 1724. Ætatis 29.

The entire length of the Cathedral is 300 feet. "The choir," says Dr. Walsh, "at present 90 feet long, was probably originally only 60, the additional 30 feet being an encroachment on the nave, comprehending the space where the aisles cross each other, and separating, of course, the northern and southern parts of the transept, from which it is divided by plain, unornamented partitions of lath and plaster; while what we suppose the original choir is decorated with the usual ornaments of Gothic architecture. This portion of the choir is really beautiful; and the fine arch that forms its western termination, is at once bold, light, and elegant; the roof composed of groined arches, formerly of stone, but taken down a few years since, from an apprehension that the walls were too feeble to sustain its weight, is now of wood, retaining its former graceful form, is very pleasing to the eye. The Archbishop's throne, stalls, &c., though from their position they must unavoidably injure the architectural beauty of the choir, are in a good style, and neatly sculptured in varnished oak. The altar-piece, representing a curtain, behind a handsome Gothic arch, half-drawn, and presenting a glory to the view, has a fine effect; and the organ, which forms part of the screen, that separates the choir from the nave, is handsomely ornamented, and reported to be without a rival in this island.§

The exterior of St. Patrick's presents a very dilapidated appearance, which has by no means been improved by the repairs made from time to time, for they were executed without any regard to the architecture of the building. From the north-west angle of the building a square tower of blue limestone rises. It was erected by Archbishop Minot, about the year 1370, and in the year 1740, an extinguisher-looking spire was added: the height of the tower is 120 feet, and of the spire 101, making altogether an elevation of 221 feet.

St. Patrick's Cathedral is situated in the centre of the very oldest and poorest part of Dublin.* Not far from it, and at the end of Castle Street, Christ-Church Place, is

THE CATHEDRAL OF THE HOLY TRINITY, OR CHRIST-CHURCH.

This very ancient structure has even less pretensions to architectural beauty than St. Patrick's, in its present external appearance. Whatever it may have been in the olden time, length of years, tasteless alterations, and repairs, have all contributed largely to render its aspect in our days exceedingly unpicturesque.

It is said to have been founded A.D. 1038, by Sitric MacAulafe, King of the Ostmen of Dublin, and Donat, the first Ostman Bishop of Dublin. In the interior there are some remains, in the north side of the nave, of the original architecture of the edifice, in the pointed style. The form of the Cathedral is that of a cross, the length of the nave being 103 feet, the width 38 feet. The choir contains stalls for the Dean and Prebendaries.

Christ-Church contains numerous monuments of various dates. Some of these are very curious, and not a few have a claim to the character of beautiful. Strongbow, the famous Earl of Pembroke, who was one of the bravest of the Anglo-Norman Knights that laid the foundation of English power in Ireland, is said to be entombed within the walls of Christ-Church. He died in Dublin, in the commencement of the month of June, A.D. 1177, of mortification in the foot. The monument erected to his memory represents a recumbent figure of a warrior in armour, with a portion of a female figure by his side—the one Strongbow, the other Eva, his consort; both being of hewn stone. On a slab in the wall, above this monument, is the following inscription:—

THIS : AVNCYENT : MONYMENT : OF : STRANGBOWE : CALLED : COMES : STRANGVLENSIS : LORD : OF : CHEPSTO : AND : OGNY : THE : FIRST : AND : PRINCIPAL : INVADER : OF : IRELAND : 1169 : QVI : OBII . 1177 THE . MONYMENT WAS BROKEN : BY : THE : FALL : OF : THE : ROFE AND BODY : OF CHRISTES : CHVRCHE : IN AN : 582 AND SET VP AGAYN AT THE CHARGYS . OF . THE . RIGHT HONORABLE SR HENRY SYDNEY : KNYGHT : OF THE . MOST : NOBLE : ORDER : L PRESIDENT WALES : L : DEPUTY . OF . IRLAND : 1570

Amongst the modern monuments, that to the memory of Lord Chancellor Bowes, A.D., 1767, may be particularized; and also the monument to Sir John Stevenson.

We will conclude this notice of the most conspicuous of the public buildings of Dublin with a few words on the ROYAL BARRACKS.

An extensive series of buildings in the form of contiguous squares, which are open to the south. Behind these there is an immense quadrangle, called the Palatine-square, in which the infantry parade, &c. Accommodation can be afforded in these barracks to 6000 men. They are situated on the Northern bank of the Liffey, at the extreme west end of the City and close to the PHŒNIX PARK.

There are few capital cities which possess so extensive and beautiful a domain for the recreation of their inhabitants as that which Dublin has in the Phœnix Park. Hyde Park will bear no comparison with it.

Its undulating surface diversified with gentle eminences and shady wooded dells; its thick groves, its green alleys and retired walks, skirted with gigantic hawthorns growing in nature's richest luxuriance; its long interminable avenues, lined on either side with tall stately trees—all form an ensemble presenting a succession of delightful prospects—a rich variety of landscape scenery that is exceedingly beautiful. It contains upwards of 1,700 acres, and within its limits are the ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, which are well laid out in ornamental grounds, walks, &c., &c., and contain a very good collection of animals; the VICE-REGAL LODGE,† the summer residence of the Lord Lieutenant, seated in a pleasure-ground and gardens of 100 acres; the CHIEF SECRETARY'S LODGE, in a domain of upwards of thirty acres; the HIBERNIAN SCHOOL, an Establishment for Soldiers' Children; the ROYAL MILITARY INFIRMARY, and the POWDER MAGAZINE. On entering the Park, from Park Gate-street, the most conspicuous object is the WELLINGTON TESTIMONIAL, on the left—an obelisk 205 feet high: it cost upwards of £20,000, and its architectural pretensions are pretty correctly conveyed in the epithet, "an over-grown testimonial," which was sarcastically applied to it shortly after its completion. There is, however, a really beautiful work of art, somewhat farther on, in the interior of the Park, and nearly opposite to the Vice-Regal Lodge: it is familiarly called the Phœnix, and consists of a fluted and highly ornamented Corinthian column, raised on a pedestal; on the top of the column there is a Phœnix, finely sculptured, rising out of flames; the whole being about 30 feet high. This elegant monument was erected, in allusion to the name of the Park,‡ by the celebrated Earl of Chesterfield, in 1745, when Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The pedestal bears the following inscriptions:—

CIVIVM OBLECTAMENTO
CAMPVM ÆDIVM ET INCVLTVM
DIVRNI ITINERIS
PHILIPPVS STANHOPE,
COMES DE CHESTERFIELD, PRÆFECTVS

IMPENSIS SVIS POSVIT
PHILLIPPVS STANHOPE, COMES
DE CHESTERFIELD, PRÆFECTVS.

On the other sides of the pedestal the arms of the Stanhope family are sculptured in relief.

The lands which form the Phœnix Park formerly belonged to the house of the Knights Templars at Kilmainham; they were given, on the suppression of that unfortunate order to the Knights Hospitallers, and continued in their possession until the dissolution of religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII., when they reverted to the Crown. The idea of converting them to the purposes of a deer park was first formed in the reign of Elizabeth; but the first step to its formation was not taken till the year 1662, in the reign of Charles II., when the Duke of Ormond actively took up the matter. Many additions to its extent were subsequently made, and ultimately the completion was accomplished by Philip Dormer Stanhope, Earl of Chesterfield, during his Vice-Royalty in the early part of the last century.

Nearly opposite to the entrance to the Park, and on the other side of the river, stands on the site of the old Priory of Knights Hospitallers. It is an institution for decayed military officers and soldiers. It was founded towards the close of the reign of Charles II., and is a quadrangular building, inclosing an area of 210 feet square.

THE ROYAL HOSPITAL, KILMAINHAM,

The general aspect of Dublin, as already observed, is very beautiful. In the better and more modern parts of the town, the streets are very spacious, regular, and well built. There cannot be finer streets than Dame-street, College-green, Westmoreland-street, and Sackville-street. The latter is much broader than any street in London, or even the widest part of the Boulevards of Paris, and has in its centre an elegant column to the memory of Lord Nelson, surmounted by a colossal statue of that great naval hero. But the most beautiful feature of the City in its magnificent squares, the smallest of which—Fitzwilliam-square—is large in comparison with many of the principal squares of London.

ST. STEPHEN'S GREEN, is said to be the largest square in Europe, and incloses upwards of 20 acres laid out in shrubberies lawns, walks, &c. &c. In the centre of the inclosure is an equestrian statue of George II. Although the houses which encompass the Green are not regularly of the same height, some of them, are, however, noble mansions.

MERRION SQUARE.

This is, in all respects, the most beautiful of the squares of Dublin. The mansions are splendid, and of uniform height; the width of the road-way or street is 80 feet, and the undulating surface of the enclosure, which is disposed in ornamental grounds and shrubberies, comprises 12½ acres. On the south side of this square is the handsome mansion of Daniel O'Connell, Esq.

MOUNTJOY and RUTLAND SQUARES are to the north of the town· in the latter square are the Rotunda Gardens, a pleasant promenade, that was very much frequented in the summer evenings, before the opening of the PORTOBELLO GARDENS, which have proved more attractive.

The bridges that cross the Liffey are numerous; but, from the circumstance of the river being narrow, they shrink into insignificance when compared with the magnificent structures that span the Thames. The lowest on the river, next the shipping, is CARLISLE BRIDGE; then come, successively, the METAL BRIDGE, ESSEX BRIDGE, RICHMOND BRIDGE, WHITWORTH BRIDGE, QUEEN'S BRIDGE, BARRACK BRIDGE, adjoining which is a handsome Gothic gateway, at the entrance to the Military Road; KING'S BRIDGE; and, in the outlets of the town, SARAH BRIDGE, so called from the foundation-stone having been laid by Sarah, Countess of Westmoreland, in 1791; it is composed of a single arch, 104 feet span.

Here we close our Topographical Notice of Dublin; which, taken with the minutely accurate and beautifully designed and executed view of that City, which our artist enables us to supply to our Subscribers, will, we trust, convey a tolerably ample and correct knowledge of the METROPOLIS OF IRELAND.

EMINENT PERSONS.

To make our Illustration of the Sister Capital as perfect as our limits admit of, we subjoin the following brief list of a few of the most distinguished persons who have been born in it:—

St. Lawrence O'Tool, Archbishop of Dublin, when it surrendered to Strongbow. Born about the year 1100; died in Normandy, on his return from Rome, A.D. 1180. Canonized by Pope Honorius III., A.D. 1225.

Christopher Penibridge, author of "The Annals of Ireland," published by Camden. Born 1547.

James Stanihurst, a lawyer, and Recorder. Born 1496. Author of "Pias Orationes Plures." His daughter Margaret was mother of Archbishop Usher. Died 1573

Richard Stanihurst, son of James. Born 1535; died at Brussells, Anno 1616. Took priest's orders abroad, and became Chaplain to Duke Albert, Governor of the Netherlands. He wrote—1. "De Rebus in Hibernia gestis;" 2. "Vita S. Patricii," 3. "Harmonia. Sex Cantus Diabetica in Psalmum," 4. "Translation of the First Four Books of Virgil's Æneas," written in uncouth English Hexameter—a scarce and curious work.

James Usher, the celebrated Archbishop of Armagh, born 1580, son of Arnold Usher, one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, was the first scholar on the foundation of Trinity College, shortly after its establishment, in the reign of Elizabeth: elevated to the Primacy in 1626; eminent throughout Europe for his erudition, learned writings, and energy of character; died in London, 1656, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

William Malone, a learned Jesuit, author of writings in reply to Archbishop Usher. Born 1586; died in Spain, 1659.

Henry Fitzsimons. Became a Roman Catholic after quitting Oxford University, where he was educated, and afterwards entered the ranks of the Jesuits. He was one of the ablest disputants against Archbishop Usher and the Irish Protestant Clergy. Born 1590. Author of several polemic works in Latin and English.

John Perrot, a Quaker. Born 1595; made a journey to Rome to convert the Pope; got into the hands of the Inquisition; subsequently liberated as insane; and, on his return to Ireland, published a book, called "The Battering Ram against Rome."

Sir James Ware, author of the well-known work "The Antiquities of Ireland." Born 1594; died 1666.

Arthur Annesley, Earl of Anglesea. Born 1614, author of the curious and interesting "Memoirs of His Own Times."

Sir Richard Steele, a dramatic writer and essayist, editor of "The Tatler." Born 1671.

Charles Macklin (or Maclauglin), the celebrated actor. Born 1690; died at the age of 107 years, anno 1797, July 12, and was buried in the chancel of Covent-garden Church.

Thomas Fry, an eminent artist, celebrated for his exquisite Mezzotint engravings. Born 1710; died at London 1762.

Margaret Woffington, the celebrated and beautiful actress—Garrick's "Lovely Peggy." Born 1718; died 1760.

T. Sheridan, the actor. Born 1719.

Stranger Barry, the celebrated tragic actor. Born 1719; died 1774.

Thomas Leland, D.D., the historian, translator of Demosthenes, and author of several other works. Born 1722; died 1785.

James Caulfield, Earl of Charlemont. Born 1728. He was the chosen President of the Irish Volunteers, at their formation in 1783. Died 1799.

Right Hon. Edmund Burke, the great orator, statesman, and philosopher. Born 1730; died 1797.

Right Hon. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the celebrated dramatic writer, wit, and orator. Born 1751; died 1816.

Mr. T. Moore, the poet of our own day, is also a native of Dublin.

Those few names, taken at random from a numerous list, are all that our limits admit of our noticing in this brief and hastily-penned Memoir.

THE END.

☞ TO THE BINDER.—The View of the City of Dublin to be placed as Frontispiece to Volume VIII.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand; aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1846.—SUPPLEMENT.

---

* The Dublin Society was founded in 1731, for the promotion of husbandry and other useful arts in Ireland, and was the first Agricultural Society established in Europe. It was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1749. Lectures on chemistry, botany, geology, &c., are given at stated periods; and there are annual exhibitions of cattle, agricultural implements, &c., and also of Irish manufactures.

In the house, there is a good library of scientific works, and a museum of objects relating to natural history, geology, mineralogy, &c., &c.

† Though not connected in any particular way with the COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS, yet as being a Society composed of merchants, mention may be made in this place of the QUEEN GALLEY, a name as singular as the origin of the Society to which it is applied was simple and natural. It was as follows: In the year 1700, during some protracted litigation respecting a ship, much legal difficulties and controversy on the case arose, and no satisfactory decision could be arrived at. Ultimately, in order to put an end to expense and delay, the case was referred to the arbitration of a body of merchants, who exhibited such acuteness, intelligence, and patient research in their investigation, and so much justice and fairness in their decision, that the judgment they pronounced in the case was readily acquiesced in by the litigant parties.

Convinced of the benefits to be derived from having a fair tribunal of arbitration to refer to, the merchants of Dublin, after this affair, formed a select number of their body into a Society for that purpose, which, from the name of the litigated ship that led to its formation, was called the QUEEN GALLEY. Its members consist of a captain, lieutenants, and crew, selected from the most respectable mercoants. They hold two or three convivial meetings annually, at which the general business of the Society is transacted; and they assemble when and when the captain chooses to order. The expense of these meetings is defrayed out of a subscription fund. When parties submit to their arbitration, any costs which may be decreed, are applied to charitable purposes.

‡ i.e. Here the body of Jonathan Swift, S.T.D., Deacon of this Cathedral Church, is laid, where fierce indignation can no longer lacerate the heart. Traveller go, and imitate him, if thou canst, as a strenuous asserter of liberty. Died the 19th day of October, A.D. 1745, in the 78th year of his age.

§ The organ is said to have been the gift of the Duke of Ormond; it was the work of Smith, the father, of Rotterdam, and intended for a church in Vigo, in Spain, where, however, it never was erected. When the Duke assisted in the attack made by the combined fleets of England and Holland, on the ships in the harbour of that town, in 1702, it had not been landed from the vessel which conveyed it from Rotterdam, and, of course, fell into the hands of the assailants.

* Within a few yards of St. Patrick's Cathedral, the visitor finds himself in the very heart of "The Liberties" of Dublin, a large tract at the western end of the City, which is at present the abode of want, wretchedness, and squalor, though formerly, when manufactures flourished in Dublin, it was one of its most opulent quarters, as the spacious streets and large lofty mansions, decorated with window and door cases of sculptured marble and stone, abundantly testify. Those once splendid residences, now crumbling to decay, are inhabited principally by poor artisans, to whom Dublin can now no longer afford employment. Among the few who do still eke out a miserable subsistence from their skill and labour, are those weavers who produce that beautiful fabric, the Irish Tabinet, or, as it is more usually called, the Irish Poplin, so justly celebrated throughout Europe and America. The trade, however, is not very extensive: of the large quantities of Irish Poplin, which are sold in London, not more than three to four-fifths are "the real thing" the "genuine Irish." The manufacture of this beautiful article, which has been as yet unrivalled in Great Britain, is said to have been introduced into Ireland by the French Huguenots, who settled there after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes

The principal street in the "Liberties," is Thomas-street, where Lord Edward Fitzgerald was arrested in 1798, and "Emmet's habitation" broke out, as already mentioned. The name "Liberties" is derived from the fact of this district being independent of the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor of Dublin, and from having Manor Courts of its own.

† This is an unpretending stone building, having its north front decorated with an Ionic colonnade supporting a pediment.

‡ The name Phœnix, as applied to the Park, is a corruption of two Irish words, which, in pronunciation, very much resemble the English word Phœnix. They are, Fhoun-uisge—signifying clear or fair water the name borne from time immemorial by the manor out of which the Park was formed, and given to it from a clear chalybeate spring within its precincts, which still exists, not far from the entrance to the Vice-Regal Lodge, and is well known as the "Spa," and much frequented.

THE CORN-LAWS.

DESCRIPTIVE HISTORY OF THE LAWS RELATIVE TO THE IMPORTATION AND EXPORTATION OF CORN.

[The following History is from the pen of a gentleman who is perfectly acquainted with the "facts" of the subject; and is, we believe, written as impartially as possible for an opponent of Protective Duties. Although we cannot altogether coincide in the views of the writer, yet we consider that our readers may glean from this brief History a correct narrative of the most interesting subject now before the British public.—ED. I. L. N.]

From the earliest ages, the production of corn and its commercial exchange have engaged the attention of legislators and statesmen. In ancient Egypt the Kings were accustomed, on public occasions, to evince their respect for agriculture by the semblance of going through some farming operation. We find, from the monuments, that accurate returns were made, by the Royal officers, of the amount of grain produced in every harvest, and that public granaries were established, to secure regularity of supply, and remedy any unexpected deficiency. The administration of Joseph, during the seven years of plenty and seven years of famine, is too well known to require comment; it is sufficient to observe, that the principle of public storehouses appears, from the narrative, to have been established at an earlier period, and to have been only enlarged by Joseph to meet a special exigency.

Tyre is the next state of which we possess some commercial information. The barren rocks of Phœnicia could not produce sufficient grain for the support of a dense population, and hence, the Tyrians were mainly dependent for their support on foreign supplies. We learn, incidentally, that they obtained large quantities of grain from Palestine, and that the mutual interests which grew up under this system of exchange kept the two nations at peace during the entire period of their independent existence.

The Athenian Republic affords a still more signal example of a community depending on foreigners for an adequate supply of the necessaries of life. So early as the period of the Persian Invasion ships were freighted with corn for the Athenian Harbour of the Peiræus from the countries bordering on the Black Sea: it is a singular instance of the permanence of commerce that the exportation of corn from these countries continues to the present day. During the Persian War armed galleys were stationed in the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles to guard the corn ships on their passage, and, during the whole continuance of the Athenian polity, one of the main objects of those entrusted with the administration of foreign affairs was to secure and preserve the friendship of the Thracian Princes, whose dominions commanded the narrow seas through which the corn trade passed. But the coasts of the Euxine were not the only places from which the Athenians imported corn: they derived large supplies from Syria, Egypt, Western Africa, and, more especially, from Sicily.

At first the interference of the State with the Athenian corn trade appears to have been confined to securing a safe passage for the grain vessels by furnishing them with convoys; but, at an early period, the exportation of agricultural produce of native growth was strictly prohibited, and only one-third of the corn imported from foreign countries was allowed to be re-exported. It is obvious that the object which such legislation aimed at was to render corn artificially cheap by making it artificially abundant, and, consequently, the purpose of the Athenian Corn-Laws was directly the reverse of the system which prevails in modern Europe. Unfortunately we have not the means of ascertaining the whole of the results of the Athenian system, but enough is known to show that the restrictions on re-exportation prevented the Peiræus from becoming the great market for grain to the rest of Greece. When prices in Attica were low the merchants sent their vessels to Corinth, or to some of the ports of the Peloponnesus, where commerce was at least comparatively free, and thus Attica was at once stinted in its supplies, and deprived of the profits of transfer.

The same ignorance of the natural laws of commerce was manifested in the severe enactments against engrossing and forestalling; it was ordained that no man should keep more than fifty loads of corn in store at a time, and that no one should receive more than a fixed and very moderate rate of profit on his sales. These regulations threw the corn trade out of the hands of the respectable mercantile, who could not endure to be harassed by spies and informers, and transferred this important branch of commerce to foreign adventurers and speculators, who constantly evaded the law by every species of fraud and artifice. The attempt to make corn unnaturally cheap too frequently rendered it unnaturally dear, and the State was often compelled to make large sacrifices of revenue in order to remedy its original blunder.

The Roman Corn-Laws had nothing commercial in their character; the State took upon itself the charge of supplying the people with grain, and for this purpose it levied corn-rents and grain-tributes on all the colonies and subject countries. There is, however, no trace of any interference with private enterprise; merchants were allowed to import corn as they pleased, for the great object was to obtain an adequate supply. But, notwithstanding all the vigilance of the State, Rome was frequently visited by famines and dearths even in the most flourishing periods of the empire, and the State was exposed to imminent danger from its failure to fulfil the obligations which it had unwisely contracted. The errors of the Roman system belong more to the vices of the political constitution both of the Republic and the Empire than to a prepense violation of the laws of economic science; the great trading cities of the Empire were allowed to follow their own course without interference; while Rome withered under excess of protection, the trading towns of Gaul, Southern Italy, and the Levant flourished under perfect Free Trade.

The invasions of those whom, with little discrimination, we are accustomed to stigmatise as the Northern barbarians, were more injurious to the landed proprietors than to the mercantile communities. It would lead us too deep into discussion, and too far away from our subject, to investigate the state of commerce in the dark ages, else we could show that sounder views of trade were entertained by the Goths and Vandals, who took common sense for their guide, than by the Romans and Byzantines, who sacrificed every principle to the narrow policy of selfishness. We shall, therefore, turn to the history of our own country, and examine the course of legislation on the supply and sale of grain.

Our earliest Corn-Laws were designed to secure an abundant supply of food to the people, at a moderate price, and, for this reason, they were all directed against exportation, which was absolutely prohibited by the statute of Edward III., in 1360. The natural result of this law was to diminish the growth of corn; the produce of 1360 having been sold at a price too low to yield profit to the cultivators, a smaller breadth of land was sown in 1361, and the amount of tillage was still less in 1362. Edward was not slow in discovering the mischievous result of his legislation, and in 1363, the King's subjects were permitted to export corn where they pleased, and were only prohibited from supplying the King's enemies. In 1436, however, exportation was only permitted when the price of corn averaged 6s. 8d. or under, at the place of shipment. This law appears to have led to many frauds in striking the averages: it injured the farmers by restricting their markets; it injured the consumers by discouraging the raising of an abundant supply; but it afforded the chances of large gains to the speculators, who, in fact, acquired the chief command of the market. It is for this reason that we find corn-dealers so severely treated by many of our old historians, and stigmatised as engrossers, forestallers, and regraters. Legislative interference had substituted an artificial for a natural market: the dislocation of the course of trade produced a corresponding change in the character of the traders, and they were condemned for adopting a course into which they had been absolutely forced by the laws themselves. In the scant notices of trade which are found in the early chronicles, it is not always easy to discover the precise cause of popular complaints; but the statute of Edward III., already mentioned, had reserved a power of prohibition to the Government. "Nevertheless," it declares, "the King will that his Council may restrain the said passage (of corn) when they shall think best for the profit of the realm." This reservation afforded unworthy favourites and greedy Ministers an opportunity for trafficking in prohibitions and licences, of which they seem to have largely availed themselves; for the preamble to the statute of Henry VI. complains bitterly of the restrictions on exportation; "for cause whereof farmers and other men, which use manurement of their land, may not sell their corn but of a bare price, to the great damage of all the realm." This is, we believe, the first legislative notice of the manurement of land; and it argues a great advance in economic science to have skilful cultivation set forth as a strong argument for free trade in grain. The English farmer of that day, relying on his own superior management, was so far from fearing foreign competition, that he sought permission to meet the foreign producer in his own markets.

The first known law against the importation of corn, is a statute of Edward IV., A.D. 1436. The preamble state, "Whereas, the labourers and occupiers of husbandry within this realm be daily grievously endamaged by bringing of corn out of other lands and parts into this realm, when corn of the growing of this realm is at a low price;" and it is then enacted that corn shall be admitted until the price at the place of import exceeds 6s. 8d. per quarter. At this price, exportation was permitted, and importation was prohibited, so that speculators had a double temptation to gambling in fraudulent averages. Legislation totally failed in producing anything like steadiness of price. In the interval between 1416 and 1463, the price of corn varied from 2s. to 16s. per quarter.

In 1534, we have an example of a Corn-Law setting forth sound principles in its preamble, and forthwith contradicting them in its enactments. This strange example of "free-trading in the abstract," sets forth that, "Forasmuch as dearth, scarcity, abundant market, and plenty of victual happeneth, riseth, and chanceth of so many and divers reasons, that it is very hard and difficult to put any certain prices on such things;" after which reasonable statement it empowers the Lords of the Council to fix the prices at which farmers shall sell their commodities. The greater part of the legislation of the 16th century was directed against the rapid rise of prices which then took place, and as corn never descended below the rate fixed by the statute of Edward IV., its prohibitory clauses were imperative, and the importation of corn was practically free.

Early in the seventeenth century, A.D. 1603, the importation of corn was prohibited until the average price had reached 26s. 8d. per quarter; and this average was raised by successive statutes, until, in 1670, importation was virtually prohibited. The statute 22nd Charles II., c. 13, imposed a duty of 16 shillings per quarter on foreign wheat when the price in this country was under 53s. 4d. per quarter; when above this average, and under 80s., the duty was 8s. per quarter; when above 80s., importation was free.

At no period of history was the rage for protective and prohibitory duties carried to such an extravagant excess as in the reign of Charles II. As an illustration of the absurd lengths to which the system was extended, we may mention the history of the law against the importation of black cattle from Ireland, which is equally amusing and instructive. The attention of the English House of Commons was called to the alarming fall of rents, consequent on the war with Holland, and all the ingenuity of statesmen was employed to account for this depreciation. The cause, indeed, was sufficiently obvious; foreign trade had been wantonly sacrificed, and home trade having declined in consequence, the farmers lost their best customers—the manufacturing consumers of agricultural produce. But this was too simple an explanation to be received, especially as it would have condemned the course of policy pursued by the Administration, and it was gravely declared that all the distress of England was caused by the importation of lean cattle from Ireland! The agricultural mind was deeply moved by this profound discovery; petitions against the obnoxious animals were presented to the King and Parliament in countless abundance; and a bill prohibiting their admission was introduced into the House of Commons. Its progress was arrested by the speedy termination of the Session; and the Great Fire of London, which took place about the time, seemed likely to divert attention from the subject. But the dispute about Irish cattle survived the flames, and even derived strength from the conflagration. When the news of the calamity was received in Ireland, the Irish resolved to send a present of cattle to relieve the sufferers. The faction of the Duke of Buckingham, who chose to represent the agricultural interest of that day, averred that this benevolence was only an insidious mode of introducing the dangerous cattle; the public clamour became louder than ever; a bill, declaring the importation of Irish cattle a nuisance, passed the Lower House with wondrous unanimity, and was sent up to the Lords. It was proposed to alter the word "nuisance" into "detriment and mischief," whereupon a fierce debate arose. Lord Arlington insisted that "nuisance" should be retained; Lord Ashley proposed that importation should only be deemed "præmunire or felony;" Lord Clarendon, with more wit and as much reason, moved that it should be held "adultery." Finally, the bill passed with the "nuisance" clause, and its result was that the Irish found better markets in France and Spain than those from which they had been excluded in England.

We have the high authority of Roger Coke to prove that this specimen of legislation for agricultural protection to corn and cattle totally failed in effecting its intended object. Writing in 1671, the year after the imposition of the prohibitory duties on the import of corn, he says, "The ends designed by the acts against the importation of Irish cattle, the raising of the rent of lands in England, are so far from being attained that the contrary hath ensued." He adds, what is confirmed by other contemporary writers, that much land was thrown out of cultivation in consequence of the change.

We can easily explain the cause of this result, which the protectionists had not anticipated. There is no more common and no greater mistake than to confound high prices with high profits. If high prices are the result of a high cost of production they will leave but a small margin of profit for the producer. Now, the restrictive laws of Charles II. greatly increased the cost of production to the farmer; they took away the profit he might have derived from fattening the Irish lean cattle, the supply of manure which he might have obtained from the same source, and the demand for articles to be exported to Ireland in exchange; on the other hand, they increased the cost of his seed and the price of the food of his labourers. There must be a previous outlay of grain to obtain a harvest of grain; the outlay is expended in seed and in the feeding of labourers and cattle; but when, by artificial means, the amount of this outlay is increased, the power of the farmer to cultivate is proportionally diminished.

The cheapness of wheat, which so alarmed the legislators of 1670, was, in fact, producing the most beneficial effects to the farming interests, by raising the standard of food among the poorer classes; they are described in contemporary publications as "traversing the markets to find out the finest wheats, for none else would now serve their turn, though before they were glad of the coarser rye-bread." Here, then, was an opportunity of introducing the best possible system of agriculture, in which, the inferior grain being applied to the feeding of cattle, abundant manure could be obtained to raise the finest wheat for the use of man. Prices, so far from being sustained by the new act, varied from 46s. to 27s. 7d. per quarter; there were no importations, but exportation was permitted at a nominal duty.

Such was the state of affairs at the period of the Revolution; and the gentlemen who represented the landed interest were exceedingly perplexed by the discovery that protection had not brought them any of the advantages which they had anticipated, but had in fact increased the evil which it was designed to remedy. Instead, however, of retracing their steps, they made a desperate plunge in advance, and introduced a system of bounties on exportation. In 1689 a bounty of five shillings per quarter was given on the exportation of corn, when the price in the home market did not exceed 48s. per quarter. We find it stated in the Report of the Agricultural Committee of the House of Commons in 1821, that the amount of export bounties paid out of the public revenue between 1679 and 1773, reached the sum of £6,237,176—a tolerably heavy payment made by the people of England for the privilege of eating dear bread.

Between the years 1715 and 1765 there were only five deficient harvests, and the price of wheat rarely ranged above 35s. per quarter; indeed, for ten years, the average was only 29s. 3d. It has been remarked by Malthus and others, that though the price of provisions fell during this period, the rate of wages steadily rose. What was saved in expenditure on provisions was spent in the employment of labour, and hence all our historians describe the reign of George II. as the period of the greatest social enjoyment in England. The laws against importation were imperative during the whole of this time, for the prices in the English market were lower than those of the Continent, and exportation would have continued even if the bounties had been withdrawn.

Soon after the accession of George III., a series of bad harvests produced general distress; the quartern loaf rose to eighteen-pence in London; addresses, complaining of increasing misery, poured in from all parts of the country; exportation was prohibited by Royal proclamation, and strict orders were issued for enforcing the laws against forestallers and regraters.

The prohibition of exportation was repeated in the following year, and also in 1770 and 1771. In 1772, the ports were opened for the admission of corn duty free; and in 1773, the Corporation of the City of London offered a bounty of 4s per quarter for the importation of 60,000 quarters of corn between the months of March and June. These fluctuations and vicissitudes led many to reflect on the impolicy of legislative interference with the natural supply of provisions to the people; and several able tracts were published, advocating the removal of restriction on import, and bounties on export, as being equally contrary to the laws of sound policy and the dictates of common sense. In 1772, an act was passed removing several vexatious restrictions; and the preamble contains the following remarkable declaration in favour of the principles of Free Trade. It says, that the statutes proposed to be repealed "by preventing a free trade in the said commodities (corn, flour, cattle, &c.) have a tendency to discourage the growth and enhance the price of the same, which statutes, put into execution, would bring great distress on the inhabitants of many parts of this kingdom." This is a gratifying evidence of the progress which sound principle had made; there was, however, a very powerful party which still clung to the delusions of the protective system—while the thorough free-traders were men of the closet, possessing little political influence, still contrived to see their doctrines gradually working their way on the public mind.

Circumstances were so favourable to a fair consideration of the relative claims of producers and consumers, that the Government determined to prepare a permanent Corn-Law, and they succeeded in passing an act, which lasted longer and worked better than any Corn-Law before or since. In the preparation of this law the leaders of the Opposition are said to have laboured conjointly with the Members of the Administration, and both sought not the best possible system, but that which seemed the best possible to be obtained under existing circumstances. It was neither zealously supported nor vehemently opposed; all parties were heartily tired of the recent fluctuations and the irritating disputes to which they gave rise; and on all sides there was an obvious disposition to a reasonable compromise. The importation of corn at the nominal duty of 6d. per quarter was allowed when the price of middling British wheat was at, or above, 48s. per quarter: exportation and bounties ceased when the price fell to 44s per quarter: foreign corn was allowed to be warehoused in England, and to be re-exported free of duty. The admission of foreign corn to the home market was thus granted on very favourable terms; but the imports were so steady that they produced very little effect upon price. There were, however, occasional murmurings from the old advocates of protection; but these were quieted by conceding some alterations in the system of taking the averages—alterations which, it must be confessed, were, in most instances, very desirable improvements.

The greatest defect in the act of 1773 was the fixing of the pivot price so high as 48 shillings per quarter—a price far above the average of the preceding half century, and calculated entirely from the years of recent scarcity. A higher fixed duty, placed on a much lower average, would have better answered all the purposes of the Government; it would have given a wider scope to commercial enterprise; it would have enabled the English farmer to calculate with more precision his chances of competition with the foreign producer; and it would have added considerably to the revenue—a matter of great importance at a time when questions of revenue were about to plunge the nation into a destructive war.

After a very careful examination of the debates and private letters of the period, we are forced to the conclusion that there were parties who assented to this act as a permanent settlement, with the secret determination of effecting a change at the earliest opportunity. This, indeed, is nowhere avowed explicitly, but we find frequent complaints of the nation being rendered dependent on foreigners for its supply of food, and numerous remonstrances on the necessity of giving greater encouragement to the home production of agricultural returns. The cry for protection to native industry was principally raised by Mr. Fox and his immediate followers, of whom Burke alone seems to have fully adopted the principles of Free Trade; but this was an age in which the obligations of party had so completely overwhelmed the duties of principle, that we can hardly quote parliamentary speeches as evidences of real opinion.

In 1787 a discussion took place in the British Parliament, involving every principle in which Corn-Laws are founded, though these laws were not so much as named from the beginning to the end of the debate. We allude to the debate on Mr. Pitt's commercial treaty with France, the greatest advance to the recognition of free interchange of commodities, as the best security for preserving the harmony of nations, which is to be found in the world's history. Pitt was, on this occasion, opposed by Fox, and the great body of the Whigs, who dwelt strongly on the old national hostility between England and France, and on the illusory advantages expected from the Methuen Treaty with Portugal. But the most remarkable speech delivered against the great commercial treaty was that of Mr. Grey, the member for Northumberland, who subsequently, as Earl Grey, did more than any other statesman to counteract the opinions which he then enunciated. A few short years sufficed to place the parties in the very opposite positions: Pitt and his followers being the vehement assailants of France—Fox and his adherents professing themselves the friends of that country. This debate left consequences behind it, which those by whom it was sustained could not have been supposed to anticipate. The Free Trade doctrines of Pitt were very imperfectly understood by his supporters among the country gentlemen, while the appeals of Fox to their hereditary prejudices found a ready echo in their bosoms. The Minister was unwilling to risk power for an abstract doctrine of political economy, and his rival had precluded himself from exhibiting the danger to which the best interests of the country would be exposed by reviving the old notions of extravagant protection. The Minister was dependent on their support; the leaders of the Opposition were committed to their principles, when the advocates of agricultural protection carried the Corn-Law of 1791, probably the worst of the many bad laws which have ever been passed, to restrict commerce, in the supply to a nation of the necessaries of life.

The law of 1791 enacted that the bounty on exportation should be paid when wheat was under 44s. per quarter, and that all exportation should cease when it reached 46s. per quarter. This enactment was a dead letter, for, during the ten preceding years, wheat had been above the average when a bounty was admissible. The real object of the law was to prevent importation, and, for this purpose, it was ordained that, when wheat was under 50s. per quarter, it should be subject to the "high duty" of 24s. 3d. per quarter; between 50s. and 54s., to the first "low duty" of 2s. 6d. per quarter; and above 54s., to the duty of 6d. per quarter. Of course, the duty on wheat when the price was under 50s. per quarter, amounted to an absolute prohibition. The average price of wheat in the ten years ending 1775, was 40s. 8d., and in the ten years ending 1789 was 45s. 9d. per quarter. The excess of importation over exportation during the entire twenty years was about 660,000 quarters, a quantity not likely to produce any perceptible effect upon the markets. During this period of comparatively Free Trade, agriculture improved most rapidly, and, in spite of the disasters of the American war, the financial condition of the country indicated both prosperity and stability.

The design of the law of 1791 was to prevent, or at least to put a very severe check on the importation of foreign corn. We have seen that, under the circumstances of the year of 1773, the excess of imports over exports was very trifling; but, under the act of 1791, confessedly designed to prevent any excess, the imports overbalanced the exports in the thirteen years from 1791 to 1803, to the amount of about six millions and a half quarters of wheat and flour. Under the liberal system the average annual import was about 50,000 quarters; under the exclusive system it nearly reached 500,000 quarters. But this was not the only or the worst evil arising from the revival of the protective system. These imports were obtained at the cost of enormous sacrifices, and brought the nation to the very verge of destruction. In January, 1795, the average price of wheat was 55s. 7d., but in August it had risen to 108s. 4d., and the evils of famine were felt through the length and breadth of the land. Mr. Pitt acted with more promptitude and firmness than he had evinced in 1791: Parliament was assembled in October, and the Royal Speech mentioned the high price of grain as a subject of the greatest anxiety. Acts of Parliament were hastily passed, offering large bounties on the importation of wheat, until the quantities received reached the amount calculated to cover the deficiency, which was loosely estimated at rather more than a million of quarters. There was something supremely ridiculous in thus offering a bribe for the import of the corn which so short a time before had been excluded by a virtually prohibitory duty; and it is obvious from the debates that the Minister bitterly felt the degradation of the position which he occupied. But the matter had become too serious for ridicule. The corn-growers of the Continent, excluded from the English markets by the law of 1791, had of course made no preparations for such an unexpected event as the sudden opening of the ports; there was no surplus to spare in Europe; and the selfish tendency of our policy was not likely to incite to any generous impulses. The exigency of the moment neared, and vessels laden with grain were seized on the high seas, and the masters were forced to sell their cargoes to the agents of the British Government. Protection had to be supported by piracy. The excitement in the country was extreme, and there is reason to believe that Pitt was inclined to take advantage of it to propose to a more liberal policy in the Corn-trade, but he was dissuaded by his colleagues: and, instead of diminishing protection, he imposed a tax on hair-powder to lessen the consumption of wheat!

The violent passions excited by the French Revolution, and the fanaticism of those who looked to organic changes in the Constitution as a remedy for social evils, combined to render a discussion of the Corn-Laws on the naked ground of principle utterly impossible. It is unjust to throw all the blame of the calamities that occurred on the Administration of the day: their opponents deserve just as much blame, and the nation itself, which remained passive during the crisis, or was only active on matters totally unconnected with the evil, deserves more to be blamed than either. Something, however, may be pleaded in excuse. So long as a bounteous Providence, by sending good harvests, defeats the artificial legislation designed to produce high prices and scarcity, the operation of the Corn-Laws is not felt, and few trouble their head about their operation; when, however, these protections and prohibitions come into operation, their stringency increases so very rapidly as to overwhelm men with the dread of immediate famine, and lead them to seek an immediate, rather than a prospective remedy. Free trade would not have saved the nation in 1795; it would only have averted the recurrence of a similar calamity in future years; but men were too eager to avert immediate ruin to think of providing against prospective dangers.

In 1799, another set of extensive failures of the harvest occurred; wheat rose from 49s. 6d., in the beginning of the year, to 94s. 2d., at its close. Bounties were again offered, but no preparations had been made to meet this unexpected demand, and very little corn came in. Prices continued to advance, and in June, 1800, wheat was quoted at the average of 124s. 5d. the quarter; in consequence of some considerable importations, it fell to 96s. in August, but the harvest of 1800 having also proved deficient, it advanced to 133s. in December, and in March, 1801, it averaged 156s. 2d. per quarter. Universal misery was the result; but the landlords were cheered by the prospect of raising their rents, and those tenants who had leases began to speculate on enormous profits. Mr. Tooke, in his admirable work on the history of prices, insinuates that the landlords, as a class, and the tenants who had leases, did actually derive immense gains from the public calamity. Having very careful ly scrutinised the records of the period, we are convinced that both these classes suffered by the famine, as well as the rest of the community, and that advantages were only reaped by a few fortunate individuals. These exceptional cases, however, lured the classes to which they belonged into a course of policy which has not yet been abandoned. They persuaded themselves that high prices must, of necessity, produce high rents and high profits, and reasoned themselves into the belief that the interests of consumers were the last thing to be considered if, indeed, they would allow them to be considered at all—in protective legislation. Abundant harvests in 1801—2, and 3, brought down prices; in the beginning of 1804, wheat was only at an average of 49s. 6d. Meetings were immediately held, to demand additional protection to agriculture, and there were some circumstances which disposed the influential parties to lend a favourable ear to such a proposition.

Notwithstanding the enormous advance in the price of food in 1801, the wages of labour had not been increased in anything like the same proportion, and, in most instances, no addition whatever was made to the pay of the agricultural labourer. But the salaries of persons holding official situations under the Government had been raised, and it was feared that if bread became cheap they would be brought back to their former level. Hence the protectionists had very powerful support when they applied for the revival of the Corn-Law of 1791 early in the session of 1804. It is not uninstructive to consider the reasons assigned for rendering the Corn-Laws more stringent, by the Parliamentary Committee appointed to consider the claims of the agriculturists. They state, that the "price of corn from 1791 to the harvest of 1803 had been very irregular; but, upon an average, increased in a great degree by the years of scarcity, had in general yielded a fair profit to the grower." Here they set out with a confession, that steadiness of price, one of the greatest of the professed objects of Corn Law legislation, had been found quite unattainable—that the prices with which alone they should be content must include years of scarcity in the calculation of their averages; and that the miseries of unsatisfied consumers are nothing when compared to the securing of fair profit to the grower. Assuredly, never before was such a candid document submitted to the world as the basis of what is called protective legislation. The Committee goes on to say, "The casual high prices, however, have had the effect of stimulating industry, and bringing into culture large tracts of waste land, which, combined with the two last productive seasons, has occasioned such a depression in the value of grain, as is feared will greatly tend to the discouragement of agriculture, unless sustained by Parliament." The grammar of this oracular sentence is much on a par with its reasoning; but the matter is too weighty for verbal criticism. It makes all the difference in the world whether a healthy or an unhealthy stimulus be given to industry: the duty of a legislator is not simply to see that labour is employed, but that it is profitably employed; labour forms part of the national capital, and when it is unprofitably employed, there is just so much of the national capital wasted. Yet there are men who write and speak as if it would be equally advantageous to employ labour in building Egyptian pyramids as in constructing railway. The value of labour in a country must be estimated, not by the amount of the labour expended, but by the value of the results obtained. Now if we examine the Report of the Committee, we shall find that their own arguments demonstrate the impolicy of their own demands. They declare that industry had been stimulated to an excess of production which could not remunerate the producer unless supported by Parliament. This actually was the fact,—the prices obtained by a few fortunate holders of corn during the time of high prices, produced a mania for agricultural speculation just as insensate as the railway speculation of the present year; ground was taken at exorbitant rents; corn was sown in soils utterly unfit for tillage; the production of wheat was supposed to be an operation analogous to coining, and the result was such an excess of supply over demand, as at once to produce a rapid fall of prices. It would have been the part of wise men to see that the stimulus to such unhealthy production should be removed; the very terms of their own Report showed that the system of protection had rendered the growing of corn a mere gambling speculation; but yet, with short sighted cupidity, they assigned these obvious results as the reason why for the continuance, but even for the extension of the protective system.

By the new Corn-Law the "high duty" of 24s. 3d. was to be paid when wheat was under 63s. per quarter, the first "low duty" when wheat was at 63s. and under 66s., and the nominal duty of 6d. when wheat was above 66s. per quarter. Thus, the free import or exportation point which had been fixed at 48s. by the law of 1778, had been raised to 54s. in 1791, and to 66s. in 1804, taking a stride of six shillings at one period, and of twelve shillings at another! It has been well said that protective cupidity, like other species of appetite, grows by what it feeds upon. The bounty of 5s. per quarter on exportation was to be paid when the average price of wheat was at or under 48s. per quarter, and when the average rose to 48s., exportation was to be prohibited. These two provisions of the act remained inoperative; and the legislators intended that they should be a dead letter. Before we come to examine the operation of this act, we may mention that in 1806 a law was passed, permitting the free interchange of every species of grain between Great Britain and Ireland. Thus, Ireland, which had been previously treated as a colony, was placed on an equality with the rest of the United Kingdom.

The crop of 1804 proved deficient; prices began rapidly to rise towards the close of the year, and the legislators complacently assigned this change to the operation of the new act, instead of attributing it to the dispensations of Providence. Wheat, which had been sold at 49s. 6d. the quarter in March, rose to 86s. 2d. in December. These great fluctuations in price were very injurious to the manufacturing and operative classes, and might have been ruinous, had not the continental wars prevented the growth of any rival industry. During the next three years the crops were rather above than below the average: but all the harvests of the five years between 1808 and 1813, were very deficient; indeed, that of 1812 was almost a total failure, both in quantity and quality. In the August of that year, the average prices were—for wheat, 155s.; barley, 79s. 10d.; and oats, 56s. 2d. Mr. Tooke, to whose accurate History of Prices, we have been largely indebted, informs us that samples of the best Dantzic wheat were sold in Mark-lane for 180s., and that oats, in one or two instances, were sold at the enormous price of 84s. per quarter.

The double extravagance of the protective system, which is designed to produce artificial scarcity, but which, when that scarcity approaches the pressure of a famine, compels us to import food at any cost and at all hazards, was frequently shown during this period. In 1810 we imported the great quantity of 1,500,000 quarters of wheat and flour, and 600,000 quarters of other grain and meal. This fact is worthy of remembrance, as being, in a remarkable degree, illustrative of the axiom that no difficulties interposed by a Government are adequate to prevent the transmission of grain to a profitable market. A large proportion of the foreign grain at that time imported was brought for consumption to this country from France; it was actually the produce of the soil of our most bitter enemy; and it surely should be sufficient for us to call to mind this fact, coupled with the remembrance of the deadly character then assumed by the contest between France and England, to be convinced that, so long as we possess the means of paying for the food which other countries can spare, we never shall be without an adequate supply of the necessaries of life.

There was a very large quantity of corn smuggled into English ports as Irish produce during this period, which was really the growth of foreign soils; the large fortunes made by the speculators dazzled those who were not in the secret, and greatly increased the public delusion respecting the profitable nature of a protected trade. There are no means available for calculating the extent to which this illicit trade was carried, but we have reason to know that more corn was imported into England from Ireland in a single year than the Irish soil could possibly produce in three.

Mr. Porter, in his valuable work on the Progress of the Nation, justly remarks that some abatement must be made in the estimate of these high prices on account of the depreciated state of the currency at the period. He says, "The average price of wheat in 1816 was 103s. 3d. per quarter; but this rate, owing to the then depreciated state of the currency, was not equal to more than 90s. if paid in gold. In 1812 the price advanced to 122s.; but the depreciation of the currency was then still greater, and the real price was not above £5 per quarter." This range of high prices, owing to a cycle of deficient harvests more than to any other cause, had been of such unusually long continuance that both landlords and farmers began to speculate upon its continuance. In too many instances they calculated on an average of produce sold at the prices of scarcity, and as a great amount of gain had been really distributed among the agricultural classes, it was difficult to convince them that their dream of prosperity was a mere delusion. Between 1809 and 1813 rents rose with unexampled rapidity; men totally unfitted for such an avocation, quitted the branches of industry to which they had been trained, and turned farmers, and this competition gave a fictitious value to land, which could not possibly be sustained when the return of average harvests reduced prices to a more natural level. After the abundant crop of 1813, the price of wheat fell to 73s. 6d. per quarter, and the harvest of 1814 being also favourable, the averages fell to 53s. 7d. per quarter. This depression of prices happening at the time when hostilities had been brought to a close, was very generally ascribed to the transition from war to peace, a cause which really produced a very trifling effect on the market. Agriculturists attributed their distress, not to the mistaken basis which they had taken for the calculation of their probable remuneration, but to the foreign competition likely to arise from the restored tranquility of the continent, and the consequent increased facilities of intercommunication.

A Committee of the House of Lords was appointed to consider the whole question of the Corn Laws. It recommended that the importation of corn should be absolutely prohibited so long as the price of wheat was under 80s. per quarter; so that protection, which had taken 48s. for the pivot point in 1773, after having advanced to 54s. in 1791, and 66s. in 1804, now took a further increase of 14s.; and, even with this amount, many ardent protectionists declared themselves dissatisfied, requiring that the ports should not be opened until the average price of wheat reached 86s. per quarter. The bill for giving effect to these recommendations was deferred to the ensuing year, but an act was passed abolishing the entire system of bounties and permitting the free export of corn at all times.

We come now to the year 1815, from which it is too much the fashion to date the history of the Corn-Laws, for the causes which led to the legislation of that year can scarcely be understood without a previous investigation of the course of previous legislation on the subject. At the beginning of the year the average price of corn was 60s. per quarter, and, as the averages were steadily rising, it was manifest that the pivot point fixed by the law of 1804, that is 66s, per quarter, would be soon reached when the ports would be thrown open for the admission of corn at a nominal duty. Under these circumstances a bill was introduced by Mr. Frederick Robinson, now Earl of Ripon, to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee of the preceding year. The measure was opposed, on the part of the manufacturing interests, by the late Sir Robert Peel, with great force of argument, and with an honourable zeal for preserving the rights of the class from which he sprung. A still more formidable opponent of the proposed Corn-Law was Mr. Alexander Baring, the present Lord Ashburton, who was supported by the whole weight and influence of the monetary and commercial interests. On the 3rd of March an effort was made to throw out the bill, but there were only 55 votes for the motion, while the numbers against it amounted to 218. A majority of 163 seemed decisive of the success of the measure. The greatest excitement, however, prevailed in the country, especially in the large towns and manufacturing districts. Placards were posted, protesting against levying a tax on the food of the people; violent harangues were made, which injured the cause they were designed to serve, by alarming the fears of the timid, and some foolish demonstrations of popular violence afforded a pretext for quelling resistance by the employment of a military force. On the 6th of March an excited multitude assembled round the doors of the House of Commons; members were stopped and questioned as to the vote which they intended to give, and some leading advocates of the measure were rather roughly handled. Ultimately the military were called out, and the streets cleared. This duty was not very gently performed; Mr. Lambton, the late Lord Durham, interrupted the debate, to complain to the House of the presence of a military force, and it was not without the difficulty that the Speaker succeeded in calming the excitement which this incident produced. Such indeed was the alarm which prevailed, that the gallery during that evening was closed against strangers.

The houses of several of the leading advocates of the Corn-Laws were attacked, and some injury done to the plate and furniture. Shots were fired at Mr. Robinson's house, at Mr. Robinson, now Lord Ripon, by which two innocent persons were killed, and the Coroner's jurors subsequently found verdicts of wilful murder against certain members of Mr. Robinson's household. Other advocates of the measure, including even the popular Mr. Wilberforce, had detachments of soldiers and police stationed at their houses. But the Government was not daunted; troops were marched to London from Windsor, Brighton, and all the neighbouring stations, so that for some days London had the appearance of a city occupied by a hostile garrison. In the mean time the bill was passed with more than usual rapidity through its stages in the Lower House, and sent up to the Lords.

The escape of Napoleon from Elba occurring at this crisis, gave such a diversion to the public mind as to withdraw attention from the progress of the Corn-Law. Its supporters took advantage of the conjuncture to accelerate its progress through the House of Lords; the motion of Earl Grey for time to collect additional information, was very unceremoniously rejected; and, on the 20th of March, the third reading was carried by a majority of 107, the numbers being 138 contents, and 21 non-contents. A very spirited and argumentative Protest, embodying the opinions of the minority, prepared by Lord Grenville, was entered on the journals. This celebrated document is still regarded as a kind of text-book, by the opponents of the Corn-Laws. The Corporation of the City of London, which had, from its first introduction, vehemently opposed the measure, addressed an admirable argumentative remonstrance to the Prince Regent, praying him to withhold the Royal assent from the bill. This Address was presented on the 23rd of March, and on the evening of the same day the Royal assent was given to the measure.

Protection had now touched the highest point of all its greatness. Until the average price of corn reached 80s. the ports were to be closed absolutely and effectually; even colonial wheat, though then produced in very inconsiderable quantities, could not be admitted until the averages reached 67s. per quarter. Even this stringency was also introduced by the system of striking the averages. It was provided that a new average should be struck quarterly, on the 15th of February, May, August, and November; but it was provided that if during the six weeks subsequent to any of these dates the average prices should fall below the stipulated amount of 80s., no supplies should be admitted for home consumption from any ports between the Eyder and the Bidassoa, that is from Denmark to Spain.

The professed purpose of this act was to secure to the farmer the following rate of prices for his produce:—wheat, 80s. per quarter; rye, beans, and pulse, 53s. per quarter; barley, 40s. per quarter; and oats, 27s. per quarter. Three deficient harvests in 1816–17–18 raised the prices above the rates at which foreign grain was admissible; and, in the two latter years, above 2,800,000 quarters were imported. But high prices produced their usual effect of affording temptation to extravagant speculation. A more extended breadth of country was placed under cultivation, and, Providence having granted a most favourable season, the crop of 1820 was estimated to have exceeded the average produce by one-third, or one-fourth. A tolerable harvest in 1821 did not tend to reduce the surplus, and the disproportion between demand and supply was further increased by the superabundant harvest of 1822, which, besides, came unusually early. Prices fell to a ruinously low point; farmers had covenanted for leases and rents, based on the confident expectation of being able to obtain the average prices which the Legislature had fixed as the limit of prohibition. In this confidence they had had fixed as the limit of prohibition. In this confidence they had had fixed as the limit of prohibition. In this confidence they had columns, the prices sanctioned by the Legislature, the prices obtained in the market, and the difference between them, which may be taken as the measure of the farmer's loss.

	Legislative Price.	Market Average.	Difference per qr.
Wheat	80s.	38s. 5d.	41s. 4d.
Barley	40s.	29s. 4d.	10s. 8d.
Rye	53s.	23s. 6d.	29s. 6d.
Beans	53s.	28s 10d.	24s. 2d.
Peas	53s.	29s. 4d.	23s. 8d.
Oats	27s.	18s. 9d.	8s. 3d.

This ruinous speculation was obviously caused by the false expectations which the Corn-Laws had encouraged; they had led to an extent of corn-tillage more than commensurate to the average consumption of the country in favourable seasons, and, of course, there had been an excess of supply under the contingency of a succession of abundant harvests. It was confessed on all sides that importation had no influence whatever in producing these disastrous results; they were, obviously, the consequence of the system of protection, and yet a new form of protection was adopted as the proper remedy. A new law was passed in 1822, establishing a different scale of duties, which stood as follows:—Wheat at or above 70s., which was now made the pivot point, to pay a duty of 12s., and 5s. additional for the first three months; above 80s. and under 85s., the first low duty of 5s., with an additional 5s. for the first three months; above 85s., there was only a nominal duty of 1s. This law can hardly be said to have ever come fairly into operation; its stringency on importation, after the unfavourable harvest of 1826, was found to be dangerous, and a temporary act was passed, by which a considerable quantity of foreign grain was admitted for home consumption. But, in 1827, when Ministers were pressed to open the ports, they peremptorily refused; prices rose—scarcity threatened the industrious—dangerous tumults took place in the manufacturing districts, and the Government, in alarm, hurried a bill through Parliament permitting all the corn then in bond to be entered for home consumption, and granting the power of admitting half a million quarters of corn at a future time, should the ensuing harvest prove deficient. Such a contingency arrived, and in a more severe form than had been anticipated. The Ministers threw the ports open to certain descriptions of grain in September, and obtained an indemnity from Parliament in the ensuing session. Mr. Canning made an effort to pass a new Corn-Law, on the principle of permitting the free admission of corn at all times on the payment of certain duties graduated by the scale of average prices, or what is now called the principle of the sliding scale. This measure was defeated by the Duke of Wellington in the House of Lords, and abandoned. A temporary act was passed for liberating the corn in bond upon payment of duties according to a fluctuating scale. Nearly 500,000 quarters of wheat were liberated under this act, at a duty averaging above 20s. per quarter. The harvest had been abundant, and the high duty was paid to force the corn into consumption, as there seemed no prospect of such an advance in price as would produce a large diminution of duty. The merchants and importers suffered severe losses by this transaction, while the English farmer was not in the slightest degree benefited.

Before going further, we must notice a change made in the mode of striking and applying the averages in the year 1821. The weekly rates of sale were taken by inspectors in one hundred and forty-five towns named in the act; the average of six weeks of such averages determined the rate of duty in the scale at which imports were admitted, but this latter average was struck anew every successive week, so that the duty fluctuated every seven days. This element of uncertainty was united to the sliding scale proposed by Mr. Charles Grant (afterwards Lord Glenelg) in 1828, the act establishing which received the Royal assent on the 13th of July. We shall insert a table exhibiting the differences between Mr. Canning's and Lord Glenelg's scales, and the duties imposed by each according to the average price of wheat.

Averages of Wheat.	Canning's Scale of Duties.	Glenelg's Scale of Duties.
s.	s. d.	s. d.
73	1 0	1 0
72	1 0	2 8
71	1 0	6 8
70	1 0	10 8
69	2 0	13 8
68	4 0	16 8
67	6 0	18 8
66	8 0	20 8
65	10 0	21 8
64	12 0	22 8
63	14 0	23 8
62	16 0	24 8
61	18 0	25 8
60	20 0	26 8
59	22 0	27 8
58	24 0	28 8
57	26 0	29 8
56	28 0	30 8
55	30 0	31 8
54	32 0	32 8
53	34 0	33 8

It is obvious that Lord Glenelg's scale is much more prohibitory and protective than that proposed by Mr. Canning; in the latter, there is a rest at the averages from 70 to 73 shillings, inclusive, at the rate of one shilling: while in the scale which received the sanction of Parliament there is a series of jumps in this interval which raise the duty from one shilling to 10s. 8d.; all the alterations made in Canning's Bill were decidedly unfavourable to the consumer, and we shall soon see that they brought no compensating benefit to the producer.

Under the article Corn Laws, in "Knight's Political Dictionary," an article to which we have been frequently indebted for the statistical information here collected, we find the following account of the effect of this act. "Wheat at 50s. paid a duty of 36s. 8d.; barley at 32s., a duty of 13s. 10d.; oats at 24s., a duty of 10s. 9d. Colonial wheat was admitted at a duty of 6d. when the average of the six weeks was at or above 67s.; and when below 67s. the duty was 5s. the quarter, and for other grain in proportion. Importation was free on payment of a duty of one shilling the quarter when wheat in the home market was 73s. the quarter; barley, 41s.; oats, 31s.; and rye, peas, and beans, 46s. the quarter."

The great evil of this sliding scale to consumers was that it levied a far heavier tax than it professed to raise. In years when the crop, though not deficient in quantity, was inferior in quality, the averages were struck on the price of bad wheat, and thus the nutritive grain was either entirely excluded, or could only be obtained at a most enormous price. This was, in fact, illustrated within the last ten weeks, when there was a difference of more than twenty shillings per quarter between the price of the best wheat and of the inferior qualities in Mark-lane. The cost of nutritive grain was thus fixed by the price of that which was less fit for human food. Lord Fitzwilliam early foresaw this result of the sliding scale, and protested against it with great sagerness and earnestness, but his warnings past unheeded, until the discrepancy became so glaring towards the close of the last year.

Another consequence of the sliding scale was to render the Corn-trade, to a great extent, a mere gambling speculation. "The gain of speculators," says Mr. Salomons, "is calculated not only on the advance in the price of corn, but also on the fall in the scale of duty; and, as the duty falls in a greater ratio than the price of the corn rises, the duty operates as a bounty to withhold sales. There was a great temptation to raise the averages by fictitious sales. Supposing corn to be at the average of 63s., the duty was 23s. 8d.; but, if the averages could be raised 10s. higher, the speculator could liberate his corn from bond at 1s.; and, if he had a large stock, the temptation to get it into the market at a low rate was all but irresistible. In the year 1838, the duty underwent thirty different changes, between January and November, and, in the short period of two weeks, went up from 1s. to 10s. 8d. per quarter; but this immense variation must be attributed to the jerks or jumps in Lord Glenelg's sliding scale.

We copy from the article in "Knight's Political Dictionary" an example of the great variations of the sliding scale in the short space of six weeks, of the year 1838:—

Week ending	Sept. 13th	.. ..	.. 1s 0d.
"	20th	.. ..	.. 2s 8d
"	27th	.. ..	. 10s 8d.
"	Oct. 4th	.. .	.. 16s 8d.
"	11th	.. ..	.. 23s 8d.
"	18th	.. ..	2.s 8d.
"	25th	. ..	. 22s. 8d.

During the week of nominal duty, no less than 1,514,047 quarters of foreign wheat were liberated from bond, and flung suddenly into the English markets, deranging every calculation of the merchant and farmer, but affording a rich harvest to the speculators. The cargoes which arrived too late to profit by the low duties perished in the warehouses, and were thrown into the sea when they became unfit for human food. It is obvious that such speculation could only be ventured upon in neighbouring markets—such as Hamburg, Dantzic, and the ports of the Baltic; hence there was a scramble, when the scale approached the lowest duty, in these markets, which deranged the whole course of English commerce. There could be no demand for our manufactures, no call for corn came by its sad starts, for which no mercantile provision could be made; and the export of bullion which thus became necessary, caused great confusion in all monetary affairs, and at one time threatened to drain the Bank of England.

Fluctuations of price were not prevented, as we have seen, from the variations in the rates of duty already noticed, and agricultural distress attained such height in the years 1833 and 1836, that it was noticed in the King's Speech at the opening of Parliament; and Committees of Parliament were appointed in both years to investigate the subject, but without attaining any practical result.

The worst evils of the Corn-Laws were, however, felt in the manufacturing districts. In the autumn of 1838 an association was formed to obtain their repeal; and Mr. Paulton, with whom the movement chiefly originated, accompanied by Mr. J. B. Smith, delivered lectures on the subject in the principal towns of the kingdom. From this association sprung the Anti Corn-Law League, which has now become so powerful as a political body, though holding itself aloof from political party.

It was now obvious that the Corn-Laws, as they stood, could not be maintained, and Lord John Russell, as the organ of the Government, on the 7th of May, 1841, proposed that the principle of a sliding scale should be abandoned altogether, and a system of fixed duties established in its stead. The fixed duties proposed by Lord John Russell were as follows:—

Wheat	8s. 0d. per Quarter.
Rye, peas, and beans	5 0 "
Barley	4 6 "
Oats	3 4 "

It is not necessary to discuss the policy of a project which never passed into a law, and which has since been formally abandoned by its proposer. In the general election, which took place in June and July, 1841, the Government was defeated, and the preponderating influence of the agricultural interest led to the formation of a new Ministry supposed to be favourable to the continuance of agricultural protection.

The sliding scale was originally designed by its author, Mr. Huskisson, as a compromise between the agricultural and manufacturing interests. Having been rejected when proposed by Mr. Canning, it was rendered more stringently protective before it was again submitted to Parliament by Lord Glenelg. Its effects, however, had been so disastrous, that it was too generally condemed to be maintained; and, soon after his accession to power, Sir Robert Peel resolved that it should undergo some very important modifications. The uncertainty of its operations, the temptations it held out to tampering with the averages, and the inefficiency of the system as a source of revenue, are shown from the following return of the quantities of foreign corn admitted, and the rates of duty paid during the continuance of the first sliding scale, that is from the 15th of July, 1828, to the 29th of April, 1842. It will be seen that nearly one-half of the foreign wheat and flour was admitted at the lowest rate of duty, and comparatively little at the higher rates.

Duty.	Wheat.	Wheat Flour.
1s.	5,788,045 qrs.	1,753,379 cwts.
2s. 8d.	2,880,613	862 262
6s. 8d.	1,997,226	510,123
10s. 8d.	826,342	243,120

We shall now compare Mr. Canning's proposed sliding scale, and that established in 1828, with the scale adopted by Parliament, on the recommendation of Sir Robert Peel, in 1842.

Average per Quarter. Canning Scale. Glenelg, or 1828 Scale. Peel, or 1842 Scale.

s.	s.	s. d.	s.
73	1	1 0	1
72	1	2 8	2
71	1	6 8	3
70	1	10 8	4
69	2	13 8	5
68	4	16 8	5
67	6	18 8	5
66	8	20 8	6
65	10	21 8	7
64	12	22 8	8
63	14	23 8	9
62	16	24 8	10
61	18	25 8	11
60	20	26 8	12
59	22	27 8	13
58	24	28 8	14
57	26	29 8	15
56	28	30 8	16
55	30	31 8	17
54	32	32 8	17
53	34	33 8	17
52	0	0 0	18
51	0	0 0	19
All under	0	0 0	20

Without entering into any detailed comparison of these systems, we may note that Mr. Canning wished to secure the native producer a mean price of 66s. per quarter; Lord Glenelg, a mean price of 72s.; and Sir Robert Peel, a mean price of 56s. per quarter. It may be added that both sliding scales have failed in fulfilling the expectations they raised. Under Lord Glenelg's act the averages were as low as 58s. in 1832, 52s. in 1833, 46s. in 1834, 39s. in 1835, and 36s. in 1836. Under Sir Robert Peel's act, the averages were down to 45s. in the spring of last year.

The lowest rate of duty under Sir R. Peel's act occurs for rye, peas, and beas, when the price is 42s. and upwards per quarter; for barley, when the price is 37s.; and for oats, when the price is 27s. per quarter and upwards. One hundred and thirty-eight new towns have been added to the one hundred and fifty by which the averages were regulated under the former act. The average of six weeks regulates importation as before.

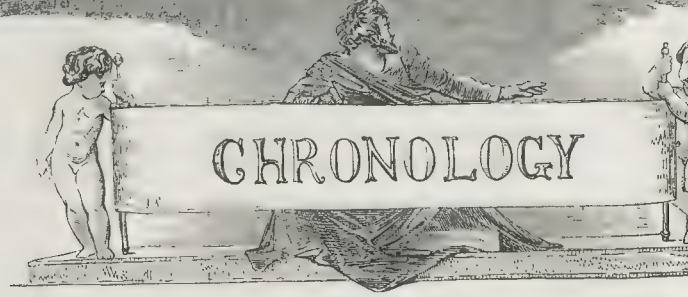
Further changes were subsequently made by Sir Robert Peel; one regulating the corn-trade with all the British Colonies except Canada; the other exclusively confined to the Canadian trade. It will be seen that both of these acts, but more especially the latter, grant great relaxations in the protective system. Under the act of 1828 the duty on colonial wheat was 5s. when the averages were under 67s. per quarter, but permitted importation at a nominal duty of 6d. when the averages rose above that sum. By Sir Robert Peel's act regulating the importation of colonial corn, the following rates are established:—

Under 55s. the quarter	a duty of 5s.
55s. and under 56s.	" 4s.
56s. and under 57s.	" 3s.
57s. and under 58s.	" 2s.
58s. and upwards	" 1s.

The Canadian Legislature, at the instance of the British Government, having imposed a duty of 3s. per quarter on all wheat imported into Canada, an Act was passed, which came into operation in 1843, admitting Canadian corn to be imported for home consumption at all times, on payment of a fixed duty of 1s. per quarter. Thus, we have at this moment three distinct sets of laws and regulations for the importation of corn—1st, the foreign sliding scale; 2nd, the colonial sliding scale; and 3rd, the Canadian fixed duty.

The progress of the party opposed to all restrictions on the importation of food is not accurately measured by the increase of support which Mr. Villiers's motion for the total and immediate repeal of the Corn-Laws has received; but, even thus viewed, its advance is remarkable. In 1842, the supporters of Mr. Villiers's motion formed a minority of 92; their numbers increased to 140 in 1843; to 165 in 1844; and to 188 in 1845.

We have brought down the history of the legislation on the import of corn to the present crisis, when a further change is imminent. On the nature of that change we have no wish to speculate; instead of discussing a doubtful present, we have been anxious to exhibit the experience of the past, as a source of guidance and direction for the future.



JULY 1, TO DECEMBER 24.

JULY.

1. A splendid Hippodrome opened at Paris.—News received of an extensive fire at Calcutta, on May 13; and of the burning of the Academy of Fine Arts, Philadelphia, June 11.—Terrible steam-boat explosion at New Orleans 30 persons killed or maimed.

3. The manufacturing town of Thuris, canton of the Grisons, destroyed by fire.—Great fire at Smyrna: 7000 houses burnt.

4. Funeral of Sir William Follett, in the Temple Church.—Continued disturbances by the Jesuits, at Lucerne.

5. Decrease on the Quarter's Revenue, £739,547.—Lord Huntingtower refused protection by the Court of Bankruptcy.—News of the burning and massacre of 600 Arabs by the French troops in Algeria

6. Destructive storm at Havre.—Insurrection in Catalonia.

7. A drunken juror committed by the Coroner to Gilmour street Compter.—Great thunder-storm at Nottingham.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly appointed Solicitor-General.

8. News of the death of Gen Jackson, June 8; and of an affray and slaughter in New Zealand.

9. In the House of Commons, the Ministry escaped a defeat only by a Majority of 9 on the Scotch Universities Bill.—Dr. Alderstallah, Chief Rabbi of the English Jews.

10. Robberies and assassinations continued throughout Greece.—Frightful ravages of cholera in Western India.

11. Dreadful shipwreck in the Black Sea: 130 persons perished.—The British and French ships of war prepared for action at Buenos Ayres.

12. Riot and loss of life at Armagh. -Continued insurrection and slaughter in Catalonia —The fine town of Termosa, in Bulgaria, destroyed by fire.—Third conflict in New Zealand between the settlers and Heki's party, the British troops repulsed.

14. The Exhibition of Cartoons in Westminster Hall opened gratuitously.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly returned M.P. for Cambridge, by a majority of 17 only

15. Grand Pas de Quatre at her Majesty's Theatre, by Taglioni, C. Grisi, L. Grahn, and Carlo.—The Royal Court of Paris decided dueling to be no crime, or offence.—A bill, legalising the London Art-Union, passed in the House of Commons.—Mr Chambers, the banker, obtained his certificate from the Court of Bankruptcy.—The admission of the slave-grown sugar of the Spanish Colonies into Great Britain negatived in both Houses of Parliament.—Great Agricultural Society's Meeting at Shrewsbury.—Grand Naval Review at Spithead, by her Majesty; and departure of the Experimental Squadron.

16. Death of Mr. Adolphus, the celebrated barrister.—Johnson, the Romford banker (once Lord Mayor), refused his certificate by the Bankruptcy Court.—Tom mea, Portuguese or Spaniards, tried at Exeter, for murdering several Englishmen on board a captured Slaver, off the coast of Africa; three days' trial, found guilty, three sequitted; the sentence subsequently reversed. Mexico declared war against the United States.

17. Death of Earl Grey, at Howick, aged 81.

18. Disturbances in Italy, in consequence of the suppression of the Jesuits in France.

19. Accounts of the burning of the Uruguay Indiaman, off the Cape de Verd Islands; loss £59,050.—News of the defeat of the Arabs by the Pacha of Damascus; 250 prisoners beheaded.—Terrific Fire in New York: 300 houses burnt.

20.—Frightful insurrections throughout Upper Albania, and in the north of Hungary.

21.—Retirement and dismissal of certain members of the Board of Ordnance, for trafficking in railway shares.—Government refused to remunerate the Peninsular officers for their military services. Opening of the New Hall of Commerce, at Ipswich.—Death of Viscount Canterbury, aged sixty-five.—Terrific hurricane at Halmstadt, in Norway.

22. Marshal Bugeaud declared responsible for the late massacre of Arabs by the French.—Verdict of justifiable homicide in the case of a man shot by the police at Ballinhassig fair, on June 30

23. Mr. C. Buller's motion for censuring the Government of New Zealand negatived by 69 to 20.—Great agitation in the Railway Market.

24. Arrival of the King of Holland in the metropolis.

25. Destructive overflow of the Vistula at Warsaw.

26 The Great Britain iron steam ship left Liverpool, on her first passage across the Atlantic.

27. A horse died of hydrophobia, at Cuckfield, Sussex.—At New Orleans and Quebec, the thermometer stood at 96 degrees; sun strokes frequent.

28. News of a second great fire at Quebec, on June 21; in this and the fire on May 28, 3000 houses burnt; loss, £1,250,000.—Intelligence of the annexation of Texas to the United States.—News of the rich city of Matanza destroyed by fire, on June 26.—Alarming accident on the South Eastern Railway.

30. Opening of the Eastern Counties Railway branch to Cambridge and Ely.—The Vice Chancellor refused to grant an injunction upon a second translation of a French farce. Violent collision on the London and Birmingham Railway: several passengers injured.—A man discharged from York Castle, after 29½ years imprisonment.—Great Regatta at Havre: first prize won by British sailors with one of the worst French boats.—Fall of snow, 3 inches deep, between Bangor and Bethesda.

30. During this month, gambling in railway shares rose to a desperate pitch.—Several Orange magistrates in Ireland dismissed for having presided at Orange meetings.

31. The Cambria steamer made the passage from Liverpool to New York in 11 days.

AUGUST.

1. The great arsenal at Toulon destroyed by fire; loss £1,000,000.—Death of Mr. J. Hickey, of Athlone, aged 105 years, 6 months.

2. Taglioni's farewell to the stage.—Terrific fire-damp explosion near Merthyr Tydvil: twenty-nine lives lost. —Escape of 209 convicts between Carthagena and Castile, and massacre of the troops conducting them.

3. Election of the Portuguese Cortes greatly in favour of the Government. -Three persons killed by lightning in a house at St. Genevieve, Canada The Argentine Squadron captured off Monte Video by the French and English.

4. Terrific accident on the Northern and Eastern Railway.—Meeting of the British Archæological Association at Winchester.—Chinese ransom money, 64 cwt. of silver, received at the Mint.—Disturbances in the Lebanon, among the Maronites and Druses.—A very rich mine of quicksilver discovered in Tuscany

5. Death of Baron Bosio, the eminent French sculptor.—Tiflis, the capital of Georgia, destroyed by fire

6. Great fluctuations in the English Money Market, according to the weather.—Religious riot at Halberstadt, at the Abbé Ronge's first sermon.—Two girls born in France united through the greater extent of their bodies.

7.—The Select Committee of the House of Lords sat thirteen hours on the London and York Railway bill.

8. -Parliament prorogued by her Majesty in person.

9.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert embarked at Woolwich, on their tour to Germany. On their return, they embarked at Antwerp, September 7, and, on the following day, landed at Treport, to visit the King of the French. They reached the Isle of Wight on September 10.—Verdict of £200 damages, at the Croydon Assizes, in a libel case, Vallance v. the Duke of Brunswick

10.—The Great Britain steam-ship reached New York.

11.—A dividend of £1098 levied by a Coroner's Jury upon an engine during the late fatal collision on the London and Birmingham Railway.

12. -The Statue of Beethoven, at Frankfort, inaugurated with great ceremony, accompanied by festivals, for several days.—The Leicester Monument founded, at Holkham. -Great encampment at Bordeaux.—Religious riots at Leipsic.

13.—News received from Sir John Franklin's Arctic Expedition: all well.—Alarming accounts of the weather and the state of the crops in England. -Death of Mr. S. Wood, M.P. for Southwark.—Great distress and apprehended famine in Poland.

14. Return of Mr. Hudson, M.P. for Sunderland: the Times express of the intelligence travelled upwards of 300 miles in eight hours, and on railway at the rate of 75 miles per hour!

17. The Sultan summarily dismissed three of his Ministers.—First service in a church of the German Catholic sect, at Breslau, by M. Ronge.

18. Great Fire in Aldermanbury: £300,000 loss.—Dreadful Colliery Explosion near Dudley. Disturbances at Madrid the dynasty of Narvaez in danger.

19. Hurricane at Rouen, which swept away houses, trees, and crops, and overthrew three large factories: 65 persons killed, and many others seriously injured.—Destructive hurricanes in Holland. -Pine-apples sold in the streets of London at a penny a slice.—Gallant defeat of Malay pirates by the British, on the coast of Borneo.

20. Snow storm at Framlingham, Suffolk. Several persons drowned during a Storm at Aspatt, Cumberland-shire.—Great Protestant demonstration at Lisburn.

21. Explosion at Jarrow Colliery, by which 46 persons were killed. the Government instituted an official inquiry into the causes of the occurrence.—Serious riots in Berwickshire, and at Dunfermline.

22. Destructive Fire at Bordeaux: six persons killed by the falling of the ruins.

24. Several persons killed by the fall of a cotton-mill chimney, at Blackburn.

26 The Worcester Musical Festival commenced.—Violent hurricane at Paris.

27 News of continued disturbances in New Zealand. Three men killed on the works of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway.

30. Collision on the Birmingham and Gloucester Rail way: two persons killed, and several severely injured.—Hartmann's great works, at Chemnitz, in Prussia, totally destroyed by fire.—News of Count Mier's defeat by the Circassians The French retained possession of Tahiti —The town of Colonia, in the River Plate, captured by the French and English squadron.

SEPTEMBER.

1. The Baron Achille Maquard committed suicide by throwing himself from one of the Towers of Notre Dame. at Paris. -The Rev. G. Ward, of Balliol College, Oxford, seceded to the Roman Catholic Church.

2 News of an Attack on Tamatave, Madagascar, by the French and English.—The King of Prussia ordered that each of the military as would forego their rations of brandy, might receive the value thereof in money.—M. Thiers arrived in Madrid. Eruption of Mount Hecla. —290 Italian soldiers drowned by the falling of a bridge between Modena and Felire.

5. Insurrection in Madrid; several persons killed and wounded.

7. Great Fire at Philadelphia.

8. Great devastation at Tortosa, by the inundation of the Ebro.

9. Meeting of the British Archeological Association, (now Institute,) at Winchester.

10. The Inquiry into the Management of the Andover Union transferred to the Hampshire Quarter Sessions.—Continued Insurrection in Madrid.—The Hanoverian Government resolved to suppress Dueling in that country.—Jugler Story died at Boston, U. S., aged 65.

11. Sir W. Molesworth returned M.P. for Southwark, by a majority of 766.—News of the defeat of the Russians in the Caucasus.

13. A labourer killed in the railway tunnel at Liverpool.—Fall of a Coffee-House at Salamanca; five persons killed.—Mrs. Theobald, of sporting celebrity, died of a fall from her horse.

14. Forty-six persons drowned by the sinking of a schooner in Great Roads.

15. The Great Britain arrived at Liverpool, on her first passage from New York.—The settlement of the Railway and Share account in London proceeded satisfactorily.—The religious excitement continued in Germany; Ronge still received with enthusiasm.

16. Destructive fire at Sir Charles Price's oil and turpentine warehouse, Blackfriars.—The Great St Leger Stakes at Doncaster won by "The Baron."—The Cork and Bandon Railway commenced.—The Arabs, under Abd-el-Kader, cut to pieces a squadron of French cavalry.

17. A splendid gold dessert service presented to Sir E. Tennent by the Irish Society of London.—Extensive new tea warehouses opened in the London Docks.—The Norwich Musical Festival commenced.—Grand military manœuvres at the camp of St. Medard, near Bordeaux. —Continued disturbances at Barcelona; 12 insurgents shot.

18. Terrific explosion in the royal arsenal at Woolwich; seven persons killed. Great excitement and gambling in railway shares in the metropolis, and the large towns of England.—Failure of the potato crop through disease in England and Ireland, Holland and Belgium.

20. Congress of Italian Savans held at Naples.—70 houses burnt at Monte Hampstead, near Exeter.—Robbery and assassination very frequent in the environs of Paris.—News of Count Woronzow's sanguinary campaign in the Caucasus.—Death of Donald Ross, from more, aged 116 years

21. M. Rouge continued his triumphant course in Germany.—Railways proposed in the East Indies, with great success.—The Wuzeer of Lahore shot to death by his own troops.

22. Death of the Bishop of Bath and Wells.—The celebrated Jenny Lind engaged for the Prussian Opera, at nearly £4000 per annum.—Three shocks of earthquake at Comrie, in Scotland.

24. A party of Italian refugees made an insurrectionary attempt in the Pontifical States, and took the town of Rimini by surprise. At Ravenna the rising took place on the 25th.

25. Great Repeal Demonstration at Tipperary: procession 5 miles long! 1200 persons at the dinner.

29. Alderman Johnson elected Lord Mayor; Alderman Wood being again passed over.—Frightful mortality from fever, on board the sloop Eclair; upwards of 60 persons dead.—Opening of the splendid new Theatre Royal, at Manchester.—The Regent's Canal sold conditionally to a Railway Company, for a million of money.

OCTOBER.

1. Death of Earl Spencer, in his 64th year, at Wiseton Hall, Notts.

4. Great Fire at Montreal.

5. Great Panic on the Bourse, at Vienna.

6. Hungerford (Charing Cross) Suspension Bridge sold to a Railway Company, for £226,000.—The Vintage in Portugal the worst known for twenty years.

9. Panic in the Money and Railway Share Market of Paris.—Resignation of Marshal Soult.

10. Arrival of M. Thiers in London.—Greece in a very disturbed state, from the excesses of the Albanian soldiery.

10. Terrific hail-storm in the Ionian Islands; some stones weighing three ounces.

12. Continued eruption of Mount Hecla.

13 Inauguration of the Madeleine, at Paris.—Alarming accounts of the failure of the potato crop in Ireland.

14. Death of the philanthropic Mrs. Fry, aged 66.

15. The Twelfth Eisteddfod of the Gymreigyddion, held at Abergwenny.—Destructive earthquake at Mitylene. a whole village destroyed.

16 Decline of the Railway Market, owing to the Bank advance in discount from 2½ to 3 per cent; Consols, 98¾

Great Repeal Demonstration at Sligo.—Mr. Banvil, the architect, killed by a fall from the west tower of Ely Cathedral.

18 Death of Count Cassini, the celebrated astronomer, aged 96.—Continued disturbances in the Papal States, 7000 persons in the state prisons.—Conflict of the French with Abd el Kader's troops.

19. Great panic in the London Stock and Share Market.—Duelling prohibited by the King of Prussia.

21 Great dinner at Sunderland, to Mr. Hudson, M.P.

22. The Lord Mayor formally excluded by the Governors from holding a Court at Christ's Hospital.—The Hull and Hamburg steamer, Margaret, wrecked off the Coast of Norden; 19 lives lost.

24. Deplorable accounts of the harvest received at Stockholm.

25. Extensive Fire at Gravesend.

27. A Commission appointed by Government to investigate the potato disease.—Defeat of the Arabs in Algeria, by the French troops: 300 killed.

28. Marble Statue of Queen Victoria inaugurated in the Royal Exchange. Great excitement of the Bourse at Paris.—News of the English and French squadron, in the River Plate, having commenced operations against Rosas.—Death of Sir Matthew Tierney, aged 68.—The bones of Gundreda, daughter of William the Conqueror, and of William de Warenne, her husband, discovered on the site of the Priory, at Lewes.

29. A whale, 24 feet long, captured in Belfast Lough

30. The Emperor and Empress of Russia visited Palermo. —The splendid new National Theatre at Lisbon opened

30. Lincoln's Inn New Hall and Library inaugurated by her Majesty.

31. Lieut. Waghorn arrived in London with the India Mail, from Alexandria, and Trieste, in 23½ days.—Thorwaldsen's Statue of Lord Byron placed in Trinity College, Cambridge.

NOVEMBER.

2. Great fall in the funds at Vienna.—Mount Hecla still in eruption: smoke 120 fathoms high.

3. The Freedom of the City of Edinburgh presented to Lord John Russell.— G. Maynard and D. Garrett sentenced, by the Central Criminal Court, to 14 years' transportation, for extensive railway robberies.—Professor Faraday announced his discovery of the direct relation of electricity and magnetism to light.—Great Medical Congress at Paris. 3000 practitioners present.

4. Grand Festivities commenced at Harewood House, near Leeds, and lasted to the 9th inst.—Julia Hickey died near Tralee, aged 112 years.

5. The merchants of Hong Kong memorialized Lord Stanley on their grievances.—Colliery Explosion near Newton, Lancashire; 9 lives lost.—Elopement from Brighton, of Lady Adela Villiers with Captain Ibbetson.

6. Monetary Panic at Copenhagen.

10. A railway superintendent and engineman sentenced by the Edinburgh Court of Justiciary, to 12 months imprisonment, for "culpable homicide."—Five soldiers condemned for insurrection at Valencia, and shot the next day.

12. Various meetings held in the Metropolis and the provinces to petition the Queen to 'Open the Ports," for the admission of foreign Corn, duty free.—The Earl of St. Germains appointed Postmaster General in the room of the Earl of Lonsdale resigned.—Catalonia in a state of siege, military executions frequent in Valencia.

13. The Trent Valley Railway commenced near Tamworth, by Sir Robert Peel turning the first turf.—The "Martyrs' Memorial" completed at Edinburgh.

14. Rouge received with great tumult at Weimar.

15 News from Burmah of the enthronement of Tharawaddie.—The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia visited Plymouth. -Mr. Rutherfurd, M.P., elected Lord Rector of Glasgow.—Amateur performance by eminent authors and artists, at the St. James's Theatre.—The Civil Governor of Tambof announced the sale of 3769 peasants, belonging to a Russian nobleman, to pay his debts.

17. Deaths of the Earl of Vernlam; of the Dowager Lady Holland; and of Dr. Wade.

18. Famine much dreaded in Sweden.

19 Grand Fancy Dress Ball and Concert, at Guildhall, for the benefit of the City Ward Schools.—General Narvaez created Duke of Valencia.—Great excitement at Madrid: press prosecutions frequent.—The Glasgow City Theatre burnt.

20. Dr. W. Iberforce elected Bishop of Oxford; and Dr. Buckland appointed Dean of Westminster. -Commencement of the Sale of Lansdown Tower and its valuable contents, the property of the late Mr. Beckford, at Bath.

22. Railway and Commercial Crisis on the Paris Bourse —Lord John Russell addressed the Electors of London, advocating the total repeal of the Corn-Laws.

23. Death of Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Jerusalem.

24 A railway opened from Macclesfield to the Manchester and Birmingham line, at Cheadle Hulme.—Applications to be made to Parliament, next Session, for 600 new lines of railway in England and Wales: capital, £215,000,000.

25. A fine statue of Dr. Watts set up in Abney Par Cemetery. The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia embarked at Plymouth.—Lord Morpeth joined the Anti-Corn law League.—Great boat race on the Tyne, at Newcastle, won by Clasper, of that place.—Navigation between St. Petersburg and Cronstadt stopped by the frost.—The practice of "Police Disguises" stated, at the Central Criminal Court, to be sanctioned by the Government.

26 Alarm about this time throughout France, on account of the dreaded scarcity of corn.—Revolt spread through Spain.—Dreadful explosion at the Bishopwearmouth iron-works four persons killed, twenty-two injured.—Ibrahim Pacha arrived at Toulon from Genoa.

30. Royal decree authorising the free admission of flour into Belgium until next June.—Nearly 800 plans of new Railways deposited with the Board of Trade.—The MSS. of the poet Gray sold by auction for £1500.

DECEMBER.

1. A verdict of Manslaughter returned by a Coroner's Jury against the driver of a pilot engine on the Midland Railway, which ran into another train, and killed a policeman.—Cooke's Circus at Glasgow destroyed by fire.

3. The Experimental Squadron, (except the Daring) arrived in Plymouth Sound.—Rouge returned to Breslau in great triumph.—Buenos Ayres still blockaded by the combined forces of England and France

4. Considerable excitement caused by its being stated in the Times, that Government would shortly propose the Total Repeal of the Corn Laws.

6 Great depression in the Railway Share Market.

8 A monk and three servants killed, a short time since, by the falling of an avalanche on the St. Bernard.—Mount Vesuvius had been for some time threatening an eruption.

9 M. Selling, a Lutheran minister, started as an apostle of temperance.—An iron suspension bridge at Chaussin (Jura), carried away by floods.

10 Sir Robert Peel and his Ministerial Colleagues resigned office.—The Smithfield Cattle Show opened; and continued till Saturday.

11. Lord John Russell sent for by her Majesty, and empowered to form a Ministry.—Great overflow of the Thames; much damage done.

13. The Emperor of Russia arrived at Rome.—A new planet discovered by M. Encke, of Driessen.

15 The Anti Corn Law movement commenced in the Metropolis.—Ten persons killed by a steam boiler explosion, in a cotton-mill at Bolton.—The Spanish Cortes opened with a speech from the Queen. English cotton manufacture to be admitted at a reduced duty.

17. The news of the resignation of the Peel Ministry, excited a great sensation in Paris; fall in the funds and railway shares.—A young woman committed at the Central Criminal Court, of murdering an aged woman in Westminster, by strangling and suffocating her.

19 Death of Lord Wharncliffe, in his 66th year.

20 Several Anti-Corn-law meetings held throughout the country during the past week.—Return of the Peel Ministry to office; Lord John Russell having declined to form an Administration.

22 The American President's Message received in London: the tone altogether hostile. — Messrs. Smith and Wilte's extensive foundry at Liverpool destroyed by fire: loss, £250,000.—Opening of the Sheffield and Manchester Railway.

23. Capt. Johnstone, of the ship Tory, committed for trial on the charge of murdering three of his crew.

24. The Railway Share Market continued much depressed.

DIRECTIONS TO THE BINDER.

The History of the Corn-laws is to be placed at the end of Vol. VII.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1846.—SUPPLEMENT.

GETTY CENTER LIBRARY
3 3125 00604 0261